CALIFORNIA STATE BAR COURT REPORTER

DIGEST

California State Bar Court Reporter
State Bar Court of California
180 Howard Street, 6th Floor
San Francisco, CA 94105-1639

DISCIPLINARY RULES COMPARISON CHART

Current CA Rule (eff. May 27, 1989	Fonner CA Rule (1975- May26, 1989)	ABA Model Rules	ABA Model Code - Disciplinary Rules	Subject Matter •
1-100	1-100	8.5	-	Purpose, definitions and scope
1-110	9-101	-	-	Compliance with reproval conditions
1-120	-	8.4(a)	DR I-I02(A)(I), (2)	Assisting or inducing violation or rules
1-200	1-101	8.1	DR 1-101	False statement regarding admission to bar
1-300	3-101	5.5	DR 3-101	Aiding or committing unauthorized practice
1-310	3-103	5.4(b)	DR 3-103; 5-I07(C)	Partnership with non-lawyer
1-320	3-102	5.4(a)	DR3-102	Fee splitting with non-lawyers
1-400	2-101	7.1 - 7.5	DR 2-IO I - 2-105	Advertising and solicitation
1-500	2-109	5.6	DR2-108	Agreement to restrict practice
1-600	2-102	[cf. 1.7(b); 1.8(f); 5.4(c)]	DR 5-107(8)	Legal service programs
2 100	7-I03	4.2	DR 7-I04{A)(I)	Communication with represented party
2-200	2-108	1.5(e)	DR2-107	Fee splitting with other lawyers
2-300	-	1.17	-	Sale of law practice
3-110	6-101	I.I; 1.3; 1.16(a)(2); 3.2	DR6-I0I; 7-I01	Duty to act competently
3-200	2-110	3.1	DR2-I09; 7-I02(A)(I), (2)	Asserting frivolous claims/defenses
3-210	7-101	1.2(d); 3.4(a), (b), (c)	DR 7-I02(A)(6), (7); 7-I06(A}	Advising violation of law

• The rules listed on each line of the table address the same general subject matter, which is identified in the right-hand column. However, the contents of the rules are not necessarily identical or even similar.

Current CA Rule (eff. May 27, 1989	Former CA Rule (1975- May 26, 1989)	ABA Model Rules	ABA Model Code - Disciplinary Rules	Subject Matter•
3-300	5-101	l.8(a), (d), G)	DR 5-103(A); 5-104	Business transactions with clients
3-310	4-101; 5-102	1.7; l.8(f), (g); l.9	DDR 5-lOl(A); 5-105; 5-106; S-107(A)	Conflicts of interst
3-320	-	l .8(i)	-	Family relationship with opposing counsel
3-400	6-102	l.8(h)	DR6-l02	Limiting liability to client
3-500	-	l.4	[cf. EC 7-8, 9-2)	Duty to communicate with client
3-510	5-105	[cf. 1.4)	-	Duty to communicate settlement offers
3-600	-	1.13	DR5-107(B)	Organizational clients
3-700	2-11 l(A)(l)- (3); 2-11 l(B), (C)	1.16	DR2-110	Duties to termination of employment
4-100	8-101	1.15	DR 9-102	Client funds and property
4-200	2-107	l.5(a) - (d)	DR2-106	Fees for legal services
4-210	5-104	l.8(e)	DR 5-103(8)	Payment of client's expenses
4-300	5-103	-	-	Foreclosures and judicial sales
4-400	-	l.8(c)	[cf. EC 5-5)	Gifts from clients
5-100	7-104	-	DR 7-105	Threatening to file charges
5-110	7-102	3.8	DR 7-103	Duty of prosecutors
5-200	7-105	3.3; 3.4; 3.5	DR 7-102; 7-106	Trial conduct
5-210	2-l l l(A)(4), (5)	3.7	DR 5-l0l(B); 5-102	Attorney as witness

• The rules listed on each line of the table address the same general subject matter, which is identified in the right-hand column. However, the contents of the rules are not necessarily identical or even similar.

Current CA Rule (eff. May 27, 1989	Fonner CA Rule (1975- May 26, 1989)	ABA Model Rules	ABA Model Code - Disciplinary Rules	Subject Matter •
5-220	7-105(2); 7-107(A)	3.4(a)	DR 7-I02(A)(3); 7-109(A), (B)	Suppression of evidence
5-300	7-108	3.5; 8.4(d), (t)	DR 7-106(C)(6); 7-110	Contact with judges and officials
5-310	7-107(8), (C)	3.4(b), (f)	DR 7-109(8), (C)	Contact with witnesses
5-320	7-106	3.5; 4.4; 8.4(d)	DR 7-108	Contact with jurors
-	-	I.2(a) - (c), (e)	DR 7-I0I(B)(I)	Control of representation
B&P Code § 6068(e)o	-	1.6	DR 4-101	Confidentiality
B&P Code§ 6068(e)	-	1.8(b), (d)	DR 4-101(8)(3); 5-104(8)	Use of client infonnation; media rights
-	-	1.10; I.1 I(a), (b)	DR 5-105(0)	Imputed disqualification
B&P Code§ 6131	-	I.I I	DR 9-101(8); cf. DR 8-101	Government and private employment
-	-	1.12	DR 9-J0I(A)	.Fonner judge or arbitrator
-	-	1.14	[cf. EC 7-11, 7-12)	Client under a disability
-	-	2.1	[cf. EC 7-8)	Lawyer as advisor
-	-	2.2	[cf. EC 5-20)	Lawyer as intennediary
-	-	2.3	-	Lawyer as evaluator for third party
B&P Code§§ 6068(b), 6103	-	3.4(c)	DR 7-106(A); 7-106(C)(7)	Disobeying rules of a tribunal

•• The conduct of members of the California bar is regulated not only by the Rules of Professional Conduct adopted by the California Supreme Court, but also by statues enacted by the California Legislature. Relevant sections of the State Bar Act (Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code,§§ 6000 et seq.) Are cited in this table only where there is no Rule of Professional Conduct pertaining to the same subject matter.

• The rules listed on each line of the table address the same general subject matter, which is identified in the right-hand column. However, the contents of the rules are not necessarily identical or even similar.

Current CA Rule (eff. May 27, 1989	Former CA Rule (1975- May 26, 1989)	ABA Model Rules	ABA Model Code - Disciplinary Rules	Subject Matter •
-	-	3.4(d)	-	Conduct during discovery
-	-	3.6	DR 7-107	Trial publicity
-	-	3.9	DR 7-106(8)(1)	Lawyer as advocate in non-'judicial matters
B&P Code§ 6106	-	4.1	DR 7-102(A)(3) - (7)	Truthfulness to third persons
-	-	4.3	DR 7-104(A)(2)	Dealing with unrepresented party
B&P Code§ 6068(0	-	4.4	DR 7-102(AXI); 7-106(C)(2)	Rights of third persons
-	-	5.1	[cf. DR l-102(A)(2)]	Duty of partner, supervising lawyer
-	-	5.2	-	Duty of subordinate lawyer
-	-	5.3	[cf. DR 4-lOI(D)]	Non-lawyer assistants
B&P Code§§ 6106-6172	-	5.4(d)	DR 5-107(C)	Professional corporations
-	-	5.7	-	Ancillary services
B&P Code § 6068(h)	-	6.1	[cf. EC 2-25, 8-3)	Pro bono work
B&P Code§ 6068(b)	-	6.2	[cf. EC 2-29, 2-30)	Judicially appointed representation
-	-	6.3	-	Membership in legal services organization
-	-	6.4	-	Law refonn - conflicts of interest
-	-	8.2	DR 8-102; 8-103	Judicial appointments and elections
B&P Code §§ 6068(i), 6068(0), 6086.8(c)	-	8.3	DR 1-103	Reporting professional misconduct

• The rules listed on each line of the table address the same general subject matter, which is identified in the right-hand column. However, the contents of the rules are not necessarily identical or even similar.

Current CA Rule (eff. May 27, 1989	Former CA Rule (1975- May 26, 1989)	ABA Model Rules	ABA Model Code - Disciplinary Rules	Subject Matter •
B&P Code§§ 6101, 6102,6106	-	8.4(b), (c)	DR l-102(A)(3), (4)	Criminal or dishonest acts
-	-	8.4{d)- (t)	DR 1-102(A)(5), (6); 9-tot(C)	Prejudice to administration ofjustice, etc.

• The rules listed on each line of the table address the same general subject matter, which is identified in the right-hand column. However, the contents of the rules are not necessarily identical or even similar.

INTRODUCTION TO THE CALIFORNIA STATE BAR COURT REPORTER DIGEST

In order to make the most effective use of the California State Bar Court Reporter Digest ("Digest") as a research tool, it is recommended that readers review this introduction thoroughly before turning to the Digest for the first time, The Digest is supplemented (on green paper) with each update to the California State Bar Court Reporter ("Reporter"). A cumulative update is issued annually.

I. GENERAL INTRODUCTION

A. Special Purpose of Digest

The Digest was developed for the specific purpose of facilitating research in the specialized area of California attorney disciplinary and regulatory law. Its design is tailored to that purpose, and consequently differs in several respects from the general-purpose digests commonly found in law libraries. This difference is also reflected in the existence of an "Additional Analysis" section for each opinion in the Reporter, following the headnotes. [1]

In the Reporter's digest system, as in the general-purpose digest systems with which lawyers and other legal researchers are familiar, each headnote that appears with an opinion is categorized under one or more subject matter numbers ("topic numbers") selected from a list of digest topics, and the text of the headnote is reproduced under each of those topic numbers in the Digest itself. There the similarity ends.

B. Topic Number System

Although it appears to be a single series of numbers, the list of topic numbers used in the Digest ("Digest Topics list") actually has three different types of topic numbers intermingled in it. They are:

I. Topic numbers denotingJ al issues discussed in headnotes ("headnote-indexing numbers"). Most of the material appearing under these numbers in the Digest will be headnotes, but there may be some case citations without a headnote attached, if the issue denoted by the topic number is mentioned in the cited opinion without extended discussion. (See second paragraph under heading II(B), post.)

2. Topic numbers intended exclusively for use under Additional Analysis rather than in connection with headnotes ("additional analysis numbers"). Under these numbers in the Digest, the reader will find a list of case citations only, without associated headnotes.

3. Topic numbers used only as topic headings to guide the reader through the structure of the Digest Topics list ("topic heading numbers"). The sole purpose of the topic heading numbers is to provide an organizational structure to the Digest. No case references of any kind appear under any topic heading number in the Digest; instead, all relevant case references are listed under one of the more specific topic numbers into which the topic heading number is subdivided.

---

[1] The editorial material prefacing each opinion published in the Reporter includes not only a summary and headnotes, but also a section entitled "Additional Analysis." In disciplinary proceedings, the Additional Analysis section contains a complete listing of the charges of which the respondent was found culpable and not culpable, as well as a summary of the recommended discipline, if any. The Additional Analysis section also lists the Digest topic numbers of issues touched upon in the opinion without extended substantive discussion, including but not limited to aggravating and mitigating factors mentioned but not discussed in detail.

II. EXPLANATION OF TOPIC NUMBER SYSTEM

A. Headnote-Indexing Numbers Generally

Most of the numbers in the Digest Topics list are headnote-indexing numbers. These numbers generally function the same way as the topic numbers in general-purpose digests: each headnote is categorized under all relevant headnote-indexing numbers, according to its subject matter, and the text of the headnote is then reproduced in the Digest under each number under which the headnote has been categorized.

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 2, the topic numbers which appear above the text of the first headnote—107, 108, 162.19, 165, and 204.90—are all headnote-indexing numbers. The text of the headnote is reproduced under each of these numbers in the Digest.

B. Headnote-Indexing Numbers Versus Additional Analysis Numbers

When a topic number is used as a headnote-indexing number, the associated headnote is reproduced under that topic number in the Digest. When a topic number is used under the Additional Analysis section associated with an opinion, the citation to that opinion, without any headnote text, appears under that topic number in the Digest. No topic number ever appears both as a headnote-indexing number and under Additional Analysis in the same case.

Most of the topic numbers that appear in the Additional Analysis sections of the opinions in the Reporter are topic numbers that are designed to be used only in the Additional Analysis section. (See discussion under headings II(C)(1)(b) and II(C)(3), post.) However, in connection with a specific opinion, a topic number that is normally a headnote-indexing number may appear under Additional Analysis rather than with a specific headnote. This signifies that the topic denoted by that topic number is addressed in the opinion, but in such a peripheral or general way that there is no headnote on the topic. In such a case, the citation to the opinion will appear in the Digest under that topic number, but without any associated headnote text. This occurs frequently in connection with opinions in which aggravating or mitigating factors were found or rejected by the court without any extended legal discussion. (See discussion under heading II(C)(2), post.)

C. Special Portions of the Digest Topics List

In certain portions of the Digest Topics list, which are discussed in detail in this section, the topic numbers have a special internal structure, and some or all of the topic numbers are intended for use under Additional Analysis. The exact details of this internal structure varies from section to section of the Digest Topics list. In some instances, the topic numbers are used exclusively under Additional Analysis. In others, they may be used either under Additional Analysis or with headnotes as headnote-indexing numbers, depending upon the particular case.

1. Topic Numbers for Statute and Rule Violations. The topic numbers from 210 through 490.05 deal with possible statute, rule, and common law violations with which attorneys may be charged. Each specific violation has a main topic number (usually ending in "._0"), which is followed by separate subsidiary topic numbers for "found" (usually ending in "._1") and "not found" (usually ending in "._5").[2]

(a) Headnote-indexing numbers. The main ("._0") topic number listed opposite the name of each statute or rule or common-law duty is a headnote-indexing number. These main topic numbers are used in connection with headnotes summarizing a substantive discussion of that statute or rule or common law duty-for example, what facts constitute or do not constitute a violation thereof, or what are the elements of the offense. Thus, the headnote-indexing number for a particular statute, rule or common law duty appears only in connection with headnotes, and a case will not be listed in the Digest under this topic number unless it contains a headnoted discussion of the particular violation.

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 2, the topic number 213.10 (for State Bar Act, section 6068(a)) appears above headnote number 4. This headnote summarizes a substantive legal discussion of section 6068(a). The text of the headnote is reproduced in the Digest under topic number 213.10.

(b) Additional analysis numbers. The "found" and "not found" topic numbers associated with each State Bar Act section and Rule of Professional Conduct are additional analysis numbers. For every violation charged in the notice to show cause in a case, whether or not there is a substantive, headnoted discussion of that violation in the opinion,[3] the numbers listed under Additional Analysis will include either a "found" (._1) or "not found" (._5) topic number (or both, if the violation is found as to one count but not found as to another). Thus, the topic numbers listed under Additional Analysis for each opinion give the reader a complete record regarding the violations of which the respondent was and was not found culpable in that case.

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 5, the Additional Analysis section, under "Culpability-Found" lists the topic numbers 221.11, 280.01, 280.51, and 420.11. This indicates that the respondent was found culpable of violating the statutes, rules, and duties associated with those topic numbers. The citation to Mapps, without any headnote text, appears in the Digest under each of those topic numbers.

For each topic number listed in the Additional Analysis section associated with an opinion, the citation to that opinion, without any associated headnote text, appears in the Digest under that topic number. Thus, for each statute, rule and common law duty, the Digest lists under the appropriate "found" and "not found" topic numbers the citation of every opinion published in the Reporter in which a violation of that statute, rule or duty was found, or charged and not found. (See, e.g., the Digest entries under topic numbers 213.11 (Section 6068(a}-Found) and 213.15 (Section 6068(a}-Not Found).)

---

[2] There are a few exceptional cases, in which the pattern is ".O_" for the main topic number, ".1_" for various categories of "found", and ".S_" for "not found". (See, e.g., topic numbers 420.00 et seq.)

[3] Note that where there is a substantive discussion in the opinion concerning a given alleged statute, rule, or duty violation, that discussion is summarized in one or more headnotes, and those headnotes are categorized (and reproduced in the Digest) under the main topic number for that statute, rule, or duty. The headnote is not categorized or reproduced under the. found, or not found, topic numbers.

2. Topic Numbers for Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards. The topic numbers under aggravation (500's and 600's), mitigation (700's), and application of standards[4] (800's and 900's) may be used either as headnote-indexing numbers or as additional analysis numbers; thus, they may either be used to categorize headnotes or be listed under Additional Analysis. However, as previously noted, they are never listed in both places for the same opinion. Thus, the aggravating and mitigating factors and standards listed under Additional Analysis for any given opinion will not necessarily constitute a complete list of the factors and standards addressed in the opinion. Aggravating and mitigating factors and standards which are discussed substantively, and therefore associated with headnotes, will not be found under Additional Analysis. In order to develop a list of all aggravating and mitigating factors addressed in a given opinion, the reader must consult both the topic numbers listed above the headnotes and the topic numbers listed under Additional Analysis.

Topic numbers for aggravating and mitigating factors and standards which are mentioned in the opinion, but for which there is no relevant headnote, are listed under Additional Analysis.

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 5, the topic number 710.54 appears in the Additional Analysis section under "Mitigation-Declined to Find." Topic number 710.54 is a headnote-indexing number. However, when the court in Mapps declined to find this particular mitigating factor (lack of a prior disciplinary record), it did so without any extended discussion. (See Mapps, supra, at p. 12.) Therefore, the appropriate topic number (710.54) is listed under Additional Analysis, because there is no headnote with which it could have been associated. Correspondingly, in the Digest, under topic number 710.54, there is a citation to Mapps, but without any headnote text. (See Digest under topic number 710.54.)

If there is a headnote summarizing a discussion of aggravation, mitigation, or the application of the standards, the appropriate topic number(s) is found with the headnote.

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 3, headnotes 10, 13, and 14 all relate to various aggravating factors discussed in the opinion. Appropriate topic numbers associated with these aggravating factors (543.10, 543.90, 545, 605, and 613.90) are used to categorize these headnotes.-These same topic numbers do not appear again in the Additional Analysis section (id. at p. 5).

3. Topic Numbers for Discipline Imposed. Topic numbers from 1000 through 1055 (discipline in original matters), from 1600 through 1655 (discipline in conviction matters), and from 1800 through 1850 (discipline in probation revocation matters), are additional analysis numbers, and are listed under Additional Analysis only. For every opinion that contains a discipline recommendation, the topic numbers listed under Additional Analysis, taken together, will constitute a complete summary of the recommended discipline, including all probation conditions imposed other than the basic reporting conditions.[5] Conversely, under each of these numbers in the Digest, the reader will find the citation to every opinion in which that level of discipline was recommended.

---

[4] References to "standards" are to the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct (Rules Proc. of State Bar, tit. IV, Stds. for Atty. Sanctions for Prof. Misconduct).

> Example: In In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1, at page 5, under the Discipline part of the Additional Analysis section, the discipline recommended in the opinion is summarized in full with the appropriate topic numbers: 1013.11 for five years stayed suspension; 1015.08 for two years actual suspension; 1017.11 for five years probation; and 1022.10, 1024, 1026, and 1030 for the recommended probation conditions. The citation to Mapps appears in the Digest under each of those topic numbers.

D. Topic Heading Numbers

Certain topic numbers that appear as headings for topics which are further subdivided, and which have no headnotes or case citations reproduced under them in the Digest, are of the "topic heading numbers" type. All of the topic numbers listed in the "Digest Overview" are topic heading numbers. Other examples include topic numbers such as 106—Issues re Pleadings, and 1013—Stayed Suspension. The topic heading numbers are simply guides to the structure of the Digest Topics list, like chapter titles in a book. They are not used to categorize headnotes and never appear under Additional Analysis.

---

[5] Certain standard State Bar Court probation conditions, such as the quarterly reporting requirement (see Mapps, p. 16 [numbered paragraph 3]), are not recorded in any way in the Reporter's editorial material or in the Digest because they are recommended by the State Bar Court as a matter of course whenever probation is part of the discipline recommendation.

Substantive, headnoted discussions regarding the appropriate conditions to recommend as part of the discipline in a given case are categorized under topic numbers 170 through 179, not under the equivalent Additional Analysis topic numbers (1020 et seq.).

DIGEST OVERVIEW

* Published in Digest Supplement only

Note: For an explanatory introduction to the Digest, see Introduction to the California State Bar Court Reporter Digest in Vol. 6.

DIGEST TOPICS

100 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues

Note: References to rules in topic headings 101 through 199, unless otherwise noted, are to the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, as adopted effective January 1, 2011 (2011 rules), including subsequent amendments and additions. The 2011 rules reorganized and renumbered the rules governing State Bar Court proceedings, and grouped them under Title V, Discipline.

Note: Other pretrial matters include all motions made prior to trial (rule 5.45); stipulations (rules 5.53-5.58); and pretrial statements and conferences (rule 5.101).

Note: Certain chapters of the 2011 version of the Rules of Procedure, as subsequently augmented, are indexed out of sequence, as follows:

Division 6, Chapter 4, Fee Arbitration Award Enforcement Proceedings
Rules 5.360-5.371: Topic number 3000 et seq.
Division 6, Chapter 5, Alternative Discipline Program
Rules 5.380-5.389: Topic number 3100 et seq.
Division 6, Chapter 6, Legal Specialization Proceedings
Rules 5.390-5.399: Topic number 2900 et seq.
Division 7, Chapter 2, Resignation Proceedings
Rules 5.420-5.427: Topic number 3300 et seq.

170 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline

Note: See also topic number 802.50 (Standard 1.4). References to Standards are to the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, as amended through 2019.

Note: For award of costs to exonerated respondent (rule 5.131), see topic number 133)

Note: For section 6103.7, see topic number 220.50 below.

Note: For section 6106.2, see topic number 223 below.

250 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations

Note: The current version of the Rules of Professional Conduct ("2018 RPC" or "RPC") became effective November 1, 2018. References to "2018 RPC" or "RPC" are to those rules, including subsequent amendments. References to "1989 RPC" are to the rules in effect from May 27, 1989 to October 31, 2018, including the rules as amended effective September 14, 1992, which are sometimes referred to elsewhere as the "1992 Rules." References to "1975 RPC" are to the rules in effect from 1975 to May 26, 1989.

Note: For RPC 5.3.1 and 1989 rule 1-311 (employing lawyer ineligible to practice), see topic number 252.60 et seq.

Note: For cases under 1989 RPC 1-400(D) or 1975 RPC 2-101(A) involving false or misleading solicitation, or solicitation involving intrusion, coercion, duress, etc., see topic numbers 253.10-253.15.

Note: For cases involving improper designation as a certified specialist under RPC 7.4, see topic numbers 252.70-252.75.

Note: For cases involving false or misleading solicitation under 1989 RPC 1-400(D) or 1975 RPC 2-101(A), see topic numbers 253.10-253.15.

Note: Cases applying 1989 RPC 1-500(B) may be found under topic numbers 255.00-255.05.

Note: Topic numbers 258.20-258.25 are retained solely for cases involving misconduct under the 1989 RPC or 1975 RPC. For cases involving improper referral fees under 2018 RPC 7.2(b), see topic numbers 252.40-252.49.

Note: Topic numbers 272.00 through 272.05 retained solely for cases decided under 1989 RPC 3-210 or 1975 RPC 7-101. For cases involving similar misconduct under the 2018 rules, see topic numbers 251.20-251.25.]

Note: For cases involving compensation from non-clients under 1989 RPC 3-310(F), see topic numbers 273.30-273.35.

Note: For cases involving third party payor interference with a lawyer's professional judgment or lawyer-client relationship, formerly covered under 1989 RPC 3-310(F), see topic numbers 273.10-273.15 (covering RPC 1.8.6 and 5.4(c)) and 352.00-352.05 (covering RPC 2.1). For cases involving conflicts of interest between a lawyer's own clients and the clients of a legal services organization with which the lawyer is affiliated, see topic numbers 370.00-371.05 (covering RPC 6.3).

Note: Cases applying 1989 RPC 5-200(A)-(D) may involve misconduct now covered by RPC 3.3(b) or (d), or RPC 8.4(c) or (d). For cases under RPC 3.3(b), see topic numbers 320.30-320.35. For cases under RPC 3.3(d), see topic numbers 320.50-320.55. For cases under RPC 8.4(c) and (d), see topic numbers 373.10-373.25. Cases involving a lawyer asserting personal knowledge of facts at issue when not testifying as a witness, formerly covered under 1989 RPC 5-200(E) and topic numbers 320.00-320.05, are now covered by RPC 3.4(g), under topic numbers 322.00-322.09.

Note: For older cases involving misconduct similar to that now covered by RPC 3.3(b), see topic numbers 320.00-320.09 (1989 RPC 5-200(A)-(D)).

Note: For older cases involving misconduct similar to that now covered by RPC 3.3(d), see topic numbers 320.00-320.09 (1989 RPC 5-200(A)-(D)).

Note: For cases applying 1989 RPC 5-200(E) to a lawyer asserting personal knowledge of facts at issue when not testifying as a witness, see topic numbers 320.00-320.09.

Note: For older cases involving similar misconduct under 1989 RPC 5-220, see topic numbers 325.00-325.05.

Note: For older cases involving similar misconduct under 1989 RPC 5-220, see topic numbers 325.00-325.05.

Note: For older cases involving similar misconduct under Bus. & Prof. Code section 6068, subdivisions (a) and/or (b), see topic numbers 213.10-213.25.

350.05 Not Found
351.00 Duties to prospective client (RPC 1.18)
351.01 Found
351.05 Not Found
352.00 Lawyer as advisor (RPC 2.1)
352.01 Found
352.05 Not Found

Note: For cases involving compensation from a non-client, see also topic numbers 273.10-273.15.

353.00 Duties of lawyer as third-party neutral (RPC 2.4)
353.01 Found
353.05 Not Found
354.00 Failing to disclose representative capacity in non-adjudicative proceedings (RPC 3.9)
354.01 Found
354.05 Not Found
355.00 False statement/omission of material facts to third person (RPC. 4.1)
355.01 Found
355.05 Not Found
356.00 Improper communications with unrepresented person (RPC 4.3)
356.01 Found
356.05 Not Found
357.00 Improper handling of inadvertently transmitted writings (RPC 4.4)
357.01 Found
357.05 Not Found
358.00 Violating duties as manager or supervisor (RPC 5.1)
358.01 Found
358.05 Not Found

Note: For misconduct involving failing to supervise subordinates under 1989 RPC 3-110, see topic numbers 270.30-270.35.

359.00 Violating duties of subordinate lawyers (RPC 5.2)
359.01 Found
359.05 Not Found
360.00 Violating duties regarding non-lawyer assistants (RPC 5.3)
360.01 Found
360.05 Not Found

Note: For misconduct involving failing to supervise non-lawyer assistants under 1989 RPC 3-110, see topic numbers 270.30-270.35.

370.00 Knowingly participating in decision/action of legal services organization incompatible with lawyer's obligations to lawyer's client (RPC 6.3(a))
370.01 Found
370.05 Not Found
370.10 Knowingly participating in decision/action of legal services organization where interests of organization's client are adverse to interests of lawyer's client (RPC 6.3(b))

Note: For cases involving disciplinary proceedings arising out of criminal convictions, see topic numbers 1500-1535.

Note: For cases involving acts of moral turpitude under section 6106 of the State Bar Act, see topic numbers 221.00-221.50.

Note: Earlier cases involving particular types of conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice may be found under sections 6068 and 6103 of the State Bar Act (topic numbers 213.10-213.75, 220.00-220.15), as well as various 1989 rules. Cases involving prejudice to the administration of justice as an aggravating factor in determining degree of discipline may be found under topic numbers 586-588.50.

Note: See topic number 802.21 for definition of prior record.

Note: See also topic number 760 et seq.

Note: See also topic number 765 et seq.

Note: See also topic number 725 et seq.

Note: See also topic number 740 et seq.

800 Application of Standards

Note: The Standards were originally adopted in 1986, and revised non-substantively, to update cross-references, in 2001 and 2007. References to "1986 Standards" are to the version in effect from 1986 through 2013. The Standards were significantly reorganized, renumbered, and amplified effective January 1, 2014 (the "interim Standards"), and again effective July 1, 2015 (the "2015 Standards"). The 2015 Standards were amended in 2019 (the "2019 Standards") to reflect the adoption of the 2018 Rules of Professional Conduct, but the 2019 Standards retained the numbering and organization of the 2015 Standards.

Due to the substantial reorganizations of the Standards in 2014 and 2015, some Standards are covered in the Digest in a different order than they appear in the 2015 and 2019 Standards. For the convenience of the researcher, cross-references are included in appropriate locations in the Digest Topic Number list. In addition, a table showing the location in the Digest of each of the 2019 Standard numbers, and its equivalent in the interim Standards and the 1986 Standards, is included in the introductory materials at the start of the Digest.

Note: For aggravation and mitigation, see topic numbers 500 et seq. and 600 et seq.

Note: For issues regarding specific conditions attached to sanctions, see topic number 170 et seq.

Note: For Standard 1.5 (Aggravation), see topic numbers 500 et seq.; for Standard 1.6 (Mitigation), see topic numbers 700 et seq.

Note: For Standard 2.1 (Misappropriation) in 2015 and Interim Standards, see topic number 822.

Note: Topic number 820 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014. For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822 et seq. for misappropriation, and topic number 824 et seq. for commingling and trust account violations.

Note: Topic number 822.32 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014. For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822.35 for gross negligence, and topic number 822.36 for neither intentional misconduct nor gross negligence.

822.53 Negligent rather than purposeful

Note: Topic number 822.53 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014. For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822.35 for gross negligence, and topic number 822.36 for neither intentional misconduct nor gross negligence.

822.54 Good faith belief in right to funds
822.55 Compelling mitigation
822.59 Other reason
824 Standard 2.2(a) (1986 Standard 2.2(b)) Commingling/Trust Account Violation - 3 months actual suspension
824.10 Applied
824.20 Declined to apply – greater sanction imposed
824.21 Coupled with other misconduct
824.22 Other aggravating factors
824.29 Other reason
824.50 Declined to apply – lesser sanction imposed
824.51 No applicable misconduct found
824.52 Negligent rather than purposeful
824.53 Purely technical violation
824.54 Compelling mitigation
824.59 Other reason
825 Standard 2.2(b) (Other violation involving mishandling of client funds or property – suspension or reproval)
825.10 Applied – suspension
825.20 Applied – reproval
825.50 Declined to apply
825.51 Greater sanction imposed
825.52 Lesser sanction imposed
825.59 Other issues re Standard 2.2(b)

Note: For standard 2.3 (illegal or unconscionable fee), see topic number 870 et seq. For standard 2.4 (business transaction with or adverse pecuniary interest to client) see topic number 880 et seq.

826 Standard 2.5 (Representation of adverse interests/conflicts of interest)
826.10 Std. 2.5(a): Conflict Affecting Current Client (RPC 1.7(a), (b), (d))
826.11 Applied – actual suspension
826.13 Declined to apply – disbarment
826.15 Decline to apply – lesser or no discipline
826.20 Std. 2.5(b): Conflict Affecting Former Client (RPC 1.9(a), (b))
826.21 Applied – actual suspension
826.23 Declined to apply – disbarment
826.25 Declined to apply – lesser or no discipline
826.30 Std. 2.5(c): Other Conflicts/Breaches of Duty of Loyalty
826.31 Applied – actual suspension – harm to client
826.32 Applied – actual suspension – other reason
826.33 Applied – lesser or no discipline – no harm to client
826.34 Applied – lesser or no discipline – other reason
826.35 Declined to apply – disbarment warranted
826.40 Std. 2.5(d): Violation of Pre-2018 RPC
826.41 Applied – actual suspension – harm to client

Note: For standard 2.7 (interim Standard 2.5) (performance, communication, or withdrawal violations), see topic number 840 et seq.

Note: For standard 2.10 (interim Standard 2.6) (unauthorized practice of law while suspended or inactive), see topic number 910 et seq.

Note: For standard 2.12 (interim Standard 2.8), see topic number 920 et seq.; for standard 2.13 (interim Standard 2.9), see topic number 930 et seq.

860 Standard 2.17(b) (interim Standard 2.13(b), 1986 Standard 2.6) (Misdemeanor conviction under Bus. & Prof. Code Sections 6128, 6129, or 6153)

Note: The original 1986 Standard 2.6 applied to a broad range of misconduct. Cases found under topic number 860 et seq. that were decided prior to 2014 may involve types of misconduct not covered under current standard 2.17(b) or interim Standard 2.13(b).

861 Applied – disbarment
861.10 Gravity of offense severe
861.20 Harm to victim great
861.30 Coupled with other misconduct
861.40 Other aggravating factors
861.90 Other reason
863 Applied – suspension
863.10 Gravity of offense not severe
863.20 Harm to victim small
863.30 Other mitigating factors
863.90 Other reason
865 Declined to apply
865.10 No applicable misconduct found
865.20 Gravity of offense not severe
865.30 Harm to victim small
865.40 Other mitigating factors
865.90 Other reason

870 Standard 2.3(a) (1986 standard 2.7) (Unconscionable Fee – 6 Months actual suspension)
871 Applied
875 Declined to apply
875.10 No applicable misconduct found
875.20 Compelling mitigation
875.90 Other reasons

877 Standard 2.3(b) (Illegal Fee/RPC 1.5(c)-(e) – suspension or reproval)
877.10 Applied – suspension
877.20 Applied – reproval
877.50 Declined to apply
877.51 No applicable misconduct found
877.52 Compelling mitigation
877.59 Other reasons

880 Standard 2.4 (1986 standard 2.8) (Business Transaction with Client)
881 Applied – suspension
881.10 Misconduct and/or harm not minimal
881.20 Coupled with other misconduct
881.30 Other aggravating factors
881.90 Other reason
883 Applied – reproval
883.10 Misconduct and/or harm minimal

Note: For Standard 2.15 (interim Standard 2.11), see topic number 1552 et seq.; for Standard 2.16 (interim Standard 2.12), see topic number 1554 et seq.

Note: Prior to 2014, unauthorized practice of law was included in the misconduct covered by 1986 Standard 2.6. Relevant cases may be found under topic number 860 et seq.

Note: Prior to 2014, violation of the duties listed in Business and Professions Code section 6068 was included in the misconduct covered by 1986 Standard 2.6. Relevant cases may be found under topic number 860 et seq. Standard 2.12 covers violations of section 6068 except subsections (c), (g), (m), and (n). Violations of section 6068(c) and (g) are covered under Standard 2.9 (topic numbers 829-829.79). Violations of section 6068(m) and (n) are covered under Standard 2.7 (topic numbers 840-846.79).

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and other issues re application of the Standards, see topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

Note: Topic number 1551 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014.

Note: Topic numbers 1552-1552.59 retained solely for cases decided prior to May 17, 2019. Felony convictions under circumstances involving moral turpitude are now covered by Standard 2.15(a)(2) (topic numbers 1553.60-1553.69)

Note: For topic number 1554.10, retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014, see below, following topic number 1554.39.

Note: Topic numbers 1554.10 and 1554.50-1554.59, relating to 1986 Standard 3.4 (no moral turpitude but discipline warranted) retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014.

Note: All cases listed under topic number 1554.10 are also listed under the specific Part B standard(s) applied.

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

2000 Regulatory Proceedings

2050 Issues in Section 6007(b)(1) Proceedings
2051 Special Procedural Issues
2051.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 1 (rules 5.170-5.177))
2051.10 Appointment and Compensation of Counsel (rule 5.174)
2051.20 Initiation of Proceeding (rule 5.171(A))
2051.21 By Motion
2051.25 By Order to Show Cause
2051.30 Mental or Physical Examination
2051.40 Admissibility of Evidence
2051.50 Sufficiency of Evidence/Burden of Proof
2051.60 Abatement of Other Proceedings (rule 5.174(D))
2051.70 Effective Date of Inactive Enrollment Order (rule 5.175)
2051.80 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.177)
2051.90 Other Procedural Issues
2052 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(b)(1)
2052.10 Ordered
2052.11 Without Hearing (rules 5.172(A), 5.173(A))
2052.13 After Hearing (rule 5.172(B)(2), 5.173(B)(2))
2052.50 Not Ordered
2054 Petition to End Section 6007(b)(1) Inactive Enrollment
2054.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 4 (rules 5.205-5.212))
2054.10 Granted
2054.50 Denied
2054.90 Other Issues re Termination of Section 6007(b)(1) Inactive Enrollment
2059 Miscellaneous Issues in Section 6007(b)(1) Cases

2070 Issues in Section 6007(b)(2) Proceedings
2070.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 2 (rules 5.180-5.186)
2071.10 Special Procedural Issues
2071.20 Initiation of Proceeding (rule 5.181)
2071.30 Limitation of Issues (rule 5.182(B)(2))
2051.40 Effective Date of Inactive Enrollment Order (rule 5.184)
2071.80 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.186)
2071.90 Other Procedural Issues
2072 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(b)(2)
2072.10 Ordered
2072.11 Without Hearing (rules 5.182(A))
2072.13 After Hearing (rule 5.182(B)(2))
2072.20 Exceptions to Order (rule 5.183)
2072.21 Granted
2072.25 Denied
2072.50 Not Ordered
2074 Petition to End Section 6007(b)(2) Inactive Enrollment
2074.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 4 (rules 5.205-5.212))
2074.10 Granted

2300 Issues in Other Section 6007 Proceedings

Note: For inactive enrollment of probationers under § 6007(d), see topic number 1715.

Note: For Petitions to terminate inactive enrollment under section 6007(b), see topic numbers 2054 et seq., 2074 et seq., and 2140 et seq.; under section 6007(c)(1) or (c)(2), see topic number 2240 et seq.

2906.20 Board findings entitled to great weight (rule 5.390)
2906.30 Burden of proof on member (rule 5.396)
2906.40 Proof by clear and convincing evidence (rule 5.396)
2906.90 Other issues re burden of proof and standard of review
2907 Review by Review Department (rule 5.397)
2908 Binding effect of final State Bar Court decision (rule 5.398)
2920 Denial of Certification/Recertification
2921 Reversed
2925 Upheld
2940 Suspension or Revocation of Certification
2941 Reversed
2945 Upheld
2990 Miscellaneous Issues in Legal Specialization Proceedings

3000 Issues in Fee Arbitration Award Enforcement Proceedings
3001 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 6, Ch. 4 (rules 5.360-5.371)
3002 Commencement of Proceeding (rule 5.361)
3003 Right to Hearing/Waiver of Hearing (rule 5.364)
3004 Burden of Proof/Showing Required (rule 5.365)
3009 Other Procedural Issues
3010 Inactive Enrollment under Bus. & Prof. Code section 6203(d)
3011 Granted
3015 Denied
3019 Other Issues re Inactive Enrollment
3030 Termination of Inactive Enrollment (rule 5.370)
3031 Granted
3035 Denied
3039 Other Issues re Termination of Inactive Enrollment
3090 Miscellaneous Issues in Fee Arbitration Award Enforcement Proceedings

3100 Issues in Alternative Discipline Program Proceedings
3110 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 6, ch. 5 (rules 5.380-5.389)
3120 Eligibility to participate (rule 5.381)
3120.10 Participation granted
3120.50 Participation denied
3121 Conditions for participation (rule 5.382(A))
3122 Grounds for ineligibility (rule 5.382(C))
3123 Effect of nonacceptance (rule 5.382(D))
3130 Disposition and deferral (rule 5.384(A)-(D))
3131 Placement on inactive status (rule 5.384(E))
3131.10 Ordered
3131.50 Not ordered
3132 Term of participation (rule 5.385)
3133 Effect of later proceedings (rule 5.386)
3140 Termination for failure to comply (rule 5.387)
3140.10 Ordered
3140.50 Not ordered
3150 Review (rule 5.389)
3190 Other issues in Alternative Discipline Program Proceedings

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct
Table of Standard Numbers and Digest Topic Numbers

Introductory Note: The Standards were originally adopted in 1986 (the "1986 Standards"), and not substantively amended until a substantially revised version became effective January 1, 2014 (the "interim Standards"). The Standards were revised again, including some additions, reordering, and renumbering, effective July 1, 2015 (the "2015 Standards").

Where "None" appears in a column in the table below, there was no equivalent, in the version of the Standards referenced in that column, to the 2015 Standard listed in the left-hand column. In such instances, cases involving the subject matter covered by the 2015 Standard, if any, appear in the Digest under the "catch-all" provisions of interim Standards 2.18 and/or 2.19, or 1986 Standard 2.10, at topic number 900 et seq.

Digest topic numbers in bold are those for which the topic number is out of sequence based on the numerical order in the version of the Standards that became effective July 1, 2015.

2015 Std. No.	Title of Standard	Interim Std. No.	1986 Std. No.	Main Digest Topic No.	Comments
1.1	Purpose/Scope	1.1	1.1	802.10	See also 801.20, 802.30
1.2	Definitions	1.2	1.2	802.20
1.3	Degrees of Sanctions	1.3	1.4	802.40	1986 Standard 1.3 retained at 802.30
1.4	Conditions Attached	1.4	1.5	802.50
1.5	Aggravation	1.5	1.2(b)	500	Cross-referenced before 802.60
1.6	Mitigation	1.6	1.2(e)	700	Cross-referenced before 802.60
1.7	Determination of Sanction	1.7	1.6	802.60
1.8	Prior Discipline	1.8	1.7	804
Part B	Introductory Paragraph	None	2.1	811
2.1	Misappropriation	2.1	2.2(a)	822	1986 Standard 2.2 retained at 820
2.2	Commingling/Trust Acct.	2.2	2.2(b)	824	Current 2.2(b) is at 825
2.3	Illegal/Unconscionable Fee	2.3	2.7	870	Cross-referenced before 826
2.4	Business/Fin'l Interest	2.4	2.8	880	Cross-referenced before 826
2.5	Rep. of Adverse Interests	None	None	826
2.6	Breach of Confidentiality	None	None	827
2.7	Perform/Commun./W'draw	2.5	2.4	840	Cross-referenced before 828
2.8	Fee Split w/ Non-Lawyer	None	None	828
2.9	Frivolous Litigation	None	None	829
2.10	Unauthorized Practice	2.6	2.6(d)	910	Cross-referenced before 830
2.11	Moral Turpitude	2.7	2.3	830
2.12	Violation of B&P 6068	2.8	2.6(a)	920	Cross-referenced before 840
2.13	Sex with Client	2.9	None	940	Cross-referenced before 840
2.14	Violate Discip. Condns.	2.10	2.9	890
2.15	Crime of Moral Turp.	2.11	3.2, 3.3	1552	Cross-referenced before 900
2.16	Crime w/out Moral Turp.	2.12	3.4	1554	Cross-referenced before 900
2.17	Specific Misdemeanors	2.13	2.5, 2.6(e), 2.6(f)	850, 860
2.18	Other Statutory Violation	2.14	2.10	900	See 901.05, 905.05
2.19	Other Rule Violation	2.15	2.10	900	See 903.05

101 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues — Jurisdiction

Action by court or judge is presumed valid and made within lawful exercise of jurisdiction. Final judgments are subject to collateral attack only on following grounds: (1) lack of subject matter jurisdiction; (2) lack of personal jurisdiction; or (3) actions in excess of jurisdiction. To succeed on collateral attack, respondent must prove jurisdictional defect from face of record. Where respondent failed to establish jurisdictional defect, civil court decisions must be viewed as valid, and Review Department rejected respondent's collateral attacks on civil court decisions. Furthermore, where respondent already challenged certain court orders in courts of record, respondent cannot continue to do so in State Bar Court, as civil court orders were final and binding for disciplinary purposes. Similarly, respondent failed to prove any jurisdictional defect in case that led to respondent's involuntary inactive enrollment, which case was now final and closed, and respondent did not provide any support for Review Department's ability to review case long after case was final. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [1a-c]

Under rule 2101, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, OCTC had exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether to file charges against attorney. Furthermore, under rule 2603, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may reopen investigations or complaints if (1) there was new material evidence; or (2) Chief Trial Counsel determines there was good cause. Decision to reopen case was within OCTC's prosecutorial discretion. Rule 2603 did not require OCTC to make good cause showing at trial or hearing judge to make good cause finding to reopen case, and Office of General Counsel approval was not required to reopen matter. Where OCTC, through letter, provided notice to attorney that case was closed but could be reopened, case was not closed "on . . . merits," as respondent contended, and OCTC had discretion to reopen case. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [2a, b]

For disciplinary purposes, superior court orders are final and binding once review in courts of record is waived or exhausted. Attorneys cannot wait until State Bar disciplinary proceedings commence to collaterally challenge legitimacy of superior court orders. State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction to determine validity of civil court orders. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [4a-c]

102.10 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Improper Prosecutorial Conduct – Improper reopening of investigation

Under rule 2101, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, OCTC had exclusive jurisdiction to determine whether to file charges against attorney. Furthermore, under rule 2603, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may reopen investigations or complaints if (1) there was new material evidence; or (2) Chief Trial Counsel determines there was good cause. Decision to reopen case was within OCTC's prosecutorial discretion. Rule 2603 did not require OCTC to make good cause showing at trial or hearing judge to make good cause finding to reopen case, and Office of General Counsel approval was not required to reopen matter. Where OCTC, through letter, provided notice to attorney that case was closed but could be reopened, case was not closed "on . . . merits," as respondent contended, and OCTC had discretion to reopen case. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [2a, b]

102.20 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Improper Prosecutorial Conduct – Delay in Prosecution

Rule 5.21, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided generally that disciplinary proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Five-year limit was tolled while civil proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation were pending in any court. While respondent was acting as fiduciary in holding funds in escrow, five-year limitations period did not commence. As respondent did not deliver all funds until after civil lawsuit filed against him, limitations did not begin to run prior to start of lawsuit. Where counts related to circumstances alleged in civil lawsuit, counts were tolled as related to ongoing civil proceeding. Review Department rejected respondent's argument that civil litigation did not toll limitations period as disciplinary issues related only to small part of civil complaint. Conduct related to violations alleged in notice of disciplinary charges (NDC) was clearly same conduct alleged as part of civil litigation, and no authority requires entire lawsuit or certain percentage of lawsuit to relate to alleged violations. Review Department also rejected respondent's claim that appeal did not toll limitations period because it addressed "derivative" issue related to amount of damages owed, as respondent's appeal was of lawsuit based on same act of violation. Review Department held that while civil litigation was pending, include appeal, limitations period was tolled. However, even if appeal period was not tolled, NDC was filed within limitations period, as NDC was filed well under five years from judgement in civil case. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [7a-e]

If disciplinary proceeding is based solely on complainant's allegations of violation of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct, rule of limitations (Rules of Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.21) provides that proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Normally, a statute or rule is violated when every element of violation has occurred. However, rule of limitations is tolled during period that attorney acts in fiduciary relationship with complainant or related party, even if it is other than an attorney-client relationship. Moreover, if disciplinary charge is based on continuing violation of duty, violation is deemed committed at termination of entire course of conduct. Where respondent allegedly breached fiduciary duty to investor under movie financing agreement requiring respondent to hold funds in escrow until close of movie production, rule of limitations was tolled as long as fiduciary relationship continued, and respondent's alleged diversion of funds created continuing violation lasting until completion of purpose of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, where initial notice of disciplinary charges was filed within five years after completion of movie production, misappropriation charge was timely even though diversion of funds occurred more than five years earlier. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [2a-h]

Under rule 5.21(C)(3) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, rule of limitations for disciplinary charges is tolled during pendency of government investigations or proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation. Where Tennessee civil proceeding found that respondent had defrauded investor and was liable for damages, rule of limitations was tolled for disciplinary charges based on same acts or circumstances. However, subsequent sister state collection proceedings, and bankruptcy proceeding to determine dischargeability of debt under Tennessee judgment, were not based on same acts or circumstances, and thus did not toll rule of limitations. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [3a, b]

Respondent seeking to dismiss disciplinary charges on basis of rule of limitation has burden of proving facts showing rule of limitation applies. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [6]

Limitations period is calculated from date of filing of original notice of disciplinary charges (NDC). Where original NDC was filed within five years after termination of fiduciary duty that respondent was alleged to have violated, original NDC was timely filed, and amended NDC based on same misconduct related back to filing of original NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [8]

102.30 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Improper Prosecutorial Conduct– Investigative and/or pretrial misconduct

Respondent's assertion that Office of Chief Trial Counsel had unclean hands for never properly investigating respondent's claims against others was unsupported and therefore rejected by Review Department. Respondent's allegations against others were irrelevant and had no effect on Review Department's culpability conclusions for respondent's own misconduct. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [2]

Rule 2604, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided, in part, that Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may file Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) when attorney had received fair, adequate, and reasonable opportunity to deny or explain matters that were subject of NDC charges. Rule 5.30, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required OCTC to notify attorney before NDC was filed of right to request early neutral evaluation conference (ENEC). Where OCTC mailed notice of ENEC right to respondent's State Bar address, but respondent did not receive notice because respondent had not updated address, which was respondent's responsibility, Review Department held no procedural violation of rule 2604, and hearing judge did not err for not mentioning in decision that no ENEC was held as respondent not entitled to ENEC due to respondent's own failure to update State Bar address. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [3a, b]

Fundamental requirement of due process is opportunity to be heard at meaningful time and in meaningful manner. In California disciplinary proceedings, adequate notice requires only that attorney be fairly apprised of precise nature of charges before proceedings commence. Where Notice of Disciplinary Charges pled specific facts comprising violation and specific rule violated, respondent received due process, and Review Department rejected respondent's contention that due process required that respondent be given notice during investigation that conduct violated specific rule before State Bar could charge respondent with violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [2]

102.90 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Improper Prosecutorial Conduct – Other improper prosecutorial conduct

Respondent's assertion that Office of Chief Trial Counsel had unclean hands for never properly investigating respondent's claims against others was unsupported and therefore rejected by Review Department. Respondent's allegations against others were irrelevant and had no effect on Review Department's culpability conclusions for respondent's own misconduct. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [2]

Rule 2604, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided, in part, that Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may file Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) when attorney had received fair, adequate, and reasonable opportunity to deny or explain matters that were subject of NDC charges. Rule 5.30, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required OCTC to notify attorney before NDC was filed of right to request early neutral evaluation conference (ENEC). Where OCTC mailed notice of ENEC right to respondent's State Bar address, but respondent did not receive notice because respondent had not updated address, which was respondent's responsibility, Review Department held no procedural violation of rule 2604, and hearing judge did not err for not mentioning in decision that no ENEC was held as respondent not entitled to ENEC due to respondent's own failure to update State Bar address. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [3a, b]

103 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues — Disqualification/Bias of Judge

Where respondent failed to establish that hearing judge demonstrated bias or that respondent was specifically prejudiced, and where purpose of hearing judge's questions at trial was to clarify judge's own confusion about testimony, respondent failed to meet burden to show judicial bias, and failed to show he was deprived of due process. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

106.10 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Issues re Pleadings – Sufficiency of pleadings to state grounds for action sought

Notice of Disciplinary Charges must (1) cite statutes or rules attorney allegedly violated; (2) contain facts comprising violation in sufficient detail to permit preparation of defense; and (3) relate stated facts to authorities attorney allegedly violated. Where facts charged in Notice of Disciplinary Charges were very specific, charge cannot be interpreted broadly so other facts not alleged constitute misconduct; such would infringe on respondent's right to fair proceeding as respondent is entitled to adequate notice of rule or statute violated and manner respondent allegedly violated it. Review Department rejected Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent received notice that respondent's overall communication with clients was being charged. As Notice of Disciplinary Charges was narrowly drafted and was not amended to conform to proof, Review Department did not consider other allegations by Office of Chief Trial Counsel on review that respondent failed to communicate in other instances. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [3a, b]

In reviewing an order dismissing a disciplinary proceeding, Review Department looks to operative notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), deems all allegations in that NDC to be true, and may also rely on any judicially noticed facts to assess the sufficiency of the operative NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [1]

If disciplinary proceeding is based solely on complainant's allegations of violation of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct, rule of limitations (Rules of Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.21) provides that proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Normally, a statute or rule is violated when every element of violation has occurred. However, rule of limitations is tolled during period that attorney acts in fiduciary relationship with complainant or related party, even if it is other than an attorney-client relationship. Moreover, if disciplinary charge is based on continuing violation of duty, violation is deemed committed at termination of entire course of conduct. Where respondent allegedly breached fiduciary duty to investor under movie financing agreement requiring respondent to hold funds in escrow until close of movie production, rule of limitations was tolled as long as fiduciary relationship continued, and respondent's alleged diversion of funds created continuing violation lasting until completion of purpose of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, where initial notice of disciplinary charges was filed within five years after completion of movie production, misappropriation charge was timely even though diversion of funds occurred more than five years earlier. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [2a-h]

106.20 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review – Respondent's burden in disciplinary matters

Notice of Disciplinary Charges must (1) cite statutes or rules attorney allegedly violated; (2) contain facts comprising violation in sufficient detail to permit preparation of defense; and (3) relate stated facts to authorities attorney allegedly violated. Where facts charged in Notice of Disciplinary Charges were very specific, charge cannot be interpreted broadly so other facts not alleged constitute misconduct; such would infringe on respondent's right to fair proceeding as respondent is entitled to adequate notice of rule or statute violated and manner respondent allegedly violated it. Review Department rejected Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent received notice that respondent's overall communication with clients was being charged. As Notice of Disciplinary Charges was narrowly drafted and was not amended to conform to proof, Review Department did not consider other allegations by Office of Chief Trial Counsel on review that respondent failed to communicate in other instances. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [3a, b]

Fundamental requirement of due process is opportunity to be heard at meaningful time and in meaningful manner. In California disciplinary proceedings, adequate notice requires only that attorney be fairly apprised of precise nature of charges before proceedings commence. Where Notice of Disciplinary Charges pled specific facts comprising violation and specific rule violated, respondent received due process, and Review Department rejected respondent's contention that due process required that respondent be given notice during investigation that conduct violated specific rule before State Bar could charge respondent with violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cl State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [2]

Respondent seeking to dismiss disciplinary charges on basis of rule of limitation has burden of proving facts showing rule of limitation applies. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [6]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code section as constituting attorney misconduct, attorney was properly found culpable of violating disciplinary statute even though notice of disciplinary charges charged violation of disciplinary statute only, and did not expressly charge violation of Civil Code section. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [9]

106.30 Procedural Issues—Issues re Pleadings—Duplicative charges

Where respondent misrepresented case settled when it was actually dismissed, respondent's failure to inform client about dismissal was factually joined with misrepresentation respondent was working on case and getting client settlement money. Review Department therefore treated moral turpitude violation and violation of failing to inform client of significant developments as single offense involving moral turpitude for discipline purposes. No additional disciplinary weight was given to Business and Professions Code section 6068(m) violation because respondent's misconduct underlying section 6068(m) charge was factually same as misconduct underlying moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [2a, b]

Where respondent was found culpable of three ethical violations (fourth violation involved same misconduct as another violation so was not considered a separate violation for disciplinary purposes), Review Department gave limited weight in aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct. Despite Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent should receive significant aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct because misconduct spanned multiple years and caused significant harm, Review Department did not find it appropriate to consider significant harm in assigning aggravation weight for multiple acts of misconduct, as doing so would double count harm in evaluating aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing and harm to client, public, or administration of justice. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [5]

Attorney willfully violates Business and Professions Code section 6103 when, despite being aware of final, binding court order, attorney knowingly chooses to violate order. Where respondent heard judge's oral orders to move away from criminal defendant client during client's remand into custody, and respondent failed to obey orders for several seconds when orders demanded immediate compliance, respondent willfully violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, but as same misconduct underlay section 6068, subdivision (b) violation, no additional weight assigned for section 6103 violation. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [3]

Where same acts of misconduct by respondent violated both section 6068(a) and rule 3-300, hearing judge erred by dismissing section 6068(a) charge with prejudice. Better approach was to find both violations, but assign duplicative violation no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [6]

Where respondent was culpable of committing act of moral turpitude and of violating rule of professional conduct based on same misconduct underlying respondent's culpability of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068(a), hearing judge was correct in giving other violations no additional weight in culpability. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [4a, b]

Misrepresentation of fact to court for purpose of obtaining continuance violates attorney's duty not to mislead courts. For this purpose, administrative tribunal acting in quasi-judicial capacity is not distinct from court. Where respondent directed assistant to make material misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, and then took no steps to correct record despite notice that tribunal had relied on misrepresentation, respondent was culpable of intentional act of moral turpitude and of misleading tribunal, but violations were treated as single offense involving moral turpitude, and no additional weight was assigned to duplicative charge. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [3a - f]

Where respondent misused her authority and discretion as trustee of her family's trust, intentionally violated numerous fiduciary duties set forth in the Probate Code by means infused with dishonesty and/or concealment, made repeated misrepresentations to the court and third parties in documents filed which falsely represented her as trustee after she had been removed, and intentionally violated court orders, respondent was culpable of multiple intentional acts of moral turpitude. Respondent was also culpable of violating section 6068(a), but Review Department assigned these violations no additional weight because they were duplicative of section 6106 violations. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [3a, b]

Where charge against respondent prosecutor of failing to comply with Constitution and laws, based on respondent's willful violation of criminal defendant's constitutional rights, overlapped with moral turpitude charge based on same misconduct, charge of failing to comply with law was properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [4]

Where section 6106 moral turpitude charge for making misrepresentations to a tribunal and section 6068, subdivision (d) charge for seeking to mislead a judge were based on the same misconduct, section 6068, subdivision (d) charge dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [1]

Where finding that respondent was culpable of moral turpitude already accounted for respondent's pattern of telling half-truths, Review Department rejected OCTC's request for finding of aggravation under either multiple acts of wrongdoing or pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [7]

Where respondent, after learning that he was suspended from practice, attempted to negotiate settlement of clients' case and appeared for a client at a deposition, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(a) by his unauthorized practice of law, but this violation was given no weight, because respondent was also found culpable of moral turpitude based on same facts. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016)5Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [8a-c]

106.40 Procedural Issues – Issues re Pleadings – Amendment of pleadings

Where hearing judge allowed State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) to amend Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) three days before trial started and did not allow continuance of trial, but it was undisputed that only amendments made to NDC were to allege and attach certified copies of final South Carolina disciplinary order and underlying attorney disciplinary rules, in place of uncertified records submitted with original NDC, and respondent had not established required showing of prejudice, Review Department upheld hearing judge's allowance of OCTC's amendment to original NDC as non-substantive when denying respondent's request for trial continuance. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [2]

Notice of Disciplinary Charges must (1) cite statutes or rules attorney allegedly violated; (2) contain facts comprising violation in sufficient detail to permit preparation of defense; and (3) relate stated facts to authorities attorney allegedly violated. Where facts charged in Notice of Disciplinary Charges were very specific, charge cannot be interpreted broadly so other facts not alleged constitute misconduct; such would infringe on respondent's right to fair proceeding as respondent is entitled to adequate notice of rule or statute violated and manner respondent allegedly violated it. Review Department rejected Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent received notice that respondent's overall communication with clients was being charged. As Notice of Disciplinary Charges was narrowly drafted and was not amended to conform to proof, Review Department did not consider other allegations by Office of Chief Trial Counsel on review that respondent failed to communicate in other instances. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [3a, b]

Limitations period is calculated from date of filing of original notice of disciplinary charges (NDC). Where original NDC was filed within five years after termination of fiduciary duty that respondent was alleged to have violated, original NDC was timely filed, and amended NDC based on same misconduct related back to filing of original NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [8]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation if respondent's due process rights are not violated. Where OCTC was or should have been aware of uncharged misconduct before disciplinary charges were filed, misconduct should have been charged. Nonetheless, where respondent stipulated to conduct constituting uncharged misconduct; uncharged misconduct was elicited for relevant purpose and based on respondent's own representations; and hearing judge granted motion to conform charges to proof at trial, hearing judge correctly assigned nominal weight in aggravation for uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [7a-c]

106.50 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Issues re Pleadings – Answer to initial pleading

Willful violation of rule 9.20(c) requires neither bad faith nor even actual knowledge of rule provision violated. Where respondent conceded in answer to charges, and in stipulation of facts, that respondent failed to timely file rule 9.20(c) declaration and that State Bar sent email notices informing respondent of rule 9.20(c) filing duties, one that was received and another that was not returned, respondent was culpable of willfully violating rule 9.20(c). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [1]

Where respondent's answer to disciplinary charges and subsequent stipulation admitted his culpability of willful violation of rule 9.20(c); respondent admitted facts of uncharged misconduct; and respondent did not dispute culpability of violating statutory duty even though stipulation was technically limited to facts of offenses, respondent was entitled to significant mitigating credit for cooperation with State Bar, even though facts in probation and rule 9.20 matters are generally easily provable and stipulations do not save significant time. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [5]

106.90 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Issues re Pleadings – Other issues

Amended Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) charged assortment of actions that, taken together, alleged overreaching and breach of fiduciary duties. However, failure to communicate allegations were already alleged under more specific Business and Professions Code subsection – section 6068, subdivision (m) – in separate Amended NDC count. Before enactment of subdivision (m), which was added in 1986 and became effective in 1987, there was "common law" duty to communicate and proper to base culpability under subdivision (a). Now, improper to find violations for same facts under both subdivisions (a) and (m) of Business and Professions Code section 6068. Specific statute should be charged instead of using broader subdivision (a*). In the Matter of Isola* (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [12a,b]

Rule 2604, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided, in part, that Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may file Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) when attorney had received fair, adequate, and reasonable opportunity to deny or explain matters that were subject of NDC charges. Rule 5.30, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required OCTC to notify attorney before NDC was filed of right to request early neutral evaluation conference (ENEC). Where OCTC mailed notice of ENEC right to respondent's State Bar address, but respondent did not receive notice because respondent had not updated address, which was respondent's responsibility, Review Department held no procedural violation of rule 2604, and hearing judge did not err for not mentioning in decision that no ENEC was held as respondent not entitled to ENEC due to respondent's own failure to update State Bar address. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [3a, b]

Whether an attorney engaged in multiple acts of misconduct in aggravation is not limited to counts pleaded. Where respondent's culpability of two counts of violating former rule 4-100(A) encompassed 168 separate acts of misconduct, respondent committed multiple acts of misconduct. However, where misconduct lasted only 10 months, respondent's multiple acts did not warrant substantial aggravation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [5]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation if respondent's due process rights are not violated. Where OCTC was or should have been aware of uncharged misconduct before disciplinary charges were filed, misconduct should have been charged. Nonetheless, where respondent stipulated to conduct constituting uncharged misconduct; uncharged misconduct was elicited for relevant purpose and based on respondent's own representations; and hearing judge granted motion to conform charges to proof at trial, hearing judge correctly assigned nominal weight in aggravation for uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [7a-c]

Where respondent was found culpable of three disciplinary violations, but committed at least 25 acts of wrongdoing over two-year period by repeatedly failing to respond to letters from insurer regarding client's claim, hearing judge erred in assigning only minimal aggravating weight to respondent's multiple acts of wrongdoing. Multiple acts of wrongdoing are not limited to the counts pled, and respondent's recurring ethical violations were assigned significant aggravating weight. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [3]

113 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues—Discovery (rules 5.65-5.71)

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [1a, b]

Discovery sanctions are reviewed under abuse of discretion or error of law standard. Two requirements to impose discovery sanctions: (1) failure to comply with court-order discovery; and (2) failure must be willful. In analyzing discovery ruling, court is guided by California's long-standing public policy favoring disclosure and objectives that discovery rules were enacted to accomplish: (1) ascertaining truth and preventing perjury; (2) providing effective means to detect and expose false claims and defenses; (3) making facts available in simple, convenient, and inexpensive way; (4) educating parties before trial as to value of claims and defenses; (5) expediting litigation; (6) safeguarding against surprise; (7) preventing delay; (8) simplifying and narrowing issues; and (9) expediting and facilitating preparation and trial. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [2]

Disobeying court order to provide discovery is misuse of discovery process under Civil Discovery Act which is applicable in State Bar Court proceedings. Permissible sanction in State Bar Court under Civil Discovery Act is terminating sanction that dismisses action. Where applicant chose not to appear for two scheduled depositions, improperly refused to answer questions at another deposition, and terminated a fourth deposition, applicant did not comply with hearing judge's orders requiring her to sit for deposition and cooperate with investigation and discovery; applicant's failure to comply was willful; and hearing judge had denied two other motions to dismiss by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners based on applicant's failure to participate in deposition, hearing judge correctly determined that discovery sanctions were appropriate and did not abuse her discretion by imposing terminating sanctions. Applicant had opportunity to comply with orders to participate in deposition but did not do so. Applicant obstructed discovery, causing dismissal, which prevented State Bar Court from determining whether applicant was morally fit to practice law. Review Department held terminating sanctions were appropriate and affirmed hearing judge's dismissal order. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [3a-d]

Where applicant failed to seek stay of proceedings in Hearing Department, Review Department rejected applicant's argument that hearing judge should not have dismissed case while request for interlocutory review of hearing judge's order denying applicant's motion for relief from further deposition was pending. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989.[4]

Rule 5.65, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided that, generally, written discovery requests must be made and served on other party within 10 days after service of answer to notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), or within 10 days after service of any amendment to NDC. Where respondent was aware of 2013 investigation in 2013 but did not timely request discovery of Office of Chief Trial Counsel's investigation file until one month before trial and 10 months after NDC filed; respondent offered no evidence or valid reason why respondent failed to comply with State Bar discovery rules; respondent had ample opportunity to seek discovery earlier in case; and respondent, by not making timely discovery request, could not properly make motion to compel, hearing judge did not abuse discretion by denying respondent's motion to compel as untimely. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [4a, b]

115 Procedural Issues—Continuances (rule 5.49)

Where hearing judge allowed State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) to amend Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) three days before trial started and did not allow continuance of trial, but it was undisputed that only amendments made to NDC were to allege and attach certified copies of final South Carolina disciplinary order and underlying attorney disciplinary rules, in place of uncertified records submitted with original NDC, and respondent had not established required showing of prejudice, Review Department upheld hearing judge's allowance of OCTC's amendment to original NDC as non-substantive when denying respondent's request for trial continuance. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [2]

Where OCTC argued for first time in closing trial brief that respondent engaged in dishonesty and bad faith in seeking continuance of disciplinary trial, Review Department declined to assign bad faith as aggravating factor, because respondent did not have opportunity to respond to OCTC's bad faith allegation, and OCTC did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent deliberately attempted to mislead court. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [7a-c]

117 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues—Dismissal (rules 5.122-5.124)

Disobeying court order to provide discovery is misuse of discovery process under Civil Discovery Act which is applicable in State Bar Court proceedings. Permissible sanction in State Bar Court under Civil Discovery Act is terminating sanction that dismisses action. Where applicant chose not to appear for two scheduled depositions, improperly refused to answer questions at another deposition, and terminated a fourth deposition, applicant did not comply with hearing judge's orders requiring her to sit for deposition and cooperate with investigation and discovery; applicant's failure to comply was willful; and hearing judge had denied two other motions to dismiss by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners based on applicant's failure to participate in deposition, hearing judge correctly determined that discovery sanctions were appropriate and did not abuse her discretion by imposing terminating sanctions. Applicant had opportunity to comply with orders to participate in deposition but did not do so. Applicant obstructed discovery, causing dismissal, which prevented State Bar Court from determining whether applicant was morally fit to practice law. Review Department held terminating sanctions were appropriate and affirmed hearing judge's dismissal order. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [3a-d]

Where applicant failed to seek stay of proceedings in Hearing Department, Review Department rejected applicant's argument that hearing judge should not have dismissed case while request for interlocutory review of hearing judge's order denying applicant's motion for relief from further deposition was pending. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989.[4]

Where moral character proceeding dismissed with prejudice, and no moral character hearing on merits occurred, applicant prohibited from beginning new proceeding in State Bar Court based on same adverse moral charter determination from State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee). To allow applicant to do so would reward applicant for obstructing discovery. If applicant wants to continue to seek admission to practice law in California, applicant must submit new Application for Determination of Moral Character, and Committee determines when applicant may file such new application. Applicant may appeal any other future adverse moral character determinations by Committee, as allowed by applicable rules, based on different Application for Determination of Moral Character. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [5a, b]

Rule 5.21, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided generally that disciplinary proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Five-year limit was tolled while civil proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation were pending in any court. While respondent was acting as fiduciary in holding funds in escrow, five-year limitations period did not commence. As respondent did not deliver all funds until after civil lawsuit filed against him, limitations did not begin to run prior to start of lawsuit. Where counts related to circumstances alleged in civil lawsuit, counts were tolled as related to ongoing civil proceeding. Review Department rejected respondent's argument that civil litigation did not toll limitations period as disciplinary issues related only to small part of civil complaint. Conduct related to violations alleged in notice of disciplinary charges (NDC) was clearly same conduct alleged as part of civil litigation, and no authority requires entire lawsuit or certain percentage of lawsuit to relate to alleged violations. Review Department also rejected respondent's claim that appeal did not toll limitations period because it addressed "derivative" issue related to amount of damages owed, as respondent's appeal was of lawsuit based on same act of violation. Review Department held that while civil litigation was pending, include appeal, limitations period was tolled. However, even if appeal period was not tolled, NDC was filed within limitations period, as NDC was filed well under five years from judgement in civil case. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [7a-e]

In reviewing an order dismissing a disciplinary proceeding, Review Department looks to operative notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), deems all allegations in that NDC to be true, and may also rely on any judicially noticed facts to assess the sufficiency of the operative NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [1]

If disciplinary proceeding is based solely on complainant's allegations of violation of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct, rule of limitations (Rules of Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.21) provides that proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Normally, a statute or rule is violated when every element of violation has occurred. However, rule of limitations is tolled during period that attorney acts in fiduciary relationship with complainant or related party, even if it is other than an attorney-client relationship. Moreover, if disciplinary charge is based on continuing violation of duty, violation is deemed committed at termination of entire course of conduct. Where respondent allegedly breached fiduciary duty to investor under movie financing agreement requiring respondent to hold funds in escrow until close of movie production, rule of limitations was tolled as long as fiduciary relationship continued, and respondent's alleged diversion of funds created continuing violation lasting until completion of purpose of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, where initial notice of disciplinary charges was filed within five years after completion of movie production, misappropriation charge was timely even though diversion of funds occurred more than five years earlier. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [2a-h]

Under rule 5.21(C)(3) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, rule of limitations for disciplinary charges is tolled during pendency of government investigations or proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation. Where Tennessee civil proceeding found that respondent had defrauded investor and was liable for damages, rule of limitations was tolled for disciplinary charges based on same acts or circumstances. However, subsequent sister state collection proceedings, and bankruptcy proceeding to determine dischargeability of debt under Tennessee judgment, were not based on same acts or circumstances, and thus did not toll rule of limitations. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [3a, b]

Limitations period is calculated from date of filing of original notice of disciplinary charges (NDC). Where original NDC was filed within five years after termination of fiduciary duty that respondent was alleged to have violated, original NDC was timely filed, and amended NDC based on same misconduct related back to filing of original NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [8]

Stipulated facts in disciplinary proceedings are binding on parties under State Bar rule 5.58(G). Where respondent stipulated that that he was obligated to pay monetary sanctions awarded against his law firm; law firm name did not indicate it was a corporation or limited liability partnership, as would be required by State Bar Rules 3.152(B) and 3.174(B); and even if it were, respondent could not thereby escape personal liability for his own professional malfeasance and still would have been required to report sanctions award against him, record and law supported respondent's stipulation, and hearing judge erred in exonerating respondent and dismissing disciplinary proceeding based on conclusion that respondent was not individually responsible for paying sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [2a, b]

Where hearing judge held full and fair trial on aggravation and mitigation but dismissed case without making any findings, and Review Department reversed dismissal, Review Department reviewed record and made its own findings and discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [5]

119 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues—Other Pretrial Matters

Pursuant to rule 5.101.1(B), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, unless otherwise ordered by court, parties are required to exchange exhibits at least 10 days prior to pretrial conference, and pursuant to rule 5.101.1(I), failure to comply, without good cause, may constitute grounds for exclusion of exhibits. Where respondent failed to exchange exhibits prior to trial as required by rule and ordered by court, and respondent complained he did not do so as respondent was awaiting receipt of case file, respondent cannot hold Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) responsible for respondent's failure to exchange exhibits in respondent's possession or which respondent was capable of attaining. Where respondent contended that (1) respondent was experiencing personal problems; (2) respondent lacked litigation experience and had no experience with State Bar Court matters; (3) respondent's counsel withdrew from case 12 days before start of trial, and (4) respondent failed to explain how exclusion of exhibits prejudiced him, respondent did not establish good cause for failing to exchange exhibits with OCTC prior to trial, and Review Department affirmed hearing judge's finding excluding exhibits from evidence. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [5a-c]

Rule 5.104(C), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required admission of relevant evidence if it was sort of evidence on which responsible persons were accustomed to rely in conduct of serious affairs. Where judge properly excluded respondent's exhibits under rule 5.101.1(I), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, relevance of respondent's evidence was not at issue because respondent had already failed to comply under rule 5.101.1. Review Department held respondent failed to show hearing judge abused discretion in excluding some of respondent's exhibits for failing to comply with Rules of Procedure and therefore rejected respondent's request to admit excluded exhibits into record. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [6a, b]

Pretrial statement filed in Hearing Department was part of record in Review Department and could be judicially noticed by Hearing Department on remand. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [5]

Where respondent stated in pretrial statement that she had committed all acts of misconduct of which Review Department found her culpable, as well as stipulating to certain facts, respondent was entitled to considerable weight in mitigation under standard 1.6(e) for cooperation with State Bar. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [11]

Due process does not require that petitioner for reinstatement be allowed to present evidence of rehabilitation at evidentiary hearing, where applicable provision of State Bar Rules of Procedure expressly provides for dismissal of petition for failure to comply with prefiling requirements, including reimbursement of Client Security Fund. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [5]

120 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues—Conduct of Trial

Where respondent failed to establish that hearing judge demonstrated bias or that respondent was specifically prejudiced, and where purpose of hearing judge's questions at trial was to clarify judge's own confusion about testimony, respondent failed to meet burden to show judicial bias, and failed to show he was deprived of due process. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

Where OCTC did not raise issue of indifference toward rectification or atonement at trial, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to provide rebuttal evidence, and record was unclear regarding relevant facts, Review Department declined to assign aggravation based on respondent's alleged failure to make amends to client by paying for medical treatment. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [5]

130 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues—Procedure on Review (rules 5.150-5.162)

Where applicant failed to seek stay of proceedings in Hearing Department, Review Department rejected applicant's argument that hearing judge should not have dismissed case while request for interlocutory review of hearing judge's order denying applicant's motion for relief from further deposition was pending. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989.[4]

Where Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) did not appeal hearing judge's finding of no clear and convincing evidence of misappropriation, but instead attempted to argue misappropriation by gross negligence in its responsive brief on appeal, although some facts suggested respondent's actions may have been grossly negligent or construed as other misconduct, Review Department concluded that respondent did not have opportunity to fully address gross negligence issue on review and it would be unfair for Review Department to overturn hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [7]

In reviewing an order dismissing a disciplinary proceeding, Review Department looks to operative notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), deems all allegations in that NDC to be true, and may also rely on any judicially noticed facts to assess the sufficiency of the operative NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [1]

Pretrial statement filed in Hearing Department was part of record in Review Department and could be judicially noticed by Hearing Department on remand. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [5]

Regardless of whether issue was fully developed at Hearing Department, Review Department is required to independently review record and make any findings, conclusions, or decision or recommendation different from those of hearing judge. Review Department may also address an issue not raised in request for review, provided parties have opportunity to brief issue. Where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary proceeding based on rule of limitations, and OCTC argued in pretrial statement and on review that rule of limitations was tolled based on respondent's alleged fiduciary relationship with complaining witness, Review Department could reach issue of tolling based on fiduciary relationship after giving parties opportunity to brief issue. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [7a, b]

In analyzing applicable standards, State Bar Court first determines which standard specifies most severe sanction for misconduct. Where respondent was charged with two counts of mishandling client funds, and hearing judge found respondent not culpable on those counts but Review Department reversed that finding, Review Department applied most severe standard applicable to those charges, which provided for greater minimum actual suspension than recommended by hearing judge. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [9a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent and his therapist testified credibly regarding respondent's emotional difficulties at the time of his misconduct and his subsequent recovery, these findings were entitled to great weight. Where that testimony and other evidence established that respondent had recovered from his emotional difficulties, and respondent had repeatedly attempted to rectify part of his misconduct, respondent established that he had recovered, and his emotional difficulties were properly considered in mitigation. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [6a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, committed act of moral turpitude by improperly failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel in order to secure strategic trial advantage, Review Department deferred to hearing judge's determination that respondent's alternative explanation of her conduct lacked credibility. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Where hearing judge held full and fair trial on aggravation and mitigation but dismissed case without making any findings, and Review Department reversed dismissal, Review Department reviewed record and made its own findings and discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [5]

Where respondent's misconduct was related to prescription drug abuse, Review Department permitted respondent to augment record with evidence of rehabilitation occurring after trial in disciplinary proceedings. Evidence of post-trial rehabilitation was not entitled to full evidentiary weight, however, because it was not subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [6a, b]

Where Supreme Court has not published decision interpreting State Bar Act provision or related provision of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, State Bar Court itself interprets statute and rule as written. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [1]

Where the Review Department conducts a summary review under rule 5.157 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, the hearing judge's decision is final as to all material findings of fact, and the issues are limited to: (1) contentions that the facts support conclusions of law different from those reached by the hearing judge; (2) disagreement about the appropriate disposition or degree of discipline; or (3) other questions of law. Issues and contentions not raised are waived on summary review. In the Matter of Unger (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 506. [la, b]

Where respondent included facts that were not in the record in her brief on review, Review Department granted OCTC's motion to strike those portions of respondent's brief, under rule 5.156(A) of Rules of Procedure, providing that Review Department considers only evidence in Hearing Department record. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [1a, b]

Where respondent requested that Review Department correct asserted factual errors by hearing judge, but did not require with rules 5.153 (A) and 5.152(C) requiring her to specify disputed factual findings and support her position with record references, and where errors were merely facts or opinions from respondent's testimony that were contrary to or unsupported by the record, Review Department denied respondent's request. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [2a, b)

Lack of clarity in hearing judge's decision, as to whether moral turpitude culpability finding was based on intentional or grossly negligent conduct, was problematic for purposes of ascertaining seriousness of misconduct and assessing corresponding discipline. Review Department clarified, based on misrepresentations in documents respondent drafted and filed, that respondent intentionally deceived tribunal. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [3]

Where respondent did not request review or file responsive brief on appeal, respondent waived any claim of factual error in record. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.152(C).) In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr, 448. [1]

Where respondent did not request review or file responsive brief on appeal, respondent was precluded from appearing at oral argument. (Rules Proc. Of State Bar, rule 5.153 (A).) In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.[2]

Where a party seeks to take judicial notice and augment record on review under rule 5.165(D) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, motion must be identified as such and filed and served as separate pleading on the date the opening brief is due to be filed; making such request in a responsive brief is procedurally improper. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [1]

135.09 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues –Amendments to Rules of Procedure — Other issues re amendments to Rules of Procedure generally

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statute should not be construed to apply retroactively to offense committed prior to effective date. Where matter was submitted for decision prior to March 1, 2021, effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020, effective date of former rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [22]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [11]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 739. [9]

Rule 5.441(B)(2) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar establishes that reimbursement of Client Security Fund for moneys paid out as result of disbarred attorney's misconduct is a mandatory prefiling requirement for petitions for reinstatement. Where State Bar Act provision requires such payment, State Bar Board of Governors acted within its authority, and not in conflict with statute, in adopting rule regulating timing of payment by requiring that it be made before petition for reinstatement is filed. Interpreting rule to require prefiling payment supports policy goals of maintaining solvency of Client Security Fund, and preserving judicial resources by avoiding lengthy reinstatement proceedings when petitioner has no prospects for payment. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [3]

In case involving interpretation of State Bar Rules of Procedure, Review Department took judicial notice of Board of Governors agenda item, State Bar Rules, and relevant state legislation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [4]

135.50 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues –Amendments to Rules of Procedure—Defaults and Trials

Under rule 5.106(D) of Rules of Procedure, prior record of discipline was properly considered for purposes of aggravation and level of discipline after respondent's culpability was established. Hearing judge therefore properly denied respondent's request to strike evidence of prior discipline record pursuant to rule 1260 of the State Bar Court Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [5a, b]

Under rule 5.106(A), hearing judge should have considered previous disciplinary order as a prior record of discipline even though it was not yet final. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [3]

135.60 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues – Amendments to Rules of Procedure – Dispositions and costs

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statute should not be construed to apply retroactively to offense committed prior to effective date. Where matter was submitted for decision prior to March 1, 2021, effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020, effective date of former rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [22]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [11]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [9]

135.87 Amendments to Rules of Procedure — Reinstatement after Disbarment

Rule 5.441(B)(2) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar establishes that reimbursement of Client Security Fund for moneys paid out as result of disbarred attorney's misconduct is a mandatory prefiling requirement for petitions for reinstatement. Where State Bar Act provision requires such payment, State Bar Board of Governors acted within its authority, and not in conflict with statute, in adopting rule regulating timing of payment by requiring that it be made before petition for reinstatement is filed. Interpreting rule to require prefiling payment supports policy goals of maintaining solvency of Client Security Fund, and preserving judicial resources by avoiding lengthy reinstatement proceedings when petitioner has no prospects for payment. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [3]

141 Evidentiary Issues—Relevance

Hearing judge had broad discretion to determine admissibility and relevance of evidence. Standard of review generally applied to evidentiary rulings is abuse of discretion. To prevail on claim of error, abuse of discretion and actual prejudice resulting from ruling must be established. Where hearing judge denied admission of documents from six separate lawsuits in which company was defendant, as well as company's 2009 bankruptcy petition, hearing judge did not abuse her discretion as civil lawsuits and evidence of company's bankruptcy were irrelevant as evidence had no bearing on circumstances pertaining to respondent's conviction; documents concerning company's perceived financial distress would not mitigate or excuse respondent's misconduct as bankruptcy proceeding filed in 2009 and respondent's conviction occurred in August 2008; and respondent failed to identify specific additional facts or arguments he would have offered if evidence admitted or that he suffered any actual prejudice. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [3a-c]

141.10 Evidentiary Issues—Relevant and Reliable Evidence Admissible

Hearing judge had broad discretion to determine admissibility and relevance of evidence. Standard of review generally applied to evidentiary rulings is abuse of discretion. To prevail on claim of error, abuse of discretion and actual prejudice resulting from ruling must be established. Where hearing judge denied admission of documents from six separate lawsuits in which company was defendant, as well as company's 2009 bankruptcy petition, hearing judge did not abuse her discretion as civil lawsuits and evidence of company's bankruptcy were irrelevant as evidence had no bearing on circumstances pertaining to respondent's conviction; documents concerning company's perceived financial distress would not mitigate or excuse respondent's misconduct as bankruptcy proceeding filed in 2009 and respondent's conviction occurred in August 2008; and respondent failed to identify specific additional facts or arguments he would have offered if evidence admitted or that he suffered any actual prejudice. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [3a-c]

Where culpability determinations were based on evidence introduced at trial without respondent's objection, respondent's due process rights were not violated by admission of such evidence, as any objection had been waived. Moreover, State Bar's rules permit admission of relevant, reliable hearsay evidence to supplement or explain other evidence, although hearsay admitted over timely objection is not sufficient in itself to support a finding. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [1]

142 Evidentiary Issues—Hearsay

Police reports are not considered business records, an exception to hearsay rules. Respondent's statements in police report, however, were admissible as party admissions, an exception to hearsay rule. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [1a, b]

Under rule 5.104 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, only hearsay evidence that is relevant and reliable may be considered for admission, and hearsay may only be used for purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence. Over timely objection, however, hearsay will not be sufficient itself to support finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions. Unlike hearing judge, who overruled respondent's counsel's hearsay objection and concluded statements in police report were admissible under rules of procedure, Review Department held some statements in police report were inadmissible hearsay, as they did not fall under rule 5.104 as corroborative evidence. Where third-party statements in police report were multi-layered hearsay, not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, did not supplement record, or were insufficient to support other evidence in record, statements were inadmissible hearsay, and Review Department did not consider those third-party statements in police report in findings on review. However, hearsay statements that supplemented or explained respondent's statements/admissions in police report were admissible and, as stipulated facts are binding on parties, third-party witness statements that supplemented parties' stipulation were also admissible. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [2a-e]

142.10 Evidentiary Issues– Hearsay – Admissibility

Police reports are not considered business records, an exception to hearsay rules. Respondent's statements in police report, however, were admissible as party admissions, an exception to hearsay rule. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [1a, b]

Under rule 5.104 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, only hearsay evidence that is relevant and reliable may be considered for admission, and hearsay may only be used for purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence. Over timely objection, however, hearsay will not be sufficient itself to support finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions. Unlike hearing judge, who overruled respondent's counsel's hearsay objection and concluded statements in police report were admissible under rules of procedure, Review Department held some statements in police report were inadmissible hearsay, as they did not fall under rule 5.104 as corroborative evidence. Where third-party statements in police report were multi-layered hearsay, not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, did not supplement record, or were insufficient to support other evidence in record, statements were inadmissible hearsay, and Review Department did not consider those third-party statements in police report in findings on review. However, hearsay statements that supplemented or explained respondent's statements/admissions in police report were admissible and, as stipulated facts are binding on parties, third-party witness statements that supplemented parties' stipulation were also admissible. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [2a-e]

Where culpability determinations were based on evidence introduced at trial without respondent's objection, respondent's due process rights were not violated by admission of such evidence, as any objection had been waived. Moreover, State Bar's rules permit admission of relevant, reliable hearsay evidence to supplement or explain other evidence, although hearsay admitted over timely objection is not sufficient in itself to support a finding. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [1]

Hearsay evidence is admissible in State Bar Court proceedings, but is not sufficient in itself to support finding if admitted over timely objection made on grounds valid in civil actions. Where police reports containing victim's hearsay statements were admitted into evidence by stipulation, without objection or limitation by respondent, hearing judge properly relied on victim's statements. Although hearing judge sustained respondent's counsel's objections at trial to questions that would have elicited victim's hearsay statements from investigator, those objections did not preclude reliance on victim's statements in police report admitted without objection. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [3]

142.20 Evidentiary Issues– Hearsay – Insufficiency to Support Finding

Under rule 5.104 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, only hearsay evidence that is relevant and reliable may be considered for admission, and hearsay may only be used for purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence. Over timely objection, however, hearsay will not be sufficient itself to support finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions. Unlike hearing judge, who overruled respondent's counsel's hearsay objection and concluded statements in police report were admissible under rules of procedure, Review Department held some statements in police report were inadmissible hearsay, as they did not fall under rule 5.104 as corroborative evidence. Where third-party statements in police report were multi-layered hearsay, not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, did not supplement record, or were insufficient to support other evidence in record, statements were inadmissible hearsay, and Review Department did not consider those third-party statements in police report in findings on review. However, hearsay statements that supplemented or explained respondent's statements/admissions in police report were admissible and, as stipulated facts are binding on parties, third-party witness statements that supplemented parties' stipulation were also admissible. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [2a-e]

Where culpability determinations were based on evidence introduced at trial without respondent's objection, respondent's due process rights were not violated by admission of such evidence, as any objection had been waived. Moreover, State Bar's rules permit admission of relevant, reliable hearsay evidence to supplement or explain other evidence, although hearsay admitted over timely objection is not sufficient in itself to support a finding. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [1]

Hearsay evidence is admissible in State Bar Court proceedings, but is not sufficient in itself to support finding if admitted over timely objection made on grounds valid in civil actions. Where police reports containing victim's hearsay statements were admitted into evidence by stipulation, without objection or limitation by respondent, hearing judge properly relied on victim's statements. Although hearing judge sustained respondent's counsel's objections at trial to questions that would have elicited victim's hearsay statements from investigator, those objections did not preclude reliance on victim's statements in police report admitted without objection. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [3]

143 Evidentiary Issues– Attorney-Client/Work Product Privileges

Duty of confidentiality is broader than attorney-client privilege and prohibits attorney from disclosing facts and allegations that might cause client or former client public embarrassment. Where petitioner testified at reinstatement trial that it dawned on petitioner that former client in child molestation case, whose full name petitioner testified to at reinstatement trial, committed crime when petitioner noticed similarities between witnesses' testimony about former client's odd odor and petitioner's own recollection of former client's odor, Review Department held that while petitioner's divulgence of client confidences went beyond what was appropriate disclosure to explain prior misconduct and displayed carelessness regarding professional responsibility to former client, it did not demonstrate lack of rehabilitation as hearing judge found. Petitioner's work as court-appointed paralegal with federal court, which required him to guard confidential records such as matters subject to protective orders, diminished petitioner's carelessness regarding testimony about former client. In the Matter of Ellerman (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 899. [3a-e]

146 Evidentiary Issues—Judicial Notice

Pretrial statement filed in Hearing Department was part of record in Review Department and could be judicially noticed by Hearing Department on remand. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [5]

Order denying OCTC's petition for involuntary inactive enrollment was judicially noticeable in subsequent disciplinary proceeding involving same respondent. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [5]

In case involving interpretation of State Bar Rules of Procedure, Review Department took judicial notice of Board of Governors agenda item, State Bar Rules, and relevant state legislation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [4]

Where a party seeks to take judicial notice and augment record on review under rule 5.165(D) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, motion must be identified as such and filed and served as separate pleading on the date the opening brief is due to be filed; making such request in a responsive brief is procedurally improper. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [1]

147 Evidentiary Issues—Presumptions

Under Evidence Code section 664, it is acknowledged that official duty has been regularly performed; thus, there is presumption that Supreme Court Clerk properly performed official duty in serving respondent and respondent's attorney with discipline order as provided in California Rules of Court, rule 9.18(b). Where respondent began transferring cases due to impending suspension prior to issuance of Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order; Review Department had recommended two-year suspension in respondent's prior disciplinary matter several months earlier; and respondent's attorney referenced Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order in email to respondent, argument that respondent did not receive notice of rule 9.20 order from either Supreme Court or respondent's attorney was not credible, and respondent did not rebut presumption of Evidence Code section 664. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [2]

148 Evidentiary Issues—Witnesses

Aggravation for lack of candor in disciplinary proceedings must be supported by express finding that testimony lacked candor or was dishonest. Where record contained some incongruities in witnesses' testimony, but Office of Chief Trial Counsel had not presented clear and convincing evidence to establish respondent's testimony lacked candor, Review Department adopted hearing judge's finding that respondent testified credibly and declined to find aggravation for lack of candor. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [5]

Hearing judge is in better position to assess nature and quality of testimony. Hearing judge's findings that respondent's testimony lacked credibility, and that victim's statements to police were credible, was entitled to great weight. Review Department would not contradict hearing judge's credibility conclusions where record lacked sufficient evidence to do so. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [2a, b]

Where hearing judge did not explain reason for finding respondent's testimony not credible, and evidence corroborated respondent's testimony, Review Department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent's testimony was not credible. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [8]

Great weight is given to hearing judge's findings on candor because judge who hears and sees witness testify is best positioned to make this determination. Where hearing judge heard respondent testify over multiple days and did not find lack of candor despite OCTC's request, Review Department declined to find dishonest testimony as additional aggravating factor. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [7]

151 Evidentiary Issues — Evidentiary Effect of Stipulations

Under rule 5.104 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, only hearsay evidence that is relevant and reliable may be considered for admission, and hearsay may only be used for purpose of supplementing or explaining other evidence. Over timely objection, however, hearsay will not be sufficient itself to support finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions. Unlike hearing judge, who overruled respondent's counsel's hearsay objection and concluded statements in police report were admissible under rules of procedure, Review Department held some statements in police report were inadmissible hearsay, as they did not fall under rule 5.104 as corroborative evidence. Where third-party statements in police report were multi-layered hearsay, not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, did not supplement record, or were insufficient to support other evidence in record, statements were inadmissible hearsay, and Review Department did not consider those third-party statements in police report in findings on review. However, hearsay statements that supplemented or explained respondent's statements/admissions in police report were admissible and, as stipulated facts are binding on parties, third-party witness statements that supplemented parties' stipulation were also admissible. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [2a-e]

California Rules of Court, rule 9.20(a)(1) and (4) require attorneys to (1) notify clients being represented in pending matters, along with any co-counsel, of their disciplinary suspension and consequent disqualification to act as attorney after suspension's effective date; (2) notify clients to seek other legal advice if there is no co-counsel; (3) notify opposing counsel in pending litigation; (4) if no opposing counsel, notify adverse parties of suspension and consequent disqualification to act as attorney after suspension's effective date; and (5) file copy of notice with court, agency, or tribunal before which litigation is pending. Where respondent stipulated he was attorney of record in four cases at time Supreme Court order requiring compliance with rule 9.20 was filed, and respondent did not file the required notices of suspension with those courts and still had not done so by time of trial over two and one-half years later, respondent failed to comply with rule 9.20. Review Department rejected respondent's argument that respondent was not obligated to file court notices as respondent filed substitutions of attorney in three cases and informed clients that respondent would be suspended prior to rule 9.20 order's issuance, as respondent did not notify clients of suspension by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, as required by rule 9.20(b); filed substitutions of attorney in pending cases after Supreme Court rule 9.20 order was filed but before effective date of order; and continued to work on one case that was settled, but not dismissed, after filing of Supreme Court rule 9.20 order. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [1a-d]

Willful violation of rule 9.20(c) requires neither bad faith nor even actual knowledge of rule provision violated. Where respondent conceded in answer to charges, and in stipulation of facts, that respondent failed to timely file rule 9.20(c) declaration and that State Bar sent email notices informing respondent of rule 9.20(c) filing duties, one that was received and another that was not returned, respondent was culpable of willfully violating rule 9.20(c). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [1]

Where respondent's answer to disciplinary charges and subsequent stipulation admitted his culpability of willful violation of rule 9.20(c); respondent admitted facts of uncharged misconduct; and respondent did not dispute culpability of violating statutory duty even though stipulation was technically limited to facts of offenses, respondent was entitled to significant mitigating credit for cooperation with State Bar, even though facts in probation and rule 9.20 matters are generally easily provable and stipulations do not save significant time. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [5]

Where respondent stipulated in prior disciplinary proceeding that he was unreasonable in believing that representing party to arbitration did not constitute holding himself out as entitled to practice law, respondent was precluded from arguing in subsequent proceeding that such belief was reasonable. While Supreme Court has relieved attorneys of stipulations as to conclusions of law, and principles of res judicata and collateral estoppel did not require Review Department to give binding effect to stipulated conclusions of law in prior proceeding, respondent was bound by his factual stipulation that his belief was unreasonable. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [3a-c]

Where respondent failed to withdraw from stipulation in prior disciplinary proceeding, or to timely request correction or modification of stipulation, and permitted stipulation's approval by State Bar Court and Supreme Court, respondent waived right to argue for first time in subsequent disciplinary proceeding that stipulation did not accurately reflect his agreement. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [5]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation if respondent's due process rights are not violated. Where OCTC was or should have been aware of uncharged misconduct before disciplinary charges were filed, misconduct should have been charged. Nonetheless, where respondent stipulated to conduct constituting uncharged misconduct; uncharged misconduct was elicited for relevant purpose and based on respondent's own representations; and hearing judge granted motion to conform charges to proof at trial, hearing judge correctly assigned nominal weight in aggravation for uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [7a-c]

Stipulated facts in disciplinary proceedings are binding on parties under State Bar rule 5.58(G). Where respondent stipulated that that he was obligated to pay monetary sanctions awarded against his law firm; law firm name did not indicate it was a corporation or limited liability partnership, as would be required by State Bar Rules 3.152(B) and 3.174(B); and even if it were, respondent could not thereby escape personal liability for his own professional malfeasance and still would have been required to report sanctions award against him, record and law supported respondent's stipulation, and hearing judge erred in exonerating respondent and dismissing disciplinary proceeding based on conclusion that respondent was not individually responsible for paying sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [2a, b]

When attorney has actual notice of court order, and does not object, move for reconsideration, or seek appellate review, attorney forfeits right to challenge order based on inadequate notice, and is obligated to comply with order. For due process and notice purposes, discovery sanctions orders are not distinguishable from other types of sanctions orders. Where respondent stipulated he had actual notice of orders imposing monetary discovery sanctions, and did not comply with orders, hearing judge erred in finding respondent not culpable of violating orders because he was not personally named in underlying motions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [3a-c]

159 Evidentiary Issues—Miscellaneous Evidentiary Issues

Standard of review applied to procedural rulings is abuse of discretion or error of law. Where respondent asserted Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) presented irrelevant, inflammatory, and prejudicial evidence of other pleadings filed by respondent, but respondent failed to identify specific evidence to which he objected, respondent failed to establish hearing judge abused discretion or erred by admitting OCTC's evidence. Respondent further did not specify how judge's decisions prejudiced case. Review Department therefore rejected respondent's evidentiary arguments. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [3]

Prior discipline is considered in most cases only as aggravating circumstance in determining discipline in a later proceeding, but prior discipline may also be considered if it tends to prove a fact in issue in determining culpability. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [4]

Involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are abbreviated proceedings in which the principal issue is whether OCTC can establish exigent circumstances sufficient to justify enrolling an attorney involuntarily inactive before a formal disciplinary proceeding. Any subsequent disciplinary proceedings are separate proceedings, and neither the involuntary inactive enrollment order itself nor any of the findings made in the underlying proceedings is binding or has any probative value in the formal disciplinary case. Such an order also is not a final decision on the merits, and thus does not fulfill the requirements of collateral estoppel. Accordingly, Review Department considering disciplinary proceedings declined to consider hearing judge's analysis of statute as set forth in order denying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [4a, b]

Where respondent's misconduct was related to prescription drug abuse, Review Department permitted respondent to augment record with evidence of rehabilitation occurring after trial in disciplinary proceedings. Evidence of post-trial rehabilitation was not entitled to full evidentiary weight, however, because it was not subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [6a, b]

Under rule 5.106(D) of Rules of Procedure, prior record of discipline was properly considered for purposes of aggravation and level of discipline after respondent's culpability was established. Hearing judge therefore properly denied respondent's request to strike evidence of prior discipline record pursuant to rule 1260 of the State Bar Court Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [5a, b]

Where a party seeks to take judicial notice and augment record on review under rule 5.165(D) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, motion must be identified as such and filed and served as separate pleading on the date the opening brief is due to be filed; making such request in a responsive brief is procedurally improper. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [1]

161 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Duty to Present Evidence

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, subdivision (a), provides that, subject only to two exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b), final determination of professional misconduct found by another jurisdiction shall be conclusive evidence that California law licensee is culpable of professional misconduct disciplinable in California. Licensee has burden to establish that exceptions do not warrant imposition of discipline in California. One exception set forth in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3), is whether proceedings of other jurisdiction lacked fundamental constitutional protection. Word "proceedings" in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3) concerns only attorney disciplinary proceeding imposed on California attorney in other jurisdiction and not predicate court proceedings in other jurisdiction that may have led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction. To conclude that "proceedings" included underlying court proceedings in other jurisdiction which led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction would be contrary to law's plain meaning and would alter very purposes of section 6049.1, by routinely allowing collateral attacks on disciplinary proceedings taken by other bodies and which extend beyond two limited statutory exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b). Where respondent (1) had ample notice of South Carolina charges, participated, and was represented by counsel in evidentiary hearing before Hearing Panel in South Carolina; (2) litigated matter before Supreme Court of South Carlina; (3) sought review before United States' Supreme Court; (4) South Carolina disciplinary proceeding required opposing counsel to present clear and convincing evidence of misconduct to support culpability; and (5) respondent's participation in South Carolina proceedings was opportunity for her to put at issue and litigate any relevant or cognizable topic as to state proceedings which formed basis of reprimand, respondent failed to sustain her burden to establish that disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina lacked fundamental constitutional protection. While local South Carolina counsel was not subjected to sanctions and disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina as was respondent, different treatment did not show unfairness of disciplinary proceeding as to respondent, especially since record of South Carolina disciplinary proceedings ascribed to respondent responsibility for frivolous and dilatory basis of litigation. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [1a-f]

162 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters— State Bar's burden — Clear and convincing standard

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b), establishes attorney's duty to maintain respect due courts of justice and judicial officers. Where respondent told court it lacked backbone; repeatedly stated respondent did not respect court or its decision; and challenged judge to place respondent in custody, respondent's statements and action demonstrated disrespect to court in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b). In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [1]

Where respondent failed to abide by judge's order to immediately step away from criminal defendant client while client was being remanded into custody, and where respondent subsequently stated to judge respondent was "embarrassed" for court, respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b). In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [2]

Attorney willfully violates Business and Professions Code section 6103 when, despite being aware of final, binding court order, attorney knowingly chooses to violate order. Where respondent heard judge's oral orders to move away from criminal defendant client during client's remand into custody, and respondent failed to obey orders for several seconds when orders demanded immediate compliance, respondent willfully violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, but as same misconduct underlay section 6068, subdivision (b) violation, no additional weight assigned for section 6103 violation. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [3]

Aggravation for lack of candor in disciplinary proceedings must be supported by express finding that testimony lacked candor or was dishonest. Where record contained some incongruities in witnesses' testimony, but Office of Chief Trial Counsel had not presented clear and convincing evidence to establish respondent's testimony lacked candor, Review Department adopted hearing judge's finding that respondent testified credibly and declined to find aggravation for lack of candor. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [5]

162.10 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters— State Bar's burden

Where respondent did not take any action on clients' case after hearing where case dismissed and did not tell clients respondent had stopped working on matter, but more than year after hearing told client respondent was working on setting aside dismissal, respondent's failure to take any action resulted in constructive termination of employment. As respondent failed to give notice to clients that respondent was no longer working on case, respondent was culpable of violating former rule 3-700(A)(2). In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [4a, b]

Where respondent failed to serve defendant in one matter for over three years and failed to oppose demurrer in another matter, causing court to dismiss clients' cases, and thereafter respondent falsely led clients to believe respondent was working on cases, and clients were distressed to learn years later their cases could no longer be pursued, Review Department agreed with hearing judge that respondent caused significant client harm and assigned substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [6]

Where respondent was found culpable of three ethical violations (fourth violation involved same misconduct as another violation so was not considered a separate violation for disciplinary purposes), Review Department gave limited weight in aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct. Despite Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent should receive significant aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct because misconduct spanned multiple years and caused significant harm, Review Department did not find it appropriate to consider significant harm in assigning aggravation weight for multiple acts of misconduct, as doing so would double count harm in evaluating aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing and harm to client, public, or administration of justice. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [5]

Where totality of evidence supported conclusion that after automobile accident, respondent consciously and persistently fabricated complex narrative involving phony driver in order to avoid arrest, respondent could not avoid culpability for acting with moral turpitude by claiming he made "drunken misrepresentations" and did not intend to lie to police officers or recall doing so. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [3a, b]

162.11 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters – State Bar's burden – Clear and Convincing Standard

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where respondent believed (1) claim was issued by governmental agency targeting clients, and (2) that even if clients had not already been targeted by governmental agency, they would be soon, it was reasonable to believe attorney simply mistaken regarding existence of governmental claim against clients, and no clear and convincing evidence supported conclusion attorney made material misrepresentation amounting to either grossly negligent or intentional moral turpitude when he wrote letter to insurance company stating governmental entity was implicated in matter. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [4a-d]

Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Where one email to client's attorney in related matter did not mention insurer at all; second email summarized attorney's report to judge at settlement status conference, disclosed that insurer had been provided copy of proposed settlement agreement, and did not mention insurer's response; attorney believed settlement agreement did not contain insurer's position, as attorney had not carefully read drafts with erroneous statement; and attorney had no indication that would lead attorney to believe that client's attorney in related matter thought insurer had not objected, it could not be determined attorney's omission in email to client's attorney in related matter constituted intentional misrepresentation, especially as one email was only summary of status conference and attorney asserted insurer's position was not discussed at status conference. Reasonable factual interpretation is attorney was unaware client's attorney in related matter believed insurer had not objected. Attorney therefore had no reason to mention insurer's objection in emails. Review department therefore held OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement by omitting this fact from emails. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [15]

Speculative harm does not satisfy clear and convincing standard required for aggravation. Although very brief moment of disorder in courtroom occurred between respondent and bailiffs, that did not by itself establish aggravation for significant harm. Where Office of Chief Trial Counsel did not establish that specific, cognizable, and significant harm occurred which could be directly attributed to respondent's actions beyond respondent's violation of judge's orders to move away from client who was criminal defendant, Review Department did not affirm hearing judge's finding of substantial harm as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [5a, b]

Where respondent made statements to brother, 911 operator, and deputy sheriff while intoxicated and with head injury, and generally vague statements were made while in heat of moment and while engaged in mutual combat where both parties received injuries, even if statements were not wholly accurate, without clear evidence of an intent to mislead, evidence did not establish that respondent made deliberate misrepresentations so as to satisfy finding of moral turpitude by clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [5a-c]

Section 6106 applies to misrepresentations and concealment of material facts. Mere negligence in making a representation does not violate section 6106. Where respondent trustee's representations to counsel for trust beneficiary were consistent with respondent's own honestly held beliefs and understanding, and respondent did not attempt to conceal her actions or to mislead beneficiary's counsel, OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent made misrepresentations, and Review Department therefore dismissed section 6106 charge with prejudice. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [9a-e]

Where OCTC argued for first time in closing trial brief that respondent engaged in dishonesty and bad faith in seeking continuance of disciplinary trial, Review Department declined to assign bad faith as aggravating factor, because respondent did not have opportunity to respond to OCTC's bad faith allegation, and OCTC did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent deliberately attempted to mislead court. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [7a-c]

Where clear and convincing evidence showed respondent failed to keep client informed of discovery requests, and of court orders stemming from respondent's failure to respond to discovery, respondent was culpable of failing to keep client reasonably informed of significant developments, in violation of section 6068(m). However, where OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent's motivation for lack of communication was to cover up respondent's failure to perform competently, respondent was not culpable of act of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [4a, b]

Where evidence did not establish clearly and convincingly that respondent failed to communicate with client, in that client could not recall specific dates he called respondent's office, and OCTC did not present any documentary evidence of client's unsuccessful efforts to contact respondent, hearing judge correctly dismissed charge that respondent violated section 6068(m) based on failure to respond to client's telephone calls. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [3]

Where respondent spent 50-60 hours working on a client's case; OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that there were outstanding unearned fees that respondent failed to refund; and charge of failure to refund unearned fees in that case was dismissed with prejudice, Review Department did not recommend that respondent be required to make restitution to that client. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [6]

Where respondent was unaware of his suspension until last minute of three-minute telephonic case management conference and then provided three responses to judge's instructions during remaining very brief period (no more than one minute) and under circumstances where respondent did not have reasonable opportunity to withdraw, Review Department upheld hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude because OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent practiced law with requisite level of intent, guilty knowledge, or, at a minimum, gross negligence. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [5a-d]

State Bar disciplinary proceedings are not criminal, and State Bar Court does not impose criminal penalties. Accordingly, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that because his misconduct could form the basis for a criminal misdemeanor conviction, OCTC was required to prove his culpability beyond a reasonable doubt. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [3]

162.19 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — State Bar's burden — Other/general

Where OCTC did not raise issue of indifference toward rectification or atonement at trial, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to provide rebuttal evidence, and record was unclear regarding relevant facts, Review Department declined to assign aggravation based on respondent's alleged failure to make amends to client by paying for medical treatment. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [5]

To prove a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 based on an attorney's failure to obey court orders, OCTC must establish the attorney knew the orders were final and binding, and intended his acts or omissions. Where respondent was aware of and joined in client's tactical decision not to participate in discovery; was timely served with motions for discovery sanctions but chose not to respond or appear; was served with orders granting monetary sanctions against his client and his firm jointly and severally; and stipulated he was individually responsible for resulting obligation, respondent was obligated either to comply with orders or make formal motion or appeal explaining why he could not do so, and could not simply disregard orders, even under client's instructions. Respondent was therefore culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [1a-d]

162.20 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters — Respondent's burden in disciplinary matters

Willfully or corruptly and without authority appearing as attorney for party to action or proceeding constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where attorney credibly testified possible litigation was discussed at meeting with family representative, who retained attorney at that meeting to represent him and his family in matters related to environmental remediation, and family was sued for remediation liability, attorney believed he had authority to act as family representative's attorney in litigation. Although attorney should have updated family representative on case status, this is not evidence of lack of authority. Attorney's failure to communicate did not limit authority he believed in good faith he had obtained from family representative to act as family's attorney. Accordingly, Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to prove attorney corruptly or willfully appeared without authority in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6104 and hearing judge's culpability finding was reversed. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [5a-c]

Where attorney reasonably believed he had authority to represent family representative in environmental remediation; attorney understood from meeting with family representative that he was authorized to try to ensure remediation was paid for without cost to family; and possibility of lawsuit to be filed against family to trigger coverage from insurer was probable outcome discussed at meeting, attorney did not commit act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption within meaning of Business and Professions Code section 6106 by claiming he represented family representative on four separate occasions in two environmental lawsuits. Review department reversed hearing judge's culpability finding based on finding attorney unreasonably believed he had authority to represent family representative in litigation and committed misrepresentation to court through gross negligence by appearing on family representative's behalf. Even if attorney was mistaken by authority to act – which review department did not conclude – attorney's actions would not rise to grossly negligent moral turpitude as attorney sincerely believed conduct was justified. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [6a, b]

Under standard 1.6(a), mitigation includes absence of any prior discipline record over many years coupled with present misconduct which is not likely to recur. Where respondent had practiced law discipline-free for seven years; showed some understanding of misconduct; admitted to clients mistakes made; told clients to pursue malpractice insurance claim; did not contest hearing judge's culpability determinations; attributed misconduct to personal issues affecting focus; and showed some insight into misconduct, Review Department concluded both prongs of standard 1.6(a) were met as there was (1) absence of prior discipline record over many years; and (2) record supported finding respondent's misconduct was aberrational. Review Department, however, assigned minimal mitigation as respondent had only practiced for seven years, minimum amount without misconduct to obtain mitigating credit. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [7a, b]

Respondent may obtain mitigation for extraordinary good character attested to by wide range of references in legal and general communities who are aware of full extent of misconduct. Where character references included three attorneys, former client, friend, and doctor with whom respondent worked when respondent worked as registered nurse; witnesses had known respondent between 12 and 29 years and spoke positively regarding respondent's character and abilities as attorney but were not aware of full extent of misconduct, limited weight in mitigation given for extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [8]

Some mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties may be available for extremely stressful family circumstances even when no expert testimony established emotional difficulties as directly responsible for misconduct. Where no expert testimony but respondent presented evidence about emotional difficulties; friend corroborated respondent very distraught after mother's death; respondent submitted medical records documenting family members' diagnoses with serious medical issues; but problems did not fully explain respondent's misconduct as family medical issues did not begin until years after respondent took on one client matter; and respondent had not demonstrated when faced with personal problems in future he would handle them differently to avoid future misconduct, Review Department assigned minimal mitigation for respondent's emotional difficulties that coincided with misconduct but such did not mitigate misconduct that did not coincide with emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [9a, b]

Pro bono work is a mitigating circumstance. Where two-character witnesses discussed respondent's pro bono work for client with serious drug problem; respondent worked for several years on client's various criminal cases and acted as client's mentor; and client credited respondent for client's two-year sobriety, Review Department concluded respondent's pro bono work was entitled to mitigation but assigned limited mitigating weight as respondent did not establish prolonged dedication to pro bono work. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [10]

Under Evidence Code section 664, it is acknowledged that official duty has been regularly performed; thus, there is presumption that Supreme Court Clerk properly performed official duty in serving respondent and respondent's attorney with discipline order as provided in California Rules of Court, rule 9.18(b). Where respondent began transferring cases due to impending suspension prior to issuance of Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order; Review Department had recommended two-year suspension in respondent's prior disciplinary matter several months earlier; and respondent's attorney referenced Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order in email to respondent, argument that respondent did not receive notice of rule 9.20 order from either Supreme Court or respondent's attorney was not credible, and respondent did not rebut presumption of Evidence Code section 664. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [2]

Language of former rule 4-100(A) is explicit that personal funds cannot be deposited into client trust account. Where respondent interpreted language of rule to permit respondent to deposit personal funds in client trust account that held no client funds; interpretation was unreasonable given entire language of rule; and respondent did not research case law after receiving letters from State Bar regarding NSF checks and containing copy of former rule 4-100, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that language of rule and case law failed to give adequate notice that using client trust account to hold and disburse personal funds was improper even though account never held client funds. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [3]

Good faith is not defense to commingling charge. Even if respondent had good faith belief that respondent was not violating rule 4-100(A) in depositing personal funds in, and paying personal expenses from, client trust account that held no client funds, good faith belief does not excuse culpability. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [4]

Where respondent failed to establish that hearing judge demonstrated bias or that respondent was specifically prejudiced, and where purpose of hearing judge's questions at trial was to clarify judge's own confusion about testimony, respondent failed to meet burden to show judicial bias, and failed to show he was deprived of due process. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

Neither employees of State Bar nor fellow attorneys can give an attorney permission to violate duties under statutes or ethics rules. Accordingly, it was not a valid defense to disciplinary charges that respondent relied on information in a State Bar flyer, and on advice from OCTC, in determining that his actions did not violate statute. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [6]

Attorneys must obey a tribunal's orders unless they take steps to have them modified or vacated. Where respondent never sought relief from administrative tribunal's orders on basis of inability to comply or impossibility of compliance, Review Department rejected respondent's arguments that failure to comply was not willful, and that it would have been a waste of time to seek modification because his ability to comply was so uncertain. Fact that tribunal's orders were submitted to aboard for final action also did not excuse respondent's noncompliance, where respondent never disputed finality or validity of orders, and did not seek stay of enforcement or appellate relief. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [7a-d]

Good faith, or even ignorance of the law, is no defense to a charged violation of statute requiring attorneys to report judicial sanctions to State Bar. Particularly where respondent did not establish that his failure to report sanctions imposed by administrative tribunal was attributable to his belief at the time that statute did not require reporting such sanctions, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [9]

Reliance on advice of counsel is not a defense in a discipline case. Where respondent, while acting as fiduciary, disregarded advice of counsel regarding administration of trust, and committed acts of misconduct after counsel stopped representing her, respondent's misconduct was not excused by reliance on advice of counsel. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [5]

Where respondent knew he was suspended at time he entered into settlement negotiations, respondent was culpable of act of moral turpitude, even though, prior to attempting to settle case, respondent advised opposing counsel of respondent's suspension and contacted State Bar's Ethics Department. Contacting State Bar employee for advice is not a defense to a violation of rules or statutes governing attorney's professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [9]

Where respondent appeared at client's deposition two days after he learned of his suspension for failure to pay child support, respondent's knowing unauthorized practice of law constituted act of moral turpitude. Respondent was not entitled to assume he had been reinstated after becoming current on child support, because respondent knew his status could be confirmed on State Bar's website. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [10a, b]

162.30 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review – Issues and burden of proof in section 6049.1 proceedings

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, subdivision (a), provides that, subject only to two exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b), final determination of professional misconduct found by another jurisdiction shall be conclusive evidence that California law licensee is culpable of professional misconduct disciplinable in California. Licensee has burden to establish that exceptions do not warrant imposition of discipline in California. One exception set forth in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3), is whether proceedings of other jurisdiction lacked fundamental constitutional protection. Word "proceedings" in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3) concerns only attorney disciplinary proceeding imposed on California attorney in other jurisdiction and not predicate court proceedings in other jurisdiction that may have led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction. To conclude that "proceedings" included underlying court proceedings in other jurisdiction which led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction would be contrary to law's plain meaning and would alter very purposes of section 6049.1, by routinely allowing collateral attacks on disciplinary proceedings taken by other bodies and which extend beyond two limited statutory exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b). Where respondent (1) had ample notice of South Carolina charges, participated, and was represented by counsel in evidentiary hearing before Hearing Panel in South Carolina; (2) litigated matter before Supreme Court of South Carlina; (3) sought review before United States' Supreme Court; (4) South Carolina disciplinary proceeding required opposing counsel to present clear and convincing evidence of misconduct to support culpability; and (5) respondent's participation in South Carolina proceedings was opportunity for her to put at issue and litigate any relevant or cognizable topic as to state proceedings which formed basis of reprimand, respondent failed to sustain her burden to establish that disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina lacked fundamental constitutional protection. While local South Carolina counsel was not subjected to sanctions and disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina as was respondent, different treatment did not show unfairness of disciplinary proceeding as to respondent, especially since record of South Carolina disciplinary proceedings ascribed to respondent responsibility for frivolous and dilatory basis of litigation. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [1a-f]

162.90 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review — Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters — Other/general

Reasonable doubts resulting from evidence are resolved in respondent's favor. Evidence leading to differing reasonable factual interpretations must lead court to adopt inference of no culpability. Where respondent met with family representative – who had ability to hire attorney to handle environmental remediation for him and his family – and considering principles regarding reasonable inferences and resolving reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, review department held attorney had authority to represent family. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [1a, b]

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where respondent believed (1) claim was issued by governmental agency targeting clients, and (2) that even if clients had not already been targeted by governmental agency, they would be soon, it was reasonable to believe attorney simply mistaken regarding existence of governmental claim against clients, and no clear and convincing evidence supported conclusion attorney made material misrepresentation amounting to either grossly negligent or intentional moral turpitude when he wrote letter to insurance company stating governmental entity was implicated in matter. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [4a-d]

Where attorney stated in deposition that he estimated he had "five to ten" telephone conversations with client after meeting, but attorney actually had not communicated with client at all during relevant period, deposition statement was not intentional or grossly negligent misrepresentation in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106, as attorney had not reviewed case file before appearing at deposition; attorney asserted testimony was based on attorney's experience with these cases generally – not specific memory of speaking with client; and at trial, attorney characterized statement as "guess" at time of deposition, which attorney later corrected in interview with New Jersey Office of Attorney Ethics. Record therefore supported reasonable inference attorney was simply mistaken when attorney testified, and testimony reflected attorney's recollection of case at that time. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [8]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to establish that attorney's actions related to form which reflected client was responsible for remediation at site amounted to breach of attorney's fiduciary duties or duty of loyalty to client where (1) record showed clients had some responsibility for premises' remediation; (2) attorney's representation strategy was to engage governmental agency, involve insurer, and obtain insurance coverage for remediation; (3) attorney asserted form did not admit sole responsibility – as site owners also had responsibility – rather, form simply indicated who was taking charge of conducting remediation, which is not indication of sole liability; (4) governmental agency was already aware of attorney's clients, as property owners stated in remediation timeframe extension request that owners were working to find insurance coverage from attorney's clients as they were previous tenant and also responsible for remediation; and (5) review of record points to reasonable inference that attorney was acting in clients' best interests and was following representation strategy discussed with client at meeting. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [10a-c]

Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Where one email to client's attorney in related matter did not mention insurer at all; second email summarized attorney's report to judge at settlement status conference, disclosed that insurer had been provided copy of proposed settlement agreement, and did not mention insurer's response; attorney believed settlement agreement did not contain insurer's position, as attorney had not carefully read drafts with erroneous statement; and attorney had no indication that would lead attorney to believe that client's attorney in related matter thought insurer had not objected, it could not be determined attorney's omission in email to client's attorney in related matter constituted intentional misrepresentation, especially as one email was only summary of status conference and attorney asserted insurer's position was not discussed at status conference. Reasonable factual interpretation is attorney was unaware client's attorney in related matter believed insurer had not objected. Attorney therefore had no reason to mention insurer's objection in emails. Review department therefore held OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement by omitting this fact from emails. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [15]

163 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review – Proof of Wilfulness

Business and Professions Code section 6103 provides, in pertinent part, that willful disobedience or violation of court order requiring attorney to do or forbear act connected with or in course of attorney's profession, which attorney ought in good faith do or forbear, constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Attorney willfully violates section 6103 when, despite being aware of final, binding court order, respondent knowingly chooses to violate order. Respondent asserted Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to introduce evidence that respondent's disobedience of court orders caused harm to administration of justice, but that was not relevant to defense to misconduct under Business and Professions Code section 6103. Where respondent was aware of the court orders, admitted he had not complied with them, and had made no effort to comply, there was no evidence that this conduct was "negligence," and Review Department held respondent acted willfully and was culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6103 as charged. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [5a-c]

Willful disobedience or violation of court order requiring attorney to do or forbear act connected with or in course of attorney's profession, which attorney ought in good faith to do or forbear, constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Attorney acts willfully if attorney intends to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where attorney failed to pay court ordered sanctions and then appealed order's validity and lost, Review Department upheld hearing judge's culpability determination that respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, as respondent had actual notice of order and requirement to pay sanctions; order was final and binding for disciplinary purposes as respondent's challenge of order was exhausted; sanctions order remained in effect even though entire case was appealed; and failing to pay sanctions until over a year and a half after knowledge of obligation was unreasonable and a violation of order In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [1a-c]

Mistake of law made in good faith may be defense to Business and Professions Code section 6067 charge, as attorneys are not infallible and cannot be expected to know all law. But section 6103.7 charge is different, as it does not pertain to attorney performance and knowledge of law. Prohibition from threatening immigration status in section 6103.7 establishes a clear ethical standard for conduct that attorneys must uphold. Only willful breach is required for discipline, not knowledge of rule or intent to violate it. Where respondent mentioned illegal immigration status of opposing party in letters and telephone calls to opposing counsel and in civil case management statement, those constituted threats in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103.7, and respondent's purported ignorance of section 6103.7 was not a defense. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [3a-d]

Former rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits attorneys from commingling personal funds with client funds held in trust account. Ignorance of rules governing client trust accounts is no defense to commingling charge. Where personal loan funds were wired directly into respondent's client trust account, and respondent repaid loan with check from client trust account, respondent was culpable of willful violation of former rule 4-100(A), even if respondent believed at time that payment could be made from client trust account. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [11]

Former rule 4-100(A) absolutely bars use of trust account for personal purposes, even if client funds are not on deposit. Where respondent deposited personal funds in, and paid personal expenses from, client trust account, respondent was culpable of willful violations of former rule 4-100(A), even though no client funds were in trust account. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [1a, b]

Language of former rule 4-100(A) is explicit that personal funds cannot be deposited into client trust account. Where respondent interpreted language of rule to permit respondent to deposit personal funds in client trust account that held no client funds; interpretation was unreasonable given entire language of rule; and respondent did not research case law after receiving letters from State Bar regarding NSF checks and containing copy of former rule 4-100, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that language of rule and case law failed to give adequate notice that using client trust account to hold and disburse personal funds was improper even though account never held client funds. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [3]

Good faith is not defense to commingling charge. Even if respondent had good faith belief that respondent was not violating rule 4-100(A) in depositing personal funds in, and paying personal expenses from, client trust account that held no client funds, good faith belief does not excuse culpability. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [4]

Probation matters do not require proof that respondent actually knew specifics of probation delinquencies, as long as respondent had notice of probation duties. Where respondent failed to schedule and attend meeting with assigned probation deputy and did not submit first quarterly report to Probation until six months after due date, despite email communications from Probation regarding probation duties, respondent willfully failed to comply with three probation conditions in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [2a-d]

164 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review – Proof of Intent

Attorney must act with intent to deceive to violate Business and Professions Code section 6068(d). Where no evidence established that respondent's careless review of California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 compliance declaration his attorney prepared amounted to intentional deception absent other evidence, Review Department adopted hearing judge's dismissal of section 6068(d) charge. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [4]

Level of intent required to prove California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 violation is general intent, not specific intent or bad faith. Where respondent failed to file court notices of suspension required by rule 9.20, such conduct constituted willful violation of rule 9.20, and Review Department rejected respondent's argument that respondent did not have requisite level of intent to be found culpable of violating rule 9.20 as respondent did not do so willfully and acted in good faith. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [5]

Where totality of evidence supported conclusion that after automobile accident, respondent consciously and persistently fabricated complex narrative involving phony driver in order to avoid arrest, respondent could not avoid culpability for acting with moral turpitude by claiming he made "drunken misrepresentations" and did not intend to lie to police officers or recall doing so. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [3a, b]

Where respondent made statements to brother, 911 operator, and deputy sheriff while intoxicated and with head injury, and generally vague statements were made while in heat of moment and while engaged in mutual combat where both parties received injuries, even if statements were not wholly accurate, without clear evidence of an intent to mislead, evidence did not establish that respondent made deliberate misrepresentations so as to satisfy finding of moral turpitude by clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [5a-c]

165 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review—Adequacy of Hearing Department Decision

Disobeying court order to provide discovery is misuse of discovery process under Civil Discovery Act which is applicable in State Bar Court proceedings. Permissible sanction in State Bar Court under Civil Discovery Act is terminating sanction that dismisses action. Where applicant chose not to appear for two scheduled depositions, improperly refused to answer questions at another deposition, and terminated a fourth deposition, applicant did not comply with hearing judge's orders requiring her to sit for deposition and cooperate with investigation and discovery; applicant's failure to comply was willful; and hearing judge had denied two other motions to dismiss by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners based on applicant's failure to participate in deposition, hearing judge correctly determined that discovery sanctions were appropriate and did not abuse her discretion by imposing terminating sanctions. Applicant had opportunity to comply with orders to participate in deposition but did not do so. Applicant obstructed discovery, causing dismissal, which prevented State Bar Court from determining whether applicant was morally fit to practice law. Review Department held terminating sanctions were appropriate and affirmed hearing judge's dismissal order. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [3a-d]

Where client testified client was not aware case dismissed, and respondent's text messages to client misled client regarding respondent's ongoing work on case and settlement of matter and showed client not aware case dismissed, Review Department concluded respondent culpable of failing to keep client reasonably informed of significant developments in client's legal matter and reversed hearing judge, who credited respondent's testimony over client's and dismissed with prejudice Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m), charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [1a-e]

Aggravating circumstances may include uncharged violations of Business and Professions Code or Rules of Professional Conduct. However, hearing judge erred in finding significant aggravation based on uncharged violation of former rule 4-100(A) based on erroneous factual conclusion from respondent's testimony, where State Bar never raised uncharged misconduct during trial or in post-trial closing brief, and respondent consequently did not have opportunity to defend during trial against uncharged violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [6a, b]

Willful violation of rule 9.20 is considered serious ethical offense for which disbarment is generally appropriate. Standard 1.8(b) provides that disbarment is appropriate where respondent has two or more prior records of discipline if: (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter; (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate a pattern of misconduct; or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent who violated rule 9.20 had three prior records of discipline, including one-year actual suspension, and had repeatedly failed to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and exceptions to standard 1.8(b) were not applicable, hearing judge erred in failing to analyze applicability of standard 1.8(b). Where no reasons existed to depart from discipline called for by standard 1.8(b), Review Department recommended disbarment to adequately ensure public protection. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [8a-f]

Regardless of whether issue was fully developed at Hearing Department, Review Department is required to independently review record and make any findings, conclusions, or decision or recommendation different from those of hearing judge. Review Department may also address an issue not raised in request for review, provided parties have opportunity to brief issue. Where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary proceeding based on rule of limitations, and OCTC argued in pretrial statement and on review that rule of limitations was tolled based on respondent's alleged fiduciary relationship with complaining witness, Review Department could reach issue of tolling based on fiduciary relationship after giving parties opportunity to brief issue. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [7a, b]

Hearing judge is in better position to assess nature and quality of testimony. Hearing judge's findings that respondent's testimony lacked credibility, and that victim's statements to police were credible, was entitled to great weight. Review Department would not contradict hearing judge's credibility conclusions where record lacked sufficient evidence to do so. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [2a, b]

Where hearing judge did not explain reason for finding respondent's testimony not credible, and evidence corroborated respondent's testimony, Review Department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent's testimony was not credible. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [8]

Where same acts of misconduct by respondent violated both section 6068(a) and rule 3-300, hearing judge erred by dismissing section 6068(a) charge with prejudice. Better approach was to find both violations, but assign duplicative violation no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [6]

Where hearing judge found that respondent and his therapist testified credibly regarding respondent's emotional difficulties at the time of his misconduct and his subsequent recovery, these findings were entitled to great weight. Where that testimony and other evidence established that respondent had recovered from his emotional difficulties, and respondent had repeatedly attempted to rectify part of his misconduct, respondent established that he had recovered, and his emotional difficulties were properly considered in mitigation. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [6a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, committed act of moral turpitude by improperly failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel in order to secure strategic trial advantage, Review Department deferred to hearing judge's determination that respondent's alternative explanation of her conduct lacked credibility. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Lack of clarity in hearing judge's decision, as to whether moral turpitude culpability finding was based on intentional or grossly negligent conduct, was problematic for purposes of ascertaining seriousness of misconduct and assessing corresponding discipline. Review Department clarified, based on misrepresentations in documents respondent drafted and filed, that respondent intentionally deceived tribunal. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [3]

166 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review—Independent Review of Record

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 989. [1a,b]

Regardless of whether issue was fully developed at Hearing Department, Review Department is required to independently review record and make any findings, conclusions, or decision or recommendation different from those of hearing judge. Review Department may also address an issue not raised in request for review, provided parties have opportunity to brief issue. Where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary proceeding based on rule of limitations, and OCTC argued in pretrial statement and on review that rule of limitations was tolled based on respondent's alleged fiduciary relationship with complaining witness, Review Department could reach issue of tolling based on fiduciary relationship after giving parties opportunity to brief issue. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [7a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, committed act of moral turpitude by improperly failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel in order to secure strategic trial advantage, Review Department deferred to hearing judge's determination that respondent's alternative explanation of her conduct lacked credibility. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Where hearing judge held full and fair trial on aggravation and mitigation but dismissed case without making any findings, and Review Department reversed dismissal, Review Department reviewed record and made its own findings and discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [5]

Great weight is given to hearing judge's findings on candor because judge who hears and sees witness testify is best positioned to make this determination. Where hearing judge heard respondent testify over multiple days and did not find lack of candor despite OCTC's request, Review Department declined to find dishonest testimony as additional aggravating factor. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494 [7]

Decisions by criminal and appellate courts finding respondent's misconduct as prosecutor intentional and deliberate were entitled to strong presumption of validity and prima facie weight in State Bar Court, even though respondent was not technically party to criminal case, because disciplinary charges arose from same prosecutorial misconduct. Review Department affords hearing judge's factual findings great weight, but must independently assess record and may make different findings or conclusions. Where hearing judge failed to give proper weight to court decisions in criminal case, and record demonstrated validity of other courts' findings, Review Department rejected hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's misconduct was grossly negligent, and found it intentional. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [1a-e]

Lack of clarity in hearing judge's decision, as to whether moral turpitude culpability finding was based on intentional or grossly negligent conduct, was problematic for purposes of ascertaining seriousness of misconduct and assessing corresponding discipline. Review Department clarified, based on misrepresentations in documents respondent drafted and filed, that respondent intentionally deceived tribunal. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [3]

167 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review—Abuse of Discretion

Discovery sanctions are reviewed under abuse of discretion or error of law standard. Two requirements to impose discovery sanctions: (1) failure to comply with court-order discovery; and (2) failure must be willful. In analyzing discovery ruling, court is guided by California's long-standing public policy favoring disclosure and objectives that discovery rules were enacted to accomplish: (1) ascertaining truth and preventing perjury; (2) providing effective means to detect and expose false claims and defenses; (3) making facts available in simple, convenient, and inexpensive way; (4) educating parties before trial as to value of claims and defenses; (5) expediting litigation; (6) safeguarding against surprise; (7) preventing delay; (8) simplifying and narrowing issues; and (9) expediting and facilitating preparation and trial. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [2]

Hearing judge had broad discretion to determine admissibility and relevance of evidence. Standard of review generally applied to evidentiary rulings is abuse of discretion. To prevail on claim of error, abuse of discretion and actual prejudice resulting from ruling must be established. Where hearing judge denied admission of documents from six separate lawsuits in which company was defendant, as well as company's 2009 bankruptcy petition, hearing judge did not abuse her discretion as civil lawsuits and evidence of company's bankruptcy were irrelevant as evidence had no bearing on circumstances pertaining to respondent's conviction; documents concerning company's perceived financial distress would not mitigate or excuse respondent's misconduct as bankruptcy proceeding filed in 2009 and respondent's conviction occurred in August 2008; and respondent failed to identify specific additional facts or arguments he would have offered if evidence admitted or that he suffered any actual prejudice. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [3a-c]

Standard of review applied to procedural rulings is abuse of discretion or error of law. Where respondent asserted Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) presented irrelevant, inflammatory, and prejudicial evidence of other pleadings filed by respondent, but respondent failed to identify specific evidence to which he objected, respondent failed to establish hearing judge abused discretion or erred by admitting OCTC's evidence. Respondent further did not specify how judge's decisions prejudiced case. Review Department therefore rejected respondent's evidentiary arguments. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [3]

Rule 5.65, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided that, generally, written discovery requests must be made and served on other party within 10 days after service of answer to notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), or within 10 days after service of any amendment to NDC. Where respondent was aware of 2013 investigation in 2013 but did not timely request discovery of Office of Chief Trial Counsel's investigation file until one month before trial and 10 months after NDC filed; respondent offered no evidence or valid reason why respondent failed to comply with State Bar discovery rules; respondent had ample opportunity to seek discovery earlier in case; and respondent, by not making timely discovery request, could not properly make motion to compel, hearing judge did not abuse discretion by denying respondent's motion to compel as untimely. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [4a, b]

Rule 5.104(C), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required admission of relevant evidence if it was sort of evidence on which responsible persons were accustomed to rely in conduct of serious affairs. Where judge properly excluded respondent's exhibits under rule 5.101.1(I), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, relevance of respondent's evidence was not at issue because respondent had already failed to comply under rule 5.101.1. Review Department held respondent failed to show hearing judge abused discretion in excluding some of respondent's exhibits for failing to comply with Rules of Procedure and therefore rejected respondent's request to admit excluded exhibits into record. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [6a, b]

169 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review—Miscellaneous Issues re Standard of Proof/Standard of Review

Aggravation for lack of candor in disciplinary proceedings must be supported by express finding that testimony lacked candor or was dishonest. Where record contained some incongruities in witnesses' testimony, but Office of Chief Trial Counsel had not presented clear and convincing evidence to establish respondent's testimony lacked candor, Review Department adopted hearing judge's finding that respondent testified credibly and declined to find aggravation for lack of candor. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [5]

In reviewing an order dismissing a disciplinary proceeding, Review Department looks to operative notice of disciplinary charges (NDC), deems all allegations in that NDC to be true, and may also rely on any judicially noticed facts to assess the sufficiency of the operative NDC. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [1]

Involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are abbreviated proceedings in which the principal issue is whether OCTC can establish exigent circumstances sufficient to justify enrolling an attorney involuntarily inactive before a formal disciplinary proceeding. Any subsequent disciplinary proceedings are separate proceedings, and neither the involuntary inactive enrollment order itself nor any of the findings made in the underlying proceedings is binding or has any probative value in the formal disciplinary case. Such an order also is not a final decision on the merits, and thus does not fulfill the requirements of collateral estoppel. Accordingly, Review Department considering disciplinary proceedings declined to consider hearing judge's analysis of statute as set forth in order denying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [4a, b]

Where the Review Department conducts a summary review under rule 5.157 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, the hearing judge's decision is final as to all material findings of fact, and the issues are limited to: (1) contentions that the facts support conclusions of law different from those reached by the hearing judge; (2) disagreement about the appropriate disposition or degree of discipline; or (3) other questions of law. Issues and contentions not raised are waived on summary review. In the Matter of Unger (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 506 [1]

Decisions by criminal and appellate courts finding respondent's misconduct as prosecutor intentional and deliberate were entitled to strong presumption of validity and prima facie weight in State Bar Court, even though respondent was not technically party to criminal case, because disciplinary charges arose from same prosecutorial misconduct. Review Department affords hearing judge's factual findings great weight, but must independently assess record and may make different findings or conclusions. Where hearing judge failed to give proper weight to court decisions in criminal case, and record demonstrated validity of other courts' findings, Review Department rejected hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's misconduct was grossly negligent, and found it intentional. In them Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 479. [1a-e]

Where respondent prosecutor inserted false confession in criminal defendant's statement before disclosing statement to defense counsel, respondent at least violated spirit of statutory scheme governing discovery in criminal prosecutions. Nonetheless, where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary charge of failing to comply with law, on ground that prosecutor did not withhold items subject to disclosure, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel did not challenge dismissal on appeal, Review Department upheld dismissal. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [5]

Where respondent knew he was suspended at time he entered into settlement negotiations, respondent was culpable of act of moral turpitude, even though, prior to attempting to settle case, respondent advised opposing counsel of respondent's suspension and contacted State Bar's Ethics Department. Contacting State Bar employee for advice is not a defense to a violation of rules or statutes governing attorney's professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [9]

171 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline — Restitution Requirements (rule 5.136; Standard 1.4(a))

Where respondent spent 50-60 hours working on a client's case; OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that there were outstanding unearned fees that respondent failed to refund; and charge of failure to refund unearned fees in that case was dismissed with prejudice, Review Department did not recommend that respondent be required to make restitution to that client. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [6]

Where respondent was culpable of disobeying court orders by failing to pay monetary sanctions, payment of the sanctions was imposed as condition of respondent's disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [7]

172.30 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline — – Monitoring, Treatment and Testing Requirements – Alcohol Testing/Treatment (Standard 1.4(c)

Standard 2.16(b) provides for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for misdemeanor convictions not involving moral turpitude but encompassing other misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had two DUI convictions; second DUI was committed only two years after respondent completed probation in first DUI matter and involved serious injuries to two victims and property damage; second DUI involved false statements to police; repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, evidenced alcohol abuse problems, but respondent's assertion regarding abstaining from driving did not solve alcohol problem or assure court future misconduct would not recur, Review Department concluded respondent's actions did not involve moral turpitude but did constitute other misconduct warranting discipline. As mitigating circumstances outweighed sole aggravating circumstance, and due to respondent's compliance with criminal probation terms, Review Department concluded appropriate discipline was public reproval with conditions, including attendance at abstinence-based self-help group, as court concluded respondent had alcohol problem. Although record did not establish respondent's law practice was affected by his alcohol abuse problem, court imposed discipline to prevent future harm to public and to impress upon respondent seriousness of actions, as respondent did not fully understand significance of alcohol problem and how it related to practice of law. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [8a-c]

176 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline—Requirements to Show Rehabilitation (etc.) (Standard 1.2(c)(1))

Where respondent's lack of insight into the seriousness of her misconduct and repeated and continuing failure to appreciate the importance of her professional responsibilities raised additional concerns about the potential for future misconduct, Review Department recommended actual suspension of 18 months and until respondent establishes her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [10a, b]

179.90 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline – Other Issues – Other

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statute should not be construed to apply retroactively to offense committed prior to effective date. Where matter was submitted for decision prior to March 1, 2021, effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020, effective date of former rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [22]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [11]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [9]

Where respondent was placed on involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c)(4) following hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, but Review Department reduced discipline to 60-day actual suspension, Review Department ordered involuntary inactive enrollment terminated, and recommended that respondent be given credit for inactive enrollment period toward period of actual suspension. Because inactive enrollment period had lasted longer than 60 days, there would be no prospective period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [16a-c]

180.12 Monetary Sanctions–General Issues–Appropriate amount of monetary sanctions

Upward deviation to $3,000 from monetary sanction guideline suggested in rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar appropriate because respondent's misconduct was aggravated by lack of candor. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [14]

Based on monetary sanction guidelines set forth in rule 5.137 of State Bar Rules of Procedure, and taking into consideration attorney was culpable of violations related solely to failure to communicate in single client matter and discipline warranted was lowest presumed length of time for actual suspension, review department recommended attorney be ordered to pay monetary sanctions in amount of $500. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [22]

180.11 Monetary Sanctions–General Issues–Effective date/retroactivity of authorizing statute and rule

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statute should not be construed to apply retroactively to offense committed prior to effective date. Where matter was submitted for decision prior to March 1, 2021, effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020, effective date of former rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [22]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [11]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [9]

180.31 Monetary Sanctions – Imposition of Monetary Sanctions– Recommended

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

Based on monetary sanction guidelines set forth in rule 5.137 of State Bar Rules of Procedure, and taking into consideration attorney was culpable of violations related solely to failure to communicate in single client matter and discipline warranted was lowest presumed length of time for actual suspension, review department recommended attorney be ordered to pay monetary sanctions in amount of $500. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [22]

180.35 Monetary Sanctions – Imposition of Monetary Sanctions – Not recommended

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

Monetary sanctions not recommended by Review Department where matter submitted for decision in Hearing Department prior to March 1, 2021 effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020 effective date of rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [12]

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

191 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings—Effect of /Relationship to Other Proceedings

Rule 2604, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided, in part, that Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may file Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) when attorney had received fair, adequate, and reasonable opportunity to deny or explain matters that were subject of NDC charges. Rule 5.30, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required OCTC to notify attorney before NDC was filed of right to request early neutral evaluation conference (ENEC). Where OCTC mailed notice of ENEC right to respondent's State Bar address, but respondent did not receive notice because respondent had not updated address, which was respondent's responsibility, Review Department held no procedural violation of rule 2604, and hearing judge did not err for not mentioning in decision that no ENEC was held as respondent not entitled to ENEC due to respondent's own failure to update State Bar address. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [3a, b]

Rule 5.21, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided generally that disciplinary proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Five-year limit was tolled while civil proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation were pending in any court. While respondent was acting as fiduciary in holding funds in escrow, five-year limitations period did not commence. As respondent did not deliver all funds until after civil lawsuit filed against him, limitations did not begin to run prior to start of lawsuit. Where counts related to circumstances alleged in civil lawsuit, counts were tolled as related to ongoing civil proceeding. Review Department rejected respondent's argument that civil litigation did not toll limitations period as disciplinary issues related only to small part of civil complaint. Conduct related to violations alleged in notice of disciplinary charges (NDC) was clearly same conduct alleged as part of civil litigation, and no authority requires entire lawsuit or certain percentage of lawsuit to relate to alleged violations. Review Department also rejected respondent's claim that appeal did not toll limitations period because it addressed "derivative" issue related to amount of damages owed, as respondent's appeal was of lawsuit based on same act of violation. Review Department held that while civil litigation was pending, include appeal, limitations period was tolled. However, even if appeal period was not tolled, NDC was filed within limitations period, as NDC was filed well under five years from judgement in civil case. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [7a-e]

Respondent's conviction conclusively proved elements of his crime. Thus, respondent's 2019 misdemeanor conviction established he drove under influence of alcohol and had prior DUI conviction.

Drunk driving convictions do not establish per se moral turpitude, but moral turpitude can be established based on circumstances surrounding convictions. Where respondent repeatedly falsely denied to police officer consumption of alcohol and not feeling its effects, and falsely claimed driving directly home from office, Review Department concluded (1) respondent's actions did not establish moral turpitude but did amount to other misconduct warranting discipline; and (2) circumstances surrounding DUI convictions were indications of alcohol abuse problem, as respondent was again arrested for drunk driving only two years after criminal probation for first DUI ended; second drunk driving violation resulted in collision that injured two victims and caused property damage; and respondent admitted does not drive anymore so as not to risk driving under influence, which clearly implied respondent did not trust himself to make decision not to drive while impaired from drinking. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [1a-e]

For purposes of attorney discipline, respondent's criminal conviction of driving under the influence of alcohol with an enhancement for an excessive blood alcohol concentration was conclusive proof that respondent committed all elements of that crime. However, it is an attorney's misconduct, not their conviction, that warrants discipline, and facts and circumstances surrounding conviction may be considered in determining whether moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [1a, b]

Under rule 5.21(C)(3) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, rule of limitations for disciplinary charges is tolled during pendency of government investigations or proceedings based on same acts or circumstances as violation. Where Tennessee civil proceeding found that respondent had defrauded investor and was liable for damages, rule of limitations was tolled for disciplinary charges based on same acts or circumstances. However, subsequent sister state collection proceedings, and bankruptcy proceeding to determine dischargeability of debt under Tennessee judgment, were not based on same acts or circumstances, and thus did not toll rule of limitations. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [3a, b]

Where respondent pled guilty in criminal proceeding to willfully and unlawfully committing assault, Review Department declined to consider respondent's belated self-defense claim because it would negate elements of crime to which he pled guilty, and factual basis for plea supported hearing judge's finding that respondent's self-defense claim lacked credibility. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [4a, b]

Prior discipline is considered in most cases only as aggravating circumstance in determining discipline in a later proceeding, but prior discipline may also be considered if it tends to prove a fact in issue in determining culpability. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [4]

Where respondent failed to withdraw from stipulation in prior disciplinary proceeding, or to timely request correction or modification of stipulation, and permitted stipulation's approval by State Bar Court and Supreme Court, respondent waived right to argue for first time in subsequent disciplinary proceeding that stipulation did not accurately reflect his agreement. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [5]

Where OCTC argued for first time in closing trial brief that respondent engaged in dishonesty and bad faith in seeking continuance of disciplinary trial, Review Department declined to assign bad faith as aggravating factor, because respondent did not have opportunity to respond to OCTC's bad faith allegation, and OCTC did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent deliberately attempted to mislead court. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [7a-c]

Superior court orders are final and binding for disciplinary purposes once review is waived or exhausted in courts of record. Where respondent never sought to stay, vacate, modify, or challenge discovery sanctions order, fact that order was not immediately appealable, and opposing party ultimately agreed to waive discovery sanctions, did not absolve respondent of culpability of failing to obey court order under section 6103. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [6]

An attorney violates section 6103 when, despite being aware of a final, binding court order, the attorney knowingly takes no action in response to the order or chooses to violate it. Where respondent was aware of motion for discovery sanctions, did not oppose it, and received notice of ruling from opposing counsel, fact that sanctions order was not formally served on respondent did not excuse his failure to comply. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [5a, b]

Business and Professions Code section allowing any person to file complaint with State Bar for false, misleading, or deceptive legal advertising, and allowing State Bar to require attorney to withdraw advertising on 72 hours' notice if such complaint is supported by substantial evidence, is completely separate from attorneys' duty under Rules of Professional Conduct not to use deceptive or misleading advertising. Accordingly, respondent who employed misleading advertising was properly found culpable of violating Rules of Professional Conduct even though no such complaint was filed, and State Bar did not give him 72 hours' notice to withdraw advertising. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [7]

Where respondent continued to collect advance fees for loan modification services despite cease and desist orders from several states; ceased his wrongdoing only after temporary restraining order was issued; and continued to insist his conduct was legal even after his operation was shut down by consumer protection agency, respondent's indifference toward rectification and inability to recognize wrongfulness of his misconduct warranted substantial consideration in aggravation. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [13a, b]

Where respondent not only failed to cooperate with OCTC, but made repeated threats against OCTC employees, resulting in the issuance of restraining orders against him, respondent's behavior was reprehensible and constituted extremely serious aggravation. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [14a-c]

Involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are abbreviated proceedings in which the principal issue is whether OCTC can establish exigent circumstances sufficient to justify enrolling an attorney involuntarily inactive before a formal disciplinary proceeding. Any subsequent disciplinary proceedings are separate proceedings, and neither the involuntary inactive enrollment order itself nor any of the findings made in the underlying proceedings is binding or has any probative value in the formal disciplinary case. Such an order also is not a final decision on the merits, and thus does not fulfill the requirements of collateral estoppel. Accordingly, Review Department considering disciplinary proceedings declined to consider hearing judge's analysis of statute as set forth in order denying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [4a, b]

Order denying OCTC's petition for involuntary inactive enrollment was judicially noticeable in subsequent disciplinary proceeding involving same respondent. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [5]

Respondent's conviction for felony vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated conclusively established that respondent drove while intoxicated and caused victim's death. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

To prove a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 based on an attorney's failure to obey court orders, OCTC must establish the attorney knew the orders were final and binding, and intended his acts or omissions. Where respondent was aware of and joined in client's tactical decision not to participate in discovery; was timely served with motions for discovery sanctions but chose not to respond or appear; was served with orders granting monetary sanctions against his client and his firm jointly and severally; and stipulated he was individually responsible for resulting obligation, respondent was obligated either to comply with orders or make formal motion or appeal explaining why he could not do so, and could not simply disregard orders, even under client's instructions. Respondent was therefore culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [1a-d]

When attorney has actual notice of court order, and does not object, move for reconsideration, or seek appellate review, attorney forfeits right to challenge order based on inadequate notice, and is obligated to comply with order. For due process and notice purposes, discovery sanctions orders are not distinguishable from other types of sanctions orders. Where respondent stipulated he had actual notice of orders imposing monetary discovery sanctions, and did not comply with orders, hearing judge erred in finding respondent not culpable of violating orders because he was not personally named in underlying motions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [3a-c]

For disciplinary purposes, superior court orders are final and binding once review in courts of record is waived or exhausted. Attorneys cannot wait until State Bar disciplinary proceedings commence to collaterally challenge legitimacy of superior court orders. State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction to determine validity of civil court orders. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [4a-c]

Where respondent was culpable of disobeying court orders by failing to pay monetary sanctions, payment of the sanctions was imposed as condition of respondent's disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [7]

Where respondent filed multiple frivolous appeals that appellate court dismissed after finding respondent's arguments had no merit and resulted from subjective bad faith, and where appellate court's findings, which were entitled to great weight, were supported by clear and convincing evidence, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(c). In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [4]

Decisions by criminal and appellate courts finding respondent's misconduct as prosecutor intentional and deliberate were entitled to strong presumption of validity and prima facie weight in State Bar Court, even though respondent was not technically party to criminal case, because disciplinary charges arose from same prosecutorial misconduct. Review Department affords hearing judge's factual findings great weight, but must independently assess record and may make different findings or conclusions. Where hearing judge failed to give proper weight to court decisions in criminal case, and record demonstrated validity of other courts' findings, Review Department rejected hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's misconduct was grossly negligent, and found it intentional. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [1a-e]

Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (WCAB) findings are entitled to strong presumption of validity where supported by substantial evidence. Where respondent was subject to WCAB sanctions order, and where sanctioned misconduct bore strong similarity, if not identity, to charged disciplinary misconduct, WCAB findings constituted conclusive legal determination of respondent's conduct in perpetrating fraud on WCAB. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [4]

Where respondent refused to dismiss defendants after learning they were not parties to contract at issue; trial court awarded sanctions against respondent; and Court of Appeal affirmed, finding respondent's action was frivolous, Court of Appeal's finding of frivolousness was entitled to strong presumption of validity, and respondent was culpable of maintaining an unjust action. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [11a, b]

192 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings—Constitutional Issues – Due Process/Procedural Rights

Rule 2604, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, provided, in part, that Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) may file Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) when attorney had received fair, adequate, and reasonable opportunity to deny or explain matters that were subject of NDC charges. Rule 5.30, Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required OCTC to notify attorney before NDC was filed of right to request early neutral evaluation conference (ENEC). Where OCTC mailed notice of ENEC right to respondent's State Bar address, but respondent did not receive notice because respondent had not updated address, which was respondent's responsibility, Review Department held no procedural violation of rule 2604, and hearing judge did not err for not mentioning in decision that no ENEC was held as respondent not entitled to ENEC due to respondent's own failure to update State Bar address. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [3a, b]

Notice of Disciplinary Charges must (1) cite statutes or rules attorney allegedly violated; (2) contain facts comprising violation in sufficient detail to permit preparation of defense; and (3) relate stated facts to authorities attorney allegedly violated. Where facts charged in Notice of Disciplinary Charges were very specific, charge cannot be interpreted broadly so other facts not alleged constitute misconduct; such would infringe on respondent's right to fair proceeding as respondent is entitled to adequate notice of rule or statute violated and manner respondent allegedly violated it. Review Department rejected Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent received notice that respondent's overall communication with clients was being charged. As Notice of Disciplinary Charges was narrowly drafted and was not amended to conform to proof, Review Department did not consider other allegations by Office of Chief Trial Counsel on review that respondent failed to communicate in other instances. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [3a, b]

Fundamental requirement of due process is opportunity to be heard at meaningful time and in meaningful manner. In California disciplinary proceedings, adequate notice requires only that attorney be fairly apprised of precise nature of charges before proceedings commence. Where Notice of Disciplinary Charges pled specific facts comprising violation and specific rule violated, respondent received due process, and Review Department rejected respondent's contention that due process required that respondent be given notice during investigation that conduct violated specific rule before State Bar could charge respondent with violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [2]

Language of former rule 4-100(A) is explicit that personal funds cannot be deposited into client trust account. Where respondent interpreted language of rule to permit respondent to deposit personal funds in client trust account that held no client funds; interpretation was unreasonable given entire language of rule; and respondent did not research case law after receiving letters from State Bar regarding NSF checks and containing copy of former rule 4-100, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that language of rule and case law failed to give adequate notice that using client trust account to hold and disburse personal funds was improper even though account never held client funds. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [3]

Aggravating circumstances may include uncharged violations of Business and Professions Code or Rules of Professional Conduct. However, hearing judge erred in finding significant aggravation based on uncharged violation of former rule 4-100(A) based on erroneous factual conclusion from respondent's testimony, where State Bar never raised uncharged misconduct during trial or in post-trial closing brief, and respondent consequently did not have opportunity to defend during trial against uncharged violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [6a, b]

Where respondent had stipulated in earlier disciplinary proceeding that he was unreasonable in believing he could represent party in arbitration while suspended, respondent's subsequent practice of law in three arbitration matters while on notice of his suspension was an intentional act of moral turpitude, not merely grossly negligent. Finding of moral turpitude did not violate respondent's due process rights, because earlier stipulation put respondent on notice that continuing to appear for parties in arbitration while suspended could involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [6a-d]

Where culpability determinations were based on evidence introduced at trial without respondent's objection, respondent's due process rights were not violated by admission of such evidence, as any objection had been waived. Moreover, State Bar's rules permit admission of relevant, reliable hearsay evidence to supplement or explain other evidence, although hearsay admitted over timely objection is not sufficient in itself to support a finding. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [1]

Where respondent failed to establish that hearing judge demonstrated bias or that respondent was specifically prejudiced, and where purpose of hearing judge's questions at trial was to clarify judge's own confusion about testimony, respondent failed to meet burden to show judicial bias, and failed to show he was deprived of due process. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation if respondent's due process rights are not violated. Where OCTC was or should have been aware of uncharged misconduct before disciplinary charges were filed, misconduct should have been charged. Nonetheless, where respondent stipulated to conduct constituting uncharged misconduct; uncharged misconduct was elicited for relevant purpose and based on respondent's own representations; and hearing judge granted motion to conform charges to proof at trial, hearing judge correctly assigned nominal weight in aggravation for uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [7a-c]

Due process does not require that petitioner for reinstatement be allowed to present evidence of rehabilitation at evidentiary hearing, where applicable provision of State Bar Rules of Procedure expressly provides for dismissal of petition for failure to comply with prefiling requirements, including reimbursement of Client Security Fund. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [5]

193 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings—Constitutional Issues—Other

Prosecutors have no First Amendment right to engage in speech that creates substantial likelihood of material prejudice to criminal proceeding or to parties' rights to a fair trial. Where prosecutor's misconduct prejudiced criminal defendant's right to fair trial, State Bar Court would not entertain First Amendment free speech defense to resulting disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [3]

194 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings– Effect/Applicability of Statutes Outside State Bar Act

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statute should not be construed to apply retroactively to offense committed prior to effective date. Where matter was submitted for decision prior to March 1, 2021, effective date of amended rule 5.137(H) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, and all misconduct occurred prior to April 1, 2020, effective date of former rule 5.137 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [22]

Litigation privilege in Civil Code section 47 does not apply to disciplinary proceedings. Where respondent argued hearing judge improperly relied on civil case management statement as it was privileged communication under Civil Code section 47, Review Department rejected respondent's argument. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [4]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [11]

Rules of statutory construction apply when State Bar Court interprets Rules of Procedure of State Bar. Absent express retroactivity provision or clear evidence of intended retroactive application, statutes should not be construed to apply retroactively to offenses committed prior to effective date. Where all of respondent's misconduct occurred prior to effective date of new State Bar Rule of Procedure implementing statute authorizing monetary sanctions, Review Department did not recommend imposition of monetary sanctions on respondent. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [9]

Code of Civil Procedure sections permitting persons not otherwise entitled to practice law in California to represent parties to certain types of arbitrations did not authorize suspended California attorney to practice law by representing party to arbitration. Statute permitting out-of-state attorneys in good standing to represent parties in arbitrations could not be construed to permit suspended California attorneys to practice law in violation of section 6126. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.[2a, b]

Probate Code section 16004 applies to fiduciary relationship between attorney and client, and is statutory complement to rule 3-300. Probate Code establishes rebuttable presumption that trustee has violated fiduciary duties when trustee obtains advantage from beneficiary in transaction between them. When attorney trustee enters into transaction with trust, transaction will be set aside unless attorney can show that beneficiaries had full knowledge of facts connected with transaction and fully understood its effect. Where respondent, as trustee, obtained loan from trust which benefited her, and did not fully inform beneficiaries of terms or risks of loan transaction, respondent violated her duties under Probate Code, and thereby violated section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [5a, b]

As fiduciary, trustee has duty to act with utmost good faith, to administer trust according to its terms, and to act with reasonable care, skill and caution as prudent person in similar circumstances. Under Probate Code, trustees must administer trusts solely in interest of beneficiaries, and must not use trust property for trustee's own profit or purpose unconnected with trust. However, these obligations do not override provisions of trust itself. Where terms of trust gave respondent, as trustee, broad management powers, including ability to enter into transactions such as self-dealing that would otherwise violate trustee's statutory duties, respondent was not culpable of violating section 6068(a), through Probate Code violations, by lending money to herself from trust, where loan was secured by respondent's real property and provided for five percent interest rate, and respondent paid off loan in full after request by beneficiary. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [4a, b]

Trustee of revocable trust owes fiduciary duty to settlor of trust. When settlor has become incompetent, trustee's fiduciary duty is to beneficiaries, and if trustee is an attorney, she is required to treat beneficiaries as clients for purposes of rule 3-300. Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed funds from trust whose settlor was incompetent, respondent violated rule 3-300 by failing to provide beneficiaries with written description of loan terms; failing to tell them they could seek advice of independent attorney; and failing to obtain their written consent to loan terms. Given these failures to comply with rule 3-300, respondent was culpable even if terms of loan were fair and reasonable. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [3a-c]

When attorney is trustee of trust, trust's beneficiaries are not attorney's clients, but attorney may nevertheless be disciplined as if beneficiaries were clients, because of attorney's fiduciary relationship with beneficiaries. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [2]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code section as constituting attorney misconduct, attorney was properly found culpable of violating disciplinary statute even though notice of disciplinary charges charged violation of disciplinary statute only, and did not expressly charge violation of Civil Code section. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [9]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [8]

Civil Code section 2944.7 prohibits any person engaged in loan modifications from collecting any advance fees in advance of completing all contracted loan modification services, and an attorney's violation of the statute constitutes a disciplinable offense under section 6106.3. Section 2944.7 is not ambiguous, and does not permit an exception for attorneys who attempt to obtain loan modifications, but plan to file litigation if a modification request is denied. Where respondent stipulated that clients retained his services to keep their homes and properties; he discussed loan modification with them as an available remedy, along with litigation if loan modification applications were denied; he submitted loan modification applications for them and negotiated with their lenders; and he collected fees from them before completing all loan modification services, respondent was culpable of violating section 6106.3, even if the purpose of his litigation services was not just to obtain loan modifications. the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [2a-h]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [1a, b]

California's statutory Homeowner Bill of Rights, which provides remedies for home mortgage borrowers including recovery of attorney fees against lenders, does not conflict with statutes prohibiting attorneys in loan modification proceedings from collecting any advance attorney fees, and does not permit attorneys to collect otherwise prohibited advance fees in order to prepare to litigate against a lender as a means to leverage a loan modification. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [3a, b]

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, failed to disclose discoverable evidence to defense counsel 30 days before trial, in violation of Penal Code section 1054.1, Review Department found respondent culpable of violating section 6068(a) (failure to support laws), concluding that whether evidence in question was exculpatory or material did not affect culpability, because statute required disclosure of all written witness statements. Trial continuances also did not affect culpability, because statute required disclosure 30 days before any trial date set by court, even if continuance of trial was expected and did in fact occur. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1a-d]

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, was obligated to disclose evidence to defense counsel, but failed to disclose it based on unreasonable belief, contrary to clear language of applicable statute, that disclosure was not required, respondent was culpable of committing act of moral turpitude through gross negligence. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.[2]

Where Supreme Court has not published decision interpreting State Bar Act provision or related provision of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, State Bar Court itself interprets statute and rule as written. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [1]

State Bar Court's review of petition for reinstatement, resulting in determination that petition should be dismissed for failure to satisfy a prefiling requirement, constituted hearing of petition in first instance by State Bar Court, as required under California Rules of Court. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [6]

196 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings—Comparison to ABA Model Code and/or Model Rules

Review Department rejected as meritless respondent's arguments that the American Bar Association (ABA) Model Rules of Professional Conduct should be followed rather than California Rules of Professional Conduct, and ABA rules take precedence over State Bar Act and California disciplinary statutes. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [4]

199 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings—Other Miscellaneous General Issues

Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Where one email to client's attorney in related matter did not mention insurer at all; second email summarized attorney's report to judge at settlement status conference, disclosed that insurer had been provided copy of proposed settlement agreement, and did not mention insurer's response; attorney believed settlement agreement did not contain insurer's position, as attorney had not carefully read drafts with erroneous statement; and attorney had no indication that would lead attorney to believe that client's attorney in related matter thought insurer had not objected, it could not be determined attorney's omission in email to client's attorney in related matter constituted intentional misrepresentation, especially as one email was only summary of status conference and attorney asserted insurer's position was not discussed at status conference. Reasonable factual interpretation is attorney was unaware client's attorney in related matter believed insurer had not objected. Attorney therefore had no reason to mention insurer's objection in emails. Review department therefore held OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement by omitting this fact from emails. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [15]

Pursuant to rule 5.101.1(B), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, unless otherwise ordered by court, parties are required to exchange exhibits at least 10 days prior to pretrial conference, and pursuant to rule 5.101.1(I), failure to comply, without good cause, may constitute grounds for exclusion of exhibits. Where respondent failed to exchange exhibits prior to trial as required by rule and ordered by court, and respondent complained he did not do so as respondent was awaiting receipt of case file, respondent cannot hold Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) responsible for respondent's failure to exchange exhibits in respondent's possession or which respondent was capable of attaining. Where respondent contended that (1) respondent was experiencing personal problems; (2) respondent lacked litigation experience and had no experience with State Bar Court matters; (3) respondent's counsel withdrew from case 12 days before start of trial, and (4) respondent failed to explain how exclusion of exhibits prejudiced him, respondent did not establish good cause for failing to exchange exhibits with OCTC prior to trial, and Review Department affirmed hearing judge's finding excluding exhibits from evidence. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [5a-c]

Rule 5.104(C), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, required admission of relevant evidence if it was sort of evidence on which responsible persons were accustomed to rely in conduct of serious affairs. Where judge properly excluded respondent's exhibits under rule 5.101.1(I), Rules of Procedure of State Bar, relevance of respondent's evidence was not at issue because respondent had already failed to comply under rule 5.101.1. Review Department held respondent failed to show hearing judge abused discretion in excluding some of respondent's exhibits for failing to comply with Rules of Procedure and therefore rejected respondent's request to admit excluded exhibits into record. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [6a, b]

Where Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) did not appeal hearing judge's finding of no clear and convincing evidence of misappropriation, but instead attempted to argue misappropriation by gross negligence in its responsive brief on appeal, although some facts suggested respondent's actions may have been grossly negligent or construed as other misconduct, Review Department concluded that respondent did not have opportunity to fully address gross negligence issue on review and it would be unfair for Review Department to overturn hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [7]

Regardless of whether issue was fully developed at Hearing Department, Review Department is required to independently review record and make any findings, conclusions, or decision or recommendation different from those of hearing judge. Review Department may also address an issue not raised in request for review, provided parties have opportunity to brief issue. Where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary proceeding based on rule of limitations, and OCTC argued in pretrial statement and on review that rule of limitations was tolled based on respondent's alleged fiduciary relationship with complaining witness, Review Department could reach issue of tolling based on fiduciary relationship after giving parties opportunity to brief issue. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [7a, b]

Where respondent was placed on involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c)(4) following hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, but Review Department reduced discipline to 60-day actual suspension, Review Department ordered involuntary inactive enrollment terminated, and recommended that respondent be given credit for inactive enrollment period toward period of actual suspension. Because inactive enrollment period had lasted longer than 60 days, there would be no prospective period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [16a-c]

204.10 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—General Substantive Issues re culpability—Willfulness requirement

Willful disobedience or violation of court order requiring attorney to do or forbear act connected with or in course of attorney's profession, which attorney ought in good faith to do or forbear, constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Attorney acts willfully if attorney intends to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where attorney failed to pay court ordered sanctions and then appealed order's validity and lost, Review Department upheld hearing judge's culpability determination that respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, as respondent had actual notice of order and requirement to pay sanctions; order was final and binding for disciplinary purposes as respondent's challenge of order was exhausted; sanctions order remained in effect even though entire case was appealed; and failing to pay sanctions until over a year and a half after knowledge of obligation was unreasonable and a violation of order. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [1a-c]

Mistake of law made in good faith may be defense to Business and Professions Code section 6067 charge, as attorneys are not infallible and cannot be expected to know all law. But section 6103.7 charge is different, as it does not pertain to attorney performance and knowledge of law. Prohibition from threatening immigration status in section 6103.7 establishes a clear ethical standard for conduct that attorneys must uphold. Only willful breach is required for discipline, not knowledge of rule or intent to violate it. Where respondent mentioned illegal immigration status of opposing party in letters and telephone calls to opposing counsel and in civil case management statement, those constituted threats in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103.7, and respondent's purported ignorance of section 6103.7 was not a defense. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [3a-d]

Attorneys must obey a tribunal's orders unless they take steps to have them modified or vacated. Where respondent never sought relief from administrative tribunal's orders on basis of inability to comply or impossibility of compliance, Review Department rejected respondent's arguments that failure to comply was not willful, and that it would have been a waste of time to seek modification because his ability to comply was so uncertain. Fact that tribunal's orders were submitted to a board for final action also did not excuse respondent's noncompliance, where respondent never disputed finality or validity of orders, and did not seek stay of enforcement or appellate relief. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [7 a-d]

Good faith, or even ignorance of the law, is no defense to a charged violation of statute requiring attorneys to report judicial sanctions to State Bar. Particularly where respondent did not establish that his failure to report sanctions imposed by administrative tribunal was attributable to his belief at the time that statute did not require reporting such sanctions, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [9]

Where respondent practiced law while suspended for non-payment of child support, OCTC was not required to establish that respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law in order to prove respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126. It was sufficient to prove respondent's conduct was willful. Under standard 2.10(b), knowledge is simply a factor in determining degree of discipline. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [3a, b]

204.20 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally — Culpability — General substantive issues re culpability — Intent requirement

Moral turpitude includes false or misleading statements to a court or tribunal. Actual intent to deceive is not necessary; gross negligence in creating a false impression is sufficient. Willful deceit violates section 6106. Where respondent took no steps to correct record despite notice that assistant made misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, on which tribunal had relied, respondent ratified assistant's misrepresentation, and thus was culpable of moral turpitude by gross negligence. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [1a-c]

Where respondent did not direct assistant to make misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, but took no steps to correct record after learning of misrepresentation, respondent was not culpable of violating section 6068(d), because he did not act with specific intent to deceive tribunal. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [2a, b]

Misrepresentation of fact to court for purpose of obtaining continuance violates attorney's duty not to mislead courts. For this purpose, administrative tribunal acting in quasi-judicial capacity is not distinct from court. Where respondent directed assistant to make material misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, and then took no steps to correct record despite notice that tribunal had relied on misrepresentation, respondent was culpable of intentional act of moral turpitude and of misleading tribunal, but violations were treated as single offense involving moral turpitude, and no additional weight was assigned to duplicative charge. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [3a-f]

To prove failure to obey court order, evidence must establish attorney knew what he or she was doing or not doing, and intended to act or abstain from acting. Where attorney was aware of orders requiring him to provide documentation and pay sanctions, and neither complied nor sought relief, attorney was culpable of disobeying court order. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [4]

Decisions by criminal and appellate courts finding respondent's misconduct as prosecutor intentional and deliberate were entitled to strong presumption of validity and prima facie weight in State Bar Court, even though respondent was not technically party to criminal case, because disciplinary charges arose from same prosecutorial misconduct. Review Department affords hearing judge's factual findings great weight, but must independently assess record and may make different findings or conclusions. Where hearing judge failed to give proper weight to court decisions in criminal case, and record demonstrated validity of other courts' findings, Review Department rejected hearing judge's conclusion that respondents misconduct was grossly negligent, and found it intentional. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [1a-e]

Where respondent practiced law while suspended for non-payment of child support, OCTC was not required to establish that respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law in order to prove respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126. It was sufficient to prove respondent's conduct was willful. Under standard 2.10(b), knowledge is simply a factor in determining degree of discipline. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [3a, b]

204.90 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – General substantive issues re culpability – Other general substantive issues re culpability

Attorney's duty to client depends on existence of attorney-client relationship created by contract, express or implied. Implied-in-fact contract arises from parties' conduct that shows relationship despite absence of formal agreement. Attorney-client relationship may be informally created by parties' acts without written contract. There are several indicia of attorney-client relationship, but parties' intent and conduct are critical to attorney-client relationship formation. Although no written agreement memorialized attorney-client relationship, where attorney met with family representative – who was aware of family's involvement with environmental issues at former place of business – and discussed usual aspects of representation in environmental remediation matters, including securing insurance coverage and occasional need for lawsuit; family representative authorized attorney to begin working on environmental remediation matter for family; no evidence that after meeting family representative took further action regarding remediation; family representative did not contact insurer to make claim or contact another attorney to deal with remediation – even though family representative knew of insurance policies' existence and was experienced real estate professional; and after meeting attorney began working to establish coverage and discharge family from liability, conduct of both parties was consistent with finding attorney-client relationship. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [2a, b]

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where respondent believed (1) claim was issued by governmental agency targeting clients, and (2) that even if clients had not already been targeted by governmental agency, they would be soon, it was reasonable to believe attorney simply mistaken regarding existence of governmental claim against clients, and no clear and convincing evidence supported conclusion attorney made material misrepresentation amounting to either grossly negligent or intentional moral turpitude when he wrote letter to insurance company stating governmental entity was implicated in matter. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [4a-d]

Where attorney stated in deposition that he estimated he had "five to ten" telephone conversations with client after meeting, but attorney actually had not communicated with client at all during relevant period, deposition statement was not intentional or grossly negligent misrepresentation in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106, as attorney had not reviewed case file before appearing at deposition; attorney asserted testimony was based on attorney's experience with these cases generally – not specific memory of speaking with client; and at trial, attorney characterized statement as "guess" at time of deposition, which attorney later corrected in interview with New Jersey Office of Attorney Ethics. Record therefore supported reasonable inference attorney was simply mistaken when attorney testified, and testimony reflected attorney's recollection of case at that time. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [8]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to establish that attorney's actions related to form which reflected client was responsible for remediation at site amounted to breach of attorney's fiduciary duties or duty of loyalty to client where (1) record showed clients had some responsibility for premises' remediation; (2) attorney's representation strategy was to engage governmental agency, involve insurer, and obtain insurance coverage for remediation; (3) attorney asserted form did not admit sole responsibility – as site owners also had responsibility – rather, form simply indicated who was taking charge of conducting remediation, which is not indication of sole liability; (4) governmental agency was already aware of attorney's clients, as property owners stated in remediation timeframe extension request that owners were working to find insurance coverage from attorney's clients as they were previous tenant and also responsible for remediation; and (5) review of record points to reasonable inference that attorney was acting in clients' best interests and was following representation strategy discussed with client at meeting. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [10a-c]

Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Where one email to client's attorney in related matter did not mention insurer at all; second email summarized attorney's report to judge at settlement status conference, disclosed that insurer had been provided copy of proposed settlement agreement, and did not mention insurer's response; attorney believed settlement agreement did not contain insurer's position, as attorney had not carefully read drafts with erroneous statement; and attorney had no indication that would lead attorney to believe that client's attorney in related matter thought insurer had not objected, it could not be determined attorney's omission in email to client's attorney in related matter constituted intentional misrepresentation, especially as one email was only summary of status conference and attorney asserted insurer's position was not discussed at status conference. Reasonable factual interpretation is attorney was unaware client's attorney in related matter believed insurer had not objected. Attorney therefore had no reason to mention insurer's objection in emails. Review department therefore held OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement by omitting this fact from emails. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [15]

Attorney-client relationship can only be created by express or implied contract. Where record established respondent was hired to, and did, legal work at business (including negotiating lease, drafting lease terms, and agreeing to hold money in escrow); business officials considered respondent to be acting as company attorney; respondent referred to himself as counsel in letter agreement; respondent filed form as escrow holder; and respondent declared in civil litigation respondent performed legal work for business, respondent and business had attorney-client relationship. Review Department rejected respondent's arguments that (1) respondent was not doing work for business but rather respondent's professional law corporation was doing work as business's "contractor;" and (2) respondent's professional law corporation was hired by other named business entity, but business that employed respondent was family-owned and associated with several different named entities, including other named business. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [1]

Where respondent misrepresented case settled when it was actually dismissed, respondent's failure to inform client about dismissal was factually joined with misrepresentation respondent was working on case and getting client settlement money. Review Department therefore treated moral turpitude violation and violation of failing to inform client of significant developments as single offense involving moral turpitude for discipline purposes. No additional disciplinary weight was given to Business and Professions Code section 6068(m) violation because respondent's misconduct underlying section 6068(m) charge was factually same as misconduct underlying moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [2a, b]

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

If disciplinary proceeding is based solely on complainant's allegations of violation of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct, rule of limitations (Rules of Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.21) provides that proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Normally, a statute or rule is violated when every element of violation has occurred. However, rule of limitations is tolled during period that attorney acts in fiduciary relationship with complainant or related party, even if it is other than an attorney-client relationship. Moreover, if disciplinary charge is based on continuing violation of duty, violation is deemed committed at termination of entire course of conduct. Where respondent allegedly breached fiduciary duty to investor under movie financing agreement requiring respondent to hold funds in escrow until close of movie production, rule of limitations was tolled as long as fiduciary relationship continued, and respondent's alleged diversion of funds created continuing violation lasting until completion of purpose of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, where initial notice of disciplinary charges was filed within five years after completion of movie production, misappropriation charge was timely even though diversion of funds occurred more than five years earlier. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [2a-h]

Attorney's commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption is cause for disbarment whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise. Attorney who accepts responsibility of a fiduciary nature is held to high standards of legal profession whether or not acting in capacity of attorney. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [4]

The definition of law practice is largely derived from case law, and includes representation of others in court proceedings, legal advice and counsel, and preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured, regardless of whether a court proceeding is pending. Even when services may be performed by non-lawyers, they are not non-legal activities if a lawyer performs them. Moreover, lawyers acting in any capacity must conform to professional standards, including the prohibition against practicing law while suspended. Where respondent, while suspended from practice, made legal demands on opposing parties' counsel in arbitration proceedings, and briefed and advocated numerous legal issues, respondent was unquestionably engaged in law practice. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [1a-d]

Prior discipline is considered in most cases only as aggravating circumstance in determining discipline in a later proceeding, but prior discipline may also be considered if it tends to prove a fact in issue in determining culpability. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [4]

Where respondent failed to withdraw from stipulation in prior disciplinary proceeding, or to timely request correction or modification of stipulation, and permitted stipulation's approval by State Bar Court and Supreme Court, respondent waived right to argue for first time in subsequent disciplinary proceeding that stipulation did not accurately reflect his agreement. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [5]

Attorney who is trustee of trust must comply with Rules of Professional Conduct as well as directives of trust instrument. Attorney entering into business transaction arising from attorney's duties as trustee must comply with rule 3-300. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [1]

When attorney is trustee of trust, trust's beneficiaries are not attorney's clients, but attorney may nevertheless be disciplined as if beneficiaries were clients, because of attorney's fiduciary relationship with beneficiaries. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [2]

Substantial compliance with disciplinary probation conditions is not a defense to probation violations. Where disciplined attorney did not timely schedule initial meeting with Probation Department, and did not timely submit first two required quarterly reports, attorney was culpable of violating probation, despite his belated compliance with both requirements. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2a, b]

Even when a service may be performed by non-lawyers, when such services are rendered by an attorney or in an attorney's office, they constitute the practice of law. Where customers of loan modification business jointly operated by respondent and non-lawyer were told they were receiving attorney services, business constituted practice of law. Accordingly, respondent was culpable of forming a partnership with a non-lawyer. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [3a, b]

Business and Professions Code section allowing any person to file complaint with State Bar for false, misleading, or deceptive legal advertising, and allowing State Bar to require attorney to withdraw advertising on 72 hours' notice if such complaint is supported by substantial evidence, is completely separate from attorneys' duty under Rules of Professional Conduct not to use deceptive or misleading advertising. Accordingly, respondent who employed misleading advertising was properly found culpable of violating Rules of Professional Conduct even though no such complaint was filed, and State Bar did not give him 72 hours' notice to withdraw advertising. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [7]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [8]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code section as constituting attorney misconduct, attorney was properly found culpable of violating disciplinary statute even though notice of disciplinary charges charged violation of disciplinary statute only, and did not expressly charge violation of Civil Code section. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [9]

Where respondent was culpable of committing act of moral turpitude and of violating rule of professional conduct based on same misconduct underlying respondent's culpability of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068(a), hearing judge was correct in giving other violations no additional weight in culpability. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [4a, b]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1a, b]

Involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are abbreviated proceedings in which the principal issue is whether OCTC can establish exigent circumstances sufficient to justify enrolling an attorney involuntarily inactive before a formal disciplinary proceeding. Any subsequent disciplinary proceedings are separate proceedings, and neither the involuntary inactive enrollment order itself nor any of the findings made in the underlying proceedings is binding or has any probative value in the formal disciplinary case. Such an order also is not a final decision on the merits, and thus does not fulfill the requirements of collateral estoppel. Accordingly, Review Department considering disciplinary proceedings declined to consider hearing judge's analysis of statute as set forth in order denying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [4a, b]

Neither employees of State Bar nor fellow attorneys can give an attorney permission to violate duties under statutes or ethics rules. Accordingly, it was not a valid defense to disciplinary charges that respondent relied on information in a State Bar flyer, and on advice from OCTC, in determining that his actions did not violate statute. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

Order denying OCTC's petition for involuntary inactive enrollment was judicially noticeable in subsequent disciplinary proceeding involving same respondent. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [6]

Stipulated facts in disciplinary proceedings are binding on parties under State Bar rule 5.58(G). Where respondent stipulated that that he was obligated to pay monetary sanctions awarded against his law firm; law firm name did not indicate it was a corporation or limited liability partnership, as would be required by State Bar Rules 3.152(B) and 3.174(B); and even if it were, respondent could not thereby escape personal liability for his own professional malfeasance and still would have been required to report sanctions award against him, record and law supported respondent's stipulation, and hearing judge erred in exonerating respondent and dismissing disciplinary proceeding based on conclusion that respondent was not individually responsible for paying sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [2a, b]

Where respondent represented clients before administrative tribunal, respondent's activity constituted practice of law because application of legal knowledge and technique was required. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [5]

Scope of section 6103 is not limited to courts or constitutional administrative agencies; it enforces standards governing attorneys' conduct before all tribunals. Statutes specifying powers of Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH), and giving its administrative law judges (ALJs) authority to issue orders, contemplate that OAH should be treated as a court, and attorneys must obey its orders. Accordingly, where respondent willfully failed to comply with orders of an OAHALJ, respondent was culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 513 [6a-e]

Good faith, or even ignorance of the law, is no defense to a charged violation of statute requiring attorneys to report judicial sanctions to State Bar. Particularly where respondent did not establish that his failure to report sanctions imposed by administrative tribunal was attributable to his belief at the time that statute did not require reporting such sanctions, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2037)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [9]

Reliance on advice of counsel is not a defense in a discipline case. Where respondent, while acting as fiduciary, disregarded advice of counsel regarding administration of trust, and committed acts of misconduct after counsel stopped representing her, respondent's misconduct was not excused by reliance on advice of counsel. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494 [5]

Even where an attorney is not practicing law, she is required to conform to ethical standards required of attorneys. An attorney who breaches fiduciary duties that would justify discipline if there were an attorney-client relationship may properly be disciplined for misconduct. Respondent's misconduct was not excused because she was acting as trustee for family estate, not as attorney. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [6a, b]

Prosecutors have no First Amendment right to engage in speech that creates substantial likelihood of material prejudice to criminal proceeding or to parties' rights to a fair trial. Where prosecutor's misconduct prejudiced criminal defendant's right to fair trial, State Bar Court would not entertain First Amendment free speech defense to resulting disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479 [3]

Where respondent was the owner and sole supervising attorney of a firm, respondent owed non-delegable fiduciary duty to each client accepted and could not avoid culpability by shifting responsibility onto employees. Accordingly, where respondent's firm took over loan modification matter, and respondent's employees then collected fees before performing services, respondent was culpable of violating statute precluding collection of advance fees in loan modification matters. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct Rptr. 437. [2a-c]

212.00 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6067

Mistake of law made in good faith may be defense to Business and Professions Code section 6067 charge, as attorneys are not infallible and cannot be expected to know all law. But section 6103.7 charge is different, as it does not pertain to attorney performance and knowledge of law. Prohibition from threatening immigration status in section 6103.7 establishes a clear ethical standard for conduct that attorneys must uphold. Only willful breach is required for discipline, not knowledge of rule or intent to violate it. Where respondent mentioned illegal immigration status of opposing party in letters and telephone calls to opposing counsel and in civil case management statement, those constituted threats in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103.7, and respondent's purported ignorance of section 6103.7 was not a defense. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [3a-d]

213.10 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(a) (support Constitution and laws)

Amended Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) charged assortment of actions that, taken together, alleged overreaching and breach of fiduciary duties. However, failure to communicate allegations were already alleged under more specific Business and Professions Code subsection – section 6068, subdivision (m) – in separate Amended NDC count. Before enactment of subdivision (m), which was added in 1986 and became effective in 1987, there was "common law" duty to communicate and proper to base culpability under subdivision (a). Now, improper to find violations for same facts under both subdivisions (a) and (m) of Business and Professions Code section 6068. Specific statute should be charged instead of using broader subdivision (a*). In the Matter of Isola* (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [12a,b]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to establish that attorney's actions related to form which reflected client was responsible for remediation at site amounted to breach of attorney's fiduciary duties or duty of loyalty to client where (1) record showed clients had some responsibility for premises' remediation; (2) attorney's representation strategy was to engage governmental agency, involve insurer, and obtain insurance coverage for remediation; (3) attorney asserted form did not admit sole responsibility – as site owners also had responsibility – rather, form simply indicated who was taking charge of conducting remediation, which is not indication of sole liability; (4) governmental agency was already aware of attorney's clients, as property owners stated in remediation timeframe extension request that owners were working to find insurance coverage from attorney's clients as they were previous tenant and also responsible for remediation; and (5) review of record points to reasonable inference that attorney was acting in clients' best interests and was following representation strategy discussed with client at meeting. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [10a-c]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Where trial showed attorney acted in best interests of clients by obtaining release of liability to property owners and finding coverage for environmental remediation; attorney's actions aligned with attorney's presentation at client meeting; attorney negotiated settlement, then handed matter to client's attorney in related matter to discuss with client who approved settlement agreement; no evidence of deceit or that attorney negotiated terms of settlement agreement to clients' detriment, no evidence demonstrated attorney overstepped bounds of attorney's representation or overreached in way that was unfair to clients. While attorney violated ethical obligations by failing to inform client of significant developments, this failure alone did not equate to overreaching where attorney did not stop working on case or abandon clients; rather, attorney competently completed representation. Accordingly, there was no overreaching or breach of fiduciary duties in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [11a-e]

Business and Professions Code section 6068(a) provides it is attorney's duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Escrow holder owes fiduciary duties to escrow parties and must strictly comply with parties' instructions. Where respondent agreed to act as escrow holder, deposited funds into business account, and used money to make personal, unauthorized purchases, rather than safekeeping funds, respondent violated fiduciary duties when respondent distributed money in way not contemplated by parties. Review Department held respondent culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068(a) but assigned no additional disciplinary weight as respondent's breach of fiduciary duties was based on same facts underlying moral turpitude violations. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [12a, b]

As fiduciary, trustee has duty to act with utmost good faith, to administer trust according to its terms, and to act with reasonable care, skill and caution as prudent person in similar circumstances. Under Probate Code, trustees must administer trusts solely in interest of beneficiaries, and must not use trust property for trustee's own profit or purpose unconnected with trust. However, these obligations do not override provisions of trust itself. Where terms of trust gave respondent, as trustee, broad management powers, including ability to enter into transactions such as self-dealing that would otherwise violate trustee's statutory duties, respondent was not culpable of violating section 6068(a), through Probate Code violations, by lending money to herself from trust, where loan was secured by respondent's real property and provided for five percent interest rate, and respondent paid off loan in full after request by beneficiary. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [4a, b]

Probate Code section 16004 applies to fiduciary relationship between attorney and client, and is statutory complement to rule 3-300. Probate Code establishes rebuttable presumption that trustee has violated fiduciary duties when trustee obtains advantage from beneficiary in transaction between them. When attorney trustee enters into transaction with trust, transaction will be set aside unless attorney can show that beneficiaries had full knowledge of facts connected with transaction and fully understood its effect. Where respondent, as trustee, obtained loan from trust which benefited her, and did not fully inform beneficiaries of terms or risks of loan transaction, respondent violated her duties under Probate Code, and thereby violated section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [5a, b]

Where same acts of misconduct by respondent violated both section 6068(a) and rule 3-300, hearing judge erred by dismissing section 6068(a) charge with prejudice. Better approach was to find both violations, but assign duplicative violation no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [6]

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, failed to disclose discoverable evidence to defense counsel 30 days before trial, in violation of Penal Code section 1054.1, Review Department found respondent culpable of violating section 6068(a) (failure to support laws), concluding that whether evidence in question was exculpatory or material did not affect culpability, because statute required disclosure of all written witness statements. Trial continuances also did not affect culpability, because statute required disclosure 30 days before any trial date set by court, even if continuance of trial was expected and did in fact occur. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1a-d]

Where respondent misused her authority and discretion as trustee of her family's trust, intentionally violated numerous fiduciary duties set forth in the Probate Code by means infused with dishonesty and/or concealment, made repeated misrepresentations to the court and third parties in documents filed which falsely represented her as trustee after she had been removed, and intentionally violated court orders, respondent was culpable of multiple intentional acts of moral turpitude. Respondent was also culpable of violating section 6068(a), but Review Department assigned these violations no additional weight because they were duplicative of section 6306 violations, In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [3a, b]

Where charge against respondent prosecutor of failing to comply with Constitution and laws, based on respondent's willful violation of criminal defendant's constitutional rights, overlapped with moral turpitude charge based on same misconduct, charge of failing to comply with law was properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [4]

Where respondent prosecutor inserted false confession in criminal defendant's statement before disclosing statement to defense counsel, respondent at least violated spirit of statutory scheme governing discovery in criminal prosecutions. Nonetheless, where hearing judge dismissed disciplinary charge of failing to comply with law, on ground that prosecutor did not withhold items subject to disclosure, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel did not challenge dismissal on appeal, Review Department upheld dismissal. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [5]

Where respondent signed and served discovery responses and made court appearance on client's behalf while suspended, respondent violated sections 6068, subdivision (a), 6125, and 6126, regardless of whether OCTC showed respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law, because respondent acted purposefully when he created impression he was entitled to represent client. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [4a, b]

213.11 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(a) (support Constitution and laws)—Found

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

213.15 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(a) (support Constitution and laws)—Not Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479

213.20 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6068(b) (respect for courts and judges)

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b), establishes attorney's duty to maintain respect due courts of justice and judicial officers. Where respondent told court it lacked backbone; repeatedly stated respondent did not respect court or its decision; and challenged judge to place respondent in custody, respondent's statements and action demonstrated disrespect to court in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b). In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [1]

Where respondent failed to abide by judge's order to immediately step away from criminal defendant client while client was being remanded into custody, and where respondent subsequently stated to judge respondent was "embarrassed" for court, respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (b). In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [2]

213.21 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(b)

(respect for courts and judges)—Found

In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835.

213.30 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(c)—(Counsel only legal actions/defenses)

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (c), provides it is attorney's duty "[t]o counsel or maintain those actions, proceedings, or defenses only as appear . . . legal or just," except defense of person charged with public offense. Where respondent used abusive litigation tactics where he initiated and maintained multiple claims and defenses, at trial and appellate levels, which were foreclosed by legal authority, Review Department held respondent's claim that notices of appeal, briefs, and motions respondent filed did not qualify as "actions" under section 6068, subdivision (c), was meritless, and respondent was culpable of violating section 6068, subdivision (c). In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [6a,b]

Where respondent filed multiple frivolous appeals that appellate court dismissed after finding respondent's arguments had no merit and resulted from subjective bad faith, and where appellate court's findings, which were entitled to great weight, were supported by clear and convincing evidence, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(c). In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494 [4]

213.31 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(c) (counsel only legal actions/defenses) —Found

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.494

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448

Where respondent refused to dismiss defendants after learning they were not parties to contract at issue; trial court awarded sanctions against respondent; and Court of Appeal affirmed, finding respondent's action was frivolous, Court of Appeal's finding of frivolousness was entitled to strong presumption of validity, and respondent was culpable of maintaining an unjust action. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [11 a, b]

213.40 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(d)— (do not mislead courts or judges)

Attorney must act with intent to deceive to violate Business and Professions Code section 6068(d). Where no evidence established that respondent's careless review of California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 compliance declaration his attorney prepared amounted to intentional deception absent other evidence, Review Department adopted hearing judge's dismissal of section 6068(d) charge. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [4]

Where respondent did not direct assistant to make misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, but took no steps to correct record after learning of misrepresentation, respondent was not culpable of violating section 6068(d), because he did not act with specific intent to deceive tribunal. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [2a, b]

213.41 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(d)— (do not mislead courts or judges)—Found

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

Misrepresentation of fact to court for purpose of obtaining continuance violates attorney's duty not to mislead courts. For this purpose, administrative tribunal acting in quasi-judicial capacity is not distinct from court. Where respondent directed assistant to make material misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, and then took no steps to correct record despite notice that tribunal had relied on misrepresentation, respondent was culpable of intentional act of moral turpitude and of misleading tribunal, but violations were treated as single offense involving moral turpitude, and no additional weight was assigned to duplicative charge. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [3a–f]

213.45 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(d) (do not mislead courts and judges)—Not Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464

213.90 Culpability – State Bar Act – Section 6068(i) (cooperate in disciplinary proceedings)

Even though respondent was found culpable of failing to cooperate with the State Bar's pre-filing investigation of his misconduct, he was still entitled to significant mitigating credit for entering into a stipulation, after disciplinary charges were filed, which admitted to culpability on two counts and to several facts. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [3a, b]

213.91 Section 6068(i) (cooperate in disciplinary proceedings)

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

Where section 6106 moral turpitude charge for making misrepresentations to a tribunal and section 6068, subdivision (d) charge for seeking to mislead a judge were based on the same misconduct, section 6068, subdivision (d) charge dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [1]

Where respondent intentionally deceived Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (WCAB) by making misrepresentations, omitting material facts, and presenting half-truths, and allowed WCAB to take action in reliance on misrepresentations, respondent was culpable of acts of moral turpitude. WCAB's eventual awareness of true facts did not negate respondent's culpability, because misleading a court or tribunal constitutes moral turpitude whether or not respondent succeeds in perpetrating fraud, and respondent had continuing, affirmative duty to timely advise WCAB of changed circumstances affecting pending cases. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [2a-f]

214.10 Culpability — Business and Professions Code — Section 6068(k) (comply with disciplinary probation)

Probation matters do not require proof that respondent actually knew specifics of probation delinquencies, as long as respondent had notice of probation duties. Where respondent failed to schedule and attend meeting with assigned probation deputy and did not submit first quarterly report to Probation until six months after due date, despite email communications from Probation regarding probation duties, respondent willfully failed to comply with three probation conditions in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738 . [2a-d]

Substantial compliance with disciplinary probation conditions is not a defense to probation violations. Where disciplined attorney did not timely schedule initial meeting with Probation Department, and did not timely submit first two required quarterly reports, attorney was culpable of violating probation, despite his belated compliance with both requirements. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2a, b]

214.11 Section 6068(k) (comply with disciplinary probation)

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

214.30 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act – Section 6068(m) (communicate with clients)

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m), required attorney to keep clients reasonably informed of significant developments in matters with regard to which attorney has agreed to provide legal services. Where attorney failed to inform client (1) regarding insurer's denial of coverage; (2) that 2012 environmental lawsuit was filed; and (3) that attorney filed answer and third-party complaint, which attorney also dismissed, attorney failed to communicate significant developments in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [9]

Amended Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) charged assortment of actions that, taken together, alleged overreaching and breach of fiduciary duties. However, failure to communicate allegations were already alleged under more specific Business and Professions Code subsection – section 6068, subdivision (m) – in separate Amended NDC count. Before enactment of subdivision (m), which was added in 1986 and became effective in 1987, there was "common law" duty to communicate and proper to base culpability under subdivision (a). Now, improper to find violations for same facts under both subdivisions (a) and (m) of Business and Professions Code section 6068. Specific statute should be charged instead of using broader subdivision (a*). In the Matter of Isola* (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [12a,b]

Amended Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) charged assortment of actions that, taken together, alleged overreaching and breach of fiduciary duties. However, failure to communicate allegations were already alleged under more specific Business and Professions Code subsection – section 6068, subdivision (m) – in separate Amended NDC count. Before enactment of subdivision (m), which was added in 1986 and became effective in 1987, there was "common law" duty to communicate and proper to base culpability under subdivision (a). Now, improper to find violations for same facts under both subdivisions (a) and (m) of Business and Professions Code section 6068. Specific statute should be charged instead of using broader subdivision (a). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [12a,b]

Where client testified client was not aware case dismissed, and respondent's text messages to client misled client regarding respondent's ongoing work on case and settlement of matter and showed client not aware case dismissed, Review Department concluded respondent culpable of failing to keep client reasonably informed of significant developments in client's legal matter and reversed hearing judge, who credited respondent's testimony over client's and dismissed with prejudice Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m), charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [1a-e]

Notice of Disciplinary Charges must (1) cite statutes or rules attorney allegedly violated; (2) contain facts comprising violation in sufficient detail to permit preparation of defense; and (3) relate stated facts to authorities attorney allegedly violated. Where facts charged in Notice of Disciplinary Charges were very specific, charge cannot be interpreted broadly so other facts not alleged constitute misconduct; such would infringe on respondent's right to fair proceeding as respondent is entitled to adequate notice of rule or statute violated and manner respondent allegedly violated it. Review Department rejected Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent received notice that respondent's overall communication with clients was being charged. As Notice of Disciplinary Charges was narrowly drafted and was not amended to conform to proof, Review Department did not consider other allegations by Office of Chief Trial Counsel on review that respondent failed to communicate in other instances. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [3a, b]

Where respondent misrepresented case settled when it was actually dismissed, respondent's failure to inform client about dismissal was factually joined with misrepresentation respondent was working on case and getting client settlement money. Review Department therefore treated moral turpitude violation and violation of failing to inform client of significant developments as single offense involving moral turpitude for discipline purposes. No additional disciplinary weight was given to Business and Professions Code section 6068(m) violation because respondent's misconduct underlying section 6068(m) charge was factually same as misconduct underlying moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [2a, b]

Where evidence did not establish clearly and convincingly that respondent failed to communicate with client, in that client could not recall specific dates he called respondent's office, and OCTC did not present any documentary evidence of client's unsuccessful efforts to contact respondent, hearing judge correctly dismissed charge that respondent violated section 6068(m) based on failure to respond to client's telephone calls. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [3]

Where clear and convincing evidence showed respondent failed to keep client informed of discovery requests, and of court orders stemming from respondent's failure to respond to discovery, respondent was culpable of failing to keep client reasonably informed of significant developments, in violation of section 6068(m). However, where OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent's motivation for lack of communication was to cover up respondent's failure to perform competently, respondent was not culpable of act of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [4a, b]

214.31 Section 6068(m) (communicate with clients)

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

214.35 Not Found - Section 6068(m)

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

214.50 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(o) (comply with reporting requirements)

Good faith, or even ignorance of the law, is not a defense to violation of Business and Profession Code section 6068(o)(3). No requirement that Office of Chief Trial Counsel prove bad faith or that respondent have actual knowledge of violating section 6068(o)(3). Where court ordered respondent sanctioned $2,335 for being unsuccessful in opposing motion for protective order, not for failing to make discovery, and respondent knew of court's sanctions order but failed to report sanctions to State Bar, respondent willfully violated section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [2a-d]

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

Statutory duty to report sanctions to State Bar applies to sanctions issued by all administrative agencies acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity. Accordingly, where respondent failed to timely report sanctions imposed by Office of Administrative Hearings, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [8a, b]

Good faith, or even ignorance of the law, is no defense to a charged violation of statute requiring attorneys to report judicial sanctions to State Bar. Particularly where respondent did not establish that his failure to report sanctions imposed by administrative tribunal was attributable to his belief at the time that statute did not require reporting such sanctions, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [9]

214.51 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6068(o)(comply with reporting requirements)—Found

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

220 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6103 (disobedience of court order)

Business and Professions Code section 6103 provides, in pertinent part, that willful disobedience or violation of court order requiring attorney to do or forbear act connected with or in course of attorney's profession, which attorney ought in good faith do or forbear, constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Attorney willfully violates section 6103 when, despite being aware of final, binding court order, respondent knowingly chooses to violate order. Respondent asserted Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to introduce evidence that respondent's disobedience of court orders caused harm to administration of justice, but that was not relevant to defense to misconduct under Business and Professions Code section 6103. Where respondent was aware of the court orders, admitted he had not complied with them, and had made no effort to comply, there was no evidence that this conduct was "negligence," and Review Department held respondent acted willfully and was culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6103 as charged. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [5a-c]

Attorney willfully violates Business and Professions Code section 6103 when, despite being aware of final, binding court order, attorney knowingly chooses to violate order. Where respondent heard judge's oral orders to move away from criminal defendant client during client's remand into custody, and respondent failed to obey orders for several seconds when orders demanded immediate compliance, respondent willfully violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, but as same misconduct underlay section 6068, subdivision (b) violation, no additional weight assigned for section 6103 violation. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [3]

Willful disobedience or violation of court order requiring attorney to do or forbear act connected with or in course of attorney's profession, which attorney ought in good faith to do or forbear, constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Attorney acts willfully if attorney intends to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where attorney failed to pay court ordered sanctions and then appealed order's validity and lost, Review Department upheld hearing judge's culpability determination that respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6103, as respondent had actual notice of order and requirement to pay sanctions; order was final and binding for disciplinary purposes as respondent's challenge of order was exhausted; sanctions order remained in effect even though entire case was appealed; and failing to pay sanctions until over a year and a half after knowledge of obligation was unreasonable and a violation of order. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [1a-c]

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

An attorney violates section 6103 when, despite being aware of a final, binding court order, the attorney knowingly takes no action in response to the order or chooses to violate it. Where respondent was aware of motion for discovery sanctions, did not oppose it, and received notice of ruling from opposing counsel, fact that sanctions order was not formally served on respondent did not excuse his failure to comply. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [5a, b]

Superior court orders are final and binding for disciplinary purposes once review is waived or exhausted in courts of record. Where respondent never sought to stay, vacate, modify, or challenge discovery sanctions order, fact that order was not immediately appealable, and opposing party ultimately agreed to waive discovery sanctions, did not absolve respondent of culpability of failing to obey court order under section 6103. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [6]

To prove a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 based on an attorney's failure to obey court orders, OCTC must establish the attorney knew the orders were final and binding, and intended his acts or omissions. Where respondent was aware of and joined in client's tactical decision not to participate in discovery; was timely served with motions for discovery sanctions but chose not to respond or appear; was served with orders granting monetary sanctions against his client and his firm jointly and severally; and stipulated he was individually responsible for resulting obligation, respondent was obligated either to comply with orders or make formal motion or appeal explaining why he could not do so, and could not simply disregard orders, even under client's instructions. Respondent was therefore culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [1a-d]

Stipulated facts in disciplinary proceedings are binding on parties under State Bar rule 5.58(G). Where respondent stipulated that that he was obligated to pay monetary sanctions awarded against his law firm; law firm name did not indicate it was a corporation or limited liability partnership, as would be required by State Bar Rules 3.152(B) and 3.174(B); and even if it were, respondent could not thereby escape personal liability for his own professional malfeasance and still would have been required to report sanctions award against him, record and law supported respondent's stipulation, and hearing judge erred in exonerating respondent and dismissing disciplinary proceeding based on conclusion that respondent was not individually responsible for paying sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [2a, b]

When attorney has actual notice of court order, and does not object, move for reconsideration, or seek appellate review, attorney forfeits right to challenge order based on inadequate notice, and is obligated to comply with order. For due process and notice purposes, discovery sanctions orders are not distinguishable from other types of sanctions orders. Where respondent stipulated he had actual notice of orders imposing monetary discovery sanctions, and did not comply with orders, hearing judge erred in finding respondent not culpable of violating orders because he was not personally named in underlying motions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [3a-c]

For disciplinary purposes, superior court orders are final and binding once review in courts of record is waived or exhausted. Attorneys cannot wait until State Bar disciplinary proceedings commence to collaterally challenge legitimacy of superior court orders. State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction to determine validity of civil court orders. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [4a-c]

Where respondent was culpable of disobeying court orders by failing to pay monetary sanctions, payment of the sanctions was imposed as condition of respondent's disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [7]

To prove failure to obey court order, evidence must establish attorney knew what he or she was doing or not doing, and intended to act or abstain from acting. Where attorney was aware of orders requiring him to provide documentation and pay sanctions, and neither complied nor sought relief, attorney was culpable of disobeying court order, In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [4]

Where respondent represented clients before administrative tribunal, respondent's activity constituted practice of law because application of legal knowledge and technique was required. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. (5)

Scope of section 6103 is not limited to courts or constitutional administrative agencies; it enforces standards governing attorneys' conduct before all tribunals. Statutes specifying powers of Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH), and giving its administrative law judges (ALJs) authority to issue orders, contemplate that OAH should be treated as a court, and attorneys must obey its orders. Accordingly, where respondent willfully failed to comply with orders of an OAHALJ, respondent was culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr, 511. [6a-c]

Attorneys must obey a tribunal's orders unless they take steps to have them modified or vacated. Where respondent never sought relief from administrative tribunal's orders on basis of inability to comply or impossibility of compliance, Review Department rejected respondent's arguments that failure to comply was not willful, and that it would have been a waste of time to seek modification because his ability to comply was so uncertain. Fact that tribunal's orders were submitted to a board for final action also did not excuse respondent's noncompliance, where respondent never disputed finality or validity of orders, and did not seek stay of enforcement or appellate relief. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [7a-d]

When sanctions order does not specify due date, there is no bright-line test for "reasonableness" that applies to elapsed time of payment after issuance of sanctions order. Instead, timing of payment is just one factor among others to be considered. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [6]

Where considerable efforts were required by opposing counsel to collect sanctions over ten-and-a-half-month period, including constantly sending letters and emails to respondent requesting payment of sanctions, calling respondent, and, after several unsuccessful requests, filing liens, respondent's failure to pay sanctions for nearly 11 months was not reasonable and respondent was culpable of violating section 6103. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [7]

220.01 Substantive Issues—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6103, clause 1 (disobedience of court order)—Found

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

220.20 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6103.5

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

220.30 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6104 (appearing without authority)

Willfully or corruptly and without authority appearing as attorney for party to action or proceeding constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where attorney credibly testified possible litigation was discussed at meeting with family representative, who retained attorney at that meeting to represent him and his family in matters related to environmental remediation, and family was sued for remediation liability, attorney believed he had authority to act as family representative's attorney in litigation. Although attorney should have updated family representative on case status, this is not evidence of lack of authority. Attorney's failure to communicate did not limit authority he believed in good faith he had obtained from family representative to act as family's attorney. Accordingly, Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to prove attorney corruptly or willfully appeared without authority in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6104 and hearing judge's culpability finding was reversed. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [5a-c]

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

220.35 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6104 (appearing with authority) – Not found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

220.40 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6105

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

220.50 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6103.7

Mistake of law made in good faith may be defense to Business and Professions Code section 6067 charge, as attorneys are not infallible and cannot be expected to know all law. But section 6103.7 charge is different, as it does not pertain to attorney performance and knowledge of law. Prohibition from threatening immigration status in section 6103.7 establishes a clear ethical standard for conduct that attorneys must uphold. Only willful breach is required for discipline, not knowledge of rule or intent to violate it. Where respondent mentioned illegal immigration status of opposing party in letters and telephone calls to opposing counsel and in civil case management statement, those constituted threats in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103.7, and respondent's purported ignorance of section 6103.7 was not a defense. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [3a-d]

221 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty)

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Willful misappropriation of client's funds involves moral turpitude. Attorney who knowingly converts client funds for attorney's own purpose violates section 6106. When account balance drops below amount attorney required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and that attorney was entitled to withdraw funds. Where letter agreement drafted by respondent contained acknowledgement and receipt signed by respondent which clearly stated respondent had placed non-client's $50,000 security deposit in CTA and funds were to be released only upon non-client's written consent; respondent acted intentionally by depositing $50,000 security fund check into business account instead of client trust account (CTA); respondent immediately began making personal withdrawals of funds; account dipped below $50,000; respondent knew at time respondent deposited money that respondent had agreed to keep funds in CTA, yet failed to do so; and respondent knew respondent was not authorized to use money for personal expenses, Review Department held respondent intentionally misappropriated $50,000 security deposit in violation of section 6106. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [8a-c]

Where respondent deposited $75,000 for liquor license from non-client into business account rather than client trust account (CTA); failed to maintain that amount; failed to rebut presumption of misappropriation as business account dipped below $75,000; and respondent used money when respondent was not entitled to do so, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentional misappropriation of liquor license funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. As respondent deposited both security deposit funds and liquor license funds in business account instead of CTA, conduct not one-time mistake but repeated practice. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [10]

Where respondent received non-client's check for furniture, fixtures, and equipment (FF&E) and negotiated check, but no evidence respondent deposited and kept funds in client trust account (CTA) as respondent had agreed to do; respondent could not rebut presumption that funds were misappropriated; and repayment of FF&E funds came from CTA respondent opened over year later and funds were transferred into CTA from non-CTA, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentionally misappropriating funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [11a, b]

Where respondent correctly believed that trust of which she was trustee gave her authority to lend trust money to herself; respondent informed trust beneficiary of her intent to make loan and received no response; and respondent secured loan with deed of trust on respondent's property, respondent's actions were consistent with her belief she had authority to make loan, and inconsistent with intention to act with moral turpitude, dishonesty, or a correct motive. Finding that respondent intended to enter into loan transaction was incompatible with finding that respondent planned to misappropriate funds. Accordingly, facts did not show respondent misappropriated funds in such a way as to violate section 6106, and Review Department reversed finding of culpability and dismissed charge with prejudice. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [7a-d]

Section 6106 applies to misrepresentations and concealment of material facts. Mere negligence in making a representation does not violate section 6106. Where respondent trustee's representations to counsel for trust beneficiary were consistent with respondent's own honestly held beliefs and understanding, and respondent did not attempt to conceal her actions or to mislead beneficiary's counsel, OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent made misrepresentations, and Review Department therefore dismissed section 6106 charge with prejudice. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [9a-e]

Where clear and convincing evidence showed respondent failed to keep client informed of discovery requests, and of court orders stemming from respondent's failure to respond to discovery, respondent was culpable of failing to keep client reasonably informed of significant developments, in violation of section 6068(m). However, where OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent's motivation for lack of communication was to cover up respondent's failure to perform competently, respondent was not culpable of act of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [4a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, committed act of moral turpitude by improperly failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel in order to secure strategic trial advantage, Review Department deferred to hearing judge's determination that respondent's alternative explanation of her conduct lacked credibility. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

As officers of the court and representatives of the People, prosecutors must meet standards of candor and impartiality not demanded of other attorneys, and are held to an elevated standard of conduct. Respondent, a prosecutor, acted egregiously and outrageously, and committed an act of moral turpitude, when he intentionally altered a criminal defendant's statement to add a false confession, thereby prejudicing the defendant's right to fair trial, compromising the case, and bringing about the dismissal of the criminal charges. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479 [a - c]

Where charge against respondent prosecutor of failing to comply with Constitution and laws, based on respondent's willful violation of criminal defendant's constitutional rights, overlapped with moral turpitude charge based on same misconduct, charge of failing to comply with law was properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [4]

Where section 6106 moral turpitude charge for making misrepresentations to a tribunal and section 6068, subdivision (d) charge for seeking to mislead a judge were based on the same misconduct, section 6068, subdivision (d) charge dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [1]

Where respondent intentionally deceived Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (WCAB) by making misrepresentations, omitting material facts, and presenting half-truths, and allowed WCAB to take action in reliance on misrepresentations, respondent was culpable of acts of moral turpitude. WCAB's eventual awareness of true facts did not negate respondent's culpability, because misleading a court or tribunal constitutes moral turpitude whether or not respondent succeeds in perpetrating fraud, and respondent had continuing, affirmative duty to timely advise WCAB of changed circumstances affecting pending cases. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [2a-f]

Lack of clarity in hearing judge's decision, as to whether moral turpitude culpability finding was based on intentional or grossly negligent conduct, was problematic for purposes of ascertaining seriousness of misconduct and assessing corresponding discipline. Review Department clarified, based on misrepresentations in documents respondent drafted and filed, that respondent intentionally deceived tribunal. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [3]

Where respondent was unaware of his suspension until last minute of three-minute telephonic case management conference and then provided three responses to judge's instructions during remaining very brief period (no more than one minute) and under circumstances where respondent did not have reasonable opportunity to withdraw, Review Department upheld hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude because OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent practiced law with requisite level of intent, guilty knowledge, or, at a minimum, gross negligence. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [5a-d]

Where respondent knew he was suspended at time he entered into settlement negotiations, respondent was culpable of act of moral turpitude, even though, prior to attempting to settle case, respondent advised opposing counsel of respondent's suspension and contacted State Bar's Ethics Department. Contacting State Bar employee for advice is not a defense to a violation of rules or statutes governing attorney's professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [9]

Where respondent appeared at client's deposition two days after he learned of his suspension for failure to pay child support, respondent's knowing unauthorized practice of law constituted act of moral turpitude. Respondent was not entitled to assume he had been reinstated after becoming current on child support, because respondent knew his status could be confirmed on State Bar's website. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [10a, b]

Respondent committed an act of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106 by practicing law while on inactive status. Although OCTC did not prove respondent knew he had been enrolled inactive, record established that respondent knew there was a high probability this would occur. Moreover, by changing his membership address, respondent purposely avoiding receiving notice from the State Bar regarding his membership status. He also failed to check his membership status before filing documents and appearing in court. Respondent's willful blindness was tantamount to having actual knowledge that he was ineligible to practice law. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr, 427. [2a, b]

221.10 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty)—Found

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

221.11 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability —State Bar Act Violations — Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty) —Found —Deliberate/dishonesty/fraud

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Willful misappropriation of client's funds involves moral turpitude. Attorney who knowingly converts client funds for attorney's own purpose violates section 6106. When account balance drops below amount attorney required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and that attorney was entitled to withdraw funds. Where letter agreement drafted by respondent contained acknowledgement and receipt signed by respondent which clearly stated respondent had placed non-client's $50,000 security deposit in CTA and funds were to be released only upon non-client's written consent; respondent acted intentionally by depositing $50,000 security fund check into business account instead of client trust account (CTA); respondent immediately began making personal withdrawals of funds; account dipped below $50,000; respondent knew at time respondent deposited money that respondent had agreed to keep funds in CTA, yet failed to do so; and respondent knew respondent was not authorized to use money for personal expenses, Review Department held respondent intentionally misappropriated $50,000 security deposit in violation of section 6106. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [8a-c]

Where Notice of Disciplinary Charges alleged respondent made misrepresentations in letter regarding holding funds from non-client business in client trust account (CTA), Review Department rejected respondent's argument that there was no fiduciary duty to non-client business as non-client testified that non-client did not believe respondent agreed to act as fiduciary for non-client or non-client's business. What non-client believed about respondent's duties did not supersede duties respondent had under law as escrow holder and fiduciary. Furthermore, whether respondent was fiduciary to non-client business was not relevant to moral turpitude charge, as section 6106 prohibits any act of attorney dishonesty, whether committed while acting as attorney or not. Review Department held respondent culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106, as respondent's deception about holding money in CTA rose to moral turpitude as misrepresentation was material and intentional. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [13a, b]

Where respondent misrepresented case settled when it was actually dismissed, respondent's failure to inform client about dismissal was factually joined with misrepresentation respondent was working on case and getting client settlement money. Review Department therefore treated moral turpitude violation and violation of failing to inform client of significant developments as single offense involving moral turpitude for discipline purposes. No additional disciplinary weight was given to Business and Professions Code section 6068(m) violation because respondent's misconduct underlying section 6068(m) charge was factually same as misconduct underlying moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [2a, b]

Attorney's commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption is cause for disbarment whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise. Attorney who accepts responsibility of a fiduciary nature is held to high standards of legal profession whether or not acting in capacity of attorney. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [4]

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

Where respondent's marketing materials and sales representatives indicated to potential clients that a lawyer would be working on their behalf, but respondent in fact delegated loan modification work to non-attorney employees, and respondent knew representations made to clients were false, respondent committed an act of moral turpitude despite his professed honest belief that what he was doing was legal. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [10a, b]

Respondent committed misconduct involving moral turpitude by engaging in operation to collect illegal advance attorney fees and exploit vulnerable homeowners by using an aggressive marketing scheme under which clients were falsely informed that they were hiring a lawyer to sue banks, and misled to believe operation was affiliated with government entities, while respondent changed name of operation and its websites several times to distance himself from past complaints, and failed to identify himself on some websites as attorney responsible for solicitations. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [11]

Misrepresentation of fact to court for purpose of obtaining continuance violates attorney's duty not to mislead courts. For this purpose, administrative tribunal acting in quasi-judicial capacity is not distinct from court. Where respondent directed assistant to make material misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, and then took no steps to correct record despite notice that tribunal had relied on misrepresentation, respondent was culpable of intentional act of moral turpitude and of misleading tribunal, but violations were treated as single offense involving moral turpitude, and no additional weight was assigned to duplicative charge. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [3a-f]

Where respondent misused her authority and discretion as trustee of her family's trust, intentionally violated numerous fiduciary duties set forth in the Probate Code by means infused with dishonesty and/or concealment, made repeated misrepresentations to the court and third parties in documents filed which falsely represented her as trustee after she had been removed, and intentionally violated court orders, respondent was culpable of multiple intentional acts of moral turpitude. Respondent was also culpable of violating section 6068(a), but Review Department assigned these violations no additional weight because they were duplicative of section 6106 violations. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494, [3a, b]

As officers of the court and representatives of the People, prosecutors must meet standards of candor and impartiality not demanded of other attorneys, and are held to an elevated standard of conduct. Respondent, a prosecutor, acted egregiously and outrageously, and committed an act of moral turpitude, when he intentionally altered a criminal defendant's statement to add a false confession, thereby prejudicing the defendant's right to fair trial, compromising the case, and bringing about the dismissal of the criminal charges. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [2a-c]

Where Review Department found that respondent acted intentionally in committing act of moral turpitude, it declined to give intentionality additional weight to aggravation. Factors giving rise to culpability for moral turpitude should not be given double weight by considering them again in aggravation. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [7]

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464

221.12 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty)—Found—Gross negligence

Where respondent, who had not filed notices of suspension with courts and had not provided appropriate certified notices of suspension to opposing counsel or unrepresented parties in pending cases as required by California Rules of Court, rule 9.20, represented in rule 9.20 compliance declaration that respondent had notified all opposing counsel of suspension by certified or registered mail, return receipt requested, filed copy of suspension notice with courts where cases pending, and provided notice of suspension to clients by certified or registered mail, respondent's statements in rule 9.20 compliance declaration were grossly negligent misrepresentations amounting to moral turpitude. Respondent had duty to review compliance declaration pre-filled-out by his attorney for accuracy before signing it under penalty of perjury but failed to do so. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [3a-b]

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, was obligated to disclose evidence to defense counsel, but failed to disclose it based on unreasonable belief, contrary to clear language of applicable statute, that disclosure was not required, respondent was culpable of committing act of moral turpitude through gross negligence. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.[2]

Moral turpitude includes false or misleading statements to a court or tribunal. Actual intent to deceive is not necessary; gross negligence in creating a false impression is sufficient. Willful deceit violates section 6106. Where respondent took no steps to correct record despite notice that assistant made misrepresentation to administrative tribunal on respondent's behalf, on which tribunal had relied, respondent ratified assistant's misrepresentation, and thus was culpable of moral turpitude by gross negligence. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [1a-c]

221.19 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty) —Found —Other factual basis

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Willful misappropriation of client's funds involves moral turpitude. Attorney who knowingly converts client funds for attorney's own purpose violates section 6106. When account balance drops below amount attorney required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and that attorney was entitled to withdraw funds. Where letter agreement drafted by respondent contained acknowledgement and receipt signed by respondent which clearly stated respondent had placed non-client's $50,000 security deposit in CTA and funds were to be released only upon non-client's written consent; respondent acted intentionally by depositing $50,000 security fund check into business account instead of client trust account (CTA); respondent immediately began making personal withdrawals of funds; account dipped below $50,000; respondent knew at time respondent deposited money that respondent had agreed to keep funds in CTA, yet failed to do so; and respondent knew respondent was not authorized to use money for personal expenses, Review Department held respondent intentionally misappropriated $50,000 security deposit in violation of section 6106. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [8a-c]

Where respondent deposited $75,000 for liquor license from non-client into business account rather than client trust account (CTA); failed to maintain that amount; failed to rebut presumption of misappropriation as business account dipped below $75,000; and respondent used money when respondent was not entitled to do so, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentional misappropriation of liquor license funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. As respondent deposited both security deposit funds and liquor license funds in business account instead of CTA, conduct not one-time mistake but repeated practice. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [10]

Where respondent received non-client's check for furniture, fixtures, and equipment (FF&E) and negotiated check, but no evidence respondent deposited and kept funds in client trust account (CTA) as respondent had agreed to do; respondent could not rebut presumption that funds were misappropriated; and repayment of FF&E funds came from CTA respondent opened over year later and funds were transferred into CTA from non-CTA, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentionally misappropriating funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [11a, b]

Attorney's practice of issuing insufficiently funded checks involves moral turpitude. Where respondent issued three checks when there were insufficient funds in bank accounts to cover checks, resulting in two checks returned for insufficient funds, respondent culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [14a, b]

Where respondent had stipulated in earlier disciplinary proceeding that he was unreasonable in believing he could represent party in arbitration while suspended, respondent's subsequent practice of law in three arbitration matters while on notice of his suspension was an intentional act of moral turpitude, not merely grossly negligent. Finding of moral turpitude did not violate respondent's due process rights, because earlier stipulation put respondent on notice that continuing to appear for parties in arbitration while suspended could involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [6a-d]

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427

221.50 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally—Culpability—State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty) —Not Found

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Where respondent believed (1) claim was issued by governmental agency targeting clients, and (2) that even if clients had not already been targeted by governmental agency, they would be soon, it was reasonable to believe attorney simply mistaken regarding existence of governmental claim against clients, and no clear and convincing evidence supported conclusion attorney made material misrepresentation amounting to either grossly negligent or intentional moral turpitude when he wrote letter to insurance company stating governmental entity was implicated in matter. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [4a-d]

Where attorney reasonably believed he had authority to represent family representative in environmental remediation; attorney understood from meeting with family representative that he was authorized to try to ensure remediation was paid for without cost to family; and possibility of lawsuit to be filed against family to trigger coverage from insurer was probable outcome discussed at meeting, attorney did not commit act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption within meaning of Business and Professions Code section 6106 by claiming he represented family representative on four separate occasions in two environmental lawsuits. Review department reversed hearing judge's culpability finding based on finding attorney unreasonably believed he had authority to represent family representative in litigation and committed misrepresentation to court through gross negligence by appearing on family representative's behalf. Even if attorney was mistaken by authority to act – which review department did not conclude – attorney's actions would not rise to grossly negligent moral turpitude as attorney sincerely believed conduct was justified. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [6a, b]

Where attorney settled third-party complaint involving claims related to insurer's duty to pay defense costs for environmental lawsuit, Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to show attorney's actions amounted to settlement of claim without authority, involving moral turpitude, as it was not settlement agreement and did not bind parties; rather, it was interim agreement regarding payment of attorney fees that could be further negotiated and finalized later; there was no enforceable settlement agreement affecting attorney's clients; ultimate agreement regarding insurer's liability had not been reached; and attorney's actions showed attorney was furthering client's interests by trying to find money to fund attorney's representation. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [7]

Where attorney stated in deposition that he estimated he had "five to ten" telephone conversations with client after meeting, but attorney actually had not communicated with client at all during relevant period, deposition statement was not intentional or grossly negligent misrepresentation in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106, as attorney had not reviewed case file before appearing at deposition; attorney asserted testimony was based on attorney's experience with these cases generally – not specific memory of speaking with client; and at trial, attorney characterized statement as "guess" at time of deposition, which attorney later corrected in interview with New Jersey Office of Attorney Ethics. Record therefore supported reasonable inference attorney was simply mistaken when attorney testified, and testimony reflected attorney's recollection of case at that time. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [8]

Where attorney and opposing counsel credibly testified multiple versions of agreement were used, accidentally sending attorney for client in related matter wrong version which incorrectly stated insurer did not object to settlement agreement, and attorney did not notice oversight and maintained not aware version being provided contained erroneous statement, no violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106 for misrepresentation. Conduct simple negligence and not disciplinable offense. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [14a, b]

Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Where one email to client's attorney in related matter did not mention insurer at all; second email summarized attorney's report to judge at settlement status conference, disclosed that insurer had been provided copy of proposed settlement agreement, and did not mention insurer's response; attorney believed settlement agreement did not contain insurer's position, as attorney had not carefully read drafts with erroneous statement; and attorney had no indication that would lead attorney to believe that client's attorney in related matter thought insurer had not objected, it could not be determined attorney's omission in email to client's attorney in related matter constituted intentional misrepresentation, especially as one email was only summary of status conference and attorney asserted insurer's position was not discussed at status conference. Reasonable factual interpretation is attorney was unaware client's attorney in related matter believed insurer had not objected. Attorney therefore had no reason to mention insurer's objection in emails. Review department therefore held OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that attorney made misrepresentations to client's attorney in related matter regarding insurer's objection to settlement agreement by omitting this fact from emails. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [15]

When trust account balance drops below amount attorney is required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and attorney entitled to withdraw funds. Moral turpitude can be found when attorney's actions constitute gross carelessness and negligence violating fiduciary duty to client. Where balance in respondent's trust account fell below amount respondent required to hold for client on two occasions over three day period, which respondent explained was due to careless bookkeeping, and after realizing discrepancy, respondent deposited personal funds to cover discrepancy, misconduct did not rise to level of misappropriation by gross negligence as it was isolated, aberrational occurrence and respondent quickly restored funds. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [6a-b]

Section 6106 applies to misrepresentations and concealment of material facts. Mere negligence in making a representation does not violate section 6106. Where respondent trustee's representations to counsel for trust beneficiary were consistent with respondent's own honestly held beliefs and understanding, and respondent did not attempt to conceal her actions or to mislead beneficiary's counsel, OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent made misrepresentations, and Review Department therefore dismissed section 6106 charge with prejudice. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [9a-e]

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448

222.20 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106.3 (violation of Civil Code § 2944.6 or 2944.7 re mortgage loan modifications)

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [8]

Where disciplinary statute defined violation of specified Civil Code sections as constituting attorney misconduct, and statute was amended to delete reference to one of such Civil Code sections, pre-amendment version of statute applied to misconduct that respondent committed prior to effective date of amendment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [1a, b]

Civil Code section 2944.7 prohibits any person engaged in loan modifications from collecting any advance fees in advance of completing all contracted loan modification services, and an attorney's violation of the statute constitutes a disciplinable offense under section 6106.3. Section 2944.7 is not ambiguous, and does not permit an exception for attorneys who attempt to obtain loan modifications, but plan to file litigation if a modification request is denied. Where respondent stipulated that clients retained his services to keep their homes and properties; he discussed loan modification with them as an available remedy, along with litigation if loan modification applications were denied; he submitted loan modification applications for them and negotiated with their lenders; and he collected fees from them before completing all loan modification services, respondent was culpable of violating section 6106.3, even if the purpose of his litigation services was not just to obtain loan modifications. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [2a-h]

California's statutory Homeowner Bill of Rights, which provides remedies for home mortgage borrowers including recovery of attorney fees against lenders, does not conflict with statutes prohibiting attorneys in loan modification proceedings from collecting any advance attorney fees, and does not permit attorneys to collect otherwise prohibited advance fees in order to prepare to litigate against a lender as a means to leverage a loan modification. . In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [3a, b]

Where respondent was the owner and sole supervising attorney of a firm, respondent owed non-delegable fiduciary duty to each client accepted and could not avoid culpability by shifting responsibility onto employees. Accordingly, where respondent's firm took over loan modification matter, and respondent's employees then collected fees before performing services, respondent was culpable of violating statute precluding collection of advance fees in loan modification matters. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct Rptr. 437. [2a-c]

Where record, including client's credible testimony, indicated that client entered into fee agreement for sole purpose of securing loan modification or forbearance, litigation services performed by respondent were ancillary to ultimate purpose of loan modification. Accordingly, all services encompassed within fee agreement were subject to provision of Civil Code section 2944.7 precluding collection of fees prior to rendition of services. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [4a-c]

Where Review Department found that respondent acted intentionally in committing act of moral turpitude, it declined to give intentionality additional weight to aggravation. Factors giving rise to culpability for moral turpitude should not be given double weight by considering them again in aggravation. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [7]

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464 **.

222.21 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6106.3 (violation of Civil Code § 2944.6 or 2944.7 re mortgage loan modifications)—Found

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437

222.90 State Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – State Bar Act Violations – Section 6106.9

Knowledge of the violated provision is not required for violation of clear-cut professional responsibilities in Business and Professions Code (e.g., sections 6068(o)(3) [duty to report to State Bar imposition of judicial sanctions], 6103 [duty to obey court orders], 6103.5 [requirement that attorney communicate settlement offer], 6104 [attorney cannot appear without authority], 6105 [lending name to person who is not attorney], and 6106.9 [sexual relations between attorney and client].) In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [5a-b]

230 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6125 (practice of law while not active member)

The definition of law practice is largely derived from case law, and includes representation of others in court proceedings, legal advice and counsel, and preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured, regardless of whether a court proceeding is pending. Even when services may be performed by non-lawyers, they are not non-legal activities if a lawyer performs them. Moreover, lawyers acting in any capacity must conform to professional standards, including the prohibition against practicing law while suspended. Where respondent, while suspended from practice, made legal demands on opposing parties' counsel in arbitration proceedings, and briefed and advocated numerous legal issues, respondent was unquestionably engaged in law practice. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [1a-d]

Code of Civil Procedure sections permitting persons not otherwise entitled to practice law in California to represent parties to certain types of arbitrations did not authorize suspended California attorney to practice law by representing party to arbitration. Statute permitting out-of-state attorneys in good standing to represent parties in arbitrations could not be construed to permit suspended California attorneys to practice law in violation of section 6126. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [2a, b]

Where respondent was unaware of his suspension until last minute of three-minute telephonic case management conference and then provided three responses to judge's instructions during remaining very brief period (no more than one minute) and under circumstances where respondent did not have reasonable opportunity to withdraw, Review Department upheld hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude because OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent practiced law with requisite level of intent, guilty knowledge, or, at a minimum, gross negligence. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [5a-d]

Where respondent, after learning that he was suspended from practice, attempted to negotiate settlement of clients' case and appeared for a client at a deposition, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(a) by his unauthorized practice of law, but this violation was given no weight, because respondent was also found culpable of moral turpitude based on same facts. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr. 448 [8a-c]

Where respondent appeared at client's deposition two days after he learned of his suspension for failure to pay child support, respondent's knowing unauthorized practice of law constituted act of moral turpitude. Respondent was not entitled to assume he had been reinstated after becoming current on child support, because respondent knew his status could be confirmed on State Bar's website. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [10a, b]

Respondent committed unauthorized practice of law in violation of sections 6068(a), 6125, and 6126 by filing and serving court documents and making court appearances on his client's behalf while not an active member of the State Bar. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [1]

230.01 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6125 (practice of law while not active member)—Found

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427

231 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6126 (unauthorized practice —misdemeanor)

The definition of law practice is largely derived from case law, and includes representation of others in court proceedings, legal advice and counsel, and preparation of legal instruments and contracts by which legal rights are secured, regardless of whether a court proceeding is pending. Even when services may be performed by non-lawyers, they are not non-legal activities if a lawyer performs them. Moreover, lawyers acting in any capacity must conform to professional standards, including the prohibition against practicing law while suspended. Where respondent, while suspended from practice, made legal demands on opposing parties' counsel in arbitration proceedings, and briefed and advocated numerous legal issues, respondent was unquestionably engaged in law practice. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [1a-d]

Code of Civil Procedure sections permitting persons not otherwise entitled to practice law in California to represent parties to certain types of arbitrations did not authorize suspended California attorney to practice law by representing party to arbitration. Statute permitting out-of-state attorneys in good standing to represent parties in arbitrations could not be construed to permit suspended California attorneys to practice law in violation of section 6126. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [2a, b]

Where respondent practiced law while suspended for non-payment of child support, OCTC was not required to establish that respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law in order to prove respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126. It was sufficient to prove respondent's conduct was willful. Under standard 2.10(b), knowledge is simply a factor in determining degree of discipline. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [3a, b]

Where respondent signed and served discovery responses and made court appearance on client's behalf while suspended, respondent violated sections 6068, subdivision (a), 6125, and 6126, regardless of whether OCTC showed respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law, because respondent acted purposefully when he created impression he was entitled to represent client. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [4a, b]

Where respondent was unaware of his suspension until last minute of three-minute telephonic case management conference and then provided three responses to judge's instructions during remaining very brief period (no more than one minute) and under circumstances where respondent did not have reasonable opportunity to withdraw, Review Department upheld hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude because OCTC did not present clear and convincing evidence that respondent practiced law with requisite level of intent, guilty knowledge, or, at a minimum, gross negligence. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [5a-d]

Where respondent, after learning that he was suspended from practice, attempted to negotiate settlement of clients' case and appeared for a client at a deposition, respondent was culpable of violating section 6068(a) by his unauthorized practice of law, but this violation was given no weight, because respondent was also found culpable of moral turpitude based on same facts. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal State Bar Ct Rptr. 448. [8a-c]

Where respondent appeared at client's deposition two days after he learned of his suspension for failure to pay child support, respondent's knowing unauthorized practice of law constituted act of moral turpitude. Respondent was not entitled to assume he had been reinstated after becoming current on child support, because respondent knew his status could be confirmed on State Bar's website. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [10a, b]

Respondent committed unauthorized practice of law in violation of sections 6068(a), 6125, and 6126 by filing and serving court documents and making court appearances on his client's behalf while not an active member of the State Bar. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [1]

231.01 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6126 (unauthorized practice—misdemeanor)—Found

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct, Rptr. 448

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 42

252.20 State Bar Act Violations—Section 6126 (unauthorized practice—misdemeanor)—Found

Even when a service may be performed by non-lawyers, when such services are rendered by an attorney or in an attorney's office, they constitute the practice of law. Where customers of loan modification business jointly operated by respondent and non-lawyer were told they were receiving attorney services, business constituted practice of law. Accordingly, respondent was culpable of forming a partnership with a non-lawyer. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [3a, b]

A partnership is an association of two or more persons to carry on as co-owners of a business for profit, whether or not the persons intend to form a partnership. Where respondent entered into agreement with non-lawyer to conduct business selling loan modification services to clients; non-lawyer's efforts were critical part of operation; respondent and non-lawyer carried out business as common enterprise; and business constituted practice of law, respondent was culpable of forming a partnership with a non-lawyer. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [4a, b]

252.21 Rule 1-310 (Law partnership with non-lawyer) -- Found

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

252.30 Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – Sharing fee with non-lawyer

Where respondent shared revenue from advance attorney fees collected by loan modification services business with non-lawyer partner, and partner then paid sales representatives commissions out of partner's share of revenue, respondent was culpable of violating rule prohibiting sharing legal fees with a non-lawyer. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [5a, b]

252.31 Rule 1-320(A) (Sharing fee with non-lawyer) -- Found

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

253.10 Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – False/misleading communication

Business and Professions Code section allowing any person to file complaint with State Bar for false, misleading, or deceptive legal advertising, and allowing State Bar to require attorney to withdraw advertising on 72 hours' notice if such complaint is supported by substantial evidence, is completely separate from attorneys' duty under Rules of Professional Conduct not to use deceptive or misleading advertising. Accordingly, respondent who employed misleading advertising was properly found culpable of violating Rules of Professional Conduct even though no such complaint was filed, and State Bar did not give him 72 hours' notice to withdraw advertising. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [7]

Where respondent changed the name and website of his loan modification services operation numerous times to mislead public; used same client testimonials on different websites; failed to identify himself as attorney responsible for communications or solicitations; and mailed solicitations implying falsely that operation was affiliated with government entities, respondent was culpable of violating rule prohibiting attorneys from sending false, deceptive, or misleading communications or solicitations. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [6a, b]

253.11 Rule 1-400(D)(2) (False/misleading communication)

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

270.31 Incompetence (RPC 3-110(A))

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

270.35 Incompetence (RPC 3-110(A)) – Not Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

271.01 Malicious/frivolous litigation (RPC 3-200(B)) – Found

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

273 Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct – Rule 3-300

Attorney who is trustee of trust must comply with Rules of Professional Conduct as well as directives of trust instrument. Attorney entering into business transaction arising from attorney's duties as trustee must comply with rule 3-300. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [1]

Trustee of revocable trust owes fiduciary duty to settlor of trust. When settlor has become incompetent, trustee's fiduciary duty is to beneficiaries, and if trustee is an attorney, she is required to treat beneficiaries as clients for purposes of rule 3-300. Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed funds from trust whose settlor was incompetent, respondent violated rule 3-300 by failing to provide beneficiaries with written description of loan terms; failing to tell them they could seek advice of independent attorney; and failing to obtain their written consent to loan terms. Given these failures to comply with rule 3-300, respondent was culpable even if terms of loan were fair and reasonable. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [3a-c]

Probate Code section 16004 applies to fiduciary relationship between attorney and client, and is statutory complement to rule 3-300. Probate Code establishes rebuttable presumption that trustee has violated fiduciary duties when trustee obtains advantage from beneficiary in transaction between them. When attorney trustee enters into transaction with trust, transaction will be set aside unless attorney can show that beneficiaries had full knowledge of facts connected with transaction and fully understood its effect. Where respondent, as trustee, obtained loan from trust which benefited her, and did not fully inform beneficiaries of terms or risks of loan transaction, respondent violated her duties under Probate Code, and thereby violated section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [5a, b]

Where same acts of misconduct by respondent violated both section 6068(a) and rule 3-300, hearing judge erred by dismissing section 6068(a) charge with prejudice. Better approach was to find both violations, but assign duplicative violation no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [6]

273.01 Culpability Found, Rule 3-300

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

273.05 Improper transaction with client

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

273.30 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations – Conflicts of interest (RPC 1.7 (except 1.7(c)(2)) & 1.9; 1989 RPC 3-310; 1975 RPC 4-101 & 5-102)

Former rule 3-310(C)(1) of Rules of Professional Conduct provides that attorney shall not, without informed written consent of each client, accept representation of more than one client in matter in which interests of clients potentially conflict. Where respondent represented two defendants in same lawsuit where damages were sought against both clients, respondent should have anticipated possible indemnity issues; thus, respondent's failure to inform clients about any potential conflicts and failure to obtain clients' informed written consent to representation was violation of former rule 3-310(C)(1). In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [10a-b]

273.35 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations – Conflicts of interest – Not Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

275.30 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – Failure to communicate settlement offer

Rule 3-510 requires attorney to promptly communicate to client all written settlement offers, regardless of significance or whether binding under contract law. Where attorney did not communicate written settlement offers to client or client's attorney in related matter, but rather waited until settlement agreement was ready for signature before sending to client's attorney to share with client, attorney violated rule 3-510 of the former California Rules of Professional Conduct by failing to communicate settlement offers. While attorney reported significant settlement developments to clients' insurer, insurer was not attorney's client. Attorney was required to inform client of written offer regardless of whether it was significant or likely to be accepted. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [13a, b]

275.31 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – Failure to communicate settlement offer – Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

277.20 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – Prejudicial withdrawal

Where respondent did not take any action on clients' case after hearing where case dismissed and did not tell clients respondent had stopped working on matter, but more than year after hearing told client respondent was working on setting aside dismissal, respondent's failure to take any action resulted in constructive termination of employment. As respondent failed to give notice to clients that respondent was no longer working on case, respondent was culpable of violating former rule 3-700(A)(2). In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [4a, b]

277.21 Prejudicial withdrawal (RPC 3-700(A)(2))

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

277.60 Culpability – Rules of Professional Conduct Violations – Failure to refund unearned fees

Where respondent spent 50-60 hours working on a client's case; OCTC did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that there were outstanding unearned fees that respondent failed to refund; and charge of failure to refund unearned fees in that case was dismissed with prejudice, Review Department did not recommend that respondent be required to make restitution to that client. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [6]

277.61 Failure to refund unearned fees – Found

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

277.65 Failure to refund unearned fees – Not Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

280 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations – Trust account/commingling

Attorney can create fiduciary relationship with non-client when attorney receives money on behalf of non-client. Attorney must then comply with same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if attorney-client relationship existed. Attorney who breached fiduciary duties that would justify discipline if there was attorney-client relationship may be disciplined for such misconduct. Where respondent agreed to hold money from non-client for lease and keep it in client trust account (CTA) until appropriate to release it to proper parties, but failed to do so, respondent violated his fiduciary duties to non-client and violated former rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct. But Review Department assigned no additional weight in discipline as culpability based on same facts underlying Business and Professions Code section 6106 violation. Review Department rejected respondent's argument there was no written agreement regarding $50,000 security deposit's use at time of alleged misconduct, as conduct of parties, when viewed in light of later letter agreement, was strong evidence respondent was to keep security deposit in CTA. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [9a-c]

Former Rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct provides, in part, that client funds held by attorney must be deposited in client trust account and maintained until amount owed to client is settled. Where respondent's client trust account dipped $4,098.97 below amount respondent was to hold in trust for client, respondent violated former rule 4-100(A) by failing to maintain $37,617.09 in client trust account on behalf of client. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [8]

Former rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct prohibits attorneys from commingling personal funds with client funds held in trust account. Ignorance of rules governing client trust accounts is no defense to commingling charge. Where personal loan funds were wired directly into respondent's client trust account, and respondent repaid loan with check from client trust account, respondent was culpable of willful violation of former rule 4-100(A), even if respondent believed at time that payment could be made from client trust account. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [11]

An improper reason for depositing non-client funds in client trust account is not required to establish culpability for commingling. Where respondent deposited four checks from his business venture into his client trust account, respondent commingled non-client funds in his client trust account in violation of former rule 4-100(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [12a-b]

Former rule 4-100(A) absolutely bars use of trust account for personal purposes, even if client funds are not on deposit. Where respondent deposited personal funds in, and paid personal expenses from, client trust account, respondent was culpable of willful violations of former rule 4-100(A), even though no client funds were in trust account. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [1a, b]

Language of former rule 4-100(A) is explicit that personal funds cannot be deposited into client trust account. Where respondent interpreted language of rule to permit respondent to deposit personal funds in client trust account that held no client funds; interpretation was unreasonable given entire language of rule; and respondent did not research case law after receiving letters from State Bar regarding NSF checks and containing copy of former rule 4-100, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that language of rule and case law failed to give adequate notice that using client trust account to hold and disburse personal funds was improper even though account never held client funds. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [3]

Good faith is not defense to commingling charge. Even if respondent had good faith belief that respondent was not violating rule 4-100(A) in depositing personal funds in, and paying personal expenses from, client trust account that held no client funds, good faith belief does not excuse culpability. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [4]

An attorney is required in all circumstances to properly handle a client's settlement. Where respondent received settlement check made out jointly to respondent, client, and statutory lienholder, and respondent did not deposit check for three years due to respondent's failure to obtain authorization from lienholder, and did not pay client's share of settlement to client for over two years, respondent was culpable of violating rule 4-100(A), requiring lawyers to deposit funds received for benefit of clients into client trust account, and rule 4-100(B)(4), requiring lawyers to promptly pay funds client is entitled to receive. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [1a-c]

280.01 Trust account/commingling — Culpability Found — (Rule 4-100(A))

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

280.40 Culpability—Rules of Prof. Conduct—Maintain records of client funds (RPC 4-100(B)(3))

Rule 4-100(B)(3) requires lawyers to maintain complete records of client funds in their possession and provide clients with proper accounting of funds, including date, amount, payee, and purpose of each disbursement. Respondent's disbursement sheet, which listed amount of settlement funds owed to each category of payee but contained no other information, was not an adequate accounting under this rule. Respondent was obligated to provide client with proper accounting whether or not client requested further information. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [2a, b]

280.41 Maintain records of client funds

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

280.50 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations – Pay client funds on request (RPC 1.15(d)(7); 1989 RPC 4-100(B)(4); 1975 RPC 8-101(B)(4))

Former rule 4-100(B)(4) of Rules of Professional Conduct requires attorneys to promptly pay or deliver, as requested by client, any funds in attorney's possession which client is entitled to receive. Where client made several requests for funds, but respondent did not disburse funds for almost three months, respondent culpable of violating rule 4-100(B)(4). In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [9a-b]

An attorney is required in all circumstances to properly handle a client's settlement. Where respondent received settlement check made out jointly to respondent, client, and statutory lienholder, and respondent did not deposit check for three years due to respondent's failure to obtain authorization from lienholder, and did not pay client's share of settlement to client for over two years, respondent was culpable of violating rule 4-100(A), requiring lawyers to deposit funds received for benefit of clients into client trust account, and rule 4-100(B)(4), requiring lawyers to promptly pay funds client is entitled to receive. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [1a-c]

280.51 Culpability Found - Rule 4-100(B)(4)

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

294.90 Substantive Issues – Culpability – Other general substantive issues re culpability

Where respondent's marketing materials and sales representatives indicated to potential clients that a lawyer would be working on their behalf, but respondent in fact delegated loan modification work to non-attorney employees, and respondent knew representations made to clients were false, respondent committed an act of moral turpitude despite his professed honest belief that what he was doing was legal. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [10a, b]

300.01 Improper threat to bring charges (RPC 5-100) – Found

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

325.00 Culpability — Rules of Professional Conduct — Suppression of Evidence

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, was obligated by statute to disclose certain evidence to defense counsel, respondent violated rule 5-220 by withholding that evidence. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

325.01 Suppression of evidence (rule 5-220)

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

410.00 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations—Failure to Communicate with Client (pre-or non-6068(m))

Amended Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) charged assortment of actions that, taken together, alleged overreaching and breach of fiduciary duties. However, failure to communicate allegations were already alleged under more specific Business and Professions Code subsection – section 6068, subdivision (m) – in separate Amended NDC count. Before enactment of subdivision (m), which was added in 1986 and became effective in 1987, there was "common law" duty to communicate and proper to base culpability under subdivision (a). Now, improper to find violations for same facts under both subdivisions (a) and (m) of Business and Professions Code section 6068. Specific statute should be charged instead of using broader subdivision (a). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [12a,b]

420.00 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations—Misappropriation

Business and Professions Code section 6106 provides, in part, that commission of any act involving dishonesty, moral turpitude, or corruption constitutes cause for suspension or disbarment. Willful misappropriation of client's funds involves moral turpitude. Attorney who knowingly converts client funds for attorney's own purpose violates section 6106. When account balance drops below amount attorney required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and that attorney was entitled to withdraw funds. Where letter agreement drafted by respondent contained acknowledgement and receipt signed by respondent which clearly stated respondent had placed non-client's $50,000 security deposit in CTA and funds were to be released only upon non-client's written consent; respondent acted intentionally by depositing $50,000 security fund check into business account instead of client trust account (CTA); respondent immediately began making personal withdrawals of funds; account dipped below $50,000; respondent knew at time respondent deposited money that respondent had agreed to keep funds in CTA, yet failed to do so; and respondent knew respondent was not authorized to use money for personal expenses, Review Department held respondent intentionally misappropriated $50,000 security deposit in violation of section 6106. In the Matter Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [8a-c]

Where respondent deposited $75,000 for liquor license from non-client into business account rather than client trust account (CTA); failed to maintain that amount; failed to rebut presumption of misappropriation as business account dipped below $75,000; and respondent used money when respondent was not entitled to do so, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentional misappropriation of liquor license funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. As respondent deposited both security deposit funds and liquor license funds in business account instead of CTA, conduct not one-time mistake but repeated practice. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [10]

Where respondent received non-client's check for furniture, fixtures, and equipment (FF&E) and negotiated check, but no evidence respondent deposited and kept funds in client trust account (CTA) as respondent had agreed to do; respondent could not rebut presumption that funds were misappropriated; and repayment of FF&E funds came from CTA respondent opened over year later and funds were transferred into CTA from non-CTA, Review Department held respondent culpable of intentionally misappropriating funds in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [11a, b]

Where respondent correctly believed that trust of which she was trustee gave her authority to lend trust money to herself; respondent informed trust beneficiary of her intent to make loan and received no response; and respondent secured loan with deed of trust on respondent's property, respondent's actions were consistent with her belief she had authority to make loan, and inconsistent with intention to act with moral turpitude, dishonesty, or a correct motive. Finding that respondent intended to enter into loan transaction was incompatible with finding that respondent planned to misappropriate funds. Accordingly, facts did not show respondent misappropriated funds in such a way as to violate section 6106, and Review Department reversed finding of culpability and dismissed charge with prejudice. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [7a-d]

420.12 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations – Misappropriation – Found – Gross negligence

When trust account balance drops below amount attorney is required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and attorney entitled to withdraw funds. Moral turpitude can be found when attorney's actions constitute gross carelessness and negligence violating fiduciary duty to client. Where balance in respondent's trust account fell below amount respondent required to hold for client on two occasions over three day period, which respondent explained was due to careless bookkeeping, and after realizing discrepancy, respondent deposited personal funds to cover discrepancy, misconduct did not rise to level of misappropriation by gross negligence as it was isolated, aberrational occurrence and respondent quickly restored funds. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [6a-b]

420.52 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations – Misappropriation –Not Found – Excusable

When trust account balance drops below amount attorney is required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and attorney entitled to withdraw funds. Moral turpitude can be found when attorney's actions constitute gross carelessness and negligence violating fiduciary duty to client. Where balance in respondent's trust account fell below amount respondent required to hold for client on two occasions over three day period, which respondent explained was due to careless bookkeeping, and after realizing discrepancy, respondent deposited personal funds to cover discrepancy, misconduct did not rise to level of misappropriation by gross negligence as it was isolated, aberrational occurrence and respondent quickly restored funds. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [6a-b]

420.54 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations – Misappropriation –Not Found – Overall failure of proof

When trust account balance drops below amount attorney is required to hold for client, presumption of misappropriation arises. Burden then shifts to attorney to show misappropriation did not occur and attorney entitled to withdraw funds. Moral turpitude can be found when attorney's actions constitute gross carelessness and negligence violating fiduciary duty to client. Where balance in respondent's trust account fell below amount respondent required to hold for client on two occasions over three day period, which respondent explained was due to careless bookkeeping, and after realizing discrepancy, respondent deposited personal funds to cover discrepancy, misconduct did not rise to level of misappropriation by gross negligence as it was isolated, aberrational occurrence and respondent quickly restored funds. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [6a-b]

420.55 Misappropriation – Valid claim of right to funds

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

430 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations—Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Moral turpitude includes deficiency in any character trait necessary for practice of law (such as trustworthiness, honesty, fairness, candor, and fidelity to fiduciary duties) or if it involves such serious breach of duty owed to another or to society, or such flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms, that knowledge of attorney's conduct would be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Attorney who accepts responsibility of fiduciary nature held to legal profession's high standards whether or not attorney acts in capacity of attorney. Where respondent, who worked as company's computer network consultant, assumed fiduciary role in company based on job responsibilities, and knowingly and without permission used position of trust in company to restrict authorized users' access to computer system, though for only brief time period, and who, when confronted refused to reset passwords so users could regain access which forced employer to hire another technology consultant to remedy issue, even though respondent eventually made restitution to company, respondent's actions demonstrated character deficiencies including lack of trustworthiness and fidelity to fiduciary duties, which evidenced moral turpitude. Furthermore, where respondent's testimony that he acted with company president's permission was contrary to his guilty plea, Review Department would not consider claims that would negate elements of crime to which respondent pled guilty. Additionally, where, due to respondent's testimony which was unsupported by record and was inconsistent, confusing, and contradicted other evidence in record, including his own admissions, Review Department affirmed hearing judge's conclusions that respondent's testimony lacked credibility and candor; and where respondent's statements to police, superior court, and Bureau of Criminal Information and Analysis were false and done with intent to cover up and minimize criminal conduct, Review Department held respondent was culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [4a-f]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to establish that attorney's actions related to form which reflected client was responsible for remediation at site amounted to breach of attorney's fiduciary duties or duty of loyalty to client where (1) record showed clients had some responsibility for premises' remediation; (2) attorney's representation strategy was to engage governmental agency, involve insurer, and obtain insurance coverage for remediation; (3) attorney asserted form did not admit sole responsibility – as site owners also had responsibility – rather, form simply indicated who was taking charge of conducting remediation, which is not indication of sole liability; (4) governmental agency was already aware of attorney's clients, as property owners stated in remediation timeframe extension request that owners were working to find insurance coverage from attorney's clients as they were previous tenant and also responsible for remediation; and (5) review of record points to reasonable inference that attorney was acting in clients' best interests and was following representation strategy discussed with client at meeting. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [10a-c]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Where trial showed attorney acted in best interests of clients by obtaining release of liability to property owners and finding coverage for environmental remediation; attorney's actions aligned with attorney's presentation at client meeting; attorney negotiated settlement, then handed matter to client's attorney in related matter to discuss with client who approved settlement agreement; no evidence of deceit or that attorney negotiated terms of settlement agreement to clients' detriment, no evidence demonstrated attorney overstepped bounds of attorney's representation or overreached in way that was unfair to clients. While attorney violated ethical obligations by failing to inform client of significant developments, this failure alone did not equate to overreaching where attorney did not stop working on case or abandon clients; rather, attorney competently completed representation. Accordingly, there was no overreaching or breach of fiduciary duties in violation of Business and Professions

Code section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [11a-e]

Attorney can create fiduciary relationship with non-client when attorney receives money on behalf of non-client. Attorney must then comply with same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if attorney-client relationship existed. Attorney who breached fiduciary duties that would justify discipline if there was attorney-client relationship may be disciplined for such misconduct. Where respondent agreed to hold money from non-client for lease and keep it in client trust account (CTA) until appropriate to release it to proper parties, but failed to do so, respondent violated his fiduciary duties to non-client and violated former rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct. But Review Department assigned no additional weight in discipline as culpability based on same facts underlying Business and Professions Code section 6106 violation. Review Department rejected respondent's argument there was no written agreement regarding $50,000 security deposit's use at time of alleged misconduct, as conduct of parties, when viewed in light of later letter agreement, was strong evidence respondent was to keep security deposit in CTA. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [9a-c]

Where Notice of Disciplinary Charges alleged respondent made misrepresentations in letter regarding holding funds from non-client business in client trust account (CTA), Review Department rejected respondent's argument that there was no fiduciary duty to non-client business as non-client testified that non-client did not believe respondent agreed to act as fiduciary for non-client or non-client's business. What non-client believed about respondent's duties did not supersede duties respondent had under law as escrow holder and fiduciary. Furthermore, whether respondent was fiduciary to non-client business was not relevant to moral turpitude charge, as section 6106 prohibits any act of attorney dishonesty, whether committed while acting as attorney or not. Review Department held respondent culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106, as respondent's deception about holding money in CTA rose to moral turpitude as misrepresentation was material and intentional. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [13a, b]

If disciplinary proceeding is based solely on complainant's allegations of violation of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct, rule of limitations (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 5.21) provides that proceeding must begin within five years from date of violation. Normally, a statute or rule is violated when every element of violation has occurred. However, rule of limitations is tolled during period that attorney acts in fiduciary relationship with complainant or related party, even if it is other than an attorney-client relationship. Moreover, if disciplinary charge is based on continuing violation of duty, violation is deemed committed at termination of entire course of conduct. Where respondent allegedly breached fiduciary duty to investor under movie financing agreement requiring respondent to hold funds in escrow until close of movie production, rule of limitations was tolled as long as fiduciary relationship continued, and respondent's alleged diversion of funds created continuing violation lasting until completion of purpose of fiduciary duty. Accordingly, where initial notice of disciplinary charges was filed within five years after completion of movie production, misappropriation charge was timely even though diversion of funds occurred more than five years earlier. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [2a-h]

Attorney's commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption is cause for disbarment whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise. Attorney who accepts responsibility of a fiduciary nature is held to high standards of legal profession whether or not acting in capacity of attorney. In the Matter of Saxon (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 728 [4]

When attorney is trustee of trust, trust's beneficiaries are not attorney's clients, but attorney may nevertheless be disciplined as if beneficiaries were clients, because of attorney's fiduciary relationship with beneficiaries. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [2]

Probate Code section 16004 applies to fiduciary relationship between attorney and client, and is statutory complement to rule 3-300. Probate Code establishes rebuttable presumption that trustee has violated fiduciary duties when trustee obtains advantage from beneficiary in transaction between them. When attorney trustee enters into transaction with trust, transaction will be set aside unless attorney can show that beneficiaries had full knowledge of facts connected with transaction and fully understood its effect. Where respondent, as trustee, obtained loan from trust which benefited her, and did not fully inform beneficiaries of terms or risks of loan transaction, respondent violated her duties under Probate Code, and thereby violated section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [5a, b]

Even where an attorney is not practicing law, she is required to conform to ethical standards required of attorneys. An attorney who breaches fiduciary duties that would justify discipline if there were an attorney-client relationship may properly be disciplined for misconduct. Respondent's misconduct was not excused because she was acting as trustee for family estate, not as attorney. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.[6 a, b]

490 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally – Culpability – Common Law/Other Statutory Violations—Miscellaneous

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Office of Chief Trial Counsel failed to establish that attorney's actions related to form which reflected client was responsible for remediation at site amounted to breach of attorney's fiduciary duties or duty of loyalty to client where (1) record showed clients had some responsibility for premises' remediation; (2) attorney's representation strategy was to engage governmental agency, involve insurer, and obtain insurance coverage for remediation; (3) attorney asserted form did not admit sole responsibility – as site owners also had responsibility – rather, form simply indicated who was taking charge of conducting remediation, which is not indication of sole liability; (4) governmental agency was already aware of attorney's clients, as property owners stated in remediation timeframe extension request that owners were working to find insurance coverage from attorney's clients as they were previous tenant and also responsible for remediation; and (5) review of record points to reasonable inference that attorney was acting in clients' best interests and was following representation strategy discussed with client at meeting. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [10a-c]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a), provides that attorney has duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Where trial showed attorney acted in best interests of clients by obtaining release of liability to property owners and finding coverage for environmental remediation; attorney's actions aligned with attorney's presentation at client meeting; attorney negotiated settlement, then handed matter to client's attorney in related matter to discuss with client who approved settlement agreement; no evidence of deceit or that attorney negotiated terms of settlement agreement to clients' detriment, no evidence demonstrated attorney overstepped bounds of attorney's representation or overreached in way that was unfair to clients. While attorney violated ethical obligations by failing to inform client of significant developments, this failure alone did not equate to overreaching where attorney did not stop working on case or abandon clients; rather, attorney competently completed representation. Accordingly, there was no overreaching or breach of fiduciary duties in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [11a-e]

510 Aggravation—Prior Record of Discipline

Prior discipline is considered in most cases only as aggravating circumstance in determining discipline in a later proceeding, but prior discipline may also be considered if it tends to prove a fact in issue in determining culpability. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [4]

Where respondent's prior record of discipline included stipulation admitting misconduct, and after stipulation was filed, respondent committed same type of misconduct in current matter, record showed respondent committed repeated acts in defiance of duty to comply with requirements of law license while suspended. Respondent's prior record of discipline thus had substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [7a, b]

Under rule 5.106(D) of Rules of Procedure, prior record of discipline was properly considered for purposes of aggravation and level of discipline after respondent's culpability was established. Hearing judge therefore properly denied respondent's request to strike evidence of prior discipline record pursuant to rule 1260 of the State Bar Court Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [5a, b]

Where misconduct underlying present proceeding occurred before charges were filed in respondent's other two disciplinary proceedings, Review Department afforded less weight to aggravating force of respondent's discipline history. Prior, not subsequent, discipline is considered indicative of recidivist attorney's inability to conform conduct to ethical norms. Under such circumstances, Review Department considered totality of respondent's misconduct to determine appropriate aggravating weight. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [6a, b]

For purposes of analyzing respondent's prior record as aggravation, date OCTC filed notice of disciplinary charges in prior disciplinary proceeding is most relevant. As of that date, respondent is put on notice that charged conduct is disciplinable. Accordingly, where respondent committed additional misconduct after filing of notice in prior proceeding, hearing judge erred in giving diminished weight to prior discipline because it overlapped with present misconduct. Rather, respondent's current misconduct was significantly aggravated by prior records demonstrating continuing unwillingness or inability to conform conduct to ethical norms, especially where prior and present misconduct both involved unauthorized practice of law and repeated violations of sanctions orders. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [12a-c]

Under rule 5.106(A), hearing judge should have considered previous disciplinary order as a prior record of discipline even though it was not yet final. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr. 427. [3]

511 Aggravation—Prior record of discipline (1.5(a))—Found

Where attorney had two prior records of discipline and second disciplinary matter involved misconduct similar to that in present matter, including failure to promptly pay client funds and disobedience of court order, and probation condition in second disciplinary matter required respondent to have accountant certify that respondent properly maintained client funds records and client trust account, prior disciplines did not rehabilitate respondent causing concern about further misconduct, and therefore substantial aggravating weight given for respondent's two prior records of discipline. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [13a-c]

Where respondent committed moral turpitude offense in both his prior disciplinary matter and present case, and respondent committed same misconduct in both cases by failing to obey court orders, substantial aggravating weight given to respondent's prior record of discipline. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [7]

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

Where respondent was culpable of violating his disciplinary probation, and his prior record of discipline involved one count of commingling that merited a 90-day suspension and was not similar to his present misconduct, hearing judge properly deemed respondent's prior record to be a serious, but not significant, aggravating factor. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

Where respondent committed most of the misconduct involved in his third disciplinary matter after signing a stipulation in his first disciplinary matter and after the filing of his second disciplinary matter (a motion to revoke his probation), it was inconceivable that respondent did not know his conduct in his third disciplinary matter was unethical. The similarity of respondent's past misconduct to the wrongdoing charged in his third disciplinary matter demonstrated that he was a recidivist offender. Accordingly, his prior record of discipline was entitled to significant weight in aggravation, and hearing judge erred in diminishing that weight somewhat. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [1a, b]

Purpose of disciplinary standard calling for greater discipline in second case is to address recidivist misconduct. Nature of misconduct in second case need not be more serious than in prior case in order to warrant increased discipline. Where respondent's multiple acts of misconduct in second case significantly harmed client, and occurred when respondent should have been aware of ethical duties because prior disciplinary proceeding had been initiated when misconduct in second case occurred, nothing in record warranted departure from standard requiring greater discipline for subsequent misconduct, even though misconduct in second case was less serious. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.[7]

Where respondent's prior misconduct was serious, and was similar to some of respondent's present wrongdoing, commonalities rendered respondent's prior record particularly serious, and hearing judge correctly assigned it significant aggravating weight. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.[1a, b]

Where respondent committed most of current misconduct after commencement of disciplinary proceedings regarding respondent's prior misconduct, Review Department did not apply general principle that aggravating force of prior discipline is diminished if misconduct leading to prior discipline occurred during same time period as current misconduct. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [2]

Where respondent continued to commit misconduct of same nature after stipulating to discipline in prior matter, prior discipline warranted significant aggravating weight even though some of current and prior misconduct overlapped. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [5]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427.

511.90 Aggravation — Prior record of discipline — Found but discounted — Other reason

Where respondent was culpable of violating his disciplinary probation, and his prior record of discipline involved one count of commingling that merited a 90-day suspension and was not similar to his present misconduct, hearing judge properly deemed respondent's prior record to be a serious, but not significant, aggravating factor. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

513.10 Aggravation—Prior record of discipline—Found but discounted—Contemporaneous with current misconduct

Where respondent committed most of current misconduct after commencement of disciplinary proceedings regarding respondent's prior misconduct, Review Department did not apply general principle that aggravating force of prior discipline is diminished if misconduct leading to prior discipline occurred during same time period as current misconduct. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [2]

513.90 Aggravation—Prior record of discipline (1.5(a))—Found but discounted or not relied on—Other reason

Where discipline in respondent's prior disciplinary matter was stipulated to several years after misconduct in current matter started, respondent did not have full opportunity to heed importance of earlier discipline, even though similarities existed between prior discipline and current matter which was concerning. However, considering totality of respondent's misconduct, Review Department assigned limited aggravation for respondent's prior record of discipline, rather than no aggravation as found by hearing judge. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [5a-c]

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

521 Aggravation—Multiple acts of misconduct (1.5(b))—Found

Where respondent repeatedly pursued unsupported legal claims in multiple legal proceedings, made improper threats, disobeyed four court orders, and failed to report sanctions order, Review Department held acts sufficiently established multiple acts of misconduct under standard 1.5(b). Furthermore, where respondent was told by court he was wrong and pleadings were frivolous and harassing, but respondent did not stop repeatedly advancing arguments without legal basis; began putting forth frivolous arguments in 2013 in interpleader action, appeal of that action, another civil matter, appeal of other civil matter, has also done so twice in federal court; and appeal of second federal lawsuit was still pending, Review Department agreed with hearing judge that aggravation also warranted under standard 1.5(c) for respondent's pattern of serious misconduct which spanned several years. Review Department assigned substantial aggravation under standards 1.5(b) and (c) for respondent's multiple acts and pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [7a-c]

Where attorney failed to keep client informed of significant developments, including that (1) clients had been sued; (2) attorney filed and dismissed third-party complaint; (3) attorney received written settlement offers; and (4) attorney filed several pleadings and participated in court hearings without informing client, such numerous failures to communicate over several years warranted moderate weight in aggravation under standard 1.5(b). For aggravation purposes under standard 1.5(b), it did not matter multiple acts were done in single client matter. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [16]

Moderate weight in aggravation given for multiple acts of wrongdoing where respondent on three separate occasions was required to deposit funds into his client trust account but failed to do so and, instead, misappropriated funds; was culpable of three violations for moral turpitude misrepresentations; and issued three non-sufficient funds checks, two which were returned. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [15]

Even though respondent's rule 9.20(c) and probation violations all arose from failing to comply with one Supreme Court order, respondent's violations of three separate probation duties and separate duty to comply with rule 9.20(c) were still multiple acts and entitled to substantial aggravating weight. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [3a, b]

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

Where respondent was found culpable of three disciplinary violations, but committed at least 25 acts of wrongdoing over two-year period by repeatedly failing to respond to letters from insurer regarding client's claim, hearing judge erred in assigning only minimal aggravating weight to respondent's multiple acts of wrongdoing. Multiple acts of wrongdoing are not limited to the counts pled, and respondent's recurring ethical violations were assigned significant aggravating weight. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [3]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

523 Aggravation—Multiple acts of misconduct (1.5(b))—Found but discounted or not relied on

Where respondent was found culpable of three ethical violations (fourth violation involved same misconduct as another violation so was not considered a separate violation for disciplinary purposes), Review Department gave limited weight in aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct. Despite Office of Chief Trial Counsel's argument that respondent should receive significant aggravation for multiple acts of misconduct because misconduct spanned multiple years and caused significant harm, Review Department did not find it appropriate to consider significant harm in assigning aggravation weight for multiple acts of misconduct, as doing so would double count harm in evaluating aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing and harm to client, public, or administration of justice. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [5]

Whether an attorney engaged in multiple acts of misconduct in aggravation is not limited to counts pleaded. Where respondent's culpability of two counts of violating former rule 4-100(A) encompassed 168 separate acts of misconduct, respondent committed multiple acts of misconduct. However, where misconduct lasted only 10 months, respondent's multiple acts did not warrant substantial aggravation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [5]

Where respondent failed to comply with Supreme Court order requiring him to give notice of his suspension under rule 9.20 of the California Rules of Court, and also violated two terms of his disciplinary probation, only modest aggravating weight was appropriate for respondent's multiple acts of misconduct. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

Where respondent committed two acts of moral turpitude and also violated four orders issued by an administrative tribunal, and failed to report two judicial sanctions, respondent committed multiple acts of wrongdoing, a factor that was assigned moderate aggravating weight. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [10]

525 Aggravation—Multiple acts of misconduct (1.5(b))—Declined to find

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

Where finding that respondent was culpable of moral turpitude already accounted for respondent's pattern of telling half-truths, Review Department rejected OCTC's request for finding of aggravation under either multiple acts of wrongdoing or pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [7]

531 Aggravation—Pattern of misconduct(1.5(c))—Found

Where respondent repeatedly pursued unsupported legal claims in multiple legal proceedings, made improper threats, disobeyed four court orders, and failed to report sanctions order, Review Department held acts sufficiently established multiple acts of misconduct under standard 1.5(b). Furthermore, where respondent was told by court he was wrong and pleadings were frivolous and harassing, but respondent did not stop repeatedly advancing arguments without legal basis; began putting forth frivolous arguments in 2013 in interpleader action, appeal of that action, another civil matter, appeal of other civil matter, has also done so twice in federal court; and appeal of second federal lawsuit was still pending, Review Department agreed with hearing judge that aggravation also warranted under standard 1.5(c) for respondent's pattern of serious misconduct which spanned several years. Review Department assigned substantial aggravation under standards 1.5(b) and (c) for respondent's multiple acts and pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. 7a-c]

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

535.90 Aggravation—Pattern of misconduct(1.5(c))—Declined to find—Other reason

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

Where finding that respondent was culpable of moral turpitude already accounted for respondent's pattern of telling half-truths, Review Department rejected OCTC's request for finding of aggravation under either multiple acts of wrongdoing or pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [7]

541 Aggravation—Intentional misconduct, bad faith, dishonesty, misrepresentation, concealment (15(d), (e), (f))—Found

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016)5 Cal. State Bar Ct, Rptr. 427

543.10 Aggravation—Intentional misconduct—Found but discounted or not relied on—Duplicative of section 6106 charge

Where Review Department found that respondent acted intentionally in committing act of moral turpitude, it declined to give intentionality additional weight in aggravation. Factors giving rise to culpability for moral turpitude should not be given double weight by considering them again in aggravation. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [7]

543.90 Aggravation — Intentional misconduct, bad faith, etc. (1.5 (d), (e), (f)) — Found but discounted or not relied on — Other reason

Where respondent's concealment and false statements to law enforcement were relied upon in finding respondent's felony conviction involved moral turpitude, no additional aggravation was warranted for concealment, bad faith, or dishonesty. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [3]

545 Aggravation – Intentional misconduct, bad faith (1.5(d), (e), (f)) – Declined to find

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

Where OCTC argued for first time in closing trial brief that respondent engaged in dishonesty and bad faith in seeking continuance of disciplinary trial, Review Department declined to assign bad faith as aggravating factor, because respondent did not have opportunity to respond to OCTC's bad faith allegation, and OCTC did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent deliberately attempted to mislead court. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [7a-c]

551 Overreaching

Respondent's procedures for dealing with complaining clients constituted overreaching, where respondent attempted to intimidate such clients by sending them draft civil complaints that accused them of extortion, claimed they were required to arbitrate, and alleged that respondent had completed necessary work to earn his fee. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [12]

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

561 Aggravation—Uncharged violations(1.5(h))—Found

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437

563.10 Aggravation – Uncharged violations – Found but discounted or not relied on – Procedural impropriety

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation if respondent's due process rights are not violated. Where OCTC was or should have been aware of uncharged misconduct before disciplinary charges were filed, misconduct should have been charged. Nonetheless, where respondent stipulated to conduct constituting uncharged misconduct; uncharged misconduct was elicited for relevant purpose and based on respondent's own representations; and hearing judge granted motion to conform charges to proof at trial, hearing judge correctly assigned nominal weight in aggravation for uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [7a-c]

565 Aggravation – Uncharged violations – Declined to find

Aggravating circumstances may include uncharged violations of Business and Professions Code or Rules of Professional Conduct. However, hearing judge erred in finding significant aggravation based on uncharged violation of former rule 4-100(A) based on erroneous factual conclusion from respondent's testimony, where

State Bar never raised uncharged misconduct during trial or in posttrial closing brief, and respondent consequently did not have opportunity to defend during trial against uncharged violation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [6a, b]

582.10 Aggravation—Harm to client(1.5(j))—Found

Where respondent failed to serve defendant in one matter for over three years and failed to oppose demurrer in another matter, causing court to dismiss clients' cases, and thereafter respondent falsely led clients to believe respondent was working on cases, and clients were distressed to learn years later their cases could no longer be pursued, Review Department agreed with hearing judge that respondent caused significant client harm and assigned substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [6]

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

Where respondent exploited clients' financial desperation by illegally charging advance fees for loan modification, and pushed them to the brink of foreclosure by encouraging his employees to tell them to stop communicating with lenders and paying their mortgages, respondent's conduct warranted substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [15]

Where respondent illegally charged advance fees to financially distressed clients, and gave clients advice that served to worsen their already bad financial situations, hearing judge properly found that respondent's misconduct significantly harmed his clients, despite respondent's contentions that he obtained good results in clients' cases. . In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [8]

Where respondent's misconduct deprived injured client of cause of action, causing client's loss of faith in legal community, continued physical pain, and difficulty in driving, hearing judge correctly found significant harm to client as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [4]

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437

582.32 Aggravation —Harm – To client – Found but discounted or not relied on – Harm otherwise slight

Where respondent's misconduct, which deprived client of funds for approximately three months and burdened client with fear of not complying with fiduciary duties as trustee of trust, caused client significant harm due to mental suffering, but client's worry was for relatively short time period and no additional facts suggested severe monetary injury, limited weight in aggravation given for significant harm to client. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [14]

582.39 Aggravation —Harm – To client – Found but discounted or not relied on – Other reason

Where respondent's misconduct, which deprived client of funds for approximately three months and burdened client with fear of not complying with fiduciary duties as trustee of trust, caused client significant harm due to mental suffering, but client's worry was for relatively short time period and no additional facts suggested severe monetary injury, limited weight in aggravation given for significant harm to client. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [14]

582.50 Significant harm to client (1.5(j)) - Aggravation - Not Found

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

584.10 Aggravation—Harm(1.5(j))—To Public -- Found

Where respondent's relentless litigation campaign caused courts and parties to expend excessive time and money, shown by $188,350.64 in sanctions against respondent, including $8,500 for reimbursement to court of appeal for administrate costs; frivolous litigation caused courts to consider and rule on meritless motions, which wasted judicial resources; respondent's misconduct caused stress and emotional harm to certain parties and opposing counsel, as they were repeatedly forced to defend against respondent's meritless claims and appeals, Review Department held respondent's misconduct caused significant harm to public and administration of justice, warranting substantial aggravation under standard 1.5(j). In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [8a-c]

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

Where respondent criminal prosecutor falsified evidence in pending criminal matter, resulting in dismissal of criminal charges, respondent's misconduct caused significant harm to victim, defendant, and administration of justice. Such egregious prosecutorial misconduct violates basic notions of ethics, integrity, and fairness; erodes confidence in law enforcement and criminal justice system, and puts public at risk. Accordingly, respondent's misconduct was aggravated by significant harm he caused. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [6]

584.30 Aggravation – Harm – To Public – Found but discounted or not relied on

Where respondent was involved in vehicular accident while under influence of excessive alcohol which caused some harm to owners of destroyed or damaged property, and caused city to expend emergency response resources, but respondent repaid costs and damages promptly, hearing judge erred in finding significant harm as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [4a, b]

584.50 Aggravation—Harm(1.5(J))—To public—Declined to find

Where respondent's misconduct merely created additional work for superior court, as opposing counsel sought protective order resulting in sanctions against respondent, Review Department did not conclude that respondent's actions significantly harmed public or administration of justice. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [15]

Where record did not establish that action brought by respondent's clients was unjust or unjustified, fact that opposing party had to pay attorney fees to defend itself did not establish that respondent's conduct caused significant harm to that party. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr. 448. [14]

586.10 Aggravation—Harm to administration of justice (1.5(j))—Found

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464

586.11 Aggravation — Harm — To administration of justice — Inherent in nature of misconduct

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, failed to disclose evidence to defense counsel as required by law, respondent's misconduct eroded confidence in law enforcement and the criminal justice system. Respondent's misconduct thus significantly harmed the administration of justice, and warranted substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6a, b]

586.12 Aggravation—Found—Harm (1.5(j))—To Administration of Justice —Specific interference with justice

Where respondent, as prosecutor in criminal case, failed to disclose evidence to defense counsel as required by law, respondent's misconduct eroded confidence in law enforcement and the criminal justice system. Respondent's misconduct thus significantly harmed the administration of justice, and warranted substantial weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6a, b]

Where respondent criminal prosecutor falsified evidence in pending criminal matter, resulting in dismissal of criminal charges, respondent's misconduct caused significant harm to victim, defendant, and administration of justice. Such egregious prosecutorial misconduct violates basic notions of ethics, integrity, and fairness; erodes confidence in law enforcement and criminal justice system, and puts public at risk. Accordingly, respondent's misconduct was aggravated by significant harm he caused. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [6]

586.19 Aggravation—Found—Harm (1.5(j))—To Administration of Justice —Other basis

Where respondent's relentless litigation campaign caused courts and parties to expend excessive time and money, shown by $188,350.64 in sanctions against respondent, including $8,500 for reimbursement to court of appeal for administrate costs; frivolous litigation caused courts to consider and rule on meritless motions, which wasted judicial resources; respondent's misconduct caused stress and emotional harm to certain parties and opposing counsel, as they were repeatedly forced to defend against respondent's meritless claims and appeals, Review Department held respondent's misconduct caused significant harm to public and administration of justice, warranting substantial aggravation under standard 1.5(j). In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [8a-c]

586.30 Aggravation—Found—Harm (1.5(j))—To Administration of Justice —Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

586.50 Aggravation – Harm – To administration of justice – Declined to find

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

Speculative harm does not satisfy clear and convincing standard required for aggravation. Although very brief moment of disorder in courtroom occurred between respondent and bailiffs, that did not by itself establish aggravation for significant harm. Where Office of Chief Trial Counsel did not establish that specific, cognizable, and significant harm occurred which could be directly attributed to respondent's actions beyond respondent's violation of judge's orders to move away from client who was criminal defendant, Review Department did not affirm hearing judge's finding of substantial harm as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [5a, b]

Although respondent was reprimanded for his conduct by San Francisco Public Defender's Office, where any interruption to jury selection due to respondent's conduct was brief and record did not establish significant judicial time or resources were used, no aggravation for significant harm. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [6]

No aggravation for significant harm where respondent asserted his rights in defending against or appealing court's contempt order; unclear respondent's actions caused bailiff's injury; and no evidence existed regarding severity of injury. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [7]

Where respondent's misconduct merely created additional work for superior court, as opposing counsel sought protective order resulting in sanctions against respondent, Review Department did not conclude that respondent's actions significantly harmed public or administration of justice. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [15]

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

588.10 Aggravation—Harm (1.5(j))—To all of the above (or unspecified, or other) —Found

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494

588.50 Aggravation—Harm (1.5(j))— To all of the above (or unspecified, or other)—Decline to find

To be aggravating factor, harm to court, client, or administration of justice must be "significant." Where respondent unlawfully accessed company's computer system and caused interruption which affected business operations for no more than one day, and respondent's refusal to restore computer password caused company to hire technical expert resulting in $1,500 in expenses, Office of Chief Trial Counsel did not establish significant harm as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [6a,b]

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 20 3 6) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427

590 Aggravation—Indifference to rectification/atonement (1.5(k))

Where respondent continued to engage in UPL in multiple matters after stipulating to those offenses in prior disciplinary proceeding, and in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent denied culpability of that misconduct in his prior proceeding despite his clear, written contrary admissions, respondent's lack of insight into wrongdoing constituted serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [8]

Where respondent's lack of insight into the seriousness of her misconduct and repeated and continuing failure to appreciate the importance of her professional responsibilities raised additional concerns about the potential for future misconduct, Review Department recommended actual suspension of 18 months and until respondent establishes her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [10a, b]

591 Aggravation—Indifference to rectification/atonement (1.5(k))—Found

Where respondent continued to perceive himself as victim and denied full responsibility for criminal conduct by maintaining he acted under company president's authority when he disrupted company's computer system, even though respondent initially admitted to police he acted intentionally and pleaded guilty and was convicted of knowingly disrupting computer network without permission, record supported finding that respondent lacked insight into wrongfulness of misconduct and had refused to accept full responsibility. Respondent's failure to accept responsibility for misconduct led Review Department to conclude respondent did not truly understand wrongfulness of misconduct and suggested risk for future misconduct. Review Department therefore assigned substantial weight in aggravation to respondent's indifference. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [8a, b]

Where respondent blamed others; testified his conduct was moral and correct; characterized himself as victim; made no payments towards court-ordered sanctions; asserted he did not understand why disciplinary charges were brought and intended to continue to pursue litigation related to underlying misconduct; in closing argument at trial said he was "going to stick by [his] guns;" announced at oral argument he would appeal to Supreme Court if discipline not overturned; refused to acknowledge actions were wrong and harmed courts and others; and continued to raise same unsuccessful arguments already struck down by several courts; respondent's gross lack of insight into wrongfulness of actions merited substantial aggravation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [9a-c]

Law does not require false penitence, but it does require that attorney accept responsibility for wrongful acts and show some understanding of culpability. Where respondent (1) attempted to skirt responsibility by testifying respondent not hired as attorney for business when record showed respondent was and did legal work while there; (2) claimed even if respondent did legal work for business, work was done by respondent's professional law corporation which limited respondent's liability; (3) failed to comprehend culpability for misappropriation, referring to respondent's actions in reply brief as "clumsy accounting mistakes," believed charges were so implausible that no "Hollywood studio" would buy screenplay, and referred to proceedings as an "absurd scenario;" (4) attempted to place blame on complainant for disciplinary proceedings; and (5) attempted to emphasize that "no harm resulted" from disciplinary violations, but did not admit any failure of respondent's professional responsibilities, respondent's indifference toward rectification or atonement for consequences of misconduct warranted substantial aggravation. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [16a-d]

Attorney who does not accept responsibility for actions and instead seeks to shift it to others demonstrates indifference and lack of remorse. Law does not require false penitence but does require that attorney accept responsibility for wrongful acts and come to grips with culpability. Where respondent exhibited insight as to some behavior but continued to describe violations as technicalities or made other excuses, and continued to insist conduct did not amount to threatening to report suspected immigration status by arguing never made direct threats and failed to acknowledge wrongfulness of conduct without considering import of comments on phone, in letters, and in court filings, respondent's actions continued to display indifference and Review Department assigned substantial consideration to this in aggravation. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [16a-b]

Where respondent continued to collect advance fees for loan modification services despite cease and desist orders from several states; ceased his wrongdoing only after temporary restraining order was issued; and continued to insist his coduct was legal even after his operation was shut down by consumer protection agency, respondent's indifference toward rectification and inability to recognize wrongfulness of his misconduct warranted substantial consideration in aggravation. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [13a, b]

Where respondent continued to operate law firm in unlawful manner despite plain language of statute, disciplinary investigation, and disciplinary proceedings, and respondent's attitude revealed lack of understanding of attorneys' ethical responsibilities, his lack of insight made him an ongoing danger to public and legal profession, and hearing judge properly found respondent's indifference to rectification or atonement to be aggravating factor. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [9]

Attorneys accused of misconduct have the right to defend themselves vigorously. However, where respondent adhered throughout disciplinary proceedings to erroneous belief that she did not commit misconduct, based on her unreasonable interpretation of clearly worded statutes, respondent's failure to fully acknowledge her wrongdoing constituted lack of insight and warranted moderate weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7a, b]

Where respondent contended there was no need to clarify record after he obtained continuances of hearings based on misrepresentations, and opined that statutory duty to report sanctions to State Bar was "low on the food chain with respect to reportability," respondent's failure to appreciate wrongfulness of his conduct, and his lack of insight, made him a danger to public and legal profession, and were assigned significant weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [11]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464

595 Aggravation—Indifference to rectification/atonement—Declined to find

Indifference toward rectification or atonement for consequences of misconduct is aggravating circumstance. While law does not require false penitence, it does require attorney to accept responsibility for wrongful acts and show some understanding of attorney's culpability. Where attorney admitted he should have used written retainer agreement with family representative; should have regularly reported to family representative on case status; and admitted to failure to communicate, no clear and convincing evidence of indifference because attorney accepted responsibility for actions. Review department therefore did not assign aggravation under standard 1.5(k). In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [17]

Where respondent asserted that his failure to pay sanctions was due to clients' failure to adhere to agreement to pay, and that in practicing while suspended, he relied on statements of State Bar employees as to his status, these statements did not clearly and convincingly establish indifference toward rectification or atonement in aggravation of his misconduct. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [13]

595.10 Aggravation- Indifference (Std. 1.5(k)) – Belated restitution efforts - not Found

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

595.90 Aggravation—Indifference to rectification/atonement—Declined to find—Other reason

Indifference not established as aggravating circumstance where, although respondent testified she did not consider her probate filings in South Carolina case underlying her reprimand frivolous, respondent (1) credibly testified respecting finality of South Carolina discipline; (2) has brought increased level of care to law practice; and (3) has paid in full South Carolina disciplinary cost assessment incident to her disciplinary proceeding in that state, which showed she had appropriately accepted her culpability. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [3]

Attorneys who fail to accept responsibility for their actions and instead seek to shift responsibility to others demonstrate indifference to misconduct and lack of remorse. However, where respondent's testimony at disciplinary trial unequivocally acknowledged his wrongdoing and took full responsibility, admitted his alcoholism, and showed he had taken concrete steps toward recovery, Review Department declined to find indifference to rectification based on respondent's initial refusal, years earlier, to pay for repair of property damage caused by misconduct. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [6a, b]

Where respondent's failure to comply with rule 9.20 of the California Rules of Court was considered in establishing his culpability, and he had made several failed attempts to file a compliance declaration and reasonably understood, based on communications from Probation Department, that further attempts would be futile, respondent's failure to file the compliance declaration did not demonstrate continuing misconduct or indifference toward rectification and atonement, and did not constitute an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [1a-c]

Where OCTC did not raise issue of indifference toward rectification or atonement at trial, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to provide rebuttal evidence, and record was unclear regarding relevant facts, Review Department declined to assign aggravation based on respondent's alleged failure to make amends to client by paying for medical treatment. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [5]

601 Aggravation – Lack of candor/cooperation with victim – Found

Where respondent's explanations were unbelievable, uncorroborated, and implausible, no other reasonable inference could be drawn from respondent's testimony other than finding that respondent was dishonest. Review Department concluded respondent deliberately presented false testimony in State Bar Court and affirmed hearing judge's finding of substantial weight in aggravation for this circumstance. Aggravation assigned was based on respondent's dishonesty during disciplinary trial, rather than misconduct and dishonesty surrounding respondent's conviction which was used in finding moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [7a-c]

611 Aggravation— Lack of candor/cooperation with Bar – Found

Where respondent not only failed to cooperate with OCTC, but made repeated threats against OCTC employees, resulting in the issuance of restraining orders against him, respondent's behavior was reprehensible and constituted extremely serious aggravation. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [14a-c]

615 Aggravation—Lack of candor/cooperation with Bar (1.5(1))—Declined to find

Where trial was hard-fought and at times somewhat contentious and judge reprimanded respondent regarding respondent's volume and tone, but judge was able to adequately manage trial so as to avoid any extreme behavioral issues, Review Department did not conclude that respondent's actions rose to level warranting aggravation for lack of candor and cooperation to State Bar. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [17]

Aggravation for lack of candor in disciplinary proceedings must be supported by express finding that testimony lacked candor or was dishonest. Where record contained some incongruities in witnesses' testimony, but Office of Chief Trial Counsel had not presented clear and convincing evidence to establish respondent's testimony lacked candor, Review Department adopted hearing judge's finding that respondent testified credibly and declined to find aggravation for lack of candor. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [5]

Great weight is given to hearing judge's findings on candor because judge who hears and sees witness testify is best positioned to make this determination. Where hearing judge heard respondent testify over multiple days and did not find lack of candor despite OCTC's request, Review Department declined to find dishonest testimony as additional aggravating factor. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494. [7]

616.10 Aggravation—Failure to make restitution (1.5(m))—Found

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437.

616.59 Aggravation—Failure to make restitution (1.5(m)) – Declined to find – Other reason

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

618.10 Aggravation— High level of vulnerability of victim – Found

Where the clients harmed by respondent's misconduct were an incarcerated criminal defendant and four immigrants subject to possible deportation, the clients were highly vulnerable victims, and the harm respondent caused to them warranted significant aggravation. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [2]

618.50 Aggravation—Vulnerable Victim (Std. 1.5(n)) - Not Found

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

620 Aggravation — Lack of remorse/failure to appreciate seriousness

Where respondent continued to engage in UPL in multiple matters after stipulating to those offenses in prior disciplinary proceeding, and in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent denied culpability of that misconduct in his prior proceeding despite his clear, written contrary admissions, respondent's lack of insight into wrongdoing constituted serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [8]

625.20 Aggravation – Lack of remorse – Declined to find – Failure of proof

Attorneys who fail to accept responsibility for their actions and instead seek to shift responsibility to others demonstrate indifference to misconduct and lack of remorse. However, where respondent's testimony at disciplinary trial unequivocally acknowledged his wrongdoing and took full responsibility, admitted his alcoholism, and showed he had taken concrete steps toward recovery, Review Department declined to find indifference to rectification based on respondent's initial refusal, years earlier, to pay for repair of property damage caused by misconduct. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [6a, b]

710.10 Mitigation—Long practice with no prior discipline (1.6(a))—Found

Where attorney admitted culpability for failing to communicate, and testified he would do things differently, review department did not agree misconduct would likely recur and held attorney established he was entitled to substantial weight in mitigation for 21-year discipline-free practice. Review department considered attorney's period of post-misconduct practice without further misconduct in determining under standard 1.6(a) that further misconduct was unlikely to recur, rather than giving attorney mitigation for period of post-misconduct practice without further misconduct. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [18a, b]

No prior record of discipline over many years of practice, coupled with present misconduct that is not likely to recur, is a mitigating circumstance. Where record reflected 15 years of discipline-free practice; hearing judge's finding of shorter period was based on erroneous factual conclusion; and record reflected that respondent's misconduct was aberrational and unlikely to recur, respondent's 15 years of discipline-free practice were entitled to substantial weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [7a, b]

Current version of standard 1.6(a) provides that absence of prior record of discipline over many years of practice, coupled with present misconduct not likely to recur, is a mitigating factor. Unlike prior version of standard, current version does not include analysis of seriousness of misconduct. Under current version of standard, where respondent's misconduct was limited to single incident for which respondent apologized, and no facts suggested misconduct would be repeated, hearing judge erred in relying on former version of standard and giving respondent only minimal mitigation credit for 15 years of discipline-free practice based on seriousness of misconduct and lack of insight. Respondent was entitled to substantial weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [10a, b]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

710.33 Mitigation—Long practice with no prior discipline record—Found but discounted or not relied on—Not in practice long enough—Prior to commission of misconduct

Under standard 1.6(a), mitigation includes absence of any prior discipline record over many years coupled with present misconduct which is not likely to recur. Where respondent had practiced law discipline-free for seven years; showed some understanding of misconduct; admitted to clients mistakes made; told clients to pursue malpractice insurance claim; did not contest hearing judge's culpability determinations; attributed misconduct to personal issues affecting focus; and showed some insight into misconduct, Review Department concluded both prongs of standard 1.6(a) were met as there was (1) absence of prior discipline record over many years; and (2) record supported finding respondent's misconduct was aberrational. Review Department, however, assigned minimal mitigation as respondent had only practiced for seven years, minimum amount without misconduct to obtain mitigating credit. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [7a, b]

710.35 Mitigation – Long practice with no prior discipline record – Found but discounted or not relied on – Present misconduct too serious

Where misconduct is serious, prior record of discipline-free practice is most relevant for mitigation when misconduct was aberrational. Where respondent had decades-long history of alcohol abuse and multiple assaults, and had not shown that alcohol abuse problem underlying his assault conviction was resolved,

Review Department was unable to find that misconduct was unlikely to recur, and gave only some weight to respondent's 27-year record of discipline-free practice. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [7a, b]

710.36 Mitigation — Long practice with no prior discipline — Found but discounted or not relied on — Present misconduct likely to recur

Where respondent practiced law for nearly 35 years without discipline before misconduct commenced but had complete lack of insight into misconduct, only nominal weight in mitigation given for respondent's absence of prior discipline record. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [10]

Only nominal weight in mitigation given for respondent's nine years of discipline-free practice where respondent's misconduct likely to recur as respondent completely lacked insight into misconduct as respondent failed to acknowledge any wrongdoing or demonstrated respondent had learned how to properly handle entrusted funds. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [17]

Mitigating circumstances may include absence of prior disciplinary record over many years of practice when coupled with present misconduct not likely to recur. Where, despite respondent's acknowledgement of wrongdoing, his awareness of dangers of driving under influence of alcohol, and compliance with criminal court obligations, respondent testified drinking and driving was problem for him, professed need for considerable behavioral change by declaring he did not plan to drive anymore, prior DUI did not serve to rehabilitate him, he diminished seriousness of his actions by downplaying their consequences, and had not identified other measures he planned to take to address alcohol problem, Review Department was not fully assured respondent's misconduct was unlikely to recur and assigned only moderate mitigating weight to respondent's 26 years of discipline-free practice. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [3a,b]

Where misconduct is serious, prior record of discipline-free practice is most relevant for mitigation when misconduct was aberrational. Where respondent had decades-long history of alcohol abuse and multiple assaults, and had not shown that alcohol abuse problem underlying his assault conviction was resolved, Review Department was unable to find that misconduct was unlikely to recur, and gave only some weight to respondent's 27-year record of discipline-free practice. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [7a, b]

Where respondent failed to give adequate attention to client's case for almost two years, did not pay client until two years after case settled, and did not pay lienholder until even later, fact that misconduct occurred over significant period of time gave rise to concern that misconduct could recur, so respondent's 10-year record of discipline-free practice warranted only moderate mitigation credit. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [8]

Absence of a prior record of discipline over many years, coupled with present misconduct that is not likely to recur, is a mitigating circumstance. Where respondent completely lacked insight into his misconduct, it could not be viewed as unlikely to recur, so his 11 years of discipline-free practice was assigned only nominal mitigation credit. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [16]

Where respondent testified in disciplinary proceedings that she had fully complied with her legal and ethical duties and would act in the same manner again, respondent did not establish that her misconduct was unlikely to recur, thus reducing the mitigating weight of her lack of a prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [8]

Where respondent had 17 years of discipline-free practice, but respondent's misconduct involved 11 client matters over more than a five-year period, and respondent evinced indifference to rectification and persisted in operating his practice unlawfully, misconduct was not aberrational or unlikely to recur. Accordingly, respondent's record of discipline-free practice was entitled to only minimal mitigating weight. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [10a, b]

Attorney's absence of prior discipline over many years of practice should not be assigned significant mitigating weight unless misconduct is not likely to recur. Where respondent had not shown that the substance abuse problems involved in her misconduct had been resolved, her 19 years of discipline-free practice deserved only some mitigating weight. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [4a, b]

710.39 Long practice with no prior discipline record (1.6(a); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(i)) – Not in practice long enough – Found but discounted or not relied on – Other Reason

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

710.53 Long Practice with no prior discipline record – Not in practice long enough –Prior to commission of misconduct

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

715.50 Mitigation — Good faith — Declined to find

Mitigation includes good faith belief that was honestly held and objectively reasonable. Where attorney unreasonably ignored ethical responsibilities in failing to communicate with clients, no weight in mitigation given for attorney's assertion of good faith belief. Attorney's regular communications with insurer did not absolve attorney of obligation to inform clients of significant developments. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [19]

Good faith belief honesty held and objectively reasonable may be mitigating circumstance. Where respondent's belief that judge's remand order of criminal defendant client was illegal, even if honestly held, did not mitigate respondent's actions of interfering with defendant client's arrest; no reasonable justification existed for respondent's failure to immediately move away from defendant client once judge ordered respondent to do so, and Review Department therefore did not assign mitigating credit. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [8]

An attorney may be entitled to mitigation credit if the attorney establishes a good faith belief that is honestly held and objectively reasonable. Where respondent acknowledged receiving copy of relevant ethics rule with State Bar investigative letter, and reviewed rule after receiving it, even if respondent honestly believed his conduct did not violate rule, it was objectively unreasonable for respondent to continue to violate clear language of rule for over six months after receipt of investigative letter, and Review Department assigned no mitigating credit for good faith. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [9a, b]

Although respondent, as trustee of trust that permitted self-dealing, correctly believed she had authority to borrow from trust, respondent was not entitled to mitigation for good faith because in making loan, respondent did not follow duties under Rules of Professional Conduct and Probate Code. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [14]

Where respondent prosecutor believed that her conduct in delaying statutorily required disclosure of evidence to defense counsel was justified, but her belief was not objectively reasonable based on clear wording of applicable statute, respondent was not entitled to mitigating credit for acting in good faith. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [11]

720.10 Mitigation – Lack of harm to client/public/justice - Found

Mitigation can be given where lack of harm to clients, public, or administration of justice is established. Where record demonstrated that respondent's use of client trust account as personal checking account did not cause any harm to clients or otherwise, and State Bar's argument that it had potential for harm was speculative, lack of harm was entitled to substantial weight. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [8]

720.50 Mitigation – Lack of harm to client/public/justice – Declined to Find

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

720.59 Mitigation – Passage of time and rehabilitation – Declined to Find – Other Reason

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

725.11 Mitigation —Emotional/physical disability/illness – Found – Without expert testimony

Some mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties may be available for extremely stressful family circumstances even when no expert testimony established emotional difficulties as directly responsible for misconduct. Where no expert testimony but respondent presented evidence about emotional difficulties; friend corroborated respondent very distraught after mother's death; respondent submitted medical records documenting family members' diagnoses with serious medical issues; but problems did not fully explain respondent's misconduct as family medical issues did not begin until years after respondent took on one client matter; and respondent had not demonstrated when faced with personal problems in future he would handle them differently to avoid future misconduct, Review Department assigned minimal mitigation for respondent's emotional difficulties that coincided with misconduct but such did not mitigate misconduct that did not coincide with emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [9a, b]

Where hearing judge found that respondent and his therapist testified credibly regarding respondent's emotional difficulties at the time of his misconduct and his subsequent recovery, these findings were entitled to great weight. Where that testimony and other evidence established that respondent had recovered from his emotional difficulties, and respondent had repeatedly attempted to rectify part of his misconduct, respondent established that he had recovered, and his emotional difficulties were properly considered in mitigation. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [6a, b]

Mitigation may be assigned for extreme emotional difficulties or physical or mental disabilities if respondent suffered from them at time of misconduct, expert testimony establishes they were directly responsible for misconduct, and they no longer pose a risk that respondent will commit future misconduct. Where testimony of respondent and his therapist established that extreme emotional distress was directly responsible for respondent's misconduct, and that respondent had recovered, Review Department assigned substantial weight in mitigation, given persuasive quality of respondent's evidence. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [5a-c]

Where expert evidence failed to establish that respondent's mini-strokes were directly responsible for his misconduct, respondent was not entitled to any mitigation for physical or mental disabilities, except as to subsequent act of misconduct that occurred shortly after respondent suffered major stroke. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [4a-c]

725.12 Mitigation —Emotional/physical disability/illness – Found – With expert testimony

725.32 Mitigation — Emotional/physical disability/illness – Found but discounted or not relied on – Lack of causal relation to misconduct

Some mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties may be available for extremely stressful family circumstances even when no expert testimony established emotional difficulties as directly responsible for misconduct. Where no expert testimony but respondent presented evidence about emotional difficulties; friend corroborated respondent very distraught after mother's death; respondent submitted medical records documenting family members' diagnoses with serious medical issues; but problems did not fully explain respondent's misconduct as family medical issues did not begin until years after respondent took on one client matter; and respondent had not demonstrated when faced with personal problems in future he would handle them differently to avoid future misconduct, Review Department assigned minimal mitigation for respondent's emotional difficulties that coincided with misconduct but such did not mitigate misconduct that did not coincide with emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [9a, b]

Where expert evidence failed to establish that respondent's mini-strokes were directly responsible for is misconduct, respondent was not entitled to any mitigation for physical or mental disabilities, except as to subsequent act of misconduct that occurred shortly after respondent suffered major stroke. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [4a-c]

725.36 Mitigation — Emotional/physical disability/illness — Found but discounted or not relied on — Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

Some mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties may be available for extremely stressful family circumstances even when no expert testimony established emotional difficulties as directly responsible for misconduct. Where no expert testimony but respondent presented evidence about emotional difficulties; friend corroborated respondent very distraught after mother's death; respondent submitted medical records documenting family members' diagnoses with serious medical issues; but problems did not fully explain respondent's misconduct as family medical issues did not begin until years after respondent took on one client matter; and respondent had not demonstrated when faced with personal problems in future he would handle them differently to avoid future misconduct, Review Department assigned minimal mitigation for respondent's emotional difficulties that coincided with misconduct but such did not mitigate misconduct that did not coincide with emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [9a, b]

Where respondent's uncontradictory testimony established that misconduct was caused by long-standing depression and prescription drug abuse, respondent was entitled to some mitigation for emotional difficulties or physical or mental disabilities. However, where respondent had a years-long history of abuse, and had started but not completed rehabilitation, she did not show complete, sustained recovery and rehabilitation, and full mitigation was not warranted. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [5a-c]

Where respondent's misconduct was related to prescription drug abuse, Review Department permitted respondent to augment record with evidence of rehabilitation occurring after trial in disciplinary proceedings. Evidence of post-trial rehabilitation was not entitled to full evidentiary weight, however, because it was not subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [6a, b]

Review Department assigns some mitigating weight to attorney's rehabilitation activities while on criminal probation, but gives far greater weight to activities after probation has ended. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [7]

725.50 Mitigation—Emotional/physical disability/illness (1.6(d))—Declined to find

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427.

725.51 Mitigation – Emotional/physical disability/illness – Declined to find – Lack of expert testimony

Standard 1.6(d) provides that mitigation may be assigned for extreme emotional difficulties if (1) respondent suffered from them at time of misconduct; (2) expert testimony established them as directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and (3) emotional difficulties no longer pose risk that respondent will commit future misconduct. Where psychologists who opined on respondent's depressive symptoms at time of misconduct did not do so as experts and gave limited information of respondent's condition and treatment; expert evidence did not establish that, and hearing judge did not focus on whether, extreme emotional difficulties were directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and respondent's record of incomplete participation in disciplinary proceedings cast doubt on hearing judge's summary conclusion that respondent had adequately recovered, Review Department could not give any mitigating weight to respondent's emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [7a-h]

725.56 Mitigation – Emotional/physical disability/illness – Declined to find – Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

Standard 1.6(d) provides that mitigation may be assigned for extreme emotional difficulties if (1) respondent suffered from them at time of misconduct; (2) expert testimony established them as directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and (3) emotional difficulties no longer pose risk that respondent will commit future misconduct. Where psychologists who opined on respondent's depressive symptoms at time of misconduct did not do so as experts and gave limited information of respondent's condition and treatment; expert evidence did not establish that, and hearing judge did not focus on whether, extreme emotional difficulties were directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and respondent's record of incomplete participation in disciplinary proceedings cast doubt on hearing judge's summary conclusion that respondent had adequately recovered, Review Department could not give any mitigating weight to respondent's emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [7a-h]

Extreme emotional difficulties or physical or mental disabilities may be mitigating factor under Standard 1.6(d) if (1) attorney suffered from them at time of misconduct, (2) expert testimony establishes that they were directly responsible for misconduct, and (3) they no longer pose risk that attorney will commit future misconduct. Where respondent had continuously abused alcohol for more than 30 years and had only maintained sobriety for six-month period before trial, record did not clearly establish that respondent's alcoholism and other disorders no longer posed risk of future misconduct, despite expert testimony that respondent's emotional condition was directly responsible for violent behavior and that respondent no longer posed risk of future misconduct unless sobriety not maintained. Accordingly, respondent was not entitled to mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [8a, b]

725.59 Mitigation—Emotional/physical disability/illness (1.6(d))—Declined to find —Other reason

Some mitigation for extreme emotional difficulties may be available for extremely stressful family circumstances even when no expert testimony established emotional difficulties as directly responsible for misconduct. Where no expert testimony but respondent presented evidence about emotional difficulties; friend corroborated respondent very distraught after mother's death; respondent submitted medical records documenting family members' diagnoses with serious medical issues; but problems did not fully explain respondent's misconduct as family medical issues did not begin until years after respondent took on one client matter; and respondent had not demonstrated when faced with personal problems in future he would handle them differently to avoid future misconduct, Review Department assigned minimal mitigation for respondent's emotional difficulties that coincided with misconduct but such did not mitigate misconduct that did not coincide with emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [9a, b]

Standard 1.6(d) provides that mitigation may be assigned for extreme emotional difficulties if (1) respondent suffered from them at time of misconduct; (2) expert testimony established them as directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and (3) emotional difficulties no longer pose risk that respondent will commit future misconduct. Where psychologists who opined on respondent's depressive symptoms at time of misconduct did not do so as experts and gave limited information of respondent's condition and treatment; expert evidence did not establish that, and hearing judge did not focus on whether, extreme emotional difficulties were directly responsible for respondent's misconduct; and respondent's record of incomplete participation in disciplinary proceedings cast doubt on hearing judge's summary conclusion that respondent had adequately recovered, Review Department could not give any mitigating weight to respondent's emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [7a-h]

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

730.10 Candor and cooperation with Victim (1.6(e); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(v)) – Found

Where respondent stated in pretrial statement that she had committed all acts of misconduct of which Review Department found her culpable, as well as stipulating to certain facts, respondent was entitled to considerable weight in mitigation under standard 1.6(e) for cooperation with State Bar. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [11]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

735.10 Mitigation—Candor and cooperation with Bar (1.6(e); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(v)) —Found

In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835.

Although facts were easy to prove, where respondent entered into detailed stipulation which conserved judicial time and resources, and respondent stipulated to facts that formed basis of culpability findings in one count, substantial mitigation was assigned for respondent's cooperation for entering into detailed Stipulation. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [9]

Where respondent stipulated to certain facts and circumstances related to conviction that were not easily provable and which formed basis of moral turpitude finding, substantial mitigation was warranted for cooperation with State Bar. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [7]

Where respondent's answer to disciplinary charges and subsequent stipulation admitted his culpability of willful violation of rule 9.20(c); respondent admitted facts of uncharged misconduct; and respondent did not dispute culpability of violating statutory duty even though stipulation was technically limited to facts of offenses, respondent was entitled to significant mitigating credit for cooperation with State Bar, even though facts in probation and rule 9.20 matters are generally easily provable and stipulations do not save significant time. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [5]

Where respondent cooperated with State Bar by waiving finality of criminal conviction and stipulating to facts and admission of documents, several of which were evidentiary basis of moral turpitude finding, respondent was entitled to substantial mitigation for cooperation with State Bar under Standard 1.6(e). In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [9]

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

Even though respondent was found culpable of failing to cooperate with the State Bar's pre-filing investigation of his misconduct, he was still entitled to significant mitigating credit for entering into a stipulation, after disciplinary charges were filed, which admitted to culpability on two counts and to several facts. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [3a, b]

Where respondent cooperated with State Bar by waiving finality of criminal conviction and stipulating to facts and admission of documents, several of which were evidentiary basis of moral turpitude finding, respondent was entitled to substantial mitigation for cooperation with State Bar under Standard 1.6(e). In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [9]

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

Respondent's comprehensive stipulation regarding facts and culpability, which assisted prosecution and conserved judicial time and resources, was entitled to significant mitigation credit for cooperation with the State Bar. However, where respondent did not stipulate until shortly before trial, and record contained no evidence of prompt objective steps indicating remorse, respondent was not entitled to additional mitigation for remorse. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [6a, b]

735.30 Mitigation—Candor and cooperation with Bar (1.6(e))—Found but Discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

Respondent entitled to mitigation for cooperation with State Bar for entering into stipulation to facts and admission of documents, as respondent admitted facts beyond plea and stipulations saved judicial time and resources. But Review Department concluded respondent was not entitled to full mitigation and assigned only moderate weight for cooperation, as respondent did not admit culpability (i.e., that actions amounted to other misconduct warranting discipline). In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [4a, b]

Mitigation may be assigned for cooperation with State Bar. Where respondent stipulated only to facts and admission of documents, and not to culpability, however, hearing judge erred in affording significant mitigation, and Review Department only gave moderate weight to respondent's cooperation. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [11]

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

Where respondent stipulated only to short set of easily provable facts, hearing judge correctly gave minimal consideration to respondent's cooperation as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [9]

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

735.50 Mitigation—Candor and cooperation with Bar (1.6(e))—Declined to find

Cooperation in communicating with State Bar investigator does not merit mitigation on its own since attorneys are required to do so. Where respondent failed to show actions were spontaneous or otherwise displayed cooperation, Review Department assigned no mitigation under standard 1.6(e). In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [19]

Where respondent did not enter into stipulation until trial, stipulated to facts that were easy to prove, and did not admit culpability, hearing judge properly declined to assign respondent mitigation credit for cooperation. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494 [8]

740.10 Mitigation—Good character references (1.6(f))—Found

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

Where good character evidence included 44 people who were aware of respondent's misconduct and who testified or attested to respondent's good character, including current San Francisco Public Defender, 17 other public defenders, former member of Board of Supervisors for City and County of San Francisco, captain and Assistant Sheriff with San Francisco County Sheriff's Office, former City Attorney for Santa Cruz and Capitola, current and several former clients, two assistant district attorneys, two other attorneys, priest, and 12 others from respondent's personal life, Review Department assigned compelling mitigating weight to respondent's extraordinary good character due to breath of evidence which was wide-ranging and extensive. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [9a-e]

Where six witnesses and one declarant had known respondent from 20 to 40 years, spoke highly of respondent's character – describing respondent as honest, trustworthy, person with "one-in-a-million type of character" and had served as mentor to other attorneys and had deep commitment to community, Review Department held that even though many witnesses did not have detailed knowledge of respondent's misconduct, totality of impressive good character evidence merited substantial weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [8a-b]

In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713.

Where Review Department found respondent borrowed money from client's trust rather than misappropriating it, Review Department did not discredit testimony of respondent's character witnesses for agreeing with respondent that funds were a loan. Where respondent's character witnesses included wide range of people who had known respondent for a long time; each witness had basic understanding of charges against respondent; and witnesses believed respondent had strong moral character, respondent was entitled to substantial weight for good character evidence under standard 1.6(f). In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [12a, b]

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

740.31 Mitigation—Good character references (1.6(1))—Found but discounted or not relied on — Insufficient number or range of References

Limited weight in mitigation for good character where three witnesses, including two attorneys, who had known respondent for at least 10 years and had read notice of disciplinary charges, testified and described respondent as honest and trustworthy, but character witnesses were not from "a wide range" of references as required by standard 1.6(f), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [18]

Character evidence from attorneys and judges deserves great consideration because they have a strong interest in maintaining the honest administration of justice. However, for mitigation purposes in disciplinary proceedings, weight of this evidence is tempered by absence of wide range of references. Where respondent offered no character evidence from general community, Review Department assigned less than full mitigation weight to respondent's good character evidence. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [10]

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427.

740.32 Mitigation—Good character references—Found but discounted or not relied on — References unfamiliar with misconduct

Good character evidence, consisting of 10 letters, including from attorneys, former clients, employee, respondent's wife, and friends, four of whom also testified on respondent's behalf, entitled to moderate weight in mitigation as most character references did not demonstrate full awareness of extent of respondent's misconduct as required by standard l.6(f). In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [9]

Respondent may obtain mitigation for extraordinary good character attested to by wide range of references in legal and general communities who are aware of full extent of misconduct. Where character references included three attorneys, former client, friend, and doctor with whom respondent worked when respondent worked as registered nurse; witnesses had known respondent between 12 and 29 years and spoke positively regarding respondent's character and abilities as attorney but were not aware of full extent of misconduct, limited weight in mitigation given for extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [8]

Where good character evidence was presented from wide range of references, including from attorneys, friends, and clients, but most witnesses were unaware of full extent of respondent's misconduct, as declarants did not state awareness this was respondent's second DUI, Review Department assigned only moderate weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [5a-d]

Where character witnesses consisting of former employees, clients, attorneys, friend, and respondent's daughter testified on respondent's behalf, these established wide range of references, but several issues diminished strength of testimony including that other than respondent's daughter, only two character witnesses had known respondent for significant amount of time; no detailed testimony regarding respondent's daily conduct and mode of living; witnesses' testimony did not make clear they were aware of full extent of misconduct; and while three attorneys testified, one was respondent's daughter and other two had only known respondent a few years, Review Department assigned limited weight in mitigation to evidence of extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [18a-c]

Where six character references and testimony of two witnesses from broad spectrum of community established respondent's good character, but not all character references demonstrated full awareness of extent of respondent's misconduct, Review Department adopted hearing judge's conclusion that good character entitled to only moderate weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [6a, b]

Where respondent's good character and diligent representation of clients were attested to by five trial witnesses and 18 declarations, but most witnesses did not demonstrate general understanding of charges against respondent, respondent's character evidence was entitled to only moderate mitigating weight. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [4a, b]

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

Where respondent failed to admit falsification of evidence until confronted by opposing counsel, and took no prompt remedial action despite opportunity to do so, respondent's subsequent expression of remorse for his wrongdoing was not entitled to significant weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [8]

740.33 Mitigation – Good character references – Found but discounted or not relied on – Inadequate showing generally

Where character witnesses consisting of former employees, clients, attorneys, friend, and respondent's daughter testified on respondent's behalf, these established wide range of references, but several issues diminished strength of testimony including that other than respondent's daughter, only two character witnesses had known respondent for significant amount of time; no detailed testimony regarding respondent's daily conduct and mode of living; witnesses' testimony did not make clear they were aware of full extent of misconduct; and while three attorneys testified, one was respondent's daughter and other two had only known respondent a few years, Review Department assigned limited weight in mitigation to evidence of extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [18a-c]

Attorneys are entitled to mitigation if extraordinary good character is attested to by wide range of references in legal and general communities who are aware of full extent of misconduct. Where respondent's three character witnesses, including his young adult son and two attorneys, were all fully aware of charges against respondent and praised respondent's excellent reputation as criminal defense attorney, hearing judge erred in discounting witnesses' testimony based on bias due to connections with respondent, and assigning only minimal mitigating weight. Witnesses' potential bias was not disqualifying but warranted consideration in weighing evidence. Nonetheless, given youth of respondent's son and attorney witnesses' having only known respondent for 10 years and five years, respondent was entitled to moderate mitigation for good character. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [10a-c]

740.39 Mitigation—Good character references (1.6(f))— Found but discounted or not relied on—Other reason

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

Assigning limited weight to character witnesses solely because witnesses have financial or familial relationship with respondent not supported by case law. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [10]

Where character witnesses consisting of former employees, clients, attorneys, friend, and respondent's daughter testified on respondent's behalf, these established wide range of references, but several issues diminished strength of testimony including that other than respondent's daughter, only two character witnesses had known respondent for significant amount of time; no detailed testimony regarding respondent's daily conduct and mode of living; witnesses' testimony did not make clear they were aware of full extent of misconduct; and while three attorneys testified, one was respondent's daughter and other two had only known respondent a few years, Review Department assigned limited weight in mitigation to evidence of extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [18a-c]

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

740.51 Mitigation—Good character references (1.6(f))—Declined to find—Insufficient number of References

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511

740.53 Mitigation—Good character references (1.6(f))—Declined to find—Inadequate showing generally

Where respondent's character evidence consisted of four witnesses who testified at trial (two of whom also submitted character letters) and two additional character letters; witnesses had known respondent for many years; witnesses reported respondent is honest, of good moral character, and dedicated to clients, but one witness revealed limitations as to respondent's interpersonal and legal skills, and witnesses were all former or current clients and were unaware of full extent of respondent misconduct, respondent failed to establish mitigation for extraordinary good character. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [11a, b]

745 Mitigation—Remorse/restitution/atonement (1.6(g); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(vii))

Mitigation may be found if misconduct remote in time and subsequent rehabilitation established. Where misconduct occurred three years earlier, which was remote in time, and respondent demonstrated in those years more than not engaging in additional misconduct, but provided evidence of professional growth and maturity, respondent's improved professional deportment displayed substantial rehabilitation from misconduct, and respondent entitled to substantial mitigation. Although hearing judge considered facts under standard 1.6(g) (remorse and recognition of wrongdoing), Review Department concluded facts more appropriately considered under standard 1.6(h) to show respondent's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [11a-c]

745.10 Mitigation—Remorse/restitution/atonement—Found

Mitigation may include prompt objective steps demonstrating spontaneous remorse and recognition of wrongdoing and timely atonement. Where respondent, who was new public defender (1) made disrespectful statements to one judge but apologized to judge shortly thereafter; and (2) failed to abide by another judge's order and made disrespectful statement to judge but did not immediately apologize to judge, as to do so would have put respondent at odds with San Francisco's Public Defenders Office and then-Public Defender, but after being found guilty of contempt by judge paid fine, reported contempt order to State Bar, displayed remorse during disciplinary proceedings, and accepted responsibility, Review Department gave full mitigating weight to respondent's demonstration of remorse and acceptance of responsibility in both incidents, as much as one could reasonably expect under circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [10a-d]

Respondents are entitled to mitigation credit for prompt objective steps, demonstrating spontaneous remorse and recognition of wrongdoing and timely atonement. Where respondent acknowledged regret for actions that caused harm and inconvenience; notified insurance company of fault; and paid damages to property owner for damage not covered by insurance company before any threat of State Bar disciplinary proceeding, substantial mitigation was afforded for respondent's remorse. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [8]

745.32 Mitigation—-Remorse/restitution/atonement (1.6(g))— Found but discounted or not relied on – Inadequate showing generally

Where respondent expressed remorse; quickly admitted fault in civil matter resulting from accident caused by driving under influence of alcohol; and cooperated in disciplinary matter but made no other assurances or plans to address alcohol problem beyond abstaining from driving, which demonstrated failure to fully recognize wrongdoing, only some mitigating credit was deserved for prompt objective steps taken demonstrating spontaneous remorse and recognition of wrongdoing and timely atonement In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [7a-c]

745.39 Mitigation— Remorse/restitution/atonement (1.6(g)) — Found But discounted or not relied on — Other reason

Since respondent's misconduct lasted decade, respondent's actions evidencing remorse were not prompt, as required for this mitigating factor, but based on (1) respondent's evidence of contrition; (2) increased care respondent now gives matters currently handled by her before courts; and (3) respondent satisfied in full costs assessed by South Carolina within three months of South Carlina reprimand becoming final, Review Department affirmed limited weight to mitigating factor of remorse given by hearing judge, which was consistent with decisions cited by hearing judge which did not normally accord remorse significant weight by itself. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [4]

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

Where Review Department found that respondent acted intentionally in committing act of moral turpitude, it declined to give intentionality additional weight in aggravation. Factors giving rise to culpability for moral turpitude should not be given double weight by considering them again in aggravation. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479 [7]

745.52 Mitigation—Remorse/restitution/atonement—Declined to find—Inadequate showing generally

Where respondent sought additional mitigation for (1) prompt action that rectified ethical issues; (2) State Bar's more than one-year delay in bringing charges; and (3) respondent's voluntary cessation of misconduct before charges were brought, clear and convincing evidence did not support additional mitigation. Respondent's rectifying actions were not prompt where respondent continued to commit misconduct months after contact from State Bar; respondent showed neither delay nor prejudice from State Bar's 17-month delay in filing disciplinary charges; and respondent's having ceased misconduct before charges were filed did not qualify as mitigating circumstance under applicable standard. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [12]

Respondent's comprehensive stipulation regarding facts and culpability, which assisted prosecution and conserved judicial time and resources, was entitled to significant mitigation credit for cooperation with the State Bar. However, where respondent did not stipulate until shortly before trial, and record contained no evidence of prompt objective steps indicating remorse, respondent was not entitled to additional mitigation for remorse. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [6a, b]

745.59 Mitigation – Remorse/restitution/atonement – Declined to find – Other reason

Prompt objective steps, demonstrating spontaneous remorse and recognition of wrongdoing and timely atonement, qualify as mitigation. Where respondent claimed remorse and recognition of wrongdoing based on belated filings of rule 9.20(c) declaration, proof of Ethics School compliance, and delinquent quarterly probation report, but these steps were not taken spontaneously because respondent was aware Probation enforcement proceedings were underway, respondent was not entitled to mitigation. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [6]

750.10 Mitigation – Passage of time and rehabilitation – Found

Mitigation may be found if misconduct remote in time and subsequent rehabilitation established. Where misconduct occurred three years earlier, which was remote in time, and respondent demonstrated in those years more than not engaging in additional misconduct, but provided evidence of professional growth and maturity, respondent's improved professional deportment displayed substantial rehabilitation from misconduct, and respondent entitled to substantial mitigation. Although hearing judge considered facts under standard 1.6(g) (remorse and recognition of wrongdoing), Review Department concluded facts more appropriately considered under standard 1.6(h) to show respondent's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [11a-c]

750.52 Mitigation – Passage of time and rehabilitation – Declined to Find – Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

Mitigation under standard 1.6(h) requires both that misconduct be remote in time and that there be subsequent rehabilitation. Although respondent had practiced law for nine years without misconduct since conviction in underlying disciplinary matter, respondent's completion of criminal probation terms was not determinative of rehabilitation. Where respondent, during disciplinary proceedings had shown indifference, lack of truthfulness and candor, and unwillingness to accept full responsibility for criminal act, respondent had not established clear and convincing evidence of rehabilitation. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [12a, b]

750.59 Mitigation – Passage of time and rehabilitation – Declined to Find – Other reason

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

755.51 Mitigation – Prejudicial delay in proceedings – Declined to find – Delay not sufficiently lengthy

Where respondent sought additional mitigation for (1) prompt action that rectified ethical issues; (2) State Bar's more than one-year delay in bringing charges; and (3) respondent's voluntary cessation of misconduct before charges were brought, clear and convincing evidence did not support additional mitigation. Respondent's rectifying actions were not prompt where respondent continued to commit misconduct months after contact from State Bar; respondent showed neither delay nor prejudice from State Bar's 17-month delay in filing disciplinary charges; and respondent's having ceased misconduct before charges were filed did not qualify as mitigating circumstance under applicable standard. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [12]

755.52 Mitigation – Prejudicial delay in proceedings – Declined to find – Inadequate showing of prejudice

Excessive delay by State Bar in conducting disciplinary proceedings causing prejudice to attorney is mitigating circumstance. For delay to constitute mitigating circumstance, attorney must demonstrate that delay impeded preparation or presentation of effective defense. Where respondent (1) was put on notice regarding potential disciplinary proceedings close in time to alleged misconduct; (2) argued bank records could have aided defense but failed to obtain and keep such records; and (3) did not present sufficient evidence to suggest that Office of Chief Trial Counsel's delay affected ability to present proper defense,

Review Department assigned no mitigation. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [19]

Where respondent sought additional mitigation for (1) prompt action that rectified ethical issues; (2) State Bar's more than one-year delay in bringing charges; and (3) respondent's voluntary cessation of misconduct before charges were brought, clear and convincing evidence did not support additional mitigation. Respondent's rectifying actions were not prompt where respondent continued to commit misconduct months after contact from State Bar; respondent showed neither delay nor prejudice from State Bar's 17-month delay in filing disciplinary charges; and respondent's having ceased misconduct before charges were filed did not qualify as mitigating circumstance under applicable standard. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [12]

757.10 Mitigation – Restitution without threat or force – Found

Restitution is mitigating circumstance if made without threat or force of administrative, disciplinary, civil or criminal proceedings. Where respondent, upon learning of amount owed, promptly reimbursed city and property owner for damages resulting from vehicular accident caused by respondent while under influence of excessive alcohol, respondent was entitled to moderate weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [9]

757.51 Mitigation – Restitution made without threat or force of proceedings (1.6(j)) – Declined to find – Coerced or belated restitution

Under standard 1.6(j), restitution is a mitigating circumstance where made without threat of legal proceedings. Where respondent did not make full restitution until after complaint was filed with State Bar, respondent was not entitled to mitigation for restitution. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [13]

765.10 Mitigation—Substantial Pro Bono work—Found

Where character witness testified to respondent's pro bono work, which was confirmed by respondent and corroborated by letters from two additional character witnesses, and declaration from respondent's wife contained summary of numerous community service activities respondent had engaged in, quantity and quality of services was commendable and supported finding of substantial weight in mitigation for community service. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [11]

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

765.31 Mitigation—Substantial Pro Bono work—Found but discounted or not relied on—Insufficient evidence

Attorney's pro bono work and community service can be mitigating circumstance. Where there was lack evidence to support respondent's own claims of good deeds because respondent's testimony did not detail hours respondent had dedicated to community service or actual work for organization, Review Department afforded only limited weight in mitigation to respondent's pro bono and community service work. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [20]

765.32 Mitigation — Substantial pro bono work — Found but discounted or not relied on — Pro bono work not substantial

Where respondent provided legal representation to two friends without payment, and respondent's testimony regarding recent pro bono case in which he devoted hundreds of work hours was corroborated by declaration from another attorney, Review Department assigned moderate mitigating weight to pro bono efforts, as respondent had not shown a prolonged dedication to pro bono work which would merit substantial mitigating weight. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [6a,b]

765.39 Mitigation — Substantial pro bono work — Found but discounted or not relied on — Insufficient evidence

Pro bono work is a mitigating circumstance. Where two-character witnesses discussed respondent's pro bono work for client with serious drug problem; respondent worked for several years on client's various criminal cases and acted as client's mentor; and client credited respondent for client's two-year sobriety, Review Department concluded respondent's pro bono work was entitled to mitigation but assigned limited mitigating weight as respondent did not establish prolonged dedication to pro bono work. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [10]

Where respondent provided legal representation to two friends without payment, and respondent's testimony regarding recent pro bono case in which he devoted hundreds of work hours was corroborated by declaration from another attorney, Review Department assigned moderate mitigating weight to pro bono efforts, as respondent had not shown a prolonged dedication to pro bono work which would merit substantial mitigating weight. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [6a,b]

Respondents deserve mitigation credit for pro bono and community service activities, even if shown only by respondent's own testimony. Such work does not qualify for full mitigation credit, however, where respondent's testimony lacks specificity and is uncorroborated, so State Bar Court cannot evaluate full measure of respondent's dedication and zeal in such activities. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [8a, b]

765.51 Mitigation—Substantial Pro Bono work—Declined to find—Insufficient evidence

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

795 Mitigation – Other mitigating factors – Declined to find

Where respondent did not prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent reasonably relied on unclear statements from attorney who sought to assist respondent with California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 obligations, and who followed up conversation with respondent with email that provided instructions for rule 9.20 compliance, including pre-populated forms to file after respondent provided appropriate notices, Review Department declined to assign mitigation credit for reliance on attorney. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [10]

Where respondent sought additional mitigation for (1) prompt action that rectified ethical issues; (2) State Bar's more than one-year delay in bringing charges; and (3) respondent's voluntary cessation of misconduct before charges were brought, clear and convincing evidence did not support additional mitigation. Respondent's rectifying actions were not prompt where respondent continued to commit misconduct months after contact from State Bar; respondent showed neither delay nor prejudice from State Bar's 17-month delay in filing disciplinary charges; and respondent's having ceased misconduct before charges were filed did not qualify as mitigating circumstance under applicable standard. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [12]

801.11 Application of Standards – General Issues – Effective date/retroactive application of interim Standards

Current version of standard 1.6(a) provides that absence of prior record of discipline over many years of practice, coupled with present misconduct not likely to recur, is a mitigating factor. Unlike prior version of standard, current version does not include analysis of seriousness of misconduct. Under current version of standard, where respondent's misconduct was limited to single incident for which respondent apologized, and no facts suggested misconduct would be repeated, hearing judge erred in relying on former version of standard and giving respondent only minimal mitigation credit for 15 years of discipline-free practice based on seriousness of misconduct and lack of insight. Respondent was entitled to substantial weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [10a, b]

801.13 General Issues re Application of Standards – Effective date/retroactive application of 2019 Standards

Where disciplinary standard in effect at time of respondent's misconduct made disbarment presumed discipline for felony convictions involving moral turpitude in surrounding facts and circumstances, that version of standard applied to respondent's case, rather than later version adopted to reflect non-retroactive statutory change requiring summary disbarment. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [11]

801.30 General Issues re Application of Standards—Effect of standards as guidelines

In analyzing standards, Review Department applies three-step analysis: first, determining which standard specifies the most severe sanction for the misconduct at issue; second, analyzing whether an exception exists; and third, determining and explaining whether there is any reason to depart from the presumptive discipline prescribed by the standard. Where respondent had two prior records of discipline, including one actual suspension; respondent's conduct demonstrated unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities and disrespect for legal system, and respondent failed to show compelling mitigation or any reason to depart from presumptive discipline under standard 1.8, disbarment was appropriate under this analysis. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [4a-d]

801.41 General Issues re Application of Standards—Deviation from standards—Found to be justified

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

Under standard 1.7(c), lesser sanction appropriate if misconduct minor; little or no injury occurred to client, public, legal system, or profession; and attorney willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct before one judge and immediately apologized for disrespectful comments which judge appeared to accept, and misconduct before another judge was very brief and resulted in no appreciable injury to client, public, legal system, or profession, Review Department concluded both incidents were "minor misconduct" under standard 1.7(c). Where respondent established rehabilitation by acknowledgement that respondent would act differently in future which indicated respondent willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, Review Department concluded, given circumstances, discipline unnecessary and would be punitive considering compelling mitigation, lack of aggravation, narrow extent of respondent's misconduct, and lack of consequential harm. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [12]

Where applicable standard provided for presumed discipline of three-month actual suspension for commingling, but respondent's misconduct was minor and aberrational; there were multiple mitigating circumstances, including 15-year discipline-free record, no client harm or risk of harm, good character, and cooperation, candor, and honesty; mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed one aggravating circumstance of multiple acts; and respondent demonstrated ability to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, public reproval with conditions of State Bar Ethics School and Client Trust Accounting School was appropriate discipline under standard providing for lesser discipline under such circumstances. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [13a-d]

801.45 General Issues re Application of Standards—Deviation from standards—Found not to be justified

Standard 2.1(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, provides for disbarment for intentional misappropriation of entrusted funds. Disbarment may be avoided if amount misappropriated is "insignificantly small" or "sufficiently compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate," but where respondent misappropriated $175,000 – a very significant amount of money – and there were no compelling mitigating circumstances, those conditions were not applicable. Furthermore, no reason existed to depart from discipline in standard 2.1(a) where respondent (1) failed to deposit $175,000 in client funds into client trust account (CTA), instead depositing portion of money in business account where respondent used money for personal expenses without authority; (2) failed to keep $175,000 in trust as respondent was required to do; (3) respondent was culpable of three moral turpitude violations for misrepresentations to non-client business, court and opposing counsel in litigation, and to Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC); (4) in trying to cover up mistakes by opening up CTA to disburse funds, respondent wrote checks when there were insufficient funds to cover the checks and two checks were returned; (5) attempted to shift blame which demonstrated failure to take responsibility for actions; (6) minimized behavior; (7) failed to appreciate fiduciary duties to client and non-client business; (8) defended actions by claiming money was returned, despite clear precedent that attorney who returned misappropriated funds is still culpable of misappropriation; (9) prevalent aspect of disciplinary proceeding was respondent's dishonesty, and respondent demonstrated indifference regarding misconduct which demonstrated respondent unfit to practice law, disbarment was appropriate and necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [21a-e]

California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 provides that willful violation is cause for disbarment or suspension. Discipline less than disbarment has typically been imposed for rule 9.20 violations where attorney demonstrated good faith, made unsuccessful attempts to file compliance declaration, proved significant mitigation with little aggravation, or presented other extenuating circumstances. Where respondent failed to comply with notice requirements of rule 9.20; respondent's rule 9.20 compliance declaration contained false statements; respondent violated court orders in both his past and present disciplinary cases; and there was lack of compelling mitigation, respondent's attempt to comply with rule 9.20 and mitigation for extraordinary good character and cooperation made disbarment unduly punitive, and Review Department concluded appropriate progressive discipline was two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent provided proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice law pursuant to standard 1.2(c)(1) to impress on respondent the seriousness of misconduct and consequences for failing to follow ethical duties as attorney. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [11a-e]

Willful violation of rule 9.20 is considered serious ethical offense for which disbarment is generally appropriate. Standard 1.8(b) provides that disbarment is appropriate where respondent has two or more prior records of discipline if: (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter; (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate a pattern of misconduct; or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent who violated rule 9.20 had three prior records of discipline, including one-year actual suspension, and had repeatedly failed to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and exceptions to standard 1.8(b) were not applicable, hearing judge erred in failing to analyze applicability of standard 1.8(b). Where no reasons existed to depart from discipline called for by standard 1.8(b), Review Department recommended disbarment to adequately ensure public protection. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [8a-f]

Prior to July 1, 2019, under former standard 2.15(b), disbarment was presumed sanction for felony conviction in which surrounding facts and circumstances involved moral turpitude, unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Where respondent was convicted of felony assault and grossly negligent discharge of firearm, and moral turpitude was found, disbarment was warranted despite respondent's showing of good character, cooperation with State Bar, and discipline-free career, as those factors were not most compelling in light of seriousness of criminal misconduct. Moreover, respondent's rehabilitation from alcoholism was in early phase, and respondent had not presented persuasive evidence of being on path to full sobriety and full understanding of extent of alcohol problem. Accordingly, discipline less than disbarment would fail to protect public and courts, and would undermine confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [10a-c]

Where respondent repeatedly practiced law while suspended, despite having stipulated to suspension for the same misconduct in earlier disciplinary proceeding, respondent's prior and current misconduct established respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, and disbarment was necessary to prevent future misconduct. Where disbarment or actual suspension was presumed sanction for respondent's current misconduct (act of moral turpitude and practicing while suspended), and respondent had two or more prior records of discipline including actual suspension, record disclosed no reason to deviate from Standards calling for respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [9a-e]

Where presumed sanction applicable to respondent's mishandling of client funds was three months actual suspension, and mitigating circumstances did not sufficiently outweigh aggravating circumstance to justify deviation from standard, Review Department recommended 90-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [10]

When a respondent has two or more prior records of discipline, and an actual suspension was ordered in any of them, or the prior and current matters demonstrate either a pattern of misconduct or an unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, disbarment is appropriate. Deviation from the presumptive discipline of disbarment must be based on clearly articulate reasons. Discipline short of disbarment is appropriate only if the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, or the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as the current misconduct. Where respondent had two prior actual suspensions; the misconduct in his third disciplinary matter was similar to that in his first, showing his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical duties; respondent violated his probation; and he did not present compelling mitigation, further suspension and probation would not prevent him from committing future misconduct that would endanger the profession and the public. Thus, hearing judge erred in recommending only a two-year suspension; disbarment was the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [5a-f]

Where respondent committed most of current misconduct after commencement of disciplinary proceedings regarding respondent's prior misconduct, Review Department did not apply general principle that aggravating force of prior discipline is diminished if misconduct leading to prior discipline occurred during same time period as current misconduct. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [2]

Purpose of disciplinary standard calling for greater discipline in second case is to address recidivist misconduct. Nature of misconduct in second case need not be more serious than in prior case in order to warrant increased discipline. Where respondent's multiple acts of misconduct in second case significantly harmed client, and occurred when respondent should have been aware of ethical duties because prior disciplinary proceeding had been initiated when misconduct in second case occurred, nothing in record warranted departure from standard requiring greater discipline for subsequent misconduct, even though misconduct in second case was less serious. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [7]

Where respondent established substantial mitigation, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel sought only stayed suspension, Review Department nonetheless imposed 30-day actual suspension, because applicable Standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment; mitigation was not sufficient to justify deviation from Standard; respondent's misconduct in violating five separate court orders was serious, not minor; and respondent had not yet provided proof of payment of court-ordered monetary sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [6a-d]

Where (a) respondent had received brief actual suspensions in two prior disciplinary matters; (b) respondent's prior and current misconduct demonstrated his unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms; and (c) respondent's limited mitigation neither was compelling, nor predominated over significant aggravation, evidence presented no adequate reason to depart from standard making disbarment appropriate discipline after two priors involving actual suspension. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511 [12a-c]

Where (a) respondent received 60-day actual suspension in first prior disciplinary matter and nine-month suspension in second prior disciplinary matter; (b) respondent's past and current misconduct demonstrated his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical responsibilities; and (c) respondent's nominal mitigation was not compelling, nor did it predominate over the significant aggravation of respondent's two prior discipline records and his multiple acts of misconduct, disbarment was appropriate under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [15a, b]

In analyzing standards, Review Department applies three-step analysis: first, determining which standard specifies the most severe sanction for the misconduct at issue; second, analyzing whether an exception exists; and third, determining and explaining whether there is any reason to depart from the presumptive discipline prescribed by the standard. Where respondent had two prior records of discipline, including one actual suspension; respondent's conduct demonstrated unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities and disrespect for legal system, and respondent failed to show compelling mitigation or any reason to depart from presumptive discipline under standard 1.8, disbarment was appropriate under this analysis. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [4a-d]

801.47 General Issues re Application of Standards—Deviation from standards— Necessity to explain

Willful violation of rule 9.20 is considered serious ethical offense for which disbarment is generally appropriate. Standard 1.8(b) provides that disbarment is appropriate where respondent has two or more prior records of discipline if: (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter; (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate a pattern of misconduct; or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent who violated rule 9.20 had three prior records of discipline, including one-year actual suspension, and had repeatedly failed to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and exceptions to standard 1.8(b) were not applicable, hearing judge erred in failing to analyze applicability of standard 1.8(b). Where no reasons existed to depart from discipline called for by standard 1.8(b), Review Department recommended disbarment to adequately ensure public protection. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [8a-f]

When a respondent has two or more prior records of discipline, and an actual suspension was ordered in any of them, or the prior and current matters demonstrate either a pattern of misconduct or an unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, disbarment is appropriate. Deviation from the presumptive discipline of disbarment must be based on clearly articulate reasons. Discipline short of disbarment is appropriate only if the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, or the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as the current misconduct. Where respondent had two prior actual suspensions; the misconduct in his third disciplinary matter was similar to that in his first, showing his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical duties; respondent violated his probation; and he did not present compelling mitigation, further suspension and probation would not prevent him from committing future misconduct that would endanger the profession and the public. Thus, hearing judge erred in recommending only a two-year suspension; disbarment was the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [5a-f]

Where (a) respondent had received brief actual suspensions in two prior disciplinary matters; (b) respondent's prior and current misconduct demonstrated his unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms; and (c) respondent's limited mitigation neither was compelling, nor predominated over significant aggravation, evidence presented no adequate reason to depart from standard making disbarment appropriate discipline after two priors involving actual suspension. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [12a-c]

In analyzing standards, Review Department applies three-step analysis: first, determining which standard specifies the most severe sanction for the misconduct at issue; second, analyzing whether an exception exists; and third, determining and explaining whether there is any reason to depart from the presumptive discipline prescribed by the standard. Where respondent had two prior records of discipline, including one actual suspension; respondent's conduct demonstrated unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities and disrespect for legal system, and respondent failed to show compelling mitigation or any reason to depart from presumptive discipline under standard 1.8, disbarment was appropriate under this analysis. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [4a-d]

802.10 Application of Standards – Part A – Standard 1.1 (Purposes and Scope of Standards)

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

802.20 Application of Standards—Standard 1.2 (Definitions)

In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835.

802.21 Application of Standards—Standard 1.2 (Definitions)—Prior record of discipline

Under rule 5.106(D) of Rules of Procedure, prior record of discipline was properly considered for purposes of aggravation and level of discipline after respondent's culpability was established. Hearing judge therefore properly denied respondent's request to strike evidence of prior discipline record pursuant to rule 1260 of the State Bar Court Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [5a, b]

Where misconduct underlying present proceeding occurred before charges were filed in respondent's other two disciplinary proceedings, Review Department afforded less weight to aggravating force of respondent's discipline history. Prior, not subsequent, discipline is considered indicative of recidivist attorney's inability to conform conduct to ethical norms. Under such circumstances, Review Department considered totality of respondent's misconduct to determine appropriate aggravating weight. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [6a, b]

For purposes of analyzing respondent's prior record as aggravation, date OCTC filed notice of disciplinary charges in prior disciplinary proceeding is most relevant. As of that date, respondent is put on notice that charged conduct is disciplinable. Accordingly, where respondent committed additional misconduct after filing of notice in prior proceeding, hearing judge erred in giving diminished weight to prior discipline because it overlapped with present misconduct. Rather, respondent's current misconduct was significantly aggravated by prior records demonstrating continuing unwillingness or inability to conform conduct to ethical norms, especially where prior and present misconduct both involved unauthorized practice of Saw and repeated violations of sanctions orders. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [12a-c]

Where respondent continued to commit misconduct of same nature after stipulating to discipline in prior matter, prior discipline warranted significant aggravating weight even though some of current and prior misconduct overlapped. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [5]

Under rule 5.106(A), hearing judge should have considered previous disciplinary order as a prior record of discipline even though it was not yet final. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr 427. [3]

802.29 Application of Standards—Standard 1.2— Other Definitions

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852

802.50 Application of Standards — General Issues — Standard 1.4 (Conditions Attached to Sanctions)

Where respondent was culpable of disobeying court orders by failing to pay monetary sanctions, payment of the sanctions was imposed as condition of respondent's disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [7]

802.61 Application of Standards — General Issues — Standard 1.7(a) — Most severe applicable sanction to be used

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

In analyzing applicable standards, State Bar Court first determines which standard specifies most severe sanction for misconduct. Where respondent was charged with two counts of mishandling client funds, and hearing judge found respondent not culpable on those counts but Review Department reversed that finding, Review Department applied most severe standard applicable to those charges, which provided for greater minimum actual suspension than recommended by hearing judge. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [9a, b]

Purpose of disciplinary standard calling for greater discipline in second case is to address recidivist misconduct. Nature of misconduct in second case need not be more serious than in prior case in order to warrant increased discipline. Where respondent's multiple acts of misconduct in second case significantly harmed client, and occurred when respondent should have been aware of ethical duties because prior disciplinary proceeding had been initiated when misconduct in second case occurred, nothing in record warranted departure from standard requiring greater discipline for subsequent misconduct, even though misconduct in second case was less serious. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [7]

802.62 Application of Standards – Standard 1.7 – Effect of aggravation on appropriate sanction

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

802.63 Application of Standards – Standard 1.7 – Effect of mitigation on appropriate sanction

Under standard 1.7(c), lesser sanction appropriate if misconduct minor; little or no injury occurred to client, public, legal system, or profession; and attorney willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct before one judge and immediately apologized for disrespectful comments which judge appeared to accept, and misconduct before another judge was very brief and resulted in no appreciable injury to client, public, legal system, or profession, Review Department concluded both incidents were "minor misconduct" under standard 1.7(c). Where respondent established rehabilitation by acknowledgement that respondent would act differently in future which indicated respondent willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, Review Department concluded, given circumstances, discipline unnecessary and would be punitive considering compelling mitigation, lack of aggravation, narrow extent of respondent's misconduct, and lack of consequential harm. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [12]

Disciplinary proceeding may be resolved by admonition if (1) it does not involve Client Security Fund (CSF) matter or serious offense; (2) violation either was not intentional or occurred under mitigating circumstances; and (3) no significant harm resulted. Where respondent's misconduct did not involve CSF matter; was not "serious offense" as defined by rule 5.126(B); both incidents of misconduct occurred under mitigating circumstances under standard 1.6 and other unique circumstances considered mitigating; and respondent acknowledged wrongdoing and demonstrated future misconduct unlikely to recur, admonition was appropriate. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835.[13a-c]

Where applicable standard provided for presumed discipline of three-month actual suspension for commingling, but respondent's misconduct was minor and aberrational; there were multiple mitigating circumstances, including 15-year discipline-free record, no client harm or risk of harm, good character, and cooperation, candor, and honesty; mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed one aggravating circumstance of multiple acts; and respondent demonstrated ability to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, public reproval with conditions of State Bar Ethics School and Client Trust Accounting School was appropriate discipline under standard providing for lesser discipline under such circumstances. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [13a-d]

Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed money from client's trust; loan was authorized by trust but respondent did not comply with rule 3-300 and breached fiduciary duty under Probate Code; respondent's misconduct was serious but aberrational, involving only one client matter; mitigation was considerable, and Review Department found no aggravation or moral turpitude, respondent's misconduct warranted actual suspension, but not disbarment. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [15a, b]

802.64 Application of Standards — Standard 1.7 (Determination of Appropriate Sanctions) — Limits on effect of mitigating circumstances

Where respondent established substantial mitigation, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel sought only stayed suspension, Review Department nonetheless imposed 30-day actual suspension, because applicable Standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment; mitigation was not sufficient to justify deviation from Standard; respondent's misconduct in violating five separate court orders was serious, not minor; and respondent had not yet provided proof of payment of court-ordered monetary sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [6a-d]

802.69 Application of Standards — Determination of Appropriate Sanctions — Generally/Other Application of Standards — Standard 2.12(a) — Applied–actual suspension — Violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(a) through (h)

Where respondent misrepresented case settled when it was actually dismissed, respondent's failure to inform client about dismissal was factually joined with misrepresentation respondent was working on case and getting client settlement money. Review Department therefore treated moral turpitude violation and violation of failing to inform client of significant developments as single offense involving moral turpitude for discipline purposes. No additional disciplinary weight was given to Business and Professions Code section 6068(m) violation because respondent's misconduct underlying section 6068(m) charge was factually same as misconduct underlying moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [2a, b]

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

Prosecutors have an elevated standard of candor and impartiality as compared to other attorneys. They must be zealous in their representation, but not at the cost of justice. Where respondent lost sight of her prosecutorial duty to shield against injustice, in failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel despite repeated requests, her misconduct was serious, and her actions fell substantially below the standards required of a prosecutor. Her conduct warranted more than the minimum 30-day suspension described in the applicable standard, but the hearing judge's recommendation of a one-year actual suspension with a proof of rehabilitation requirement was not necessary. A six-month actual suspension was sufficient to convey to respondent the gravity and consequences of her actions. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [12a-b]

805 Application of Standards - Part A (General Standards) –Standard 1.8 – (a) Current discipline should be greater than prior

Standard 1.8(b) does not consider the remoteness of any prior discipline. Remoteness is only considered under standard 1.8(a) where there is single prior record of discipline. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [21]

805.10 Application of Standards—Standard 1.8(a) (current discipline greater than prior)—Applied

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; lacked candor, including misconduct during disciplinary proceedings; had prior discipline record resulting in 30-day period of actual suspension (which was given diminished weight as that misconduct occurred after misconduct in current disciplinary matter); and aggravation equaled mitigation, based on totality of facts and comparing it to other cases, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was minimum discipline necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. Review Department concerned that respondent's prior discipline, which involved nearly 70 instances of filing false pleadings, combined with respondent's lack of insight and failure to accept responsibility for dishonesty in current disciplinary matter, showed possibilities of future recidivism. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [13a, b]

California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 provides that willful violation is cause for disbarment or suspension. Discipline less than disbarment has typically been imposed for rule 9.20 violations where attorney demonstrated good faith, made unsuccessful attempts to file compliance declaration, proved significant mitigation with little aggravation, or presented other extenuating circumstances. Where respondent failed to comply with notice requirements of rule 9.20; respondent's rule 9.20 compliance declaration contained false statements; respondent violated court orders in both his past and present disciplinary cases; and there was lack of compelling mitigation, respondent's attempt to comply with rule 9.20 and mitigation for extraordinary good character and cooperation made disbarment unduly punitive, and Review Department concluded appropriate progressive discipline was two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent provided proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice law pursuant to standard 1.2(c)(1) to impress on respondent the seriousness of misconduct and consequences for failing to follow ethical duties as attorney. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [11a-e]

Under rule 9.20(d) of the California Rules of Court, an attorney may be suspended or disbarred for a willful failure to comply with the provisions of the rule. In general, a violation of rule 9.20 is a serious ethical breach for which disbarment may be appropriate. Nonetheless, each disciplinary case must be decided on its own facts, and discipline less than disbarment has been imposed in rule 9.20 cases where the attorney demonstrated attempts to comply with the rule, significant mitigation, or little aggravation. Where respondent's misconduct was diminished by extreme emotional difficulties; respondent made efforts to comply with his disciplinary obligations and eventually complied with his probation conditions; respondent arranged for all his clients to receive actual, albeit deficient, notice of his suspension; respondent participated in disciplinary proceedings, admitted facts establishing culpability, and proved he had recovered from emotional problems that led to misconduct; there was no evidence of client harm; and respondent's only prior discipline was a 90-day actual suspension, a one-year actual suspension rather than disbarment was appropriate. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [7a-f]

Purpose of disciplinary standard calling for greater discipline in second case is to address recidivist misconduct. Nature of misconduct in second case need not be more serious than in prior case in order to warrant increased discipline. Where respondent's multiple acts of misconduct in second case significantly harmed client, and occurred when respondent should have been aware of ethical duties because prior disciplinary proceeding had been initiated when misconduct in second case occurred, nothing in record warranted departure from standard requiring greater discipline for subsequent misconduct, even though misconduct in second case was less serious. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [7]

Where respondent was found culpable of illegally charging and collecting advance fees in violation of Civil Code §2944.7 in two client matters, and misconduct was aggravated by prior record of discipline, significant harm to clients, failure to make restitution, and uncharged misconduct, including failure to perform services and aiding and abetting unauthorized practice of law, six-month actual suspension was warranted under standard 2.18. Standard 1.8(a) also applied, making it appropriate to impose a greater sanction than respondent's prior discipline. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [6a-d]

806.10 Application of Standards—Part A (General Standards) – Standard 1.8 – (b) Disbarment after two priors—Applied

Standard 1.8(b) provides disbarment is appropriate where attorney has two or more prior records of discipline if (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter, (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate pattern of misconduct, or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate attorney's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent was actually suspended for one year in second disciplinary matter, and similarity of misconduct in respondent's second prior discipline and current matter demonstrated respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities, two criteria of standard 1.8(b) were met. However, standard 1.8(b) does not apply if most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate or misconduct underlying prior discipline occurred during same time period as current misconduct. Where respondent had only limited mitigation for good character which did not clearly predominate over five serious aggravating circumstances, and misconduct in present matter occurred many years after previous misconduct, exceptions to standard 1.8 did not apply. However, disbarment is not mandatory in third disciplinary matter, even where compelling mitigating circumstances do not clearly predominate, as standard 1.8(b) is not applied reflexively, but with eye to nature and extent of prior record. Where respondent's past discipline occurred in 1993 and 1997, but respondent continued to commit misconduct in present case that was similar to past wrongdoing, committed multiple serious violations, was put on notice in second discipline of importance of handling client trust account with care but the failed to follow client trust account rules, and demonstrated indifference and failed to acknowledge wrongfulness of misconduct, given nature and chronology of respondent's violations, Review Department found no reason to depart from presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b) and concluded public, courts, and legal profession best protected if respondent disbarred. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [20a-e]

Standard 1.8(b) does not consider the remoteness of any prior discipline. Remoteness is only considered under standard 1.8(a) where there is single prior record of discipline. In the Matter of Rubin (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 797. [21]

Willful violation of rule 9.20 is considered serious ethical offense for which disbarment is generally appropriate. Standard 1.8(b) provides that disbarment is appropriate where respondent has two or more prior records of discipline if: (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter; (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate a pattern of misconduct; or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent who violated rule 9.20 had three prior records of discipline, including one-year actual suspension, and had repeatedly failed to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and exceptions to standard 1.8(b) were not applicable, hearing judge erred in failing to analyze applicability of standard 1.8(b). Where no reasons existed to depart from discipline called for by standard 1.8(b), Review Department recommended disbarment to adequately ensure public protection. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [8a-f]

Where respondent repeatedly practiced law while suspended, despite having stipulated to suspension for the same misconduct in earlier disciplinary proceeding, respondent's prior and current misconduct established respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, and disbarment was necessary to prevent future misconduct. Where disbarment or actual suspension was presumed sanction for respondent's current misconduct (act of moral turpitude and practicing while suspended), and respondent had two or more prior records of discipline including actual suspension, record disclosed no reason to deviate from Standards calling for respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [9a-e]

When a respondent has two or more prior records of discipline, and an actual suspension was ordered in any of them, or the prior and current matters demonstrate either a pattern of misconduct or an unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, disbarment is appropriate. Deviation from the presumptive discipline of disbarment must be based on clearly articulate reasons. Discipline short of disbarment is appropriate only if the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, or the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as the current misconduct. Where respondent had two prior actual suspensions; the misconduct in his third disciplinary matter was similar to that in his first, showing his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical duties; respondent violated his probation; and he did not present compelling mitigation, further suspension and probation would not prevent him from committing future misconduct that would endanger the profession and the public. Thus, hearing judge erred in recommending only a two-year suspension; disbarment was the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [5a-f]

Where (a) respondent had received brief actual suspensions in two prior disciplinary matters; (b) respondent's prior and current misconduct demonstrated his unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms; and (c) respondent's limited mitigation neither was compelling, nor predominated over significant aggravation, evidence presented no adequate reason to depart from standard making disbarment appropriate discipline after two priors involving actual suspension. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511. [12a-c]

Where (a) respondent received 60-day actual suspension in first prior disciplinary matter and nine-month suspension in second prior disciplinary matter; (b) respondent's past and current misconduct demonstrated his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical responsibilities; and (c) respondent's nominal mitigation was not compelling, nor did it predominate over the significant aggravation of respondent's two prior discipline records and his multiple acts of misconduct, disbarment was appropriate under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [15a, b]

In analyzing standards, Review Department applies three-step analysis: first, determining which standard specifies the most severe sanction for the misconduct at issue; second, analyzing whether an exception exists; and third, determining and explaining whether there is any reason to depart from the presumptive discipline prescribed by the standard. Where respondent had two prior records of discipline, including one actual suspension; respondent's conduct demonstrated unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities and disrespect for legal system, and respondent failed to show compelling mitigation or any reason to depart from presumptive discipline under standard 1.8, disbarment was appropriate under this analysis. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427. [4a-d]

806.59 Application of Standards—Standard 1.8 (Effect of Prior Discipline)— (b) Disbarment after two priors—Declined to apply—Other reason

Standard 1.8(b) is intended as deterrent to recidivism, which is not at issue when present misconduct predates attorney's other discipline cases. Accordingly, where misconduct underlying present proceeding occurred before respondent's other two disciplinary proceedings, Review Department declined to apply presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [8]

811.10 Application of Standards—Part B —Introductory paragraph

Where presumed sanction applicable to respondent's mishandling of client funds was three months actual suspension, and mitigating circumstances did not sufficiently outweigh aggravating circumstance to justify deviation from standard, Review Department recommended 90-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [10]

822.10 Application of Standards —Standard 2.1 Sanctions for Misappropriation—Applied—Disbarment (standard 2.1(a))

Standard 2.1(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, provides for disbarment for intentional misappropriation of entrusted funds. Disbarment may be avoided if amount misappropriated is "insignificantly small" or "sufficiently compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate," but where respondent misappropriated $175,000 – a very significant amount of money – and there were no compelling mitigating circumstances, those conditions were not applicable. Furthermore, no reason existed to depart from discipline in standard 2.1(a) where respondent (1) failed to deposit $175,000 in client funds into client trust account (CTA), instead depositing portion of money in business account where respondent used money for personal expenses without authority; (2) failed to keep $175,000 in trust as respondent was required to do; (3) respondent was culpable of three moral turpitude violations for misrepresentations to non-client business, court and opposing counsel in litigation, and to Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC); (4) in trying to cover up mistakes by opening up CTA to disburse funds, respondent wrote checks when there were insufficient funds to cover the checks and two checks were returned; (5) attempted to shift blame which demonstrated failure to take responsibility for actions; (6) minimized behavior; (7) failed to appreciate fiduciary duties to client and non-client business; (8) defended actions by claiming money was returned, despite clear precedent that attorney who returned misappropriated funds is still culpable of misappropriation; (9) prevalent aspect of disciplinary proceeding was respondent's dishonesty, and respondent demonstrated indifference regarding misconduct which demonstrated respondent unfit to practice law, disbarment was appropriate and necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [21a-e]

822.59 Application of Standards – Standard 2.1 – Sanctions for Misappropriation -- Declined to apply – sanction less than presumed discipline imposed – Other reason

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

824.10 Application of Standards —Standard 2.2(a) —Commingling/Trust Account Violation Applied

Where presumed sanction applicable to respondent's mishandling of client funds was three months actual suspension, and mitigating circumstances did not sufficiently outweigh aggravating circumstance to justify deviation from standard, Review Department recommended 90-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [10]

In analyzing applicable standards, State Bar Court first determines which standard specifies most severe sanction for misconduct. Where respondent was charged with two counts of mishandling client funds, and hearing judge found respondent not culpable on those counts but Review Department reversed that finding, Review Department applied most severe standard applicable to those charges, which provided for greater minimum actual suspension than recommended by hearing judge. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [9a, b]

824.54 Application of Standards – Part B – Standard 2.2(a) – Declined to apply – lesser sanction imposed

Where applicable standard provided for presumed discipline of three-month actual suspension for commingling, but respondent's misconduct was minor and aberrational; there were multiple mitigating circumstances, including 15-year discipline-free record, no client harm or risk of harm, good character, and cooperation, candor, and honesty; mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed one aggravating circumstance of multiple acts; and respondent demonstrated ability to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, public reproval with conditions of State Bar Ethics School and Client Trust Accounting School was appropriate discipline under standard providing for lesser discipline under such circumstances. In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753. [13a-d]

829.51 Application of Standards—Standard 2.9 (Frivolous or Dilatory Litigation) – Applied -- Disbarment – Significant harm to individual

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

829.52 Application of Standards— Standard 2.9 (Frivolous or Dilatory Litigation) —Applied— Disbarment – Significant harm to administration of justice

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

829.53 Application of Standards— Standard 2.9 (Frivolous or Dilatory Litigation) —Applied— Disbarment – Pattern of misconduct

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

829.54 Application of Standards— Standard 2.9 (Frivolous or Dilatory Litigation) —Applied— Disbarment – Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

829.55 Application of Standards— Standard 2.9 (Frivolous or Dilatory Litigation) —Applied— Disbarment – Other aggravating factors

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

829.61 Application of Standards – Part B (Sanctions for specific misconduct) – Standard 2.9 – Applied – Stayed suspension or reproval – Harm not significant

Where disciplinary standard 2.9(b) provided for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for respondent's filing of frivolous litigation which did not show proof of significant harm to individual or administration of justice; mitigating circumstances clearly predominated, as no aggravating circumstances were found; and respondent's misconduct was less serious and more mitigated than comparable case where 30-day actual suspension ordered, Review Department affirmed hearing judge and ordered respondent publicly reproved. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [5a-d]

829.62 Application of Standards – Part B (Sanctions for specific misconduct) – Standard 2.9 – Applied – Stayed suspension or reproval – Mitigating factors

Where disciplinary standard 2.9(b) provided for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for respondent's filing of frivolous litigation which did not show proof of significant harm to individual or administration of justice; mitigating circumstances clearly predominated, as no aggravating circumstances were found; and respondent's misconduct was less serious and more mitigated than comparable case where 30-day actual suspension ordered, Review Department affirmed hearing judge and ordered respondent publicly reproved. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [5a-d]

829.69 Application of Standards – Part B (Sanctions for specific misconduct) – Standard 2.9 – Applied – Stayed suspension or reproval – Other reason

Where disciplinary standard 2.9(b) provided for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for respondent's filing of frivolous litigation which did not show proof of significant harm to individual or administration of justice; mitigating circumstances clearly predominated, as no aggravating circumstances were found; and respondent's misconduct was less serious and more mitigated than comparable case where 30-day actual suspension ordered, Review Department affirmed hearing judge and ordered respondent publicly reproved. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [5a-d]

831.20 Application of Standards—Standard 2.11 (Moral Turpitude, Fraud, etc.)—Applied—Disbarment Magnitude of misconduct great

Where charges against respondent did not involve individual client matters, but rather extensive, nationwide illegal scheme to sell attorney services while legal work was done by non-attorneys; respondent continued to mislead public even after state and federal agencies informed him his loan modification scheme was fraudulent; and respondent displayed extreme inability to recognize wrongfulness of his actions and threatened State Bar employees, respondent's conduct warranted discipline beyond that recommended in typical loan modification cases. Given these facts, respondent would not be deterred from future wrongdoing merely by suspension, and disbarment was necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [17a-c]

Where respondent engaged in serious misconduct for over seven years, including breach of her fiduciary duties by failing to distribute to her siblings almost any assets of estate for which she was trustee; where her conduct resulted in a substantial loss in the value of the trust corpuses; and where respondent made misrepresentations and filed frivolous appeals in attempt to retain control over trust assets, respondent's blatant disregard for her ethical duties and for court processes called for discipline at highest end of applicable range. Where record demonstrated respondent was at risk for committing future misconduct, disbarment was only discipline adequate to protect public, courts, and profession. In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr. 494. [9 a, b]

831.40 Application of Standards – Standard 2.11 (Moral Turpitude) – Applied-Disbarment – Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent repeatedly practiced law while suspended, despite having stipulated to suspension for the same misconduct in earlier disciplinary proceeding, respondent's prior and current misconduct established respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, and disbarment was necessary to prevent future misconduct. Where disbarment or actual suspension was presumed sanction for respondent's current misconduct (act of moral turpitude and practicing while suspended), and respondent had two or more prior records of discipline including actual suspension, record disclosed no reason to deviate from Standards calling for respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [9a-e]

831.50 Application of Standards – Standard 2.11 (Moral Turpitude, Fraud, etc.) – Applied– Disbarment – Presence of other aggravation

Where respondent repeatedly practiced law while suspended, despite having stipulated to suspension for the same misconduct in earlier disciplinary proceeding, respondent's prior and current misconduct established respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, and disbarment was necessary to prevent future misconduct. Where disbarment or actual suspension was presumed sanction for respondent's current misconduct (act of moral turpitude and practicing while suspended), and respondent had two or more prior records of discipline including actual suspension, record disclosed no reason to deviate from Standards calling for respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [9a-e]

Where charges against respondent did not involve individual client matters, but rather extensive, nationwide illegal scheme to sell attorney services while legal work was done by non-attorneys; respondent continued to mislead public even after state and federal agencies informed him his loan modification scheme was fraudulent; and respondent displayed extreme inability to recognize wrongfulness of his actions and threatened State Bar employees, respondent's conduct warranted discipline beyond that recommended in typical loan modification cases. Given these facts, respondent would not be deterred from future wrongdoing merely by suspension, and disbarment was necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [17a-c]

833.90 Application of Standards—Standard 2.11 (Moral Turpitude, Fraud, etc.) —Applied Suspension—Other reason

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

Where prosecutor intentionally committed act of moral turpitude by altering criminal defendant's statement to add false confession, resulting in dismissal of charges and thus causing significant harm to victim, public, and administration of justice, 30-day actual suspension was insufficient. To emphasize seriousness of misconduct, appropriate discipline was one-year actual suspension. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [9a, b]

Where respondent was found culpable of acts of moral turpitude for intentionally deceiving Workers' Compensation Appeals Board, and where respondent had two prior records of discipline but standard 1.8(b) was not applied, based on totality of respondent's misconduct in her three cases that spanned more than eight years and involved repeated probation violations and two instances of moral turpitude for making misrepresentations to separate tribunals, and in light of respondent's lack of insight into the seriousness of her misconduct, appropriate discipline included three years stayed suspension, three years' probation, and actual suspension of 18 months and until respondent establishes her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464. [9a-e]

844.19 Application of Standards – Standard 2.7– (b) Multiple matters but no habitual disregard – Applied – actual suspension – Other reason

Where attorney's failures to communicate were numerous and occurred over several years in single client matter, review department held standard 2.7(b) was most applicable standard, even though standard mentions "multiple client matters," as less severe sanction standard 2.7(c) was for violations limited in scope or time. As standard 2.7(b) provides for actual suspension for communication violations, given broad range of discipline suggested by standard, review department looked to guiding case law, focusing on communication violations, to determine appropriate discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [20a, b]

Lesser sanction was appropriate in cases of minor misconduct, where there was little or no injury to client, public, legal system, or profession, and where record demonstrates attorney was willing and had ability to conform to ethical responsibilities in future. Although attorneys have duty to communicate adequately with clients, where attorney failed to inform client of significant developments in representation for substantial time period – over six years – but continued to work to advance clients' interests, completed representation, and achieved good result for clients; attorney given substantial mitigation for no prior discipline record and good character, which markedly outweighed aggravation for multiple acts, sanction at lower end of discipline spectrum specified in standard 2.7(b) was warranted. Review department concluded 30-day actual suspension was appropriate, as it was lowest level for actual suspension for communication violations under standard 2.7(b). Recommended discipline considered seriousness of misconduct, but also accounted for attorney's admissions to culpability and commitment to doing things differently in future. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [21a-d]

846.00 Application of Standards – Standard 2.7– (c) Violations limited in scope or time – suspension or reproval

Where attorney's failures to communicate were numerous and occurred over several years in single client matter, review department held standard 2.7(b) was most applicable standard, even though standard mentions "multiple client matters," as less severe sanction standard 2.7(c) was for violations limited in scope or time. As standard 2.7(b) provides for actual suspension for communication violations, given broad range of discipline suggested by standard, review department looked to guiding case law, focusing on communication violations, to determine appropriate discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911. [20a, b]

846.54 Application of Standards – Standard 2.7– (c) Violations limited in scope or time – suspension or reproval– Other aggravating factors

Purpose of disciplinary standard calling for greater discipline in second case is to address recidivist misconduct. Nature of misconduct in second case need not be more serious than in prior case in order to warrant increased discipline. Where respondent's multiple acts of misconduct in second case significantly harmed client, and occurred when respondent should have been aware of ethical duties because prior disciplinary proceeding had been initiated when misconduct in second case occurred, nothing in record warranted departure from standard requiring greater discipline for subsequent misconduct, even though misconduct in second case was less serious. In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564. [7]

881.10 Application of Standards – Standard 2.4 – Applied–suspension

Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed money from client's trust; loan was authorized by trust but respondent did not comply with rule 3-300 and breached fiduciary duty under Probate Code; respondent's misconduct was serious but aberrational, involving only one client matter; mitigation was considerable, and Review Department found no aggravation or moral turpitude, respondent's misconduct warranted actual suspension, but not disbarment. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [15a, b]

901.05 Application of Standards—Standard 2.18, 2.19—Applied-suspension—Violation of Business & Professions Code

Where most severe standard applicable to respondent's misconduct called for disbarment or actual suspension, and mitigation for lack of a prior disciplinary record and cooperation with State Bar was greatly outweighed by aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing, overreaching, uncharged misconduct, significant client harm, indifference, and failure to make restitution, respondent's request for discipline not involving actual suspension was unsupported, and hearing judge properly recommended actual suspension for one year and until respondent completed restitution to clients. In addition, Review Department recommended that respondent remain suspended until he proves rehabilitation, fitness, and learning in the law, allowing him to gain insight into his misconduct, and at the same time, protecting the public, the courts, and the legal profession. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [11a-c]

Where respondent was found culpable of illegally charging and collecting advance fees in violation of Civil Code §2944.7 in two client matters, and misconduct was aggravated by prior record of discipline, significant harm to clients, failure to make restitution, and uncharged misconduct, including failure to perform services and aiding and abetting unauthorized practice of law, six-month actual suspension was warranted under standard 2.18. Standard 1.8(a) also applied, making it appropriate to impose a greater sanction than respondent's prior discipline. In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437. [6a-d]

901.10 Application of Standards – Standards 2.18, 2.10 – Applied–suspension – Gravity of offense severe

Where most severe standard applicable to respondent's misconduct called for disbarment or actual suspension, and mitigation for lack of a prior disciplinary record and cooperation with State Bar was greatly outweighed by aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing, overreaching, uncharged misconduct, significant client harm, indifference, and failure to make restitution, respondent's request for discipline not involving actual suspension was unsupported, and hearing judge properly recommended actual suspension for one year and until respondent completed restitution to clients. In addition, Review Department recommended that respondent remain suspended until he proves rehabilitation, fitness, and learning in the law, allowing him to gain insight into his misconduct, and at the same time, protecting the public, the courts, and the legal profession. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [11a-c]

901.20 Application of Standards – Standards 2.18, 2.10 – Applied–suspension – Harm to victim great

Where most severe standard applicable to respondent's misconduct called for disbarment or actual suspension, and mitigation for lack of a prior disciplinary record and cooperation with State Bar was greatly outweighed by aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing, overreaching, uncharged misconduct, significant client harm, indifference, and failure to make restitution, respondent's request for discipline not involving actual suspension was unsupported, and hearing judge properly recommended actual suspension for one year and until respondent completed restitution to clients. In addition, Review Department recommended that respondent remain suspended until he proves rehabilitation, fitness, and learning in the law, allowing him to gain insight into his misconduct, and at the same time, protecting the public, the courts, and the legal profession. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [11a-c]

901.40 Application of Standards – Standards 2.18, 2.10 – Applied–suspension – Other aggravating factors

Where most severe standard applicable to respondent's misconduct called for disbarment or actual suspension, and mitigation for lack of a prior disciplinary record and cooperation with State Bar was greatly outweighed by aggravation for multiple acts of wrongdoing, overreaching, uncharged misconduct, significant client harm, indifference, and failure to make restitution, respondent's request for discipline not involving actual suspension was unsupported, and hearing judge properly recommended actual suspension for one year and until respondent completed restitution to clients. In addition, Review Department recommended that respondent remain suspended until he proves rehabilitation, fitness, and learning in the law, allowing him to gain insight into his misconduct, and at the same time, protecting the public, the courts, and the legal profession. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [11a-c]

911.10 Application of Standards – Standard 2.10 (Unauthorized Practice of Law) – (a) Practice while on disciplinary suspension – Applied – disbarment

Where respondent repeatedly practiced law while suspended, despite having stipulated to suspension for the same misconduct in earlier disciplinary proceeding, respondent's prior and current misconduct established respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, and disbarment was necessary to prevent future misconduct. Where disbarment or actual suspension was presumed sanction for respondent's current misconduct (act of moral turpitude and practicing while suspended), and respondent had two or more prior records of discipline including actual suspension, record disclosed no reason to deviate from Standards calling for respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698. [9a-e]

913 Application of Standards—Standard 2.10(b)—Practice while inactive or on suspension for non-disciplinary reasons

Where respondent practiced law while suspended for non-payment of child support, OCTC was not required to establish that respondent knowingly committed unauthorized practice of law in order to prove respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126. It was sufficient to prove respondent's conduct was willful. Under standard 2.10(b), knowledge is simply a factor in determining degree of discipline. In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448. [3a, b]

921.21 Application of Standards — Standard 2.12(a) — Applied–actual suspension — Violation of court order

Where respondent established substantial mitigation, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel sought only stayed suspension, Review Department nonetheless imposed 30-day actual suspension, because applicable Standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment; mitigation was not sufficient to justify deviation from Standard; respondent's misconduct in violating five separate court orders was serious, not minor; and respondent had not yet provided proof of payment of court-ordered monetary sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [6a-d]

921.23 Application of Standards – Standard 2.12(a) – Applied–actual suspension – Violation of § 6068(a)-(h)

Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed money from client's trust; loan was authorized by trust but respondent did not comply with rule 3-300 and breached fiduciary duty under Probate Code; respondent's misconduct was serious but aberrational, involving only one client matter; mitigation was considerable, and Review Department found no aggravation or moral turpitude, respondent's misconduct warranted actual suspension, but not disbarment. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [15a, b]

921.24 Application of Standards – Standard 2.12(a) – Applied–actual suspension – Mitigating factors

Where respondent, as trustee, borrowed money from client's trust; loan was authorized by trust but respondent did not comply with rule 3-300 and breached fiduciary duty under Probate Code; respondent's misconduct was serious but aberrational, involving only one client matter; mitigation was considerable, and Review Department found no aggravation or moral turpitude, respondent's misconduct warranted actual suspension, but not disbarment. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [15a, b]

921.52 Application of Standards – Standard 2.12(a) Violation of court order, oath, or § 6068(a), (b), (d), (e), (f) or (h), or RPC 3.4(f) – Declined to apply – lesser or no discipline – Mitigating factors

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

Under standard 1.7(c), lesser sanction appropriate if misconduct minor; little or no injury occurred to client, public, legal system, or profession; and attorney willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct before one judge and immediately apologized for disrespectful comments which judge appeared to accept, and misconduct before another judge was very brief and resulted in no appreciable injury to client, public, legal system, or profession, Review Department concluded both incidents were "minor misconduct" under standard 1.7(c). Where respondent established rehabilitation by acknowledgement that respondent would act differently in future which indicated respondent willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, Review Department concluded, given circumstances, discipline unnecessary and would be punitive considering compelling mitigation, lack of aggravation, narrow extent of respondent's misconduct, and lack of consequential harm. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [12]

921.59 Application of Standards – Standard 2.12 – (a) Violation of court order, oath, or § 6068(a), (b), (d), (e), (f) or (h), or RPC 3.4(f) – Declined to apply – lesser or no discipline – Other reason

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

Under standard 1.7(c), lesser sanction appropriate if misconduct minor; little or no injury occurred to client, public, legal system, or profession; and attorney willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct before one judge and immediately apologized for disrespectful comments which judge appeared to accept, and misconduct before another judge was very brief and resulted in no appreciable injury to client, public, legal system, or profession, Review Department concluded both incidents were "minor misconduct" under standard 1.7(c). Where respondent established rehabilitation by acknowledgement that respondent would act differently in future which indicated respondent willing and able to conform to ethical responsibilities in future, Review Department concluded, given circumstances, discipline unnecessary and would be punitive considering compelling mitigation, lack of aggravation, narrow extent of respondent's misconduct, and lack of consequential harm. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [12]

1010 Discipline—Disbarment

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 511.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.

In the Matter of Burke Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 427.

1013.06 Stayed suspension – One year - Discipline Imposed

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

1013.08 Discipline—Stayed Suspension—Two years

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437.

1013.09 Discipline—Stayed Suspension—Three years

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

1013.10 Stayed suspension – Four years

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

1015.01 Actual Suspension — One month or less

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

1015.02 Actual suspension – 60 days

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

1015.03 Actual Suspension – Three month - Discipline Imposed

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

1015.04 Discipline—Actual Suspension—Six months

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437

1015.06 Discipline— Actual suspension – One year

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

1015.07 Discipline—Actual Suspension—18 months

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

1015.09 Actual suspension-Three years

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

1017.06 Discipline—Probation—One Year

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

1017.08 Discipline—Probation—Two Years

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437.

1017.09 Discipline—Probation—Three Years

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464

1017.10 Probation—Four Years

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

1021 Discipline—Restitution

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of DeClue (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 437.

1024 Discipline—Ethics exam/ethics school

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

In the Matter of Isola (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 911.

*In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (*Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852.

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753.

In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681.

In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660.

In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551.

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

1028 Client trust accounting school

In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753.

1030 Discipline—Standard 1.2(c)(1) Rehabilitation Requirement

In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574.

In the Matter of Khishaveh (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 564.

In the Matter of Hansen (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 464.

1041 Public reproval – With conditions

In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999.

In the Matter of Martin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 753.

1091 Discipline – Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline – Proportionality with Other Cases

Where disciplinary standard 2.9(b) provided for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for respondent's filing of frivolous litigation which did not show proof of significant harm to individual or administration of justice; mitigating circumstances clearly predominated, as no aggravating circumstances were found; and respondent's misconduct was less serious and more mitigated than comparable case where 30-day actual suspension ordered, Review Department affirmed hearing judge and ordered respondent publicly reproved. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [5a-d]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; lacked candor, including misconduct during disciplinary proceedings; had prior discipline record resulting in 30-day period of actual suspension (which was given diminished weight as that misconduct occurred after misconduct in current disciplinary matter); and aggravation equaled mitigation, based on totality of facts and comparing it to other cases, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was minimum discipline necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. Review Department concerned that respondent's prior discipline, which involved nearly 70 instances of filing false pleadings, combined with respondent's lack of insight and failure to accept responsibility for dishonesty in current disciplinary matter, showed possibilities of future recidivism. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [13a, b]

Where respondent pursued unjust and frivolous actions in two superior court matters; pursued same arguments in state court actions; appealed both state court actions to appellate court, California Supreme Court, and United States' Supreme Court; received significant sanctions in those actions but had not paid any money towards sanctions; repeated failed arguments in two federal lawsuits (both dismissed as improper collateral attacks on state court decisions); appealed both federal decisions to Ninth Circuit (where second action remained pending); appealed second federal lawsuit after Hearing Department's decision recommended his disbarment; and besides maintaining multiple unjust actions, respondent failed to obey four court orders, report judicial sanctions, and threatened charges to gain advantage in civil lawsuit, Review Department concluded respondent's misconduct serious, repetitive, and ongoing for over several years and held misconduct demonstrated pattern of wrongdoing and therefore appropriate under standard 2.9 to recommended disbarment. However, even if pattern of wrongdoing not found, disbarment would be appropriate discipline to recommend under standard 1.7(b), due to respondent's multiple instances of serious misconduct combined with several substantial aggravating factors that outweighed nominal mitigation. In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [12a-f]

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

Where charges against respondent did not involve individual client matters, but rather extensive, nationwide illegal scheme to sell attorney services while legal work was done by non-attorneys; respondent continued to mislead public even after state and federal agencies informed him his loan modification scheme was fraudulent; and respondent displayed extreme inability to recognize wrongfulness of his actions and threatened State Bar employees, respondent's conduct warranted discipline beyond that recommended in typical loan modification cases. Given these facts, respondent would not be deterred from future wrongdoing merely by suspension, and disbarment was necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [17a-c]

1092 Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline—Excessiveness of Discipline

Standard 2.1(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, provides for disbarment for intentional misappropriation of entrusted funds. Disbarment may be avoided if amount misappropriated is "insignificantly small" or "sufficiently compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate," but where respondent misappropriated $175,000 – a very significant amount of money – and there were no compelling mitigating circumstances, those conditions were not applicable. Furthermore, no reason existed to depart from discipline in standard 2.1(a) where respondent (1) failed to deposit $175,000 in client funds into client trust account (CTA), instead depositing portion of money in business account where respondent used money for personal expenses without authority; (2) failed to keep $175,000 in trust as respondent was required to do; (3) respondent was culpable of three moral turpitude violations for misrepresentations to non-client business, court and opposing counsel in litigation, and to Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC); (4) in trying to cover up mistakes by opening up CTA to disburse funds, respondent wrote checks when there were insufficient funds to cover the checks and two checks were returned; (5) attempted to shift blame which demonstrated failure to take responsibility for actions; (6) minimized behavior; (7) failed to appreciate fiduciary duties to client and non-client business; (8) defended actions by claiming money was returned, despite clear precedent that attorney who returned misappropriated funds is still culpable of misappropriation; (9) prevalent aspect of disciplinary proceeding was respondent's dishonesty, and respondent demonstrated indifference regarding misconduct which demonstrated respondent unfit to practice law, disbarment was appropriate and necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [21a-e]

Prosecutors have an elevated standard of candor and impartiality as compared to other attorneys. They must be zealous in their representation, but not at the cost of justice. Where respondent lost sight of her prosecutorial duty to shield against injustice, in failing to disclose evidence to defense counsel despite repeated requests, her misconduct was serious, and her actions fell substantially below the standards required of a prosecutor. Her conduct warranted more than the minimum 30-day suspension described in the applicable standard, but the hearing judge's recommendation of a one-year actual suspension with a proof of rehabilitation requirement was not necessary. A six-month actual suspension was sufficient to convey to respondent the gravity and consequences of her actions. In the Matter of Nassar (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [12a-b]

1093 Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline—Inadequacy of Discipline

Where respondent committed violation involving moral turpitude by misrepresenting to client that client's case settled; misled client to believe respondent was still working on case when case was actually dismissed; case's dismissal resulted from respondent's failure to perform competently by failing to serve defendant in client's case for nearly three years; respondent improperly withdrew from employment in another client matter by when respondent stopped providing services and then misled clients to believe respondent was working on clients' case, most severe applicable disciplinary standard and case law provided that respondent be actually suspended. Degree of recommended discipline, however, was informed by respondent's serious misconduct in two client matters; harm caused to both clients, including dismissal of clients' cases; and fact all misconduct related to respondent's practice of law. Based on review of case law, standards, and aggravation and mitigation, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was appropriate and necessary for protection of public, courts, and legal profession and would emphasize to respondent importance of ethical duties to clients. In the Matter of Edward Shkolnikov (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 852 [11a-c]

In analyzing applicable standards, State Bar Court first determines which standard specifies most severe sanction for misconduct. Where respondent was charged with two counts of mishandling client funds, and hearing judge found respondent not culpable on those counts but Review Department reversed that finding, Review Department applied most severe standard applicable to those charges, which provided for greater minimum actual suspension than recommended by hearing judge. In the Matter of Khakshooy (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 681. [9a, b]

When a respondent has two or more prior records of discipline, and an actual suspension was ordered in any of them, or the prior and current matters demonstrate either a pattern of misconduct or an unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical norms, disbarment is appropriate. Deviation from the presumptive discipline of disbarment must be based on clearly articulate reasons. Discipline short of disbarment is appropriate only if the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, or the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as the current misconduct. Where respondent had two prior actual suspensions; the misconduct in his third disciplinary matter was similar to that in his first, showing his unwillingness or inability to fulfill his ethical duties; respondent violated his probation; and he did not present compelling mitigation, further suspension and probation would not prevent him from committing future misconduct that would endanger the profession and the public. Thus, hearing judge erred in recommending only a two-year suspension; disbarment was the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632. [5a-f]

Where prosecutor intentionally committed act of moral turpitude by altering criminal defendant's statement to add false confession, resulting in dismissal of charges and thus causing significant harm to victim, public, and administration of justice, 30-day actual suspension was insufficient. To emphasize seriousness of misconduct, appropriate discipline was one-year actual suspension. In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479. [9a, b]

Where respondent established substantial mitigation, and Office of Chief Trial Counsel sought only stayed suspension, Review Department nonetheless imposed 30-day actual suspension, because applicable Standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment; mitigation was not sufficient to justify deviation from Standard; respondent's misconduct in violating five separate court orders was serious, not minor; and respondent had not yet provided proof of payment of court-ordered monetary sanctions. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 551. [6a-d]

1094 Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline—Admonition in Lieu of Discipline

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct do not apply to non-disciplinary dispositions such as admonitions. As Review Department ordered admonition, consideration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances was not required. However, analysis of aggravating and mitigating circumstances aided court in determining that deviation from standard was warranted. Although standard provided for actual suspension or disbarment, under case law and rule 5.126 of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, admonition was appropriate due to compelling mitigation and lack of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [4a-d]

Disciplinary proceeding may be resolved by admonition if (1) it does not involve Client Security Fund (CSF) matter or serious offense; (2) violation either was not intentional or occurred under mitigating circumstances; and (3) no significant harm resulted. Where respondent's misconduct did not involve CSF matter; was not "serious offense" as defined by rule 5.126(B); both incidents of misconduct occurred under mitigating circumstances under standard 1.6 and other unique circumstances considered mitigating; and respondent acknowledged wrongdoing and demonstrated future misconduct unlikely to recur, admonition was appropriate. In the Matter of Respondent BB (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 835. [13a-c]

1099 Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline—Other Miscellaneous Issues

Attorney can create fiduciary relationship with non-client when attorney receives money on behalf of non-client. Attorney must then comply with same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if attorney-client relationship existed. Attorney who breached fiduciary duties that would justify discipline if there was attorney-client relationship may be disciplined for such misconduct. Where respondent agreed to hold money from non-client for lease and keep it in client trust account (CTA) until appropriate to release it to proper parties, but failed to do so, respondent violated his fiduciary duties to non-client and violated former rule 4-100(A) of Rules of Professional Conduct. But Review Department assigned no additional weight in discipline as culpability based on same facts underlying Business and Professions Code section 6106 violation. Review Department rejected respondent's argument there was no written agreement regarding $50,000 security deposit's use at time of alleged misconduct, as conduct of parties, when viewed in light of later letter agreement, was strong evidence respondent was to keep security deposit in CTA. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [9a-c]

Business and Professions Code section 6068(a) provides it is attorney's duty to support Constitution and laws of United States and California. Escrow holder owes fiduciary duties to escrow parties and must strictly comply with parties' instructions. Where respondent agreed to act as escrow holder, deposited funds into business account, and used money to make personal, unauthorized purchases, rather than safekeeping funds, respondent violated fiduciary duties when respondent distributed money in way not contemplated by parties. Review Department held respondent culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068(a) but assigned no additional disciplinary weight as respondent's breach of fiduciary duties was based on same facts underlying moral turpitude violations. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873. [12a,b]

1511 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings — Nature of Underlying Conviction — Driving Under the Influence

Respondent's conviction conclusively proved elements of his crime. Thus, respondent's 2019 misdemeanor conviction established he drove under influence of alcohol and had prior DUI conviction. Drunk driving convictions do not establish per se moral turpitude, but moral turpitude can be established based on circumstances surrounding convictions. Where respondent repeatedly falsely denied to police officer consumption of alcohol and not feeling its effects, and falsely claimed driving directly home from office, Review Department concluded (1) respondent's actions did not establish moral turpitude but did amount to other misconduct warranting discipline; and (2) circumstances surrounding DUI convictions were indications of alcohol abuse problem, as respondent was again arrested for drunk driving only two years after criminal probation for first DUI ended; second drunk driving violation resulted in collision that injured two victims and caused property damage; and respondent admitted does not drive anymore so as not to risk driving under influence, which clearly implied respondent did not trust himself to make decision not to drive while impaired from drinking. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [1a-e]

Nexus between conduct resulting in DUI convictions and practice of law established if there were indications of alcohol abuse problem connected to multiple convictions. Where respondent presented evidence that legal work had not suffered from alcohol consumption, but actions resulted in repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, which affected respondent's private life, respondent's problems with alcohol were enough to warrant discipline due to potential for future harm. Review Department concluded there was evidence of substance abuse problem with nexus to practice of law and discipline was appropriate to protect public from potential harm related to respondent's practice of law and to convey to respondent's seriousness of his actions. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [2]

For purposes of attorney discipline, respondent's criminal conviction of driving under the influence of alcohol with an enhancement for an excessive blood alcohol concentration was conclusive proof that respondent committed all elements of that crime. However, it is an attorney's misconduct, not their conviction, that warrants discipline, and facts and circumstances surrounding conviction may be considered in determining whether moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [1a, b]

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character traits necessary for law practice (such as honesty and candor) or serious breach of duty owed to another or society, or flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms that knowledge of conduct would likely undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Where respondent drove under influence of excessive alcohol, which exhibited contempt for law and public safety and reflected poorly on respondent's judgment and on legal profession, and respondent lied to police and fabricated complex, detailed narrative attempting to shift blame for accident to fictitious driver whom police attempted to locate, thereby wasting law enforcement resources, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction established moral turpitude, and hearing judge erred in concluding otherwise. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [2a-d]

Where totality of evidence supported conclusion that after automobile accident, respondent consciously and persistently fabricated complex narrative involving phony driver in order to avoid arrest, respondent could not avoid culpability for acting with moral turpitude by claiming he made "drunken misrepresentations" and did not intend to lie to police officers or recall doing so. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [3a, b]

Standard 2.15(b) provides that actual suspension or disbarment is appropriate for misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude. Where facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's first misdemeanor conviction of driving under influence of alcohol with enhancement for excessive blood alcohol concentration involved moral turpitude, but no one was physically injured by respondent's actions; respondent exhibited exemplary behavior after conviction including full compliance with criminal probation terms and restitution; no aggravating factors were found; and respondent was entitled to mitigation for cooperation, good character, remorse, and restitution, discipline at lowest end of range for actual suspensions was warranted, appropriate discipline was 30 days of actual suspension coupled with one year of stayed suspension and probation. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [10a-c]

The test for whether an attorney's felony conviction involves moral turpitude is whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the attorney's criminal conduct show either a deficiency in any character trait necessary for the practice of law, or involve such a serious breach of duty to another or society, or such flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms, that knowledge of the attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent lacked candor and made disingenuous statements to law enforcement personnel, and her conduct in driving while impaired by abuse of prescription drugs showed lack of regard for her duty to society or concern for the law, the circumstances of her felony vehicular manslaughter conviction involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1a-c]

Respondent's conviction for felony vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated conclusively established that respondent drove while intoxicated and caused victim's death. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

Where respondent's felony vehicular manslaughter conviction, arising from driving while impaired by prescription drugs, involved moral turpitude; showed disregard for law and public safety; caused significant harm; and was accompanied by lack of candor in dealing with law enforcement, and respondent's mitigating factors were not compelling and fell far short of predominating, discipline less than presumed sanction of disbarment would fail to protect public and would undermine confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [9a-c]

1513.10 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Nature of Underlying Conviction – Violent Crimes – Homicide, Assault, Battery, and Related Crimes

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character trait necessary for law practice, such that knowledge of attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in profession. Where respondent frightened woman from massage service by pinning her to bed while naked on top of her and refusing to let her leave; got into violent altercation with woman's bodyguard; and gratuitously fired gun in residential neighborhood when he could not honestly have believed victims posed imminent danger, respondent exhibited contempt for law and disregard of safety of others. Accordingly, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's felony convictions of assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury and discharging firearm with gross negligence demonstrated moral turpitude. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [1a-d]

Where respondent pled guilty in criminal proceeding to willfully and unlawfully committing assault, Review Department declined to consider respondent's belated self-defense claim because it would negate elements of crime to which he pled guilty, and factual basis for plea supported hearing judge's finding that respondent's self-defense claim lacked credibility. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [4a, b]

1517 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Nature of Underlying Conviction – Violation of Regulatory Laws

Moral turpitude includes deficiency in any character trait necessary for practice of law (such as trustworthiness, honesty, fairness, candor, and fidelity to fiduciary duties) or if it involves such serious breach of duty owed to another or to society, or such flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms, that knowledge of attorney's conduct would be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Attorney who accepts responsibility of fiduciary nature held to legal profession's high standards whether or not attorney acts in capacity of attorney. Where respondent, who worked as company's computer network consultant, assumed fiduciary role in company based on job responsibilities, and knowingly and without permission used position of trust in company to restrict authorized users' access to computer system, though for only brief time period, and who, when confronted refused to reset passwords so users could regain access which forced employer to hire another technology consultant to remedy issue, even though respondent eventually made restitution to company, respondent's actions demonstrated character deficiencies including lack of trustworthiness and fidelity to fiduciary duties, which evidenced moral turpitude. Furthermore, where respondent's testimony that he acted with company president's permission was contrary to his guilty plea, Review Department would not consider claims that would negate elements of crime to which respondent pled guilty. Additionally, where, due to respondent's testimony which was unsupported by record and was inconsistent, confusing, and contradicted other evidence in record, including his own admissions, Review Department affirmed hearing judge's conclusions that respondent's testimony lacked credibility and candor; and where respondent's statements to police, superior court, and Bureau of Criminal Information and Analysis were false and done with intent to cover up and minimize criminal conduct, Review Department held respondent was culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [4a-f]

1519 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Nature of Underlying Conviction – Other Crimes

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character trait necessary for law practice, such that knowledge of attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in profession. Where respondent frightened woman from massage service by pinning her to bed while naked on top of her and refusing to let her leave; got into violent altercation with woman's bodyguard; and gratuitously fired gun in residential neighborhood when he could not honestly have believed victims posed imminent danger, respondent exhibited contempt for law and disregard of safety of others. Accordingly, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's felony convictions of assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury and discharging firearm with gross negligence demonstrated moral turpitude. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [1a-d]

1523 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings — Moral Turpitude — Found Based on Facts and Circumstances

Moral turpitude includes deficiency in any character trait necessary for practice of law (such as trustworthiness, honesty, fairness, candor, and fidelity to fiduciary duties) or if it involves such serious breach of duty owed to another or to society, or such flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms, that knowledge of attorney's conduct would be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Attorney who accepts responsibility of fiduciary nature held to legal profession's high standards whether or not attorney acts in capacity of attorney. Where respondent, who worked as company's computer network consultant, assumed fiduciary role in company based on job responsibilities, and knowingly and without permission used position of trust in company to restrict authorized users' access to computer system, though for only brief time period, and who, when confronted refused to reset passwords so users could regain access which forced employer to hire another technology consultant to remedy issue, even though respondent eventually made restitution to company, respondent's actions demonstrated character deficiencies including lack of trustworthiness and fidelity to fiduciary duties, which evidenced moral turpitude. Furthermore, where respondent's testimony that he acted with company president's permission was contrary to his guilty plea, Review Department would not consider claims that would negate elements of crime to which respondent pled guilty. Additionally, where, due to respondent's testimony which was unsupported by record and was inconsistent, confusing, and contradicted other evidence in record, including his own admissions, Review Department affirmed hearing judge's conclusions that respondent's testimony lacked credibility and candor; and where respondent's statements to police, superior court, and Bureau of Criminal Information and Analysis were false and done with intent to cover up and minimize criminal conduct, Review Department held respondent was culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [4a-f]

For purposes of attorney discipline, respondent's criminal conviction of driving under the influence of alcohol with an enhancement for an excessive blood alcohol concentration was conclusive proof that respondent committed all elements of that crime. However, it is an attorney's misconduct, not their conviction, that warrants discipline, and facts and circumstances surrounding conviction may be considered in determining whether moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [1a, b]

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character traits necessary for law practice (such as honesty and candor) or serious breach of duty owed to another or society, or flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms that knowledge of conduct would likely undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Where respondent drove under influence of excessive alcohol, which exhibited contempt for law and public safety and reflected poorly on respondent's judgment and on legal profession, and respondent lied to police and fabricated complex, detailed narrative attempting to shift blame for accident to fictitious driver whom police attempted to locate, thereby wasting law enforcement resources, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction established moral turpitude, and hearing judge erred in concluding otherwise. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [2a-d]

Where totality of evidence supported conclusion that after automobile accident, respondent consciously and persistently fabricated complex narrative involving phony driver in order to avoid arrest, respondent could not avoid culpability for acting with moral turpitude by claiming he made "drunken misrepresentations" and did not intend to lie to police officers or recall doing so. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [3a, b]

Standard 2.15(b) provides that actual suspension or disbarment is appropriate for misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude. Where facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's first misdemeanor conviction of driving under influence of alcohol with enhancement for excessive blood alcohol concentration involved moral turpitude, but no one was physically injured by respondent's actions; respondent exhibited exemplary behavior after conviction including full compliance with criminal probation terms and restitution; no aggravating factors were found; and respondent was entitled to mitigation for cooperation, good character, remorse, and restitution, discipline at lowest end of range for actual suspensions was warranted, appropriate discipline was 30 days of actual suspension coupled with one year of stayed suspension and probation. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [10a-c]

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character trait necessary for law practice, such that knowledge of attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in profession. Where respondent frightened woman from massage service by pinning her to bed while naked on top of her and refusing to let her leave; got into violent altercation with woman's bodyguard; and gratuitously fired gun in residential neighborhood when he could not honestly have believed victims posed imminent danger, respondent exhibited contempt for law and disregard of safety of others. Accordingly, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's felony convictions of assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury and discharging firearm with gross negligence demonstrated moral turpitude. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [1a-d]

The test for whether an attorney's felony conviction involves moral turpitude is whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the attorney's criminal conduct show either a deficiency in any character trait necessary for the practice of law, or involve such a serious breach of duty to another or society, or such flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms, that knowledge of the attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent lacked candor and made disingenuous statements to law enforcement personnel, and her conduct in driving while impaired by abuse of prescription drugs showed lack of regard for her duty to society or concern for the law, the circumstances of her felony vehicular manslaughter conviction involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1a-c]

Where respondent's felony vehicular manslaughter conviction, arising from driving while impaired by prescription drugs, involved moral turpitude; showed disregard for law and public safety; caused significant harm; and was accompanied by lack of candor in dealing with law enforcement, and respondent's mitigating factors were not compelling and fell far short of predominating, discipline less than presumed sanction of disbarment would fail to protect public and would undermine confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [9a-c]

1527 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Moral Turpitude – No Moral Turpitude

Where respondent made statements to brother, 911 operator, and deputy sheriff while intoxicated and with head injury, and generally vague statements were made while in heat of moment and while engaged in mutual combat where both parties received injuries, even if statements were not wholly accurate, without clear evidence of an intent to mislead, evidence did not establish that respondent made deliberate misrepresentations so as to satisfy finding of moral turpitude by clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [5a-c]

1528 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Moral Turpitude – Definition

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character traits necessary for law practice (such as honesty and candor) or serious breach of duty owed to another or society, or flagrant disrespect for law or societal norms that knowledge of conduct would likely undermine public confidence in and respect for legal profession. Where respondent drove under influence of excessive alcohol, which exhibited contempt for law and public safety and reflected poorly on respondent's judgment and on legal profession, and respondent lied to police and fabricated complex, detailed narrative attempting to shift blame for accident to fictitious driver whom police attempted to locate, thereby wasting law enforcement resources, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction established moral turpitude, and hearing judge erred in concluding otherwise. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [2a-d]

Moral turpitude consists of deficiency in any character trait necessary for law practice, such that knowledge of attorney's conduct would likely undermine public confidence in profession. Where respondent frightened woman from massage service by pinning her to bed while naked on top of her and refusing to let her leave; got into violent altercation with woman's bodyguard; and gratuitously fired gun in residential neighborhood when he could not honestly have believed victims posed imminent danger, respondent exhibited contempt for law and disregard of safety of others. Accordingly, facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's felony convictions of assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury and discharging firearm with gross negligence demonstrated moral turpitude. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [1a-d]

1531 Substantive Issues in Conviction Proceedings – Other Misconduct Warranting Discipline – Found

Respondent's conviction conclusively proved elements of his crime. Thus, respondent's 2019 misdemeanor conviction established he drove under influence of alcohol and had prior DUI conviction. Drunk driving convictions do not establish per se moral turpitude, but moral turpitude can be established based on circumstances surrounding convictions. Where respondent repeatedly falsely denied to police officer consumption of alcohol and not feeling its effects, and falsely claimed driving directly home from office, Review Department concluded (1) respondent's actions did not establish moral turpitude but did amount to other misconduct warranting discipline; and (2) circumstances surrounding DUI convictions were indications of alcohol abuse problem, as respondent was again arrested for drunk driving only two years after criminal probation for first DUI ended; second drunk driving violation resulted in collision that injured two victims and caused property damage; and respondent admitted does not drive anymore so as not to risk driving under influence, which clearly implied respondent did not trust himself to make decision not to drive while impaired from drinking. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [1a-e]

Nexus between conduct resulting in DUI convictions and practice of law established if there were indications of alcohol abuse problem connected to multiple convictions. Where respondent presented evidence that legal work had not suffered from alcohol consumption, but actions resulted in repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, which affected respondent's private life, respondent's problems with alcohol were enough to warrant discipline due to potential for future harm. Review Department concluded there was evidence of substance abuse problem with nexus to practice of law and discipline was appropriate to protect public from potential harm related to respondent's practice of law and to convey to respondent's seriousness of his actions. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [2]

Standard 2.16(b) provides for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for misdemeanor convictions not involving moral turpitude but encompassing other misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had two DUI convictions; second DUI was committed only two years after respondent completed probation in first DUI matter and involved serious injuries to two victims and property damage; second DUI involved false statements to police; repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, evidenced alcohol abuse problems, but respondent's assertion regarding abstaining from driving did not solve alcohol problem or assure court future misconduct would not recur, Review Department concluded respondent's actions did not involve moral turpitude but did constitute other misconduct warranting discipline. As mitigating circumstances outweighed sole aggravating circumstance, and due to respondent's compliance with criminal probation terms, Review Department concluded appropriate discipline was public reproval with conditions, including attendance at abstinence-based self-help group, as court concluded respondent had alcohol problem. Although record did not establish respondent's law practice was affected by his alcohol abuse problem, court imposed discipline to prevent future harm to public and to impress upon respondent seriousness of actions, as respondent did not fully understand significance of alcohol problem and how it related to practice of law. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [8a-c]

1541.10 Interim suspension after felony conviction — Ordered — California or federal felony

In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713.

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

1552.10 Application of Standards — Criminal Conviction — Standard 2.15(b) (felony conviction under circumstances involving moral turpitude) — Applied — Disbarment

Prior to July 1, 2019, under former standard 2.15(b), disbarment was presumed sanction for felony conviction in which surrounding facts and circumstances involved moral turpitude, unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Where respondent was convicted of felony assault and grossly negligent discharge of firearm, and moral turpitude was found, disbarment was warranted despite respondent's showing of good character, cooperation with State Bar, and discipline-free career, as those factors were not most compelling in light of seriousness of criminal misconduct. Moreover, respondent's rehabilitation from alcoholism was in early phase, and respondent had not presented persuasive evidence of being on path to full sobriety and full understanding of extent of alcohol problem. Accordingly, discipline less than disbarment would fail to protect public and courts, and would undermine confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [10a-c]

Where disciplinary standard in effect at time of respondent's misconduct made disbarment presumed discipline for felony convictions involving moral turpitude in surrounding facts and circumstances, that version of standard applied to respondent's case, rather than later version adopted to reflect non-retroactive statutory change requiring summary disbarment. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [11]

Where respondent's felony vehicular manslaughter conviction, arising from driving while impaired by prescription drugs, involved moral turpitude; showed disregard for law and public safety; caused significant harm; and was accompanied by lack of candor in dealing with law enforcement, and respondent's mitigating factors were not compelling and fell far short of predominating, discipline less than presumed sanction of disbarment would fail to protect public and would undermine confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [9a-c]

1553.81 Application of Standards to Discipline Based on Criminal Conviction –Standard 2.15(b) – Applied – actual suspension – compelling mitigating circumstances

Standard 2.15(b) provides that actual suspension or disbarment is appropriate for misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude. Where facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's first misdemeanor conviction of driving under influence of alcohol with enhancement for excessive blood alcohol concentration involved moral turpitude, but no one was physically injured by respondent's actions; respondent exhibited exemplary behavior after conviction including full compliance with criminal probation terms and restitution; no aggravating factors were found; and respondent was entitled to mitigation for cooperation, good character, remorse, and restitution, discipline at lowest end of range for actual suspensions was warranted, appropriate discipline was 30 days of actual suspension coupled with one year of stayed suspension and probation. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [10a-c]

1553.89 Application of Standards to Discipline Based on Criminal Conviction –Standard 2.15(b) – Applied – actual suspension – Other reason

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; lacked candor, including misconduct during disciplinary proceedings; had prior discipline record resulting in 30-day period of actual suspension (which was given diminished weight as that misconduct occurred after misconduct in current disciplinary matter); and aggravation equaled mitigation, based on totality of facts and comparing it to other cases, Review Department concluded six-month actual suspension was minimum discipline necessary to protect public, courts, and legal profession. Review Department concerned that respondent's prior discipline, which involved nearly 70 instances of filing false pleadings, combined with respondent's lack of insight and failure to accept responsibility for dishonesty in current disciplinary matter, showed possibilities of future recidivism. In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965. [13a, b]

1554.33 Application of Standards to Discipline Based on Criminal Conviction –Standard 2.16(b) – Applied – Reproval

Standard 2.16(b) provides for discipline ranging from reproval to suspension for misdemeanor convictions not involving moral turpitude but encompassing other misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had two DUI convictions; second DUI was committed only two years after respondent completed probation in first DUI matter and involved serious injuries to two victims and property damage; second DUI involved false statements to police; repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, evidenced alcohol abuse problems, but respondent's assertion regarding abstaining from driving did not solve alcohol problem or assure court future misconduct would not recur, Review Department concluded respondent's actions did not involve moral turpitude but did constitute other misconduct warranting discipline. As mitigating circumstances outweighed sole aggravating circumstance, and due to respondent's compliance with criminal probation terms, Review Department concluded appropriate discipline was public reproval with conditions, including attendance at abstinence-based self-help group, as court concluded respondent had alcohol problem. Although record did not establish respondent's law practice was affected by his alcohol abuse problem, court imposed discipline to prevent future harm to public and to impress upon respondent seriousness of actions, as respondent did not fully understand significance of alcohol problem and how it related to practice of law. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [8a-c]

1610 Disbarment

In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713.

In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536.

1613.06 Stayed Suspension - One year

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

1613.08 Discipline—Stayed Suspension—Two years

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

1615.01 Actual Suspension – One month or less

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

1615.04 Actual Suspension – Six months (including between 6 and 9 months)

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

1615.06 Discipline—Actual Suspension—One year

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

1617.06 Probation – One year

In the Matter of Jimenez (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 965.

In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768.

1617.08 Discipline—Probation—Two years

In the Matter of Murray (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 479.

1691 Miscellaneous Issues in Conviction Cases — Admissibility and/or Effect of Record in Criminal Proceeding

Respondent's conviction conclusively proved elements of his crime. Thus, respondent's 2019 misdemeanor conviction established he drove under influence of alcohol and had prior DUI conviction. Drunk driving convictions do not establish per se moral turpitude, but moral turpitude can be established based on circumstances surrounding convictions. Where respondent repeatedly falsely denied to police officer consumption of alcohol and not feeling its effects, and falsely claimed driving directly home from office, Review Department concluded (1) respondent's actions did not establish moral turpitude but did amount to other misconduct warranting discipline; and (2) circumstances surrounding DUI convictions were indications of alcohol abuse problem, as respondent was again arrested for drunk driving only two years after criminal probation for first DUI ended; second drunk driving violation resulted in collision that injured two victims and caused property damage; and respondent admitted does not drive anymore so as not to risk driving under influence, which clearly implied respondent did not trust himself to make decision not to drive while impaired from drinking. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [1a-e]

For purposes of attorney discipline, respondent's criminal conviction of driving under the influence of alcohol with an enhancement for an excessive blood alcohol concentration was conclusive proof that respondent committed all elements of that crime. However, it is an attorney's misconduct, not their conviction, that warrants discipline, and facts and circumstances surrounding conviction may be considered in determining whether moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Caplin (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 768. [1a, b]

Hearing judge is in better position to assess nature and quality of testimony. Hearing judge's findings that respondent's testimony lacked credibility, and that victim's statements to police were credible, was entitled to great weight. Review Department would not contradict hearing judge's credibility conclusions where record lacked sufficient evidence to do so. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [2a, b]

Hearsay evidence is admissible in State Bar Court proceedings, but is not sufficient in itself to support finding if admitted over timely objection made on grounds valid in civil actions. Where police reports containing victim's hearsay statements were admitted into evidence by stipulation, without objection or limitation by respondent, hearing judge properly relied on victim's statements. Although hearing judge sustained respondent's counsel's objections at trial to questions that would have elicited victim's hearsay statements from investigator, those objections did not preclude reliance on victim's statements in police report admitted without objection. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [3]

Where respondent pled guilty in criminal proceeding to willfully and unlawfully committing assault, Review Department declined to consider respondent's belated self-defense claim because it would negate elements of crime to which he pled guilty, and factual basis for plea supported hearing judge's finding that respondent's self-defense claim lacked credibility. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [4a, b]

Respondent's conviction for felony vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated conclusively established that respondent drove while intoxicated and caused victim's death. In the Matter of Peters (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

1699 Miscellaneous Issues in Conviction Cases – Other Miscellaneous Issues in Conviction Cases

Nexus between conduct resulting in DUI convictions and practice of law established if there were indications of alcohol abuse problem connected to multiple convictions. Where respondent presented evidence that legal work had not suffered from alcohol consumption, but actions resulted in repeated criminal conduct, increasing in severity, which affected respondent's private life, respondent's problems with alcohol were enough to warrant discipline due to potential for future harm. Review Department concluded there was evidence of substance abuse problem with nexus to practice of law and discipline was appropriate to protect public from potential harm related to respondent's practice of law and to convey to respondent's seriousness of his actions. In the Matter of Herich (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 820 [2]

Hearing judge is in better position to assess nature and quality of testimony. Hearing judge's findings that respondent's testimony lacked credibility, and that victim's statements to police were credible, was entitled to great weight. Review Department would not contradict hearing judge's credibility conclusions where record lacked sufficient evidence to do so. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [2a, b]

Where disciplinary standard in effect at time of respondent's misconduct made disbarment presumed discipline for felony convictions involving moral turpitude in surrounding facts and circumstances, that version of standard applied to respondent's case, rather than later version adopted to reflect non-retroactive statutory change requiring summary disbarment. In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713. [11]

1712 Issues in Probation Cases – Special Issues – Willfulness

Probation matters do not require proof that respondent actually knew specifics of probation delinquencies, as long as respondent had notice of probation duties. Where respondent failed to schedule and attend meeting with assigned probation deputy and did not submit first quarterly report to Probation until six months after due date, despite email communications from Probation regarding probation duties, respondent willfully failed to comply with three probation conditions in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [2a-d]

1713 Issues in Probation Cases – Special Issues – Standard of Proof

Probation matters do not require proof that respondent actually knew specifics of probation delinquencies, as long as respondent had notice of probation duties. Where respondent failed to schedule and attend meeting with assigned probation deputy and did not submit first quarterly report to Probation until six months after due date, despite email communications from Probation regarding probation duties, respondent willfully failed to comply with three probation conditions in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [2a-d]

1719 Issues in Probation Cases — Special Issues — Miscellaneous

Even though respondent's rule 9.20(c) and probation violations all arose from failing to comply with one Supreme Court order, respondent's violations of three separate probation duties and separate duty to comply with rule 9.20(c) were still multiple acts and entitled to substantial aggravating weight. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [3a, b]

Substantial compliance with disciplinary probation conditions is not a defense to probation violations. Where disciplined attorney did not timely schedule initial meeting with Probation Department, and did not timely submit first two required quarterly reports, attorney was culpable of violating probation, despite his belated compliance with both requirements. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2a, b]

1810 Disbarment

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

1913.11 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings – Special Substantive Issues – Willfulness – Definition

Level of intent required to prove California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 violation is general intent, not specific intent or bad faith. Where respondent failed to file court notices of suspension required by rule 9.20, such conduct constituted willful violation of rule 9.20, and Review Department rejected respondent's argument that respondent did not have requisite level of intent to be found culpable of violating rule 9.20 as respondent did not do so willfully and acted in good faith. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [5]

Willful violation of rule 9.20(c) requires neither bad faith nor even actual knowledge of rule provision violated. Where respondent conceded in answer to charges, and in stipulation of facts, that respondent failed to timely file rule 9.20(c) declaration and that State Bar sent email notices informing respondent of rule 9.20(c) filing duties, one that was received and another that was not returned, respondent was culpable of willfully violating rule 9.20(c). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [1]

1913.12 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings – Special Substantive Issues – Willfulness – Lack of Notice of Underlying Order

Under Evidence Code section 664, it is acknowledged that official duty has been regularly performed; thus, there is presumption that Supreme Court Clerk properly performed official duty in serving respondent and respondent's attorney with discipline order as provided in California Rules of Court, rule 9.18(b). Where respondent began transferring cases due to impending suspension prior to issuance of Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order; Review Department had recommended two-year suspension in respondent's prior disciplinary matter several months earlier; and respondent's attorney referenced Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order in email to respondent, argument that respondent did not receive notice of rule 9.20 order from either Supreme Court or respondent's attorney was not credible, and respondent did not rebut presumption of Evidence Code section 664. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [2]

1913.24 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings – Special Substantive Issues – Delay in Compliance – Delay in Filing Affidavit of Compliance

Willful violation of rule 9.20(c) requires neither bad faith nor even actual knowledge of rule provision violated. Where respondent conceded in answer to charges, and in stipulation of facts, that respondent failed to timely file rule 9.20(c) declaration and that State Bar sent email notices informing respondent of rule 9.20(c) filing duties, one that was received and another that was not returned, respondent was culpable of willfully violating rule 9.20(c). In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [1]

1913.29 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings — Special Substantive Issues — Delay in Compliance Generally

Where respondent's failure to comply with rule 9.20 of the California Rules of Court was considered in establishing his culpability, and he had made several failed attempts to file a compliance declaration and reasonably understood, based on communications from Probation Department, that further attempts would be futile, respondent's failure to file the compliance declaration did not demonstrate continuing misconduct or indifference toward rectification and atonement, and did not constitute an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [1a-c]

1913.70 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings — Special Substantive Issues — Lesser Sanction than Disbarment for Violation

California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 provides that willful violation is cause for disbarment or suspension. Discipline less than disbarment has typically been imposed for rule 9.20 violations where attorney demonstrated good faith, made unsuccessful attempts to file compliance declaration, proved significant mitigation with little aggravation, or presented other extenuating circumstances. Where respondent failed to comply with notice requirements of rule 9.20; respondent's rule 9.20 compliance declaration contained false statements; respondent violated court orders in both his past and present disciplinary cases; and there was lack of compelling mitigation, respondent's attempt to comply with rule 9.20 and mitigation for extraordinary good character and cooperation made disbarment unduly punitive, and Review Department concluded appropriate progressive discipline was two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent provided proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice law pursuant to standard 1.2(c)(1) to impress on respondent the seriousness of misconduct and consequences for failing to follow ethical duties as attorney. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [11a-e]

Willful violation of rule 9.20 is considered serious ethical offense for which disbarment is generally appropriate. Standard 1.8(b) provides that disbarment is appropriate where respondent has two or more prior records of discipline if: (1) actual suspension was ordered in any prior disciplinary matter; (2) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate a pattern of misconduct; or (3) prior and current disciplinary matters demonstrate respondent's unwillingness or inability to conform to ethical responsibilities. Where respondent who violated rule 9.20 had three prior records of discipline, including one-year actual suspension, and had repeatedly failed to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and exceptions to standard 1.8(b) were not applicable, hearing judge erred in failing to analyze applicability of standard 1.8(b). Where no reasons existed to depart from discipline called for by standard 1.8(b), Review Department recommended disbarment to adequately ensure public protection. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [8a-f]

Under rule 9.20(d) of the California Rules of Court, an attorney may be suspended or disbarred for a willful failure to comply with the provisions of the rule. In general, a violation of rule 9.20 is a serious ethical breach for which disbarment may be appropriate. Nonetheless, each disciplinary case must be decided on its own facts, and discipline less than disbarment has been imposed in rule 9.20 cases where the attorney demonstrated attempts to comply with the rule, significant mitigation, or little aggravation. Where respondent's misconduct was diminished by extreme emotional difficulties; respondent made efforts to comply with his disciplinary obligations and eventually complied with his probation conditions; respondent arranged for all his clients to receive actual, albeit deficient, notice of his suspension; respondent participated in disciplinary proceedings, admitted facts establishing culpability, and proved he had recovered from emotional problems that led to misconduct; there was no evidence of client harm; and respondent's only prior discipline was a 90-day actual suspension, a one-year actual suspension rather than disbarment was appropriate. In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [7a-f]

1913.90 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings – Special Substantive Issues – Other Substantive Issues

California Rules of Court, rule 9.20(a)(1) and (4) require attorneys to (1) notify clients being represented in pending matters, along with any co-counsel, of their disciplinary suspension and consequent disqualification to act as attorney after suspension's effective date; (2) notify clients to seek other legal advice if there is no co-counsel; (3) notify opposing counsel in pending litigation; (4) if no opposing counsel, notify adverse parties of suspension and consequent disqualification to act as attorney after suspension's effective date; and (5) file copy of notice with court, agency, or tribunal before which litigation is pending. Where respondent stipulated he was attorney of record in four cases at time Supreme Court order requiring compliance with rule 9.20 was filed, and respondent did not file the required notices of suspension with those courts and still had not done so by time of trial over two and one-half years later, respondent failed to comply with rule 9.20. Review Department rejected respondent's argument that respondent was not obligated to file court notices as respondent filed substitutions of attorney in three cases and informed clients that respondent would be suspended prior to rule 9.20 order's issuance, as respondent did not notify clients of suspension by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, as required by rule 9.20(b); filed substitutions of attorney in pending cases after Supreme Court rule 9.20 order was filed but before effective date of order; and continued to work on one case that was settled, but not dismissed, after filing of Supreme Court rule 9.20 order. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [1a-d]

Level of intent required to prove California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 violation is general intent, not specific intent or bad faith. Where respondent failed to file court notices of suspension required by rule 9.20, such conduct constituted willful violation of rule 9.20, and Review Department rejected respondent's argument that respondent did not have requisite level of intent to be found culpable of violating rule 9.20 as respondent did not do so willfully and acted in good faith. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [5]

Reliance on attorney's advice is not defense to California Rules of Court, rule 9.20 violation but may be considered in mitigation. Similarly, reliance on employee's assistance in preparing list of cases in which respondent was counsel of record is also not defense to rule 9.20 violation. Sole responsibility to ensure identification of all cases pending on date Supreme Court's rule 9.20 order filed lies with respondent. In the Matter of Chavez (Review Dept. 2021) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 783. [6]

Even though respondent's rule 9.20(c) and probation violations all arose from failing to comply with one Supreme Court order, respondent's violations of three separate probation duties and separate duty to comply with rule 9.20(c) were still multiple acts and entitled to substantial aggravating weight. In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738. [3a, b]

1915.10 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings – Culpability of Violation – Found

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

1921 Discipline Imposed in Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Matters – Disbarment

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

1923.08 Discipline Imposed in Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Matters – Stayed Suspension — Two years

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

1924.06 Discipline Imposed in Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Matters – Actual Suspension — One year

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

1925.08 Discipline Imposed in Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Matters – Probation — Two years

In the Matter of Amponsah (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646.

1931.50 Discipline in Other Jurisdictions (Section 6049.1) – Special Procedural Issues – Use of Record from Foreign Proceeding

Where hearing judge allowed State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) to amend Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) three days before trial started and did not allow continuance of trial, but it was undisputed that only amendments made to NDC were to allege and attach certified copies of final South Carolina disciplinary order and underlying attorney disciplinary rules, in place of uncertified records submitted with original NDC, and respondent had not established required showing of prejudice, Review Department upheld hearing judge's allowance of OCTC's amendment to original NDC as non-substantive when denying respondent's request for trial continuance. *In the Matter of Fisher (*Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [2]

1931.90 Discipline in Other Jurisdictions (Section 6049.1) – Special Procedural Issues – Other Special Procedural Issues

Where hearing judge allowed State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) to amend Notice of Disciplinary Charges (NDC) three days before trial started and did not allow continuance of trial, but it was undisputed that only amendments made to NDC were to allege and attach certified copies of final South Carolina disciplinary order and underlying attorney disciplinary rules, in place of uncertified records submitted with original NDC, and respondent had not established required showing of prejudice, Review Department upheld hearing judge's allowance of OCTC's amendment to original NDC as non-substantive when denying respondent's request for trial continuance. *In the Matter of Fisher (*Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [2]

1933.10 Discipline in Other Jurisdictions (Section 6049.1) – Special Substantive Issues – Respondent's Burden of Proof

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, subdivision (a), provides that, subject only to two exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b), final determination of professional misconduct found by another jurisdiction shall be conclusive evidence that California law licensee is culpable of professional misconduct disciplinable in California. Licensee has burden to establish that exceptions do not warrant imposition of discipline in California. One exception set forth in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3), is whether proceedings of other jurisdiction lacked fundamental constitutional protection. Word "proceedings" in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3) concerns only attorney disciplinary proceeding imposed on California attorney in other jurisdiction and not predicate court proceedings in other jurisdiction that may have led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction. To conclude that "proceedings" included underlying court proceedings in other jurisdiction which led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction would be contrary to law's plain meaning and would alter very purposes of section 6049.1, by routinely allowing collateral attacks on disciplinary proceedings taken by other bodies and which extend beyond two limited statutory exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b). Where respondent (1) had ample notice of South Carolina charges, participated, and was represented by counsel in evidentiary hearing before Hearing Panel in South Carolina; (2) litigated matter before Supreme Court of South Carlina; (3) sought review before United States' Supreme Court; (4) South Carolina disciplinary proceeding required opposing counsel to present clear and convincing evidence of misconduct to support culpability; and (5) respondent's participation in South Carolina proceedings was opportunity for her to put at issue and litigate any relevant or cognizable topic as to state proceedings which formed basis of reprimand, respondent failed to sustain her burden to establish that disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina lacked fundamental constitutional protection. While local South Carolina counsel was not subjected to sanctions and disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina as was respondent, different treatment did not show unfairness of disciplinary proceeding as to respondent, especially since record of South Carolina disciplinary proceedings ascribed to respondent responsibility for frivolous and dilatory basis of litigation. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [1a-f]

1933.30 Discipline in Other Jurisdictions (Section 6049.1) – Special Substantive Issues – Constitutionality of Foreign Proceeding

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, subdivision (a), provides that, subject only to two exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b), final determination of professional misconduct found by another jurisdiction shall be conclusive evidence that California law licensee is culpable of professional misconduct disciplinable in California. Licensee has burden to establish that exceptions do not warrant imposition of discipline in California. One exception set forth in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3), is whether proceedings of other jurisdiction lacked fundamental constitutional protection. Word "proceedings" in section 6049.1, subdivision (b)(3) concerns only attorney disciplinary proceeding imposed on California attorney in other jurisdiction and not predicate court proceedings in other jurisdiction that may have led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction. To conclude that "proceedings" included underlying court proceedings in other jurisdiction which led to disciplinary proceeding in other jurisdiction would be contrary to law's plain meaning and would alter very purposes of section 6049.1, by routinely allowing collateral attacks on disciplinary proceedings taken by other bodies and which extend beyond two limited statutory exceptions in section 6049.1, subdivision (b). Where respondent (1) had ample notice of South Carolina charges, participated, and was represented by counsel in evidentiary hearing before Hearing Panel in South Carolina; (2) litigated matter before Supreme Court of South Carlina; (3) sought review before United States' Supreme Court; (4) South Carolina disciplinary proceeding required opposing counsel to present clear and convincing evidence of misconduct to support culpability; and (5) respondent's participation in South Carolina proceedings was opportunity for her to put at issue and litigate any relevant or cognizable topic as to state proceedings which formed basis of reprimand, respondent failed to sustain her burden to establish that disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina lacked fundamental constitutional protection. While local South Carolina counsel was not subjected to sanctions and disciplinary proceedings in South Carolina as was respondent, different treatment did not show unfairness of disciplinary proceeding as to respondent, especially since record of South Carolina disciplinary proceedings ascribed to respondent responsibility for frivolous and dilatory basis of litigation. In the Matter of Fisher (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 999. [1a-f]

2210.90 Issues in Section 6007(c) Involuntary Inactive Enrollment Proceedings – Special Procedural Issues in Section 6007(c)(2) Threat of Harm Cases – Other special procedural issues

Involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are abbreviated proceedings in which the principal issue is whether OCTC can establish exigent circumstances sufficient to justify enrolling an attorney involuntarily inactive before a formal disciplinary proceeding. Any subsequent disciplinary proceedings are separate proceedings, and neither the involuntary inactive enrollment order itself nor any of the findings made in the underlying proceedings is binding or has any probative value in the formal disciplinary case. Such an order also is not a final decision on the merits, and thus does not fulfill the requirements of collateral estoppel. Accordingly, Review Department considering disciplinary proceedings declined to consider hearing judge's analysis of statute as set forth in order denying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [4a, b]

Order denying OCTC's petition for involuntary inactive enrollment was judicially noticeable in subsequent disciplinary proceeding involving same respondent. In the Matter of Golden (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 574. [5]

2310 Inactive Enrollment After Disbarment Recommendation

In the Matter of Smart (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 713.

In the Matter of Hoffman (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 698.

2311 Discipline – Involuntary Inactive Enrollment After Disbarment Recommendation – Imposed

In the Matter of Thomas (Review Dept. 2022 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 873.

In the Matter of Braun (Review Dept. 2020) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 738.

Where respondent was placed on involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c)(4) following hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, but Review Department reduced discipline to 60-day actual suspension, Review Department ordered involuntary inactive enrollment terminated, and recommended that respondent be given credit for inactive enrollment period toward period of actual suspension. Because inactive enrollment period had lasted longer than 60 days, there would be no prospective period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [16a-c]

In the Matter of Gonzalez (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 632.

In the Matter of Gordon (Review Dept. 2018) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rpptr. 511.

In the Matter of Schooler (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 494.

In the Matter of Burke (Review Dept. 2016) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 448.

2319 Inactive Enrollment After Disbarment Recommendation (section 6007(c)(4)) – Miscellaneous Issues

Where respondent was placed on involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c)(4) following hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, but Review Department reduced discipline to 60-day actual suspension, Review Department ordered involuntary inactive enrollment terminated, and recommended that respondent be given credit for inactive enrollment period toward period of actual suspension. Because inactive enrollment period had lasted longer than 60 days, there would be no prospective period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Lingwood (Review Dept. 2019) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 660. [16a-c]

2504 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings — Special Procedural Issues —Burden of Proof/Showing Required for Reinstatement

Petitioner seeking reinstatement to practice law must satisfy number of requirements, including establishing rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for reinstatement. Overwhelming proof of reform must be presented. Petitioner's rehabilitation must be viewed in light of moral shortcomings that preceded resignation. When prior misconduct is sufficiently egregious, petitioner's burden is heavy one, and overwhelming proof must include lengthy period of not only unblemished but exemplary conduct. Where petitioner engaged in reprehensible misconduct, including numerous and egregious acts involving significant deceit, such as dishonesty to court, lying to law enforcement, and blame shifting, petitioner had not demonstrated sustained exemplary conduct over extended time. While record demonstrated petitioner had begun path to rehabilitation and had made rehabilitative gains since felony convictions for obstructing justice, filing false declaration, and criminal contempt, including work as court-appointed paralegal with federal court requiring him to guard confidential records such as matters subject to protective orders, dedication to community involvement, and impressive character evidence, petitioner had not yet met required overwhelming proof of reform necessary to establish successful rehabilitation in light of misconduct. In the Matter of Ellerman (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 899. [2a-h]

By statute, as a condition of reinstatement, disbarred attorneys must reimburse Client Security Fund (CSF) for moneys paid out as result of attorney's misconduct. Under this statute, former attorney must repay CSF in full prior to obtaining reinstatement. Even though Supreme Court has not foreclosed possibility that it could grant conditional reinstatement under some circumstances, State Bar Court lacks authority to recommend reinstatement where payment in full to CSF has not been made, and does not have discretion to grant relief from requirement of CSF reimbursement. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [2a-c]

Rule 5.441(B)(2) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar establishes that reimbursement of Client Security Fund for moneys paid out as result of disbarred attorney's misconduct is a mandatory prefiling requirement for petitions for reinstatement. Where State Bar Act provision requires such payment, State Bar Board of Governors acted within its authority, and not in conflict with statute, in adopting rule regulating timing of payment by requiring that it be made before petition for reinstatement is filed. Interpreting rule to require prefiling payment supports policy goals of maintaining solvency of Client Security Fund, and preserving judicial resources by avoiding lengthy reinstatement proceedings when petitioner has no prospects for payment. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [3]

Due process does not require that petitioner for reinstatement be allowed to present evidence of rehabilitation at evidentiary hearing, where applicable provision of State Bar Rules of Procedure expressly provides for dismissal of petition for failure to comply with prefiling requirements, including reimbursement of Client Security Fund. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [5]

2505 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings—Special Procedural Issues— Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 7, Ch. 3 (rules 5.440-5.447)

The requirement in rule 9.10(f) of the California Rules of Court, and rule 5.441 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, that a petitioner for reinstatement must have taken and passed the Attorneys' Examination administered by the Committee of Bar Examiners, is a single pre-filing requirement that must be fully satisfied before a petitioner can file a petition for reinstatement. Thus, the three-year time limit within which a petitioner must file the petition begins to run on the date of the written notification of passage mailed to the petitioner, not when the petitioner takes the examination. Accordingly, where a petitioner filed a petition for reinstatement within three years after the date he passed the examination but more than three years after he sat for the examination, his application was timely filed. In the Matter of Unger (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 506 [2]

2509 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings—Special Procedural Issues—Other Procedural Issues

The requirement in rule 9.10(f) of the California Rules of Court, and rule 5.441 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, that a petitioner for reinstatement must have taken and passed the Attorneys' Examination administered by the Committee of Bar Examiners, is a single pre-filing requirement that must be fully satisfied before a petitioner can file a petition for reinstatement. Thus, the three-year time limit within which a petitioner must file the petition begins to run on the date of the written notification of passage mailed to the petitioner, not when the petitioner takes the examination. Accordingly, where a petitioner filed a petition for reinstatement within three years after the date he passed the examination but more than three years after he sat for the examination, his application was timely filed. In the Matter of Unger (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 506. [2]

2551 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings—Reinstatement Not Granted—Inadequate Showing of Rehabilitation

Petitioner seeking reinstatement to practice law must satisfy number of requirements, including establishing rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for reinstatement. Overwhelming proof of reform must be presented. Petitioner's rehabilitation must be viewed in light of moral shortcomings that preceded resignation. When prior misconduct is sufficiently egregious, petitioner's burden is heavy one, and overwhelming proof must include lengthy period of not only unblemished but exemplary conduct. Where petitioner engaged in reprehensible misconduct, including numerous and egregious acts involving significant deceit, such as dishonesty to court, lying to law enforcement, and blame shifting, petitioner had not demonstrated sustained exemplary conduct over extended time. While record demonstrated petitioner had begun path to rehabilitation and had made rehabilitative gains since felony convictions for obstructing justice, filing false declaration, and criminal contempt, including work as court-appointed paralegal with federal court requiring him to guard confidential records such as matters subject to protective orders, dedication to community involvement, and impressive character evidence, petitioner had not yet met required overwhelming proof of reform necessary to establish successful rehabilitation in light of misconduct. In the Matter of Ellerman (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 899. [2a-h]

2590 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings — Miscellaneous Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings

Petitioner's claim in book he wrote that he chose to break law for sake of exposing truth about performing enhancement drug use in professional baseball and federal government's inconsistent claim it was cleaning up professional sports while not going after athletes using those drugs did not demonstrate a lack of present insight into misconduct. Rather it supports only a finding that petitioner had not established cognizable steps towards reform until at least couple of years after petitioner wrote book. In the Matter of Ellerman (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 899. [1a, b]

Impressive character evidence and commitment to service, on its own, is not determinative of reform, no matter how positive or great in quantity. In the Matter of Ellerman (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 899. [4]

By statute, as a condition of reinstatement, disbarred attorneys must reimburse Client Security Fund (CSF) for moneys paid out as result of attorney's misconduct. Under this statute, former attorney must repay CSF in full prior to obtaining reinstatement. Even though Supreme Court has not foreclosed possibility that it could grant conditional reinstatement under some circumstances, State Bar Court lacks authority to recommend reinstatement where payment in full to CSF has not been made, and does not have discretion to grant relief from requirement of CSF reimbursement. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [2a-c]

Rule 5.441(B)(2) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar establishes that reimbursement of Client Security Fund for moneys paid out as result of disbarred attorney's misconduct is a mandatory prefiling requirement for petitions for reinstatement. Where State Bar Act provision requires such payment, State Bar Board of Governors acted within its authority, and not in conflict with statute, in adopting rule regulating timing of payment by requiring that it be made before petition for reinstatement is filed. Interpreting rule to require prefiling payment supports policy goals of maintaining solvency of Client Security Fund, and preserving judicial resources by avoiding lengthy reinstatement proceedings when petitioner has no prospects for payment. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [3]

Due process does not require that petitioner for reinstatement be allowed to present evidence of rehabilitation at evidentiary hearing, where applicable provision of State Bar Rules of Procedure expressly provides for dismissal of petition for failure to comply with prefiling requirements, including reimbursement of Client Security Fund. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [5]

State Bar Court's review of petition for reinstatement, resulting in determination that petition should be dismissed for failure to satisfy a prefiling requirement, constituted hearing of petition in first instance by State Bar Court, as required under California Rules of Court. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2017) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 529. [6]

2602 Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings – Special Procedural Issues – Burdens of Proof

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 989. [1a,b]

2604 Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings – Special Procedural Issues – Discovery

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 989. [1a,b]

Disobeying court order to provide discovery is misuse of discovery process under Civil Discovery Act which is applicable in State Bar Court proceedings. Permissible sanction in State Bar Court under Civil Discovery Act is terminating sanction that dismisses action. Where applicant chose not to appear for two scheduled depositions, improperly refused to answer questions at another deposition, and terminated a fourth deposition, applicant did not comply with hearing judge's orders requiring her to sit for deposition and cooperate with investigation and discovery; applicant's failure to comply was willful; and hearing judge had denied two other motions to dismiss by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners based on applicant's failure to participate in deposition, hearing judge correctly determined that discovery sanctions were appropriate and did not abuse her discretion by imposing terminating sanctions. Applicant had opportunity to comply with orders to participate in deposition but did not do so. Applicant obstructed discovery, causing dismissal, which prevented State Bar Court from determining whether applicant was morally fit to practice law. Review Department held terminating sanctions were appropriate and affirmed hearing judge's dismissal order. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [3a-d]

Where applicant failed to seek stay of proceedings in Hearing Department, Review Department rejected applicant's argument that hearing judge should not have dismissed case while request for interlocutory review of hearing judge's order denying applicant's motion for relief from further deposition was pending. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989.[4]

2609 Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings – Special Procedural Issues – Other Procedural Issues

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 989. [1a,b]

2690 Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings – Miscellaneous Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings

Once applicant appeals to State Bar Court adverse moral character determination by State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee), court must determine whether applicant possesses good moral character. In moral character proceedings, State Bar's Office of Chief Trial Counsel (OCTC) investigates applicant's moral character, discovery occurs, and then matter proceeds to trial. OCTC may take applicant's deposition. Moral character hearings in State Bar Court are de novo and not limited to matters Committee considered. Applicant bears burden of establishing good moral character and cannot meet burden by refusing to cooperate in State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr 989. [1a,b]

Where applicant failed to seek stay of proceedings in Hearing Department, Review Department rejected applicant's argument that hearing judge should not have dismissed case while request for interlocutory review of hearing judge's order denying applicant's motion for relief from further deposition was pending. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989.[4]

Where moral character proceeding dismissed with prejudice, and no moral character hearing on merits occurred, applicant prohibited from beginning new proceeding in State Bar Court based on same adverse moral charter determination from State Bar's Committee of Bar Examiners (Committee). To allow applicant to do so would reward applicant for obstructing discovery. If applicant wants to continue to seek admission to practice law in California, applicant must submit new Application for Determination of Moral Character, and Committee determines when applicant may file such new application. Applicant may appeal any other future adverse moral character determinations by Committee, as allowed by applicable rules, based on different Application for Determination of Moral Character. In the Matter of Applicant C (Review Dept. 2022) 5 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 989. [5a, b]

100 Generally Applicable Procedural Issues

Note: References to rules in topic headings 101 through 199, unless otherwise noted, are to the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, as adopted effective January 1, 2011 (2011 rules), including subsequent amendments and additions. The 2011 rules reorganized and renumbered the rules governing State Bar Court proceedings, and grouped them under Title V, Discipline.

101 Jurisdiction

Actual notice is not a necessary element of proper service in disciplinary proceedings, and service is deemed completed upon mailing to respondent's official membership address. State Bar Court therefore had jurisdiction to hear disciplinary case even where respondent did not personally receive service of notice of disciplinary charges, motion for entry of default, and default order, all of which were sent to respondent's official membership records address. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [10]

In order to find culpability under rule 1-300(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the State Bar Court must examine applicable out-of-state authority to determine whether a California attorney has violated professional regulations in a foreign jurisdiction. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [1]

Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 220(b), which requires the court to file its decision within 90 days of taking a matter under submission, is not jurisdictional. Although filing a decision well beyond the prescribed 90 days undermines important objectives, an attorney's decision to abate his law practice pending filing of hearing decision is too speculative to establish specific, legally cognizable prejudice. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [1]

Although the State Bar apparently believed that it had perfected its right to appeal due to having filed two requests for review, no timely request for review was filed after service of a final order disposing of a posttrial motion, and therefore the review department was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Due to the sui generis nature of disciplinary proceedings, as well as the differences between statutes and rules regarding notices of appeal applicable in civil matters and those applicable in disciplinary matters, the review department could not apply civil rules and statutes so as to consider the requests for review as prematurely filed or to stay proceedings at the trial level after a request for review had been filed. Although the State Bar asked for relief on the grounds that it never received a copy of the hearing judge's final order and that it was misled when the review department clerk's office did not reject pleadings filed after the requests for review, the evidence established that service of the hearing judge's final order was properly effectuated, and the review department clerk's failure to issue a notice of rejection of pleadings was not a ground for relief under any rule but merely a courtesy function. More importantly, because the review department was divested of jurisdiction, it was powerless to relieve against mistake, inadvertence, accident, or misfortune. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [2 a–g]

The review department concluded that the hearing judge erred as a matter of law in denying the motion to set aside the dismissal for lack of jurisdiction and found that the procedural requirement of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) did not divest the court of jurisdiction to extend the time for, or to grant relief from, payment of costs. Relying on well–settled rules of statutory construction, the review department construed the rule to be directory rather than mandatory or jurisdictional and thus found that the court retained jurisdiction to determine whether petitioner's failure to provide proof of payment of costs prior to filing the reinstatement petition should have resulted in a dismissal under the facts and circumstances of the case. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [1a, b]

Despite its seemingly mandatory wording, Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) is merely procedural, advancing a time requirement for the payment of costs, while the relevant Business and Professions Code sections confer jurisdiction to decide the substantive issues of costs and relief therefrom. There is no evidence that the Board of Governors of the State Bar attempted to supplant the statutory authority set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 and 6086.10, or to divest the State Bar Court of jurisdiction, by implementing a rule of procedure, and indeed, the Board of Governors is proscribed from doing so by Business and Professions Code section 6086. That section is consistent with the more general rule that, where a statute empowers an administrative agency to adopt regulations, those regulations must be consistent and not conflict with the governing statute. Because there is no express language or clear intent to render the rule jurisdictional, the review department looks to the cost provisions as a whole, the nature and character of these provisions, and the consequences that would follow from potential constructions. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory or jurisdictional, the rule would conflict with and/or constrict relevant statutes and other rules, inadvertently alter the reinstatement requirements, and at times produce unreasonable results. Construing the rule as directory, however, in no way interferes with or compromises the ability of the State Bar or the State Bar Court to effectuate the intent of obtaining costs as money judgments. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [2a, b]

In construing statutes, a practical construction is preferred. A construction of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) which permits the State Bar Court to retain jurisdiction is manifestly more practical than one which cuts off the court's jurisdiction regardless of the time and resources the parties have already expended in the court proceedings. Where a reinstatement proceeding had been pending for almost a year at the time a motion to dismiss was filed, the State Bar's investigation period and the discovery period for both parties had expired, and the trial was set to commence in approximately one month, dismissal was a severe remedy for noncompliance with payment of costs, and denial of a motion to set aside the dismissal was draconian. If a petitioner fails to pay the disciplinary costs prior to filing his reinstatement petition, the hearing judge has discretion to dismiss the reinstatement proceeding rather than to undertake a lengthy trial. But the hearing judge may also consider the failure to timely pay costs as a negative factor in petitioner's showing of rehabilitation or condition a petitioner's return to active status on the payment of some or all of the costs. Finally, if a disbarred or resigned attorney has failed to pay costs, the State Bar may enforce an order imposing costs as a money judgment. Construing Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) as directory will continue to promote timely payment of costs, while not mandating unreasonable consequences in pending proceedings. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [5a b, c]

A disciplinary action may be maintained even though the attorney has been acquitted of criminal charges that have been dismissed based on the same facts. Moreover, the State Bar Court has jurisdiction to regulate misconduct even when it occurred in another state and did not result in an out–of–state criminal conviction. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [7]

The review department declined to consider applicant's argument that the Supreme Court's order in his previous disciplinary matter, filed in 1998, was void on its face because of numerous constitutional infirmities. The review department simply does not have the authority to set aside the Supreme Court's order. Once the record in applicant's previous disciplinary cases was transmitted to the Supreme Court, the review department no longer retained jurisdiction over the matter. Accordingly, the review department declined to consider applicant's collateral attack on his prior discipline.In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731.[1]

Rule 15.2 of the Rules Governing the State Bar Program for Certifying Legal Specialists provides that a denial, suspension, or revocation of certification or re-certification by the Board of Legal Specialization based on a final disciplinary action by the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court, or any body authorized to impose professional discipline, shall be final and shall not be subject to further review. The legislative history of rule 15.2 made it abundantly clear that the State Bar proposed the adoption of this rule to the Supreme Court with the specific intent of divesting previously disciplined applicants of their right of appeal to the State Bar Court. Thus, the rule expressly deprived the State Bar Court of jurisdiction to consider applicant's procedural due process challenge. Accordingly, the review department was compelled to agree with the hearing judge, who correctly dismissed the matter for lack of jurisdiction. Although the State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction in this case, the review department construed rule 15.2 to mean that the decision of the Board denying applicant re-certification was subject to review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731.[1]

The ability of federal courts and federal agencies to discipline attorneys who practice before them does not deprive a state bar of jurisdiction to discipline one of its members for engaging in misconduct while practicing before the federal courts or agencies. While neither the State Bar Court nor the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to prevent a person from practicing law in federal courts or agencies, the Supreme Court has the inherent authority to discipline attorneys licensed to practice in the State of California, and the State Bar Court has authority to conduct disciplinary proceedings and make recommendations of discipline to the Supreme Court. The federal regulations pertaining to discipline of attorneys practicing before federal immigration agencies themselves contemplate that the disciplinary agency of a state in which an attorney is admitted to practice has authority to discipline the attorney for misconduct committed in federal immigration agencies. In addition, various cases from federal courts and from the Board of Immigration Appeals have indicated that the disciplinary agencies of the states in which immigration attorneys are licensed have jurisdiction to discipline these attorneys for misconduct committed in immigration cases in federal courts and agencies. In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[1 a-e]

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[8]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[1]

The two requisite elements of personal jurisdiction are (1) that respondent is a member of the State Bar for the duration of the proceeding and (2) that respondent was properly served with a copy of the notice of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[2]

Proper subject matter jurisdiction in the State Bar Court is not limited to the subject of attorney misconduct committed in the course of practicing law. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[3]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[4]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[1]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[2]

When a party seeks or consents to a court's action that is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the party may be estopped to complain of the court's action as long as the court had subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent was estopped from collaterally attacking a final order extending the time in which he was required to comply with conditions attached to a reproval where he consented to the order and where the court had jurisdiction of the subject. The review department concluded that the application of estoppel was in harmony with the primary goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[3]

The complaining clients' settlement of their civil matter against respondent and the clients' release of all claims against him does not preclude the State Bar from proceeding with the disciplinary matter. A disciplinary proceeding is not a controversy between two individuals, the complainant and the accused attorney, but is an adverse proceeding against the accused attorney and may be instituted and prosecuted upon the complaint of any person knowing the facts upon which the proceeding is based. The complaining person or client is not a party to the disciplinary proceeding, and need not appear and testify at trial. Thus, the disciplinary case was not a right, claim, or cause of action that accrued to the complaining clients; and therefore it was not a claim that they could release or otherwise compromise. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [1]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

In California, as in all the states, the regulation of the practice of law is a judicial function. The California Supreme Court has original, inherent, and plenary jurisdiction to regulate attorneys in California. The State Bar provides assistance in the area of attorney regulation; it serves as an administrative assistant to or adjunct of the Supreme Court, which nonetheless retains its inherent judicial authority. Thus, contrary to respondent's suggestions, the State Bar Court possesses the jurisdiction to adjudicate attorney disciplinary proceedings as an arm of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [1]

Even though statutes authorizing conviction referral proceedings authorize only the disbarment or suspension of attorneys convicted of crimes, the State Bar Court still had jurisdiction in conviction matter to recommend to the Supreme Court that it cancel respondent's license to practice law. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [9]

Respondent's willful failure to disclose his arrest and pending trial on felony charges by updating his answers to the moral character questions on his initial application for admission to practice law was a fraud upon the Supreme Court because it allowed him to admitted without adequate consideration of his moral character. Thus, the State Bar Court may recommend that his license to practice be revoked without addressing the nature of his crimes or the facts and circumstances surrounding them. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [12]

Respondent's argument that the State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction because any misconduct occurred in another state was rejected because there is no jurisdictional requirement that alleged misconduct occur in this state. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [3]

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

Notice to show cause under rule 550 of Transitional Rules of Procedure of State Bar is not required in conviction referral proceeding. Pursuant to Supreme Court's delegation of authority to State Bar Court in conviction referral matters (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(a)), only State Bar Court referral order and notice of time and place of hearing are needed to initiate a conviction referral proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [2]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

State Bar's motion for emergency relief from hearing judge's order regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation was not properly brought before review department under either rule 350 of Transitional Rules of Procedure or rule 1400 of Provisional Rules of Practice. However, motion by State Bar to stay or vacate order issued by hearing judge based on argument that hearing judge acted without jurisdiction was properly brought under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [1]

Except with respect to motions to quash investigative subpoenas, the State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction over State Bar disciplinary complaints prior to the filing of formal charges by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, and therefore had no jurisdiction to grant relief requested by attorney regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation, absent a Supreme Court order conferring authority to do so. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [2]

The State Bar Court's statutory exercise of independent decision-making authority over the determination of disciplinary and reinstatement proceedings does not extend to the investigation of such matters. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [3]

In the statute establishing the State Bar Court (Business and Professions Code section 6086.5), the reference to "committees" which are replaced by the State Bar Court does not include the standing Discipline Committee of the Board of Governors. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [4]

Former disciplinary structure under which local administrative committees had both investigative and fact-finding powers raised due process concerns. Under volunteer State Bar Court system which superseded it, investigative and prosecutorial functions were separated from fact-finding and adjudicative functions. This separation was strengthened and institutionalized by reforms which created independently appointed State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [5]

Statutory scheme regarding State Bar discipline system does not provide for State Bar Court judges to report to Board of Governors or any of its committees, nor does it require Chief Trial Counsel to report to State Bar Court. Consistent with separation of prosecutorial and judicial roles, State Bar Court has no administrative oversight role with respect to functions of Chief Trial Counsel, and does not have general, plenary authority to supervise the conduct of investigations. Board of Governors and its Discipline Committee have general statutory authority over Chief Trial Counsel and Office of Investigations, subject to review by California Supreme Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [6]

The State Bar Court's statutory jurisdiction (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) to adjudicate motions to quash investigative subpoenas issued by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel constitutes the sole exception to the State Bar Court's lack of jurisdiction during the investigation phase of disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [7]

Review department declined to adopt construction of statute giving State Bar Court jurisdiction over motions to quash subpoenas (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) which would do violence both to plain meaning of statute and to necessary separation of powers within disciplinary system. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [8]

When a disciplinary proceeding is pending in State Bar Court, the respondent may be able to argue that evidence sought to be used by the State Bar which was obtained by improper means should be excluded. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [9]

Nothing in the California Rules of Court delegates to the State Bar Court the Supreme Court's general review power over decisions of the State Bar Board of Governors and its committees. However, in the exercise of its inherent authority to regulate the legal profession, the Supreme Court could order the State Bar Court to adjudicate or make findings and recommendations regarding a motion for a protective order regarding a State Bar disciplinary investigation, or could adopt a rule of court giving the State Bar Court jurisdiction over such motions generally. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [10]

Respondent's attempts to have clients withdraw pending State Bar complaints as part of settlements of actions which were not for malpractice did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from conditioning malpractice settlements on agreement by client not to file State Bar complaint. The State Bar may proceed with a disciplinary matter whether or not the complainant is willing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [12]

The Legislature itself has recognized that the inherent authority of the Supreme Court controls the outcome in disciplinary proceedings. It is therefore incumbent upon the review department not only to review the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, but also to review Supreme Court precedent to assure that application of statutory summary disbarment does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [4]

Finality of an attorney's criminal conviction is not essential for an order referring the conviction to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether there is probable cause to conclude that the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude for purposes of interim suspension of the attorney. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

The possibility that criminal proceedings against an attorney may be dismissed if the attorney complies with the terms of criminal probation is not relevant to the effect of the conviction in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

No method of enforcement of settlement agreements in disciplinary proceedings is set forth in the Transitional Rules of Procedure, but an express provision governing this subject is not essential to the court's inherent jurisdiction to exercise reasonable control over proceedings before it in order to avoid unnecessary delay. Where one party refused to abide by a settlement agreement, the other party could have made a motion to compel enforcement of the agreement, by analogy with the statutory motion permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 664.6, or could have asserted the agreement as an affirmative defense in the pending proceeding. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [6]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

The required five-year waiting period before a disbarred attorney can apply for reinstatement may be shortened to three years for good cause. By rule, the five-year and three-year periods run from the date of any interim suspension, and Supreme Court precedent has given the same effect to inactive enrollment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) The issue whether the waiting period may run from the start of a suspension other than an interim suspension has not been decided, and did not need to be addressed by the review department in recommending disbarment, but could be raised by respondent before a hearing judge if respondent wished to seek reinstatement at the earliest possible time. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [22]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

By statute, summary disbarment is available only for a narrow range of grievous misconduct. Grand theft by an attorney in the capacity of executor of an estate, though egregious, does not come within the statutory definition of an offense justifying summary disbarment unless it was committed in the practice of law or in such a manner that a client was a victim. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [7]

The Supreme Court has delegated to the State Bar Court its statutory power to place on interim suspension attorneys who have been convicted of crimes. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [2]

Where an attorney occupies a dual capacity, performing, for a single client or in a single matter, along with legal services, services that might otherwise be performed by a lay person, the services the attorney renders in the dual capacity all involve the practice of law, and the attorney must conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct in the provision of all of them. This rule applies to an attorney who is appointed both attorney and executor of a probate estate. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [1]

Where respondent was convicted after being admitted to practice law for criminal conduct occurring before such admission, there was statutory authority for disciplining respondent as an attorney, based on the conviction. Had the conviction occurred earlier, the disciplinary system would still have had jurisdiction over the misconduct under the Supreme Court's inherent authority. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Admission of attorneys to practice law is an exercise of one of the inherent powers of the California Supreme Court, which relies on the Committee of Bar Examiners of the State Bar to administer and carry out the bar admission process, including examining applicants for admission and investigating their fitness. An applicant who is denied certification by the Committee may seek independent adjudication by the State Bar Court. The determination of moral character made by that court is final and binding, subject to review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [1]

Judges in State Bar proceedings have inherent authority to exercise reasonable control over the proceedings in front of them. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [15]

A disciplinary proceeding is seldom the proper forum for attorney fee disputes. In a matter arising from a dispute between attorneys, where respondent did not mishandle any sum that could be considered trust funds and respondent's instruction to staff to endorse the other attorney's name to settlement drafts was not dishonest, corrupt, or reflective of bad moral character, the review department affirmed the dismissal of the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [1]

Rule 951(a), California Rules of Court, delegating certain powers to the State Bar Court regarding the discipline of attorneys convicted of crimes, limits the State Bar Court to recommending summary disbarment to the Supreme Court, rather than imposing it directly. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [9]

The State Bar Court acts as the administrative arm of the Supreme Court on attorney disciplinary matters and acts pursuant to its mandate. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [8]

The State Bar Court, as an arm of the Supreme Court in attorney disciplinary matters, does not sit as a collection board for clients aggrieved over fee matters, nor is its jurisdiction derivative of fee arbitration proceedings. The administration of attorney discipline, including such remedial orders as restitution, is independent of any remedy that an aggrieved client may pursue. In a disciplinary proceeding to protect the public, the alleged flaws in a fee arbitration proceeding and resulting judgment have little relevance. Accordingly, the State Bar Court has jurisdiction over a disciplinary matter even though there has already been a factually related fee arbitration. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [4]

Respondent's fundamental objections to disciplinary proceeding, based on lack of personal service, expiration of the statute of limitations, lack of jurisdiction, and failure of the notice to show cause to state grounds for discipline, should have been presented to the State Bar Court at the trial level by motion. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [15]

State Bar Court jurisdiction was confirmed by evidence establishing the sole requisite fact, i.e., respondent's membership in the State Bar. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [18]

Section 6078 authorizes the State Bar Court to hold a hearing on charged violations of law and to recommend disbarment in those cases warranting disbarment, but section 6077 declares that a Rule of Professional Conduct violation does not warrant discipline in excess of three years suspension. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [8]

Section 6103's authorization of discipline, including disbarment, is limited by its terms to occasions when an attorney violates the oath and duties defined in the Business and Professions Code or violates a court order. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [9]

Decisions in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b) are reviewable by the review department pursuant to rules 450-453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [1]

As a sui generis arm of the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court may recommend that the Supreme Court declare a statute or rule unconstitutional, but in proceedings not requiring Supreme Court action, the State Bar Court's authority is limited to interpreting existing law. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [5]

The time limit for filing an answer to the notice to show cause is not jurisdictional, and an answer will be accepted for filing at any time prior to the actual entry of default, no matter how belatedly it is submitted. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

The State Bar Court retains jurisdiction over a matter until it transmits the record to the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [1]

102 Improper Prosecutorial Conduct

102.10 Improper reopening of investigation

Initiation of disciplinary proceeding against respondent was not barred under former rule 511 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar by State Bar's decision to monitor appeal in malpractice case against respondent instead of pursuing formal investigation. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [2]

A disciplinary proceeding was not barred under rule 511, Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, even though a letter was sent from the Los Angeles office of the State Bar ostensibly closing the case, where there remained a separate open, active investigative file in the San Francisco office. The closure of the Los Angeles investigation did not serve to extinguish the open investigation by the San Francisco office. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [1]

Evidence provided by State Bar demonstrated that closure and reopening of investigation of disciplinary matter was in compliance with applicable rules and did not bar disciplinary proceedings; respondent had not been prejudiced by delay. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [12]

102.20 Delay in prosecution (Rule 5.21)

Delay in prosecution bars a disciplinary proceeding only if the delay caused specific actual prejudice resulting in the denial of a fair trial. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [2]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

No delay in bringing disciplinary charges occurred where complaint against respondent was sent to State Bar in July 1988, respondent's last act of misconduct was in June 1989, and notice to show cause was filed in May 1990. In addition, where none of evidence allegedly lost due to delay was material to issue of respondent's misconduct, no specific prejudice was demonstrated from alleged delay in bringing charges. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [4]

Excessive delay in the conduct of a disciplinary proceeding may be a mitigating circumstance, but the attorney must demonstrate that the delay impeded the preparation or presentation of an effective defense. A delay in a disciplinary proceeding merits consideration only if it has caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice. Where respondent was able to present evidence on all issues as to which respondent claimed prejudicial delay, and did not specify what missing evidence would have shown, respondent failed to show that delay caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [21]

Where a fire which destroyed some of respondent's files did not occur until over a year after respondent had promised the State Bar to check his files in response to a client complaint, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the State Bar's delay in bringing formal charges arising out of the complaint. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [1]

The passage of time since respondent's misconduct and the failure of the State Bar to consolidate respondent's two disciplinary matters did not render the disbarment recommendation in the second matter unfair. Consolidation of disciplinary matters, while preferable when reasonably possible and not prejudicial, is not mandatory, and independent consideration of separate matters involving the same attorney is not uncommon. Where an investigation by state law enforcement and the State Bar of respondent's misconduct in the second matter was still ongoing after the initiation and disposition of respondent's earlier disciplinary matter, consolidation would not have been possible. Further, it could not be presumed that if the matters had been consolidated, the recommended discipline would have been suspension rather than disbarment, given the far greater seriousness of the misconduct in the second matter. Finally, respondent had shown no prejudice from the delay, and had benefited from being able to practice almost continually in the interim. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

In order to establish a denial of a fair trial because of delay between the making of a complaint to the State Bar and the filing of a formal notice to show cause, an attorney must show specific instances of actual prejudice from the delay. Where information in support of respondent's claim of prejudice was available and known to respondent at the time of respondent's motion to dismiss before the hearing judge, but was not set forth in support of the motion, respondent could not improve on review the record he had the opportunity to make in the hearing department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [2]

Respondent's fundamental objections to disciplinary proceeding, based on lack of personal service, expiration of the statute of limitations, lack of jurisdiction, and failure of the notice to show cause to state grounds for discipline, should have been presented to the State Bar Court at the trial level by motion. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [15]

There is no statute of limitations in attorney disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [17]

Delays in disciplinary proceedings merit consideration only if they have caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice (e.g., by impairing the presentation of evidence). Where respondent was not prepared to state that his case would have been stronger if no delays had occurred, and respondent received credit for time on interim suspension following conviction, respondent failed to demonstrate prejudice from delay in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [1]

Where respondent failed to identify any specific prejudice resulting from delay of approximately three and one half years in filing of notice to show cause after client's initial complaint, and merely made generalized reference to fading memories, delay was not a basis for the dismissal of charges. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [8]

102.30 Investigative and/or pretrial misconduct

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

State Bar's motion for emergency relief from hearing judge's order regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation was not properly brought before review department under either rule 350 of Transitional Rules of Procedure or rule 1400 of Provisional Rules of Practice. However, motion by State Bar to stay or vacate order issued by hearing judge based on argument that hearing judge acted without jurisdiction was properly brought under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [1]

Except with respect to motions to quash investigative subpoenas, the State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction over State Bar disciplinary complaints prior to the filing of formal charges by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, and therefore had no jurisdiction to grant relief requested by attorney regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation, absent a Supreme Court order conferring authority to do so. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [2]

Statutory scheme regarding State Bar discipline system does not provide for State Bar Court judges to report to Board of Governors or any of its committees, nor does it require Chief Trial Counsel to report to State Bar Court. Consistent with separation of prosecutorial and judicial roles, State Bar Court has no administrative oversight role with respect to functions of Chief Trial Counsel, and does not have general, plenary authority to supervise the conduct of investigations. Board of Governors and its Discipline Committee have general statutory authority over Chief Trial Counsel and Office of Investigations, subject to review by California Supreme Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [6]

When a disciplinary proceeding is pending in State Bar Court, the respondent may be able to argue that evidence sought to be used by the State Bar which was obtained by improper means should be excluded. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [9]

Nothing in the California Rules of Court delegates to the State Bar Court the Supreme Court's general review power over decisions of the State Bar Board of Governors and its committees. However, in the exercise of its inherent authority to regulate the legal profession, the Supreme Court could order the State Bar Court to adjudicate or make findings and recommendations regarding a motion for a protective order regarding a State Bar disciplinary investigation, or could adopt a rule of court giving the State Bar Court jurisdiction over such motions generally. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [10]

A State Bar disciplinary matter does not deal with civil responsibility where a party might be under a duty to mitigate harm or damages. The State Bar is entitled to investigate whatever information it acquires about misconduct without notifying the attorney involved contemporaneously, and it did not act improperly by failing to notify attorneys promptly when it learned of solicitation of clients by attorneys' agents. State Bar rules require only that attorneys be given an opportunity to explain or deny matters under investigation prior to issuance of notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 509(b).) In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [3]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

State Bar prosecutors have statutory authority to apply to superior court to grant immunity from criminal prosecution to a witness in an attorney disciplinary proceeding. Where such procedures were properly invoked, and respondents showed no prejudice to themselves on account of the procedures followed in seeking such immunity, respondents were not entitled to relief based on asserted error in such procedures. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [6]

Where State Bar demonstrated that Board of Governors policy had been properly observed with regard to State Bar investigators' interviews of respondents' current clients who had not made complaints against them, respondents were not entitled to relief based on occurrence of such interviews. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [7]

Issue of alleged misconduct of examiner during pretrial discovery was moot, where issue had been addressed by order of hearing judge which respondent did not challenge on review, and where only prejudice alleged was unnecessary prolongation of interim suspension for which review department gave respondent credit against recommended actual suspension. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [12]

Where examiner's pre-trial statement listed respondent's prior record of discipline among exhibits to be offered at trial, but did not detail or characterize such prior record in any way, and copy of prior record was not considered by hearing judge until after determination of culpability, and respondent demonstrated no prejudice from reference in pre-trial statement and had failed to raise issue before hearing judge, respondent was not entitled to any relief based on asserted violation of rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

A disciplinary proceeding was not barred under rule 511, Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, even though a letter was sent from the Los Angeles office of the State Bar ostensibly closing the case, where there remained a separate open, active investigative file in the San Francisco office. The closure of the Los Angeles investigation did not serve to extinguish the open investigation by the San Francisco office. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [1]

Even if it were established that examiner had sent complaining witness's letter to hearing referee, respondent had waived any claim of prejudicial misconduct by his counsel's failure to preserve the objection at trial, and in any event no identifiable prejudice resulted from the referee's exposure to the letter's hearsay statements where the referee heard five days of testimony, including testimony on the same subject by the letter's author and by persons with personal knowledge. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [7]

102.35 Failure to disclose exculpatory evidence

Even if State Bar prosecutor had duty to disclose exculpatory evidence, unpublished, non-precedential trial court decision did not constitute such evidence, nor was it controlling precedent which prosecutor had duty to disclose to court. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [14]

102.40 Misconduct during trial

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

102.90 Other improper prosecutorial conduct

Where State Bar conceded at trial that respondent's conviction did not involve moral turpitude, but argued on review that conviction did involve moral turpitude, State Bar's unexplained change of position was troubling, because it denied respondent opportunity to develop trial record on the issue. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [2 a,b]

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

The State Bar is required by statute to disclose to criminal investigatory agencies certain incriminating information discovered about an attorney as a result of an investigation or formal proceeding. The State Bar also is obligated by statute to refer all convictions to the State Bar Court. Where it appeared that the State Bar complied with these statutory duties by disclosing information to federal authorities well before the start of trial in an earlier original proceeding and by notifying the State Bar Court after respondent sustained a federal conviction, there was no evidence that the subsequent State Bar Court conviction proceeding was the product of vindictive prosecution tactics of the State Bar. In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601. [1]

It is not evident whether defense of selective prosecution is applicable in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, respondent would have been required to show an intentional violation of essential principle of practical uniformity and an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination. That is respondent would have been required to demonstrate that she had been deliberately singled out for prosecution on basis of some invidious criterion. There is no evidence in record on any of these issues. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [14 a-c]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, it cannot be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, gender, or exercise of constitutional rights. In absence of allegation of prohibited basis for prosecution, State Bar's failure to prove all charges was not sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [16]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Even if selective prosecution were a valid defense in State Bar proceedings, claim that respondent was singled out for prosecution based on success and fame could not succeed in absence of authority that claims of selective prosecution may be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on a constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, sex, or exercise of constitutional rights. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [9]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. If such defense were available, burden of proof to establish selective prosecution would be on respondent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [10]

Pursuant to case law, selective prosecution claims should be raised by motion prior to trial, and as a practical matter, such claims have little chance of success if not raised initially by pretrial motion, due to difficulty of proving them without aid of discovery. However, it is not clear that such claims cannot be raised as part of respondent's defense case at trial; accordingly, review department considered such claim despite respondent's failure to raise it by pretrial motion. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [11]

Even if claim of selective prosecution could be founded on alleged discrimination on basis of success and fame, there was insufficient evidence to support such claim, where principal factual basis was that many charges were dismissed or were assertedly without merit. A prosecutor's failure to prove all charges brought in a case has not been held to be sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [12]

State Bar Court is reluctant to interfere with reasonable exercise of prosecutorial discretion. When presented with a complaint, State Bar can legitimately charge attorney based on facts as they appear from investigation. Where large number of counts filed against respondent resulted primarily from size and volume of respondent's practice and his chronic problem with handling medical liens, fact that State Bar could not establish factual or legal basis for some counts and charges was not sufficient to establish that charges were brought without reasonable basis or that respondent was victim of prosecutorial misconduct. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [13]

Claim of selective prosecution in probation revocation proceeding was without merit, where such claim was based on asserted failure to give respondent same opportunity as other lawyers to cure defects in probation report, but revocation proceeding was also based on failure to pay restitution due ten months earlier; respondent's subsequent probation reports were also inadequate; and respondent failed to connect cited authorities on doctrine of selective enforcement to facts of proceeding. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [8]

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

Where a settlement judge's order following a settlement conference indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the order was binding and an attorney's failure to abide by it, without moving for relief therefrom, constituted a violation of the statutes requiring obedience to court orders and respect for courts and judicial officers. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [5]

Prosecutors must be held to the ethical standards which regulate the legal profession as a whole. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [10]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

State Bar's pretrial dismissal of three out of four original counts in notice to show cause did not entitle respondent to any relief, where respondent did not demonstrate how such dismissal caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [6]

Where examiner's conduct in connection with obtaining depositions of State Bar's non-party witnesses, while not in bad faith, clearly fell short of her duty under the circumstances, review department upheld hearing judge's order permitting such witnesses to testify only if first deposed, and modified such order to require examiner to subpoena the witnesses and to pay transportation costs as a condition of permitting witnesses' testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [13]

It was not an abuse of discretion for the hearing judge to conclude that partial relief from costs was justified, even in the absence of evidence of bad faith on the part of counsel for the State Bar, based on the State Bar's lack of responsiveness to respondent's extraordinary efforts to provide information and good faith offers to settle the matter prior to the filing of formal charges. Elimination of all costs assessed for the stage after filing formal charges, and of half of the State Bar's costs for the pre-filing stage, was within the hearing judge's discretion. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [3]

Under Supreme Court precedent and the State Bar Rules of Procedure, before entering into a stipulation resolving a disciplinary matter, the State Bar should notify the respondent of any other pending investigations or complaints. However, where respondent had been notified of a second complaint before respondent entered into a stipulation to a public reproval in an earlier, separate matter, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the failure of the earlier stipulation to refer to the pendency of the second complaint. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 406.) In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [2]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

Highly generalized claims of bias have been rejected as being overbroad. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [7]

It is not clear that the doctrine of selective prosecution applies in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy the full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. But even if it does, there are several threshold procedural and evidentiary hurdles to be overcome before a case of selective prosecution can be established, and where respondent did not even attempt to make the requisite showing, respondent's claim of selective prosecution was without merit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [22]

Charges should only be filed when the Office of Trial Counsel ascertains that reasonable cause exists to charge that particular conduct occurred which violated a particular regulatory provision. (Rule 510, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [18]

103 Disqualification/Bias of Judge (rule 5.46)

Where hearing judge adequately responded to motions to disqualify him, and different hearing judge properly considered and denied motions, and respondent failed on review to show arbitrariness, legal error, or prejudice, Review Department rejected argument that hearing judge should have been disqualified. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [12]

The burden of showing a claim of bias or prejudice rests on the complaining party. Respondent's assertion that the hearing judge made numerous legal errors to support his allegation of judicial bias was without merit because even if a judge makes numerous mistakes as to questions of law, that does not form a ground for a charge of bias and prejudice. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [7]

The fact that a portion of a hearing judge's salary might be paid from part of the costs that the State Bar recovers from disciplined attorneys does not create a condition disqualifying the judge because the amount of costs actually recovered are relatively nominal to the State Bar's Budget. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [10]

The hearing judge's appropriate role is to decide the issues on the evidence presented. If that process leads the hearing judge to conclude that the party bearing the burden of proof had not prevailed, then the judge's duty is to find against the particular party on that issue or to recommend that only that degree of discipline, if any, which is warranted by the evidence presented. The party failing in its burden runs the very risk that the judge will so act. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a hearing judge is not authorized to require the production of added evidence beyond which the parties have chosen to present. If parties or witnesses testify, the hearing judge is at liberty to ask questions of a type consistent with the judicial function of supervising or regulating the trial. Moreover, allegations against other attorneys can be referred to the State Bar for new investigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888. [2]

Respondent's claim that the State Bar Court is an entity created, owned, and run by the prosecuting party was frivolous. The current State Bar Court is modeled after courts of record. State Bar Court judges are appointed for specified terms by the Supreme Court and are subject to discipline by the Supreme Court upon the same grounds as judges of courts of record. The prosecution does not assign cases to State Bar Court judges, nor do their salaries depend upon finding attorneys culpable of misconduct. Although the Board of Governors of the State Bar is responsible for paying the salaries of State Bar Court judges, these salaries are set by law to equal those of judges of courts of record and come from annual membership fees. Thus, respondent provided no evidence that the State Bar Court is improperly dependent on, or controlled by, the prosecution. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [2]

In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161.

Where respondent not only declined to challenge hearing judge for bias in timely manner but also expressed belief that such judge was a fair and good judge, and did not assert bias until after judge heard evidence on culpability and expressed tentative finding that respondent was culpable, and record showed that judge was fair and receptive to hearing all relevant evidence, respondent's claim of racial bias on judge's part was without merit and did not appear to be made in good faith. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [5]

Statute providing for respondents to pay costs of disciplinary proceeding upon determination of sanction of public reproval or greater discipline, and also providing for assessment of costs against State Bar in case of complete exoneration of attorney, is neutral in its application. Moreover, since salaries of State Bar Court judges are set by statute and are unaffected by assessment or collection of costs by State Bar, and State Bar Court's ruling on costs is only a recommendation to Supreme Court that costs be assessed, cost statute does not provide basis for alleging bias of State Bar Court judges based on alleged personal financial interest. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [6]

There is no basis for charging impropriety simply because a judge judged prior proceedings involving the same lawyer. Fact that hearing judge in conviction referral proceeding had presided over respondent's prior disciplinary proceeding did not make such judge a percipient witness to improperly considered evidence, nor had such judge functioned as investigator in prior proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [7]

Claim of unfairness on part of hearing judge was not meritorious, and did not entitle respondent to new hearing, where such claim was very generalized, concerned some matters peripheral to charges, showed no example of specific prejudice, and was rooted in unproven charge of conspiracy, and where record showed that hearing judges acted fairly and took many steps to accommodate respondent, who had ample opportunity to present evidence. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [5]

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

A hearing judge's statement that the State Bar Court has a duty to ensure that suspended attorneys are scrupulously honest regarding their suspensions did not indicate that the judge had improperly shifted the burden of proof on culpability at the disciplinary hearing from the State Bar to the respondent. The view that suspended attorneys have a duty not to mislead the public about their suspensions has also been expressed by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [8]

The party making a claim of judicial bias must show that a person in possession of all the relevant facts would reasonably conclude that the hearing judge was biased or prejudiced against that party. The standard is an objective one and the partisan views of the litigants do not control. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [3]

A hearing judge may question witnesses in order to elicit or clarify testimony and test credibility, but may not, in so doing, become an advocate for one of the parties. Where the judge's treatment of witnesses on both sides was evenhanded and did not overstep the judge's factfinding role, there was no evidence of prejudice or bias. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [4]

A hearing judge's denial of respondent's request to remove and copy exhibits already admitted into evidence, due to concern for the integrity of the record, was not improper, and did not show bias. Moreover, by failing to seek relief before the hearing judge after being denied access to the exhibits by the State Bar Court clerk's office, respondent waived his right to raise the issue before the review department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [5]

A variance between the hearing judge's tentative findings on culpability from the bench, and the judge's detailed written findings of fact and conclusions of law, did not demonstrate bias. The ultimate written decision controlled, and where it was supported by the evidence, the judge's remarks in summing up the evidence were not a basis for reversal. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [6]

The failure of the hearing judge to rule on respondent's motion to dismiss until after the hearing did not result from bias, but from respondent's filing of the motion less than a week prior to the hearing. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [7]

Highly generalized claims of bias have been rejected as being overbroad. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [7]

Where a standard for judicial disqualification in the State Bar's Rules of Procedure was drawn from a similar provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, case law under the statute could be looked to in applying the State Bar rule. (Rule 230, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [10]

In pleading a violation of the ethical rule requiring payment of client trust finds on demand, there must be an allegation that the restions for the record and then move forward with the case, were reasonable, did not demonstrate bias under the circumstances and did not deprive respondent of the statutory right to legal assistance. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [11]

Bias on the part of the hearing referee was not demonstrated when the referee, without the knowledge of the parties, corresponded with an out-of-state trial court judge in an attempt to coordinate conflicting trial schedules. While the better method would have been for the referee to have advised the parties of his intent to contact the trial court judge and to have copied the parties on any correspondence, the referee's conduct was not improper in nature and did not establish an appearance of bias constituting a denial of due process. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [12]

A State Bar Court referee who referred respondent's out-of-state counsel to the Office of Trial Counsel for investigation for alleged misconduct and possible revocation of their admission to practice pro hac vice was not in the same position as a trial court judge ruling on a contempt matter, and the referee's conduct did not demonstrate bias. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [13]

Where record contained numerous evidentiary rulings favorable to respondent, and showed courteous treatment of respondent by the referee; referee's evenhandedness was also shown by dismissal of two out of four charged counts in their entirety, and referee's handling of hearing was in accord with proper judicial temperament and demeanor, record did not show evidence of bias or prejudice. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [19]

Party claiming judicial bias has burden to clearly establish such bias and to show specific prejudice; disagreement with how referee weighed issues, and showing of immaterial factual errors, did not establish bias on part of referee who acted in patient, fair, and commendable manner during hearing. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [1]

To prevail on a claim of error by the hearing referee in denying respondent's motion for mistrial based on the assertedly prejudicial effect on the referee of the examiner's revelation during the hearing that the examiner had been hired as State Bar Court counsel, respondent was required to do more than hint at bias. Where respondent failed to show how any bias specifically prejudiced him, and record showed no error or bias, motion for mistrial was properly denied. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [2]

Rule 232 of the California Rules of Court contemplates preparation of a tentative decision after the completion of the trial, not in midstream, as a preliminary stage in the procedure for requesting a statement of decision. Therefore, rule 232 does not support the legitimacy of issuing a tentative decision when only one side has presented evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [3]

Duty of trial judge differs from that of juror with respect to expressing opinions on aspects of case before its submission, and there is nothing wrong with preparing tentative findings after culpability phase of hearing. However, where referee prepared preliminary findings before defense had put on its case, and lengthy delay ensued which referee indicated had affected the fact-finding process, this gave the appearance that a decision had been reached as to the basic facts at issue before respondent testified. When tentative findings were prepared and presented to the parties after only one side had presented evidence, it gave the appearance that the judge did not truly retain an open mind. Thus, certain of referee's findings were improperly reached. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [4]

Cases holding judges to have acted prejudicially are generally ones in which judges have refused to hear evidence at all on a certain point, or have indicated that they will not grant certain relief even if the party requesting it is legally and factually entitled to it. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [5]

Although referee indicated that he had not reached a final decision despite preparation of draft findings, he appeared to have placed a greater burden of proof on the respondent than permitted by law. If a trier of fact imposes the wrong burden of proof, that itself can constitute reversible error. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [6]

As sole trier of fact, hearing judge had responsibility to declare in decision how he weighed evidence at hearing, including credibility of party as witness, where party's attitude toward reformation and restitution was fundamental issue in proceeding. Judge's occasional use of blunt language did not show bias. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [9]

104 Disqualification of Counsel and Other Persons

The review department found no merit to respondent's argument that the culpability findings must be reversed based on his claim of conflict of interest. Respondent failed to demonstrate how the investigation and prosecution of his former counsel demonstrated any conflict of interest or unfairness toward him. At trial, respondent was represented by other counsel who advanced his interests vigorously. Moreover, respondent failed to support his claim by any citation of legal authority. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [1]

105 Service of Process (rule 5.25)

Actual notice is not a necessary element of proper service in disciplinary proceedings, and service is deemed completed upon mailing to respondent's official membership address. State Bar Court therefore had jurisdiction to hear disciplinary case even where respondent did not personally receive service of notice of disciplinary charges, motion for entry of default, and default order, all of which were sent to respondent's official membership records address. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [10]

The two requisite elements of personal jurisdiction are (1) that respondent is a member of the State Bar for the duration of the proceeding and (2) that respondent was properly served with a copy of the notice of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [2]

Respondent's highly generalized argument regarding inadequate notice of certain hearings warranted no relief, where respondent had been made aware of duty to keep State Bar informed of current address and given opportunity to correct the official State Bar record thereof, and notices had been served on respondent at another address in addition to the address of record. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

Respondent's fundamental objections to disciplinary proceeding, based on lack of personal service, expiration of the statute of limitations, lack of jurisdiction, and failure of the notice to show cause to state grounds for discipline, should have been presented to the State Bar Court at the trial level by motion. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [15]

Where an attorney had failed to comply with the statutory duty to maintain a current address on the State Bar's member records and to notify the State Bar within 30 days of any address change, the attorney failed to show good cause for relief from default even though he did not receive notice of the State Bar proceedings until the review department's opinion was published. Because the address requirement is reasonable, an attorney receives reasonable notice of documents properly sent to the attorney's address of record with the State Bar. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [2]

106 Issues re Pleadings

106.10 Sufficiency of pleadings to state grounds for action sought (rule 5.124(C), (E))

Rule 5.124 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides specific and limited grounds for dismissal. Where respondent's pretrial motion to dismiss did not argue that notice of disciplinary charges failed to state a legally disciplinable offense or to give sufficient notice of the charges, but rather sought dismissal on merits, relying on declarations and supporting documents, motion was equivalent to summary judgment motion, which is not provided for under rule 5.124. Hearing judge erred in granting motion to dismiss based on pretrial factual findings, thereby deriving State Bar of its right to present evidence of respondent's culpability at trial. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [1 a,b]

Attorney's due process right not violated when notice of disciplinary charges characterized his post-conviction disclosure duty as legal rather than ethical. Such characterization did not deny attorney sufficient opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [3]

In reviewing a motion to dismiss a disciplinary charge based on a contention that the notice of disciplinary charges is defective due to its failure to state a disciplinable offense, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true and disregards all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice of disciplinary charges except for judicially noticeable facts, since the purpose of the motion is to test the sufficiency of the notice of disciplinary charges and not to contest the charges. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged (1) that respondent, as general partner of a California limited partnership having a fiduciary duty to the limited partners, made preliminary distributions of partnership profits but failed to disburse any funds to one limited partner due to that limited partner's refusal to sign a release of liability and (2) that despite the limited partner's repeated request for the funds, respondent never released the funds and subsequently informed the limited partner that he no longer had the funds, the notice of disciplinary charges was sufficient to state a disciplinary offense, i.e., that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching his fiduciary duty to the limited partner and misappropriating funds to which the limited partner was entitled. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [3a-c]

A first amended notice to show cause supersedes both the original notice and any proposed but unfiled first amended notices. The sufficiency of the first amended notice to show cause is determined without reference to either the original notice or any earlier proposed first amended notice. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [1]

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

An attorney's disobedience of a court order involves moral turpitude for disciplinary purposes only if the attorney acted in either objective or subjective bad faith. Review department declined to find respondent culpable of moral turpitude for failure to appear as ordered at settlement conference, where such culpability was argued for first time on review, notice to show cause did not allege that failure to appear was in bad faith, and hearing judge made no findings regarding respondent's objective or subjective bad faith in failing to obey order to appear. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [6]

Before the State Bar files charges, it has a duty to determine whether reasonable cause exists to charge statutory or rule violations. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [2]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law does not provide basis for discipline except where it serves as conduit to charge violation of state or federal statute other than disciplinary provisions of Business and Professions Code. Where no such statutory violation was charged in matter involving failure to honor contractual lien, no violation could be found as a matter of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [22]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

Where record established that respondent agreed to handle litigation and thereafter abandoned case; former and current Rules of Professional Conduct were virtually identical regarding duties imposed on an attorney who wishes to withdraw from employment; both rules were charged in notice to show cause, and violation clearly occurred during period when either one rule or the other was in effect, review department found respondent culpable of improper withdrawal despite lack of evidence regarding exactly when relevant events occurred. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [2]

The respondent in a probation revocation matter may not be subjected to greater discipline than imposition of the entire period of suspension previously stayed if the notice to show cause does not appropriately charge violations that could result in greater discipline. Where notice to show cause stated that respondent was to show cause why stay of suspension should not be set aside and stayed suspension imposed, imposing entire stayed suspension was maximum discipline that State Bar Court could recommend. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [18]

On review of a facial challenge to the legal sufficiency of charges in the notice to show cause, the sole issue presented is whether the facts alleged in the notice, if proven, would constitute a disciplinable offense. For the purpose of such review, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice as true, but draws independent conclusions regarding the legal import of those facts. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [1]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

Under section 6125 of the Business and Professions Code, members of the State Bar who are on inactive status may not practice law in California. Section 6068(a) makes violation of section 6125 a disciplinable offense. A member on inactive status who is alleged to have committed acts constituting the practice of law is properly charged with violating sections 6125 and 6068(a). In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [6]

Section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not provide a basis for charging an attorney with any misconduct other than violating a court order. Where respondent who was charged with unauthorized practice of law while inactive had transferred to inactive status voluntarily and not as a result of a court order, section 6103 charge should have been dismissed. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [7]

A broad scope of activities may be held to constitute the practice of law, but the unauthorized practice of law outside of court appearances is difficult to define. Where respondent, while on inactive status, allegedly referred to a family member as respondent's client in a letter to another lawyer and expressed an intention to seek statutory fees in a probate matter involving the family member, respondent was properly charged with unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [8]

Respondent's fundamental objections to disciplinary proceeding, based on lack of personal service, expiration of the statute of limitations, lack of jurisdiction, and failure of the notice to show cause to state grounds for discipline, should have been presented to the State Bar Court at the trial level by motion. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [15]

Notice to show cause properly charged respondent with practicing law while suspended, in violation of sections 6125 and 6126(b), despite language in notice describing respondent as having made court appearance while "on inactive . . . status," when respondent was actually suspended for nonpayment of dues. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

It is important for decisions of the State Bar Court to identify with specificity both the rule or statutory provision that underlies each charge and the manner in which the conduct allegedly violated that rule or statutory provision. This specificity is essential to the respondent's due process right to adequate notice, as well as to meaningful Supreme Court review of the recommendation of the State Bar Court. The notice to show cause must be sufficient to support the charges relied upon in the decision, because the findings of the State Bar Court must rest on the charges filed. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [6]

In pleading a violation of the ethical rule requiring payment of client trust finds on demand, there must be an allegation that the respondent was in possession of identified funds, securities or other property of a client; that the client was entitled to receive the funds, securities or property, and that there was a request by the client that the respondent pay or deliver the funds, securities or other property. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [9]

Reference in notice to show cause to undisclosed loans made from client trust funds would appear to charge violation of rule requiring disclosure of receipt of client funds, but not of rule requiring payment of funds to client on demand, since clients would not be in a position to demand funds which they were unaware were transferred out of trust. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [10]

Inadequacies in pleading not only made notice to show cause insufficient under rule 550, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, but also caused questions as to whether notice met requirements of rule 554.1, providing that a notice to show cause may be dismissed on ground that it fails to state a disciplinable offense as a matter of law. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [11]

If State Bar intends to charge violation of rule of professional conduct regarding duty of competence, there must be an allegation that respondent intentionally or with reckless disregard or repeatedly failed to perform legal services competently, and notice should state what particular conduct is characterize as violating this standard. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [12]

The degree of specificity required in a notice to show cause does not necessitate lengthy detailed pleading. A notice to show cause does not have to include explicit details of a respondent's alleged misconduct, nor does it have to match the subsequent proof at the hearing as long as the difference is immaterial or the pleading is amended and the respondent is given an opportunity to respond to the additional allegations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [21]

Contention by State Bar that respondent violated attorney's duty to obey state and federal laws by failing to pay payroll taxes as required by penal and civil statutes was rejected by review department, despite respondent's admission that taxes were not paid, because notice to show cause did not charge violation of employer withholding statutes, and no evidence was introduced to prove they were violated, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [10]

106.20 Adequate notice of charges (rules 5.41 and 5.124(C), (D), (E))

Rule 5.124 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides specific and limited grounds for dismissal. Where respondent's pretrial motion to dismiss did not argue that notice of disciplinary charges failed to state a legally disciplinable offense or to give sufficient notice of the charges, but rather sought dismissal on merits, relying on declarations and supporting documents, motion was equivalent to summary judgment motion, which is not provided for under rule 5.124. Hearing judge erred in granting motion to dismiss based on pretrial factual findings, thereby deriving State Bar of its right to present evidence of respondent's culpability at trial. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [1 a,b]

Actual notice is not a necessary element of proper service in disciplinary proceedings, and service is deemed completed upon mailing to respondent's official membership address. State Bar Court therefore had jurisdiction to hear disciplinary case even where respondent did not personally receive service of notice of disciplinary charges, motion for entry of default, and default order, all of which were sent to respondent's official membership records address. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [10]

Respondent's contention the State Bar Court was without jurisdiction to hear disciplinary case because respondent did not personally receive service of the notice of disciplinary charges, the motion for entry of default, and the default order fails. The pleadings were sent to respondent's official membership records address. Moreover, respondent admitted to actual notice of proceedings before motion for entry of default was filed. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [6]

Attorney's due process right not violated when notice of disciplinary charges characterized his post-conviction disclosure duty as legal rather than ethical. Such characterization did not deny attorney sufficient opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [3]

Because respondent's motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges based on insufficient notice of one of the charges was filed later than the date his response to the notice of disciplinary charges was due, in violation of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 262(c)(2), respondent's assertion was waived as a basis for dismissal. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [4]

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [16]

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

Respondent's argument that a new trial was necessary because the notices to show cause did not pair facts with each alleged ethical violation was rejected. Even though the Supreme Court has repeatedly criticized this practice, a defective notice entitles an attorney to relief only if the attorney shows that specific prejudice resulted from the defect. Respondent made no such showing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [4]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

A first amended notice to show cause supersedes both the original notice and any proposed but unfiled first amended notices. The sufficiency of the first amended notice to show cause is determined without reference to either the original notice or any earlier proposed first amended notice. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [1]

Where the notice to show cause erroneously charged a violation of former rule 2-111(A)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, but where the factual allegations of the notice stated that respondent had not refunded unearned fees, the subject of former rule 2-111(A)(3) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, respondent had adequate notice of a charge under former rule 2-111(A)(3). In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [6]

Where the notice to show cause did not charge respondent with committing acts of moral turpitude on account of a violation of fiduciary duty, but did charge respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court, and the hearing judge and the parties understood that the charged moral turpitude violation was based on the misrepresentation, the review department declined the State Bar's request, made for the first time on review, that it find moral turpitude based on respondent's breach of fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Where notice to show cause charged respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court by filing an erroneous pleading, and where respondent consistently asserted that he did not intend to deceive the court and that the erroneous pleading resulted from his inadvertence, but where filing of misleading pleading did not result from single isolated instance of negligence, but from grossly negligent handling of entire matter to which pleading related, respondent could be found culpable of an act of moral turpitude due to his gross neglect in filing the pleading. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

Where a proceeding under rule 955 of the California Rules of Court was started by an order of referral rather than the issuance of formal charges, culpability could be based on all evidence introduced. Thus, where the evidence demonstrated that respondent failed to give timely notices of her suspension to her clients, opposing counsel, and courts in which her clients' cases were pending, she wilfully violated rule 955, subdivision (a), and the review department considered that violation as substantive and not just an aggravating circumstance as found by the hearing judge. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [5]

The State Bar must articulate in its pleading the reason why violation of each listed statute and rule was charged in the notice to show cause. A notice which recites factual allegations separately from a charging paragraph that gives no explanation for the citation of charged statutes and rules, and which fails to correlate each alleged statutory and rule violation with the conduct upon which it was based, is inadequate. Such correlation would allow the identification of alternative theories of culpability and lesser included offenses, thus permitting the elimination of duplicative charges at the time of pretrial or trial. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [1]

Where the reason for each charged violation was specified by the State Bar in its pretrial statement and where respondent was not prejudiced at trial, the inadequate specification of the reasons for the charges in the notice to show cause was not grounds for reversal. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3]

Where respondent was charged with violating disciplinary probation conditions by failing to submit evidence of having obtained assistance from a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, respondent could be found culpable only of failing to comply with requirement that he submit such evidence, and not of failing to comply with requirement that he obtain such assistance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

Where failure to file complaint for client within statute of limitations was not mentioned in notice to show cause, such failure could not form basis for culpability, but where such failure, although not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be intentional or reckless, constituted part of series of repeated failures to perform competently which significantly harmed client, such failure constituted aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [21]

The Business and Professions Code section requiring attorneys to support federal and California constitution and laws proscribes attorney conduct which violates any federal or California statute. However, such Business and Professions Code section may be used to charge violation of another statute only if that statute is specifically identified in the notice to show cause. Otherwise, the attorney is not given adequate notice of the particular statute allegedly violated. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [17]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In default proceeding for violation of probation, review department deleted findings in aggravation based on probation violations not charged in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [6]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

A notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding meets the requirements of due process when it specifies the conduct at issue and the rule charged. Where a notice to show cause named the clients involved in each count, identified them as driver and passenger, averred that respondent agreed to represent each in a personal injury case without advising them of their potential conflict and obtaining their written consent, and cited the rule regarding representation of adverse interests, respondent was given adequate notice of the charge against him. Given the specificity of the factual allegations, adequate notice was given even in a count which did not specify the subsection of the rule being charged. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [5]

An attorney's unauthorized practice of law while on suspension is an appropriate matter to be considered in aggravation. Where, during the trial in a disciplinary matter, the respondent made a court appearance in a client's case while suspended for nonpayment of dues, the deputy trial counsel was not obligated to wait to file another disciplinary action to address the issue. Where respondent's counsel agreed that the deputy trial counsel could introduce evidence regarding respondent's court appearance during a later phase of the hearing, respondent received proper notice of the charge in aggravation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [15]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

Where respondent's description of his car problems in explaining his failure to appear for a court hearing differed only in degree from the actual events, the difference did not constitute deception or an attempt to mislead the court. The steps respondent took once he experienced the car problems might not have been adequate to excuse his failure to appear, but this aspect of his conduct was not charged as a disciplinary violation and thus could not form the basis of a culpability finding. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [1]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

A respondent may be disciplined only for misconduct properly charged in the notice to show cause. In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause charged that respondent failed to deliver financial records to an accountant, and hearing judge found that respondent failed to render an accounting, respondent was properly found culpable of failing to deliver the records, based on his admission by default of the allegations of the notice to show cause. Respondent's failure to file quarterly reports other than those listed in the notice to show cause could not be used as a basis for culpability or as aggravating circumstances in a default matter. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [1]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent basis for discipline, but may be used in a contested proceeding for purposes such as impeaching the credibility of the respondent's testimony regarding rehabilitation, or establishing evidence of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [6]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that respondent failed to perform services competently, and set forth in separate paragraphs specific facts which in the aggregate charged a lack of diligence upon which that violation was based, the alleged misconduct in the notice was pled with sufficient particularity and was adequately correlated with the rule violation charged to have provided respondent with reasonable notice of the specific charges at issue. There is no requirement that each paragraph of a single count in a notice to show cause must allege a violation of a rule or statute. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [2]

An attorney can be disciplined only for misconduct charged in the notice to show cause or an amendment thereto. Where notice to show cause charged violation of rule against representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent served interrogatory requesting identification of all such alleged conflicts, charges against respondent were limited to those identified in State Bar's answer to such interrogatory, and respondent could not be found culpable of violating conflict of interest rule based on a conflict not listed therein. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [9]

Respondent violated former rule of professional conduct prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests when he accepted more signatories to a settlement than were required, because interests of required signatories conflicted with interests of extra signatories, whose participation in settlement reduced amounts received by required signatories and by previous extra signatories. Where such violation of conflict of interest rule was not charged, it could not be basis of culpability, but could be relied on in aggravation. However, because of novelty of situation, which involved extremely unusual settlement, uncharged violation was given minimal aggravating weight. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [12]

A due process challenge to a discipline proceeding based on vagueness is appropriate where the misconduct involved is not clearly within the scope of a disciplinary standard and the standard is so broad that people of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [7]

Where respondent clearly was on notice that drinking and driving could result in criminal penalties, and it was established law that any vehicular homicide or felony conviction resulting from drunk driving could result in professional discipline, respondent apparently had sufficient notice that criminal behavior of driving under the influence could, depending on circumstances, result in professional discipline. However, review department declined to decide notice issue where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed on another ground. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [8]

An attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward a medical provider which holds a medical lien arising from advancement of funds to the attorney's client, and the attorney therefore has a duty to communicate with the provider as to the subject of the fiduciary obligation. However, where respondent was not charged in the notice to show cause with failing to communicate with the medical provider, respondent could not be found culpable on that basis. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [2]

Where notice to show cause could have been more clearly phrased with respect to duration of respondent's alleged misconduct, but hearing judge correctly concluded after colloquy at trial that it encompassed misconduct prior to as well as after a certain date, and where hearing judge prohibited introduction of evidence as to respondent's conduct prior to such date only after respondent had had ample time to present such evidence, and where respondent gave no offer of proof or explanation regarding any additional evidence on such issue, respondent's claims of denial of adequate notice of charges and fair opportunity to present evidence were without merit. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [8]

Even though notice to show cause did not expressly charge violation of rule requiring client funds to be held in trust, respondent could be found culpable of violating such rule by misappropriating client funds, where such charge was clearly encompassed within allegations in support of moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [15]

In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121.

An allegation of an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty encompasses the lesser allegation of a violation of the trust account rules, where the pleading clearly raises the issue of the misuse of trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [6]

Where a certain set of facts was considered by the criminal court at the time of respondent's sentencing, and notice of such consideration was given to respondent at the time, there was sufficient notice to respondent prior to his disciplinary hearing of the relevance of such facts, and since respondent had an opportunity to present evidence on the issue at the disciplinary hearing, due process did not require remanding the case for submission of additional exculpatory evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [4]

Where the original notice to show cause alleged misappropriation, and the examiner amended the notice to charge respondent with commingling resulting from his bookkeeper's negligence, and there was no evidence that respondent's defense was thereby prejudiced, respondent had sufficient notice of the charges to satisfy his due process rights, because the duty to keep client funds safe is a personal obligation of the attorney and nondelegable, and the attorney was therefore on notice that he could be culpable if his staff's conduct resulted in a violation of that duty. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

Respondents have a right to reasonable notice of the charges against them and they may not be disciplined for a violation not alleged either in the original or a properly amended notice to show cause. Where the notice to show cause charged respondent with dishonest acts with regard to non-payment of tax monies withheld from an employee's wages, respondent could not, based on that notice, be held culpable of improperly concealing personal money from the tax authorities by putting it in a client trust account. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

Although it was improper to find respondent culpable of misconduct on the basis of his freely given evidence that he concealed funds from the Franchise Tax Board, because such conduct fell outside the proper scope of the charges, such evidence could be used to form the basis of an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [13]

Notice to show cause properly charged respondent with practicing law while suspended, in violation of sections 6125 and 6126(b), despite language in notice describing respondent as having made court appearance while "on inactive . . . status," when respondent was actually suspended for nonpayment of dues. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

Evidence of additional uncharged acts of misconduct could not constitute an independent basis for culpability. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

Uncharged facts cannot be relied upon for evidence of aggravation in a default matter because the respondent is not fairly apprised of the fact that additional uncharged facts will be used against him. The use of uncharged aggravating factors in contested proceedings presents a different question. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [8]

A notice to show cause which alleged that an attorney was hired by a father to represent his son and that the attorney thereafter failed to perform services for, communicate with, and return unearned fees to, the father was sufficient to put the attorney on notice that he was charged with the specified misconduct in his dual representation of the father and son, because the attorney would not have had a duty to communicate with the father if he were not representing the father. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [22]

Attorney could not be found culpable of violating probation by failing to respond to an inquiry from the State Bar Court, as required by conditions of his probation, where the notice to show cause in the probation revocation proceeding referred only to the requirement to file quarterly reports, an independent probation condition, and such charge would be factually duplicative of previously-adjudicated charge of failing to file quarterly report. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [2]

A respondent can only be found culpable of conduct which is charged in the notice to show cause. If the charges do not appear in the notice and the notice is not properly amended, the charges will not be sustained. However, culpability will be sustained in the event of a slight variation in the evidence from the notice, without an amendment, unless the respondent's defense can shown to have been compromised. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [2]

Specific charging in the notice to show cause is important; it prevents a respondent from having to guess at the charges. In addition, since the standard for a culpability finding in attorney discipline matters is clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar has the burden to charge the alleged misconduct correctly so that this standard can be met. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [3]

The allegations in the notice to show cause are a determining factor of the scope of an attorney's defense. A complete charge results normally in a full response. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [4]

A complete charge in the notice to show cause does not necessitate a lengthy pleading but does necessitate particularity to provide sufficient notice. As a result of specific charging the State Bar Court hearing judge is then provided with a proper framework within which to decide the issues raised. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [5]

Where an appeal and a petition for extraordinary writ had each been pursued by respondent, a notice to show cause charging respondent with "pursu[ing] appeals in bad faith" did not convey sufficient information to advise respondent that the manner of service of the writ of mandate was at issue in the disciplinary case. Respondent therefore was not held culpable for alleged misconduct in connection with the writ proceeding since the notice to show cause did not provide reasonable notice of such charges. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [6]

Respondent's decision not to send a copy of a writ petition to counsel who was representing the opposing party in a related appeal appeared to have been a breach of normally expected professional courtesy and was not a model of good practice; nonetheless, because allegations of notice to show cause failed to give respondent reasonable notice of charge of which he was found culpable, review department dismissed proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [10]

Given that the examiner's pretrial statement indicated that facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's perjury conviction would be at issue and that the record would include the transcript of a related infraction trial as well as respondent's perjury trial, and given the rule permitting the hearing judge to consider evidence of facts not directly connected with respondent's conviction if such facts are material to the issues stated in the order of reference, respondent had sufficient notice that all relevant facts and circumstances would be considered in the disciplinary proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [3]

The failure to charge a violation of section 6068(j) in the notice to show cause was harmless error, where the notice clearly charged an alleged violation of section 6002.1. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [13]

Charging a violation of section 6068(a) without specifically identifying the underlying provision of law allegedly violated not only fails to put the attorney on sufficient notice of the alleged violation, but also undermines meaningful review of any decision based on such general charging allegation. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [14]

Where notice to show cause charged respondent with making misrepresentations to opposing counsel and at trial, and respondent testified at disciplinary hearing that similar misrepresentations were also made to court of appeal and to State Bar investigator, this later conduct was properly treated not as bearing on substantive culpability, but on the issue of discipline. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [1]

General charges in a notice to show cause of disbursing trust funds without permission or knowledge of the beneficiary did not give adequate notice of a charge of misappropriation of such funds, without further specification as to the facts giving rise to the accompanying charge of committing acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [8]

Where attorney's alleged failure to perform competently occurred after effective date of revised version of rule governing duty of competence, and notice to show cause charged attorney only with violating previous version of rule and notice was not amended, attorney was properly found not culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [6]

An uncharged violation of the rule requiring prompt notification to clients when client funds are received could be considered as an aggravating circumstance, where the respondent was put on notice of the nature of the uncharged misconduct in the notice to show cause and did not object to a finding of culpability under a different rule for the same conduct. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [10]

Where an attorney was not charged in the notice to show cause with violating the ethical rules governing attorneys' business transactions with clients, then even if compliance with those rules were required under the facts, the attorney could not be found culpable of violating those rules. It is a fundamental constitutional and statutory requirement that an attorney must be given notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to prepare his defense thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [12]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that the respondent attorney had misappropriated funds to his own use and purposes, and charged the attorney with acts of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, but did not charge the attorney with a breach of the ethical rule concerning the proper handling of client trust funds, and the notice to show cause did not clearly put the attorney on notice of a charge that he had violated the trust funds rule, the attorney therefore could not be found culpable of violating that rule in light of the mandate that the attorney be given adequate notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to respond thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [18]

Attorney could not be found culpable of misconduct where not given adequate notice of charges, but this did not preclude consideration of such misconduct for other purposes, including aggravation. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. Right to notice of charges is not violated by use of uncharged misconduct in aggravation where evidence of such misconduct was necessarily elicited in cause of proving other charges; evidence was used in aggravation only; and facts were based on respondent's own testimony. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [19]

As terms of art, an attorney's "oath and duties" are defined by sections 6067 and 6068. Section 6103 confirms the Supreme Court's inherent authority to impose discipline for violation of oath or duties defined by other statutes. Accordingly, charge of violating section 6103 or finding that attorney has committed misconduct thereunder is redundant and adds nothing to charges otherwise pending. Charge of violating section 6103 "oath and duties" does not put respondent on notice of any particular misconduct without reference to other statutes defining the particular duty allegedly violated. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [7]

Charge of violating section 6106 put respondent on notice, to which respondent was entitled, that misconduct charged involved moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption as described by statute and case law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [9]

Where parties stipulated to waive any variance between facts set forth in stipulation and allegations of notice to show cause, stipulated facts which were not charged in original notice could be considered even though notice had not been amended. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [1]

Where notice to show cause did not charge violation of statute requiring attorneys to maintain respect for courts and their officers, and no motion to amend was made at hearing, referee's conclusion that respondent violated the statute was inappropriate. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [2]

Aggravating factors are not required to be separately charged. However, facts that could have formed the basis for an additional charge omitted from the notice to show cause cannot be relied on in aggravation in a default matter, because respondent is not fairly put on notice that such facts will be relied on. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [12]

In finding respondent culpable of misappropriating trust funds and of knowingly issuing a check drawn on insufficient funds, the referee's statement that respondent's acts constituted crimes involving moral turpitude was improper since the criminal statutes were not charged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [16]

Where notice to show cause failed to charge respondent with failing to perform services in a certain matter, and notice to show cause was not amended to conform to proof at hearing, review department struck hearing department's finding of culpability with respect to that matter. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [1]

Discipline cannot be imposed for violations not charged; where attorney was charged only with retaining client funds as fees without client consent, and referee found client had consented, attorney could not be disciplined on ground that fee was illegal. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [9]

In default matter, hearing referee erred in basing findings of culpability partly on facts deemed admitted by failure to respond to improper post-default discovery, and in finding culpability on charges broader than those set forth in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [12]

Rule of Procedure 557, permitting amendment of notice to show cause to conform to proof without requiring additional time to prepare answer and defense, assumes respondent attorney's presence at disciplinary proceeding. Where respondent is not present due to entry of default, respondent does not have an opportunity to defend against charges. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [14]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

A motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to provide the respondent with sufficient notice of the alleged misconduct is available where appropriate to assure adequate notice of charges in compliance with statutory mandate and due process. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [1]

In order to defend against charges, a respondent needs to be adequately apprised of the precise nature of the charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [2]

Adequacy of notice is an essential element of due process, in order that the accused may have a reasonable opportunity to prepare and present a defense and not be taken by surprise by evidence offered at trial. The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding is entitled to reasonable notice of the specific charges, which is the purpose of the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [4]

The principle that due process requires notice of the specific charge, and a chance to be heard in a trial of the issues raised by that charge, applies with equal force in State Bar proceedings. The right to practice law is a valuable one which should be suspended or revoked only on charges alleged and proved and as to which full notice and opportunity to defend have been accorded. Thus, the charges in the notice to show cause should relate individual facts to specific statutory and rule violations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [5]

It is important for decisions of the State Bar Court to identify with specificity both the rule or statutory provision that underlies each charge and the manner in which the conduct allegedly violated that rule or statutory provision. This specificity is essential to the respondent's due process right to adequate notice, as well as to meaningful Supreme Court review of the recommendation of the State Bar Court. The notice to show cause must be sufficient to support the charges relied upon in the decision, because the findings of the State Bar Court must rest on the charges filed. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [6]

Shortcomings of notice to show cause were manifest, where such notice did not give respondent notice of any specific alleged misconduct, but broadly referred to a series of loans made over an unspecified period of time from twelve unidentified family trusts to one or more of three limited partnerships; none of the loans was identified by lender, borrower, amount or date; and the notice did not specify which of the loans were challenged as improper. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [7]

Examiner's offer to amend notice to show cause to name twelve trusts from which respondent (as trustee) was alleged to have made loans was inadequate to remedy deficiencies of notice to show cause which did not identify loans by borrower, date or amount and did not specify which of series of many loans were alleged to have been improper. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [8]

Inadequacies in pleading not only made notice to show cause insufficient under rule 550, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, but also caused questions as to whether notice met requirements of rule 554.1, providing that a notice to show cause may be dismissed on ground that it fails to state a disciplinable offense as a matter of law. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [11]

If State Bar intends to charge violation of rule of professional conduct regarding duty of competence, there must be an allegation that respondent intentionally or with reckless disregard or repeatedly failed to perform legal services competently, and notice should state what particular conduct is characterize as violating this standard. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [12]

Where the first sentence of a paragraph in a notice to show cause referred to a single transaction and the rest of the same paragraph referred to multiple transactions, and where it was unclear whether some or all of the loans described earlier in the notice were alleged not to have been fair or reasonable, there was unnecessary ambiguity in the alleged misconduct with respect to the charge of improper business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [13]

The opportunity for permissive amendment of the notice to show cause at a later stage in the proceedings on adequate notice of new factual allegations does not negate the State Bar's obligation in the first instance to provide adequate notice of the original charges. While developments during discovery may lead to augmentation or modification of the charges by amendment, the ability to amend does not affect the requirement of particularity in the original charges. Informal sharing of source material on which charges are based, while highly desirable, is no substitute for formal charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [15]

The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the original notice to show cause. If the evidence produced before the hearing department shows the attorney has committed an ethical violation that was not charged in the original notice, the State Bar must amend the notice to conform to the evidence adduced at the hearing. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [16]

Unless the respondent demonstrates that the respondent's defense was actually compromised, a slight variance in the evidence that relates to the noticed charge does not, in itself, deprive the respondent of adequate notice. This situation, however, is patently different from one in which ambiguity and lack of specificity in the notice to show cause make it unclear which aspect of the respondent's conduct over a number of years allegedly violated the rules and statutes cited in the notice. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [17]

The State Bar has the duty to distill from sources available to it whether reasonable cause exists for charging a member with statutory or rule violations. It is not only incumbent upon the Office of Trial Counsel to determine which specific conduct of the respondent is at issue, but to articulate the nature of the conduct with particularity in the notice to show cause, correlating the alleged misconduct with the rule or statute allegedly violated thereby. (Rules 510, 550, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [19]

The degree of specificity required in a notice to show cause does not necessitate lengthy detailed pleading. A notice to show cause does not have to include explicit details of a respondent's alleged misconduct, nor does it have to match the subsequent proof at the hearing as long as the difference is immaterial or the pleading is amended and the respondent is given an opportunity to respond to the additional allegations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [21]

Increased specificity in articulating the charged misconduct in the notice to show cause will enable the respondent to prepare to meet the charges; provide the hearing judge with a proper framework for findings and conclusions; and make it easier for the review department and the Supreme Court to conduct meaningful de novo review of the hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [22]

Review department will not consider misappropriation implied by evidence but not charged in notice to show cause, and not mentioned at trial, in hearing department decision, or in briefs on review. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [1]

Contention by State Bar that respondent violated attorney's duty to obey state and federal laws by failing to pay payroll taxes as required by penal and civil statutes was rejected by review department, despite respondent's admission that taxes were not paid, because notice to show cause did not charge violation of employer withholding statutes, and no evidence was introduced to prove they were violated, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [10]

Where notice to show cause did not charge that respondent misrepresented to his clients the status of their claims, and respondent defaulted and did not appear at hearing, the review department declined to find, based on client's testimony at hearing, that respondent had committed act of dishonesty by making such misrepresentation. The review department is most reluctant to consider, even for the purpose of aggravation, misconduct which could have been, but was not charged in notice to show cause, especially where respondent is in default and has no opportunity to learn of or rebut matters arising during hearing. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [3]

Where the examiner asserted for the first time in his request for reconsideration of the review department's decision that the respondent's misappropriation of client trust funds constituted an act of embezzlement within the meaning of Penal Code section 506, and, as such, constituted a wilful violation of the attorney's oath and duty to support the laws of this state, the review department concluded that the belated attempt to prove culpability through an uncharged violation of another statute was improper. The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [1]

Where the notice to show cause did not allege a violation of the Penal Code, the alleged violations of sections 6068(a) and 6103 could not be construed as putting the attorney on notice of a possible Penal Code violation. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [2]

106.30 Duplicative charges

Where respondent was found culpable of moral turpitude for filing bankruptcy petitions containing misrepresentations and material omissions, charge that respondent violated section 6068(d) based on same misconduct was duplicative, and was therefore dismissed. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [4]

Respondent was culpable of maintaining unjust actions where he unreasonably persisted in pursuing numerous lawsuits after unqualified losses at trial and on appeal, repeatedly filed unmeritorious motions, pleadings, and other papers, engaged in tactics that were frivolous or intended to cause unnecessary delay, and acted with disregard for two vexatious litigant rulings. However, charges of violations of rule 3-200(A) based on same facts were properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360 [1 a-d]

Where respondent was found culpable of aiding the unauthorized practice of law, in violation of rule 1-300(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and charges that respondent lent his name for use by non-attorneys, in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6105, were based entirely on same facts, section 6105 charges were duplicative. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [4]

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

It is not necessarily duplicative to find culpability for failure to communicate with clients and culpability for improperly withdrawing from employment when respondent's failure to communicate arose from her failure to inform clients of crucial information regarding representation and respondent's improper withdrawal was based on her failure to take reasonable steps to protect her clients' interests. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4 a, b]

Where respondent's conduct of intentionally making no further appearances on behalf of her indigent clients established culpability for failing to perform competently and where such conduct was duplicative of the conduct surrounding respondent's improper withdrawal, no additional weight was assigned to the recommended discipline.

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5 a, b]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

Dismissal of duplicative violations is appropriate where misconduct establishing respondents' culpability for violating their duty never to seek to mislead a judge or other judicial offer by an artifice or false statement of law or fact is covered by the misconduct establishing culpability for committing acts of moral turpitude which supports identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [2]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.

Where respondent's failure to provide his client with a statutorily required disclosure statement when selling residential real property to the client was one of the factors used to determine that respondent entered into a business transaction with a client without disclosing all terms of the transaction and transmitting them in writing to the client in a manner that the client should reasonably understand, it would not be proper to again rely on that identical failure in order to establish respondent's culpability of failing to support the laws of this state. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [6]

Because the plaintiff in a civil lawsuit, who was respondent's former client, introduced into evidence respondent's offensive discovery requests, it is presumed, in the absence of any jury instruction to the contrary, that the jury relied on them in finding by clear and convincing evidence that respondent acted with oppression or malice when he harassed or intentionally inflicted emotional harm on the plaintiff. Therefore, to find a Business and Professions Code section 6106 moral turpitude violation on this basis would be duplicative of the moral turpitude violations already found based on respondent's harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on the plaintiff. For the same reasons, it would also be duplicative to use the offensive discovery to find culpability of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f). It is generally inappropriate to find redundant charged allegations. The appropriate level of discipline for an act of misconduct does not depend on how many rules of professional conduct or statutes proscribe the misconduct. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5 a - b]

The Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f) charge based on respondent's offensive discovery requests is duplicative of the Business and Professions Code section 6106 charge based on the same conduct. It is insufficient for culpability that the section 6068, subdivision (f) charge reflects the additional harm that respondent has caused to the administration of justice and to the right of the plaintiff, respondent's former client, to seek redress in the courts. Culpability of misconduct is determined by whether an attorney has violated the Rules of Professional Conduct, a disciplinable provision of the State Bar Act or other disciplinable provision of law. Harm or lack thereof is an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Respondent's endorsement of a client's false financial statement and misrepresentation that one of a client's companies was a successful business were willful violations of his duty to employ only such means as are consistent with the truth when representing clients, and were dishonest acts involving moral turpitude. However, to the extent that the facts underlying both violations were the same, the review department gave no additional weight to the duplication in determining discipline. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. RPtr. 430. [1]

As part of his plea in the criminal case, respondent admitted that he caused great bodily injury to another person. Thus, the crime for which respondent was convicted necessarily involved severe injury and it would be duplicative to consider harm to the victim as a separate aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [5]

Where respondent violated rule of professional conduct which prohibits an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, and that misconduct was the same misconduct underlying the charge that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold law on account of his violation of provisions of the Probate Code which prohibit self-dealing by trustees; and where discipline did not depend on whether respondent violated both rule and statute, statutory violation was cumulative and review department did not address it. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Where respondent's entire course of conduct in handling his duties as the trustee of a testamentary trust amounted to a reckless failure to perform services competently, but the review department considered much of the same misconduct in reaching its conclusion that respondent committed moral turpitude through gross negligence in handling his duties as trustee, the failure to perform competently was given minimal weight as an aggravating circumstance in determining the appropriate discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [6]

Statute prohibiting attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude applies to misrepresentation and concealment of material facts. An attorney has a duty under statute and ethics rule never to seek to mislead a judge and acting otherwise constitutes moral turpitude and warrants discipline. Thus, respondent's intentional, material misrepresentation to a settlement conference judge was an act of moral turpitude. Nevertheless, where same misconduct underlay both finding of moral turpitude and findings of violation of statute and rule prohibiting misleading courts, misconduct was treated as single violation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [5]

The State Bar must articulate in its pleading the reason why violation of each listed statute and rule was charged in the notice to show cause. A notice which recites factual allegations separately from a charging paragraph that gives no explanation for the citation of charged statutes and rules, and which fails to correlate each alleged statutory and rule violation with the conduct upon which it was based, is inadequate. Such correlation would allow the identification of alternative theories of culpability and lesser included offenses, thus permitting the elimination of duplicative charges at the time of pretrial or trial. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [1]

Where hearing judge concluded that certain alleged rule violations were duplicative and inconsequential in considering level of discipline, and State Bar did not take issue with such conclusion, and review department determined that respondent should be disbarred based on other findings, review department did not address allegations found to be duplicative. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [10]

Where attorney violated statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline, and where misconduct underlying such charge was same as misconduct underlying charges of violating statutes providing that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions and that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension, latter two charges were given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Where respondent was grossly negligent in failing to respond to requests for information from client and successor counsel, and where respondent failed to maintain client's settlement check in safe place, respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently. However, where charge of repeated failure to perform competently addressed same misconduct as charges of failure to communicate with client and failure to keep client property in safe place, failure to perform competently was given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [19]

Where respondent's failure to supervise his personal injury practice and fulfill trust fund responsibilities was so remiss as to be reckless, and his mismanagement of his trust account included repeated failure to provide competent legal services by promptly paying medical liens, respondent violated rule regarding reckless or repeated failure to perform competently. However, where misconduct forming basis for such violation also underlay charge of moral turpitude supporting identical or greater discipline, review department gave violation of competence rule no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [2]

Where respondent failed to file required at-issue memorandum at time when former Rules of Professional Conduct were in effect, but such failure was not intentional or reckless, and respondent failed to perform several other required acts in same litigation after revised Rules of Professional Conduct became effective, review department held that respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently in violation of revised rule precluding intentional, reckless, or repeated failure to perform legal services competently, and did not reach question whether initial failure to file at-issue memorandum constituted duplicative violation of earlier version of same rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [8]

Where same misconduct was found in each of two consolidated matters, review department dismissed allegations of such misconduct in one matter, because disciplining respondent for same misconduct in both matters would not be appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [7]

Where respondent did not display disrespect for any court except insofar as he violated a court order, charge of violating statute requiring respect for courts was properly disregarded as duplicative of charge of violating statute requiring obedience to court orders, which more directly addressed respondent's specific misconduct. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

Where an attorney failed to pay court-ordered sanctions, and was charged with violating both the statute requiring respect for courts and the statute requiring obedience to court orders, the misconduct was more specifically addressed under the statute requiring obedience to court orders and that charge was therefore to be preferred. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [7]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

Claim that respondent's failure to give required notice of suspension in four different client matters should not have been charged as four separate violations was relevant to degree of discipline but not to culpability. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [8]

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

Uncharged misconduct relied upon to enhance discipline in one proceeding cannot later constitute grounds for additional discipline in an independent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [7]

Even if respondent's demand that client return settlement check demonstrated lack of candor or cooperation with client, review department would not consider it as separate aggravating circumstance where it had already been found to be a factor establishing bad faith, a different aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [15]

While a lack of adequate communication with a client may warrant a finding of failure to perform legal services competently, it would be duplicative to draw such a conclusion when the attorney has been found culpable of violating the statutory duty to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [6]

For a failure to communicate with a client which occurred prior to the enactment of the statute requiring such communication, grounds for discipline remain under the common law doctrine underlying this duty. However, where the information the attorney most significantly failed to convey was notice of the attorney's withdrawal from representation, the attorney's conduct violated former the rule against prejudicial withdrawal, and finding culpability of a common law failure to communicate would be unnecessarily duplicative. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [10]

Attorney could not be found culpable of violating probation by failing to respond to an inquiry from the State Bar Court, as required by conditions of his probation, where the notice to show cause in the probation revocation proceeding referred only to the requirement to file quarterly reports, an independent probation condition, and such charge would be factually duplicative of previously-adjudicated charge of failing to file quarterly report. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [2]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little purpose; if misconduct violates a specific disciplinary provision of the State Bar Act or a Rule of Professional Conduct, there is no need to charge the same misconduct as a violation of sections 6068(a) and 6103. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [3]

Where respondent was found culpable of violating statutory duty to uphold the law by failing to adhere to common law duty to communicate with client, additional charge that respondent violated attorney's "oath and duties" under separate statute was duplicative, and resolution of case would not be affected by finding such violation. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [11]

Little, if any, purpose is served by duplicative allegations of misconduct; if misconduct violates a specific Rule of Professional Conduct or statute, there is no need for the State Bar to allege the same misconduct as a violation of an attorney's duty to obey the law. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [15]

If violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct were automatically also violations of the statute governing an attorney's duty to obey the law, the statute limiting the discipline for rule violations to a maximum of three years' suspension would be rendered meaningless; such a construction of the statutory scheme would be illogical. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [16]

As terms of art, an attorney's "oath and duties" are defined by sections 6067 and 6068. Section 6103 confirms the Supreme Court's inherent authority to impose discipline for violation of oath or duties defined by other statutes. Accordingly, charge of violating section 6103 or finding that attorney has committed misconduct thereunder is redundant and adds nothing to charges otherwise pending. Charge of violating section 6103 "oath and duties" does not put respondent on notice of any particular misconduct without reference to other statutes defining the particular duty allegedly violated. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [7]

In matter charging attorney with filing false declaration and assisting in preparation of fraudulent documents, hearing referee's conclusions that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold the law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068(a)) and statute regarding attorneys' violations of their oath and duties (id., § 6103) were inappropriate. Section 6068(a) charge was duplicative since same misconduct was charged as violation of specific Rule of Professional Conduct. Section 6103 does not define a duty or obligation, but rather provides grounds for discipline for violation of an oath or duty defined elsewhere. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [3]

When misconduct violates a specific Rule of Professional Conduct, it is unnecessary to allege the same misconduct as a violation of the attorney's statutory duty to uphold the law. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [4]

Where sole court order violated by attorney was order suspending attorney from practice, and attorney was found culpable of unauthorized practice under other statutes, charge of violating section 6103 was superfluous. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [6]

Where all of attorneys' acts of dishonesty were encompassed in charge of committing acts of moral turpitude, there would be no added value in straining to find in the same conduct a violation of another statute prohibiting misrepresentations to tribunals. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [5]

106.40 Amendment of pleadings (rule 5.44)

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [16]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

A first amended notice to show cause supersedes both the original notice and any proposed but unfiled first amended notices. The sufficiency of the first amended notice to show cause is determined without reference to either the original notice or any earlier proposed first amended notice. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [1]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Where the original notice to show cause alleged misappropriation, and the examiner amended the notice to charge respondent with commingling resulting from his bookkeeper's negligence, and there was no evidence that respondent's defense was thereby prejudiced, respondent had sufficient notice of the charges to satisfy his due process rights, because the duty to keep client funds safe is a personal obligation of the attorney and nondelegable, and the attorney was therefore on notice that he could be culpable if his staff's conduct resulted in a violation of that duty. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

A notice to show cause may be amended, including amendment to conform to proof, so long as the attorney is given a reasonable opportunity to defend the charge and provided the amendment is not a trap for the unwary attorney. Where respondent was given informal, oral notice of an intended amendment five months prior to its filing, and formal notice one month prior to trial, respondent had adequate time to prepare a defense, and due process was not violated. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [8]

Respondents have a right to reasonable notice of the charges against them and they may not be disciplined for a violation not alleged either in the original or a properly amended notice to show cause. Where the notice to show cause charged respondent with dishonest acts with regard to non-payment of tax monies withheld from an employee's wages, respondent could not, based on that notice, be held culpable of improperly concealing personal money from the tax authorities by putting it in a client trust account. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

A respondent can only be found culpable of conduct which is charged in the notice to show cause. If the charges do not appear in the notice and the notice is not properly amended, the charges will not be sustained. However, culpability will be sustained in the event of a slight variation in the evidence from the notice, without an amendment, unless the respondent's defense can shown to have been compromised. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [2]

Where attorney's alleged failure to perform competently occurred after effective date of revised version of rule governing duty of competence, and notice to show cause charged attorney only with violating previous version of rule and notice was not amended, attorney was properly found not culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [6]

Where parties stipulated to waive any variance between facts set forth in stipulation and allegations of notice to show cause, stipulated facts which were not charged in original notice could be considered even though notice had not been amended. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [1]

Where notice to show cause did not charge violation of statute requiring attorneys to maintain respect for courts and their officers, and no motion to amend was made at hearing, referee's conclusion that respondent violated the statute was inappropriate. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [2]

Where notice to show cause failed to charge respondent with failing to perform services in a certain matter, and notice to show cause was not amended to conform to proof at hearing, review department struck hearing department's finding of culpability with respect to that matter. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [1]

Motions to amend notice to show cause to correct typographical errors or modify facts which do not alter the charges in the original notice are permissible after entry of default. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [13]

Rule of Procedure 557, permitting amendment of notice to show cause to conform to proof without requiring additional time to prepare answer and defense, assumes respondent attorney's presence at disciplinary proceeding. Where respondent is not present due to entry of default, respondent does not have an opportunity to defend against charges. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [14]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

Examiner's offer to amend notice to show cause to name twelve trusts from which respondent (as trustee) was alleged to have made loans was inadequate to remedy deficiencies of notice to show cause which did not identify loans by borrower, date or amount and did not specify which of series of many loans were alleged to have been improper. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [8]

The opportunity for permissive amendment of the notice to show cause at a later stage in the proceedings on adequate notice of new factual allegations does not negate the State Bar's obligation in the first instance to provide adequate notice of the original charges. While developments during discovery may lead to augmentation or modification of the charges by amendment, the ability to amend does not affect the requirement of particularity in the original charges. Informal sharing of source material on which charges are based, while highly desirable, is no substitute for formal charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [15]

The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the original notice to show cause. If the evidence produced before the hearing department shows the attorney has committed an ethical violation that was not charged in the original notice, the State Bar must amend the notice to conform to the evidence adduced at the hearing. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [16]

The degree of specificity required in a notice to show cause does not necessitate lengthy detailed pleading. A notice to show cause does not have to include explicit details of a respondent's alleged misconduct, nor does it have to match the subsequent proof at the hearing as long as the difference is immaterial or the pleading is amended and the respondent is given an opportunity to respond to the additional allegations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [21]

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

106.50 Answer to initial pleading (rules 5.42, 5.43)

Except for service of initial pleading in a proceedings, State Bar Rules of Procedure and State Bar Court Rules of Practice require that attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges contain an address of service for the attorney. Thus, clerk properly served copy of hearing judge's decision on attorney by mailing it to attorney at the address listed in the attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges even though that address was not address that attorney maintained on State Bar's official membership records, particularly since attorney never notified clerk that he wished to be served at any address other than the address listed on the response. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [9]

Where respondent refused to take the witness stand when ordered to do so by the referee at the disciplinary hearing, and invoked the protection of the Fifth Amendment through counsel and not in response to specific questions, respondent's actions were improper. If appearing under subpoena, respondent's actions could have been certified for contempt before the Superior Court. If culpability had been found on the underlying misconduct charges, respondent's actions could have been considered evidence in aggravation. However, the referee did not have contempt power and lacked the authority to sanction respondent by striking respondent's answer to the notice to show cause and deeming the allegations admitted by default as a matter of law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [33]

Time to file answer to notice to show cause is extended twenty days by service of notice of application to enter default, and is extended an additional five days when the application is served by mail. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent who filed motion for relief from default had previously submitted proposed answer to notice to show cause to State Bar Court and served it on examiner, and declaration accompanying motion to set aside default verified essential allegations of proposed answer, this constituted substantial compliance with rule requiring motion to set aside default to be accompanied by verified proposed answer. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

The time limit for filing an answer to the notice to show cause is not jurisdictional, and an answer will be accepted for filing at any time prior to the actual entry of default, no matter how belatedly it is submitted. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

Where record showed that respondent cured defects in otherwise timely answer within six days of mailing of notice to do so by clerk's office, review department's duty of independent record review precluded it from ignoring those facts in determining just disposition of motion for relief from default, despite weakness of respondent's moving papers. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

Pursuant to Rule of Procedure 552(a), an answer submitted for filing prior to the entry of default is not required to be verified. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [14]

It would be an abuse of discretion to deny relief from default solely on the basis of the lack of a verification of respondent's proposed answer, without giving respondent a chance to cure the defect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

106.90 Other issues re pleadings

Multiple acts of misconduct as aggravation are not limited to the counts pleaded. Respondent's 65 improper CTA withdrawals were multiple acts of misconduct that constitute significant aggravation. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [2]

Review Department declined to find uncharged misconduct where State Bar had ample opportunity but did not move to amend the notices of disciplinary charges to include new charges; therefore, respondent did not have sufficient notice or opportunity to defend against them. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250. [7]

Where State Bar had notice of respondent's additional alleged acts of misconduct and failed to charge them in initial pleading and to amend charges to conform to proof at trial, respondent was denied fair opportunity to defend against additional charges, and Review Department declined State Bar's late request on review to consider them in aggravation. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221. [12]

Respondent's testimony and arguments regarding his customary practices (1) to limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and (2) to rely on or permit referring nonattorney immigration services providers to prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients placed respondent's practices in issue so that any uncharged improprieties in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [4 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Respondent's arguments and testimony that almost all hearing judge's findings of misconduct are erroneous because they are based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients placed respondent's methods of practicing law in issue so that any uncharged impropriety in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [9 a, b]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Absent an appropriate objection to the introduction of evidence of misconduct other than that charged in the notice of disciplinary charges, such evidence may, when appropriate, be used as an aggravating factor in disciplinary matters.In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [3 a-c]

In determining culpability, the review department declined to view respondent's conduct in each of four lawsuits separately where the notice of disciplinary charges charged that the totality of respondent's conduct in filing and pursuing all four of the actions was the basis of his misconduct.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[5]

In reviewing a pretrial motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges on the ground that it was barred by the applicable period of limitations, we treat the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged that respondent, a general partner of a California limited partnership, informed a limited partner within five years before the notice of disciplinary charges was filed that the limited partner's share of funds from a partnership distribution was gone, the charge that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching a fiduciary duty and misappropriating funds was timely filed under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 51.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [5a,b]

In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.

Respondent's argument that a new trial was necessary because the notices to show cause did not pair facts with each alleged ethical violation was rejected. Even though the Supreme Court has repeatedly criticized this practice, a defective notice entitles an attorney to relief only if the attorney shows that specific prejudice resulted from the defect. Respondent made no such showing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [4]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

Where a proceeding under rule 955 of the California Rules of Court was started by an order of referral rather than the issuance of formal charges, culpability could be based on all evidence introduced. Thus, where the evidence demonstrated that respondent failed to give timely notices of her suspension to her clients, opposing counsel, and courts in which her clients' cases were pending, she wilfully violated rule 955, subdivision (a), and the review department considered that violation as substantive and not just an aggravating circumstance as found by the hearing judge. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [5]

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

State Bar Court is reluctant to interfere with reasonable exercise of prosecutorial discretion. When presented with a complaint, State Bar can legitimately charge attorney based on facts as they appear from investigation. Where large number of counts filed against respondent resulted primarily from size and volume of respondent's practice and his chronic problem with handling medical liens, fact that State Bar could not establish factual or legal basis for some counts and charges was not sufficient to establish that charges were brought without reasonable basis or that respondent was victim of prosecutorial misconduct. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [13]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

Notice to show cause under rule 550 of Transitional Rules of Procedure of State Bar is not required in conviction referral proceeding. Pursuant to Supreme Court's delegation of authority to State Bar Court in conviction referral matters (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(a)), only State Bar Court referral order and notice of time and place of hearing are needed to initiate a conviction referral proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [2]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

Admonitions are not discipline and may be reopened and proceed anew as a formal disciplinary proceeding if a formal proceeding is brought with two years based on other misconduct. The rules of procedure define the start of a formal proceeding as the issuance of a notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 415, 550.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [20]

In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause informed respondent who was subject to stayed suspension that he could be enrolled inactive upon finding of probation violation and recommendation of actual suspension therefor, it would have been appropriate for hearing judge to order such inactive enrollment with or without request from Office of Trial Counsel, and where hearing judge had not done so, review department made such order. Under statute providing that inactive enrollment for probation violation shall be credited against ensuing actual suspension, review department recommended that respondent's one-year actual suspension commence as of the date of his inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [7]

An attorney can be disciplined only for misconduct charged in the notice to show cause or an amendment thereto. Where notice to show cause charged violation of rule against representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent served interrogatory requesting identification of all such alleged conflicts, charges against respondent were limited to those identified in State Bar's answer to such interrogatory, and respondent could not be found culpable of violating conflict of interest rule based on a conflict not listed therein. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [9]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

Finding a pattern in aggravation is not limited to consideration of the counts pleaded. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct involving eight clients over six years, that number of cases only, in a high volume practice, might not have constituted a pattern. However, where respondent also testified to his prolonged, systematic failure to supervise his staff, his staff's inability to handle the caseload, and numerous other problems besides the ones listed in the notice to show cause, he had no grounds to challenge the finding in aggravation based thereon that a pattern of neglect existed. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [6]

Aggravating factors are not required to be separately charged. However, facts that could have formed the basis for an additional charge omitted from the notice to show cause cannot be relied on in aggravation in a default matter, because respondent is not fairly put on notice that such facts will be relied on. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [12]

Charges should only be filed when the Office of Trial Counsel ascertains that reasonable cause exists to charge that particular conduct occurred which violated a particular regulatory provision. (Rule 510, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [18]

The scope of the respondent's defense is determined by the scope of the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [20]

The State Bar Court must make appropriate findings as to the manner in which an attorney's conduct violated charged rules and statutes. Conclusory language in an examiner's papers indicating that the factual findings supported a conclusion of culpability under a given statute or rule was inadequate and did not promote meaningful review. The conduct proved under each count which supports culpability of particular charged violations must be identified. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [3]

Where "and/or" language was used as part of the allegations in the notice to show cause, such language could not be used to establish respondent's culpability based solely on admitted allegations by default. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [7]

107 Default/Relief from Default (rules 5.80-5.84, 5.250-5.253, 5.346)

Where hearing judge properly granted respondent limited relief from default, to extent of requiring hearing on State Bar's petition for disbarment after default, and respondent sought review of hearing judge's ultimate decision, Review Department declined to dismiss respondent's petition for review, exercising its power to permit respondent to participate in proceeding notwithstanding default. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [1]

Prior to 2011, the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar permitted imposition of a discipline less than disbarment even if the defaulting attorney did not seek relief from default. (See former rule 200 et seq. of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar.) The rules now require that when a member's default has been entered and the member fails to have it set aside or vacated, the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel must file a petition seeking the member's disbarment. (Rule 5.85(A).) In turn, a hearing judge must grant the petition and recommend disbarment provided (1) the member has failed to file a response to the petition for disbarment or (2) the court has denied a motion to set aside or vacate the default. (Rule 5.85(F)(1).) In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [2 a,b]

A member in default has various opportunities to seek relief from default. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 5.83(A), (C), (D), and 5.85(E).) Because the effects of a default may deny a disposition of the case on the merits irrespective of the charges or potential mitigation, the review department closely scrutinizes orders denying relief from default and any doubts must be resolved in favor of the member. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [3]

Where respondent filed opposition to petition for disbarment after default, and sought review of hearing judge's order granting petition, and Review Department remanded to permit hearing judge to exercise discretion regarding what relief was appropriate, hearing judge did not abuse discretion on remand by declining to set aside default except for limited purpose of conducting hearing on culpability, aggravation, and level of discipline, in which respondent was not permitted to participate. Hearing judge also properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted. By allowing his default to be entered, respondent waived right to participate in proceedings, to make evidentiary objections, and to present evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [4 a-c]

Hearing judge properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted by virtue of respondent's default. Where admitted allegations showed respondent had received public reproval with conditions attached in prior discipline matter, and had failed to comply with certain conditions, hearing judge properly found clear and convincing evidence that respondent violated conditions of prior disciplinary order, in violation of rule 1-110. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [5]

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

In conviction referral proceeding, ample due process protections were afforded to respondent where the State Bar served him via certified mail with a copy of the conviction referral order along with written notice that informed him of the specific conviction that was subject to the referral and of the specific issues to be decided at the hearing, warned him of the specific consequences of failure to timely reply, and directed him to attend the hearing to present evidence on his behalf and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Further, the motion for entry of default, also served by certified mail, again warned respondent of the consequences of his failure to participate and notified him of the minimum level of discipline the State Bar would recommend if the hearing judge found culpability. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [2]

While allegations in an original proceeding are deemed admitted after a default is entered, in a conviction referral matter, even after a default, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence any facts or circumstances it maintains are relevant to the conviction. If respondent in conviction referral proceeding had replied instead of defaulting, he could have sought to discover the State Bar's contentions of specific facts surrounding the conviction, and the court could have required the parties to exchange pretrial statements to identify factual contentions still in dispute before trial. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [3]

Where the hearing judge recommended for a defaulting attorney, among other things, an actual suspension of 60 days and until the attorney made restitution of unearned fees and until the State Bar Court granted the attorney's motion to terminate her actual suspension under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 205, the hearing judge should also have recommended compliance with paragraphs (a) and (c) of California Rules of Court, rule 955 if the actual suspension exceeded 90 days. In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861. [2a, b]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[3]

In default proceeding, no loss of public protection occurs when specific probation conditions are not immediately imposed on attorney who is placed on actual suspension because such attorney will be prohibited from practicing law for duration of attorney's actual suspension and until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [4]

Even though plenary review is sought, the issue of whether a hearing judge erred in setting aside a default as to the limited issue of the degree of discipline is reviewed under the limited scope of review customarily used for procedural questions, testing whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[1]

The hearing judge erred in using the State Bar's request to add a quarterly reporting probation condition to conclude that limited relief under rule 203(e)(3)(B), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, warranted the setting aside of the default on the issue of discipline. Rule 203(e)(2) allows a judge to vacate a default subject to appropriate conditions. Rule 203(e)(3)(B) allows a judge to vacate a default entered after filing of the decision, for limited purposes. There is nothing in rule 203(e) that eliminates the burden the respondent must sustain under rule 203(c), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. Only after a defaulting respondent has made a sufficient showing for relief under rule 203(c), may a hearing judge set aside a default unconditionally or on appropriate conditions or for a limited purpose under rule 203(e). Since the judge's decision on its face concluded that respondent had not made the required showing under rule 203(c)(2), the judge erred when setting aside respondent's default. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[2]

In a motion for relief from default, general allegations of despondency and depression do not meet decisional law standards for relief, even under the more liberal requirements of rule 202(c)(1), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[3]

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

Where respondent's default had been entered in hearing department, and motion for relief from default was denied, respondent's sole remedy on review was to seek review of denial of relief from default. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1400(e)(vii).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [2]

Where respondent was repeatedly warned by hearing judge concerning consequences of continued inaction regarding seeking relief from default, but respondent failed to seek such relief for over a year after his first default was entered and more than six months after he had actual notice of the proceedings, and where respondent made no sufficient showing justifying such extraordinary delay, hearing judge was well within her discretion in denying relief from default, and review department denied respondent's request for review of such ruling. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [3]

In default proceeding for violation of probation, review department deleted findings in aggravation based on probation violations not charged in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [6]

An attorney's lack of concern for the disciplinary process and failure to appreciate the seriousness of the charges is a factor in aggravation. Where respondent displayed a lack of appreciation of the necessity for timely, meaningful participation in the disciplinary process, as demonstrated by his repeated attempts to appear without timely seeking relief from default in both the hearing and review departments, despite repeated warnings by the court, respondent's dilatory conduct was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [11]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

A respondent may be disciplined only for misconduct properly charged in the notice to show cause. In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause charged that respondent failed to deliver financial records to an accountant, and hearing judge found that respondent failed to render an accounting, respondent was properly found culpable of failing to deliver the records, based on his admission by default of the allegations of the notice to show cause. Respondent's failure to file quarterly reports other than those listed in the notice to show cause could not be used as a basis for culpability or as aggravating circumstances in a default matter. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [1]

Because there was no procedure for entering a default in a referral proceeding for alleged wilful violation of rule 955, the respondent was not precluded by lack of participation in the hearing department from filing an opposition brief on review. However, when respondent failed to file such a brief, the review department issued an order precluding respondent from appearing at oral argument. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [1]

A short delay in compliance with rule 955, by itself, would not necessitate disbarment. However, where respondent also had failed to appear in the rule 955 violation proceeding, had failed to appear in two prior disciplinary proceedings, and had continued to ignore her obligations thereafter, showing a clear pattern of failure to participate in the disciplinary process and to comply with requirements of Supreme Court, disbarment was clearly appropriate. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [2]

A respondent's default results in the admission of the facts alleged in the charging allegations of the notice to show cause, and no further proof is required to establish the truth of those charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 552.1(e), 555(e).) In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

In a default proceeding, ambiguous evidence that can be interpreted as consistent with allegations of the notice to show cause does not negate the deemed admissions of the notice to show cause. Where evidence introduced at default hearing fell short of clear and convincing proof of charged violations, but was not inconsistent with charging allegations, defaulting respondent should have been found culpable of violations properly charged. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

Uncharged facts cannot be relied upon for evidence of aggravation in a default matter because the respondent is not fairly apprised of the fact that additional uncharged facts will be used against him. The use of uncharged aggravating factors in contested proceedings presents a different question. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [8]

Where the State Bar chooses to present evidence in a default hearing that undercuts or negates the allegations of the notice to show cause, it is the evidence, and not the allegations, that controls the findings of fact. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [2]

Where hearing referee failed to determine whether respondent's default was properly entered, review department was required to do so, and for that purpose it took judicial notice of respondent's membership records address under Evidence Code section 459; evidence of membership records address is essential in a default case to assess the propriety of the default procedures. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [3]

Where evidence offered by State Bar at default hearing neither established nor controverted or undermined allegations of notice to show cause, such allegations, which were deemed admitted by respondent's default, could properly be relied on to establish attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [17]

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

Requirement that respondent comply with standard 1.4(c)(ii) before returning to active practice after suspension was particularly appropriate where respondent defaulted in disciplinary proceeding, indicating a need for an affirmative showing of fitness prior to resuming practice. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [14]

In a default matter, the well-pleaded allegations in the notice to show cause must be deemed admitted even if the State Bar did not so request. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 552.1(d)(iii).) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [18]

In a default matter, to the extent that evidence negates allegations of notice to show cause, it is evidence and not allegations that controls findings of fact. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [19]

As a matter of policy, not all attorneys who fail to participate in disciplinary proceedings should be precluded from receiving discipline containing probation conditions. Defaulting attorneys do present a problem for the hearing department in that the cause of their misconduct is not always evident on the record, thus making it difficult to determine which probation conditions or duties would further the goals of discipline. Nonetheless, the view that an attorney's default is prima facie evidence that the attorney is not amenable to probation runs contrary to the duty to consider each case on its own merits to determine appropriate discipline, and also precludes the use of probation monitoring as an effective means of public protection. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [8]

Legal effect of entry of default in disciplinary proceeding is to admit allegations in notice to show cause and to preclude respondent attorney's further participation in proceeding unless default is set aside. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [1]

Granting motion to set aside default would not have prejudiced State Bar where State Bar relied only on documentary evidence and did not present live witnesses. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [3]

In ruling on a motion to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), State Bar Court interprets and applies terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" in same manner as in civil cases under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [4]

In reviewing an order on a motion to set aside default, the standard of review is abuse of discretion. However, because law strongly favors resolution of matters on the merits, doubts are to be resolved in favor of the defaulted party, and orders denying relief are scrutinized more closely than orders permitting trial on the merits. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [5]

Party requesting relief from default has burden of proving excusable neglect by a preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [6]

Rule of Procedure 555 does not require that motion to set aside default be made within a reasonable time, but only that it be made within 75 days. Motion to set aside default filed 75 days after entry of default was timely, and also was filed within a reasonable time, where it was filed approximately one month after respondent learned true status after receiving conflicting notices, less than two weeks after seeking a continuance for that purpose, and less than one week after obtaining counsel. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [7]

Respondent's fear, panic, or aversion to formal charges alone would not show abuse of discretion in failure to grant relief from default, but specific showing regarding preoccupation with mother's serious illness raised doubts as to proper exercise of discretion, which review department resolved in respondent's favor. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [8]

State Bar had no right to propound and rely on discovery requests after entry of respondent's default; if discovery was required in order to prove charges, default should not have been taken until after discovery responses were due and State Bar should not have opposed motion to set aside default. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [9]

Service of discovery requests after entry of default is inconsistent with fundamental fairness and due process, and does not serve purposes of modern discovery procedures such as exchanging information, informing parties of merits of case, and facilitate settlement or resolution of matter. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [10]

Failure by party in default to respond to requests for admissions propounded after default cannot serve as basis for propounding party to seek order deeming admission of truth of facts or genuineness of documents. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [11]

In default matter, hearing referee erred in basing findings of culpability partly on facts deemed admitted by failure to respond to improper post-default discovery, and in finding culpability on charges broader than those set forth in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [12]

Motions to amend notice to show cause to correct typographical errors or modify facts which do not alter the charges in the original notice are permissible after entry of default. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [13]

Rule of Procedure 557, permitting amendment of notice to show cause to conform to proof without requiring additional time to prepare answer and defense, assumes respondent attorney's presence at disciplinary proceeding. Where respondent is not present due to entry of default, respondent does not have an opportunity to defend against charges. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [14]

In order to reach merits on review of decision recommending discipline following default hearing, review department first had to be satisfied with the propriety of the entry of the respondent's default and the order denying respondent's motion for relief from default. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

Time to file answer to notice to show cause is extended twenty days by service of notice of application to enter default, and is extended an additional five days when the application is served by mail. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent who filed motion for relief from default had previously submitted proposed answer to notice to show cause to State Bar Court and served it on examiner, and declaration accompanying motion to set aside default verified essential allegations of proposed answer, this constituted substantial compliance with rule requiring motion to set aside default to be accompanied by verified proposed answer. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

General rule is that where record is silent, all intendments and presumptions are indulged to support a lower court order; moreover, inadvertent misuse of terms in an order does not require reversal. Review department therefore presumed that referee considered and denied alternate ground for relief from default which was addressed in moving papers of both parties but not listed in referee's order denying motion. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

There is a strong public policy in favor of hearing cases on the merits and against depriving a party of the right of appeal because of technical noncompliance in matters of form. The policy against deprivation of a hearing due to noncompliance with filing requirements appears just as strong in the situation of noncompliance resulting in default prior to trial. In both cases parties are deprived of a significant legal remedy if the noncomplying pleading is ultimately disregarded despite its reasonably timely correction. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [5]

The time limit for filing an answer to the notice to show cause is not jurisdictional, and an answer will be accepted for filing at any time prior to the actual entry of default, no matter how belatedly it is submitted. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

Review department declined to decide whether clerk's entry of default prior to expiration of reasonable time to respond to clerk's notice, which rejected answer due to technical defects, was void, or erroneous and voidable. Instead, review department determined that the denial of respondent's motion to set aside default was an abuse of discretion. An attorney's neglect in untimely filing papers must be evaluated in light of the reasonableness of the attorney's conduct; respondent acted reasonably in timely submitting answer to notice to show cause, and promptly resubmitting corrected answer after receiving clerk's rejection notice. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

In proceedings to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), the terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" are interpreted and applied in the same manner as in motions in civil cases pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [8]

Effective September 1, 1989, the former Rules of Procedure of the State Bar were replaced by the Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. A motion to set aside default filed and served prior to September 1, 1989, was governed by former Rules of Procedure. (Rule 109, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [9]

Appellate review under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is for abuse of discretion, the test being whether the trial court exceeded the bounds of reason. The Supreme Court has applied a similar abuse of discretion standard in reviewing procedural motions in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [10]

It is the policy of the law under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to favor a hearing on the merits; any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default. A trial court order denying relief is scrutinized more carefully than an order permitting trial on the merits. Nonetheless, it is the moving party's responsibility to recite facts that meet the burden of proving mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

Where record showed that respondent cured defects in otherwise timely answer within six days of mailing of notice to do so by clerk's office, review department's duty of independent record review precluded it from ignoring those facts in determining just disposition of motion for relief from default, despite weakness of respondent's moving papers. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

An attorney is ordinarily justified in relying on communications from the clerk as a basis for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Pursuant to Rule of Procedure 552(a), an answer submitted for filing prior to the entry of default is not required to be verified. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [14]

It would be an abuse of discretion to deny relief from default solely on the basis of the lack of a verification of respondent's proposed answer, without giving respondent a chance to cure the defect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Examiner's argument against setting aside default on review, based on resulting delay, necessity for new trial, and resulting prejudice and inconvenience, was unpersuasive. Reversal of denial of motion to set aside default will always require new hearing. Moreover, record revealed that examiner had notice prior to hearing of respondent's intention to move to set aside default. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [16]

Although respondent's default precluded respondent from seeking review and the State Bar examiner did not request review, the review department had a duty to review on an ex parte basis a proceeding heard by a referee of the former volunteer State Bar Court, as part of the transition to the new State Bar Court system. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 109, 452(a).) In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [1]

Where an attorney had failed to comply with the statutory duty to maintain a current address on the State Bar's member records and to notify the State Bar within 30 days of any address change, the attorney failed to show good cause for relief from default even though he did not receive notice of the State Bar proceedings until the review department's opinion was published. Because the address requirement is reasonable, an attorney receives reasonable notice of documents properly sent to the attorney's address of record with the State Bar. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [2]

Under rule 555.1(b), Transitional Rules of Procedure, a respondent has until 75 days after the entry of his default to file, as a matter of right, a motion to set aside the default. This 75-day time period is not jurisdictional; however, after it has run, a much greater showing must be made to justify setting aside the default. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [3]

Respondent's claimed alcoholism did not excuse him from his statutory duties to notify the State Bar promptly of any change of his address of record, and to participate in State Bar disciplinary proceedings against him. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

Review department recognized that respondent's default raised concerns regarding respondent's suitability for probation, but concluded that respondent should not be denied opportunity to comply with probation terms which would appear to have rehabilitative benefit. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [7]

Where notice to show cause did not charge that respondent misrepresented to his clients the status of their claims, and respondent defaulted and did not appear at hearing, the review department declined to find, based on client's testimony at hearing, that respondent had committed act of dishonesty by making such misrepresentation. The review department is most reluctant to consider, even for the purpose of aggravation, misconduct which could have been, but was not charged in notice to show cause, especially where respondent is in default and has no opportunity to learn of or rebut matters arising during hearing. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [3]

Where respondent admitted many of the serious charges against him during State Bar investigation, review department declined to find failure to cooperate with State Bar as aggravating factor, despite respondent's failure to participate in proceedings against him. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [13]

Where "and/or" language was used as part of the allegations in the notice to show cause, such language could not be used to establish respondent's culpability based solely on admitted allegations by default. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [7]

Taking of evidence which negated allegation of notice to show cause permitted hearing department to reject allegations based on a conflict between the admission of the allegations by default and the evidence adduced at trial. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [10]

Where entry of attorney's default for failure to appear at disciplinary hearing resulted in the admission of all allegations in the notice to show cause, but certain of those allegations were in conflict with evidence adduced at hearing, examiner properly requested reconsideration of hearing decision to delete findings contrary to evidence adduced at hearing, and hearing referee properly deleted such findings from the decision, based on their conflict with the evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

108 Failure to Appear at Trial (rule 5.100)

Respondent's highly generalized argument regarding inadequate notice of certain hearings warranted no relief, where respondent had been made aware of duty to keep State Bar informed of current address and given opportunity to correct the official State Bar record thereof, and notices had been served on respondent at another address in addition to the address of record. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

Medical emergency might have excused respondent's failure to attend pre-trial conference, but did not excuse respondent's failure to file pre-trial statement which would have better preserved respondent's posture at trial. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [2]

Where respondent sought no relief from hearing judge on account of respondent's inability to attend pre-trial conference, which respondent contended was excusable due to medical emergency, respondent could not be heard to complain for the first time on review. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

While disciplinary hearings can be stressful for accused attorneys to attend, Supreme Court has made clear that accused attorneys must avail themselves of opportunity to participate and present all favorable evidence. Failing that opportunity, the accused may not demand a new hearing to present evidence belatedly. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

Respondent's tardy and intermittent participation in disciplinary proceedings was an aggravating circumstance, where respondent gave no excuse for failure to appear on last day of hearing, was not represented by counsel, and displayed several failures to participate or tardiness in participating. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [9]

It was not an aggravating circumstance that respondent did not personally attend the hearing on the degree of discipline, since respondent was represented by counsel who appeared on respondent's behalf. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [1]

Where respondent was not a California resident, and thus not subject to subpoena, respondent's attendance as a witness at the disciplinary hearing could have been required by notice to respondent's counsel. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [28]

Evidence Code section 776, providing for calling the opposing party as an adverse witness, does not empower the State Bar to require the respondent's presence at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [29]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has an obligation to be present at the hearing even if not subpoenaed or noticed to appear as a witness. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [30]

Where entry of attorney's default for failure to appear at disciplinary hearing resulted in the admission of all allegations in the notice to show cause, but certain of those allegations were in conflict with evidence adduced at hearing, examiner properly requested reconsideration of hearing decision to delete findings contrary to evidence adduced at hearing, and hearing referee properly deleted such findings from the decision, based on their conflict with the evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

109 Venue (rules 5.22, 5.23)

110 Consolidation/Severance (rules 5.47, 5.48)

In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227.

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

Where two separate disciplinary proceedings were consolidated on review, the first proceeding did not constitute prior discipline for the purpose of enhanced discipline in the consolidated matter. Nonetheless, where the misconduct involved in the second proceeding had continued during the period that the first proceeding was pending in hearing department, the fact that respondent engaged in additional misconduct while he was aware that his conduct was being scrutinized in a pending disciplinary proceeding was significant. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [18]

Where two unrelated matters were consolidated in the hearing department, and a party requested review in order to challenge the result in one of the matters, the entire matter was placed before the review department and reviewed by it even though in the other matter neither party challenged the findings and conclusions of the hearing judge. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [1]

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

The passage of time since respondent's misconduct and the failure of the State Bar to consolidate respondent's two disciplinary matters did not render the disbarment recommendation in the second matter unfair. Consolidation of disciplinary matters, while preferable when reasonably possible and not prejudicial, is not mandatory, and independent consideration of separate matters involving the same attorney is not uncommon. Where an investigation by state law enforcement and the State Bar of respondent's misconduct in the second matter was still ongoing after the initiation and disposition of respondent's earlier disciplinary matter, consolidation would not have been possible. Further, it could not be presumed that if the matters had been consolidated, the recommended discipline would have been suspension rather than disbarment, given the far greater seriousness of the misconduct in the second matter. Finally, respondent had shown no prejudice from the delay, and had benefited from being able to practice almost continually in the interim. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Disciplinary proceedings and involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are not related so as to require consolidation, and may be conducted on simultaneous, parallel tracks. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [3]

Where a related proceeding was pending in the hearing department, the respondent's argument in favor of a remand by the review department carried more weight, because the pendency of the related proceeding created an opportunity for a fuller record to be prepared in the remanded matter without undue delay. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [5]

Where respondent's two convictions were interconnected in their surrounding facts and circumstances, and where the record in the earlier matter lacked information regarding respondent's compliance with his criminal probation and his subsequent rehabilitation, a remand of the first matter and consolidation with the subsequent, related matter would be appropriate, in order to give the Supreme Court a single, more complete record and a single recommendation of discipline, if any. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [6]

Consolidation may be ordered on the Presiding Judge's own motion, if no substantial rights will be prejudiced. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 2.22, 2.25 and 262.) Consolidation is encouraged at the hearing department level where feasible to avoid substantial duplicate effort expended by counsel and the hearing department to create trial records. Consolidation was appropriate where at most a brief delay would result, and a substantial savings of time would result from a single proceeding on review. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [7]

111 Abatement (rules 5.50, 5.51, 5.52)

Hearing judge did not abuse discretion in denying respondent's motion to abate, filed one month before disciplinary trial, in order to protect public, where respondent's grounds for seeking abatement were not persuasive. Pending civil proceeding involving same client as disciplinary matter dealt with recovery of damages based on breach of contract and fraud, while issue in discipline matter was whether respondent performed with competence. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

Given the severe consequences of inactive enrollment, public protection supports inactive enrollment of an attorney who intentionally makes a claim of mental incompetence, even if the attorney was actually rational and was misguidedly making the claim as a strategy to impede disciplinary prosecution. Any issue of bad faith may be addressed in the context of the requested abatement of the disciplinary case. The mere enrollment of the attorney inactive does not dictate abatement of the underlying disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [4]

An abatement order is a procedural matter, for which the standard of review is one of abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [5]

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has a right to a fair hearing. The State Bar's interest in protecting the public and maintaining integrity and public confidence in the legal profession would not be served by disciplining an attorney who is mentally incompetent to the degree that she or he cannot assist in a defense against disciplinary charges. Therefore, if an attorney is unable to assist in his or her own defense, due process requires that the disciplinary proceeding be abated. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [7]

A motion supported by written submissions, including a detailed psychiatric report, could, if unopposed, be sufficient evidence to warrant abating a disciplinary proceeding due to the respondent's inability to assist in the defense. However, where the adequacy of the respondent's showing is questioned, the respondent's evidence may be weighed in the context of the whole record in the disciplinary proceeding. Any proffered medical submission regarding the respondent's mental competency should address the nature of the medical examination or tests conducted; the attorney's symptoms; the diagnosis and cause of the condition, and any past or proposed treatment. The report should note whether the illness raises doubts about the respondent's ability to assist in the defense, and should relate the respondent's condition to a recognized legal definition of competency. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [9]

Where it was unclear what evidence hearing judge considered in deciding to abate disciplinary proceeding due to respondent's claimed inability to assist counsel, and where respondent's medical evidence lacked important elements and was conclusory, and respondent's counsel's declaration was undermined by contrast with earlier declaration regarding respondent's superior performance of paralegal tasks, review department concluded that hearing judge failed to exercise her discretion properly in abating proceeding without holding hearing to allow presentation and resolution of conflicting evidence. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [11]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

112 Assistance of Counsel

Respondent's suggestion that alleged ineffective assistance of his counsel necessitates a new trial was rejected. A disciplinary proceeding is administrative in nature, not governed by the rules of criminal procedure. Although an attorney in a disciplinary hearing must have a fair hearing, the attorney has no constitutional right to counsel or effective assistance from counsel. Any mistakes of respondent's counsel thus did not warrant retrial. Nor did the record establish that respondent received an unfair hearing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [5]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244.

It was not an aggravating circumstance that respondent did not personally attend the hearing on the degree of discipline, since respondent was represented by counsel who appeared on respondent's behalf. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [1]

The hearing judge is entitled to exert reasonable control over the conduct of the hearing. Such measures as requiring one counsel to question a witness, requesting respondent not to consult with respondent's attorneys while the judge was speaking to them, and expecting counsel to note objections for the record and then move forward with the case, were reasonable, did not demonstrate bias under the circumstances and did not deprive respondent of the statutory right to legal assistance. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [11]

113 Discovery (rules 5.65-5.71)

Respondent's discovery rights under the revised Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, which are based on similar discovery provisions in the California Administrative Procedure Act, satisfy fair trial concerns. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [4]

A judge has broad discretion to impose discovery sanctions and is subject to reversal only for arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical action. The sanctions the court may impose are such as are suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the objects of the discovery he seeks but the court may not impose sanctions which are designed not to accomplish the objects of the discovery but to impose punishment. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [2]

While the power to impose discovery sanctions is broad, there are two requirements that must be met before the imposition of a sanction: 1) there must be a failure to comply with court–ordered discovery; and 2) the failure must be willful. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [3]

Where respondent elected not to attend a properly–noticed deposition which resulted in a court order to compel his deposition, where respondent was given the opportunity to comply with that order but willfully failed to do so, and where the hearing judge barred respondent from introducing any documentary or testimonial evidence, except for his own testimony, the sanction imposed was wholly inappropriate to respondent's disobedience, and the hearing judge abused her discretion by imposing an insufficient sanction that failed to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. This discovery sanction was ineffective to induce respondent to provide the discovery sought. Moreover, this lesser sanction hindered the State Bar's ability to proceed at trial and would allow respondent to testify without affording the State Bar the opportunity to impeach his testimony or credibility or even to adequately prepare for trial, opening the trial to surprise and delay. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [4 a–d]

Discovery sanctions should be appropriate to the dereliction and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. A court will generally impose lesser sanctions regarding a discovery request unless the lesser sanctions will not bring about the compliance of the offending party. A court's exercise of discretion should not reward the disobedient party, let alone at the expense of the fundamental reasons supporting the discovery process. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [5 a–c]

Generally the standard to apply to the review of a discovery order on appeal is abuse of discretion. There was no abuse of discretion in denying the State Bar's request that the hearing judge order petitioner to submit to an independent medical examination because petitioner continues to consume alcohol when there is no evidence that petitioner presently abuses alcohol or suffered from a previous alcohol addiction or that petitioner's present consumption of alcohol caused any relapse into drug use. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [8 a, b]

Misrepresentations in an attorney's verified answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar, is a serious aggravation warranting increased discipline and might well constitute a greater offense than underlying misconduct. It is no defense that attorney's answers were prepared for him by his counsel. While it might be improper to penalize a lay client for not correcting mistakes that his counsel made in a pleading that the client verified, such reasoning carries little weight when the client is an attorney. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [26 a-c]

Under State Bar Act and disciplinary case law, respondent had affirmative duty to insure that his answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar were true and correct even if he had to refresh his recollection of the facts by going to the immigration court and reviewing the court file and listening to the tapes of all relevant court hearings in each client matter that was a subject of the interrogatories. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [27]

Under Civil Discovery Act, respondent had affirmative duty to answer each of the State Bar's interrogatories as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to him permitted. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [28]

Respondent's claim that the application of the Civil Discovery Act to attorney disciplinary proceedings denied him due process was rejected. State Bar disciplinary proceedings are administrative but of a nature of their own. It has been repeatedly held that they are not governed by the rules of procedure governing civil or criminal litigation although such rules have been invoked when necessary to insure administrative due process. The Supreme Court observed that the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar supply a wide array of procedural safeguards and that pursuant to these rules, the Civil Discovery Act, as adopted and limited by the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, constitutes the rules of discovery in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Under Supreme Court case law, such application is constitutional. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [6]

Respondent's use of obstructive tactics during his disciplinary proceeding, including abuse of discovery and frivolous motions, constituted a serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [13]

Pursuant to case law, selective prosecution claims should be raised by motion prior to trial, and as a practical matter, such claims have little chance of success if not raised initially by pretrial motion, due to difficulty of proving them without aid of discovery. However, it is not clear that such claims cannot be raised as part of respondent's defense case at trial; accordingly, review department considered such claim despite respondent's failure to raise it by pretrial motion. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [11]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

Where the record of a legal specialization proceeding contained no documents explaining the basis for the denial of specialist certification and where responses by the deputy trial counsel to interrogatories clarified the basis for the denial, augmentation of the record with the interrogatory responses was appropriate. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

Where both respondent's admission in discovery and client's testimony supported finding that respondent accepted responsibility for proceeding with lawsuit on client's behalf, and there was no evidence that contradicted or undercut respondent's admission, no additional corroboration was necessary to find that respondent agreed to prosecute case, and respondent could therefore be found culpable of misconduct based on failure to perform legal services requested by client. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [1]

Where discovery period was extended, giving respondent ample time to conduct discovery, and where respondent engaged in discovery, did not seek additional time for further discovery, and did not move to compel further responses or to compel attendance of witnesses at depositions, respondent's contentions that errors occurred during discovery lacked merit. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [5]

An attorney can be disciplined only for misconduct charged in the notice to show cause or an amendment thereto. Where notice to show cause charged violation of rule against representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent served interrogatory requesting identification of all such alleged conflicts, charges against respondent were limited to those identified in State Bar's answer to such interrogatory, and respondent could not be found culpable of violating conflict of interest rule based on a conflict not listed therein. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [9]

Issue of alleged misconduct of examiner during pretrial discovery was moot, where issue had been addressed by order of hearing judge which respondent did not challenge on review, and where only prejudice alleged was unnecessary prolongation of interim suspension for which review department gave respondent credit against recommended actual suspension. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [12]

Under rule 835 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, various discovery provisions applicable in disciplinary proceedings are also applicable in moral character proceedings. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [2]

Rule XI of the Rules Regulating Admission to Practice Law in California, providing that the files of the Committee of Bar Examiners are confidential, does not have any bearing on the Committee's duty to respond to interrogatories from the applicant in a moral character proceeding, and, when read in conjunction with other applicable rules, only precludes the Office of Trials from disclosing documents voluntarily as opposed to pursuant to appropriate discovery requests or by court order. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [3]

The identities of persons who have knowledge of relevant facts and who may be potential witnesses are outside the scope of both the attorney-client and work product privileges. The added fact that such a person is a member of the State Bar is a matter of public record and cannot appropriately be claimed to be privileged. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [4]

Normally, discovery objections not raised in a timely fashion will not be considered, and this provision applies in discovery in moral character proceedings even though the Civil Discovery Act has not been made applicable to such proceedings in its entirety. However, where a claim of privilege from discovery had been belatedly presented to the hearing judge without objection and raised an important issue, the review department considered its applicability on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [5]

The State Bar is a public entity within the scope of the statutory official information privilege (Evid. Code, § 1040). The procedure to be followed in State Bar Court proceedings where the official information privilege is asserted is the same as in civil cases. In a moral character proceeding, where the information sought was the identities of persons whom the State Bar had reserved the right to call as impeachment or rebuttal witnesses at trial, the official information privilege did not apply to such information, either because the consent exception was applicable, or because the reservation of the right to call such persons reduced the Committee of Bar Examiners' need for secrecy to the interest of a party in the outcome of the proceeding, which is not protected under section 1040 and which was outweighed by the interests of the public and the applicant in a fair trial. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [6]

The rule permitting a party to exclude rebuttal or impeachment witnesses from a pretrial statement (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1222(g)) has no bearing on the broader issue of discoverable information. Discovery of identities of individuals is not limited to persons who may be called in the opposing party's case in chief. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [7]

Generally, when a lower court ruling favors disclosure of materials requested in discovery, in camera inspection cannot be requested for the first time on review. There is an exception for questions of first impression, but this exception did not apply where the authority relied on in requesting the inspection had been decided over 30 years earlier. Where the party requesting in camera inspection did so for the first time on a motion for reconsideration before the review department in bank, and gave no explanation of its failure to request such inspection earlier, the review department declined to conduct an in camera inspection. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [8]

In camera inspection was not appropriate before ordering a party to disclose names of potential witnesses in response to an interrogatory, because the court was ill-equipped to evaluate the potential relevance of the undisclosed names without argument from the counsel of the party requesting them, which could only be made after the names were disclosed. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [9]

Private personal information about a non-party to a proceeding may be privileged from discovery under some circumstances pursuant to the California constitutional right to privacy. The privacy right to be protected is that of the non-party, and the custodian of the private information may not waive it. The right to privacy is not absolute, but must be balanced against the need for disclosure. In a moral character proceeding, it was unreasonable for material witnesses against the applicant to claim a right of privacy preventing the disclosure of their identities to the applicant during discovery, while consenting to testify against the applicant at trial. However, as to the identities of persons whose testimony would not be used under any circumstances, the applicant had not made a sufficient showing of need to overcome these persons' privacy rights, and their names could be withheld from disclosure. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [10]

Declaration regarding facts relating to discovery motion was stricken as untimely, where it related to facts which should have been presented to hearing judge, not offered for the first time on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [12]

Where examiner's conduct in connection with obtaining depositions of State Bar's non-party witnesses, while not in bad faith, clearly fell short of her duty under the circumstances, review department upheld hearing judge's order permitting such witnesses to testify only if first deposed, and modified such order to require examiner to subpoena the witnesses and to pay transportation costs as a condition of permitting witnesses' testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [13]

The Civil Discovery Act has not been adopted in its entirety in the conduct of State Bar proceedings. The imposition of monetary costs as discovery sanctions is precluded under rule 321, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. Authorized discovery sanctions include orders precluding a party from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses or from introducing evidence or testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [14]

Denial of respondent's motion to compel discovery did not deprive respondent of due process, where the information sought (information concerning the race, practice and gender of members of the State Bar, and statistics allegedly maintained by the Bar) was not gathered or maintained by the State Bar, and the State Bar was under no obligation to survey its membership in order to respond to respondent's discovery request. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [6]

Evidence of convicted attorney's efforts toward rehabilitation would be relevant at the hearing on final discipline, but could not be relied upon in proceedings seeking to vacate interim suspension because of lack of opportunity for pretrial discovery and full development of facts. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [7]

Where facts deemed conclusively established by court order, following respondent's failure to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, showed that respondent had wilfully misled judge, but respondent was permitted to testify that representations made to judge, though false, were true to the best of respondent's knowledge at the time they were made, respondent's testimony on this point was properly received, but only in mitigation, and not to contradict deemed admissions on which culpability findings were based. Deemed admissions, while conclusive as to literal truth of facts clearly set forth in request for admissions, did not preclude referee from admitting and considering other evidence that tended to explain or helped to interpret admitted facts. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [2]

Where respondent failed to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, those facts deemed admitted were properly considered as conclusive where there had been no timely motion for relief. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [3]

Respondent's testimony that he unsuccessfully tried to telephone a State Bar investigator in response to a letter the investigator sent him regarding his possible misconduct was admissible only in mitigation, not in defense to his culpability of failing to cooperate in the investigation, which was conclusively established by his deemed admissions resulting from his failure to respond to discovery. Such testimony was not a sufficient basis for a finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [8]

Discovery in State Bar proceedings must be completed within 90 days after service of notice to show cause, subject to reasonable extension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 316.) Where examiner noticed and took deposition well after 90-day cutoff, and did not seek extension of discovery period, deposition was clearly discovery, even though examiner's purpose in taking it was to preserve evidence for trial. However, provision of Civil Discovery Act governing time to object to deposition notice on certain grounds did not apply, because respondent's objection was not based on grounds set forth in Civil Discovery Act but on examiner's failure to comply with State Bar rules of procedure. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [17]

Even if respondent waived procedural objection to deposition by appearing and participating, deposition transcript should not have been admitted in evidence, because examiner failed to show that State Bar had been unable to procure deponent's attendance at trial despite reasonable diligence, as required by provision of Civil Discovery Act governing use of depositions at trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [18]

The test for the constitutional validity of a mental examination order is whether the mental examination serves a compelling government interest and constitutes the least intrusive means of accomplishing that interest. Mere convenience or avoidance of administrative costs does not make a means the least intrusive; otherwise the overriding value would be expediency, not the compelling government interest. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [4]

Section 6053, which allows the State Bar Court to order a mental examination when an attorney's mental condition is a material issue in a State Bar proceeding, does not violate the California constitutional right of privacy, because section 6053 serves a compelling government interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys and because section 6053's grant of discretion to order a mental examination may be construed so as to allow such examinations to be ordered only when they are the least intrusive means to satisfy the compelling government interest. In addition, the limited distribution of the mental examination report and the confidentiality of the proceeding serve as further protections of the attorney's privacy and thereby bolster the constitutionality of section 6053. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [6]

The rules governing the proceedings for the transfer of an attorney to inactive status incorporate by reference Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). (Rules 315, 321, 643, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Proceedings to obtain an order for a mental examination under section 6053 must comply with the procedural and substantive requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [7]

Where no evidence or finding indicated that a compulsory mental examination constituted the least intrusive means of determining a respondent's mental condition, the issuance of mental examination orders violated not only the applicable statutory requirements but also the respondent's California constitutional right of privacy. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [8]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

Respondent's deceit in his responses to the State Bar's interrogatories seriously aggravated his misconduct, and might perhaps constitute a greater offense. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [7]

Respondent's answers to State Bar's interrogatories could be relied on as party admissions even though not verified, and were adequately authenticated when examiner identified them while introducing them at trial, and respondent did not object. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [8]

State Bar had no right to propound and rely on discovery requests after entry of respondent's default; if discovery was required in order to prove charges, default should not have been taken until after discovery responses were due and State Bar should not have opposed motion to set aside default. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [9]

Service of discovery requests after entry of default is inconsistent with fundamental fairness and due process, and does not serve purposes of modern discovery procedures such as exchanging information, informing parties of merits of case, and facilitate settlement or resolution of matter. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [10]

Failure by party in default to respond to requests for admissions propounded after default cannot serve as basis for propounding party to seek order deeming admission of truth of facts or genuineness of documents. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [11]

The opportunity for permissive amendment of the notice to show cause at a later stage in the proceedings on adequate notice of new factual allegations does not negate the State Bar's obligation in the first instance to provide adequate notice of the original charges. While developments during discovery may lead to augmentation or modification of the charges by amendment, the ability to amend does not affect the requirement of particularity in the original charges. Informal sharing of source material on which charges are based, while highly desirable, is no substitute for formal charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [15]

114 Subpoenas and Motions to Quash (rules 5.60-5.64)

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar presently in effect concerning the issuance and service of investigative subpoenas are not materially different than were the rules before the Supreme Court in a prior case. Where the subpoena duces tecum was issued based on a competent declaration that was presented to the designee of the Chief Trial Counsel which demonstrated that the records sought were, in fact, trust account records, that they were reasonably required for the matter under investigation, and that the matter under investigation concerned an attorney, the subpoena was issued in accordance with those rules. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [2 a, b]

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

Based on the determination that the provisions of the State Bar Act and the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar concerning investigative subpoenas for trust account records meet the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court in a prior case, the review department concluded that there was no need to import either the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1985 et seq., or the provisions of Government Code section 7470 et seq., for either due process or other reasons into the procedures for the issuance of State Bar investigative subpoenas. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [4]

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

Except with respect to motions to quash investigative subpoenas, the State Bar Court does not have jurisdiction over State Bar disciplinary complaints prior to the filing of formal charges by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, and therefore had no jurisdiction to grant relief requested by attorney regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation, absent a Supreme Court order conferring authority to do so. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [2]

The State Bar Court's statutory jurisdiction (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) to adjudicate motions to quash investigative subpoenas issued by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel constitutes the sole exception to the State Bar Court's lack of jurisdiction during the investigation phase of disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [7]

Review department declined to adopt construction of statute giving State Bar Court jurisdiction over motions to quash subpoenas (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) which would do violence both to plain meaning of statute and to necessary separation of powers within disciplinary system. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [8]

Judges are required under canon 2B of the California Code of Judicial Conduct not to testify voluntarily as character witnesses, but where subpoenas were issued to compel judges to testify, their declarations regarding good character of disciplinary respondent could be considered by State Bar Court. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

Where a municipal court judge and a state appellate justice were subpoenaed as witnesses, it was proper for them to testify in a reinstatement proceeding. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [10]

Where examiner's conduct in connection with obtaining depositions of State Bar's non-party witnesses, while not in bad faith, clearly fell short of her duty under the circumstances, review department upheld hearing judge's order permitting such witnesses to testify only if first deposed, and modified such order to require examiner to subpoena the witnesses and to pay transportation costs as a condition of permitting witnesses' testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [13]

Where respondent was not a California resident, and thus not subject to subpoena, respondent's attendance as a witness at the disciplinary hearing could have been required by notice to respondent's counsel. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [28]

Evidence Code section 776, providing for calling the opposing party as an adverse witness, does not empower the State Bar to require the respondent's presence at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [29]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has an obligation to be present at the hearing even if not subpoenaed or noticed to appear as a witness. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [30]

115 Continuances (rule 5.49)

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

Under California civil evidence rules, which apply generally in State Bar proceedings, a hearing judge has discretion to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will necessitate undue consumption of time or create substantial danger of undue prejudice. Undue consumption of time alone is not in itself grounds for exclusion. Nor is unfair surprise, where the fairness if the trial may otherwise be ensured, if necessary by a continuance. Where evidence is cumulative or remote, however, there is discretion to exclude it. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [10]

Hearing judge's denial of respondent's request for continuance to research probate practices in respondent's county was not error, where respondent had had ample time prior to trial to prepare his defense, and evidence sought would have had very little probative value as custom and practice in respondent's county would not explain or excuse respondent's prolonged delay in closing estate at issue. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [8]

The length of pendency of matters before the State Bar Court is a matter of great concern and continuances have long been disfavored by the court. A judge's denial of a motion for a continuance to prepare for the mitigation portion of a hearing was not an abuse of discretion where respondent had notice one month before trial of how the evidence would be presented, and respondent failed to take any steps to contact potential character witnesses. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [2]

116 Requirement of Expedited Proceeding

Procedures for ruling on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 630-641) are expedited to avoid procedural delays that might effectively create a far longer period of actual suspension than that originally ordered by the Supreme Court. Proceedings on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions are summary in nature, not full-fledged reinstatement proceedings in which disbarred attorneys seek to be reinstated to the practice of law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [3]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

Excessive delay in conducting disciplinary proceedings, not attributable to respondent and resulting in prejudice to respondent, should be taken into account in mitigation, especially in probation revocation proceedings which are required to be expedited. Where, due to delay in proceedings, actual suspension in probation matter would not commence until after start of actual suspension in separate matter which was supposed to be served concurrently with prior suspensions, review department modified recommended discipline in probation matter to provide for actual suspension to be served concurrently with previously ordered actual suspension to extent it was still in effect. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [16]

Under applicable expedited hearing procedures, a respondent may apply for a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) up to 150 days before the respondent's actual suspension is set to expire. (Rules 810-826, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [15]

Where lapse of time between sessions of hearing in disciplinary matter resulted from respondent's own actions, and respondent never complained about delay, respondent waived right to speedy determination of charges underlying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [1]

117 Dismissal (rules 5.122-5.124)

Rule 5.124 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides specific and limited grounds for dismissal. Where respondent's pretrial motion to dismiss did not argue that notice of disciplinary charges failed to state a legally disciplinable offense or to give sufficient notice of the charges, but rather sought dismissal on merits, relying on declarations and supporting documents, motion was equivalent to summary judgment motion, which is not provided for under rule 5.124. Hearing judge erred in granting motion to dismiss based on pretrial factual findings, thereby deriving State Bar of its right to present evidence of respondent's culpability at trial. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [1 a,b]

The review department concluded that the hearing judge erred as a matter of law in denying the motion to set aside the dismissal for lack of jurisdiction and found that the procedural requirement of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) did not divest the court of jurisdiction to extend the time for, or to grant relief from, payment of costs. Relying on well–settled rules of statutory construction, the review department construed the rule to be directory rather than mandatory or jurisdictional and thus found that the court retained jurisdiction to determine whether petitioner's failure to provide proof of payment of costs prior to filing the reinstatement petition should have resulted in a dismissal under the facts and circumstances of the case. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [1a, b]

In construing statutes, a practical construction is preferred. A construction of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) which permits the State Bar Court to retain jurisdiction is manifestly more practical than one which cuts off the court's jurisdiction regardless of the time and resources the parties have already expended in the court proceedings. Where a reinstatement proceeding had been pending for almost a year at the time a motion to dismiss was filed, the State Bar's investigation period and the discovery period for both parties had expired, and the trial was set to commence in approximately one month, dismissal was a severe remedy for noncompliance with payment of costs, and denial of a motion to set aside the dismissal was draconian. If a petitioner fails to pay the disciplinary costs prior to filing his reinstatement petition, the hearing judge has discretion to dismiss the reinstatement proceeding rather than to undertake a lengthy trial. But the hearing judge may also consider the failure to timely pay costs as a negative factor in petitioner's showing of rehabilitation or condition a petitioner's return to active status on the payment of some or all of the costs. Finally, if a disbarred or resigned attorney has failed to pay costs, the State Bar may enforce an order imposing costs as a money judgment. Construing Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) as directory will continue to promote timely payment of costs, while not mandating unreasonable consequences in pending proceedings. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [5a b, c]

Rule 15.2 of the Rules Governing the State Bar Program for Certifying Legal Specialists provides that a denial, suspension, or revocation of certification or re-certification by the Board of Legal Specialization based on a final disciplinary action by the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court, or any body authorized to impose professional discipline, shall be final and shall not be subject to further review. The legislative history of rule 15.2 made it abundantly clear that the State Bar proposed the adoption of this rule to the Supreme Court with the specific intent of divesting previously disciplined applicants of their right of appeal to the State Bar Court. Thus, the rule expressly deprived the State Bar Court of jurisdiction to consider applicant's procedural due process challenge. Accordingly, the review department was compelled to agree with the hearing judge, who correctly dismissed the matter for lack of jurisdiction. Although the State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction in this case, the review department construed rule 15.2 to mean that the decision of the Board denying applicant re-certification was subject to review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731.[1]

Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262, which authorizes proceedings to be dismissed in the furtherance of justice, is construed in the State Bar Court in the same manner as its analog Penal Code section 1385 is construed in criminal proceedings. State Bar rule does not permit respondents to make motions. Motions may be made only by the State Bar as the prosecutor or a dismissal may be entered on State Bar Court's own motion after taking required steps. Hearing judge's dismissal of proceeding comported with those required pre-dismissal steps because she issued an order to show cause to the parties, allowed for responses from them, considered all appropriate interests, and stated in detail her reason for dismissal, and since the hearing judge acted promptly after the proceeding was filed and since the dismissal was expressly without prejudice to refiling, review department saw no prejudice to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721.[2 a-c]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in ordering the dismissal of proceeding without prejudice in furtherance of justice on her own motion under Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262 as an appropriate remedy for the deprivation of the opportunities (1) for respondent to meet and attempt to resolve the matter with the State Bar prosecuting attorney 20 days before any disciplinary charges were filed and (2) for respondent to request an early neutral evaluation conference with a State Bar Court judge before disciplinary charges were filed because the deprivation of the opportunities occurred when, as a consequence of respondent's prior incorrect change of address submission to the State Bar, respondent did not receive State Bar's letter notice of intent to file notice of disciplinary charges informing him of these pre-filing opportunities. Once the hearing judge contemplated dismissal under rule 262 and once the uncontroverted evidence emerged as to how respondent's change of address was mistakenly composed on the change of address form and mistakenly approved by respondent (essentially a typographical error), the hearing judge was justified in considering the mistake to come within the ambit of rule 262 and did not abuse her discretion in ordering dismissal. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721.[3 a-e]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

In reviewing a motion to dismiss a disciplinary charge based on a contention that the notice of disciplinary charges is defective due to its failure to state a disciplinable offense, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true and disregards all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice of disciplinary charges except for judicially noticeable facts, since the purpose of the motion is to test the sufficiency of the notice of disciplinary charges and not to contest the charges. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged (1) that respondent, as general partner of a California limited partnership having a fiduciary duty to the limited partners, made preliminary distributions of partnership profits but failed to disburse any funds to one limited partner due to that limited partner's refusal to sign a release of liability and (2) that despite the limited partner's repeated request for the funds, respondent never released the funds and subsequently informed the limited partner that he no longer had the funds, the notice of disciplinary charges was sufficient to state a disciplinary offense, i.e., that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching his fiduciary duty to the limited partner and misappropriating funds to which the limited partner was entitled.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [3a-c]

Because respondent's motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges based on insufficient notice of one of the charges was filed later than the date his response to the notice of disciplinary charges was due, in violation of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 262(c)(2), respondent's assertion was waived as a basis for dismissal.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [4]

In reviewing a pretrial motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges on the ground that it was barred by the applicable period of limitations, we treat the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged that respondent, a general partner of a California limited partnership, informed a limited partner within five years before the notice of disciplinary charges was filed that the limited partner's share of funds from a partnership distribution was gone, the charge that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching a fiduciary duty and misappropriating funds was timely filed under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 51.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [5a,b]

The review department found no merit to respondent's argument that the culpability findings must be reversed based on his claim of conflict of interest. Respondent failed to demonstrate how the investigation and prosecution of his former counsel demonstrated any conflict of interest or unfairness toward him. At trial, respondent was represented by other counsel who advanced his interests vigorously. Moreover, respondent failed to support his claim by any citation of legal authority. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [1]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[1]

In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754.

A hearing judge's determination to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with prejudice over the State Bar's objection that the dismissals should be without prejudice is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [1]

Even though equitable estoppel does not control a hearing judge's determination whether to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with or without prejudice, the considerations in making such a determination are not dissimilar. Thus, in determining that the dismissals should be with prejudice in the present case, the hearing judge properly considered the positions of the parties and its effect on each side. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [2]

The fact that respondent may be placed in "indefinite limbo" if specified charges are dismissed in the furtherance of justice without prejudice is not sufficient cause to require that the charges be dismissed with prejudice. His remedy in any subsequent proceeding would be a due process argument for relief caused by unreasonable delay based upon a sufficient showing of specific prejudice resulting therefrom. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [3]

Generally, it is in the public interest to dispose of disciplinary charges on the merits. However, the public interest and the interests of justice would not be served by permitting the State Bar to maintain specified charges for possible later prosecution by dismissing the charges without prejudice when respondent relied on the charges to his detriment in preparation for and during trial and in doing so exposed his defense case. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [4]

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

An agreement in lieu of discipline is an agreement between the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the respondent to substitute terms and conditions in place of the disciplinary process, at least provisionally. Hearing judges have authority to dismiss or not dismiss disciplinary proceedings in light of such agreements, and may include conditions in dismissal order which are not contained in agreement if they are accepted by both parties, but judges do not have authority to modify such agreements without parties' consent or to append binding conditions or duties not agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [2]

119 Other Pretrial Matters

Note: Other pretrial matters include all motions made prior to trial (rule 5.45); stipulations (rules 5.53-5.58); and pretrial statements and conferences (rule 5.101).

Where respondent and State Bar stipulated to facts, legal conclusions on culpability, and discipline, but Supreme Court remanded matter for reconsideration of discipline in light of Standards, parties remained bound by stipulation with regard to facts and culpability. State Bar Court permitted parties to present additional evidence on aggravation and mitigation, and reconsidered degree of discipline. However, State Bar was bound by original stipulation that respondent's misconduct was not serious. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.320. [1a-d]

When significant procedural opportunities are denied a litigant by steps taken during investigation before the filing of disciplinary charges, which place a litigant at a substantive disadvantage in the ensuing disciplinary proceeding, it is appropriate for State Bar Court to exercise its jurisdiction to review those steps after the proceeding is filed. The deprivation of the opportunities (1) for respondent to meet with the State Bar prosecuting attorney 20 days before disciplinary charges were filed against respondent, which opportunity the State Bar routinely extends as a matter of policy, and (2) for respondent to request, in accordance with State Bar Rule of Procedure 75, an early neutral evaluation conference with a State Bar Court judge before disciplinary charges were filed are both significant procedural opportunities that the State Bar Court may review upon the filing of the formal notice of disciplinary charges. Accordingly, the State Bar Court had the authority to assess whether respondent was deprived of these pre-filing opportunities and, if so, to fashion an appropriate remedy. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [1 a-f]

In absence of specific statute or rule of procedure directing a specified mode of proceeding, it is not unreasonable or arbitrary for a hearing judge to utilize analogous civil procedures to resolve motions. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [4]

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Where the reason for each charged violation was specified by the State Bar in its pretrial statement and where respondent was not prejudiced at trial, the inadequate specification of the reasons for the charges in the notice to show cause was not grounds for reversal. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3]

Respondent's use of obstructive tactics during his disciplinary proceeding, including abuse of discovery and frivolous motions, constituted a serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [13]

Pursuant to case law, selective prosecution claims should be raised by motion prior to trial, and as a practical matter, such claims have little chance of success if not raised initially by pretrial motion, due to difficulty of proving them without aid of discovery. However, it is not clear that such claims cannot be raised as part of respondent's defense case at trial; accordingly, review department considered such claim despite respondent's failure to raise it by pretrial motion. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [11]

Respondent's failure to comply with proper pretrial procedures and to provide list of witnesses prior to day of trial was properly considered as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [7]

When a disciplinary proceeding is pending in State Bar Court, the respondent may be able to argue that evidence sought to be used by the State Bar which was obtained by improper means should be excluded. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [9]

Where parties to a disciplinary proceeding reached a stipulation but agreed to preserve right to seek review as to one contested culpability issue, review department construed order approving stipulation and hearing judge's partial decision as together constituting a decision for the purpose of review. However, review department was obligated to review entire record independently and had authority to make findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation at variance with those of hearing department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Agreement between parties could not restrict review department's obligation of independent review. Accordingly, review department declined to limit its review to contested culpability decision, and was not bound by stipulated discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [1]

When judges are asked to approve stipulations, they cannot rely solely on State Bar's acquiescence in proposed discipline, but must exercise their independent judgment in carrying out their obligation to examine stipulation, admitted facts, and proposed discipline for fairness to parties and for extent to which public will be adequately protected thereby. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 407(a).) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [9]

Where parties agreed to highly unusual stipulation expressly preserving right to seek review, but did not contemplate that review department would recommend discipline more severe than that set forth in order approving stipulation, parties' expectation that review department would be bound by stipulated discipline was unjustified. However, it was appropriate to relieve parties from stipulation due to their mutual mistake. Accordingly, review department vacated order approving stipulation and remanded proceeding for new stipulation or trial. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [11]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

Negotiations regarding an agreement ordinarily result in a binding contract when all of the essential terms are definitely understood, even if a formal writing is to be executed later and even if there is uncertainty in a minor, nonessential detail. Where all elements of a stipulation settling a disciplinary proceeding were resolved at a settlement conference, and the settlement judge's ensuing order indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the settlement agreement was binding even though no formal written stipulation had yet been signed. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [4]

Where a settlement judge's order following a settlement conference indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the order was binding and an attorney's failure to abide by it, without moving for relief therefrom, constituted a violation of the statutes requiring obedience to court orders and respect for courts and judicial officers. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [5]

No method of enforcement of settlement agreements in disciplinary proceedings is set forth in the Transitional Rules of Procedure, but an express provision governing this subject is not essential to the court's inherent jurisdiction to exercise reasonable control over proceedings before it in order to avoid unnecessary delay. Where one party refused to abide by a settlement agreement, the other party could have made a motion to compel enforcement of the agreement, by analogy with the statutory motion permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 664.6, or could have asserted the agreement as an affirmative defense in the pending proceeding. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [6]

It is well established that an aggrieved party may properly bring to the court's attention the alleged breach of a settlement agreement arrived at before a judge and reflected in an ensuing court order. Rule 1231 of the Provisional Rules of Practice and Evidence Code sections 1152, subdivision (a) and 1154 only preclude evidence of settlement offers and negotiations that do not result in an agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [7]

Pretrial statements are an important tool in conducting an efficient multi-count trial. Unexcused failure to comply with an order requiring a pretrial statement (see rule 1222, Prov. Rules of Practice) should not be treated lightly. However, where counsel failed to make appropriate motions during trial resulting from the other party's failure to file a pretrial statement, no issue was preserved for appeal. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [1]

State Bar's pretrial dismissal of three out of four original counts in notice to show cause did not entitle respondent to any relief, where respondent did not demonstrate how such dismissal caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [6]

Hearing judge's request that respondent discuss mitigation evidence with examiner and try to "work something out," in order to promote stipulations for the introduction of character letters, did not constitute an improper requirement that respondent obtain the State Bar's prior approval to present mitigation evidence. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [9]

The rule permitting a party to exclude rebuttal or impeachment witnesses from a pretrial statement (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1222(g)) has no bearing on the broader issue of discoverable information. Discovery of identities of individuals is not limited to persons who may be called in the opposing party's case in chief. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [7]

Judges in State Bar proceedings have inherent authority to exercise reasonable control over the proceedings in front of them. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [15]

Respondent's highly generalized argument regarding inadequate notice of certain hearings warranted no relief, where respondent had been made aware of duty to keep State Bar informed of current address and given opportunity to correct the official State Bar record thereof, and notices had been served on respondent at another address in addition to the address of record. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

Medical emergency might have excused respondent's failure to attend pre-trial conference, but did not excuse respondent's failure to file pre-trial statement which would have better preserved respondent's posture at trial. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [2]

Where examiner's pre-trial statement listed respondent's prior record of discipline among exhibits to be offered at trial, but did not detail or characterize such prior record in any way, and copy of prior record was not considered by hearing judge until after determination of culpability, and respondent demonstrated no prejudice from reference in pre-trial statement and had failed to raise issue before hearing judge, respondent was not entitled to any relief based on asserted violation of rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

In order to establish a denial of a fair trial because of delay between the making of a complaint to the State Bar and the filing of a formal notice to show cause, an attorney must show specific instances of actual prejudice from the delay. Where information in support of respondent's claim of prejudice was available and known to respondent at the time of respondent's motion to dismiss before the hearing judge, but was not set forth in support of the motion, respondent could not improve on review the record he had the opportunity to make in the hearing department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [2]

The failure of the hearing judge to rule on respondent's motion to dismiss until after the hearing did not result from bias, but from respondent's filing of the motion less than a week prior to the hearing. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [7]

Respondent's fundamental objections to disciplinary proceeding, based on lack of personal service, expiration of the statute of limitations, lack of jurisdiction, and failure of the notice to show cause to state grounds for discipline, should have been presented to the State Bar Court at the trial level by motion. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [15]

Time to file answer to notice to show cause is extended twenty days by service of notice of application to enter default, and is extended an additional five days when the application is served by mail. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent who filed motion for relief from default had previously submitted proposed answer to notice to show cause to State Bar Court and served it on examiner, and declaration accompanying motion to set aside default verified essential allegations of proposed answer, this constituted substantial compliance with rule requiring motion to set aside default to be accompanied by verified proposed answer. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

Stipulations by both parties in the interests of justice on a wide variety of issues, including the entire proposed disposition of disciplinary matters, are encouraged and are provided for in State Bar procedural rules. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 401, 405-408.) In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [3]

120 Conduct of Trial (5.102, 5.110)

Where respondent's therapist chose not to testify, in order to preserve confidential nature of therapeutic relationship, and respondent did not subpoena the therapist and did not identify any other evidence he was prevented from introducing, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that he was prevented from presenting evidence regarding his abstention from alcohol. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [1]

Review Department will not grant relief on the basis of evidentiary errors without a showing of prejudice. Hearing judge properly permitted State Bar to call respondent as first witness, even though respondent had not yet decided whether to testify on his own behalf. State Bar also properly called witnesses without prior disclosure of their statements, where witnesses had made no written or recorded statements, and respondent could not show prejudice because he knew witnesses' identities, and had a summary of their testimony, in advance of trial. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [5]

After the hearing judge gave respondent the express opportunity to present his evidence, respondent's unpersuasive reasons for failing to do so could not be the basis of any claim of error on review. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

Because bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud when attorney incurred credit card debts were made under preponderance of the evidence standard and not clear and convincing standard applicable in disciplinary proceedings, hearing judge correctly (1) declined to apply principles of collateral estoppel to bind attorney with bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud; (2) reweighed evidence from bankruptcy court proceedings under clear and convincing standard after giving attorney fair opportunity to contradict, temper, and explain that evidence; and (3) permitted State Bar to present additional evidence regarding attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [3]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Whether hearings to determine witness's right to Fifth Amendment privilege should be held in camera rather than open court is left to trial court's discretion. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[10]

Hearing judge properly had respondent physically removed from courtroom upon respondent's repeated failure to comply with hearing judge's orders and warning with respect to respondent's disruptive conduct. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[15 a-b]

The hearing judge did not err in prohibiting respondent from presenting evidence of his willingness to settle the case by stipulating to the misconduct and a reasonable level of discipline and of the State Bar's unwillingness to present a settlement offer that contained what he considered to be a reasonable level of discipline. Respondent is afforded substantial mitigation for cooperation because, in addition to other instances of cooperation throughout the investigation of the matter, he stipulated to the facts underlying the misconduct and because the stipulated facts were not easily provable. Substantial mitigation is given without regard to the fact that the parties were unable to stipulate to an appropriate level of discipline. Not doing so would "punish" respondent merely for seeking his day in court as to the level of discipline. Not being able to reach a stipulated discipline does not have any effect on the court's analysis of the degree of mitigation awarded for respondent's overall cooperation in helping resolve the charged misconduct. In the Matter of Silver (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 902.[1]

The hearing judge's appropriate role is to decide the issues on the evidence presented. If that process leads the hearing judge to conclude that the party bearing the burden of proof had not prevailed, then the judge's duty is to find against the particular party on that issue or to recommend that only that degree of discipline, if any, which is warranted by the evidence presented. The party failing in its burden runs the very risk that the judge will so act. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a hearing judge is not authorized to require the production of added evidence beyond which the parties have chosen to present. If parties or witnesses testify, the hearing judge is at liberty to ask questions of a type consistent with the judicial function of supervising or regulating the trial. Moreover, allegations against other attorneys can be referred to the State Bar for new investigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.[2]

Absent the court granting a set aside, a partial stipulation to facts remains binding on the parties, and the facts recited in the stipulation are deemed established. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [1]

Without, at least, a factual stipulation establishing aggravation and mitigation, neither the review department nor the Supreme Court have a complete record upon which to evaluate the appropriate discipline for the misconduct that occurred. Where the record consisted of the parties' partial stipulation to facts which did not address any aggravating or mitigating circumstances and two character letters proffered by respondent, the review department determined that the sparse record precluded it from fulfilling its duty to independently review the record and remanded the case for a trial de novo at which an adequate record was made. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [2]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

A party may not recall a witness who has been excused from giving further testimony without leave of court, which may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. Hearing judge did not deny due process to respondent by denying respondent's motion to recall State Bar witness who had been excused from giving further testimony. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [6]

Where State Bar witness had not been excused from giving further testimony, hearing judge erred in not permitting respondent to recall such witness for questioning about document respondent did not possess at time witness first testified. However, where such additional testimony was relevant only to refute factual contention later abandoned by State Bar, hearing judge's error did not result in prejudice to respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [7]

Respondent's cooperation with State Bar in agreeing to allow complaining former client to testify by telephone at disciplinary hearing constituted mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [23]

Pursuant to case law, selective prosecution claims should be raised by motion prior to trial, and as a practical matter, such claims have little chance of success if not raised initially by pretrial motion, due to difficulty of proving them without aid of discovery. However, it is not clear that such claims cannot be raised as part of respondent's defense case at trial; accordingly, review department considered such claim despite respondent's failure to raise it by pretrial motion. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [11]

Where hearing judge's oral comments at close of case regarding appropriate discipline deviated from the recommendation made in judge's written decision, but hearing overall was fair and respondent's counsel had opportunity to present argument regarding degree of discipline, hearing judge's written decision controlled, and respondent was not denied due process. Respondent could not, as a matter of law, rely on hearing judge's oral or written discipline recommendation since it was not binding on review department or Supreme Court. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [10]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

Testimony of expert witness who did not know facts of specific case but could only give opinion as to respondents' practices was proper expert testimony. Where hearing judge limited expert's testimony to proper opinion testimony on subjects of his qualifications, fair hearing was ensured. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [9]

An attorney's unauthorized practice of law while on suspension is an appropriate matter to be considered in aggravation. Where, during the trial in a disciplinary matter, the respondent made a court appearance in a client's case while suspended for nonpayment of dues, the deputy trial counsel was not obligated to wait to file another disciplinary action to address the issue. Where respondent's counsel agreed that the deputy trial counsel could introduce evidence regarding respondent's court appearance during a later phase of the hearing, respondent received proper notice of the charge in aggravation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [15]

Pretrial statements are an important tool in conducting an efficient multi-count trial. Unexcused failure to comply with an order requiring a pretrial statement (see rule 1222, Prov. Rules of Practice) should not be treated lightly. However, where counsel failed to make appropriate motions during trial resulting from the other party's failure to file a pretrial statement, no issue was preserved for appeal. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [1]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

The fact that no live witness appeared for the prosecution in a proceeding did not preclude the hearing judge from making a credibility determination based on prior recorded trial testimony which was subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [4]

Although Business and Professions Code section 6026.5(f) permits appeals from decisions of the Board of Legal Specialization to the Board of Governors of the State Bar to be treated as confidential, the Board of Governors, in delegating its authority to hear such appeals to the State Bar Court, did not expressly indicate whether it intended to preserve the confidentiality of such appeals. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 225(a)(1).) Where a legal specialization proceeding was treated as public by the hearing judge, the parties were deemed to have waived any argument that the review department should treat the proceeding as confidential by their failure to raise a timely objection to such treatment. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

Under California civil evidence rules, which apply generally in State Bar proceedings, a hearing judge has discretion to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will necessitate undue consumption of time or create substantial danger of undue prejudice. Undue consumption of time alone is not in itself grounds for exclusion. Nor is unfair surprise, where the fairness if the trial may otherwise be ensured, if necessary by a continuance. Where evidence is cumulative or remote, however, there is discretion to exclude it. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [10]

Where hearing judge determined that proffered evidence of additional uncharged misconduct was of marginal relevance; that it could be fully examined and made the basis of separate discipline, if appropriate, in a separate proceeding, and that its admission would involve a delay to permit respondent time to address the issues it raised, the exclusion of the evidence was not an abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [11]

A showing of specific prejudice is required to invalidate a hearing judge's decision based on procedural errors. Where respondent did not allege and/or demonstrate that he suffered any specific prejudice as a result of numerous alleged procedural errors, he was not entitled to relief. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [3]

Hearing judge's refusal to permit respondent to present evidence that value of one estate asset increased during respondent's delay in completing probate did not entitle respondent to relief, where such increase in value did not justify respondent's misconduct in delaying distribution of other estate assets. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [7]

Hearing judge's request that respondent discuss mitigation evidence with examiner and try to "work something out," in order to promote stipulations for the introduction of character letters, did not constitute an improper requirement that respondent obtain the State Bar's prior approval to present mitigation evidence. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [9]

Transcript of superior court trial regarding probate matter which was subject of disciplinary proceeding was admissible pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6049.2, and hearing judge did not err in admitting entire transcript, even though much of testimony was not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, where transcript was admitted subject to respondent's motion to strike parts that were not material or relevant, and respondent failed to make such motion. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [10]

Judges in State Bar proceedings have inherent authority to exercise reasonable control over the proceedings in front of them. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [15]

Where notice to show cause could have been more clearly phrased with respect to duration of respondent's alleged misconduct, but hearing judge correctly concluded after colloquy at trial that it encompassed misconduct prior to as well as after a certain date, and where hearing judge prohibited introduction of evidence as to respondent's conduct prior to such date only after respondent had had ample time to present such evidence, and where respondent gave no offer of proof or explanation regarding any additional evidence on such issue, respondent's claims of denial of adequate notice of charges and fair opportunity to present evidence were without merit. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [8]

Even if it was error for hearing judge to allow examiner to ask leading questions of complaining witness on direct examination, and to admit testimony as to witness's state of mind when such state of mind was not relevant, such errors were not prejudicial where complaining witness's testimony was clearly insufficient to establish State Bar's case and was not relied on in hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [8]

Where respondent's testimony regarding statements made to respondent by complaining witness was offered to impeach complaining witness on a crucial issue, at a time when complaining witness was still subject to recall for further testimony, such testimony should not have been excluded except in the interests of justice. Exclusion of the testimony might have been justified by the length of the proceedings and respondent's lack of an explanation for failing to cross-examine complaining witness regarding statements at issue. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [9]

State Bar disciplinary proceedings are unique—not criminal, civil or administrative. Nonetheless, the respondent is entitled to a guarantee of a fair hearing, one of the elements of which is the right to offer relevant and competent evidence on a material issue. Denial of such right is almost always reversible error. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [10]

Although not constituting a factor in aggravation, respondent's trial tactics in not revealing exhibits to examiner in advance undermined respondent's credibility with hearing judge, created risk that exhibits would be excluded, and unnecessarily prolonged hearing. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [25]

A hearing judge may question witnesses in order to elicit or clarify testimony and test credibility, but may not, in so doing, become an advocate for one of the parties. Where the judge's treatment of witnesses on both sides was evenhanded and did not overstep the judge's factfinding role, there was no evidence of prejudice or bias. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [4]

A hearing judge's denial of respondent's request to remove and copy exhibits already admitted into evidence, due to concern for the integrity of the record, was not improper, and did not show bias. Moreover, by failing to seek relief before the hearing judge after being denied access to the exhibits by the State Bar Court clerk's office, respondent waived his right to raise the issue before the review department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [5]

A variance between the hearing judge's tentative findings on culpability from the bench, and the judge's detailed written findings of fact and conclusions of law, did not demonstrate bias. The ultimate written decision controlled, and where it was supported by the evidence, the judge's remarks in summing up the evidence were not a basis for reversal. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [6]

A hearing judge's announcement of tentative findings on culpability from the bench may be necessary due to the bifurcated nature of State Bar Court proceedings coupled with the desire to avoid an extra day of hearing. (Rules 1250, 1260, Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [8]

The hearing judge is entitled to exert reasonable control over the conduct of the hearing. Such measures as requiring one counsel to question a witness, requesting respondent not to consult with respondent's attorneys while the judge was speaking to them, and expecting counsel to note objections for the record and then move forward with the case, were reasonable, did not demonstrate bias under the circumstances and did not deprive respondent of the statutory right to legal assistance. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [11]

In State Bar Court proceedings, the court acts as an administrative arm of the Supreme Court, and State Bar Court judges and referees function as "judicial officers." Therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure section 1990, any person present at a State Bar Court hearing may be compelled to take the witness stand by the judge or referee. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [31]

Where respondent refused to take the witness stand when ordered to do so by the referee at the disciplinary hearing, and invoked the protection of the Fifth Amendment through counsel and not in response to specific questions, respondent's actions were improper. If appearing under subpoena, respondent's actions could have been certified for contempt before the Superior Court. If culpability had been found on the underlying misconduct charges, respondent's actions could have been considered evidence in aggravation. However, the referee did not have contempt power and lacked the authority to sanction respondent by striking respondent's answer to the notice to show cause and deeming the allegations admitted by default as a matter of law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [33]

In a disciplinary action, an attorney does not have a privilege not to be called to testify, but may refuse to answer specific questions on the grounds that answering the question may subject the attorney to criminal prosecution. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [13]

Even if the procedure for a motion for judgment at the close of the moving party's case, as set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 631.8, does apply in State Bar proceedings, it was not error for the hearing referee to take respondent's motion under submission and rule on it after respondent had presented the defense case, and the motion was impliedly ruled on when the referee made initial rulings as to culpability. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [20]

The hearing department has wide latitude to receive all admissible evidence, especially since it sits without a jury. Where respondent's ex-spouse's testimony was properly admitted, but because there was little corroboration and due to the marital dissolution the chance of bias was great, the hearing department properly disregarded such testimony, respondent could not successfully claim prejudicial error. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [6]

Respondent's stipulation to the charges at the outset of the hearing constituted cooperation carrying mitigating weight. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [18]

Error in admitting evidence in State Bar proceedings does not invalidate a finding of fact unless the error resulted in the denial of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) In light of deposition witness's hazy memory and respondent's contrary testimony, proper determination weighing the conflicting testimony could not be made without face-to-face assessment, and admission of witness's deposition transcript therefore denied respondent a fair trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [19]

Rule 232 of the California Rules of Court contemplates preparation of a tentative decision after the completion of the trial, not in midstream, as a preliminary stage in the procedure for requesting a statement of decision. Therefore, rule 232 does not support the legitimacy of issuing a tentative decision when only one side has presented evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [3]

Duty of trial judge differs from that of juror with respect to expressing opinions on aspects of case before its submission, and there is nothing wrong with preparing tentative findings after culpability phase of hearing. However, where referee prepared preliminary findings before defense had put on its case, and lengthy delay ensued which referee indicated had affected the fact-finding process, this gave the appearance that a decision had been reached as to the basic facts at issue before respondent testified. When tentative findings were prepared and presented to the parties after only one side had presented evidence, it gave the appearance that the judge did not truly retain an open mind. Thus, certain of referee's findings were improperly reached. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [4]

Although referee indicated that he had not reached a final decision despite preparation of draft findings, he appeared to have placed a greater burden of proof on the respondent than permitted by law. If a trier of fact imposes the wrong burden of proof, that itself can constitute reversible error. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [6]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §§ 451 et seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

125 Post–trial motions (rules 5.112-5.115)

The State Bar's posttrial effort to amend the hearing judge's decision could not be characterized as anything other than a posttrial motion covered by Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 221, since no language in rule 221 limits its applicability to rules 222 through 224 and no language indicates that rules 222 through 224 are intended to be an exclusive roster of posttrial motions. Thus, when the State Bar filed a motion to amend the decision in the hearing department, it had the effect of vacating the request for review filed on the same date in the review department, rendering the request for review void ab initio. Moreover, the State Bar's second request for review was vacated because it was filed prior to the hearing judge's final ruling on the motion to amend, which final ruling was made when the hearing judge realized she had prematurely issued a ruling before respondent filed a timely opposition. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [1 a–c]

Although the State Bar apparently believed that it had perfected its right to appeal due to having filed two requests for review, no timely request for review was filed after service of a final order disposing of a posttrial motion, and therefore the review department was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Due to the sui generis nature of disciplinary proceedings, as well as the differences between statutes and rules regarding notices of appeal applicable in civil matters and those applicable in disciplinary matters, the review department could not apply civil rules and statutes so as to consider the requests for review as prematurely filed or to stay proceedings at the trial level after a request for review had been filed. Although the State Bar asked for relief on the grounds that it never received a copy of the hearing judge's final order and that it was misled when the review department clerk's office did not reject pleadings filed after the requests for review, the evidence established that service of the hearing judge's final order was properly effectuated, and the review department clerk's failure to issue a notice of rejection of pleadings was not a ground for relief under any rule but merely a courtesy function. More importantly, because the review department was divested of jurisdiction, it was powerless to relieve against mistake, inadvertence, accident, or misfortune. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [2 a–g]

Once the hearing judge who tried this case left the State Bar Court, he became ineligible to take any further action in the case. Of necessity, that judge was unavailable to consider respondent's post-trial motions. In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [1]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

Statutory provision granting attorneys the right to recover costs from State Bar provides that attorneys who have been exonerated of all disciplinary charges following a trial are entitled to reimbursement from the State Bar "in an amount determined by the State Bar to be the reasonable expenses, other than fees for attorneys or experts, of preparing for [trial]" without defining "reasonable expenses" (other than expressly excluding fees for attorneys and experts) and without prescribing the method by which State Bar is to determine what they are. Accordingly, State Bar Board of Governors properly exercised its statutory rule making authority and adopted State Bar Rule of Procedure 283 to define what expenses (or costs) are allowable as "reasonable expenses" for which exonerated attorneys may obtain reimbursement under statute and to provide the procedure by which exonerated attorneys are to seek reimbursement from the State Bar for those expenses. In absence of Supreme Court authority to the contrary, the State Bar Court may award exonerated attorneys reimbursement from the State Bar for reasonable expenses only if they are specified as allowable expenses in Rule of Procedure 283. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

Even though plenary review is sought, the issue of whether a hearing judge erred in setting aside a default as to the limited issue of the degree of discipline is reviewed under the limited scope of review customarily used for procedural questions, testing whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831. [1]

The hearing judge erred in using the State Bar's request to add a quarterly reporting probation condition to conclude that limited relief under rule 203(e)(3)(B), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, warranted the setting aside of the default on the issue of discipline. Rule 203(e)(2) allows a judge to vacate a default subject to appropriate conditions. Rule 203(e)(3)(B) allows a judge to vacate a default entered after filing of the decision, for limited purposes. There is nothing in rule 203(e) that eliminates the burden the respondent must sustain under rule 203(c), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. Only after a defaulting respondent has made a sufficient showing for relief under rule 203(c), may a hearing judge set aside a default unconditionally or on appropriate conditions or for a limited purpose under rule 203(e). Since the judge's decision on its face concluded that respondent had not made the required showing under rule 203(c)(2), the judge erred when setting aside respondent's default. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831. [2]

In a motion for relief from default, general allegations of despondency and depression do not meet decisional law standards for relief, even under the more liberal requirements of rule 202(c)(1), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831. [3]

Petitioner failed to establish that the hearing judge abused his discretion in denying petitioner's post-decision motion to reopen the record to present additional evidence because petitioner did not establish that the evidence he sought to proffer was newly discovered or that it could not have been presented at trial with the exercise of reasonable diligence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [6]

Respondent was not entitled to present evidence for the first time on review that a State Bar official had engaged in improper conduct in a separate civil proceeding against respondent, where respondent had the opportunity to make this allegation and present evidence in support of it at the hearing level. Also, respondent failed to show how such evidence had any bearing on either his culpability of the charges against him or the appropriate discipline for his misconduct. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [4]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

The Office of Trial Counsel waived its right to argue on review that certain evidence should not have been admitted when it withdrew its opposition to a post-trial motion before the hearing judge for introduction of the evidence. Accordingly, the review department did not address in detail the Office of Trial Counsel's objections to the evidence. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [5]

Where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed due to State Bar's failure to bring forth clear and convincing evidence to support any of the charges, respondent was entitled by statute to reimbursement for the reasonable expenses of preparation for hearing, but State Bar Court was not authorized to award respondent any amount for attorney fees. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [9]

On a motion to present additional evidence, the moving party did not show good cause where the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted was not summarized and there was no claim that the witnesses or affiants were unavailable to present their evidence at the disciplinary hearing or that their evidence related to events or observations which occurred after the disciplinary hearing. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 562.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [5]

Examiner's belated post-trial motion seeking to introduce evidence of additional acts of misconduct was properly denied, where examiner failed to explain why motion was not made until after trial even though evidence was brought to examiner's attention prior to trial. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [6]

Examiner's post-decision motion for reconsideration and request for receipt of additional evidence of culpability was properly denied, where there was no showing why the proffered additional evidence could not have been presented at the time of the original hearing. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [9]

Attorneys facing charges of professional misconduct must present to the hearing department all evidence favorable to themselves. A failure to do so may justify denial of a motion for rehearing to present additional evidence. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [4]

Under rule 555.1(b), Transitional Rules of Procedure, a respondent has until 75 days after the entry of his default to file, as a matter of right, a motion to set aside the default. This 75-day time period is not jurisdictional; however, after it has run, a much greater showing must be made to justify setting aside the default. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [3]

126 Petition for Disbarment after Default (rules 5.85, 5.86)

Where hearing judge properly granted respondent limited relief from default, to extent of requiring hearing on State Bar's petition for disbarment after default, and respondent sought review of hearing judge's ultimate decision, Review Department declined to dismiss respondent's petition for review, exercising its power to permit respondent to participate in proceeding notwithstanding default. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [1]

Prior to 2011, the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar permitted imposition of a discipline less than disbarment even if the defaulting attorney did not seek relief from default. (See former rule 200 et seq. of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar.) The rules now require that when a member's default has been entered and the member fails to have it set aside or vacated, the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel must file a petition seeking the member's disbarment. (Rule 5.85(A).) In turn, a hearing judge must grant the petition and recommend disbarment provided (1) the member has failed to file a response to the petition for disbarment or (2) the court has denied a motion to set aside or vacate the default. (Rule 5.85(F)(1).) In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [2 a,b]

Where respondent filed opposition to petition for disbarment after default, and sought review of hearing judge's order granting petition, and Review Department remanded to permit hearing judge to exercise discretion regarding what relief was appropriate, hearing judge did not abuse discretion on remand by declining to set aside default except for limited purpose of conducting hearing on culpability, aggravation, and level of discipline, in which respondent was not permitted to participate. Hearing judge also properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted. By allowing his default to be entered, respondent waived right to participate in proceedings, to make evidentiary objections, and to present evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [4 a-c]

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

130 Procedure on Review (rules 5.150-5.160)

Review Department will not grant relief on the basis of evidentiary errors without a showing of prejudice. Hearing judge properly permitted State Bar to call respondent as first witness, even though respondent had not yet decided whether to testify on his own behalf. State Bar also properly called witnesses without prior disclosure of their statements, where witnesses had made no written or recorded statements, and respondent could not show prejudice because he knew witnesses' identities, and had a summary of their testimony, in advance of trial. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [5]

Where hearing judge properly granted respondent limited relief from default, to extent of requiring hearing on State Bar's petition for disbarment after default, and respondent sought review of hearing judge's ultimate decision, Review Department declined to dismiss respondent's petition for review, exercising its power to permit respondent to participate in proceeding notwithstanding default. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [1]

A member in default has various opportunities to seek relief from default. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 5.83(A), (C), (D), and 5.85(E).) Because the effects of a default may deny a disposition of the case on the merits irrespective of the charges or potential mitigation, the review department closely scrutinizes orders denying relief from default and any doubts must be resolved in favor of the member. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [3]

Where State Bar presented no evidence or witnesses to rebut respondent's testimony that her inaccurate report of her MCLE compliance was unintentional, and hearing judge declined to find that respondent acted intentionally, Review Department rejected argument that respondent's conduct intentionally misrepresented her MCLE compliance. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [2]

Where State Bar did not argue at trial that respondent's inaccurate reporting of her MCLE compliance harmed administration of justice because State Bar expended resources to conduct investigation, it waived argument regarding this potential aggravating factor, and Review Department declined to consider it. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [3 a,b]

Where State Bar conceded at trial that respondent's conviction did not involve moral turpitude, but argued on review that conviction did involve moral turpitude, State Bar's unexplained change of position was troubling, because it denied respondent opportunity to develop trial record on the issue. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [2 a,b]

Under rule 9.12 of California Rules of Court, and rule 5.152(C) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department independently reviews record, but considering only specific factual findings raised by parties; factual errors not raised on review are waived by parties. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [1]

Review Department gives great deference to hearing judge's credibility findings. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2 a,b]

Review Department declined to find uncharged misconduct where State Bar had ample opportunity but did not move to amend the notices of disciplinary charges to include new charges; therefore, respondent did not have sufficient notice or opportunity to defend against them. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250. [7]

Where State Bar had notice of respondent's additional alleged acts of misconduct and failed to charge them in initial pleading and to amend charges to conform to proof at trial, respondent was denied fair opportunity to defend against additional charges, and Review Department declined State Bar's late request on review to consider them in aggravation. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221. [12]

Review department would not consider exhibits not admitted into evidence by Hearing Judge, or portions of briefs relying on or referencing those exhibits. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [2]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision not to terminate an attorney from the Alternative Discipline Program, the review department's examination of the issue is limited to deciding whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abused his discretion. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [1]

To determine if an abuse of discretion occurred, the review department is required to conclude that the judge contravened the uncontradicted evidence. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [2]

Where a hearing judge failed to terminate respondent from participating in the Alternative Discipline Program despite uncontroverted and overwhelming evidence demonstrating the respondent's repeated failure to comply with court orders and to cooperate in seven pending investigations involving serious misconduct, the hearing judge abused his discretion. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [3]

The State Bar's posttrial effort to amend the hearing judge's decision could not be characterized as anything other than a posttrial motion covered by Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 221, since no language in rule 221 limits its applicability to rules 222 through 224 and no language indicates that rules 222 through 224 are intended to be an exclusive roster of posttrial motions. Thus, when the State Bar filed a motion to amend the decision in the hearing department, it had the effect of vacating the request for review filed on the same date in the review department, rendering the request for review void ab initio. Moreover, the State Bar's second request for review was vacated because it was filed prior to the hearing judge's final ruling on the motion to amend, which final ruling was made when the hearing judge realized she had prematurely issued a ruling before respondent filed a timely opposition. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [1 a–c]

Although the State Bar apparently believed that it had perfected its right to appeal due to having filed two requests for review, no timely request for review was filed after service of a final order disposing of a posttrial motion, and therefore the review department was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Due to the sui generis nature of disciplinary proceedings, as well as the differences between statutes and rules regarding notices of appeal applicable in civil matters and those applicable in disciplinary matters, the review department could not apply civil rules and statutes so as to consider the requests for review as prematurely filed or to stay proceedings at the trial level after a request for review had been filed. Although the State Bar asked for relief on the grounds that it never received a copy of the hearing judge's final order and that it was misled when the review department clerk's office did not reject pleadings filed after the requests for review, the evidence established that service of the hearing judge's final order was properly effectuated, and the review department clerk's failure to issue a notice of rejection of pleadings was not a ground for relief under any rule but merely a courtesy function. More importantly, because the review department was divested of jurisdiction, it was powerless to relieve against mistake, inadvertence, accident, or misfortune. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [2 a–g]

The scope of interlocutory review is limited to deciding whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abused his or her discretion. Under this standard, review is not undertaken with the intention of substituting the view of the review department for that of the hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting the trial court's resolution of credibility and conflicting substantial evidence, and its choice of possible reasonable inferences. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [1]

A judge has broad discretion to impose discovery sanctions and is subject to reversal only for arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical action. The sanctions the court may impose are such as are suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the objects of the discovery he seeks but the court may not impose sanctions which are designed not to accomplish the objects of the discovery but to impose punishment. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [2]

While the power to impose discovery sanctions is broad, there are two requirements that must be met before the imposition of a sanction: 1) there must be a failure to comply with court–ordered discovery; and 2) the failure must be willful. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [3]

Discovery sanctions should be appropriate to the dereliction and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. A court will generally impose lesser sanctions regarding a discovery request unless the lesser sanctions will not bring about the compliance of the offending party. A court's exercise of discretion should not reward the disobedient party, let alone at the expense of the fundamental reasons supporting the discovery process. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [5 a–c]

The review department declined to consider applicant's argument that the Supreme Court's order in his previous disciplinary matter, filed in 1998, was void on its face because of numerous constitutional infirmities. The review department simply does not have the authority to set aside the Supreme Court's order. Once the record in applicant's previous disciplinary cases was transmitted to the Supreme Court, the review department no longer retained jurisdiction over the matter. Accordingly, the review department declined to consider applicant's collateral attack on his prior discipline.In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731.[1]

After a review department opinion remanding a case to the hearing department for a new trial had become final, respondent could not, on a subsequent review following the new trial, continue to attack the findings and conclusions set forth in that opinion.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[1 a-c]

After the hearing judge gave respondent the express opportunity to present his evidence, respondent's unpersuasive reasons for failing to do so could not be the basis of any claim of error on review.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[2]

When a party supports a statement in its brief with a reference to a finding or conclusion in the hearing judge's decision, party must also provide references to where the evidence supporting the hearing judge's finding or conclusion may be found in the record in order to comply with rules of procedure and rule of practice mandating that statements in briefs be supported with proper references to the record. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 302(a), 303(a); State Bar Ct. Rules of Prac., rule 1320.)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [1]

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

In view of the review department's duty to independently review the record and make findings of fact and conclusions of law, any alleged denial of due process by the hearing judge's failure to clearly identify respondent's misconduct in the hearing judge's decision was remedied by the review department's issuance of an opinion that superseded the hearing judge's decision. Therefore, respondent's due process contention was rendered moot and was not addressed on the merits.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[2]

Where neither the State Bar nor respondent addressed certain culpability issues on review, and further determinations regarding these culpability issues would not affect in any way the discipline recommendation, the review department determined that this was one of the rare instances in which it need not independently determine these culpability issues.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[3 a-c]

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

In reviewing a motion to dismiss a disciplinary charge based on a contention that the notice of disciplinary charges is defective due to its failure to state a disciplinable offense, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true and disregards all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice of disciplinary charges except for judicially noticeable facts, since the purpose of the motion is to test the sufficiency of the notice of disciplinary charges and not to contest the charges. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged (1) that respondent, as general partner of a California limited partnership having a fiduciary duty to the limited partners, made preliminary distributions of partnership profits but failed to disburse any funds to one limited partner due to that limited partner's refusal to sign a release of liability and (2) that despite the limited partner's repeated request for the funds, respondent never released the funds and subsequently informed the limited partner that he no longer had the funds, the notice of disciplinary charges was sufficient to state a disciplinary offense, i.e., that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching his fiduciary duty to the limited partner and misappropriating funds to which the limited partner was entitled.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [3a-c]

In reviewing a pretrial motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges on the ground that it was barred by the applicable period of limitations, we treat the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged that respondent, a general partner of a California limited partnership, informed a limited partner within five years before the notice of disciplinary charges was filed that the limited partner's share of funds from a partnership distribution was gone, the charge that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching a fiduciary duty and misappropriating funds was timely filed under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 51.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [5a,b]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [2]

The hearing judge did not abuse his discretion or make an error of law in denying respondent's motion to modify his probation on the ground that respondent was dilatory in bringing the motion where respondent was aware or should have been aware of both the factual and legal need to modify the probation long before the motion was filed. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [1]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [2]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Where hearing judge did not issue written ruling on his denial of State Bar's motion to dismiss former attorney's petition for reinstatement, review department determined hearing judge's reasoning from written transcript of hearing on motion, which was included in appendix to State Bar's petition for interlocutory review. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[2]

Where statements could have been offered not to prove the truth of the matter stated, but for the purpose of showing that they were made in respondent's presence to disprove respondent's claim of lack of knowledge, the statements were not hearsay. In the absence of an objection and a request, made in accordance with Evidence Code section 355, that the use of the statements be admitted into evidence for the limited purpose, any error in their admission was waived. In any case, the statements were admissible under the adoptive admissions exception to the hearsay rule. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[4]

Even if issue had properly been before review department on summary review, respondent would not have been entitled to any mitigating credit for self reporting to State Bar his misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of clients because respondent had a pre-existing statutory duty to report his criminal conviction. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[1]

Where factual findings were used by the hearing judge to find culpability, it would be improper to again consider those same findings as factors in aggravation. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[7]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.[2]

With respect the considered views of the federal judge who presided over the criminal proceeding, the review department was bound by Supreme Court precedent rejecting consideration of very similar remarks by a sentencing judge expressing an opinion on an issue within the unique province of the Supreme Court and of the State Bar Court acting as the Supreme Court's arm. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.[3]

Without, at least, a factual stipulation establishing aggravation and mitigation, neither the review department nor the Supreme Court have a complete record upon which to evaluate the appropriate discipline for the misconduct that occurred. Where the record consisted of the parties' partial stipulation to facts which did not address any aggravating or mitigating circumstances and two character letters proffered by respondent, the review department determined that the sparse record precluded it from fulfilling its duty to independently review the record and remanded the case for a trial de novo at which an adequate record was made. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884.[2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

The rule requiring the review department to give great weight to the hearing judge's findings of fact that resolve issues pertaining to the credibility of the witnesses, which rule is premised on the hearing judge's ability to see the witnesses' demeanor and conduct during trial, is not applicable when a witness's testimony is present only through a written transcript of the witness's deposition. Thus, in such a case, the review department may independently evaluate the credibility of the witness's deposition testimony without giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [3]

Because none of the hearing judge's material findings of fact were challenged on review, State Bar's contention that the hearing judge's disciplinary recommendation was incomplete in that it did not contain a probation condition requiring respondent to file quarterly probation reports fell explicitly within the purview of the rule of procedure permitting summary review. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [1]

Even though the review department retains its authority to independently review the full record in summary review proceedings, it gives deference to the litigants' identification of the issues and ordinarily limits the scope of review to those issues. The review department followed this practice in the present proceeding except that it modified the costs provision because of recent statutory changes. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [2]

On review of a discovery order on appeal of a hearing judge's decision that fully disposes of an entire proceeding, not only must an abuse of discretion be shown, but also the erroneous ruling must be shown to have been so prejudicial that it constituted a miscarriage of justice. No abuse of discretion was found where respondent presented no competent evidence that the place of the depositions he sought to compel was within the 150-mile range; and no showing of a miscarriage of justice was made where the apparent reason for seeking the depositions was to show that the complaining clients had repudiated their State Bar complaint, a fact not relevant to the disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [3]

A hearing judge's determination to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with prejudice over the State Bar's objection that the dismissals should be without prejudice is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [1]

If an appellee wishes to address issues not raised by the appellant, the party should request its own review. Even though the review department is obligated to conduct de novo review, it seeks to discourage the obviously unfair practice of requesting review in a responsive brief of issues not raised by the appellant. In such a case the appellee has not shared in the cost of record preparation, and it reduces appellant's time to respond to such issues. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [4]

Even though the review department's duty to independently determine the appropriate level of discipline precludes it from giving excess weight to the State Bar's discipline recommendation, the review department gave it some consideration. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [5]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

Whenever an appellee wishes to address issues different from those raised by the appellant, that party should file its own request for review. (Rule 301, Rules of Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [1]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

Where the State Bar raised the question of the amount of respondent's actual suspension in a summary review proceeding, but did so only as a function of respondent's time to make restitution, where prior to oral argument, the review department notified the State Bar (the only party entitled to participate) that it considered the issue of appropriate discipline to be before it and the State Bar agreed, the review department held that the amount of discipline was the larger issue for review. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [1]

Summary review was designed to streamline and reduce the costs of review. Among the matters eligible for summary review are those raising issues concerning the appropriate degree of discipline and those without dispute over the hearing judge's material findings of fact. As these were the issues here, the case was appropriate for summary review. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

Respondent was not entitled to present evidence for the first time on review that a State Bar official had engaged in improper conduct in a separate civil proceeding against respondent, where respondent had the opportunity to make this allegation and present evidence in support of it at the hearing level. Also, respondent failed to show how such evidence had any bearing on either his culpability of the charges against him or the appropriate discipline for his misconduct. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [4]

On de novo review, entire record is before the review department, and it may rely on evidence introduced at any point in the trail, including the disciplinary phase. In the Matter of Respondent V(Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [5]

The State Bar Court must address all charges unless they are dismissed on motion of the prosecutor. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [1]

Delay in prosecution bars a disciplinary proceeding only if the delay caused specific actual prejudice resulting in the denial of a fair trial. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [2]

Review department is very reluctant to consider a legal theory raised by an appellant for the first time on review. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [4]

Where the notice to show cause did not charge respondent with committing acts of moral turpitude on account of a violation of fiduciary duty, but did charge respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court, and the hearing judge and the parties understood that the charged moral turpitude violation was based on the misrepresentation, the review department declined the State Bar's request, made for the first time on review, that it find moral turpitude based on respondent's breach of fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Rehabilitation from alcoholism or drug addiction is a mitigating circumstance only if the substance abuse caused the attorney's misconduct. Where respondent failed to present clear and convincing evidence of a causal nexus between her substance abuse and her misconduct, the review department denied her request for a remand to the hearing department to provide evidence of her continued sobriety, and did not consider her steps toward recovery a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [1]

Augmentation of the record on review is appropriate only if the record is incorrect or incomplete. Where respondent failed to take advantage of the ample opportunity she had at trial to seek to show that her misconduct resulted from her alcoholism, the review department denied her request to augment the record with declarations about her recovery from alcoholism as the record was neither incorrect nor incomplete. However, where respondent challenged the hearing judge's finding that respondent made a deliberate misrepresentation at a pretrial conference, the review department granted the State Bar's request to augment the record with the transcript of the conference as the record was incomplete without the transcript. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(e)(3); former Provisional Rules of Practice of State Bar, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [2]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Review department took judicial notice of stipulation and Court of Appeal opinion in civil cases involving respondent that post-dated hearing department proceedings and concerned matters discussed at hearing. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [1]

Where case was briefed and argued prior to effective date of revised Rules of Procedure and Rules of Practice, review department applied former Transitional Rules of Procedure and Provisional Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [2]

Where respondent sought to place documents, some of which were not before hearing judge, in record on review by including them in appendix to brief, without filing motion with reasons why documents could not have been produced at hearing, and without indicating how documents would correct or complete record, review department declined to take judicial notice of documents. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [3]

Where respondent moved to augment record on review to include documentary evidence regarding respondent's pro bono activities, but respondent did not establish good cause why such evidence could not have been presented to hearing department, review department declined to consider such evidence. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [15]

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

Where hearing judge concluded that certain alleged rule violations were duplicative and inconsequential in considering level of discipline, and State Bar did not take issue with such conclusion, and review department determined that respondent should be disbarred based on other findings, review department did not address allegations found to be duplicative. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [10]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where respondent in probation revocation matter was already precluded from practicing law for other reasons, review department ordered respondent's inactive enrollment effective immediately, without first issuing order to show cause. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [26]

Even where State Bar did not contest on review hearing judge's finding that respondent had not violated Rules of Professional Conduct, review department's obligation was to review record independently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [2]

Where a respondent in a probation revocation matter is already on inactive enrollment at the time the review department concludes that the respondent has violated disciplinary probation, it is appropriate for the review department to order the respondent's immediate inactive enrollment pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6007(d). However, where the respondent in a probation revocation matter is entitled to practice law at the time the review department's opinion finding a probation violation is filed, the review department's practice is to issue an order to show cause with a short response time regarding why the respondent should not be enrolled inactive. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 89. [1]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

Where respondent's default had been entered in hearing department, and motion for relief from default was denied, respondent's sole remedy on review was to seek review of denial of relief from default. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1400(e)(vii).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [2]

State Bar's motion for emergency relief from hearing judge's order regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation was not properly brought before review department under either rule 350 of Transitional Rules of Procedure or rule 1400 of Provisional Rules of Practice. However, motion by State Bar to stay or vacate order issued by hearing judge based on argument that hearing judge acted without jurisdiction was properly brought under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [1]

In order to promote membership understanding of lawyers' professional obligations and to enhance public awareness of review department dispositions, review department initially followed policy of publishing its opinions in all public matters in which oral argument was held. After reaching point at which automatic publication of all such matters no longer appeared necessary, review department began to publish its opinions in public matters generally in accordance with standards governing other intermediate appellate courts in California. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 976(b).) In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [1]

Petitions to augment the record on review are generally granted only if it is demonstrated that the record below is incomplete or incorrect. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) The general rule is not to entertain evidence not heard by the hearing judge unless it is the only means of presenting limited evidence of subsequent rehabilitation. It is also unusual for petitions to augment to be granted if contested. Where respondent requested to augment the record with documents relating to one of his complaining clients, and with two newspaper articles, respondent did not show good cause for the review department to consider such evidence over the State Bar's objection. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [9]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation or for purposes such as impeaching witness credibility. However, where hearing judge's findings on uncharged misconduct were too tentative to warrant consideration for enhanced discipline, review department did not adopt them as findings or conclusions, although it declined to strike them from the decision. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

Even though primary focus of respondent's arguments on review was degree of discipline, review department's review of the record was independent and therefore, review department was required to determine whether hearing judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law were supported by record. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [1]

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

List of representative cases respondent had handled, including pro bono matters, which was attached to respondent's brief on review, and expanded from similar list introduced at trial, was of minimal value in terms of mitigation, especially without explanation. Review department therefore declined to augment record to include list and did not consider it. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [11]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

Where respondent's brief on review referred to facts and newspaper articles regarding victim of respondent's misconduct which were not part of the record, review department declined to strike brief or admonish respondent or his counsel, but emphasized that its review is limited to the evidence properly made a part of the record. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rules 1303-1304.) In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [1]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

Where parties to a disciplinary proceeding reached a stipulation but agreed to preserve right to seek review as to one contested culpability issue, review department construed order approving stipulation and hearing judge's partial decision as together constituting a decision for the purpose of review. However, review department was obligated to review entire record independently and had authority to make findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation at variance with those of hearing department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Agreement between parties could not restrict review department's obligation of independent review. Accordingly, review department declined to limit its review to contested culpability decision, and was not bound by stipulated discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [1]

Where parties jointly requested augmentation of record with exhibits which they had provided to hearing judge for consideration in rendering decision and had intended to make part of record, and which hearing judge had relied on in reaching decision, and which were vital to review, record would have been incomplete without exhibits, and request to augment was granted. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [2]

Where parties agreed to highly unusual stipulation expressly preserving right to seek review, but did not contemplate that review department would recommend discipline more severe than that set forth in order approving stipulation, parties' expectation that review department would be bound by stipulated discipline was unjustified. However, it was appropriate to relieve parties from stipulation due to their mutual mistake. Accordingly, review department vacated order approving stipulation and remanded proceeding for new stipulation or trial. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [11]

Review department's general practice is not to publish opinions in matters where oral argument has not been heard. However, where the only party which had appeared in a proceeding requested publication of an order issued without oral argument, and the order dealt with a situation which had not been addressed in review department's prior published opinions, the request for publication was granted. The effective date of the order was not affected by its modification due to the request for publication. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [1]

Even though a disciplinary proceeding is a public matter, the respondent's name is not publicized in the review department's opinion when the disposition at the hearing level was dismissal and the review department cannot determine what the ultimate disposition of the proceeding will be. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [1]

Where, due to the dismissal of all charges, a disciplinary hearing had included a culpability phase but not a sanction phase, and where the review department found respondent culpable of misconduct, it would be inappropriate for the review department to recommend or impose any sanction even if the State Bar wished to waive its opportunity to introduce evidence regarding aggravation, because respondent wanted and was entitled to the opportunity to offer evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [14]

Where respondent had been given notice that if his disciplinary probation were revoked he could be placed on inactive enrollment, and where the Office of Trials expressed grave concerns as to the threat posed by respondent to clients and the public, the Office of Trials could have sought to have respondent placed on inactive enrollment at the time the hearing judge revoked probation. Where it did not do so, respondent was allowed to continue to practice pending review of the hearing judge's order. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [18]

Because the review department must review the record independently and is not bound by the hearing judge's findings or recommendation (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a)), the issue of appropriate discipline in a matter involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court and other misconduct did not turn on the one narrow issue argued on review by the parties regarding the appropriateness of a retroactive suspension. The review department therefore considered whether any form of suspension was adequate discipline given Supreme Court precedent generally ordering disbarment for rule 955 violations. Although the State Bar's declination to recommend disbarment was accorded considerable weight, it could not be reconciled with the precedent making disbarment the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1]

Where review department recommended respondent's disbarment, issue of whether respondent should be given credit toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), on account of time spent on continuous suspension prior to disbarment, was properly reserved for consideration by a hearing judge on an appropriate petition following the disbarment. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7]

Where, as a result of a hearing judge's dismissal of a disciplinary proceeding, the hearing judge did not make findings regarding aggravation/mitigation and concluded there was no need to rule on the admissibility of certain exhibits, thus foreclosing respondent's opportunity to substitute other evidence if the exhibits were not admitted, the review department concluded, when the dismissal was overturned, that it was appropriate to remand the matter to the hearing judge for further proceedings on the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [13]

Respondents in public proceedings should anticipate that their names will be published in any opinion except those resulting in dismissal or private reproval or, in the case of remanded proceedings, those which may potentially result in dismissal or private reproval. Accordingly, where respondent was on notice that petition for review of order denying relief from costs would probably be referred to review department in bank, and where respondent had already been required to notify clients, courts and opposing counsel of his suspension, review department declined to omit respondent's name from published opinion in relief from costs matter. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [1]

Where a party did not seek review of that portion of an order on a motion for relief from costs with which it disagreed, but stated its disagreement in its brief on review without seeking affirmative relief, that party's challenge to the order was not properly before the review department in a proceeding resulting from the opposing party's petition for review of a different portion of the same order. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [2]

Although Business and Professions Code section 6026.5(f) permits appeals from decisions of the Board of Legal Specialization to the Board of Governors of the State Bar to be treated as confidential, the Board of Governors, in delegating its authority to hear such appeals to the State Bar Court, did not expressly indicate whether it intended to preserve the confidentiality of such appeals. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 225(a)(1).) Where a legal specialization proceeding was treated as public by the hearing judge, the parties were deemed to have waived any argument that the review department should treat the proceeding as confidential by their failure to raise a timely objection to such treatment. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1]

Where the record of a legal specialization proceeding contained no documents explaining the basis for the denial of specialist certification and where responses by the deputy trial counsel to interrogatories clarified the basis for the denial, augmentation of the record with the interrogatory responses was appropriate. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

Due to the requirement that the review department undertake an independent review of the record, the review department cannot be bound by a stipulation by the parties attempting to limit the scope of review. Also, the review department has the authority to adopt findings, conclusions, and a decision or recommendation at variance with those of the hearing judge. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [3]

Because section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies by rule in State Bar Court proceedings, service of a hearing department decision by mail to an address within California extends by five days the 30-day period for filing a request for review. (Rule 450, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar; rule 1111(b), Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [3]

Restitution payments made under pressure of disciplinary proceedings are entitled to little or no weight in mitigation of discipline. However, whether restitution has been completed is important to deciding whether it should be required as a condition of probation, or, if disbarment is recommended, to whether respondent must make restitution as an issue bearing on rehabilitation for reinstatement. Thus, evidence of restitution payments made by respondent's father was relevant and properly admissible, even though not constituting mitigation, and review department granted motion to admit such evidence on review where hearing judge had declined to accept it. However, other evidence offered by respondent on review regarding Client Security Fund claim filed by respondent's client was not admitted by review department where it was not relevant to issues in proceeding. (See rule 570, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [12]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

The required five-year waiting period before a disbarred attorney can apply for reinstatement may be shortened to three years for good cause. By rule, the five-year and three-year periods run from the date of any interim suspension, and Supreme Court precedent has given the same effect to inactive enrollment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) The issue whether the waiting period may run from the start of a suspension other than an interim suspension has not been decided, and did not need to be addressed by the review department in recommending disbarment, but could be raised by respondent before a hearing judge if respondent wished to seek reinstatement at the earliest possible time. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [22]

Normally, no published opinion results from a petition to set aside an interim suspension order based on a criminal conviction. Where final discipline had not been entered and might not be warranted, the review department could not determine whether it was appropriate to publicize respondent's name in connection with opinion and order vacating interim suspension. Opinion therefore did not name respondent, although proceeding remained public. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [1]

Because hearings and records regarding inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(b) are confidential, respondent was not identified in review department's opinion regarding issues raised by such inactive enrollment. However, where such issues arose during a disciplinary proceeding, the record in that proceeding remained public, subject to the hearing judge's discretion to seal specific portions of the record where proper grounds appeared. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [1]

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause informed respondent who was subject to stayed suspension that he could be enrolled inactive upon finding of probation violation and recommendation of actual suspension therefor, it would have been appropriate for hearing judge to order such inactive enrollment with or without request from Office of Trial Counsel, and where hearing judge had not done so, review department made such order. Under statute providing that inactive enrollment for probation violation shall be credited against ensuing actual suspension, review department recommended that respondent's one-year actual suspension commence as of the date of his inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [7]

Where Office of Trials argued that recommended discipline was too low in light of existing findings, and also suggested supplemental findings, and on de novo review, review department agreed that discipline was insufficient in light of findings made by hearing judge, review department did not need to address issue of supplemental findings. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [1]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

The review department will not consider disputed, extrinsic evidence on review. Where respondent's counsel referred at oral argument to respondent's current activity, the review department permitted the parties an opportunity to file a stipulation regarding this subject, but when no stipulation was reached, the review department declined to consider the parties' separate declarations setting forth their individual views of the facts. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [2]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

Because there was no procedure for entering a default in a referral proceeding for alleged wilful violation of rule 955, the respondent was not precluded by lack of participation in the hearing department from filing an opposition brief on review. However, when respondent failed to file such a brief, the review department issued an order precluding respondent from appearing at oral argument. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [1]

It was appropriate for both the hearing judge and the review department to take judicial notice of the status, at the time of their respective decisions, of a separate pending disciplinary matter involving the same respondent. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [5]

The law of the case doctrine does not preclude the current review department from reviewing the former review department's decision de novo. If review is sought in a proceeding which had been previously decided by the former review department, the entire matter is before the review department for independent de novo review, and it may act on an issue regardless of whether the parties have raised it. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Accordingly, review department could reopen a charge dismissed by the former review department. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [1]

Former review department's alleged lack of quorum was moot where all issues in proceeding were before current review department for independent de novo review. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [3]

Where two unrelated matters were consolidated in the hearing department, and a party requested review in order to challenge the result in one of the matters, the entire matter was placed before the review department and reviewed by it even though in the other matter neither party challenged the findings and conclusions of the hearing judge. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [1]

Where reinstatement petitioner's employer offered favorable character testimony at trial, and petitioner requested augmentation of the record to add the employer's declaration executed over 14 months later updating and reiterating such testimony, the review department considered the record incomplete without the declaration and granted petitioner's unopposed request to augment the record with the declaration. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [2]

Normally, discovery objections not raised in a timely fashion will not be considered, and this provision applies in discovery in moral character proceedings even though the Civil Discovery Act has not been made applicable to such proceedings in its entirety. However, where a claim of privilege from discovery had been belatedly presented to the hearing judge without objection and raised an important issue, the review department considered its applicability on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [5]

Generally, when a lower court ruling favors disclosure of materials requested in discovery, in camera inspection cannot be requested for the first time on review. There is an exception for questions of first impression, but this exception did not apply where the authority relied on in requesting the inspection had been decided over 30 years earlier. Where the party requesting in camera inspection did so for the first time on a motion for reconsideration before the review department in bank, and gave no explanation of its failure to request such inspection earlier, the review department declined to conduct an in camera inspection. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [8]

Declaration regarding facts relating to discovery motion was stricken as untimely, where it related to facts which should have been presented to hearing judge, not offered for the first time on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [12]

Where a party sought review by the Presiding Judge of an order granting relief from costs under rule 462(c) of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, and the matter presented an important question of first impression, the Presiding Judge referred the matter to the review department in bank. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [4]

Where examiner failed to introduce appropriate documentary evidence of respondent's prior discipline record, review department notified parties of intent to take judicial notice of specified documents from official State Bar Court records regarding such discipline, and took such notice after neither party objected. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [7]

Where respondent sought no relief from hearing judge on account of respondent's inability to attend pre-trial conference, which respondent contended was excusable due to medical emergency, respondent could not be heard to complain for the first time on review. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

Review by review department is not the same as civil or criminal appeal. Even where neither party addressed issue of culpability on review, review department was not limited by issues raised by parties, and was required to analyze record independently, to determine whether clear and convincing evidence supported hearing judge's findings and conclusions regarding culpability, and to determine appropriate degree of discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

Failure to file an opening brief by the party requesting review may result in dismissal of the request for review or in the requesting party not being permitted to participate at oral argument. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [1]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

Hearing department findings that were based on evidence admitted in discipline phase of trial were considered by review department solely with respect to discipline and not culpability. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [3]

Where respondent failed to brief a contention raised on review, addressing it for the first time at oral argument, the review department was reluctant to consider it. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [9]

In order to establish a denial of a fair trial because of delay between the making of a complaint to the State Bar and the filing of a formal notice to show cause, an attorney must show specific instances of actual prejudice from the delay. Where information in support of respondent's claim of prejudice was available and known to respondent at the time of respondent's motion to dismiss before the hearing judge, but was not set forth in support of the motion, respondent could not improve on review the record he had the opportunity to make in the hearing department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [2]

The respondent's name does not appear in an opinion imposing a private reproval, although the proceeding remains public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.) In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [1]

The review department's inquiry into a matter does not end when it determines that the arguments of the party seeking review are unpersuasive. In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the record. In so doing, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [3]

The rule extending any prescribed period of notice five days for service by mail applies to the State Bar Court's service of its decisions as well as to service of papers between parties. Thus, the time to file a motion for reconsideration of a review department decision was extended due to service of the decision by mail. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 243, 455.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [1]

A respondent who receives a private reproval is entitled to have his or her name omitted from the published review department opinion, although the disciplinary proceeding itself is, and remains, public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.)In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

On review, a respondent cannot challenge culpability of misconduct to which the respondent stipulated at the hearing level. *In the Matter of Robins (*Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [3]

Requests to augment the record at the review department level will be granted only if the original record is incomplete or incorrect. (Rule 1304, Provisional Rules of Practice.) Out-of-court evidence offered at the appellate level is ordinarily hearsay, and impossible to evaluate because of the absence of cross-examination to test the credibility of the declarant. The rule is to rely only on evidence which was presented to the trier of fact. The only general exception is to permit documentary evidence of subsequent rehabilitation when it is the only means to meet the heavy burden of demonstrating recovery from substance abuse or mental disorder. Where proffered additional evidence was derived from the record in another proceeding involving respondent, and was not offered to correct any omission in the record, the review department declined to grant respondent's motion to augment the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [2]

Where there was no evidence in the record that a reinstatement petitioner had taken and passed a professional responsibility examination, and neither the parties nor the hearing judge focused on the issue when evaluating petitioner's request for reinstatement, the matter was remanded to give the petitioner an opportunity to take and pass the examination if he had not already done so, and for findings on the issue. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [7]

Where review department saw no justifiable reason to deviate from hearing judge's recommendation of suspension in felony conviction matter which had resulted in interim suspension, and effect of examiner's request for review had been to extend interim suspension, review department believed it appropriate to attempt to place respondent in same position as if examiner had not requested review, by modifying length of suspension and giving increased credit for interim suspension. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [14]

The review department may appropriately exercise its independent review authority to reach an issue which is otherwise moot as a result of the hearing judge's disposition of the matter below, where the issue comes before the State Bar Court on a regular basis or is an issue of public importance likely to recur. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [3]

Where respondent's counsel withdrew after the hearing, and respondent did not file a brief on review, the Presiding Judge ordered respondent precluded from presenting oral argument on review. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [1]

Where, at the time of the hearing, respondent's prior discipline record consisted only of another hearing department decision, and the examiner moved to augment the record on review with the review department minutes in the prior matter, the motion was construed by the review department as a motion to take judicial notice and was granted. Thereafter, the review department took judicial notice on its own motion of the Supreme Court's order in the prior matter. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [11]

An attorney seeking review of a disciplinary decision must present all points when filing the request for review, as the State Bar Court's rules do not provide for bifurcated review. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 450-455.) A respondent could not file a second brief addressing the merits of the matter after the review department rejected respondent's claims of procedural error. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [3]

Issues raised or addressed by parties on review do not limit scope of issues to be resolved by review department. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

Decisions in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b) are reviewable by the review department pursuant to rules 450-453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [1]

Even though party requesting review did not challenge certain of hearing department's conclusions as to culpability, review department reviewed these determinations as part of its independent de novo review of the record. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [3]

Given the deference to be accorded to the referee's findings on issues of fact and credibility, the party requesting review does not advance his or her cause very effectively by ignoring those findings, especially when no contention is advanced that the findings are not supported by the evidence. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [9]

In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the trial record just as the Supreme Court does upon review of the review department recommendation. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In doing so, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department also has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department; despite a party's initial failure to request review on one count which was addressed in the party's brief, the review department would address the propriety of the findings on that count. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [1]

Although party requesting review raised only one issue regarding a legal conclusion drawn by the hearing judge, review department had duty to conduct independent, de novo review of record. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Review department therefore undertook to determine whether remainder of hearing judge's findings and conclusions were supported by record, and whether recommended discipline was appropriate. In so doing, review department held that hearing judge erred in rejecting culpability on one charge. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [1]

Rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure provides that in all cases brought before it, the review department, like the Supreme Court, must independently review the record. The review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing judge which resolve issues pertaining to testimony, but the review department may make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing judge. The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [2]

Where document was marked as exhibit at hearing and clearly related to central issue in case, and both parties referred to it in briefs on review, review department had it made part of official court file despite offering party's failure to move it into evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [2]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence. The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

Party seeking review is expected to set forth challenged finding, conclusion, or ruling below and point out wherein error lies. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [2]

Issues must be addressed on de novo review despite lack of appropriate briefing. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [3]

In order to reach merits on review of decision recommending discipline following default hearing, review department first had to be satisfied with the propriety of the entry of the respondent's default and the order denying respondent's motion for relief from default. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

General rule is that where record is silent, all intendments and presumptions are indulged to support a lower court order; moreover, inadvertent misuse of terms in an order does not require reversal. Review department therefore presumed that referee considered and denied alternate ground for relief from default which was addressed in moving papers of both parties but not listed in referee's order denying motion. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

Although respondent's default precluded respondent from seeking review and the State Bar examiner did not request review, the review department had a duty to review on an ex parte basis a proceeding heard by a referee of the former volunteer State Bar Court, as part of the transition to the new State Bar Court system. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 109, 452(a).) In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [1]

Review department will not consider misappropriation implied by evidence but not charged in notice to show cause, and not mentioned at trial, in hearing department decision, or in briefs on review. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [1]

Ambiguity in the record, created when hearing referee took judicial notice of respondent's prior record of discipline but failed to admit it into evidence, was removed when review department admitted in evidence the prior record of discipline that was previously offered at trial and judicially noticed. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [6]

The State Bar Court retains jurisdiction over a matter until it transmits the record to the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [1]

The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of issues in a case that can be considered and resolved by the review department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

Although the examiner sought review on the issue of degree of discipline, once the review department had jurisdiction over the proceeding, all issues were subject to its independent review. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) The review department's review of the record is an independent one and not limited by the examiner's position. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [1]

Where a related proceeding was pending in the hearing department, the respondent's argument in favor of a remand by the review department carried more weight, because the pendency of the related proceeding created an opportunity for a fuller record to be prepared in the remanded matter without undue delay. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [5]

Examiner's brief violated rule 1306 of the Provisional Rules of Practice of the State Bar Court by failing to include topical index and authorities table, but review department declined to strike it due to recent adoption of rule and lack of asserted prejudice to opposing party. Review department noted that rule 1312 of the Provisional Rules of Practice of the State Bar Court provides for clerk's office to return, unfiled, papers not conforming to rules, absent application to and order from Presiding Judge. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [7]

The State Bar Office of Trial Counsel was bound by the ruling of the Supreme Court in a matter in which its counsel, the State Bar Office of General Counsel, did not request a rehearing before the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [3]

Government Code section 68081 does not apply to the review department of the State Bar Court, which has a different standard of review than that of a court of appeal. However, opportunities are afforded to the parties under State Bar Court procedure which parallel those provided by Government Code section 68081. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [6]

Proceedings before the review department are governed by rule 453 of the [Transitional] Rules of Procedure, which provides that the review department shall independently review the record and may adopt findings, conclusions and a decision or recommendation at variance with the hearing department and may take action as to an issue whether or not that issue was raised in the request for review or briefs of any party. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [7]

While the review department is not required to afford the parties an opportunity to brief additional issues raised by it on review, it is the preference of the review department to have issues thoroughly briefed, and rule 1311(a) of the [Provisional] Rules of Practice expressly allows for deferral of submission of cases after oral argument to permit supplementary briefs when considered appropriate. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [8]

Where the review department addresses an issue in its opinion which was not previously addressed by the parties in their briefs or at oral argument, rule 455 of the [Transitional] Rules of Procedure permits a motion for reconsideration affording the parties an opportunity to brief such issues. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [9]

131 Procedural Issues re Admonitions (rule 5.126)

Since an admonition does not constitute either an exoneration or the imposition of discipline, neither respondent nor State Bar is entitled to an award of costs. In The Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [7]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

Admonitions are not discipline and may be reopened and proceed anew as a formal disciplinary proceeding if a formal proceeding is brought with two years based on other misconduct. The rules of procedure define the start of a formal proceeding as the issuance of a notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 415, 550.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [20]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

132 Agreements in Lieu of Discipline (rule 5.124(H))

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

An agreement in lieu of discipline is an agreement between the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the respondent to substitute terms and conditions in place of the disciplinary process, at least provisionally. Hearing judges have authority to dismiss or not dismiss disciplinary proceedings in light of such agreements, and may include conditions in dismissal order which are not contained in agreement if they are accepted by both parties, but judges do not have authority to modify such agreements without parties' consent or to append binding conditions or duties not agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [2]

133 Award of Costs to Exonerated Respondent (rule 5.131)

In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198

135 Application of former Transitional Rules of Procedure (pre-1995)

Trial judge did not prejudicially err in exercising discretion to excuse witness where respondent failed to either request that the witness be recalled or to make an offer of proof as to the testimony respondent expected to elicit from the witness. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [1]

Where respondent neither identified an exhibit for the record nor made an offer of proof demonstrating what the exhibit would have established, respondent failed to perfect his right to claim on appeal the that hearing judge improperly excluded the exhibit from evidence. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [2]

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

Neither due process nor former Transitional Rules of Procedure, rules 508 and 509 required State Bar to give respondent exhaustive list of each complaint against her before filing notice of disciplinary charges. Former rules 508 and 509 merely gave respondent right to deny or explain her actions to State Bar and inquire of State Bar concerning the charges against her. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [7 a-h]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [1]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [2]

The current procedures squarely place on the State Bar the responsibility of monitoring, investigating, and initiating proceedings alleging probation violations. Imposing a hearing judge supervised probation condition presented a number of problems under this structure. The review department declined to recommend such a condition, especially where, as here, there was no showing that the procedures in place for probation proceedings were not adequate to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [3]

The complaining clients' settlement of their civil matter against respondent and the clients' release of all claims against him does not preclude the State Bar from proceeding with the disciplinary matter. A disciplinary proceeding is not a controversy between two individuals, the complainant and the accused attorney, but is an adverse proceeding against the accused attorney and may be instituted and prosecuted upon the complaint of any person knowing the facts upon which the proceeding is based. The complaining person or client is not a party to the disciplinary proceeding, and need not appear and testify at trial. Thus, the disciplinary case was not a right, claim, or cause of action that accrued to the complaining clients; and therefore it was not a claim that they could release or otherwise compromise. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [1]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Where case was briefed and argued prior to effective date of revised Rules of Procedure and Rules of Practice, review department applied former Transitional Rules of Procedure and Provisional Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [2]

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

Before the State Bar files charges, it has a duty to determine whether reasonable cause exists to charge statutory or rule violations. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [2]

The State Bar Court may take judicial notice of the records of any California court. (See Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1); Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Such notice may include the facts stated in court orders, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgments. Although civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, they must be assessed independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

An attorney's wilful failure to cite controlling authority squarely contradicting the attorney's position could be held to violate statute and rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges. However, attorneys as advocates are under no duty to reveal decisions which do not constitute controlling precedent. In State Bar Court, only decisions of review department, subject to relevant Supreme Court case law, are considered controlling precedent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [15]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Notice to show cause under rule 550 of Transitional Rules of Procedure of State Bar is not required in conviction referral proceeding. Pursuant to Supreme Court's delegation of authority to State Bar Court in conviction referral matters (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(a)), only State Bar Court referral order and notice of time and place of hearing are needed to initiate a conviction referral proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [2]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

State Bar's motion for emergency relief from hearing judge's order regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation was not properly brought before review department under either rule 350 of Transitional Rules of Procedure or rule 1400 of Provisional Rules of Practice. However, motion by State Bar to stay or vacate order issued by hearing judge based on argument that hearing judge acted without jurisdiction was properly brought under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [1]

Respondent's attempts to have clients withdraw pending State Bar complaints as part of settlements of actions which were not for malpractice did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from conditioning malpractice settlements on agreement by client not to file State Bar complaint. The State Bar may proceed with a disciplinary matter whether or not the complainant is willing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [12]

Respondent's letters to client demanding release from all liability, including for malpractice, in exchange for settling outstanding business disputes between them, violated rule prohibiting attorneys from attempting to exonerate themselves from liability for malpractice except in settlement of a malpractice claim. However, respondent's attempt to persuade client to withdraw State Bar complaint did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from requiring as a condition of malpractice settlement that plaintiff agree to not file a complaint with the State Bar. The plain language of the statute is limited to settlements involving the agreement not to file a disciplinary complaint. The effect of withdrawal of charges is not the same as not filing them. Once the State Bar becomes aware of possible misconduct by the filing of a complaint, it does not need a complaining witness in order to go forward with its investigation. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [11]

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

Where parties to a disciplinary proceeding reached a stipulation but agreed to preserve right to seek review as to one contested culpability issue, review department construed order approving stipulation and hearing judge's partial decision as together constituting a decision for the purpose of review. However, review department was obligated to review entire record independently and had authority to make findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation at variance with those of hearing department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Agreement between parties could not restrict review department's obligation of independent review. Accordingly, review department declined to limit its review to contested culpability decision, and was not bound by stipulated discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [1]

Rules of evidence in civil cases are generally applicable in State Bar proceedings (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556) and include taking judicial notice of records of any federal court of record. Where neither party specifically requested augmentation of record with federal court's opinion on appeal in related matter, but respondent attached copy of such opinion to review brief, review department took judicial notice of such opinion. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [3]

When judges are asked to approve stipulations, they cannot rely solely on State Bar's acquiescence in proposed discipline, but must exercise their independent judgment in carrying out their obligation to examine stipulation, admitted facts, and proposed discipline for fairness to parties and for extent to which public will be adequately protected thereby. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 407(a).) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [9]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

A State Bar disciplinary matter does not deal with civil responsibility where a party might be under a duty to mitigate harm or damages. The State Bar is entitled to investigate whatever information it acquires about misconduct without notifying the attorney involved contemporaneously, and it did not act improperly by failing to notify attorneys promptly when it learned of solicitation of clients by attorneys' agents. State Bar rules require only that attorneys be given an opportunity to explain or deny matters under investigation prior to issuance of notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 509(b).) In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [3]

In State Bar disciplinary proceedings, the formal rules of evidence apply as in civil cases, with the proviso that no error in admitting or excluding evidence invalidates a finding or decision unless the error deprived the party of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Accordingly, hearsay evidence is not admissible unless the opposing party agrees to its admission or otherwise waives any hearsay objections, or the evidence is subject to an exception to the hearsay rule. Where facts needed to establish past recollection recorded exception were shown, hearsay statements in witness's notebooks were properly admitted, and admission of notebooks themselves, even if error, did not prejudice opposing parties. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [8]

On the issue of whether a respondent acted in good faith, the credibility determinations of the hearing judge deserve great weight. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In addition, the State Bar Court must resolve all reasonable doubts about culpability in favor of the accused attorney and must choose the inference leading to innocence if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from the facts. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [6]

Because the review department must review the record independently and is not bound by the hearing judge's findings or recommendation (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a)), the issue of appropriate discipline in a matter involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court and other misconduct did not turn on the one narrow issue argued on review by the parties regarding the appropriateness of a retroactive suspension. The review department therefore considered whether any form of suspension was adequate discipline given Supreme Court precedent generally ordering disbarment for rule 955 violations. Although the State Bar's declination to recommend disbarment was accorded considerable weight, it could not be reconciled with the precedent making disbarment the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1]

Where review department recommended respondent's disbarment, issue of whether respondent should be given credit toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), on account of time spent on continuous suspension prior to disbarment, was properly reserved for consideration by a hearing judge on an appropriate petition following the disbarment. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7]

No method of enforcement of settlement agreements in disciplinary proceedings is set forth in the Transitional Rules of Procedure, but an express provision governing this subject is not essential to the court's inherent jurisdiction to exercise reasonable control over proceedings before it in order to avoid unnecessary delay. Where one party refused to abide by a settlement agreement, the other party could have made a motion to compel enforcement of the agreement, by analogy with the statutory motion permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 664.6, or could have asserted the agreement as an affirmative defense in the pending proceeding. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [6]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

In order to gain readmission to the State Bar, a petitioner must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination and must demonstrate (1) rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission and (2) present ability and learning in the general law. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [1]

Although Business and Professions Code section 6026.5(f) permits appeals from decisions of the Board of Legal Specialization to the Board of Governors of the State Bar to be treated as confidential, the Board of Governors, in delegating its authority to hear such appeals to the State Bar Court, did not expressly indicate whether it intended to preserve the confidentiality of such appeals. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 225(a)(1).) Where a legal specialization proceeding was treated as public by the hearing judge, the parties were deemed to have waived any argument that the review department should treat the proceeding as confidential by their failure to raise a timely objection to such treatment. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1]

Due to the requirement that the review department undertake an independent review of the record, the review department cannot be bound by a stipulation by the parties attempting to limit the scope of review. Also, the review department has the authority to adopt findings, conclusions, and a decision or recommendation at variance with those of the hearing judge. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [3]

Because section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies by rule in State Bar Court proceedings, service of a hearing department decision by mail to an address within California extends by five days the 30-day period for filing a request for review. (Rule 450, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar; rule 1111(b), Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [3]

Restitution payments made under pressure of disciplinary proceedings are entitled to little or no weight in mitigation of discipline. However, whether restitution has been completed is important to deciding whether it should be required as a condition of probation, or, if disbarment is recommended, to whether respondent must make restitution as an issue bearing on rehabilitation for reinstatement. Thus, evidence of restitution payments made by respondent's father was relevant and properly admissible, even though not constituting mitigation, and review department granted motion to admit such evidence on review where hearing judge had declined to accept it. However, other evidence offered by respondent on review regarding Client Security Fund claim filed by respondent's client was not admitted by review department where it was not relevant to issues in proceeding. (See rule 570, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [12]

Admonitions are not discipline and may be reopened and proceed anew as a formal disciplinary proceeding if a formal proceeding is brought with two years based on other misconduct. The rules of procedure define the start of a formal proceeding as the issuance of a notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 415, 550.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [20]

The required five-year waiting period before a disbarred attorney can apply for reinstatement may be shortened to three years for good cause. By rule, the five-year and three-year periods run from the date of any interim suspension, and Supreme Court precedent has given the same effect to inactive enrollment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) The issue whether the waiting period may run from the start of a suspension other than an interim suspension has not been decided, and did not need to be addressed by the review department in recommending disbarment, but could be raised by respondent before a hearing judge if respondent wished to seek reinstatement at the earliest possible time. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [22]

Orders for inactive enrollment under section 6007(b)(1), like those under section 6007(b)(3), are subject to independent review pursuant to rule 450 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [2]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

An attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending rather than being disbarred must still establish rehabilitation through a reinstatement proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [1]

A petitioner for reinstatement must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination and must show present ability and learning in the general law, as well as rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) A claim that the petitioner has held himself or herself out as entitled to practice law pertains to the issue of rehabilitation and moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [3]

Underlying evidence of uncharged misconduct was not made inadmissible by rule prohibiting admission in evidence, except in rebuttal, of records of complaints or charges, where such evidence was offered in aggravation and impeachment in a contested proceeding after respondent testified regarding rehabilitation. (Rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [9]

The law of the case doctrine does not preclude the current review department from reviewing the former review department's decision de novo. If review is sought in a proceeding which had been previously decided by the former review department, the entire matter is before the review department for independent de novo review, and it may act on an issue regardless of whether the parties have raised it. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Accordingly, review department could reopen a charge dismissed by the former review department. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [1]

Initiation of disciplinary proceeding against respondent was not barred under former rule 511 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar by State Bar's decision to monitor appeal in malpractice case against respondent instead of pursuing formal investigation. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [2]

Former review department's admission of certain exhibits into evidence without allowing respondent an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence was error. Nevertheless, no error in admitting or excluding evidence invalidates a finding of fact, decision or determination unless the error resulted in a denial of a fair hearing. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where such exhibits were not relied upon in determining culpability and discipline, respondent failed to show that the admission of the documents deprived him of a fair hearing. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [5]

The fact that a person resigned with disciplinary charges pending instead of suffering disbarment does not affect the necessity for a reinstatement proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [1]

A petitioner for reinstatement must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination, show present ability and learning in the general law, and show rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [4]

A petition for reinstatement may be filed five years after the effective date of interim suspension, disbarment, or resignation. For good cause, reinstatement may be sought three years after disbarment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [9]

Under rule 835 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, various discovery provisions applicable in disciplinary proceedings are also applicable in moral character proceedings. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [2]

Rule XI of the Rules Regulating Admission to Practice Law in California, providing that the files of the Committee of Bar Examiners are confidential, does not have any bearing on the Committee's duty to respond to interrogatories from the applicant in a moral character proceeding, and, when read in conjunction with other applicable rules, only precludes the Office of Trials from disclosing documents voluntarily as opposed to pursuant to appropriate discovery requests or by court order. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [3]

The Civil Discovery Act has not been adopted in its entirety in the conduct of State Bar proceedings. The imposition of monetary costs as discovery sanctions is precluded under rule 321, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. Authorized discovery sanctions include orders precluding a party from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses or from introducing evidence or testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [14]

Under rules 460 and 461 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the costs assessed in discipline matters are derived from a formula established by a committee of the State Bar Board of Governors which reflects average chargeable costs. The level of costs assessed depends on the stage at which a matter is resolved. The use of these cost models is appropriate as a simple and efficient means of assessing costs, but does not prevent a respondent from seeking, or a hearing judge from granting, relief from costs in an appropriate case. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [1]

Under Business and Professions Code section 6086.10(c) and rules 462 and 464 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, an attorney ordered to pay disciplinary costs may be granted full or partial relief from such order, or an extension of time to pay, based on hardship, special circumstances, or other good cause. Good cause for such relief may include consideration of the conduct of counsel for the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [2]

Where a party sought review by the Presiding Judge of an order granting relief from costs under rule 462(c) of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, and the matter presented an important question of first impression, the Presiding Judge referred the matter to the review department in bank. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [4]

Review department did not need to reach respondent's challenges to hearing judge's evidentiary rulings in order to uphold hearing judge's ultimate findings, where all essential elements of charged violation were established by evidence to which respondent did not object, and any evidentiary errors did not result in denial of a fair hearing. Where factual findings based on challenged evidence were not necessary to decision, remand for new hearing was not necessary even if evidentiary errors underlay some non-essential findings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [1]

Nothing in lengthy pendency of probation revocation proceeding delayed or prevented respondent's filing of application for termination of suspension pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [17]

Where respondent in probation revocation matter had been continually suspended from practice of law for preceding four years, review department did not need to order that respondent be placed on inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(d) pending final Supreme Court order. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 612(b).) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [23]

Where examiner's pre-trial statement listed respondent's prior record of discipline among exhibits to be offered at trial, but did not detail or characterize such prior record in any way, and copy of prior record was not considered by hearing judge until after determination of culpability, and respondent demonstrated no prejudice from reference in pre-trial statement and had failed to raise issue before hearing judge, respondent was not entitled to any relief based on asserted violation of rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

Under Supreme Court precedent and the State Bar Rules of Procedure, before entering into a stipulation resolving a disciplinary matter, the State Bar should notify the respondent of any other pending investigations or complaints. However, where respondent had been notified of a second complaint before respondent entered into a stipulation to a public reproval in an earlier, separate matter, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the failure of the earlier stipulation to refer to the pendency of the second complaint. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 406.) In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [2]

On review of a facial challenge to the legal sufficiency of charges in the notice to show cause, the sole issue presented is whether the facts alleged in the notice, if proven, would constitute a disciplinable offense. For the purpose of such review, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice as true, but draws independent conclusions regarding the legal import of those facts. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [1]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

Even where the examiner does not seek review of the dismissal of a count of the notice to show cause, the review department is obligated to conduct a de novo review of the hearing judge's disposition of that count, and may reach a different conclusion based on the record. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [2]

A disciplinary proceeding was not barred under rule 511, Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, even though a letter was sent from the Los Angeles office of the State Bar ostensibly closing the case, where there remained a separate open, active investigative file in the San Francisco office. The closure of the Los Angeles investigation did not serve to extinguish the open investigation by the San Francisco office. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [1]

The respondent's name does not appear in an opinion imposing a private reproval, although the proceeding remains public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.) In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [1]

Factual findings made by a hearing judge and resolving issues concerning testimony deserve great weight, but may be supplemented by the review department's own findings interpreting documentary evidence. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [10]

The review department's inquiry into a matter does not end when it determines that the arguments of the party seeking review are unpersuasive. In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the record. In so doing, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [3]

The rule extending any prescribed period of notice five days for service by mail applies to the State Bar Court's service of its decisions as well as to service of papers between parties. Thus, the time to file a motion for reconsideration of a review department decision was extended due to service of the decision by mail. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 243, 455.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [1]

A respondent who receives a private reproval is entitled to have his or her name omitted from the published review department opinion, although the disciplinary proceeding itself is, and remains, public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

The review department gives great weight to credibility determinations by hearing judges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [3]

On a motion to present additional evidence, the moving party did not show good cause where the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted was not summarized and there was no claim that the witnesses or affiants were unavailable to present their evidence at the disciplinary hearing or that their evidence related to events or observations which occurred after the disciplinary hearing. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 562.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [5]

Where a standard for judicial disqualification in the State Bar's Rules of Procedure was drawn from a similar provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, case law under the statute could be looked to in applying the State Bar rule. (Rule 230, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [10]

Attorney discipline proceedings are sui generis, neither criminal nor civil, and ordinary criminal procedural safeguards do not apply. The proceedings are conducted pursuant to the Rules of Procedure adopted by the State Bar, which contain procedural safeguards that have been held to be adequate to assure procedural due process. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [26]

The rules of evidence in civil cases in courts of record, including applicable sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and judicial decisions as well as the Evidence Code, are followed in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. (Rule 556, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [27]

Passage of a professional responsibility examination is one of the basic requirements for reinstatement. Although a State Bar rule permits the State Bar Court to grant a petitioner up to two years after the reinstatement hearing to pass the examination, the Supreme Court requires proof of passage to precede reinstatement. Thus, the State Bar rule is interpreted to require passage of the examination as a condition precedent to a State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement to the Supreme Court. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [5]

Where the testimony of the State Bar's witnesses was in conflict with that of respondent, and the referee resolved those conflicts against respondent, respondent could not show error in the findings merely by repeating his own version of the facts, and respondent's generalized challenge to the complainant's credibility was not sufficient to persuade the review department to reject the referee's findings. In the absence of a strong showing that the referee was mistaken, the review department is required to defer to the referee's determinations as to credibility, and it is reluctant to deviate from the referee's credibility-based findings in the absence of a specific showing that they were in error. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [1]

In general, State Bar disciplinary proceedings are governed exclusively by the State Bar's rules of procedure, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply unless expressly incorporated by reference. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [21]

A respondent's default results in the admission of the facts alleged in the charging allegations of the notice to show cause, and no further proof is required to establish the truth of those charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 552.1(e), 555(e).) In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

Pursuant to Transitional Rules of Procedure 453(a), review department's independent fact finding authority permits it to delete erroneous finding from hearing department's decision. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [2]

Where hearing referee's decision contained virtually no findings of fact and did not relate the conclusions of law either to the facts or to specific counts of the notice to show cause, review department was compelled to exercise its authority to make its own findings and conclusions based on independent review of the record, as authorized by rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [1]

Under applicable expedited hearing procedures, a respondent may apply for a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) up to 150 days before the respondent's actual suspension is set to expire. (Rules 810-826, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [15]

Probation revocation proceedings are disciplinary proceedings, and no additional discipline can be imposed for a breach of probation absent proof of such violation in conformity with fundamental due process (notice and an opportunity to be heard), as set forth in rules 612-613, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [4]

Although non-final prior discipline recommendation for probation violation, still pending before Supreme Court, is record of prior discipline under rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review department does not apply rigidly, or without regard to facts of prior matters, disciplinary standard indicating disbarment as appropriate sanction for third disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [22]

Given that the examiner's pretrial statement indicated that facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's perjury conviction would be at issue and that the record would include the transcript of a related infraction trial as well as respondent's perjury trial, and given the rule permitting the hearing judge to consider evidence of facts not directly connected with respondent's conviction if such facts are material to the issues stated in the order of reference, respondent had sufficient notice that all relevant facts and circumstances would be considered in the disciplinary proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [3]

Where examiner was concerned to obtain detailed, complete information regarding respondent's anticipated application to resume practice pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), review department recommended that respondent follow same format in application as in an application for reinstatement; otherwise, examiner could seek such information by a discovery request which would be more time consuming. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [14]

An attorney seeking review of a disciplinary decision must present all points when filing the request for review, as the State Bar Court's rules do not provide for bifurcated review. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 450-455.) A respondent could not file a second brief addressing the merits of the matter after the review department rejected respondent's claims of procedural error. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [3]

Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, requires review department, in all cases brought before it, to independently review record. Review department accords great weight to findings of fact by hearing department resolving testimonial issues. However, it may make findings, conclusions and recommendations differing from those of the hearing department. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

Discovery in State Bar proceedings must be completed within 90 days after service of notice to show cause, subject to reasonable extension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 316.) Where examiner noticed and took deposition well after 90-day cutoff, and did not seek extension of discovery period, deposition was clearly discovery, even though examiner's purpose in taking it was to preserve evidence for trial. However, provision of Civil Discovery Act governing time to object to deposition notice on certain grounds did not apply, because respondent's objection was not based on grounds set forth in Civil Discovery Act but on examiner's failure to comply with State Bar rules of procedure. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [17]

Error in admitting evidence in State Bar proceedings does not invalidate a finding of fact unless the error resulted in the denial of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) In light of deposition witness's hazy memory and respondent's contrary testimony, proper determination weighing the conflicting testimony could not be made without face-to-face assessment, and admission of witness's deposition transcript therefore denied respondent a fair trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [19]

Decisions in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b) are reviewable by the review department pursuant to rules 450-453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [1]

The rules governing the proceedings for the transfer of an attorney to inactive status incorporate by reference Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). (Rules 315, 321, 643, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Proceedings to obtain an order for a mental examination under section 6053 must comply with the procedural and substantive requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [7]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

Where attorney represented to State Bar Court that no disciplinary investigations against him were pending, examiner's failure to rebut this contention, as permitted by rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, warranted inference that State Bar did not dispute attorney's representation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [16]

Even though party requesting review did not challenge certain of hearing department's conclusions as to culpability, review department reviewed these determinations as part of its independent de novo review of the record. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [3]

The review department's review of hearing decisions is independent; it may make findings of fact or adopt conclusions at variance with those of the hearing department. Nevertheless, the review department accords great weight to the hearing department's findings resolving issues pertaining to testimony. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [2]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the petitioner bears the burden of establishing rehabilitation, present moral qualifications for readmission and present ability and learning in the general law. (Rule 952(d), Cal. Rules of Court; rule 667, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [4]

To be accurate, petitioner should have stated that the minimum waiting period to apply for reinstatement is five years (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), rather than stating that he had been disbarred for five years. Nonetheless, petitioner's statement as a whole clearly indicated that petitioner was not then licensed to practice law, so misstatement was not serious. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [12]

In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the trial record just as the Supreme Court does upon review of the review department recommendation. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In doing so, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department also has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department; despite a party's initial failure to request review on one count which was addressed in the party's brief, the review department would address the propriety of the findings on that count. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [1]

Although party requesting review raised only one issue regarding a legal conclusion drawn by the hearing judge, review department had duty to conduct independent, de novo review of record. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Review department therefore undertook to determine whether remainder of hearing judge's findings and conclusions were supported by record, and whether recommended discipline was appropriate. In so doing, review department held that hearing judge erred in rejecting culpability on one charge. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [1]

Rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure provides that in all cases brought before it, the review department, like the Supreme Court, must independently review the record. The review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing judge which resolve issues pertaining to testimony, but the review department may make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing judge. The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [2]

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar require that the review department give great weight to the hearing department's findings of fact resolving issues pertaining to testimony. This rule rests on the sound policy that when evidence turns on the assessment of credibility, the evaluation of such evidence should be made by a judicial officer who sees and hears the witnesses and can translate the credibility accorded witnesses into the weight to be given their testimony as it relates to other evidence in the case. Before disregarding any such credibility assessments, the review department must have a very good reason for doing so. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [6]

In a default matter, the well-pleaded allegations in the notice to show cause must be deemed admitted even if the State Bar did not so request. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 552.1(d)(iii).) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [18]

Upon respondent's application for retransfer to active status from involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c), based on delay in processing of disciplinary proceeding on underlying charges, hearing judge must determine to what extent respondent or respondent's counsel was responsible for such delays, and whether circumstances otherwise justified any delays. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 799, 799.7, 799.8.) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [26]

The review department must independently review all matters coming before it, and may adopt findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations at variance to those of hearing department. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [1]

Evidence provided by State Bar demonstrated that closure and reopening of investigation of disciplinary matter was in compliance with applicable rules and did not bar disciplinary proceedings; respondent had not been prejudiced by delay. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [12]

The review department gives great weight to the findings of the hearing judge, who saw and heard the witnesses and resolved matters of testimonial credibility. Nevertheless, under rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, the hearing judge's decision serves as a recommendation to the review department, which undertakes an independent review and may make findings of fact or draw conclusions of law at variance with those of the judge. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

By obtaining a 30-day extension of the 90-day period to investigate a petition for reinstatement before referral for hearing, State Bar examiner did not violate State Bar procedural rules, which allow investigation even after the 90-day period or any extension of it. (Rule 664, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

As a formal proceeding of the State Bar Court, a reinstatement hearing is governed by the formal rules of evidence applicable in civil proceedings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) More liberal evidentiary standards applicable in certain other types of statutory proceedings do not apply in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

Petitioner for reinstatement could have presented additional character testimony from out-of-state witnesses without undue expense by taking their depositions. (Rules 318, 666, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [13]

Legal effect of entry of default in disciplinary proceeding is to admit allegations in notice to show cause and to preclude respondent attorney's further participation in proceeding unless default is set aside. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [1]

In ruling on a motion to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), State Bar Court interprets and applies terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" in same manner as in civil cases under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [4]

Rule of Procedure 555 does not require that motion to set aside default be made within a reasonable time, but only that it be made within 75 days. Motion to set aside default filed 75 days after entry of default was timely, and also was filed within a reasonable time, where it was filed approximately one month after respondent learned true status after receiving conflicting notices, less than two weeks after seeking a continuance for that purpose, and less than one week after obtaining counsel. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [7]

Rule of Procedure 557, permitting amendment of notice to show cause to conform to proof without requiring additional time to prepare answer and defense, assumes respondent attorney's presence at disciplinary proceeding. Where respondent is not present due to entry of default, respondent does not have an opportunity to defend against charges. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [14]

Time to file answer to notice to show cause is extended twenty days by service of notice of application to enter default, and is extended an additional five days when the application is served by mail. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent who filed motion for relief from default had previously submitted proposed answer to notice to show cause to State Bar Court and served it on examiner, and declaration accompanying motion to set aside default verified essential allegations of proposed answer, this constituted substantial compliance with rule requiring motion to set aside default to be accompanied by verified proposed answer. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

The time limit for filing an answer to the notice to show cause is not jurisdictional, and an answer will be accepted for filing at any time prior to the actual entry of default, no matter how belatedly it is submitted. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

In proceedings to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), the terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" are interpreted and applied in the same manner as in motions in civil cases pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [8]

Effective September 1, 1989, the former Rules of Procedure of the State Bar were replaced by the Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. A motion to set aside default filed and served prior to September 1, 1989, was governed by former Rules of Procedure. (Rule 109, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [9]

Pursuant to Rule of Procedure 552(a), an answer submitted for filing prior to the entry of default is not required to be verified. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [14]

It would be an abuse of discretion to deny relief from default solely on the basis of the lack of a verification of respondent's proposed answer, without giving respondent a chance to cure the defect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Inadequacies in pleading not only made notice to show cause insufficient under rule 550, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, but also caused questions as to whether notice met requirements of rule 554.1, providing that a notice to show cause may be dismissed on ground that it fails to state a disciplinable offense as a matter of law. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [11]

Charges should only be filed when the Office of Trial Counsel ascertains that reasonable cause exists to charge that particular conduct occurred which violated a particular regulatory provision. (Rule 510, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [18]

The State Bar has the duty to distill from sources available to it whether reasonable cause exists for charging a member with statutory or rule violations. It is not only incumbent upon the Office of Trial Counsel to determine which specific conduct of the respondent is at issue, but to articulate the nature of the conduct with particularity in the notice to show cause, correlating the alleged misconduct with the rule or statute allegedly violated thereby. (Rules 510, 550, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [19]

The review department has an obligation to conduct an independent review of the entire record and make its own determinations of fact and conclusions of law; its findings are not limited to issues raised by the parties, and it has the power to correct errors in the hearing department's decision even when not requested to do so by the parties. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [1]

Although respondent's default precluded respondent from seeking review and the State Bar examiner did not request review, the review department had a duty to review on an ex parte basis a proceeding heard by a referee of the former volunteer State Bar Court, as part of the transition to the new State Bar Court system. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 109, 452(a).) In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [1]

Rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar requires the review department to independently review the record as to all matters brought before it. The review department accords great weight to findings of fact by the hearing department resolving testimonial issues. However, the review department has the authority to adopt findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those of the hearing department. Moreover, the scope of review is not limited to the issues raised by the parties. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [3]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §§ 451 et. seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

Under rule 555.1(b), Transitional Rules of Procedure, a respondent has until 75 days after the entry of his default to file, as a matter of right, a motion to set aside the default. This 75-day time period is not jurisdictional; however, after it has run, a much greater showing must be made to justify setting aside the default. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [3]

Under rule 453(a) of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the review department independently reviews the record; that is, the review department treats the findings of the hearing referee as recommendations to it and may make findings or draw conclusions at variance with those of the referee. This type of review requires the review department to examine the record independently and reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. As to any matter resolving issues concerning testimony, the review department gives great weight to the hearing referee who saw and heard the witness. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [2]

The review department must independently review the record in all cases brought before the court. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) Since the review department does not have the opportunity to observe the demeanor of witnesses, it accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which involve resolving testimony and issues relating to testimony. However, the review department has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of issues in a case that can be considered and resolved by the review department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

In disciplinary matters, where the State Bar has the burden of proof, the examiner is obligated to produce sufficient evidence to permit the State Bar Court to make adequate determinations and appropriate recommendations to the Supreme Court as to discipline. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 402.) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [9]

Although the examiner sought review on the issue of degree of discipline, once the review department had jurisdiction over the proceeding, all issues were subject to its independent review. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) The review department's review of the record is an independent one and not limited by the examiner's position. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [1]

Stipulations by both parties in the interests of justice on a wide variety of issues, including the entire proposed disposition of disciplinary matters, are encouraged and are provided for in State Bar procedural rules. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 401, 405-408.) In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [3]

Consolidation may be ordered on the Presiding Judge's own motion, if no substantial rights will be prejudiced. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 2.22, 2.25 and 262.) Consolidation is encouraged at the hearing department level where feasible to avoid substantial duplicate effort expended by counsel and the hearing department to create trial records. Consolidation was appropriate where at most a brief delay would result, and a substantial savings of time would result from a single proceeding on review. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [7]

As to matters of testimonial credibility, the review department properly gives great weight to the hearing referee who saw and heard the witnesses and who resolved those issues. The review department should ordinarily be reluctant to deviate from the factual findings of the referee resolving testimonial matters. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [4]

Under rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review by the review department is not an appeal from the hearing panel decision. The hearing panel's findings serve as a recommendation to the review department, which may make findings or draw conclusions at variance with those of the hearing referee. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [5]

Proceedings before the review department are governed by rule 453 of the [Transitional] Rules of Procedure, which provides that the review department shall independently review the record and may adopt findings, conclusions and a decision or recommendation at variance with the hearing department and may take action as to an issue whether or not that issue was raised in the request for review or briefs of any party. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [7]

Where the review department addresses an issue in its opinion which was not previously addressed by the parties in their briefs or at oral argument, rule 455 of the [Transitional] Rules of Procedure permits a motion for reconsideration affording the parties an opportunity to brief such issues. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [9]

Pursuant to rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the review department independently reviews the record and may adopt findings, conclusions and a decision or recommendation at variance with the hearing department. Its decisions are in turn subject to review by the Supreme Court which likewise conducts independent review of the record below and is not bound by the factual findings of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

Procedural rules proposed by State Bar which would permit attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing to make required showing by preponderance of evidence; would allow stipulation that attorney meets conditions; would guarantee opportunity to make required showing before expiration of two-year actual suspension; and would provide for expedited review, appeared to answer Supreme Court's concerns regarding conduct of such hearings. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [22]

135.00 Amendments to the Rules of Procedure

135.01 Effective date/scope of applicability of 1995 version

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Where case was briefed and argued prior to effective date of revised Rules of Procedure and Rules of Practice, review department applied former Transitional Rules of Procedure and Provisional Rules of Practice. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [2]

135.02 Comparison to former Transitional Rules of Procedure (pre-1995)

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

135.05 Effective date/scope of applicability of 2011 version

135.06 Comparison of 2011 version to 1995 version

Prior to 2011, the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar permitted imposition of a discipline less than disbarment even if the defaulting attorney did not seek relief from default. (See former rule 200 et seq. of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar.) The rules now require that when a member's default has been entered and the member fails to have it set aside or vacated, the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel must file a petition seeking the member's disbarment. (Rule 5.85(A).) In turn, a hearing judge must grant the petition and recommend disbarment provided (1) the member has failed to file a response to the petition for disbarment or (2) the court has denied a motion to set aside or vacate the default. (Rule 5.85(F)(1).) In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [2 a,b]

Respondent's discovery rights under the revised Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, which are based on similar discovery provisions in the California Administrative Procedure Act, satisfy fair trial concerns. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [4]

In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227.

135.09 Other issues re amendments to Rules of Procedure generally

Even though Rules of Procedure adopted by State Bar's Board of Governors are not legislative acts, it is appropriate to construe them using rules for statutory interpretation/construction. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [4]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

135.10 General Rules (Division 1, rules 5.1-5.16 (2011); former Division 1, General Provisions, rules 1-32 (1995))

The complaining clients' settlement of their civil matter against respondent and the clients' release of all claims against him does not preclude the State Bar from proceeding with the disciplinary matter. A disciplinary proceeding is not a controversy between two individuals, the complainant and the accused attorney, but is an adverse proceeding against the accused attorney and may be instituted and prosecuted upon the complaint of any person knowing the facts upon which the proceeding is based. The complaining person or client is not a party to the disciplinary proceeding, and need not appear and testify at trial. Thus, the disciplinary case was not a right, claim, or cause of action that accrued to the complaining clients; and therefore it was not a claim that they could release or otherwise compromise. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [1]

In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592.

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

135.20 Commencement/Venue/Filing/Service/Time Division 2, Ch. 1, rules 5.20-5.30 (2011); former Division II, rules 50-64 (1995)

Rule 51(a) imposes a five–year limitation on the commencement of disciplinary proceedings only in those instances where the proceedings are initiated as the result of a third–party complainant. Where the present matter was not initiated as the result of a third–party complainant, but by the State Bar after the Sacramento Superior Court entered a sanctions order, the case was not barred by a limitations period as a matter of law. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

In reviewing a pretrial motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges on the ground that it was barred by the applicable period of limitations, we treat the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged that respondent, a general partner of a California limited partnership, informed a limited partner within five years before the notice of disciplinary charges was filed that the limited partner's share of funds from a partnership distribution was gone, the charge that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching a fiduciary duty and misappropriating funds was timely filed under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 51. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [5a,b]

Except for service of initial pleading in a proceedings, State Bar Rules of Procedure and State Bar Court Rules of Practice require that attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges contain an address of service for the attorney. Thus, clerk properly served copy of hearing judge's decision on attorney by mailing it to attorney at the address listed in the attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges even though that address was not address that attorney maintained on State Bar's official membership records, particularly since attorney never notified clerk that he wished to be served at any address other than the address listed on the response. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [9]

135.30 Pleadings/Motions/Stipulations (Division 2, Ch. 2, rules 5.40-5.58 (2011); former Division III, rules 100-135 (1995)).

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

Absent the court granting a set aside, a partial stipulation to facts remains binding on the parties, and the facts recited in the stipulation are deemed established. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [1]

The current procedures squarely place on the State Bar the responsibility of monitoring, investigating, and initiating proceedings alleging probation violations. Imposing a hearing judge supervised probation condition presented a number of problems under this structure. The review department declined to recommend such a condition, especially where, as here, there was no showing that the procedures in place for probation proceedings were not adequate to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [3]

135.40 Subpoenas and Discovery (Division 2, Ch. 3, rules 5.60-5.71 (2011); former Division IV, rules 150-189 (1995))

Respondent's discovery rights under the revised Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, which are based on similar discovery provisions in the California Administrative Procedure Act, satisfy fair trial concerns. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [4]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

Under State Bar Act and disciplinary case law, respondent had affirmative duty to insure that his answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar were true and correct even if he had to refresh his recollection of the facts by going to the immigration court and reviewing the court file and listening to the tapes of all relevant court hearings in each client matter that was a subject of the interrogatories. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [27]

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar presently in effect concerning the issuance and service of investigative subpoenas are not materially different than were the rules before the Supreme Court in a prior case. Where the subpoena duces tecum was issued based on a competent declaration that was presented to the designee of the Chief Trial Counsel which demonstrated that the records sought were, in fact, trust account records, that they were reasonably required for the matter under investigation, and that the matter under investigation concerned an attorney, the subpoena was issued in accordance with those rules. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [2 a, b]

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

Based on the determination that the provisions of the State Bar Act and the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar concerning investigative subpoenas for trust account records meet the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court in a prior case, the review department concluded that there was no need to import either the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1985 et seq., or the provisions of Government Code section 7470 et seq., for either due process or other reasons into the procedures for the issuance of State Bar investigative subpoenas. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [4]

135.50 Defaults and Trials (Division 2, Ch. 4, Defaults, rules 5.80-5.86 (see also rules 5.250-5.253, 5.346), and Ch. 5, Trials, rules 5.100-5.115 (2011); former Division V, rules 200-224 (1995))

Prior to 2011, the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar permitted imposition of a discipline less than disbarment even if the defaulting attorney did not seek relief from default. (See former rule 200 et seq. of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar.) The rules now require that when a member's default has been entered and the member fails to have it set aside or vacated, the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel must file a petition seeking the member's disbarment. (Rule 5.85(A).) In turn, a hearing judge must grant the petition and recommend disbarment provided (1) the member has failed to file a response to the petition for disbarment or (2) the court has denied a motion to set aside or vacate the default. (Rule 5.85(F)(1).) In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [2 a,b]

A member in default has various opportunities to seek relief from default. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 5.83(A), (C), (D), and 5.85(E).) Because the effects of a default may deny a disposition of the case on the merits irrespective of the charges or potential mitigation, the review department closely scrutinizes orders denying relief from default and any doubts must be resolved in favor of the member. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [3]

Where respondent filed opposition to petition for disbarment after default, and sought review of hearing judge's order granting petition, and Review Department remanded to permit hearing judge to exercise discretion regarding what relief was appropriate, hearing judge did not abuse discretion on remand by declining to set aside default except for limited purpose of conducting hearing on culpability, aggravation, and level of discipline, in which respondent was not permitted to participate. Hearing judge also properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted. By allowing his default to be entered, respondent waived right to participate in proceedings, to make evidentiary objections, and to present evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [4 a-c]

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 220(b), which requires the court to file its decision within 90 days of taking a matter under submission, is not jurisdictional. Although filing a decision well beyond the prescribed 90 days undermines important objectives, an attorney's decision to abate his law practice pending filing of hearing decision is too speculative to establish specific, legally cognizable prejudice. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [1]

The State Bar's posttrial effort to amend the hearing judge's decision could not be characterized as anything other than a posttrial motion covered by Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 221, since no language in rule 221 limits its applicability to rules 222 through 224 and no language indicates that rules 222 through 224 are intended to be an exclusive roster of posttrial motions. Thus, when the State Bar filed a motion to amend the decision in the hearing department, it had the effect of vacating the request for review filed on the same date in the review department, rendering the request for review void ab initio. Moreover, the State Bar's second request for review was vacated because it was filed prior to the hearing judge's final ruling on the motion to amend, which final ruling was made when the hearing judge realized she had prematurely issued a ruling before respondent filed a timely opposition. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [1 a–c]

Where the hearing judge recommended for a defaulting attorney, among other things, an actual suspension of 60 days and until the attorney made restitution of unearned fees and until the State Bar Court granted the attorney's motion to terminate her actual suspension under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 205, the hearing judge should also have recommended compliance with paragraphs (a) and (c) of California Rules of Court, rule 955 if the actual suspension exceeded 90 days. In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861. [2a, b]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [8]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [3]

In default proceeding, no loss of public protection occurs when specific probation conditions are not immediately imposed on attorney who is placed on actual suspension because such attorney will be prohibited from practicing law for duration of attorney's actual suspension and until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [4]

Despite the mandate in State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 290(a) that every imposition of discipline (other than reprovals) include a requirement that attorney attend State Bar Ethics School, the appropriate time to consider imposing State Bar Ethics School as a condition of probation in default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until the attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205, is at the time of ruling on the rule 205 motion to terminate the actual suspension. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [7]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

Where the State Bar Court recommends that an attorney who has defaulted in a disciplinary proceeding be placed on actual suspension, rule 205(a) of the Rules of Procedure requires that the discipline recommendation contain two elements: (1) a specific period of actual suspension; and (2) a statement that the attorney's actual suspension shall continue unless the State Bar Court grants a motion to terminate the actual suspension at the conclusion of the specific period of actual suspension or upon such later date ordered by the court. In the present case the hearing judge recommended that respondent be actually suspended until he accomplishes certain tasks (i.e., provide evidence of reimbursement to his former client, attend Ethics School, pass the professional responsibility examination, and make a motion to the State Bar Court to terminate the actual suspension). This recommendation does not meet the requirement of rule 205(a) that the recommended discipline include a specific period of actual suspension. At best, the hearing judge's recommendation will result in an indefinite, as distinguished from a specific, period of actual suspension. To extend an attorney's recommended actual suspension until he or she moves the State Bar Court to terminate that suspension under rule 205 there must be a stated, defined and measurable period of actual suspension recommended. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [1 a, h]

While rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure does not specifically preclude a hearing judge in a default matter from recommending a period of actual suspension be imposed as a condition of probation along with appropriate additional conditions of probation, the rule clearly contemplates that probation and its attendant conditions be imposed at the time the defaulting attorney brings a motion under rule 205(c) to terminate his or her actual suspension. The entire purpose of rule 205 is to eliminate the necessity of multiple proceedings against an attorney who is unwilling to participate in the disciplinary process and evidences no interest in maintaining his or her membership in the bar. Under rule 205 the burden is placed on a defaulting attorney to bring forward to the State Bar Court his or her interest in continuing the right to practice. The appropriate time to consider imposing probation and its attendant conditions is when the attorney seeks relief from the actual suspension that may be imposed following his or her default in a disciplinary proceeding. It is only at that time that the court has before it an attorney who evidences a willingness to comply with conditions of probation and a full understanding of the reasons for the attorney's failure to participate in the disciplinary process. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [2 a, b]

Attendant to a recommendation of suspension, the State Bar Court lacks the authority to impose conditions of probation without the prior approval of the Supreme Court. Therefore, it is appropriate, in any decision or opinion made under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure recommending the actual suspension of an attorney, to recommend to the Supreme Court that the disciplined attorney be ordered to comply with the conditions of probation, if any, reasonably related to the found misconduct that the State Bar Court may impose as conditions of probation attendant on terminating the actual suspension of that attorney. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [3]

Attorney discipline is under the control of the Supreme Court and the State Bar Court may only recommend such discipline for the approval of the Supreme Court. As a consequence the clear parameters of any proposed discipline must be included in the State Bar Court's recommendation to the Supreme Court. Both stayed and actual suspension are discipline within the context of attorney discipline. It follows that in any recommendation for discipline made to the Supreme Court under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure must include, if appropriate, a period of stayed suspension. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [4 a, b]

There is nothing in rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure that expressly precludes the State Bar Court from recommending appropriate preconditions to a defaulting and disciplined attorney bringing a motion to terminate his or her actual suspension under rule 205, such as recommended in this matter by the hearing judge, requiring respondent to make restitution and attend Ethics School. However, the requirement that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination prior to bringing a motion for relief from suspension is in conflict with Supreme Court case law requiring that a disciplined attorney be given a minimum of one year within which to pass the examination. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [5 a, b]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in issuing a pretrial order precluding respondent from attempting to impeach State Bar's witnesses with evidence of witnesses' alleged criminal activities, terrorist activities, racism, hate crimes, molestation of foster children, etc. except by evidence of proved felonies introduced into evidence in strict compliance with Evidence Code. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [5 a-c]

When respondent's refusal to provide names of any witnesses or identify any exhibits as required by Rules of Practice regarding pretrial statements and exchange of exhibits was based on respondent's dissatisfaction over hearing judge's pretrial order, hearing judge did not abuse discretion in sanctioning respondent for not complying with Rules of Practice by precluding respondent from presenting any evidence at trial. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [6 a-g]

The hearing judge erred in using the State Bar's request to add a quarterly reporting probation condition to conclude that limited relief under rule 203(e)(3)(B), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, warranted the setting aside of the default on the issue of discipline. Rule 203(e)(2) allows a judge to vacate a default subject to appropriate conditions. Rule 203(e)(3)(B) allows a judge to vacate a default entered after filing of the decision, for limited purposes. There is nothing in rule 203(e) that eliminates the burden the respondent must sustain under rule 203(c), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. Only after a defaulting respondent has made a sufficient showing for relief under rule 203(c), may a hearing judge set aside a default unconditionally or on appropriate conditions or for a limited purpose under rule 203(e). Since the judge's decision on its face concluded that respondent had not made the required showing under rule 203(c)(2), the judge erred when setting aside respondent's default. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831. [2]

In a motion for relief from default, general allegations of despondency and depression do not meet decisional law standards for relief, even under the more liberal requirements of rule 202(c)(1), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[3]

135.60 Dispositions and Costs (Division 2, Ch. 6, rules 5.120-5.136 (2011); former Division VI, rules 250-284 (1995))

Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262, which authorizes proceedings to be dismissed in the furtherance of justice, is construed in the State Bar Court in the same manner as its analog Penal Code section 1385 is construed in criminal proceedings. State Bar rule does not permit respondents to make motions. Motions may be made only by the State Bar as the prosecutor or a dismissal may be entered on State Bar Court's own motion after taking required steps. Hearing judge's dismissal of proceeding comported with those required pre-dismissal steps because she issued an order to show cause to the parties, allowed for responses from them, considered all appropriate interests, and stated in detail her reason for dismissal, and since the hearing judge acted promptly after the proceeding was filed and since the dismissal was expressly without prejudice to refiling, review department saw no prejudice to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721.[2 a-c]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in ordering the dismissal of proceeding without prejudice in furtherance of justice on her own motion under Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262 as an appropriate remedy for the deprivation of the opportunities (1) for respondent to meet and attempt to resolve the matter with the State Bar prosecuting attorney 20 days before any disciplinary charges were filed and (2) for respondent to request an early neutral evaluation conference with a State Bar Court judge before disciplinary charges were filed because the deprivation of the opportunities occurred when, as a consequence of respondent's prior incorrect change of address submission to the State Bar, respondent did not receive State Bar's letter notice of intent to file notice of disciplinary charges informing him of these pre-filing opportunities. Once the hearing judge contemplated dismissal under rule 262 and once the uncontroverted evidence emerged as to how respondent's change of address was mistakenly composed on the change of address form and mistakenly approved by respondent (essentially a typographical error), the hearing judge was justified in considering the mistake to come within the ambit of rule 262 and did not abuse her discretion in ordering dismissal. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721.[3 a-e]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

In reviewing a motion to dismiss a disciplinary charge based on a contention that the notice of disciplinary charges is defective due to its failure to state a disciplinable offense, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true and disregards all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice of disciplinary charges except for judicially noticeable facts, since the purpose of the motion is to test the sufficiency of the notice of disciplinary charges and not to contest the charges. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged (1) that respondent, as general partner of a California limited partnership having a fiduciary duty to the limited partners, made preliminary distributions of partnership profits but failed to disburse any funds to one limited partner due to that limited partner's refusal to sign a release of liability and (2) that despite the limited partner's repeated request for the funds, respondent never released the funds and subsequently informed the limited partner that he no longer had the funds, the notice of disciplinary charges was sufficient to state a disciplinary offense, i.e., that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching his fiduciary duty to the limited partner and misappropriating funds to which the limited partner was entitled.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [3a-c]

Because respondent's motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges based on insufficient notice of one of the charges was filed later than the date his response to the notice of disciplinary charges was due, in violation of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 262(c)(2), respondent's assertion was waived as a basis for dismissal.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [4]

In reviewing a pretrial motion to dismiss the notice of disciplinary charges on the ground that it was barred by the applicable period of limitations, we treat the factual allegations of the notice of disciplinary charges as true. Where the notice of disciplinary charges alleged that respondent, a general partner of a California limited partnership, informed a limited partner within five years before the notice of disciplinary charges was filed that the limited partner's share of funds from a partnership distribution was gone, the charge that respondent committed an act involving moral turpitude by breaching a fiduciary duty and misappropriating funds was timely filed under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 51. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [5a,b]

Statutory provision granting attorneys the right to recover costs from State Bar provides that attorneys who have been exonerated of all disciplinary charges following a trial are entitled to reimbursement from the State Bar "in an amount determined by the State Bar to be the reasonable expenses, other than fees for attorneys or experts, of preparing for [trial]" without defining "reasonable expenses" (other than expressly excluding fees for attorneys and experts) and without prescribing the method by which State Bar is to determine what they are. Accordingly, State Bar Board of Governors properly exercised its statutory rule making authority and adopted State Bar Rule of Procedure 283 to define what expenses (or costs) are allowable as "reasonable expenses" for which exonerated attorneys may obtain reimbursement under statute and to provide the procedure by which exonerated attorneys are to seek reimbursement from the State Bar for those expenses. In absence of Supreme Court authority to the contrary, the State Bar Court may award exonerated attorneys reimbursement from the State Bar for reasonable expenses only if they are specified as allowable expenses in Rule of Procedure 283. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

The State Bar is correct that a private reproval is a sanction that constitutes discipline. And the State Bar is also correct that the plain and unambiguous language of rule 290(a), Rules of Procedure mandates that except as provided by order of the Supreme Court, a member shall be required to satisfactorily complete the State Bar Ethics School in all dispositions or decisions involving the imposition of discipline, unless the member previously completed the course within the prior two years. However, rule 956(a) of the California Rules of Court authorizes the attachment of conditions to reprovals. And that rule expressly requires that conditions attached to reprovals be based upon a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. In fact, it is error to attach a condition to a reproval in the absence of such an express finding. Moreover, rule 271, Rules of Procedure, explicitly directs that any conditions attached to reprovals must be attached in the manner authorized by California Rules of Court rule 956. Accordingly, the review department held that the mandatory directive in rule 290 to impose ethics school is not applicable in proceedings in which the discipline imposed is a reproval. To conclude otherwise would strip all meaning from the requirement in rule 956(a) that conditions attached shall be based on a finding that the interests of the public and attorney will be served thereby. In addition, to conclude otherwise would render a portion of rule 271 surplusage. In the Matter of Respondent Z (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 85. [1 a-d]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [1]

135.70 Review Department/Delegated Powers (Division 3, rules 5.150-5.162 (2011); former Division VII, rules 300-321 (1995))

The State Bar's posttrial effort to amend the hearing judge's decision could not be characterized as anything other than a posttrial motion covered by Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 221, since no language in rule 221 limits its applicability to rules 222 through 224 and no language indicates that rules 222 through 224 are intended to be an exclusive roster of posttrial motions. Thus, when the State Bar filed a motion to amend the decision in the hearing department, it had the effect of vacating the request for review filed on the same date in the review department, rendering the request for review void ab initio. Moreover, the State Bar's second request for review was vacated because it was filed prior to the hearing judge's final ruling on the motion to amend, which final ruling was made when the hearing judge realized she had prematurely issued a ruling before respondent filed a timely opposition. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [1 a–c]

Although the State Bar apparently believed that it had perfected its right to appeal due to having filed two requests for review, no timely request for review was filed after service of a final order disposing of a posttrial motion, and therefore the review department was without jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Due to the sui generis nature of disciplinary proceedings, as well as the differences between statutes and rules regarding notices of appeal applicable in civil matters and those applicable in disciplinary matters, the review department could not apply civil rules and statutes so as to consider the requests for review as prematurely filed or to stay proceedings at the trial level after a request for review had been filed. Although the State Bar asked for relief on the grounds that it never received a copy of the hearing judge's final order and that it was misled when the review department clerk's office did not reject pleadings filed after the requests for review, the evidence established that service of the hearing judge's final order was properly effectuated, and the review department clerk's failure to issue a notice of rejection of pleadings was not a ground for relief under any rule but merely a courtesy function. More importantly, because the review department was divested of jurisdiction, it was powerless to relieve against mistake, inadvertence, accident, or misfortune. In the Matter of Ozowski (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 67. [2 a–g]

When a party supports a statement in its brief with a reference to a finding or conclusion in the hearing judge's decision, party must also provide references to where the evidence supporting the hearing judge's finding or conclusion may be found in the record in order to comply with rules of procedure and rule of practice mandating that statements in briefs be supported with proper references to the record. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 302(a), 303(a); State Bar Ct. Rules of Prac., rule 1320.)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [1]

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

The hearing judge did not abuse his discretion or make an error of law in denying respondent's motion to modify his probation on the ground that respondent was dilatory in bringing the motion where respondent was aware or should have been aware of both the factual and legal need to modify the probation long before the motion was filed. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [1]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [2]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[11]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263.[3]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.[1 a-c]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.[1 a-e]

Where hearing judge did not issue written ruling on his denial of State Bar's motion to dismiss former attorney's petition for reinstatement, review department determined hearing judge's reasoning from written transcript of hearing on motion, which was included in appendix to State Bar's petition for interlocutory review. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.[2]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[1]

The rule requiring the review department to give great weight to the hearing judge's findings of fact that resolve issues pertaining to the credibility of the witnesses, which rule is premised on the hearing judge's ability to see the witnesses' demeanor and conduct during trial, is not applicable when a witness's testimony is present only through a written transcript of the witness's deposition. Thus, in such a case, the review department may independently evaluate the credibility of the witness's deposition testimony without giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [3]

Because none of the hearing judge's material findings of fact were challenged on review, State Bar's contention that the hearing judge's disciplinary recommendation was incomplete in that it did not contain a probation condition requiring respondent to file quarterly probation reports fell explicitly within the purview of the rule of procedure permitting summary review.In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [1]

Even though the review department retains its authority to independently review the full record in summary review proceedings, it gives deference to the litigants' identification of the issues and ordinarily limits the scope of review to those issues. The review department followed this practice in the present proceeding except that it modified the costs provision because of recent statutory changes. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [2]

In summary review proceedings, the full record was not before the review department therefore it could not consider any issues other than those raised by the parties, absent the conversion of the matter into a plenary review proceeding. Accordingly, where the review department did not modify the hearing judge's decision as a result of the summary review proceeding, the hearing judge's decision remained the final decision of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [5]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

If an appellee wishes to address issues not raised by the appellant, the party should request its own review. Even though the review department is obligated to conduct de novo review, it seeks to discourage the obviously unfair practice of requesting review in a responsive brief of issues not raised by the appellant. In such a case the appellee has not shared in the cost of record preparation, and it reduces appellant's time to respond to such issues. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [4]

The standard of review in a proceeding for relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is abuse of discretion or error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 300(b), 639.) The review department determines abuse of discretion by using the equivalent of the substantial evidence test. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [1]

Whenever an appellee wishes to address issues different from those raised by the appellant, that party should file its own request for review. (Rule 301, Rules of Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [1]

Augmentation of the record on review is appropriate only if the record is incorrect or incomplete. Where respondent failed to take advantage of the ample opportunity she had at trial to seek to show that her misconduct resulted from her alcoholism, the review department denied her request to augment the record with declarations about her recovery from alcoholism as the record was neither incorrect nor incomplete. However, where respondent challenged the hearing judge's finding that respondent made a deliberate misrepresentation at a pretrial conference, the review department granted the State Bar's request to augment the record with the transcript of the conference as the record was incomplete without the transcript. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(e)(3); former Provisional Rules of Practice of State Bar, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [2]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Where the State Bar raised the question of the amount of respondent's actual suspension in a summary review proceeding, but did so only as a function of respondent's time to make restitution, where prior to oral argument, the review department notified the State Bar (the only party entitled to participate) that it considered the issue of appropriate discipline to be before it and the State Bar agreed, the review department held that the amount of discipline was the larger issue for review. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [1]

Summary review was designed to streamline and reduce the costs of review. Among the matters eligible for summary review are those raising issues concerning the appropriate degree of discipline and those without dispute over the hearing judge's material findings of fact. As these were the issues here, the case was appropriate for summary review. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2]

135.80 Specific Proceedings (Divisions 5 through 7 (2011); former Division VIII (1995))

Note: For each specific proceeding, see also the Digest section(s) regarding that proceeding.

135.81 Involuntary Inactive Enrollment (former rules 400-538 (1995))

Note: For 2011 rules (Division 4), see topic numbers 135.90-135.99.

In determining whether an attorney should be enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (d), the record as a whole must be considered. However, when the State Bar Court seeks to estimate the time between its ruling and recommendation and when the Supreme Court can consider them, it may ordinarily rely on the expedited nature of probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [8]

An attorney involuntarily enrolled inactive because of a mental infirmity or illness may file an application for transfer to active status whenever the attorney is able to show that there is no longer a statutory basis for the inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [6]

135.82 Probation (Division 5, rules 5.300-5.317 (2011); former rules 550-566 (1995))

In order to make a showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and be relieved from suspension, an attorney can petition as early as six months before the earliest date that the actual suspension may terminate. Also, since these proceedings are expedited, an attorney could demonstrate rehabilitation, fitness to practice law and present learning and ability in the general law without necessarily extending his or her actual suspension period. In probation revocation proceedings, the rules of procedure limit the actual suspension that can be imposed to the total amount of stayed execution originally imposed. However, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) condition does not necessarily extend the actual suspension of a respondent where a showing can be made within the period of actual suspension. Therefore, the review department concluded that the State Bar Court was not prohibited from recommending such a condition in a probation revocation proceeding even though the condition could result in an actual suspension that exceeded the length of the originally imposed stayed suspension. To do otherwise would permit respondent to violate probation and resume the practice of law after being suspended for over five years, without ever making a showing of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law or his learning and ability in the general law, thus defeating the important level of public protection regularly recommended in lengthy suspensions. In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2 a-c]

The hearing judge did not abuse his discretion or make an error of law in denying respondent's motion to modify his probation on the ground that respondent was dilatory in bringing the motion where respondent was aware or should have been aware of both the factual and legal need to modify the probation long before the motion was filed. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[1]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[1]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has the exclusive jurisdiction to conduct investigations and bring disciplinary charges. The State Bar may file disciplinary charges if it finds in its discretion that there is reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. Upon reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated a condition or conditions of probation, the State Bar may file either an original disciplinary proceeding based on the violation or a motion to revoke probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [1]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has exclusive jurisdiction to supervise members placed on probation and exclusive authority to initiate probation revocation proceedings. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court retains plenary authority over the regulation and discipline of attorneys. Neither the statutes nor the rules of procedure limit the Supreme Court's plenary authority. The Supreme Court may, in the exercise of its plenary authority, impose a hearing judge supervised probation condition regardless of the statutes and rules covering disciplinary proceedings. By imposing such a probation condition, the Supreme Court would necessarily confer jurisdiction on the hearing judge to monitor compliance. Thus, the review department did not find persuasive the State Bar's argument that the hearing judge lacked jurisdiction to supervise probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [2]

The State Bar can prosecute a probation violation by way of a motion to revoke probation, or by way of an original disciplinary proceeding based on a violation of the Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). It was not error to charge a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 in this original disciplinary proceeding. The gravamen of this case was respondent's failure to comply with the conditions of his probation. Regardless of the statute charged, the proceeding was based on a violation of section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

In determining whether an attorney should be enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (d), the record as a whole must be considered. However, when the State Bar Court seeks to estimate the time between its ruling and recommendation and when the Supreme Court can consider them, it may ordinarily rely on the expedited nature of probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [8]

135.83 Failure to Give Required Notice of Suspension under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.20, formerly rule 955 (Division 6, ch. 1, rules 5.330-5.337 (2011); former rules 580-587 (1995))

135.84 Conviction (Division 6, ch. 2, rules 5.340-5.347 (2011); former rules 600-607 (1995))

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

135.85 Misconduct in Another Jurisdiction (Division 6, ch. 3, rules 5.350-5.353 (2011); former rules 620-625 (1995))

135.86 Rehabilitation after Suspension under Standard 1.2(c)(1), formerly Standard 1.4(c)(ii) (Division 7, ch. 1, rules 5.400-5.411 (2011); former rules 630-641 (1995))

A showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, is normally required when an attorney is actually suspended for two or more years. Proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of the member's rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law are required by a preponderance of the evidence before the member is to be relieved of actual suspension. The purpose of staying the execution of a suspension and ordering probation with an actual suspension and a required showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is for public protection and attorney rehabilitation. Although all forms of attorney discipline have the key purpose of protecting the public, the legal community and the maintenance of high professional standards, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement offers public protection in a formal, although expedited proceeding which ensures moral fitness and legal learning before an attorney, suspended for over two years, is permitted to return to the practice of law. In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1 a-b]

In order to make a showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and be relieved from suspension, an attorney can petition as early as six months before the earliest date that the actual suspension may terminate. Also, since these proceedings are expedited, an attorney could demonstrate rehabilitation, fitness to practice law and present learning and ability in the general law without necessarily extending his or her actual suspension period. In probation revocation proceedings, the rules of procedure limit the actual suspension that can be imposed to the total amount of stayed execution originally imposed. However, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) condition does not necessarily extend the actual suspension of a respondent where a showing can be made within the period of actual suspension. Therefore, the review department concluded that the State Bar Court was not prohibited from recommending such a condition in a probation revocation proceeding even though the condition could result in an actual suspension that exceeded the length of the originally imposed stayed suspension. To do otherwise would permit respondent to violate probation and resume the practice of law after being suspended for over five years, without ever making a showing of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law or his learning and ability in the general law, thus defeating the important level of public protection regularly recommended in lengthy suspensions.In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2 a-c]

The standard of proof in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceedings for relief from actual suspension is preponderance of the evidence. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 634.) Thus, to be entitled to relief from actual suspension, petitioners must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, their rehabilitation, present fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [1]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [2]

Procedures for ruling on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 630-641) are expedited to avoid procedural delays that might effectively create a far longer period of actual suspension than that originally ordered by the Supreme Court. Proceedings on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions are summary in nature, not full-fledged reinstatement proceedings in which disbarred attorneys seek to be reinstated to the practice of law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [3]

State Bar Court does not have authority to conditionally grant standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension or to impose probation type conditions on attorneys when granting such petitions. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [5]

The standard of review in a proceeding for relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is abuse of discretion or error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 300(b), 639.) The review department determines abuse of discretion by using the equivalent of the substantial evidence test. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [1]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension is not ordinarily required to complete probation before he or she may present meaningful evidence of rehabilitation in a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Rehabilitative sanctions in the form of continuing probation conditions may remain in place after a petitioner's relief from actual suspension. A disciplined attorney may show rehabilitation before his or her actual suspension expires in a proper proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [8]

Given the summary nature and expedited schedule of a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii), the petitioner remains on actual suspension until the finality of the decision in the State Bar Court, including review. (See Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 633, 635, 638, 639, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [13]

135.87 Reinstatement after Disbarment (Division 7, ch. 3, rules 5.440-5.447 (2011); former rules 660-666 (1995))

The review department concluded that the hearing judge erred as a matter of law in denying the motion to set aside the dismissal for lack of jurisdiction and found that the procedural requirement of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) did not divest the court of jurisdiction to extend the time for, or to grant relief from, payment of costs. Relying on well–settled rules of statutory construction, the review department construed the rule to be directory rather than mandatory or jurisdictional and thus found that the court retained jurisdiction to determine whether petitioner's failure to provide proof of payment of costs prior to filing the reinstatement petition should have resulted in a dismissal under the facts and circumstances of the case. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [1a, b]

Despite its seemingly mandatory wording, Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) is merely procedural, advancing a time requirement for the payment of costs, while the relevant Business and Professions Code sections confer jurisdiction to decide the substantive issues of costs and relief therefrom. There is no evidence that the Board of Governors of the State Bar attempted to supplant the statutory authority set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 and 6086.10, or to divest the State Bar Court of jurisdiction, by implementing a rule of procedure, and indeed, the Board of Governors is proscribed from doing so by Business and Professions Code section 6086. That section is consistent with the more general rule that, where a statute empowers an administrative agency to adopt regulations, those regulations must be consistent and not conflict with the governing statute. Because there is no express language or clear intent to render the rule jurisdictional, the review department looks to the cost provisions as a whole, the nature and character of these provisions, and the consequences that would follow from potential constructions. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory or jurisdictional, the rule would conflict with and/or constrict relevant statutes and other rules, inadvertently alter the reinstatement requirements, and at times produce unreasonable results. Construing the rule as directory, however, in no way interferes with or compromises the ability of the State Bar or the State Bar Court to effectuate the intent of obtaining costs as money judgments. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [2a, b]

A strict and unyielding interpretation of rule 662(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar mandating that costs be paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition is more restrictive than the requirement of Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 that costs be paid as a condition of reinstatement of active membership. A strict interpretation is also inconsistent with the State Bar Court's delegated authority to give relief from costs in whole or in part or to extend the time to pay costs. If a resigned or disbarred attorney were completely relieved of the obligation to pay costs or were provided an extension of time to pay, it would be impossible to provide proof that all discipline costs have been paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory, it would render relevant costs provisions irrelevant; but the finding that the rule is directory harmonizes all provisions and avoids an unnecessary and impermissible conflict with state statutes and other rules of procedure of the State Bar. Also, such a construction is consistent with the rehabilitative goals of the discipline system by maintaining the court's discretion to consider the timely payment of costs as a factor in determining a petitioner's rehabilitation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [3a-e]

The statutory intent that discipline costs are penalties payable to and for the benefit of the State Bar of California to promote rehabilitation and to protect the public supports the position that nonpayment of these costs should not be construed as an absolute roadblock to a reinstatement proceeding in every case, but a factor in determining overall rehabilitation during the proceeding. Rule 9.10(f) of the California Rules of Court does not require or address payment of costs, and the long–standing procedure for dealing with outstanding discipline costs has been to order reinstatement upon payment of all fees and costs. If Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) is construed as directory, it allows timely payment of costs to be a relevant factor in determining whether a petitioner has been rehabilitated, which is the very essence of a reinstatement proceeding and consistent with rehabilitative goals. Conversely, if the rule were interpreted to be mandatory, the court would be precluded from considering all relevant factors regarding efforts toward rehabilitation, including the timing and efforts at paying costs. Such an interpretation would effectively change the reinstatement requirements, inadvertently rendering the timing of the payment of costs to be a conclusive determination of rehabilitation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [4a-d]

In construing statutes, a practical construction is preferred. A construction of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) which permits the State Bar Court to retain jurisdiction is manifestly more practical than one which cuts off the court's jurisdiction regardless of the time and resources the parties have already expended in the court proceedings. Where a reinstatement proceeding had been pending for almost a year at the time a motion to dismiss was filed, the State Bar's investigation period and the discovery period for both parties had expired, and the trial was set to commence in approximately one month, dismissal was a severe remedy for noncompliance with payment of costs, and denial of a motion to set aside the dismissal was draconian. If a petitioner fails to pay the disciplinary costs prior to filing his reinstatement petition, the hearing judge has discretion to dismiss the reinstatement proceeding rather than to undertake a lengthy trial. But the hearing judge may also consider the failure to timely pay costs as a negative factor in petitioner's showing of rehabilitation or condition a petitioner's return to active status on the payment of some or all of the costs. Finally, if a disbarred or resigned attorney has failed to pay costs, the State Bar may enforce an order imposing costs as a money judgment. Construing Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) as directory will continue to promote timely payment of costs, while not mandating unreasonable consequences in pending proceedings. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [5a b, c]

Reinstatement petitioner established requisite learning in law by passing California Bar Examination, Attorneys' Examination. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [1 a,b]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [6 a-b]

Reinstatement requires the passage of a professional responsibility examination and a showing of rehabilitation, present moral qualifications for readmission, and present ability and learning in the general law. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(f); Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 665(a), (b).) In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [2]

Although rule 665(b) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, enumerates moral qualifications for reinstatement as an item separate from rehabilitation, rule 951(f) of the California Rules of Court combines them as a single item. The Supreme Court has often considered rehabilitation and moral qualifications for readmission together. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [6]

Respondent was not given credit for the period of time he was ineligible to practice law against the time period he must wait before he may petition for reinstatement. The ban on respondent's practice for which he sought credit resulted from other disciplinary proceedings, not from the present case and, therefore, was not a related interim ban on his practice. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [8]

The earliest time that respondent can petition for reinstatement if he is disbarred is five years after the effective date of his interim suspension. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 662(b).) Where the order placing respondent on interim suspension provided that he had to stop providing legal services for any paying clients by one date, but could perform legal services for preexisting pro bono clients until a later date, the earlier date was the effective date of the interim suspension because by obtaining an exception for completion of the pro bono cases, respondent acted for the benefit of his pro bono clients, the courts in which their cases were pending, and the justice system, conduct which would be discouraged if he was denied credit for the entire time he was prohibited from earning his living from the practice of law by reason of the interim suspension order resulting from his felony conviction. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [2]

135.88 Moral Character (Division 7, ch. 4, rules 5.460-5.466 (2011); former rules 680-687 (1995))

135.89 Specific Proceedings — Other/General

Where a judge questioned the State Bar at an Order to Show Cause hearing about its reasons for seeking an attorney's termination from participating in the Alternative Discipline Program, the hearing judge did not improperly shift the burden of proof to the State Bar because an order to show cause requires parties to appear at a specified time to demonstrate why the relief sought by the applicant should not be granted. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [4]

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar presently in effect concerning the issuance and service of investigative subpoenas are not materially different than were the rules before the Supreme Court in a prior case. Where the subpoena duces tecum was issued based on a competent declaration that was presented to the designee of the Chief Trial Counsel which demonstrated that the records sought were, in fact, trust account records, that they were reasonably required for the matter under investigation, and that the matter under investigation concerned an attorney, the subpoena was issued in accordance with those rules. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [2 a, b]

135.90 Involuntary Inactive Enrollment Proceedings (Division 4 (2011))

Note: For specific Rules of Procedure applicable to involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings, see the Digest section for the specific type of proceeding, topic number 2000 et seq.

Note: Certain chapters of the 2011 version of the Rules of Procedure, as subsequently augmented, are indexed out of sequence, as follows:

Division 6, Chapter 4, Fee Arbitration Award Enforcement Proceedings
Rules 5.360-5.371: Topic number 3000 et seq.
Division 6, Chapter 5, Alternative Discipline Program
Rules 5.380-5.389: Topic number 3100 et seq.
Division 6, Chapter 6, Legal Specialization Proceedings
Rules 5.390-5.399: Topic number 3200 et seq.
Division 7, Chapter 2, Resignation Proceedings
Rules 5.420-5.427: Topic number 3300 et seq.

136 Application of former Provisional Rules of Practice (pre-1995)

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

Augmentation of the record on review is appropriate only if the record is incorrect or incomplete. Where respondent failed to take advantage of the ample opportunity she had at trial to seek to show that her misconduct resulted from her alcoholism, the review department denied her request to augment the record with declarations about her recovery from alcoholism as the record was neither incorrect nor incomplete. However, where respondent challenged the hearing judge's finding that respondent made a deliberate misrepresentation at a pretrial conference, the review department granted the State Bar's request to augment the record with the transcript of the conference as the record was incomplete without the transcript. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(e)(3); former Provisional Rules of Practice of State Bar, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [2]

Review department took judicial notice of stipulation and Court of Appeal opinion in civil cases involving respondent that post-dated hearing department proceedings and concerned matters discussed at hearing. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [1]

Where respondent sought to place documents, some of which were not before hearing judge, in record on review by including them in appendix to brief, without filing motion with reasons why documents could not have been produced at hearing, and without indicating how documents would correct or complete record, review department declined to take judicial notice of documents. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [3]

Where respondent was ordered by hearing judge to file pretrial statement as provided by rule 1222, Provisional Rules of Practice, respondent's actions in entering into joint pretrial statement with State Bar did not constitute spontaneous candor and cooperation which would warrant finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [5]

Where respondent's default had been entered in hearing department, and motion for relief from default was denied, respondent's sole remedy on review was to seek review of denial of relief from default. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1400(e)(vii).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [2]

State Bar's motion for emergency relief from hearing judge's order regarding conduct of disciplinary investigation was not properly brought before review department under either rule 350 of Transitional Rules of Procedure or rule 1400 of Provisional Rules of Practice. However, motion by State Bar to stay or vacate order issued by hearing judge based on argument that hearing judge acted without jurisdiction was properly brought under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [1]

Petitions to augment the record on review are generally granted only if it is demonstrated that the record below is incomplete or incorrect. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) The general rule is not to entertain evidence not heard by the hearing judge unless it is the only means of presenting limited evidence of subsequent rehabilitation. It is also unusual for petitions to augment to be granted if contested. Where respondent requested to augment the record with documents relating to one of his complaining clients, and with two newspaper articles, respondent did not show good cause for the review department to consider such evidence over the State Bar's objection. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [9]

Where respondent's brief on review referred to facts and newspaper articles regarding victim of respondent's misconduct which were not part of the record, review department declined to strike brief or admonish respondent or his counsel, but emphasized that its review is limited to the evidence properly made a part of the record. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rules 1303-1304.) In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [1]

Where parties jointly requested augmentation of record with exhibits which they had provided to hearing judge for consideration in rendering decision and had intended to make part of record, and which hearing judge had relied on in reaching decision, and which were vital to review, record would have been incomplete without exhibits, and request to augment was granted. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [2]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

It is well established that an aggrieved party may properly bring to the court's attention the alleged breach of a settlement agreement arrived at before a judge and reflected in an ensuing court order. Rule 1231 of the Provisional Rules of Practice and Evidence Code sections 1152, subdivision (a) and 1154 only preclude evidence of settlement offers and negotiations that do not result in an agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [7]

Pretrial statements are an important tool in conducting an efficient multi-count trial. Unexcused failure to comply with an order requiring a pretrial statement (see rule 1222, Prov. Rules of Practice) should not be treated lightly. However, where counsel failed to make appropriate motions during trial resulting from the other party's failure to file a pretrial statement, no issue was preserved for appeal. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [1]

Where the record of a legal specialization proceeding contained no documents explaining the basis for the denial of specialist certification and where responses by the deputy trial counsel to interrogatories clarified the basis for the denial, augmentation of the record with the interrogatory responses was appropriate. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

Because section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies by rule in State Bar Court proceedings, service of a hearing department decision by mail to an address within California extends by five days the 30-day period for filing a request for review. (Rule 450, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar; rule 1111(b), Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [3]

Where reinstatement petitioner's employer offered favorable character testimony at trial, and petitioner requested augmentation of the record to add the employer's declaration executed over 14 months later updating and reiterating such testimony, the review department considered the record incomplete without the declaration and granted petitioner's unopposed request to augment the record with the declaration. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [2]

The rule permitting a party to exclude rebuttal or impeachment witnesses from a pretrial statement (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1222(g)) has no bearing on the broader issue of discoverable information. Discovery of identities of individuals is not limited to persons who may be called in the opposing party's case in chief. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [7]

A hearing judge's announcement of tentative findings on culpability from the bench may be necessary due to the bifurcated nature of State Bar Court proceedings coupled with the desire to avoid an extra day of hearing. (Rules 1250, 1260, Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [8]

Requests to augment the record at the review department level will be granted only if the original record is incomplete or incorrect. (Rule 1304, Provisional Rules of Practice.) Out-of-court evidence offered at the appellate level is ordinarily hearsay, and impossible to evaluate because of the absence of cross-examination to test the credibility of the declarant. The rule is to rely only on evidence which was presented to the trier of fact. The only general exception is to permit documentary evidence of subsequent rehabilitation when it is the only means to meet the heavy burden of demonstrating recovery from substance abuse or mental disorder. Where proffered additional evidence was derived from the record in another proceeding involving respondent, and was not offered to correct any omission in the record, the review department declined to grant respondent's motion to augment the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [2]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §§ 451 et. seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

Examiner's brief violated rule 1306 of the Provisional Rules of Practice of the State Bar Court by failing to include topical index and authorities table, but review department declined to strike it due to recent adoption of rule and lack of asserted prejudice to opposing party. Review department noted that rule 1312 of the Provisional Rules of Practice of the State Bar Court provides for clerk's office to return, unfiled, papers not conforming to rules, absent application to and order from Presiding Judge. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [7]

While the review department is not required to afford the parties an opportunity to brief additional issues raised by it on review, it is the preference of the review department to have issues thoroughly briefed, and rule 1311(a) of the [Provisional] Rules of Practice expressly allows for deferral of submission of cases after oral argument to permit supplementary briefs when considered appropriate. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [8]

136.00 Revised Rules of Practice (2009 and 1995 versions)

136.01 Effective date/scope of applicability

136.02 Comparison to former Provisional Rules of Practice (pre-1995)

136.03 Comparison of 2009 version to 1995 version

136.09 Other issues re revised Rules of Practice generally

136.10 Division I, General Provisions (rules 1100-1132)

Except for service of initial pleading in a proceedings, State Bar Rules of Procedure and State Bar Court Rules of Practice require that attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges contain an address of service for the attorney. Thus, clerk properly served copy of hearing judge's decision on attorney by mailing it to attorney at the address listed in the attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges even though that address was not address that attorney maintained on State Bar's official membership records, particularly since attorney never notified clerk that he wished to be served at any address other than the address listed on the response. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [9]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

136.20 Division II, Hearing Department (rules 1200-1270)

When respondent's refusal to provide names of any witnesses or identify any exhibits as required by Rules of Practice regarding pretrial statements and exchange of exhibits was based on respondent's dissatisfaction over hearing judge's pretrial order, hearing judge did not abuse discretion in sanctioning respondent for not complying with Rules of Practice by precluding respondent from presenting any evidence at trial. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [6 a-g]

136.30 Division III, Review Department (rules 1300-1343)

When a party supports a statement in its brief with a reference to a finding or conclusion in the hearing judge's decision, party must also provide references to where the evidence supporting the hearing judge's finding or conclusion may be found in the record in order to comply with rules of procedure and rule of practice mandating that statements in briefs be supported with proper references to the record. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 302(a), 303(a); State Bar Ct. Rules of Prac., rule 1320.) In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [1]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

139 Miscellaneous General Procedural Issues

When a member of the State Bar has committed misconduct prior to admission to practice law, the State Bar may seek the attorney's discipline or seek to recommend the cancellation or revocation of the member's law license.

Depending on the balance of facts and circumstances unique to each case, either or both alternatives could be considered in appropriate cases. It appears that the Supreme Court considers cancellation the appropriate step when an applicant has wrongfully obtained the benefits of admission such as by intentional misrepresentation which prevents the Committee of Bar Examiners from adequately considering the applicant's fitness to practice. Although respondent should have timely updated her application to disclose to the Committee of Bar Examiners misdemeanor charges against her, as she had a duty to do so under the Rules Regulating Admission to Practice Law and it bore upon her application to practice law, the nondisclosure was not intended to and did not result in wrongfully conferring on respondent the benefit of law licensure. Given the formal record of the events surrounding respondent's misdemeanor charges before the review department, the Committee of Bar Examiners was not deprived of the opportunity to adequately consider respondent's fitness to practice such that respondent wrongfully obtained the benefit of law licensure. Therefore, the review department did not recommend cancellation of respondent's law license. In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746. [1a–d]

When significant procedural opportunities are denied a litigant by steps taken during investigation before the filing of disciplinary charges, which place a litigant at a substantive disadvantage in the ensuing disciplinary proceeding, it is appropriate for State Bar Court to exercise its jurisdiction to review those steps after the proceeding is filed. The deprivation of the opportunities (1) for respondent to meet with the State Bar prosecuting attorney 20 days before disciplinary charges were filed against respondent, which opportunity the State Bar routinely extends as a matter of policy, and (2) for respondent to request, in accordance with State Bar Rule of Procedure 75, an early neutral evaluation conference with a State Bar Court judge before disciplinary charges were filed are both significant procedural opportunities that the State Bar Court may review upon the filing of the formal notice of disciplinary charges. Accordingly, the State Bar Court had the authority to assess whether respondent was deprived of these pre-filing opportunities and, if so, to fashion an appropriate remedy. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [1 a-f]

Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262, which authorizes proceedings to be dismissed in the furtherance of justice, is construed in the State Bar Court in the same manner as its analog Penal Code section 1385 is construed in criminal proceedings. State Bar rule does not permit respondents to make motions. Motions may be made only by the State Bar as the prosecutor or a dismissal may be entered on State Bar Court's own motion after taking required steps. Hearing judge's dismissal of proceeding comported with those required pre-dismissal steps because she issued an order to show cause to the parties, allowed for responses from them, considered all appropriate interests, and stated in detail her reason for dismissal, and since the hearing judge acted promptly after the proceeding was filed and since the dismissal was expressly without prejudice to refiling, review department saw no prejudice to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [2 a-c]

In absence of specific statute or rule of procedure directing a specified mode of proceeding, it is not unreasonable or arbitrary for a hearing judge to utilize analogous civil procedures to resolve motions. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [4]

Once the hearing judge who tried this case left the State Bar Court, he became ineligible to take any further action in the case. Of necessity, that judge was unavailable to consider respondent's post-trial motions. In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [1]

Respondent's testimony and arguments regarding his customary practices (1) to limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and (2) to rely on or permit referring nonattorney immigration services providers to prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients placed respondent's practices in issue so that any uncharged improprieties in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [4 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

Respondent's arguments and testimony that almost all hearing judge's findings of misconduct are erroneous because they are based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients placed respondent's methods of practicing law in issue so that any uncharged impropriety in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [9 a, b]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

Under State Bar Act and disciplinary case law, respondent had affirmative duty to insure that his answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar were true and correct even if he had to refresh his recollection of the facts by going to the immigration court and reviewing the court file and listening to the tapes of all relevant court hearings in each client matter that was a subject of the interrogatories.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [27]

Under Civil Discovery Act, respondent had affirmative duty to answer each of the State Bar's interrogatories as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to him permitted.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [28]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

In view of the review department's duty to independently review the record and make findings of fact and conclusions of law, any alleged denial of due process by the hearing judge's failure to clearly identify respondent's misconduct in the hearing judge's decision was remedied by the review department's issuance of an opinion that superseded the hearing judge's decision. Therefore, respondent's due process contention was rendered moot and was not addressed on the merits.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[2]

Where neither the State Bar nor respondent addressed certain culpability issues on review, and further determinations regarding these culpability issues would not affect in any way the discipline recommendation, the review department determined that this was one of the rare instances in which it need not independently determine these culpability issues.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[3 a-c]

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [2]

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

Where findings made by the hearing judge cast respondent in a negative light but did not result in an additional ground of discipline or aggravation, respondent failed to demonstrate any specific or actual prejudice that would entitle him to any relief on review. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [5]

Because Rules of Professional Conduct 3-700(A)(2) (prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment) and 3-700(D)(1) (mandating return of client property) have not been amended or modified since they were first adopted and became effective on May 27, 1989, there are no "former" versions of those rules. Thus, the review department deemed the charged and found violations that State Bar and the hearing judge incorrectly described as violations of "former" rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1) to be charged and found violations of rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1), which became effective on May 27, 1989. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [1]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

In the hearing judge's discipline recommendation that respondent "be suspended from the practice of law for three years and until he provides proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) [of the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct], that said suspension be stayed; and that he be placed on probation for four years subject to the following conditions: . . ," the provision that respondent's three-year suspension continue until he proves his rehabilitation, fitness, learning, and ability in accordance with standard 1.4(c)(ii) is stayed along with the recommended three-year suspension so that, if the State Bar files a probation revocation proceeding against respondent seeking to have all, or a part, of the three-year stayed suspension imposed on him, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) would be an available condition. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [13]

Statutory provision granting attorneys the right to recover costs from State Bar provides that attorneys who have been exonerated of all disciplinary charges following a trial are entitled to reimbursement from the State Bar "in an amount determined by the State Bar to be the reasonable expenses, other than fees for attorneys or experts, of preparing for [trial]" without defining "reasonable expenses" (other than expressly excluding fees for attorneys and experts) and without prescribing the method by which State Bar is to determine what they are. Accordingly, State Bar Board of Governors properly exercised its statutory rule making authority and adopted State Bar Rule of Procedure 283 to define what expenses (or costs) are allowable as "reasonable expenses" for which exonerated attorneys may obtain reimbursement under statute and to provide the procedure by which exonerated attorneys are to seek reimbursement from the State Bar for those expenses. In absence of Supreme Court authority to the contrary, the State Bar Court may award exonerated attorneys reimbursement from the State Bar for reasonable expenses only if they are specified as allowable expenses in Rule of Procedure 283. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

Because bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud when attorney incurred credit card debts were made under preponderance of the evidence standard and not clear and convincing standard applicable in disciplinary proceedings, hearing judge correctly (1) declined to apply principles of collateral estoppel to bind attorney with bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud; (2) reweighed evidence from bankruptcy court proceedings under clear and convincing standard after giving attorney fair opportunity to contradict, temper, and explain that evidence; and (3) permitted State Bar to present additional evidence regarding attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [3]

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [8]

Except for service of initial pleading in a proceedings, State Bar Rules of Procedure and State Bar Court Rules of Practice require that attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges contain an address of service for the attorney. Thus, clerk properly served copy of hearing judge's decision on attorney by mailing it to attorney at the address listed in the attorney's response to notice of disciplinary charges even though that address was not address that attorney maintained on State Bar's official membership records, particularly since attorney never notified clerk that he wished to be served at any address other than the address listed on the response. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [9]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Even though Rules of Procedure adopted by State Bar's Board of Governors are not legislative acts, it is appropriate to construe them using rules for statutory interpretation/construction. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [4]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [6 a-b]

Even if issue had properly been before review department on summary review, respondent would not have been entitled to any mitigating credit for self reporting to State Bar his misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of clients because respondent had a pre-existing statutory duty to report his criminal conviction. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [1]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [2 a-c]

In two situations, applying statute to acts before statute's effective date are not retroactive application of statute: when statute merely clarifies, rather than substantially changes law; and when statute changes trial procedure, but does not change legal consequences of parties' past conduct. Amendments effective January 1, 1997, to summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)) are not clarifying or procedural because they significantly broadened scope of crimes for which attorneys are subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [3 a-c]

To apply amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997, against an attorney whose disciplinary proceeding began before January 1, 1997, effective date of amendments would be impermissible retroactive application of amendments. That is because amendments had dramatic effect on attorney's legal ability to practice law and deprived attorney of right to request hearing on inactive enrollment and because amendments neither clarified prior law nor merely changed procedure of trial. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1 a-f]

Even though respondent received extensive trial on disciplinary charges, he was never formally notified that outcome of trial could result in his immediate and automatic inactive enrollment under amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997. Reasonable notice is crucial to a meaningful hearing. Thus, disciplinary trial itself could not have provided respondent with minimal protection on issue of inactive enrollment because issues can differ from case to case between the appropriate level of discipline for misconduct compared to the need for immediate public protection to protect existing or future clients from additional risk of harm. And disciplinary hearing did not fulfill explicitly recognized right to request hearing on the propriety of inactive enrollment provided for under former version of section 6007, subdivision (c)(4) before its amendment effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2 a-b]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in issuing a pretrial order precluding respondent from attempting to impeach State Bar's witnesses with evidence of witnesses' alleged criminal activities, terrorist activities, racism, hate crimes, molestation of foster children, etc. except by evidence of proved felonies introduced into evidence in strict compliance with Evidence Code. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [5 a-c]

When respondent's refusal to provide names of any witnesses or identify any exhibits as required by Rules of Practice regarding pretrial statements and exchange of exhibits was based on respondent's dissatisfaction over hearing judge's pretrial order, hearing judge did not abuse discretion in sanctioning respondent for not complying with Rules of Practice by precluding respondent from presenting any evidence at trial. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [6 a-g]

Neither due process nor former Transitional Rules of Procedure, rules 508 and 509 required State Bar to give respondent exhaustive list of each complaint against her before filing notice of disciplinary charges. Former rules 508 and 509 merely gave respondent right to deny or explain her actions to State Bar and inquire of State Bar concerning the charges against her. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [7 a-h]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State

Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3 a-b]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [1]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [4]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [3]

The hearing judge's appropriate role is to decide the issues on the evidence presented. If that process leads the hearing judge to conclude that the party bearing the burden of proof had not prevailed, then the judge's duty is to find against the particular party on that issue or to recommend that only that degree of discipline, if any, which is warranted by the evidence presented. The party failing in its burden runs the very risk that the judge will so act. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a hearing judge is not authorized to require the production of added evidence beyond which the parties have chosen to present. If parties or witnesses testify, the hearing judge is at liberty to ask questions of a type consistent with the judicial function of supervising or regulating the trial. Moreover, allegations against other attorneys can be referred to the State Bar for new investigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888. [2]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [1]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [2]

When a party seeks or consents to a court's action that is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the party may be estopped to complain of the court's action as long as the court had subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent was estopped from collaterally attacking a final order extending the time in which he was required to comply with conditions attached to a reproval where he consented to the order and where the court had jurisdiction of the subject. The review department concluded that the application of estoppel was in harmony with the primary goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [3]

An attorney's criminal conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is deemed a conviction for attorney disciplinary purposes and is conclusive proof of the attorney's guilt on each of the essential elements of the offense of which the attorney was convicted. Thus, respondent cannot collaterally attack his conviction in the State Bar Court even though the victim of respondent's crime lost her civil lawsuit against respondent for damages. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [4]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

Because none of the hearing judge's material findings of fact were challenged on review, State Bar's contention that the hearing judge's disciplinary recommendation was incomplete in that it did not contain a probation condition requiring respondent to file quarterly probation reports fell explicitly within the purview of the rule of procedure permitting summary review. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [1]

Even though the review department retains its authority to independently review the full record in summary review proceedings, it gives deference to the litigants' identification of the issues and ordinarily limits the scope of review to those issues. The review department followed this practice in the present proceeding except that it modified the costs provision because of recent statutory changes. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [2]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has the exclusive jurisdiction to conduct investigations and bring disciplinary charges. The State Bar may file disciplinary charges if it finds in its discretion that there is reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. Upon reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated a condition or conditions of probation, the State Bar may file either an original disciplinary proceeding based on the violation or a motion to revoke probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [1]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has exclusive jurisdiction to supervise members placed on probation and exclusive authority to initiate probation revocation proceedings. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court retains plenary authority over the regulation and discipline of attorneys. Neither the statutes nor the rules of procedure limit the Supreme Court's plenary authority. The Supreme Court may, in the exercise of its plenary authority, impose a hearing judge supervised probation condition regardless of the statutes and rules covering disciplinary proceedings. By imposing such a probation condition, the Supreme Court would necessarily confer jurisdiction on the hearing judge to monitor compliance. Thus, the review department did not find persuasive the State Bar's argument that the hearing judge lacked jurisdiction to supervise probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [2]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

A retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions and conditions which are performed or exist prior to the adoption of the statute. Respondent's crimes were committed and her conviction occurred when the prior version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) was in effect and her offenses were not within the scope of the former version of the statute. In addition, as respondent would not have been subject to summary disbarment, she had a right under the former version of the statute to a hearing and to present evidence prior to the imposition of discipline. The application of the present version of section 6102, subdivision (c) under these circumstances would be retrospective. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [2]

It is presumed an amendment to a statute operates prospectively unless the Legislature has expressly stated the contrary or, after considering all pertinent factors, there is clear indication of a legislative intent that the statute operate retrospectively. Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) does not contain an express retroactivity provision and after considering extrinsic factors, including public protection and due process, the review department concluded that section 6102, subdivision (c) should not be applied retroactively. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [3]

The important public interest served by the summary disbarment statute does not show that the legislature intended the statute to operate retroactively. A summary disbarment proceeding, by definition, excludes an evidentiary hearing in the State Bar Court prior to disbarment. However, pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6101, subdivision (a), upon receipt of a certified copy of the record conviction, attorneys convicted of a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude are interimly suspended from the practice of law pending final disposition of the proceeding. Thus, even if an evidentiary hearing is held, the attorney convicted of an offense that would warrant disbarment is immediately suspended from the practice of law and can remain suspended until disbarred. Accordingly, the public is promptly protected from attorneys convicted of crimes of dishonesty regardless of whether summary disbarment occurs. Moreover, the opportunity for a referral hearing is not designed to lower professional standards. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [4]

An attorney's reliance on the former law is a factor to consider in determining the constitutional question of whether the retroactive application of the statute would deny due process. However, if, as a matter of statutory construction, the provision is prospective, no constitutional question is presented. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [5]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

The complaining clients' settlement of their civil matter against respondent and the clients' release of all claims against him does not preclude the State Bar from proceeding with the disciplinary matter. A disciplinary proceeding is not a controversy between two individuals, the complainant and the accused attorney, but is an adverse proceeding against the accused attorney and may be instituted and prosecuted upon the complaint of any person knowing the facts upon which the proceeding is based. The complaining person or client is not a party to the disciplinary proceeding, and need not appear and testify at trial. Thus, the disciplinary case was not a right, claim, or cause of action that accrued to the complaining clients; and therefore it was not a claim that they could release or otherwise compromise. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [1]

A hearing judge's determination to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with prejudice over the State Bar's objection that the dismissals should be without prejudice is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [1]

Even though equitable estoppel does not control a hearing judge's determination whether to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with or without prejudice, the considerations in making such a determination are not dissimilar. Thus, in determining that the dismissals should be with prejudice in the present case, the hearing judge properly considered the positions of the parties and its effect on each side. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [2]

The fact that respondent may be placed in "indefinite limbo" if specified charges are dismissed in the furtherance of justice without prejudice is not sufficient cause to require that the charges be dismissed with prejudice. His remedy in any subsequent proceeding would be a due process argument for relief caused by unreasonable delay based upon a sufficient showing of specific prejudice resulting therefrom. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [3]

Generally, it is in the public interest to dispose of disciplinary charges on the merits. However, the public interest and the interests of justice would not be served by permitting the State Bar to maintain specified charges for possible later prosecution by dismissing the charges without prejudice when respondent relied on the charges to his detriment in preparation for and during trial and in doing so exposed his defense case. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [4]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

One to whose conduct a statute clearly applies may not successfully challenge it for vagueness. Accordingly, respondent could not successfully challenge section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code as unconstitutionally vague where he had deliberately misinformed a client about the receipt of a settlement check, misappropriated funds from four clients, and practiced law and held himself out as entitled to practice law when he knew he was suspended. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [3]

Respondent's suggestion that alleged ineffective assistance of his counsel necessitates a new trial was rejected. A disciplinary proceeding is administrative in nature, not governed by the rules of criminal procedure. Although an attorney in a disciplinary hearing must have a fair hearing, the attorney has no constitutional right to counsel or effective assistance from counsel. Any mistakes of respondent's counsel thus did not warrant retrial. Nor did the record establish that respondent received an unfair hearing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [5]

Where respondent contended that California's disciplinary process violates the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, respondent failed to recognize that the judiciary of each state has the right to regulate the practice of law in that state. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [2]

No merit was found to respondent's claim that California's disciplinary process violates due process because of the alleged financial interest of State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff in the outcome of disciplinary proceedings and in the collection of disciplinary costs. California provides attorneys subject to discipline with more than constitutionally sufficient procedural due process. The Supreme Court has inherent and plenary authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, and the State Bar serves as its administrative arm to assist with these matters. The Supreme Court appoints the judges of the State Bar Court, and the Legislature sets their salaries comparable to judges of courts of record. The State Bar Court judges are subject to discipline on the same grounds as a judge of any other state court. The annual membership fees of attorneys who belong to the State Bar, not the costs assessed upon the imposition of discipline, pay the salaries of the State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff. Thus, personal financial interest does not dictate the outcome of disciplinary proceedings or the imposition of disciplinary costs. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [3]

Respondent was not entitled to present evidence for the first time on review that a State Bar official had engaged in improper conduct in a separate civil proceeding against respondent, where respondent had the opportunity to make this allegation and present evidence in support of it at the hearing level. Also, respondent failed to show how such evidence had any bearing on either his culpability of the charges against him or the appropriate discipline for his misconduct. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [4]

The State Bar Court must address all charges unless they are dismissed on motion of the prosecutor. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [1]

Delay in prosecution bars a disciplinary proceeding only if the delay caused specific actual prejudice resulting in the denial of a fair trial. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [2]

Review department is very reluctant to consider a legal theory raised by an appellant for the first time on review. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [4]

Prior civil court findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof merely constitute evidence in a State Bar Court proceeding, not the exclusive record upon which an issue must be adjudicated. While the State Bar may choose to proffer prior civil court findings as its entire case against an attorney or applicant on the underlying issue, the attorney or applicant then has the right to controvert, temper, or explain the civil findings with other evidence, including live testimony from the same witnesses who testified in the civil trial. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [6]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

An attorney's disobedience of a court order involves moral turpitude for disciplinary purposes only if the attorney acted in either objective or subjective bad faith. Review department declined to find respondent culpable of moral turpitude for failure to appear as ordered at settlement conference, where such culpability was argued for first time on review, notice to show cause did not allege that failure to appear was in bad faith, and hearing judge made no findings regarding respondent's objective or subjective bad faith in failing to obey order to appear. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [6]

Attorney's out-of-state discipline was not entitled to preclusive effect under California statute providing for expedited disciplinary proceeding based on discipline in other jurisdictions where State Bar did not proceed pursuant to procedures set forth in such statute. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [9]

Possible collateral estoppel effect of attorney's out-of-state discipline could not be addressed where record did not reveal factual underpinnings of such discipline and did not permit determination as to what issues were actually litigated in out-of-state disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [10]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

Former disciplinary structure under which local administrative committees had both investigative and fact-finding powers raised due process concerns. Under volunteer State Bar Court system which superseded it, investigative and prosecutorial functions were separated from fact-finding and adjudicative functions. This separation was strengthened and institutionalized by reforms which created independently appointed State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [5]

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

Where parties to a disciplinary proceeding reached a stipulation but agreed to preserve right to seek review as to one contested culpability issue, review department construed order approving stipulation and hearing judge's partial decision as together constituting a decision for the purpose of review. However, review department was obligated to review entire record independently and had authority to make findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation at variance with those of hearing department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Agreement between parties could not restrict review department's obligation of independent review. Accordingly, review department declined to limit its review to contested culpability decision, and was not bound by stipulated discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [1]

When judges are asked to approve stipulations, they cannot rely solely on State Bar's acquiescence in proposed discipline, but must exercise their independent judgment in carrying out their obligation to examine stipulation, admitted facts, and proposed discipline for fairness to parties and for extent to which public will be adequately protected thereby. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 407(a).) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [9]

Where parties agreed to highly unusual stipulation expressly preserving right to seek review, but did not contemplate that review department would recommend discipline more severe than that set forth in order approving stipulation, parties' expectation that review department would be bound by stipulated discipline was unjustified. However, it was appropriate to relieve parties from stipulation due to their mutual mistake. Accordingly, review department vacated order approving stipulation and remanded proceeding for new stipulation or trial. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [11]

Review department's general practice is not to publish opinions in matters where oral argument has not been heard. However, where the only party which had appeared in a proceeding requested publication of an order issued without oral argument, and the order dealt with a situation which had not been addressed in review department's prior published opinions, the request for publication was granted. The effective date of the order was not affected by its modification due to the request for publication. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [1]

Where, due to the dismissal of all charges, a disciplinary hearing had included a culpability phase but not a sanction phase, and where the review department found respondent culpable of misconduct, it would be inappropriate for the review department to recommend or impose any sanction even if the State Bar wished to waive its opportunity to introduce evidence regarding aggravation, because respondent wanted and was entitled to the opportunity to offer evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [14]

Finality of an attorney's criminal conviction is not essential for an order referring the conviction to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether there is probable cause to conclude that the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude for purposes of interim suspension of the attorney. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

An attorney's unauthorized practice of law while on suspension is an appropriate matter to be considered in aggravation. Where, during the trial in a disciplinary matter, the respondent made a court appearance in a client's case while suspended for nonpayment of dues, the deputy trial counsel was not obligated to wait to file another disciplinary action to address the issue. Where respondent's counsel agreed that the deputy trial counsel could introduce evidence regarding respondent's court appearance during a later phase of the hearing, respondent received proper notice of the charge in aggravation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [15]

Where respondent had been given notice that if his disciplinary probation were revoked he could be placed on inactive enrollment, and where the Office of Trials expressed grave concerns as to the threat posed by respondent to clients and the public, the Office of Trials could have sought to have respondent placed on inactive enrollment at the time the hearing judge revoked probation. Where it did not do so, respondent was allowed to continue to practice pending review of the hearing judge's order. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [18]

Negotiations regarding an agreement ordinarily result in a binding contract when all of the essential terms are definitely understood, even if a formal writing is to be executed later and even if there is uncertainty in a minor, nonessential detail. Where all elements of a stipulation settling a disciplinary proceeding were resolved at a settlement conference, and the settlement judge's ensuing order indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the settlement agreement was binding even though no formal written stipulation had yet been signed. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [4]

Where a settlement judge's order following a settlement conference indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the order was binding and an attorney's failure to abide by it, without moving for relief therefrom, constituted a violation of the statutes requiring obedience to court orders and respect for courts and judicial officers. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [5]

No method of enforcement of settlement agreements in disciplinary proceedings is set forth in the Transitional Rules of Procedure, but an express provision governing this subject is not essential to the court's inherent jurisdiction to exercise reasonable control over proceedings before it in order to avoid unnecessary delay. Where one party refused to abide by a settlement agreement, the other party could have made a motion to compel enforcement of the agreement, by analogy with the statutory motion permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 664.6, or could have asserted the agreement as an affirmative defense in the pending proceeding. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [6]

It is well established that an aggrieved party may properly bring to the court's attention the alleged breach of a settlement agreement arrived at before a judge and reflected in an ensuing court order. Rule 1231 of the Provisional Rules of Practice and Evidence Code sections 1152, subdivision (a) and 1154 only preclude evidence of settlement offers and negotiations that do not result in an agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [7]

A letter sent by counsel for one party in a disciplinary proceeding to the opposing counsel, with copies to the settlement judge and assigned trial judge, did not constitute a prohibited ex parte communication with the court. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [8]

Pretrial statements are an important tool in conducting an efficient multi-count trial. Unexcused failure to comply with an order requiring a pretrial statement (see rule 1222, Prov. Rules of Practice) should not be treated lightly. However, where counsel failed to make appropriate motions during trial resulting from the other party's failure to file a pretrial statement, no issue was preserved for appeal. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [1]

The law of the case doctrine is one of policy and does not preclude the relitigation of issues already determined in a prior appeal. However, strong reasons should be put forward for seeking to relitigate an issue already fully litigated and decided on a prior appeal. Where a party sought reconsideration, on a second appeal, of the review department's determination of an issue on an earlier appeal in the same proceeding, without offering any justification for its failure to seek reconsideration earlier, and relying on no new case law or statute, the review department had no cognizable reason to reconsider its prior conclusion. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [2]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

Although Business and Professions Code section 6026.5(f) permits appeals from decisions of the Board of Legal Specialization to the Board of Governors of the State Bar to be treated as confidential, the Board of Governors, in delegating its authority to hear such appeals to the State Bar Court, did not expressly indicate whether it intended to preserve the confidentiality of such appeals. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 225(a)(1).) Where a legal specialization proceeding was treated as public by the hearing judge, the parties were deemed to have waived any argument that the review department should treat the proceeding as confidential by their failure to raise a timely objection to such treatment. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

Summary disbarment excludes the opportunity for an evidentiary hearing. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [1]

In considering whether to recommend summary disbarment, the State Bar Court is generally limited to determining whether the statutory and case law criteria have been met on the face of the conviction papers, although undisputed additional facts may also be taken into account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [3]

A stipulated disciplinary order does not constitute precedent, but does represent a determination by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the hearing judge that the degree of discipline ordered satisfies the need to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [11]

Because hearings and records regarding inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(b) are confidential, respondent was not identified in review department's opinion regarding issues raised by such inactive enrollment. However, where such issues arose during a disciplinary proceeding, the record in that proceeding remained public, subject to the hearing judge's discretion to seal specific portions of the record where proper grounds appeared. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [1]

Medical evidence regarding an attorney's competency to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding should be submitted to the State Bar Court at the hearing level. The reliability of evidence concerning a person's mental state is virtually impossible to test in the absence of cross-examination. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [10]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

Where a hearing judge's decision in one matter indicated that if the respondent filed a post-decision declaration in that matter, this would be taken into account in assessing discipline in a second pending matter, the examiner's objections on review to this aspect of the decision were rendered moot by the respondent's failure to file any such declaration, by the State Bar's apparent satisfaction with the result in the second matter, and by the review department's recommendation of disbarment in the first matter based on other grounds. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [6]

A showing of specific prejudice is required to invalidate a hearing judge's decision based on procedural errors. Where respondent did not allege and/or demonstrate that he suffered any specific prejudice as a result of numerous alleged procedural errors, he was not entitled to relief. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [3]

Where discovery period was extended, giving respondent ample time to conduct discovery, and where respondent engaged in discovery, did not seek additional time for further discovery, and did not move to compel further responses or to compel attendance of witnesses at depositions, respondent's contentions that errors occurred during discovery lacked merit. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [5]

Hearing judge's refusal to permit respondent to present evidence that value of one estate asset increased during respondent's delay in completing probate did not entitle respondent to relief, where such increase in value did not justify respondent's misconduct in delaying distribution of other estate assets. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [7]

Hearing judge's request that respondent discuss mitigation evidence with examiner and try to "work something out," in order to promote stipulations for the introduction of character letters, did not constitute an improper requirement that respondent obtain the State Bar's prior approval to present mitigation evidence. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [9]

The law of the case doctrine does not preclude the current review department from reviewing the former review department's decision de novo. If review is sought in a proceeding which had been previously decided by the former review department, the entire matter is before the review department for independent de novo review, and it may act on an issue regardless of whether the parties have raised it. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Accordingly, review department could reopen a charge dismissed by the former review department. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [1]

Former review department's alleged lack of quorum was moot where all issues in proceeding were before current review department for independent de novo review. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [3]

Issue of alleged misconduct of examiner during pretrial discovery was moot, where issue had been addressed by order of hearing judge which respondent did not challenge on review, and where only prejudice alleged was unnecessary prolongation of interim suspension for which review department gave respondent credit against recommended actual suspension. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [12]

Generally, when a lower court ruling favors disclosure of materials requested in discovery, in camera inspection cannot be requested for the first time on review. There is an exception for questions of first impression, but this exception did not apply where the authority relied on in requesting the inspection had been decided over 30 years earlier. Where the party requesting in camera inspection did so for the first time on a motion for reconsideration before the review department in bank, and gave no explanation of its failure to request such inspection earlier, the review department declined to conduct an in camera inspection. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [8]

Private personal information about a non-party to a proceeding may be privileged from discovery under some circumstances pursuant to the California constitutional right to privacy. The privacy right to be protected is that of the non-party, and the custodian of the private information may not waive it. The right to privacy is not absolute, but must be balanced against the need for disclosure. In a moral character proceeding, it was unreasonable for material witnesses against the applicant to claim a right of privacy preventing the disclosure of their identities to the applicant during discovery, while consenting to testify against the applicant at trial. However, as to the identities of persons whose testimony would not be used under any circumstances, the applicant had not made a sufficient showing of need to overcome these persons' privacy rights, and their names could be withheld from disclosure. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [10]

Declaration regarding facts relating to discovery motion was stricken as untimely, where it related to facts which should have been presented to hearing judge, not offered for the first time on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [12]

Judges in State Bar proceedings have inherent authority to exercise reasonable control over the proceedings in front of them. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [15]

Where an attorney is convicted of a crime which does not inherently involve moral turpitude, the attorney's conviction is referred to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the crime involved moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline, and to determine the appropriate disposition. Upon a referral of that type, the appropriate disposition can include dismissal of the proceedings if the hearing judge finds that the particular misconduct did not warrant professional discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [4]

Where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed due to State Bar's failure to bring forth clear and convincing evidence to support any of the charges, respondent was entitled by statute to reimbursement for the reasonable expenses of preparation for hearing, but State Bar Court was not authorized to award respondent any amount for attorney fees. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [9]

Where respondent sought no relief from hearing judge on account of respondent's inability to attend pre-trial conference, which respondent contended was excusable due to medical emergency, respondent could not be heard to complain for the first time on review. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

Under Supreme Court precedent and the State Bar Rules of Procedure, before entering into a stipulation resolving a disciplinary matter, the State Bar should notify the respondent of any other pending investigations or complaints. However, where respondent had been notified of a second complaint before respondent entered into a stipulation to a public reproval in an earlier, separate matter, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the failure of the earlier stipulation to refer to the pendency of the second complaint. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 406.) In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [2]

In order to establish a denial of a fair trial because of delay between the making of a complaint to the State Bar and the filing of a formal notice to show cause, an attorney must show specific instances of actual prejudice from the delay. Where information in support of respondent's claim of prejudice was available and known to respondent at the time of respondent's motion to dismiss before the hearing judge, but was not set forth in support of the motion, respondent could not improve on review the record he had the opportunity to make in the hearing department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [2]

A hearing judge's denial of respondent's request to remove and copy exhibits already admitted into evidence, due to concern for the integrity of the record, was not improper, and did not show bias. Moreover, by failing to seek relief before the hearing judge after being denied access to the exhibits by the State Bar Court clerk's office, respondent waived his right to raise the issue before the review department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [5]

Where the Supreme Court's order referring a conviction matter to the State Bar required the State Bar Court to determine whether the conviction involved misconduct warranting discipline, the order demonstrated that the attorney's conviction alone did not establish that the attorney was culpable of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [2]

Where Supreme Court directed State Bar Court only to hear evidence on appropriate level of discipline, hearing referee correctly ruled that Supreme Court had already established nature of respondent's criminal offense as one inherently involving moral turpitude, and Supreme Court's classification of offense of harboring a fugitive as one involving moral turpitude per se was final and binding on the State Bar Court. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [5]

Where record established that respondent had had opportunity to be heard by Supreme Court, prior to referral to State Bar Court, on question whether respondent's criminal offense involved moral turpitude per se, respondent was not denied due process by the Supreme Court's determination of that issue. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [6]

It is generally presumed that the arbitrators heard and decided all disputed issues in an arbitration. Where issue regarding costs was raised in an attorney's fees arbitration, and the arbitration award showed on its face that it covered costs as well as fees, and neither party contested the arbitrators' jurisdiction to consider issues of costs, issue of whether costs had been reimbursed should not have had to be relitigated in subsequent State Bar disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [12]

The doctrine of res judicata seeks to curtail multiple litigation causing vexation and expense to the parties and wasted effort and expense in judicial administration. Mistakes of fact or law do not affect the conclusive nature of an arbitration award against collateral attack. If the contending parties had a full and fair opportunity to litigate, there must be compelling reasons to sustain a plea for a second chance. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [13]

Where the review department rejected the hearing judge's recommended discipline of three months actual suspension and imposed a private reproval, this rendered moot respondent's arguments against the hearing judge's recommended imposition of notification requirements pursuant to rule 955 of the California Rules of Court and the imposition of costs. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [23]

Respondent was not entitled to a three-member hearing panel as a matter of due process. Where it was evident from the pre-trial filings that the case would require more than one day of hearing, the State Bar Court did not have discretion to assign the matter to a three-member panel, under the then-applicable statue. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6079 (b).) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [9]

In State Bar Court proceedings, the court acts as an administrative arm of the Supreme Court, and State Bar Court judges and referees function as "judicial officers." Therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure section 1990, any person present at a State Bar Court hearing may be compelled to take the witness stand by the judge or referee. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [31]

Where respondent did not agree in writing that statutory attorney-client fee arbitration would be binding, arbitration award was not binding even though it recited that it was. However, the award became binding when respondent failed to seek a post-arbitration trial within the statutory time limit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [3]

There is no statute of limitations in attorney disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [17]

Even if the procedure for a motion for judgment at the close of the moving party's case, as set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 631.8, does apply in State Bar proceedings, it was not error for the hearing referee to take respondent's motion under submission and rule on it after respondent had presented the defense case, and the motion was impliedly ruled on when the referee made initial rulings as to culpability. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [20]

In general, State Bar disciplinary proceedings are governed exclusively by the State Bar's rules of procedure, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply unless expressly incorporated by reference. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [21]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding must accept facts to which the respondent has stipulated. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [4]

In reinstatement cases, where the record on its face indicates a pending disciplinary matter dismissed without prejudice should the petitioner seek reinstatement, or indicates matters as serious as criminal convictions arising after disbarment or resignation, the parties should make clear on the record their respective positions on these factors, which could raise a serious question as to whether a person petitioning for reinstatement had been rehabilitated or was presently fit to practice law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [9]

Where parties stipulated to waive any variance between facts set forth in stipulation and allegations of notice to show cause, stipulated facts which were not charged in original notice could be considered even though notice had not been amended. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [1]

Where lapse of time between sessions of hearing in disciplinary matter resulted from respondent's own actions, and respondent never complained about delay, respondent waived right to speedy determination of charges underlying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [1]

Rule 232 of the California Rules of Court contemplates preparation of a tentative decision after the completion of the trial, not in midstream, as a preliminary stage in the procedure for requesting a statement of decision. Therefore, rule 232 does not support the legitimacy of issuing a tentative decision when only one side has presented evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [3]

Where respondent had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(c) prior to hearing on underlying charges, and after review, proceeding on underlying charges was remanded for partial rehearing and new discipline recommendation, review department directed that on remand, whether suspension or disbarment was recommended, respondent should receive credit for time spent on inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [25]

Upon respondent's application for retransfer to active status from involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c), based on delay in processing of disciplinary proceeding on underlying charges, hearing judge must determine to what extent respondent or respondent's counsel was responsible for such delays, and whether circumstances otherwise justified any delays. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 799, 799.7, 799.8.) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [26]

State Bar proceedings are sui generis, and are not governed by the principles of administrative mandamus applicable to ordinary administrative proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [2]

The doctrine of law of the case did not preclude the full-time review department from reconsidering a decision of the former, volunteer review department. Due to the non-finality of recommendations of the former State Bar Court review department, law of the case did not apply to them. Upon its independent de novo review, review department was not bound to follow earlier factual determinations made prior to remand. Review department was also free to reconsider prior review department's legal interpretation of rule of professional conduct, given flexibility of law of the case doctrine in California appellate courts. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [3]

Evidence provided by State Bar demonstrated that closure and reopening of investigation of disciplinary matter was in compliance with applicable rules and did not bar disciplinary proceedings; respondent had not been prejudiced by delay. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [12]

To justify relief based on claimed procedural irregularity, specific prejudice must be shown; relief was denied to reinstatement petitioner who made conclusory claim of prejudice from prolongation of pre-hearing investigation, but did not demonstrate actual prejudice. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [5]

Time to file answer to notice to show cause is extended twenty days by service of notice of application to enter default, and is extended an additional five days when the application is served by mail. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent who filed motion for relief from default had previously submitted proposed answer to notice to show cause to State Bar Court and served it on examiner, and declaration accompanying motion to set aside default verified essential allegations of proposed answer, this constituted substantial compliance with rule requiring motion to set aside default to be accompanied by verified proposed answer. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

There is a strong public policy in favor of hearing cases on the merits and against depriving a party of the right of appeal because of technical noncompliance in matters of form. The policy against deprivation of a hearing due to noncompliance with filing requirements appears just as strong in the situation of noncompliance resulting in default prior to trial. In both cases parties are deprived of a significant legal remedy if the noncomplying pleading is ultimately disregarded despite its reasonably timely correction. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [5]

Review department declined to decide whether clerk's entry of default prior to expiration of reasonable time to respond to clerk's notice, which rejected answer due to technical defects, was void, or erroneous and voidable. Instead, review department determined that the denial of respondent's motion to set aside default was an abuse of discretion. An attorney's neglect in untimely filing papers must be evaluated in light of the reasonableness of the attorney's conduct; respondent acted reasonably in timely submitting answer to notice to show cause, and promptly resubmitting corrected answer after receiving clerk's rejection notice. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Where record showed that respondent cured defects in otherwise timely answer within six days of mailing of notice to do so by clerk's office, review department's duty of independent record review precluded it from ignoring those facts in determining just disposition of motion for relief from default, despite weakness of respondent's moving papers. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

An attorney is ordinarily justified in relying on communications from the clerk as a basis for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Examiner's argument against setting aside default on review, based on resulting delay, necessity for new trial, and resulting prejudice and inconvenience, was unpersuasive. Reversal of denial of motion to set aside default will always require new hearing. Moreover, record revealed that examiner had notice prior to hearing of respondent's intention to move to set aside default. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [16]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

A motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to provide the respondent with sufficient notice of the alleged misconduct is available where appropriate to assure adequate notice of charges in compliance with statutory mandate and due process. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [1]

Even if it were established that examiner had sent complaining witness's letter to hearing referee, respondent had waived any claim of prejudicial misconduct by his counsel's failure to preserve the objection at trial, and in any event no identifiable prejudice resulted from the referee's exposure to the letter's hearsay statements where the referee heard five days of testimony, including testimony on the same subject by the letter's author and by persons with personal knowledge. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [7]

Where respondent's two convictions were interconnected in their surrounding facts and circumstances, and where the record in the earlier matter lacked information regarding respondent's compliance with his criminal probation and his subsequent rehabilitation, a remand of the first matter and consolidation with the subsequent, related matter would be appropriate, in order to give the Supreme Court a single, more complete record and a single recommendation of discipline, if any. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [6]

140 Evidentiary Issues

140.10 Comparison of Rule 5.104 (2011) to former Rule 214 (1995)

140.20 Rights of Parties (rule 5.104(B) (2011))

Rule 5.124 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides specific and limited grounds for dismissal. Where respondent's pretrial motion to dismiss did not argue that notice of disciplinary charges failed to state a legally disciplinable offense or to give sufficient notice of the charges, but rather sought dismissal on merits, relying on declarations and supporting documents, motion was equivalent to summary judgment motion, which is not provided for under rule 5.124. Hearing judge erred in granting motion to dismiss based on pretrial factual findings, thereby deriving State Bar of its right to present evidence of respondent's culpability at trial. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [1 a,b]

141 Relevance

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).) In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

Although earlier admissions cases do not consider the time a petitioner is in custody or under court or State Bar supervision to be particularly weighty in assessing rehabilitation, the petitioner in each of those cases had engaged in extremely serious misconduct for an extensive time and had not adequately shown rehabilitation in light of the seriousness of the offenses. In contrast, in this case, petitioner's misconduct, though clearly serious, spanned four years, but there was no evidence that petitioner acted in less than an exemplary fashion while on probation. Further, some of petitioner's positive conduct, notably his cooperation with the State Bar, occurred despite his understanding that he would get no benefit from it. The review department therefore concluded that it was appropriate in this case to accord some weight to petitioner's activities while on probation, but it gave far greater weight to the last four years of petitioner's showing, which were after he completed his criminal probation. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2 a,b]

Negative testimony regarding petitioner's rehabilitation did not rebut petitioner's favorable testimony for a very important reason: the negative testimony was based solely on the severity of petitioner's earlier misconduct and not on his rehabilitative steps since resignation. The witnesses had no personal observation of petitioner for most, if not all, of the 10 years that elapsed between the time petitioner resigned and the State Bar Court hearings. Thus, while the negative testimony of each of these witnesses was relevant on the issues of the seriousness and the nature and extent of petitioner's prior misconduct, it was of little relevance on the issues of petitioner's present character and of whether petitioner has maintained a sustained period of unblemished and exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [7 a-c]

The relevant testimony of a witness given in civil proceeding is admissible in disciplinary proceedings without regard to the witness's availability and is considered and weighed as though the witness was present and testifying in the disciplinary proceeding. Moreover, the State Bar Court may take judicial notice of non-testimonial matters (i.e., pleadings, exhibits, findings) in a civil action that involved the same conduct underlying the disciplinary charges against an attorney.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [3]

The hearing judge did not err in prohibiting respondent from presenting evidence of his willingness to settle the case by stipulating to the misconduct and a reasonable level of discipline and of the State Bar's unwillingness to present a settlement offer that contained what he considered to be a reasonable level of discipline. Respondent is afforded substantial mitigation for cooperation because, in addition to other instances of cooperation throughout the investigation of the matter, he stipulated to the facts underlying the misconduct and because the stipulated facts were not easily provable. Substantial mitigation is given without regard to the fact that the parties were unable to stipulate to an appropriate level of discipline. Not doing so would "punish" respondent merely for seeking his day in court as to the level of discipline. Not being able to reach a stipulated discipline does not have any effect on the court's analysis of the degree of mitigation awarded for respondent's overall cooperation in helping resolve the charged misconduct. In the Matter of Silver (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 902.[1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Respondent was not entitled to present evidence for the first time on review that a State Bar official had engaged in improper conduct in a separate civil proceeding against respondent, where respondent had the opportunity to make this allegation and present evidence in support of it at the hearing level. Also, respondent failed to show how such evidence had any bearing on either his culpability of the charges against him or the appropriate discipline for his misconduct. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [4]

Hearing judges are accorded wide latitude to receive all relevant evidence, and relief from their decisions will not be granted on the basis of alleged error in admitting evidence unless actual prejudice is established. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [5]

Where State Bar witness had not been excused from giving further testimony, hearing judge erred in not permitting respondent to recall such witness for questioning about document respondent did not possess at time witness first testified. However, where such additional testimony was relevant only to refute factual contention later abandoned by State Bar, hearing judge's error did not result in prejudice to respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [7]

Where referral order arising out of attorney's criminal conviction calls for hearing and decision on degree of discipline to recommend if hearing judge finds that facts and circumstances surrounding conviction involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline, hearing judge may consider wide variety of evidence surrounding conviction as part of relevant facts and circumstances. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [4]

Regardless of an attorney's belief that a court order was issued in error, the attorney is obligated to obey the order unless the attorney takes steps to have it modified or vacated. The attorney's belief as to the validity of the order is irrelevant to a charge of violating the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

List of representative cases respondent had handled, including pro bono matters, which was attached to respondent's brief on review, and expanded from similar list introduced at trial, was of minimal value in terms of mitigation, especially without explanation. Review department therefore declined to augment record to include list and did not consider it. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [11]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

Respondent's record of prior discipline did not warrant great weight in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, where respondent's first prior disciplinary matter was unrelated to present conduct, and State Bar had stipulated in second prior matter that respondent's misconduct was only worthy of a short suspension not requiring client notification. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [6]

In involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, evidence showing very substantial likelihood that respondent had substance abuse problem could be considered as risk to the public of future professional misconduct even absent evidence of current client harm. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [7]

A petitioner for reinstatement does not have to establish that the changes that have occurred in his or her post-misconduct life are attributable to psychotherapy before that therapy is entitled to weight on the issue of the petitioner's showing of rehabilitation. Rather, the therapy, as well as the other evidence of rehabilitation, must be viewed and weighed collectively. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [10]

The passage of an appreciable period of time constitutes an appropriate consideration in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has made sufficient progress towards rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [14]

An attorney's record of prior discipline is a factor to be considered by the Board of Legal Specialization in determining whether the attorney initially meets the standards for specialist certification, and, in appropriate circumstances, may justify a decision to deny initial certification. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [7]

Within due process limits, the Board of Legal Specialization has broad discretion in certifying specialists. It may consider any competent evidence rebutting an applicant's showing and may weigh and balance evidence in an appropriate manner. An applicant's prior discipline for very serious misconduct is clearly evidence that should be considered in this process. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [12]

Restitution payments made under pressure of disciplinary proceedings are entitled to little or no weight in mitigation of discipline. However, whether restitution has been completed is important to deciding whether it should be required as a condition of probation, or, if disbarment is recommended, to whether respondent must make restitution as an issue bearing on rehabilitation for reinstatement. Thus, evidence of restitution payments made by respondent's father was relevant and properly admissible, even though not constituting mitigation, and review department granted motion to admit such evidence on review where hearing judge had declined to accept it. However, other evidence offered by respondent on review regarding Client Security Fund claim filed by respondent's client was not admitted by review department where it was not relevant to issues in proceeding. (See rule 570, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [12]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

Underlying evidence of uncharged misconduct was not made inadmissible by rule prohibiting admission in evidence, except in rebuttal, of records of complaints or charges, where such evidence was offered in aggravation and impeachment in a contested proceeding after respondent testified regarding rehabilitation. (Rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [9]

Where hearing judge determined that proffered evidence of additional uncharged misconduct was of marginal relevance; that it could be fully examined and made the basis of separate discipline, if appropriate, in a separate proceeding, and that its admission would involve a delay to permit respondent time to address the issues it raised, the exclusion of the evidence was not an abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [11]

Transcript of superior court trial regarding probate matter which was subject of disciplinary proceeding was admissible pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6049.2, and hearing judge did not err in admitting entire transcript, even though much of testimony was not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, where transcript was admitted subject to respondent's motion to strike parts that were not material or relevant, and respondent failed to make such motion. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [10]

Where civil malpractice action against respondent involved essentially identical factual issues to those in discipline proceeding, nontestimonial exhibits consisting of documents relating to judgment in such civil proceeding, including unpublished appellate opinion explaining reasons for decision of civil courts, were admissible evidence in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [4]

Where evidence about the manner in which a reinstatement petitioner has handled positions of trust is available, such evidence is of probative value. But evidence that the petitioner has occupied positions of trust is not a requirement of reinstatement, and favorable testimony about the petitioner's trustworthiness should not be discounted because the witnesses have failed to observe how the petitioner would handle a fiduciary relationship. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [17]

In recommending discipline in a matter arising from a criminal conviction, the State Bar Court is not limited to examining only the elements of the offense in question, but is obligated to look at all facts and circumstances surrounding the offense to assess the respondent's fitness as an attorney. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [9]

In camera inspection was not appropriate before ordering a party to disclose names of potential witnesses in response to an interrogatory, because the court was ill-equipped to evaluate the potential relevance of the undisclosed names without argument from the counsel of the party requesting them, which could only be made after the names were disclosed. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [9]

Even if it was error for hearing judge to allow examiner to ask leading questions of complaining witness on direct examination, and to admit testimony as to witness's state of mind when such state of mind was not relevant, such errors were not prejudicial where complaining witness's testimony was clearly insufficient to establish State Bar's case and was not relied on in hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [8]

Hearing department findings that were based on evidence admitted in discipline phase of trial were considered by review department solely with respect to discipline and not culpability. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [3]

When an attorney withdraws from employment or the client terminates the attorney's employment, the attorney must promptly refund any unearned part of an advance fee. However, where respondent faced competing demands regarding the funds used to pay an advance fee, from a client and from a third party to whom respondent owed a fiduciary duty, respondent had a duty to retain the funds in trust until the client's entitlement to the funds was established, and therefore did not commit misconduct by declining to refund the advance fee. Respondent's motives for retaining the funds in trust were irrelevant because the issue turned on a question of law, not motivation. The State Bar had the burden of proving that the client was entitled to receive the funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [9]

In criminal conviction matters, the State Bar Court is not limited to examining only the elements of the criminal offense, but is obligated to look at all facts and circumstances surrounding the offense to assess the respondent's fitness as an attorney. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [3]

Testimony concerning a psychological disorder related to respondent's misconduct constitutes at most mitigating evidence, and is not admissible during the culpability phase of the hearing unless the respondent asserts a defense of insanity or claims to be unable to assist in his or her own defense. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [14]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, declarations submitted by respondent in which clients attested to respondent's character and legal abilities were properly disregarded as irrelevant, because neither declarant was present during the incident underlying the convictions nor did the declarations contain any information which could shed light on the incident. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [1]

In conviction referral proceedings, discipline is imposed according to the gravity of the crime and the circumstances of the case. In examining such circumstances, the court may look beyond the specific elements of a crime to the whole course of an attorney's conduct as it reflects upon the attorney's fitness to practice law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [2]

Passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination would be relevant evidence in a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), but is not a condition precedent. Accordingly, respondent ordered to take PRE was given the standard period of one year to do so even though respondent's standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing might occur sooner. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [15]

Where facts deemed conclusively established by court order, following respondent's failure to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, showed that respondent had wilfully misled judge, but respondent was permitted to testify that representations made to judge, though false, were true to the best of respondent's knowledge at the time they were made, respondent's testimony on this point was properly received, but only in mitigation, and not to contradict deemed admissions on which culpability findings were based. Deemed admissions, while conclusive as to literal truth of facts clearly set forth in request for admissions, did not preclude referee from admitting and considering other evidence that tended to explain or helped to interpret admitted facts. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [2]

Respondent's testimony that he unsuccessfully tried to telephone a State Bar investigator in response to a letter the investigator sent him regarding his possible misconduct was admissible only in mitigation, not in defense to his culpability of failing to cooperate in the investigation, which was conclusively established by his deemed admissions resulting from his failure to respond to discovery. Such testimony was not a sufficient basis for a finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [8]

The hearing department has broad discretion in determining the admissibility and relevance of evidence. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [14]

Form petitions signed by lawyers and judicial officers in support of petitioner's reinstatement, which contained sketchy text and were undated, were properly excluded from evidence for lack of adequate foundation, as they fell far short of offering any probative value of the assessment of petitioner's character for meeting the rigorous burden of a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [5]

142 Hearsay

Police reports offered by the State Bar did not clearly and convincingly establish respondent's dishonesty because the reports contained significant inconsistencies and multi-layered hearsay making the statements not the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [2]

Where respondent did not object to the admission of evidence, it is well settled that any objection on that point has been waived. Therefore, respondent's assertion that the hearing judge erroneously admitted hearsay evidence was not well taken because respondent failed to object to the admission of all but one of the objectionable items of evidence. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [8]

Because hearing judge admitted a paralegal's business card, which also had name of respondent's law offices and insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it, into evidence without limitation and without any hearsay objection from respondent, review department properly considered business card for the truth of the matter stated by relying on it as evidence that respondent employed the paralegal.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [16]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on immigration judge's statements in it to support one of State Bar's witness's testimony and to contradict respondent's testimony in State Bar Court.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [18]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on the unsworn statements of two attorneys contained in it to establish multiple relevant facts. Review department considered attorneys' unsworn statements to be highly credible because they, like all attorneys, have a duty under State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct to employ means only as are consistent with truth.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [21]

A client was allowed to testify regarding statements made to the client by a secretary working on respondent's behalf where such statements relayed information and instructions from respondent to the client. Such statements were admissible as authorized statements under Evidence Code section 1222 to prove that the client had retained respondent. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[8]

The hearing judge did not err by admitting evidence under Evidence Code section 1223, the so-called coconspirator's exception to the hearsay rule. The law supporting use of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule does not require absolute proof of a conspiracy, but only that there be independent evidence to establish prima facie the existence of a conspiracy and other preliminary facts. Those requirements were adequately met here. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[3]

Where statements could have been offered not to prove the truth of the matter stated, but for the purpose of showing that they were made in respondent's presence to disprove respondent's claim of lack of knowledge, the statements were not hearsay. In the absence of an objection and a request, made in accordance with Evidence Code section 355, that the use of the statements be admitted into evidence for the limited purpose, any error in their admission was waived. In any case, the statements were admissible under the adoptive admissions exception to the hearsay rule. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[4]

A client's complaint letter offered into evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted was hearsay. Because events were not fresh in the client's mind when he wrote the letter, it did not qualify for admission under the exception for a past recollection recorded that corroborated the client's testimony. Even if the letter did qualify for this exception, it should not have been received into evidence because it was offered by the State Bar rather than by an adverse party. Nor did the letter qualify for admission under the corroborative evidence exception to the hearsay rule because it lacked sufficient indicia of trustworthiness. Accordingly, the letter was struck from the record. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [2]

The testimony of an investigator is not the best evidence on the contents of court records. Testimony or sworn evidence from the court clerk responsible for the records is more germane and reliable. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [4]

Taking judicial notice of court records does not mean noticing the existence of facts asserted in the documents in the court file; a court cannot take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay just because it is part of a court record. Accordingly, where respondent requested review department to take judicial notice of court documents, this would only result in taking notice that various allegations had been made in various legal matters, and would not alter review department's conclusion regarding hearing judge's credibility determination. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [3]

Where administrative proceeding in which respondent had not appeared had resulted in revocation of respondent's real estate license, and record of such administrative proceeding was relevant in State Bar disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge and parties should have addressed issues regarding whether administrative decision had preclusive weight; if not, whether it was admissible under any hearsay exception, and whether respondent should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning culpability or mitigation with respect to the license revocation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [10]

Declarations offered in support of application for involuntary inactive enrollment did not provide an evidentiary basis to find clear and convincing evidence of respondent's likelihood of causing substantial harm, where declarants simply identified themselves as authors of unverified reports without vouching for the truth of the reports or establishing a business records exception to the hearsay rule. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [4]

In State Bar disciplinary proceedings, the formal rules of evidence apply as in civil cases, with the proviso that no error in admitting or excluding evidence invalidates a finding or decision unless the error deprived the party of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Accordingly, hearsay evidence is not admissible unless the opposing party agrees to its admission or otherwise waives any hearsay objections, or the evidence is subject to an exception to the hearsay rule. Where facts needed to establish past recollection recorded exception were shown, hearsay statements in witness's notebooks were properly admitted, and admission of notebooks themselves, even if error, did not prejudice opposing parties. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [8]

Where a court file was moved into evidence without objection or limitation, any objection to the admissibility of a proof of service contained in such file was waived. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [5]

The purpose of a proof of service is to establish notice of an order or other document, and it is the kind of document relied upon in the conduct of serious affairs. Where a proof of service of a sanctions order on respondent was in evidence, and there was no indication in the record of any misconduct by respondent's staff concerning receipt of the order, respondent was presumed to have been served with the court order. His receipt of the order and his admission that he did not satisfy it established a violation of the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [6]

Declarations can be admitted into evidence in lieu of live testimony when no objection is raised. Where a declaration by the respondent was introduced into evidence by the State Bar without limiting the purpose for which the declaration was admitted, the declaration was admissible for all purposes, including the truth of the respondent's hearsay statements contained therein. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [7]

Taking judicial notice of court records does not mean noticing the existence of facts asserted in the documents in the court file; a court cannot take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay just because it is part of a court record. Notice may be taken of another court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of a judgment, but not of hearsay allegations, even those of a judge-declarant. Accordingly, hearing judge erred in taking judicial notice of truth of testimony by respondent's criminal probation officer in criminal probation revocation proceeding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [9]

Where aggravating factor of bad faith found by hearing judge rested entirely on inadmissible hearsay evidence, review department declined to adopt such finding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [10]

Documentary evidence of communications to respondent from probation department regarding interpretation of probation conditions was judicially noticeable. It was not admissible to show truth of statements contained in such documents; for that purpose, it was hearsay. However, it was admissible to show that respondent had notice of probation department's interpretation, which was relevant to issue of respondent's good faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [13]

Written report from respondent's probation monitor was inadmissible as hearsay where it did not establish that respondent had notice of anything unless probation monitor's recitals of what he told respondent were accepted as true. However, where such evidence was merely cumulative on question of notice, any reliance thereon by hearing judge was harmless error. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [14]

It was error to sustain the examiner's objection to respondent's testimony about statements made by the complaining witness at a meeting, where the complaining witness had been asked about the meeting on cross-examination and given an opportunity to explain or deny respondent's testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [7]

Where respondent's testimony regarding statements made to respondent by complaining witness was offered to impeach complaining witness on a crucial issue, at a time when complaining witness was still subject to recall for further testimony, such testimony should not have been excluded except in the interests of justice. Exclusion of the testimony might have been justified by the length of the proceedings and respondent's lack of an explanation for failing to cross-examine complaining witness regarding statements at issue. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [9]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

Requests to augment the record at the review department level will be granted only if the original record is incomplete or incorrect. (Rule 1304, Provisional Rules of Practice.) Out-of-court evidence offered at the appellate level is ordinarily hearsay, and impossible to evaluate because of the absence of cross-examination to test the credibility of the declarant. The rule is to rely only on evidence which was presented to the trier of fact. The only general exception is to permit documentary evidence of subsequent rehabilitation when it is the only means to meet the heavy burden of demonstrating recovery from substance abuse or mental disorder. Where proffered additional evidence was derived from the record in another proceeding involving respondent, and was not offered to correct any omission in the record, the review department declined to grant respondent's motion to augment the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [2]

The handwritten complaint and accompanying documents of a complaining client, since deceased, were inadmissible as hearsay. The documents did not fit within any of the exceptions to the hearsay rule regarding deceased declarants. The deceased client's letter to respondent could not be admitted as an adoptive admission because there was no admissible evidence of words or other conduct by respondent demonstrating adoption of the statements in the letter. The corroborative evidence exception was also inapplicable because there was no admissible evidence in record which the documents would serve to substantiate. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [34]

Witness's testimony as to witness's knowledge of respondent's conflicts with management of respondent's office building was not hearsay and was properly admitted. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [2]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, arresting officer's testimony regarding observations of witnesses at the scene was not hearsay and was properly admitted. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [3]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, the arresting officer's testimony describing a victim's retelling of the incident was hearsay, but was properly admitted because respondent waived hearsay objection by failing to appear at the hearing. The review department independently reviewed the hearsay evidence, found sufficient trustworthiness, and concluded it was properly relied on by the referee. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [5]

Form petitions in support of petitioner's reinstatement, and other letters and testimonials, were excludable from evidence as hearsay, absent stipulation of the State Bar examiner. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [6]

Respondent's answers to State Bar's interrogatories could be relied on as party admissions even though not verified, and were adequately authenticated when examiner identified them while introducing them at trial, and respondent did not object. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [8]

Where complaining witness was in prison and deposition could not be arranged, hearing referee properly excluded witness's declaration on hearsay grounds. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [10]

Where there was no evidence in the record that respondent had knowledge of the contents of a letter from his client, respondent's failure to answer the letter did not constitute an adoptive admission. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [4]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the hearing judge acted within his discretion in excluding a second affidavit from a character witness. Like a character reference letter in a disciplinary proceeding, the character reference, even though in affidavit rather than letter form, was excludable as hearsay absent a stipulation to the contrary. Further, the second affidavit was cumulative, and the hearing judge carefully considered the more detailed first affidavit, which he admitted into evidence as part of the reinstatement application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

142.10 Admissibility (rule 5.104(D) (2011))

142.20 Insufficiency to Support Finding (rule 5.104(D) (2011))

Police reports offered by the State Bar did not clearly and convincingly establish respondent's dishonesty, for purposes of finding that crime involved moral turpitude, because the reports contained significant inconsistencies and multi-layered hearsay making the statements not the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [3 a,b]

Police reports offered by the State Bar did not clearly and convincingly establish respondent's dishonesty, for purposes of finding that crime involved moral turpitude, because the reports contained significant inconsistencies and multi-layered hearsay making the statements not the sort of evidence on which responsible persons are accustomed to rely. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [3 a,b]

Where State Bar's evidence that respondent lied to law enforcement included inconsistencies and hearsay statements, evidence did not clearly and convincingly establish aggravating factor of dishonesty. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [6]

143 Attorney-Client/Work Product Privileges (rule 5.104(E) (2011))

While respondent's improper assertion of various constitutional and statutory privileges showed a lack of cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary proceedings and constituted an aggravating factor, such factor was given little weight because (1) there was no evidence of resulting excessive delay in the disciplinary proceedings, (2) respondent willingly responded to most of the questions presented to him and only asserted the privileges as to matters which he believed involved the possibility of criminal prosecution, (3) the delay which did occur was not caused solely by respondent, (4) respondent's assertion of the privileges did not interfere with the State Bar's ability to prove its case, and (5) there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent asserted the privileges in bad faith. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[17]

Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (e) is the most strongly worded duty binding on a California attorney. It requires the attorney to maintain inviolate the confidence and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve his client's secrets. The ethical duty of confidentiality is much broader in scope and covers communications that would not be privileged under the evidentiary attorney-client privilege. It prohibits an attorney from disclosing facts and even allegations that might cause a client or former client public embarrassment. The duty of confidentiality complements the evidentiary presumption that communications from client to attorney during their professional relationship are confidential. Respondent breached his client's confidence in violation of section 6068 subdivision (e) by disclosing to another, without good cause, that the client was a convicted felon, although the conviction was a public record, but not easily discovered. The client had communicated his status to respondent to aid respondent in effectively representing him. Even if respondent had not been charged with such a violation, the hearing judge could have concluded in aggravation of discipline that respondent's divulgence was of a fact prejudicial to his client in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f).In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3 a-c]

The identities of persons who have knowledge of relevant facts and who may be potential witnesses are outside the scope of both the attorney-client and work product privileges. The added fact that such a person is a member of the State Bar is a matter of public record and cannot appropriately be claimed to be privileged. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [4]

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to commit the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

If an attorney wishes to invoke statutory or constitutional privileges which the attorney contends make a substantive response to a State Bar investigator's letter unnecessary, the attorney must nevertheless respond to the investigator's letter, if only to state that the attorney is claiming a privilege; otherwise, the attorney not only violates the statutory duty to cooperate, but also risks waiving the claimed privilege. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [14]

144 Self-Incrimination (rule 5.104(E) (2011))

While respondent's improper assertion of various constitutional and statutory privileges showed a lack of cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary proceedings and constituted an aggravating factor, such factor was given little weight because (1) there was no evidence of resulting excessive delay in the disciplinary proceedings, (2) respondent willingly responded to most of the questions presented to him and only asserted the privileges as to matters which he believed involved the possibility of criminal prosecution, (3) the delay which did occur was not caused solely by respondent, (4) respondent's assertion of the privileges did not interfere with the State Bar's ability to prove its case, and (5) there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent asserted the privileges in bad faith. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[17]

Party invoking Fifth Amendment bears burden of showing that proffered evidence might tend to incriminate. Thus, while respondents may not be disciplined solely for invoking Fifth Amendment, the improper invocation of that amendment and resulting refusal to testify may be considered as aggravation if culpability has otherwise been found. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[9 a-e]

Whether hearings to determine witness's right to Fifth Amendment privilege should be held in camera rather than open court is left to trial court's discretion. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[10]

Hearing judge did not error in drawing inferences against respondent with respect to authenticity of documents written by respondent when respondent refused to answer proper questions after respondent's claim against self incrimination under Fifth Amendment was denied and she had been ordered to answer. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[11]

No question on respondent's application for admission to practice law called upon respondent, as an applicant, to reveal criminal conduct for which respondent had not yet been convicted or arrested and for which respondent was not awaiting trial. If any such question had been asked, respondent would have had a good argument for withholding information that would lead to criminal liability. Nothing in respondent's manner of completing the application, or in respondent's subsequent two-month delay in reporting to the State Bar a criminal indictment handed down after the application was completed, undermined respondent's showing of rehabilitation from pre-admission criminal conduct. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [1]

Since attorney discipline matters are not criminal cases for purposes of the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, an attorney may be called to the witness stand at the attorney's own hearing, and immunized testimony may be introduced against the attorney. However, the attorney may assert the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in response to specific questions, and no adverse inference may be drawn from such invocation. An attorney may not be disciplined solely based on invoking the privilege against self-incrimination. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [32]

Where respondent refused to take the witness stand when ordered to do so by the referee at the disciplinary hearing, and invoked the protection of the Fifth Amendment through counsel and not in response to specific questions, respondent's actions were improper. If appearing under subpoena, respondent's actions could have been certified for contempt before the Superior Court. If culpability had been found on the underlying misconduct charges, respondent's actions could have been considered evidence in aggravation. However, the referee did not have contempt power and lacked the authority to sanction respondent by striking respondent's answer to the notice to show cause and deeming the allegations admitted by default as a matter of law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [33]

In a disciplinary action, an attorney does not have a privilege not to be called to testify, but may refuse to answer specific questions on the grounds that answering the question may subject the attorney to criminal prosecution. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [13]

If an attorney wishes to invoke statutory or constitutional privileges which the attorney contends make a substantive response to a State Bar investigator's letter unnecessary, the attorney must nevertheless respond to the investigator's letter, if only to state that the attorney is claiming a privilege; otherwise, the attorney not only violates the statutory duty to cooperate, but also risks waiving the claimed privilege. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [14]

145 Authentication of Documents

Where State Bar failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's client's signatures on loan agreement and release were forgeries, and evidence submitted did not undermine authenticity of loan agreement, State Bar Court resolved doubt in respondent's favor and found that loan was made. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [1]

Documents must be authenticated before they can be introduced into evidence. Authentication means establishing by evidence or other means that the document is the writing which its proponent claims it is. By admitting a document into evidence, hearing judge initially concluded that there was sufficient evidence that it was what it was claimed to be. By allowing the document to be admitted as an authenticated exhibit and not offering affirmative evidence of fabrication, examiner provided court with no basis to find that document was in fact fabricated. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [15]

In an attorney discipline proceeding, all reasonable doubts must be weighed in favor of the attorney. Where the evidence presented by documents raised an inference of irregularity concerning the genuineness of a bankruptcy court order, but there was no evidence from the bankruptcy court concerning its practices nor any evaluation of the genuineness of the purported order itself, there was not clear and convincing evidence that the respondent had fabricated the order. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [23]

Form petitions signed by lawyers and judicial officers in support of petitioner's reinstatement, which contained sketchy text and were undated, were properly excluded from evidence for lack of adequate foundation, as they fell far short of offering any probative value of the assessment of petitioner's character for meeting the rigorous burden of a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [5]

Respondent's answers to State Bar's interrogatories could be relied on as party admissions even though not verified, and were adequately authenticated when examiner identified them while introducing them at trial, and respondent did not object. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [8]

146 Judicial Notice

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

Civil court records are proper subjects of judicial notice in moral character proceedings. Therefore, where applicant was a party to the civil proceeding and that proceeding involved many issues substantially identical to issues in the moral character proceeding, the hearing judge properly considered the civil court's jury verdicts, trial minutes and judgment, and a Court of Appeal's unpublished opinion. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [3]

Prior civil court findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof merely constitute evidence in a State Bar Court proceeding, not the exclusive record upon which an issue must be adjudicated. While the State Bar may choose to proffer prior civil court findings as its entire case against an attorney or applicant on the underlying issue, the attorney or applicant then has the right to controvert, temper, or explain the civil findings with other evidence, including live testimony from the same witnesses who testified in the civil trial. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [6]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Review department took judicial notice of stipulation and Court of Appeal opinion in civil cases involving respondent that post-dated hearing department proceedings and concerned matters discussed at hearing. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [1]

Where respondent sought to place documents, some of which were not before hearing judge, in record on review by including them in appendix to brief, without filing motion with reasons why documents could not have been produced at hearing, and without indicating how documents would correct or complete record, review department declined to take judicial notice of documents. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [3]

The State Bar Court may take judicial notice of the records of any California court. (See Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1); Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Such notice may include the facts stated in court orders, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgments. Although civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, they must be assessed independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

Taking judicial notice of court records does not mean noticing the existence of facts asserted in the documents in the court file; a court cannot take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay just because it is part of a court record. Accordingly, where respondent requested review department to take judicial notice of court documents, this would only result in taking notice that various allegations had been made in various legal matters, and would not alter review department's conclusion regarding hearing judge's credibility determination. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [3]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

Rules of evidence in civil cases are generally applicable in State Bar proceedings (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556) and include taking judicial notice of records of any federal court of record. Where neither party specifically requested augmentation of record with federal court's opinion on appeal in related matter, but respondent attached copy of such opinion to review brief, review department took judicial notice of such opinion. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [3]

It is not improper for the Office of Trials to pursue on review a challenge to the exclusion of evidence of uncharged misconduct in one proceeding while simultaneously prosecuting a second proceeding based on the same misconduct, so long as both courts are made aware of the pendency of the other proceeding. The second proceeding could be abated until resolution of the first case. Where this did not occur, it was proper for the hearing judge to adjudicate the second case promptly and then request that the review department take judicial notice of the decision in the second case, thus permitting the review department to consolidate the cases on review. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [5]

It was appropriate for both the hearing judge and the review department to take judicial notice of the status, at the time of their respective decisions, of a separate pending disciplinary matter involving the same respondent. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [5]

Where civil malpractice action against respondent involved essentially identical factual issues to those in discipline proceeding, nontestimonial exhibits consisting of documents relating to judgment in such civil proceeding, including unpublished appellate opinion explaining reasons for decision of civil courts, were admissible evidence in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [4]

Where decisions by the former State Bar Court concerning a petitioner's prior reinstatement petition helped illuminate the petitioner's subsequent progress toward rehabilitation, the review department took judicial notice of such decisions pursuant to Evidence Code section 452(d). In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [3]

Where examiner failed to introduce appropriate documentary evidence of respondent's prior discipline record, review department notified parties of intent to take judicial notice of specified documents from official State Bar Court records regarding such discipline, and took such notice after neither party objected. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [7]

Taking judicial notice of court records does not mean noticing the existence of facts asserted in the documents in the court file; a court cannot take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay just because it is part of a court record. Notice may be taken of another court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of a judgment, but not of hearsay allegations, even those of a judge-declarant. Accordingly, hearing judge erred in taking judicial notice of truth of testimony by respondent's criminal probation officer in criminal probation revocation proceeding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [9]

Documentary evidence of communications to respondent from probation department regarding interpretation of probation conditions was judicially noticeable. It was not admissible to show truth of statements contained in such documents; for that purpose, it was hearsay. However, it was admissible to show that respondent had notice of probation department's interpretation, which was relevant to issue of respondent's good faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [13]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

In reviewing hearing department decision in disciplinary proceeding, review department took judicial notice that in separate involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, respondent had been found to have rebutted the presumption, arising from hearing department's disbarment recommendation, that respondent's conduct posed a continuing threat of harm to clients and the public. However, the findings in the involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding were not binding in the disciplinary matter, nor did they have any probative value. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [4]

Review department took judicial notice that respondent's prior discipline became final after subsequent matter was submitted on review. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [23]

Where hearing referee failed to determine whether respondent's default was properly entered, review department was required to do so, and for that purpose it took judicial notice of respondent's membership records address under Evidence Code section 459; evidence of membership records address is essential in a default case to assess the propriety of the default procedures. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [3]

Where, at the time of the hearing, respondent's prior discipline record consisted only of another hearing department decision, and the examiner moved to augment the record on review with the review department minutes in the prior matter, the motion was construed by the review department as a motion to take judicial notice and was granted. Thereafter, the review department took judicial notice on its own motion of the Supreme Court's order in the prior matter. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [11]

In proceedings on petition for reinstatement, the review department, with the concurrence of the parties, could take judicial notice of State Bar Court decisions on earlier unsuccessful reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [1]

Although prior civil court actions are not binding in disciplinary matters, they are admissible when they address issues substantially identical to those raised in the disciplinary hearing. Civil court decisions that are supported by substantial evidence are accorded a strong presumption of validity, and individual facts established by such civil court decisions may serve as a conclusive legal determination as to particular facts determined by the civil courts. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [5]

At respondent's request, in a conviction proceeding, the review department took judicial notice of the record in a disciplinary case involving another attorney who was respondent's co-defendant in the underlying criminal matter. The discipline imposed on the co-defendant was considered in determining the appropriate discipline for respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [2]

Court of appeal opinion regarding respondent's criminal appeal could be cited in related disciplinary proceeding, notwithstanding Supreme Court's depublication order, under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 977(b)(2). In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [1]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §§ 451 et. seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

Ambiguity in the record, created when hearing referee took judicial notice of respondent's prior record of discipline but failed to admit it into evidence, was removed when review department admitted in evidence the prior record of discipline that was previously offered at trial and judicially noticed. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [6]

147 Presumptions

In proceedings for relief from actual suspension, an attorney's compliance with the terms of suspension and conditions of probation does not create a presumption of the attorney's rehabilitation; instead, in addition to such compliance, the attorney must show by a preponderance of the evidence his rehabilitation, present fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the general law to be relieved of actual suspension under Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.4(c)(ii). In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [7]

The review department found no merit to the State Bar's argument that money in a client trust account is presumed to belong to the clients and that it was respondent's burden to prove otherwise. The State Bar alleged in the notice of disciplinary charges that client money was stolen and it had the burden to present clear and convincing evidence proving that allegation. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [3]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on the unsworn statements of two attorneys contained in it to establish multiple relevant facts. Review department considered attorneys' unsworn statements to be highly credible because they, like all attorneys, have a duty under State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct to employ means only as are consistent with truth. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [21]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. Nevertheless, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence test are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in disciplinary proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. Where the trial judge in a civil proceeding found that respondent knew prior to filing a lawsuit that he had not been defamed, that his law firm had not been disparaged, and that his retainer contract with his clients had not been interfered with at all, and those findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record, the hearing judge's conclusion in the disciplinary proceeding that respondent filed the lawsuit based on his honest and reasonable belief in its validity was contrary to the civil findings and did not appear to have accorded the civil findings the strong presumption of validity to which they were entitled. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [1]

There is no authority for the proposition that the strong presumption of validity accorded to civil findings in a disciplinary proceeding shifts the burden of proof in the disciplinary proceeding to the respondent attorney to rebut the presumption. As in any discipline case, the State Bar bears the burden of proving culpability by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [2]

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

Objective inferences drawn from consideration of the 12 factors often considered in bankruptcy proceedings to determine whether a debtor incurred credit card debts with fraudulent intent are also highly probative in determining whether attorney incurred credit card debts without intending to repay them. But 12 factors are not exclusive, none is dispositive, and attorney's conduct need not satisfy a minimum number to find that attorney lacked intent to repay debts. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [2]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[7]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides that, with exceptions not applicable here, the Illinois Supreme Court disciplinary order imposed on respondent conclusively established his culpability in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.[1]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (e) is the most strongly worded duty binding on a California attorney. It requires the attorney to maintain inviolate the confidence and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve his client's secrets. The ethical duty of confidentiality is much broader in scope and covers communications that would not be privileged under the evidentiary attorney-client privilege. It prohibits an attorney from disclosing facts and even allegations that might cause a client or former client public embarrassment. The duty of confidentiality complements the evidentiary presumption that communications from client to attorney during their professional relationship are confidential. Respondent breached his client's confidence in violation of section 6068 subdivision (e) by disclosing to another, without good cause, that the client was a convicted felon, although the conviction was a public record, but not easily discovered. The client had communicated his status to respondent to aid respondent in effectively representing him. Even if respondent had not been charged with such a violation, the hearing judge could have concluded in aggravation of discipline that respondent's divulgence was of a fact prejudicial to his client in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f).In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3 a-c]

Respondent's argument is that a misrepresentation to a court is not material unless it successfully misleads the court is contrary to the express wording of Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (d), which provides that it is the duty of an attorney to never seek to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact or law. The conduct denounced by this statute is not the act of an attorney by which he successfully misleads the court, but the presentation of a statement of fact, known by him to be false, which tends to do so. It is the endeavor to secure an advantage by means of falsity which is denounced. Whether respondent violated section 6068, subdivision (d) depends first upon whether his representation to the court was in fact untrue, and second, whether he knew that his statement was false and he intended thereby to deceive the court. With regard to whether respondent intended to deceive the court, the presentation to a court of a statement of fact known to be false presumes an intent to secure a determination based upon it and is a clear violation of section 6068, subdivision (d). Respondent's statements to the two courts were in fact untrue and he knew they were untrue. Thus, it is presumed that the statements were made with an intent to secure an advantage. No credible evidence rebutted this presumption. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.[4 a-d]

Respondent objects to giving conclusive weight to the Michigan proceedings, since they were adjudicated under a lower standard of proof than that required in California. Respondent's license revocation and judicial removal were judged under standards requiring only a preponderance of evidence to find him culpable of judicial misconduct. However, the Michigan Supreme Court considered the evidence of respondent's culpability overwhelming; and, in any event, the record of this proceeding contains ample evidence that was received in the Michigan proceedings to permit us to independently determine that sufficient evidence is present to clearly and convincingly establish respondent's culpability in California. Respondent's argument lacks merit. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157.[2]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [1]

Compliance with the terms of actual suspension and probation presumptively satisfies the discipline required for a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) to become a productive attorney. However, the petitioner must also show rehabilitation, present fitness to practice law, and present learning and ability in the general law. That showing must be measured from the time of the last prior discipline. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [4]

Prior civil court findings made under the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in State Bar Court proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [7]

Where respondent contended that he had only pleaded guilty in order to avoid two separate trials, and that he had not intended to commit a crime, due process did not entitle him to a hearing before the State Bar Court to prove these contentions, because he would be precluded from presenting evidence thereof by the statute providing that proof of an attorney's conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the elements of the crime in any proceeding to suspend or disbar the attorney. This conclusive presumption precludes collateral attack on the conviction by attorneys who seek to reassert their innocence in subsequent State Bar proceedings. In this regard, a conviction following a guilty plea is just as conclusive as a conviction following a full criminal trial. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [5]

Respondent's conviction of assault conclusively established that he did not act in self-defense, i.e., that he did not have an honest and reasonable belief that he was about to suffer bodily injury. Hearing judge could not reach conclusions, even based on credible evidence, that were inconsistent with such conclusive effect. Thus, where hearing judge found that respondent honestly believed he was about to be assaulted, review department rejected any finding that such belief was reasonable as being inconsistent with the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [2]

In attorney discipline proceedings arising from a criminal conviction, the record of the attorney's conviction is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the crime for which the attorney was convicted. This conclusive presumption of guilt applies whether the convicted attorney seeks to reassert his or her innocence or merely to relitigate a claim of procedural error. The convicted attorney is conclusively presumed to have committed all of the elements of the crime. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [3]

A conclusive presumption is an assumption of fact that the law requires to be made from the finding of the existence of another underlying fact. A conclusive presumption is in reality a rule of substantive law, not a rule of evidence, and no evidence may be received to contradict it. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [4]

The conclusive presumption of guilt in attorney conviction matters does not apply only for crimes involving moral turpitude. The presumption also applies where the crime for which the attorney was convicted did not involve moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [5]

The conclusive effect of an attorney's criminal conviction merely establishes for State Bar purposes that the attorney committed the acts necessary to constitute the offense. Whether those acts amount to professional misconduct, in the context of a crime that does not necessarily involve moral turpitude, is a conclusion that can only be reached by an examination of the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [6]

An attorney's conviction for assault with a firearm is conclusive proof that the attorney committed the elements for that crime, i. e., that a person was assaulted and that the assault was committed with a firearm. An assault is defined as an unlawful attempt to apply physical force upon the person of another at a time when the accused had the present ability to apply such physical force. An attempt to apply physical force is not unlawful when done in lawful self-defense. An attorney's conviction of this crime therefore conclusively established that the attorney unlawfully attempted to apply physical force upon the victim. As the assault was by definition unlawful, the review department concluded that it was not done in self-defense. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [7]

The purpose of a proof of service is to establish notice of an order or other document, and it is the kind of document relied upon in the conduct of serious affairs. Where a proof of service of a sanctions order on respondent was in evidence, and there was no indication in the record of any misconduct by respondent's staff concerning receipt of the order, respondent was presumed to have been served with the court order. His receipt of the order and his admission that he did not satisfy it established a violation of the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [6]

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

It is generally presumed that the arbitrators heard and decided all disputed issues in an arbitration. Where issue regarding costs was raised in an attorney's fees arbitration, and the arbitration award showed on its face that it covered costs as well as fees, and neither party contested the arbitrators' jurisdiction to consider issues of costs, issue of whether costs had been reimbursed should not have had to be relitigated in subsequent State Bar disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [12]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

An attorney's license to practice law creates a continuing presumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the attorney is not only morally fit but also mentally competent to practice law. This presumption underlies the rule in disciplinary proceedings that all reasonable doubts are to be resolved in favor of respondents and that, if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a fact, the inference to be accepted is the one leading to a conclusion of innocence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [13]

Although prior civil court actions are not binding in disciplinary matters, they are admissible when they address issues substantially identical to those raised in the disciplinary hearing. Civil court decisions that are supported by substantial evidence are accorded a strong presumption of validity, and individual facts established by such civil court decisions may serve as a conclusive legal determination as to particular facts determined by the civil courts. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [5]

148 Witnesses

Where respondent's therapist chose not to testify, in order to preserve confidential nature of therapeutic relationship, and respondent did not subpoena the therapist and did not identify any other evidence he was prevented from introducing, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that he was prevented from presenting evidence regarding his abstention from alcohol. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [1]

Review Department will not grant relief on the basis of evidentiary errors without a showing of prejudice. Hearing judge properly permitted State Bar to call respondent as first witness, even though respondent had not yet decided whether to testify on his own behalf. State Bar also properly called witnesses without prior disclosure of their statements, where witnesses had made no written or recorded statements, and respondent could not show prejudice because he knew witnesses' identities, and had a summary of their testimony, in advance of trial. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [5]

Great weight is given to a hearing judge's finding as to intent. Where hearing judge determined respondent was grossly negligent when verifying his clients' complaint and State Bar relied on same evidence already considered by the hearing judge to argue respondent was intentionally deceitful, there was no basis to conclude that respondent's decision to sign verification rose to an act of intentional dishonesty rather than mere gross neglect. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [1]

In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141

Trial judge did not prejudicially err in exercising discretion to excuse witness where respondent failed to either request that the witness be recalled or to make an offer of proof as to the testimony respondent expected to elicit from the witness. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [1]

The fact that pretrial statements and a stipulation were used to apprise petitioner's character witnesses of the acts that led to his resignation is not a basis for discounting the weight given to the testimony of such witnesses, particularly when no formal charges were ever filed against petitioner. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [1]

The fact that petitioner's character witnesses did not know petitioner before he entered recovery from his alcoholism was not a reason to discount the weight given to their testimony because they all had recent, close contact with petitioner which qualifies them to reflect on his present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [2]

Since petitioner presented no medical or expert evidence supporting his course of recovery and the State Bar offered expert testimony in rebuttal, the credibility determinations of the hearing judge are particularly important because reformation is a state of mind which may be difficult to establish affirmatively and may not be disclosed by any certain or unmistakable outward sign. Where there is not sufficient basis to overturn the hearing judge's findings of fact with respect to the testimonial evidence offered by petitioner, the question upon independent review is to determine if the quality and quantity of petitioner's evidence are sufficient to meet his heavy burden of proof. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [1]

Where character witnesses, who had long–term as well as current knowledge of petitioner, uniformly attested to petitioner's good character and honesty and gave specific, convincing reasons for holding favorable opinions of petitioner's rehabilitation or present moral fitness, their testimony is heavily weighed as evidence of petitioner's rehabilitation and good moral character. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [2 a, b]

Significant weight is given to the testimony of judges and officers of the court because these witnesses have a strong interest in maintaining the honest administration of justice. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [3]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on the unsworn statements of two attorneys contained in it to establish multiple relevant facts. Review department considered attorneys' unsworn statements to be highly credible because they, like all attorneys, have a duty under State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct to employ means only as are consistent with truth.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [21]

In the very heavy burden a reinstatement petitioner must surmount in proving his rehabilitation, character evidence alone, no matter how positive, is not determinative. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [4]

Testimony of members of the bar and bench of high repute is entitled to careful consideration in assessing a petitioner's rehabilitation when the petitioner has been close to their observation. This is because such witnesses are morally bound by their oaths as attorneys at law not to recommend a disbarred attorney for reinstatement unless they are satisfied of the rehabilitation of his character. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [5]

Opinion testimony of an attorney as to the ultimate issue that petitioner was qualified for reinstatement was not precluded, although that ultimate issue was for the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court to decide. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6 a,b]

Negative testimony regarding petitioner's rehabilitation did not rebut petitioner's favorable testimony for a very important reason: the negative testimony was based solely on the severity of petitioner's earlier misconduct and not on his rehabilitative steps since resignation. The witnesses had no personal observation of petitioner for most, if not all, of the 10 years that elapsed between the time petitioner resigned and the State Bar Court hearings. Thus, while the negative testimony of each of these witnesses was relevant on the issues of the seriousness and the nature and extent of petitioner's prior misconduct, it was of little relevance on the issues of petitioner's present character and of whether petitioner has maintained a sustained period of unblemished and exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [7 a-c]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[11]

The relevant testimony of a witness given in civil proceeding is admissible in disciplinary proceedings without regard to the witness's availability and is considered and weighed as though the witness was present and testifying in the disciplinary proceeding. Moreover, the State Bar Court may take judicial notice of non-testimonial matters (i.e., pleadings, exhibits, findings) in a civil action that involved the same conduct underlying the disciplinary charges against an attorney.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [3]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in issuing a pretrial order precluding respondent from attempting to impeach State Bar's witnesses with evidence of witnesses' alleged criminal activities, terrorist activities, racism, hate crimes, molestation of foster children, etc. except by evidence of proved felonies introduced into evidence in strict compliance with Evidence Code. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [5 a-c]

Even though hearing judge is required to give respondent the benefit of all reasonable doubts, she was not required to devalue evidence she found stronger than that of respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [3]

Character evidence is important on the issue of the degree of discipline, and the credibility of the character witnesses should be weighed the same as any other witness. Accordingly, it was improper to admit telephonic testimony and the hearsay letters over the objection of the State Bar. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [1]

Section 6049.2 of the Business and Professions Code authorizes the admission of transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings in State Bar disciplinary proceedings without proof of the witnesses' unavailability. However, section 6049.2 is, under its express terms, applicable only in disciplinary proceedings, and there is no parallel section permitting admission of prior transcripts in moral character proceedings. Accordingly, if a proper objection is made, transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings are admissible in moral character proceedings only upon a showing that the witnesses whose testimony is recorded in such transcripts are unavailable to testify. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [4]

Prior civil court findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof merely constitute evidence in a State Bar Court proceeding, not the exclusive record upon which an issue must be adjudicated. While the State Bar may choose to proffer prior civil court findings as its entire case against an attorney or applicant on the underlying issue, the attorney or applicant then has the right to controvert, temper, or explain the civil findings with other evidence, including live testimony from the same witnesses who testified in the civil trial. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [6]

Even though Evidence Code permits legal experts to testify regarding ultimate legal issues, such issues are ultimately for independent decision-making of State Bar Court and Supreme Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [6]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

Disbelief of a respondent's testimony does not create evidence to the contrary. Where respondent allegedly misrepresented to insurer that respondent's personal bank account was a client trust account, but only evidence to rebut respondent's testimony to contrary was notation in insurer's records, presence of such notation was not sufficient to establish that it resulted from misrepresentation by respondent, even where hearing judge found respondent not credible. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [2]

The testimony of an investigator is not the best evidence on the contents of court records. Testimony or sworn evidence from the court clerk responsible for the records is more germane and reliable. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [4]

A party may not recall a witness who has been excused from giving further testimony without leave of court, which may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. Hearing judge did not deny due process to respondent by denying respondent's motion to recall State Bar witness who had been excused from giving further testimony. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [6]

Where State Bar witness had not been excused from giving further testimony, hearing judge erred in not permitting respondent to recall such witness for questioning about document respondent did not possess at time witness first testified. However, where such additional testimony was relevant only to refute factual contention later abandoned by State Bar, hearing judge's error did not result in prejudice to respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [7]

Respondent's cooperation with State Bar in agreeing to allow complaining former client to testify by telephone at disciplinary hearing constituted mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [23]

Respondent's failure to comply with proper pretrial procedures and to provide list of witnesses prior to day of trial was properly considered as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [7]

Although review department's review of record is independent, it must give great weight to hearing judge's credibility determinations and it is reluctant to deviate from hearing judge's credibility-based factual findings in absence of specific showing of error. Where respondent argued that his version of events was more credible because State Bar's witnesses had reason to be less than truthful, this argument ignored respondent's own obvious similar motive, and was not grounds to depart from hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [2]

The testimony of a single witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact. Where hearing judge found complaining witness's version of events to be more credible, and such testimony, though at odds with respondent's, was consistent on material issues, review department found no basis to disturb hearing judge's factual findings. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [4]

State Bar prosecutors have statutory authority to apply to superior court to grant immunity from criminal prosecution to a witness in an attorney disciplinary proceeding. Where such procedures were properly invoked, and respondents showed no prejudice to themselves on account of the procedures followed in seeking such immunity, respondents were not entitled to relief based on asserted error in such procedures. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [6]

Testimony of expert witness who did not know facts of specific case but could only give opinion as to respondents' practices was proper expert testimony. Where hearing judge limited expert's testimony to proper opinion testimony on subjects of his qualifications, fair hearing was ensured. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [9]

There are numerous factors to consider in assessing witness credibility beyond observing the witness while testifying. The hearing judge, as the trier of fact in State Bar proceedings, is to determine the credibility of witnesses and hearsay declarants. The fact that some witnesses testified at the State Bar hearing by way of a transcript of the witnesses' criminal court testimony, which is expressly authorized by statute in State Bar proceedings, is not reason to discount their testimony or find it less credible than live witness testimony. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [1]

The fact that no live witness appeared for the prosecution in a proceeding did not preclude the hearing judge from making a credibility determination based on prior recorded trial testimony which was subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [4]

Judges are required under canon 2B of the California Code of Judicial Conduct not to testify voluntarily as character witnesses, but where subpoenas were issued to compel judges to testify, their declarations regarding good character of disciplinary respondent could be considered by State Bar Court. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

Character testimony and reference letters, especially from employers and attorneys, are significant in reinstatement proceedings. Great consideration is due to the testimony of members of the bar and public of high repute who have closely observed a petitioner for reinstatement. Not every witness or letter writer must have recent close contact with the petitioner; a variety of persons with different relationships to the petitioner can reflect present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner presented favorable testimony by five character witnesses, one of whom had observed him closely since his misconduct, and favorable reference letters from four persons, three of whom had had recent contact with him, such testimony and reference letters were entitled to consideration as factors supporting his reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [9]

Where a municipal court judge and a state appellate justice were subpoenaed as witnesses, it was proper for them to testify in a reinstatement proceeding. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [10]

Judges should not testify voluntarily as character witnesses. Judges should respond to requests from the State Bar, but absent such a request, should not write a letter of reference for an attorney facing discipline or a petitioner seeking reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [14]

Testimony by psychologist who had tested reinstatement petitioner and interviewed him 10 times, and who opined that risk of petitioner's recidivism was very low, was entitled to significant weight. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [15]

Favorable character testimony in reinstatement proceeding should not have been devalued based on lack of frequent current contact with petitioner by witnesses who knew him at time of original misconduct, or based on failure to call family members to testify, where misconduct was unrelated to home or family. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [16]

The identities of persons who have knowledge of relevant facts and who may be potential witnesses are outside the scope of both the attorney-client and work product privileges. The added fact that such a person is a member of the State Bar is a matter of public record and cannot appropriately be claimed to be privileged. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [4]

The State Bar is a public entity within the scope of the statutory official information privilege (Evid. Code, § 1040). The procedure to be followed in State Bar Court proceedings where the official information privilege is asserted is the same as in civil cases. In a moral character proceeding, where the information sought was the identities of persons whom the State Bar had reserved the right to call as impeachment or rebuttal witnesses at trial, the official information privilege did not apply to such information, either because the consent exception was applicable, or because the reservation of the right to call such persons reduced the Committee of Bar Examiners' need for secrecy to the interest of a party in the outcome of the proceeding, which is not protected under section 1040 and which was outweighed by the interests of the public and the applicant in a fair trial. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [6]

The rule permitting a party to exclude rebuttal or impeachment witnesses from a pretrial statement (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1222(g)) has no bearing on the broader issue of discoverable information. Discovery of identities of individuals is not limited to persons who may be called in the opposing party's case in chief. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [7]

In camera inspection was not appropriate before ordering a party to disclose names of potential witnesses in response to an interrogatory, because the court was ill-equipped to evaluate the potential relevance of the undisclosed names without argument from the counsel of the party requesting them, which could only be made after the names were disclosed. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [9]

Private personal information about a non-party to a proceeding may be privileged from discovery under some circumstances pursuant to the California constitutional right to privacy. The privacy right to be protected is that of the non-party, and the custodian of the private information may not waive it. The right to privacy is not absolute, but must be balanced against the need for disclosure. In a moral character proceeding, it was unreasonable for material witnesses against the applicant to claim a right of privacy preventing the disclosure of their identities to the applicant during discovery, while consenting to testify against the applicant at trial. However, as to the identities of persons whose testimony would not be used under any circumstances, the applicant had not made a sufficient showing of need to overcome these persons' privacy rights, and their names could be withheld from disclosure. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [10]

Where examiner's conduct in connection with obtaining depositions of State Bar's non-party witnesses, while not in bad faith, clearly fell short of her duty under the circumstances, review department upheld hearing judge's order permitting such witnesses to testify only if first deposed, and modified such order to require examiner to subpoena the witnesses and to pay transportation costs as a condition of permitting witnesses' testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [13]

Even if it was error for hearing judge to allow examiner to ask leading questions of complaining witness on direct examination, and to admit testimony as to witness's state of mind when such state of mind was not relevant, such errors were not prejudicial where complaining witness's testimony was clearly insufficient to establish State Bar's case and was not relied on in hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [8]

Where respondent's testimony regarding statements made to respondent by complaining witness was offered to impeach complaining witness on a crucial issue, at a time when complaining witness was still subject to recall for further testimony, such testimony should not have been excluded except in the interests of justice. Exclusion of the testimony might have been justified by the length of the proceedings and respondent's lack of an explanation for failing to cross-examine complaining witness regarding statements at issue. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [9]

Where State Bar's chief witness exhibited poor memory, repeatedly testified inconsistently on key issues, admittedly had misrepresented facts to insurance company and State Bar, and admittedly was motivated by anger and economic stress at time of complaint to State Bar, hearing judge's findings based solely on selected portions of such witness's inconsistent testimony were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in light of the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [11]

Proof by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty means that irreconcilable conflicts in the testimony of the chief State Bar witness by their very nature severely undermine the State Bar's case. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [23]

Where the hearing judge found the complaining witness worthy of belief on the crucial factual issues, and that witness's testimony was bolstered by other evidence in the record, and respondent's contrary contention that he had been discharged by his clients was not corroborated by documents that ordinarily would have been prepared by an attorney upon discharge, the hearing judge's conclusion that respondent abandoned his clients without notifying them was supported by the record, even though the complaining witness's testimony was not uniformly reliable regarding exact details. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [9]

Credibility findings by the finder of fact are to be accorded great weight by the review department and it should be reluctant to deviate from them. Nonetheless, the findings must be supported by the record. Where the review department found insufficient evidence to support challenged findings, it declined to adopt them. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [9]

Rejection of a witness's testimony by the hearing judge does not in and of itself create affirmative evidence to the contrary. Where respondent's testimony on a factual issue was plausible and uncontradicted, it was appropriate to resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of respondent and reject a finding contrary to respondent's testimony as unsupported by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of events was plausible, even though controverted, it supported a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct, and where there was only circumstantial evidence to the contrary, misconduct was not established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [10]

Where respondent's testimony was plausible and uncontradicted, it should have been regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available, but was not offered. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [4]

Where respondent's client's testimony contradicted respondent's testimony, and the hearing judge found the client's testimony to be more credible on the disputed point, but other circumstances revealed by the record nonetheless limited the effect of the client's testimony, the review department held that the record did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's testimony was a lie. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

Where respondent was not a California resident, and thus not subject to subpoena, respondent's attendance as a witness at the disciplinary hearing could have been required by notice to respondent's counsel. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [28]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has an obligation to be present at the hearing even if not subpoenaed or noticed to appear as a witness. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [30]

In State Bar Court proceedings, the court acts as an administrative arm of the Supreme Court, and State Bar Court judges and referees function as "judicial officers." Therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure section 1990, any person present at a State Bar Court hearing may be compelled to take the witness stand by the judge or referee. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [31]

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the hearing judge is in a particularly appropriate position to resolve it, and the Rules of Procedure require the review department to afford great weight to the hearing judge's findings in such matters, absent a good reason for reaching a different result. Where the hearing judge accepted respondent's client's testimony regarding the timing of a request for a refund of advanced costs, and explained why the client's testimony was given greater weight than respondent's contrary testimony, the review department adopted the hearing judge's findings and conclusions on that issue. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [7]

The review department is obligated to afford great weight to the assessments of credibility made by the hearing referee, for the referee is in the best position to see witnesses and judge, by their demeanor and address, the truthfulness of each. Respondent's repeating his version of the events does not demonstrate that the referee's findings were unfounded. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [6]

Confidentiality for marital communications does not apply to testimony concerning matters prior to the marriage or after the couple's estrangement. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [5]

The hearing department has wide latitude to receive all admissible evidence, especially since it sits without a jury. Where respondent's ex-spouse's testimony was properly admitted, but because there was little corroboration and due to the marital dissolution the chance of bias was great, the hearing department properly disregarded such testimony, respondent could not successfully claim prejudicial error. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [6]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Where witnesses' abilities to observe petitioner's character in light of any changes since disbarment were limited, or witnesses were not fully aware of nature of offenses leading to disbarment, such character evidence failed to show a clear case for reinstatement, or to overcome effect of State Bar's negative evidence. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [13]

Favorable character evidence is neither conclusive or necessarily determinative on reinstatement. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [14]

Where hearing referee found respondent's testimony credible and candid, and client's testimony confusing and inconsistent, argument that review department should disbelieve attorney and believe client was unavailing in light of deference review department must give to referee's findings based on credibility of witnesses. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [7]

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar require that the review department give great weight to the hearing department's findings of fact resolving issues pertaining to testimony. This rule rests on the sound policy that when evidence turns on the assessment of credibility, the evaluation of such evidence should be made by a judicial officer who sees and hears the witnesses and can translate the credibility accorded witnesses into the weight to be given their testimony as it relates to other evidence in the case. Before disregarding any such credibility assessments, the review department must have a very good reason for doing so. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [6]

Where the record includes extensive documentary as well as testimonial evidence, it is incumbent on the hearing department to weigh all of the evidence and identify for the litigants and further reviewing bodies the way in which credibility assessments led to the court's ultimate conclusions regarding respondent's culpability or innocence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [8]

Because the hearing department is in the best position to view witnesses and evaluate their truthfulness, the review department is reluctant to deviate from the hearing department's credibility findings. Reevaluation of witness credibility is limited by the nature of the review process, due to the effect of witness demeanor on credibility findings. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [2]

The hearing department may properly give greater credence to a witness's testimony on some issues than on others. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [3]

In evaluating the record on review, the review department is bound to give great deference to the referee's evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses. There is a strong presumption in favor of the referee's findings of fact regarding such credibility. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [4]

Petitioner for reinstatement could have presented additional character testimony from out-of-state witnesses without undue expense by taking their depositions. (Rules 318, 666, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [13]

Where examiner stipulated to admissibility of character reference letters at hearing, and thus chose not to require the declarants to be cross-examined, examiner's attempt to discount letters before review department was without foundation. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [21]

In reinstatement proceeding, impressive testimonials of witnesses were neither conclusive nor necessarily determinative; witnesses could not be given conclusive weight in light of petitioner's failure to file complete and sufficient application for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [15]

148.10 Oath or Affirmation Requied (rule 5.104(A) (2011))

151 Evidentiary Effect of Stipulations (see rules 5.54-5.58) (2011))

Where respondent and State Bar stipulated to facts, legal conclusions on culpability, and discipline, but Supreme Court remanded matter for reconsideration of discipline in light of Standards, parties remained bound by stipulation with regard to facts and culpability. State Bar Court permitted parties to present additional evidence on aggravation and mitigation, and reconsidered degree of discipline. However, State Bar was bound by original stipulation that respondent's misconduct was not serious. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.320. [1a-d]

Because a stipulation remains binding on a party in a subsequent proceeding unless the court relieves the party from the stipulation, respondent's stipulation with Sacramento county counsel as part of a settlement of a civil contempt proceeding which stipulated to the findings in a sanctions order constituted stipulated findings, which, standing alone, were sufficient to meet the clear and convincing standard. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

The hearing judge did not err in prohibiting respondent from presenting evidence of his willingness to settle the case by stipulating to the misconduct and a reasonable level of discipline and of the State Bar's unwillingness to present a settlement offer that contained what he considered to be a reasonable level of discipline. Respondent is afforded substantial mitigation for cooperation because, in addition to other instances of cooperation throughout the investigation of the matter, he stipulated to the facts underlying the misconduct and because the stipulated facts were not easily provable. Substantial mitigation is given without regard to the fact that the parties were unable to stipulate to an appropriate level of discipline. Not doing so would "punish" respondent merely for seeking his day in court as to the level of discipline. Not being able to reach a stipulated discipline does not have any effect on the court's analysis of the degree of mitigation awarded for respondent's overall cooperation in helping resolve the charged misconduct. In the Matter of Silver (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 902.[1]

Absent the court granting a set aside, a partial stipulation to facts remains binding on the parties, and the facts recited in the stipulation are deemed established. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884.[1]

Stipulations about culpability, aggravation, and mitigation provide a starting point to determine whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) has shown rehabilitation and is unlikely to repeat misconduct. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [7]

In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227.

Where respondent's declaration attached to stipulation suggested mitigating circumstances, but stipulation did not specify whether State Bar accepted statements in declaration as true and hearing judge did not indicate whether statements were found to be persuasive, review department declined to reach conclusion regarding possible mitigating factors suggested by declaration. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [8]

A stipulated disciplinary order does not constitute precedent, but does represent a determination by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the hearing judge that the degree of discipline ordered satisfies the need to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [11]

The review department will not consider disputed, extrinsic evidence on review. Where respondent's counsel referred at oral argument to respondent's current activity, the review department permitted the parties an opportunity to file a stipulation regarding this subject, but when no stipulation was reached, the review department declined to consider the parties' separate declarations setting forth their individual views of the facts. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [2

In reviewing the record of an attorney's criminal conviction resulting from a guilty plea, for the purpose of determining the propriety of summary disbarment, the court does not take into account language in the information unnecessary to the crime to which the attorney pled guilty, but may consider additional undisputed facts based on the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [2]

Even where the record at the hearing level consists of stipulated facts and conclusions, the review department's review is nevertheless independent, and it may adopt findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation different from those of the hearing judge. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

Review department adopted parties' stipulated facts, noting that the Supreme Court ordinarily will hold an accused attorney to stipulated facts even in a matter arising from a stipulation as to facts and disposition. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Where the stipulation of the parties did not preclude a conclusion that respondent's misappropriations were acts of moral turpitude, and given the number and similarity of the matters in which respondent admitted to misappropriating trust funds, the burden shifted to respondent to rebut the conclusion that moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Whether or not review department adopted parties' stipulated legal conclusions, the Supreme Court would not be bound by them in its independent review. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

On review, a respondent cannot challenge culpability of misconduct to which the respondent stipulated at the hearing level. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [3]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding must accept facts to which the respondent has stipulated. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [4]

Where parties stipulated to waive any variance between facts set forth in stipulation and allegations of notice to show cause, stipulated facts which were not charged in original notice could be considered even though notice had not been amended. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [1]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

152 Discretion to Exclude Evidence (rule 5.104(F) (2011))

159 Miscellaneous Evidentiary Issues

Members of the State Bar may be disciplined on the basis of their pre-admission misconduct. State Bar Moral Character Committee's consideration for moral character purposes of respondent's pre-admission misdemeanor conviction did not bar State Bar Court from considering it for discipline purposes. Records relating to respondent's admission to the State Bar were admissible in his post-admission disciplinary proceeding, especially where respondent failed to object at trial to being questioned about such records. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402 [2]

Great weight is given to a hearing judge's finding as to intent. Where hearing judge determined respondent was grossly negligent when verifying his clients' complaint and State Bar relied on same evidence already considered by the hearing judge to argue respondent was intentionally deceitful, there was no basis to conclude that respondent's decision to sign verification rose to an act of intentional dishonesty rather than mere gross neglect. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [1]

Where respondent neither identified an exhibit for the record nor made an offer of proof demonstrating what the exhibit would have established, respondent failed to perfect his right to claim on appeal the that hearing judge improperly excluded the exhibit from evidence. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [2]

Where respondent failed to corroborate or substantiate his testimony with evidence that one would have expectedly produced, respondent's unexplained failure to produce such evidence is a strong indication that respondent's testimony is not credible. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [7]

Where respondent did not object to the admission of evidence, it is well settled that any objection on that point has been waived. Therefore, respondent's assertion that the hearing judge erroneously admitted hearsay evidence was not well taken because respondent failed to object to the admission of all but one of the objectionable items of evidence. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [8]

Although the discussion accompanying a rule of professional conduct can be considered as an interpretive aid, it cannot add an independent basis for imposing discipline. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [2]

Under the rules of statutory construction, significance should be given to every word, phrase, sentence and part of an act in pursuance of the legislative purpose if possible. Statutes are to be given effect according to the usual, ordinary import of the language employed in framing them. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [3]

Regardless of what inferences that may be drawn from an attorney's failure to keep proper books of account or records in an appropriate case, the review department must ultimately recognize that the State Bar's burden requires it to present proof in the form of stipulated facts or admissible evidence to support each of the elements of its disciplinary case. Considering that the State Bar alleged that $1.7 million of trust funds was lost, the State Bar failed to present expected probative testimonial or documentary evidence, choosing to rest solely on respondent's testimony and then criticizing respondent for not having presented records listing her clients and detailing payments to them. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [4]

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

The primary consequence of an order determining the grade of a crime for State Bar disciplinary purposes would be as to the evidence presented on the question of degree of discipline to recommend or impose should moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline be found. On the issue of degree of discipline, the ultimate grade of a crime, together with other mitigating evidence, could bear on the ultimate result. In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [3]

A disciplinary proceeding arising from conviction of a crime is fundamentally different from and a complete alternative to an original proceeding brought under Business and Professions Code section 6075 et seq. The streamlined procedures following an attorney's conviction of a crime rest on proceedings in the criminal courts in which the burden is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These procedures recognize that the basis for attorney discipline is not the provable violation of a rule of professional conduct but the mere existence of a certified copy of an attorney's record of conviction. Only convictions which do not inherently involve moral turpitude are referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether there is a legal basis for imposing discipline, but even in these cases guilt is conclusively established by the record of conviction and is not subject to collateral attack. Thus, where a conviction proceeding was commenced in the State Bar Court, which proceeding arose from the same underlying facts as an earlier original proceeding in the State Bar Court, neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel acted as a bar to the conviction proceeding, since neither the issues nor the causes of action in the two types of proceedings are the same.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[2 a-g]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Because hearing judge admitted a paralegal's business card, which also had name of respondent's law offices and insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it, into evidence without limitation and without any hearsay objection from respondent, review department properly considered business card for the truth of the matter stated by relying on it as evidence that respondent employed the paralegal.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [16]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on immigration judge's statements in it to support one of State Bar's witness's testimony and to contradict respondent's testimony in State Bar Court.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [18]

Because transcript of immigration court hearing was admitted into evidence for all purposes and without any hearsay objection, review department properly considered it for the truth of the matter stated by relying on the unsworn statements of two attorneys contained in it to establish multiple relevant facts. Review department considered attorneys' unsworn statements to be highly credible because they, like all attorneys, have a duty under State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct to employ means only as are consistent with truth.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [21]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

Absent an appropriate objection to the introduction of evidence of misconduct other than that charged in the notice of disciplinary charges, such evidence may, when appropriate, be used as an aggravating factor in disciplinary matters.In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [3 a-c]

Reinstatement petitioner established requisite learning in law by passing California Bar Examination, Attorneys' Examination. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [1 a,b]

Although earlier admissions cases do not consider the time a petitioner is in custody or under court or State Bar supervision to be particularly weighty in assessing rehabilitation, the petitioner in each of those cases had engaged in extremely serious misconduct for an extensive time and had not adequately shown rehabilitation in light of the seriousness of the offenses. In contrast, in this case, petitioner's misconduct, though clearly serious, spanned four years, but there was no evidence that petitioner acted in less than an exemplary fashion while on probation. Further, some of petitioner's positive conduct, notably his cooperation with the State Bar, occurred despite his understanding that he would get no benefit from it. The review department therefore concluded that it was appropriate in this case to accord some weight to petitioner's activities while on probation, but it gave far greater weight to the last four years of petitioner's showing, which were after he completed his criminal probation. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2 a,b]

Concern in reinstatement proceeding is not just in counting correct number of years for measuring petitioner's rehabilitation, but is to assess quality of petitioner's rehabilitation showing in light of prior very serious misconduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [3]

Testimony of members of the bar and bench of high repute is entitled to careful consideration in assessing a petitioner's rehabilitation when the petitioner has been close to their observation. This is because such witnesses are morally bound by their oaths as attorneys at law not to recommend a disbarred attorney for reinstatement unless they are satisfied of the rehabilitation of his character. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [5]

Opinion testimony of an attorney as to the ultimate issue that petitioner was qualified for reinstatement was not precluded, although that ultimate issue was for the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court to decide. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6 a,b]

Negative testimony regarding petitioner's rehabilitation did not rebut petitioner's favorable testimony for a very important reason: the negative testimony was based solely on the severity of petitioner's earlier misconduct and not on his rehabilitative steps since resignation. The witnesses had no personal observation of petitioner for most, if not all, of the 10 years that elapsed between the time petitioner resigned and the State Bar Court hearings. Thus, while the negative testimony of each of these witnesses was relevant on the issues of the seriousness and the nature and extent of petitioner's prior misconduct, it was of little relevance on the issues of petitioner's present character and of whether petitioner has maintained a sustained period of unblemished and exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [7 a-c]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. Nevertheless, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence test are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in disciplinary proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. Where the trial judge in a civil proceeding found that respondent knew prior to filing a lawsuit that he had not been defamed, that his law firm had not been disparaged, and that his retainer contract with his clients had not been interfered with at all, and those findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record, the hearing judge's conclusion in the disciplinary proceeding that respondent filed the lawsuit based on his honest and reasonable belief in its validity was contrary to the civil findings and did not appear to have accorded the civil findings the strong presumption of validity to which they were entitled. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [1]

A cause of action in a civil proceeding based on factual allegations that respondent knew he could not prove was patently frivolous and unjust, and respondent's continued pursuit of the meritless factual allegations was strong circumstantial evidence that he was motivated by vindictiveness. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [4]

Where the record did not establish that respondent made an offer of proof in order to give the hearing judge notice of the substance, purpose and relevance of proposed testimony (Evid. Code, § 354), respondent waived any error in the exclusion of the proposed testimony. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [6]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

Where respondent's evidentiary objection at trial was neither timely nor specific, the review department refused to disregard the challenged evidence. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [6]

Although neither the reporter's transcript of the hearing department proceedings nor the clerk's notations on the exhibits indicated that certain exhibits were formally admitted into evidence, the review department treated the exhibits as part of the record for purposes of review where the hearing judge considered the exhibits and the judge and counsel treated the exhibits as having been admitted into evidence. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [14]

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [16]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in determining that State Bar's evidence establishing that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of petitioner's former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers did not prevent petitioner from showing his rehabilitation because hearing judge based that determination on his findings that petitioner did not know (1) of the client's claim or (2) of Client Security Fund's actions until petitioner's deposition was taken in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding and because those two findings are supported by substantial evidence consisting of petitioner's own testimony, which was supported with a number of letters from the client's file demonstrating that medical providers had been paid. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [4]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [11]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

The relevant testimony of a witness given in civil proceeding is admissible in disciplinary proceedings without regard to the witness's availability and is considered and weighed as though the witness was present and testifying in the disciplinary proceeding. Moreover, the State Bar Court may take judicial notice of non-testimonial matters (i.e., pleadings, exhibits, findings) in a civil action that involved the same conduct underlying the disciplinary charges against an attorney. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [3]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Respondent's production of verifications purporting to bear his client's signature but which were signed by a manipulated means involved dishonesty, an aggravating circumstance. Respondent engaged in moral turpitude whether he was grossly negligent in offering the verifications as signed by his client or prepared them intentionally to mislead. Although there is no direct evidence that respondent personally simulated his client's signature, he offered the documents to exculpate himself and he must bear responsibility for their altered nature.In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [5]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

Unless civil sanctions issues arising under section 128.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are adequately litigated before the sanctioning court, it would appear inappropriate to apply collateral estoppel in the State Bar Court to the sanction order. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [2]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

The hearing judge did not err by admitting evidence under Evidence Code section 1223, the so-called coconspirator's exception to the hearsay rule. The law supporting use of the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule does not require absolute proof of a conspiracy, but only that there be independent evidence to establish prima facie the existence of a conspiracy and other preliminary facts. Those requirements were adequately met here. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [3]

Where statements could have been offered not to prove the truth of the matter stated, but for the purpose of showing that they were made in respondent's presence to disprove respondent's claim of lack of knowledge, the statements were not hearsay. In the absence of an objection and a request, made in accordance with Evidence Code section 355, that the use of the statements be admitted into evidence for the limited purpose, any error in their admission was waived. In any case, the statements were admissible under the adoptive admissions exception to the hearsay rule. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [4]

Respondent's calling and threatening State Bar witness shortly before trial can be for no purpose other than interference with disciplinary proceeding and tends to demonstrate knowledge of culpability on part of respondent. Because such evidence was not offered to show culpability in uncharged count, it was properly admitted and considered as serious aggravation; see Penal Code section 136.1, subdivision (a)(2) (crime to prevent of dissuade another from attending or testifying). In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [8 a-c]

Hearing judge did not error in drawing inferences against respondent with respect to authenticity of documents written by respondent when respondent refused to answer proper questions after respondent's claim against self incrimination under Fifth Amendment was denied and she had been ordered to answer. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [11]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge is required to give respondent the benefit of all reasonable doubts, she was not required to devalue evidence she found stronger than that of respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [3]

Only as to matters in which a conviction is referred by the review department for a hearing and recommendation as to discipline and thereafter considered by the Supreme Court, will the Supreme Court consider all facts underlying a conviction when deciding on the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [1]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.[2]

With respect the considered views of the federal judge who presided over the criminal proceeding, the review department was bound by Supreme Court precedent rejecting consideration of very similar remarks by a sentencing judge expressing an opinion on an issue within the unique province of the Supreme Court and of the State Bar Court acting as the Supreme Court's arm. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.[3]

The hearing judge did not err in prohibiting respondent from presenting evidence of his willingness to settle the case by stipulating to the misconduct and a reasonable level of discipline and of the State Bar's unwillingness to present a settlement offer that contained what he considered to be a reasonable level of discipline. Respondent is afforded substantial mitigation for cooperation because, in addition to other instances of cooperation throughout the investigation of the matter, he stipulated to the facts underlying the misconduct and because the stipulated facts were not easily provable. Substantial mitigation is given without regard to the fact that the parties were unable to stipulate to an appropriate level of discipline. Not doing so would "punish" respondent merely for seeking his day in court as to the level of discipline. Not being able to reach a stipulated discipline does not have any effect on the court's analysis of the degree of mitigation awarded for respondent's overall cooperation in helping resolve the charged misconduct. In the Matter of Silver (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 902.[1]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[3]

The basis of the hearing judge's finding of present moral fitness was character evidence and petitioner's testimony about his volunteer work and his assistance to relatives. However, in determining present moral qualifications, testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive. Similarly, volunteer work and care of relatives are factors to be considered, but are not dispositive. The review department reversed the finding of present moral fitness, finding that by minimizing and denying his serious misconduct, petitioner revealed a failure to appreciate the responsibilities of an attorney and the gravity of his ethical violations. This failure undermined his attempt to prove his present moral qualifications for readmission, as well as his attempt to show rehabilitation. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[5]

A petitioner's submissions in a reinstatement proceeding can form the basis for a finding of a lack of present ability and learning in the law. Petitioner failed to demonstrate present learning and ability in the law, despite having taken many bar review and continuing education classes and having increased his knowledge of the law, when he filed review briefs that used facts from exhibits that were never admitted into evidence; attempted to use exhibits, admitted for a limited purpose, to assert the truth of the matters therein; misstated the long established burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings; misread the findings of the judge, and unreasonably exaggerated. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[7]

Without, at least, a factual stipulation establishing aggravation and mitigation, neither the review department nor the Supreme Court have a complete record upon which to evaluate the appropriate discipline for the misconduct that occurred. Where the record consisted of the parties' partial stipulation to facts which did not address any aggravating or mitigating circumstances and two character letters proffered by respondent, the review department determined that the sparse record precluded it from fulfilling its duty to independently review the record and remanded the case for a trial de novo at which an adequate record was made. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [2]

The State Bar proved that respondent used over $500,000 of his client's assets for speculative ventures in which he had a financial or ownership interest without any disclosures of the investments or his interests to the client and without providing any periodic accountings to her. In view of the evidence presented, to defend the charges, it was incumbent on respondent to present adequate, contemporaneous records showing that he had complied with the ethical and fiduciary duties of an attorney. He failed to do so. The lack of minimal formality and recordkeeping by respondent supports the hearing judge's findings and conclusions and erodes respondent's defense. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [1]

An attorney's criminal conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is deemed a conviction for attorney disciplinary purposes and is conclusive proof of the attorney's guilt on each of the essential elements of the offense of which the attorney was convicted. Thus, respondent cannot collaterally attack his conviction in the State Bar Court even though the victim of respondent's crime lost her civil lawsuit against respondent for damages. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [4]

The rule requiring the review department to give great weight to the hearing judge's findings of fact that resolve issues pertaining to the credibility of the witnesses, which rule is premised on the hearing judge's ability to see the witnesses' demeanor and conduct during trial, is not applicable when a witness's testimony is present only through a written transcript of the witness's deposition. Thus, in such a case, the review department may independently evaluate the credibility of the witness's deposition testimony without giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [3]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Respondent was not entitled to present evidence for the first time on review that a State Bar official had engaged in improper conduct in a separate civil proceeding against respondent, where respondent had the opportunity to make this allegation and present evidence in support of it at the hearing level. Also, respondent failed to show how such evidence had any bearing on either his culpability of the charges against him or the appropriate discipline for his misconduct. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [4]

On de novo review, entire record is before the review department, and it may rely on evidence introduced at any point in the trail, including the disciplinary phase. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [5]

Character evidence is important on the issue of the degree of discipline, and the credibility of the character witnesses should be weighed the same as any other witness. Accordingly, it was improper to admit telephonic testimony and the hearsay letters over the objection of the State Bar. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [1]

A client's complaint letter offered into evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted was hearsay. Because events were not fresh in the client's mind when he wrote the letter, it did not qualify for admission under the exception for a past recollection recorded that corroborated the client's testimony. Even if the letter did qualify for this exception, it should not have been received into evidence because it was offered by the State Bar rather than by an adverse party. Nor did the letter qualify for admission under the corroborative evidence exception to the hearsay rule because it lacked sufficient indicia of trustworthiness. Accordingly, the letter was struck from the record. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [2]

Section 6049.2 of the Business and Professions Code authorizes the admission of transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings in State Bar disciplinary proceedings without proof of the witnesses' unavailability. However, section 6049.2 is, under its express terms, applicable only in disciplinary proceedings, and there is no parallel section permitting admission of prior transcripts in moral character proceedings. Accordingly, if a proper objection is made, transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings are admissible in moral character proceedings only upon a showing that the witnesses whose testimony is recorded in such transcripts are unavailable to testify. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [4]

Prior civil court findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof merely constitute evidence in a State Bar Court proceeding, not the exclusive record upon which an issue must be adjudicated. While the State Bar may choose to proffer prior civil court findings as its entire case against an attorney or applicant on the underlying issue, the attorney or applicant then has the right to controvert, temper, or explain the civil findings with other evidence, including live testimony from the same witnesses who testified in the civil trial. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [6]

Prior civil court findings made under the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in State Bar Court proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [7]

Although the burden of proof in State Bar proceedings is generally clear and convincing evidence, there is no State Bar rule that specifically sets forth the State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal in moral character proceedings. An applicant's claim for admission to the practice of law in this state is not a mere privilege, but a claim of right that is afforded the protection of due process. Even though there are distinctions between admission proceedings and disciplinary proceedings, the question involved in both disciplinary and admissions proceedings is the same—is the applicant for admission or the attorney sought to be disciplined a fit and proper person to be permitted to practice law. The test for admission and for discipline is and should be the same. Accordingly, except as otherwise provided by law, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [8]

Where First Amendment rights are at stake, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Where the right of access to the courts is at stake, proof beyond a reasonable doubt may also be required. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [9]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court is bound by civil findings that exculpate a respondent of charged misconduct, or by an attorney's acquittal in a criminal case, or by the dismissal of criminal charges against an attorney. The reasons the State Bar is not bound by exculpatory civil findings or criminal acquittals in disciplinary proceedings are that the parties are different, the quantum of proof required in each proceeding is virtually always different, and the purposes of each proceeding are vastly different. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [10]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

Even though Evidence Code permits legal experts to testify regarding ultimate legal issues, such issues are ultimately for independent decision-making of State Bar Court and Supreme Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [6]

Disbelief of a respondent's testimony does not create evidence to the contrary. Where respondent allegedly misrepresented to insurer that respondent's personal bank account was a client trust account, but only evidence to rebut respondent's testimony to contrary was notation in insurer's records, presence of such notation was not sufficient to establish that it resulted from misrepresentation by respondent, even where hearing judge found respondent not credible. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [2]

Where client gave written authorization to respondent to apply portion of client's net settlement proceeds to outstanding legal fees client owed respondent on prior case, respondent was not required to prove existence of prior case to establish entitlement to funds applied to fees. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [3]

The testimony of an investigator is not the best evidence on the contents of court records. Testimony or sworn evidence from the court clerk responsible for the records is more germane and reliable. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [4]

Hearing judges are accorded wide latitude to receive all relevant evidence, and relief from their decisions will not be granted on the basis of alleged error in admitting evidence unless actual prejudice is established. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [5]

Where respondent moved to augment record on review to include documentary evidence regarding respondent's pro bono activities, but respondent did not establish good cause why such evidence could not have been presented to hearing department, review department declined to consider such evidence. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [15]

Even if State Bar prosecutor had duty to disclose exculpatory evidence, unpublished, non-precedential trial court decision did not constitute such evidence, nor was it controlling precedent which prosecutor had duty to disclose to court. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [14]

When a disciplinary proceeding is pending in State Bar Court, the respondent may be able to argue that evidence sought to be used by the State Bar which was obtained by improper means should be excluded. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [9]

Petitions to augment the record on review are generally granted only if it is demonstrated that the record below is incomplete or incorrect. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) The general rule is not to entertain evidence not heard by the hearing judge unless it is the only means of presenting limited evidence of subsequent rehabilitation. It is also unusual for petitions to augment to be granted if contested. Where respondent requested to augment the record with documents relating to one of his complaining clients, and with two newspaper articles, respondent did not show good cause for the review department to consider such evidence over the State Bar's objection. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [9]

List of representative cases respondent had handled, including pro bono matters, which was attached to respondent's brief on review, and expanded from similar list introduced at trial, was of minimal value in terms of mitigation, especially without explanation. Review department therefore declined to augment record to include list and did not consider it. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [11]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

Where respondent's brief on review referred to facts and newspaper articles regarding victim of respondent's misconduct which were not part of the record, review department declined to strike brief or admonish respondent or his counsel, but emphasized that its review is limited to the evidence properly made a part of the record. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rules 1303-1304.) In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [1]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

Where administrative proceeding in which respondent had not appeared had resulted in revocation of respondent's real estate license, and record of such administrative proceeding was relevant in State Bar disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge and parties should have addressed issues regarding whether administrative decision had preclusive weight; if not, whether it was admissible under any hearsay exception, and whether respondent should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning culpability or mitigation with respect to the license revocation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [10]

Where parties jointly requested augmentation of record with exhibits which they had provided to hearing judge for consideration in rendering decision and had intended to make part of record, and which hearing judge had relied on in reaching decision, and which were vital to review, record would have been incomplete without exhibits, and request to augment was granted. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [2]

It would have been inappropriate in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding for judge to draw any inference from pending criminal charges in and of themselves. However, testimony offered under oath and subject to cross-examination in preliminary hearings on such criminal charges supported judge's findings regarding facts of respondent's criminal conduct. This evidence was sufficient to demonstrate a reasonable probability that State Bar would prevail on merits of disciplinary charges brought thereon. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [3]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

Testimony of expert witness who did not know facts of specific case but could only give opinion as to respondents' practices was proper expert testimony. Where hearing judge limited expert's testimony to proper opinion testimony on subjects of his qualifications, fair hearing was ensured. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [9]

A conviction after a plea of nolo contendere is a conviction for disciplinary purposes no less than a conviction after a plea or verdict of guilty. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

There are numerous factors to consider in assessing witness credibility beyond observing the witness while testifying. The hearing judge, as the trier of fact in State Bar proceedings, is to determine the credibility of witnesses and hearsay declarants. The fact that some witnesses testified at the State Bar hearing by way of a transcript of the witnesses' criminal court testimony, which is expressly authorized by statute in State Bar proceedings, is not reason to discount their testimony or find it less credible than live witness testimony. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [1]

Where, as a result of a hearing judge's dismissal of a disciplinary proceeding, the hearing judge did not make findings regarding aggravation/mitigation and concluded there was no need to rule on the admissibility of certain exhibits, thus foreclosing respondent's opportunity to substitute other evidence if the exhibits were not admitted, the review department concluded, when the dismissal was overturned, that it was appropriate to remand the matter to the hearing judge for further proceedings on the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [13]

It is well established that an aggrieved party may properly bring to the court's attention the alleged breach of a settlement agreement arrived at before a judge and reflected in an ensuing court order. Rule 1231 of the Provisional Rules of Practice and Evidence Code sections 1152, subdivision (a) and 1154 only preclude evidence of settlement offers and negotiations that do not result in an agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [7]

The Office of Trial Counsel waived its right to argue on review that certain evidence should not have been admitted when it withdrew its opposition to a post-trial motion before the hearing judge for introduction of the evidence. Accordingly, the review department did not address in detail the Office of Trial Counsel's objections to the evidence. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [5]

Where the record of a legal specialization proceeding contained no documents explaining the basis for the denial of specialist certification and where responses by the deputy trial counsel to interrogatories clarified the basis for the denial, augmentation of the record with the interrogatory responses was appropriate. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

The fact that an attorney's untimely affidavit under rule 955 is accepted for filing is not evidence of the attorney's compliance with the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [5]

Where a court file was moved into evidence without objection or limitation, any objection to the admissibility of a proof of service contained in such file was waived. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [5]

In considering whether to recommend summary disbarment, the State Bar Court is generally limited to determining whether the statutory and case law criteria have been met on the face of the conviction papers, although undisputed additional facts may also be taken into account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [3]

Where respondent committed grand theft by embezzlement, the felony conviction papers demonstrated that an element of respondent's offense was the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [5]

A motion supported by written submissions, including a detailed psychiatric report, could, if unopposed, be sufficient evidence to warrant abating a disciplinary proceeding due to the respondent's inability to assist in the defense. However, where the adequacy of the respondent's showing is questioned, the respondent's evidence may be weighed in the context of the whole record in the disciplinary proceeding. Any proffered medical submission regarding the respondent's mental competency should address the nature of the medical examination or tests conducted; the attorney's symptoms; the diagnosis and cause of the condition, and any past or proposed treatment. The report should note whether the illness raises doubts about the respondent's ability to assist in the defense, and should relate the respondent's condition to a recognized legal definition of competency. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [9]

Medical evidence regarding an attorney's competency to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding should be submitted to the State Bar Court at the hearing level. The reliability of evidence concerning a person's mental state is virtually impossible to test in the absence of cross-examination. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [10]

Where it was unclear what evidence hearing judge considered in deciding to abate disciplinary proceeding due to respondent's claimed inability to assist counsel, and where respondent's medical evidence lacked important elements and was conclusory, and respondent's counsel's declaration was undermined by contrast with earlier declaration regarding respondent's superior performance of paralegal tasks, review department concluded that hearing judge failed to exercise her discretion properly in abating proceeding without holding hearing to allow presentation and resolution of conflicting evidence. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [11]

External pressures to pay restitution for misappropriated funds, including court orders and agreements with victims of misappropriation, do not preclude consideration of such restitution in reinstatement proceedings. The weight to be accorded to restitution depends on the petitioner's attitude, as evidenced by a spirit of willingness, earnestness, and sincerity. Where a reinstatement petitioner who had misappropriated funds from a probate estate had subsequently recognized the gravity of his misconduct; admitted his misappropriation to the probate court and the State Bar; cooperated in an audit of the estate's records; secured his debt to the estate by granting it interests in his real and personal property, and fully repaid both the misappropriated funds and additional interest, surcharges, fees, and costs, his restitution deserved significant weight even though it was required by a probate court order. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [5]

The standard of review on the issue of exclusion of evidence depends on the basis for the hearing judge's action. If the proffered evidence was inadmissible as a matter of law, then the standard is independent de novo review. If not, the review department must consider whether the hearing judge had discretion to exclude the evidence, and if so, whether that discretion was properly exercised. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [8]

Underlying evidence of uncharged misconduct was not made inadmissible by rule prohibiting admission in evidence, except in rebuttal, of records of complaints or charges, where such evidence was offered in aggravation and impeachment in a contested proceeding after respondent testified regarding rehabilitation. (Rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [9]

Under California civil evidence rules, which apply generally in State Bar proceedings, a hearing judge has discretion to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will necessitate undue consumption of time or create substantial danger of undue prejudice. Undue consumption of time alone is not in itself grounds for exclusion. Nor is unfair surprise, where the fairness if the trial may otherwise be ensured, if necessary by a continuance. Where evidence is cumulative or remote, however, there is discretion to exclude it. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [10]

Declarations can be admitted into evidence in lieu of live testimony when no objection is raised. Where a declaration by the respondent was introduced into evidence by the State Bar without limiting the purpose for which the declaration was admitted, the declaration was admissible for all purposes, including the truth of the respondent's hearsay statements contained therein. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [7]

Hearing judge's refusal to permit respondent to present evidence that value of one estate asset increased during respondent's delay in completing probate did not entitle respondent to relief, where such increase in value did not justify respondent's misconduct in delaying distribution of other estate assets. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [7]

Hearing judge's denial of respondent's request for continuance to research probate practices in respondent's county was not error, where respondent had had ample time prior to trial to prepare his defense, and evidence sought would have had very little probative value as custom and practice in respondent's county would not explain or excuse respondent's prolonged delay in closing estate at issue. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [8]

Hearing judge's request that respondent discuss mitigation evidence with examiner and try to "work something out," in order to promote stipulations for the introduction of character letters, did not constitute an improper requirement that respondent obtain the State Bar's prior approval to present mitigation evidence. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [9]

Transcript of superior court trial regarding probate matter which was subject of disciplinary proceeding was admissible pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6049.2, and hearing judge did not err in admitting entire transcript, even though much of testimony was not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, where transcript was admitted subject to respondent's motion to strike parts that were not material or relevant, and respondent failed to make such motion. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [10]

Former review department's admission of certain exhibits into evidence without allowing respondent an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence was error. Nevertheless, no error in admitting or excluding evidence invalidates a finding of fact, decision or determination unless the error resulted in a denial of a fair hearing. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where such exhibits were not relied upon in determining culpability and discipline, respondent failed to show that the admission of the documents deprived him of a fair hearing. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [5]

The passage of an appreciable period of time is an appropriate consideration in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has made sufficient progress towards rehabilitation. Where the evidence is uncontroverted and shows exemplary conduct for eight to ten years with no suggestion of wrongdoing, a petitioner would seem to have established rehabilitation. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [10]

Evidence of pro bono or charitable work reflects on an erring attorney's rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner for reinstatement had volunteered one full day every week for several years at a legal services program, such extensive pro bono work was a significant factor in favor of the petitioner's reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [11]

Although testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive, favorable character evidence deserves heavy weight in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has proved rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Favorable character testimony and reference letters from employers and attorneys are entitled to special weight. Petitioner's current employer's testimony expressing a high opinion of petitioner's character, demeanor and behavior, and confirming petitioner's sensitivity and concern for proper ethical behavior, merited significant weight. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [13]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty please to a drime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

The State Bar is a public entity within the scope of the statutory official information privilege (Evid. Code, § 1040). The procedure to be followed in State Bar Court proceedings where the official information privilege is asserted is the same as in civil cases. In a moral character proceeding, where the information sought was the identities of persons whom the State Bar had reserved the right to call as impeachment or rebuttal witnesses at trial, the official information privilege did not apply to such information, either because the consent exception was applicable, or because the reservation of the right to call such persons reduced the Committee of Bar Examiners' need for secrecy to the interest of a party in the outcome of the proceeding, which is not protected under section 1040 and which was outweighed by the interests of the public and the applicant in a fair trial. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [6]

A hearing judge should scrutinize with care any evidence bearing the earmarks of private spite. Nevertheless, any instigating factor or personal motive in the initiation of a State Bar proceeding is not a matter of controlling concern where the facts disclosed justify disciplinary action. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [11]

Review department did not need to reach respondent's challenges to hearing judge's evidentiary rulings in order to uphold hearing judge's ultimate findings, where all essential elements of charged violation were established by evidence to which respondent did not object, and any evidentiary errors did not result in denial of a fair hearing. Where factual findings based on challenged evidence were not necessary to decision, remand for new hearing was not necessary even if evidentiary errors underlay some non-essential findings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [1]

Where superior court appellate department had reversed decision revoking respondent's criminal probation due to municipal court's refusal to permit respondent's counsel to cross-examine prosecution's witness, transcript of municipal court proceeding could not have been considered as evidence pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6049.2. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [11]

Where examiner's pre-trial statement listed respondent's prior record of discipline among exhibits to be offered at trial, but did not detail or characterize such prior record in any way, and copy of prior record was not considered by hearing judge until after determination of culpability, and respondent demonstrated no prejudice from reference in pre-trial statement and had failed to raise issue before hearing judge, respondent was not entitled to any relief based on asserted violation of rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

Where notice to show cause could have been more clearly phrased with respect to duration of respondent's alleged misconduct, but hearing judge correctly concluded after colloquy at trial that it encompassed misconduct prior to as well as after a certain date, and where hearing judge prohibited introduction of evidence as to respondent's conduct prior to such date only after respondent had had ample time to present such evidence, and where respondent gave no offer of proof or explanation regarding any additional evidence on such issue, respondent's claims of denial of adequate notice of charges and fair opportunity to present evidence were without merit. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [8]

Where complaining witness testified credibly that an attorney-client relationship existed between himself and respondent, respondent himself had filed pleadings in civil litigation acknowledging such relationship, and respondent's counsel conceded that respondent had held himself out as complaining witness's attorney, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that complaining witness was not his client was without merit. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [2]

Where the respondent's testimony is plausible and uncontradicted, it should be regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available but was not offered. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [6]

Even if it was error for hearing judge to allow examiner to ask leading questions of complaining witness on direct examination, and to admit testimony as to witness's state of mind when such state of mind was not relevant, such errors were not prejudicial where complaining witness's testimony was clearly insufficient to establish State Bar's case and was not relied on in hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [8]

State Bar disciplinary proceedings are unique—not criminal, civil or administrative. Nonetheless, the respondent is entitled to a guarantee of a fair hearing, one of the elements of which is the right to offer relevant and competent evidence on a material issue. Denial of such right is almost always reversible error. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [10]

No deference was due to hearing judge's reliance on letters from complaining witness to State Bar, since such letters were not testimony but documentary evidence. Findings based on selected portions of the witness's testimony, which were contradicted in other portions of such testimony, and on the witness's demonstrably untrustworthy hearsay statements in the letters to the State Bar, were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [12]

Assuming hearing judge disbelieved testimony of all witnesses as to facts exculpating respondent, this was not a basis to find culpability. Testimony not worthy of belief does not reveal the truth itself or warrant an inference that the truth is the converse of the rejected testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [13]

State Bar has burden to prove culpability by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of the facts is plausible, even if controverted, it supports a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [14]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

It is appropriate for disciplinary purposes to consider any criminal charges that were dismissed as well as the charges for which the attorney was actually convicted. Thus, where the criminal complaint in a Vehicle Code violation matter charged respondent with being under the influence of phencyclidine, and clear and convincing evidence was presented establishing that respondent was under the influence of phencyclidine, that circumstance could be considered in the disciplinary proceeding even though respondent was not convicted of being under the influence of phencyclidine. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [7]

A hearing judge's interpretation of a written exhibit is not a determination on the credibility of a witness. The review department is free to make its own findings on issues that turn on documentary evidence, and to disagree with the hearing judge's resolution of such issues. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

Although an arbitrator's testimony is admissible on the question of what issues were tried in the arbitration, the arbitrator's expression of his own belief does not bind the State Bar Court in adjudicating the effect of the arbitration award. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [14]

Requests to augment the record at the review department level will be granted only if the original record is incomplete or incorrect. (Rule 1304, Provisional Rules of Practice.) Out-of-court evidence offered at the appellate level is ordinarily hearsay, and impossible to evaluate because of the absence of cross-examination to test the credibility of the declarant. The rule is to rely only on evidence which was presented to the trier of fact. The only general exception is to permit documentary evidence of subsequent rehabilitation when it is the only means to meet the heavy burden of demonstrating recovery from substance abuse or mental disorder. Where proffered additional evidence was derived from the record in another proceeding involving respondent, and was not offered to correct any omission in the record, the review department declined to grant respondent's motion to augment the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [2]

The rules of evidence in civil cases in courts of record, including applicable sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and judicial decisions as well as the Evidence Code, are followed in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. (Rule 556, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [27]

Evidence Code section 776, providing for calling the opposing party as an adverse witness, does not empower the State Bar to require the respondent's presence at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [29]

Where neither respondent nor respondent's former client testified as to respondent's hourly fee, but respondent had sent one bill to client reflecting an hourly rate of $100, and respondent apparently acquiesced in hearing judge's finding that respondent's fee was $100 per hour, review department adopted such finding. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [1]

A finding that the amount respondent withdrew from a client trust account was not an earned fee, even though the client did not dispute respondent's testimony that it was an earned fee, was consistent with the evidence that respondent had not performed any legal services during the period of time for which he withdrew the funds; that what work was done by the attorney occurred after the trust funds had been withdrawn; that no value had been placed on the attorney's services during that time, and that the attorney had otherwise been inattentive to the client's case. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [3]

In a default proceeding, ambiguous evidence that can be interpreted as consistent with allegations of the notice to show cause does not negate the deemed admissions of the notice to show cause. Where evidence introduced at default hearing fell short of clear and convincing proof of charged violations, but was not inconsistent with charging allegations, defaulting respondent should have been found culpable of violations properly charged. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

Respondent's assertion that the hearing judge improperly considered his prior arrest for growing marijuana, the prosecution of which had been diverted, was without merit, where respondent voluntarily testified, with advice of counsel, that he had grown marijuana at the time in question, and where respondent did not object to questions on the subject. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [1]

It is not clear that the statute regarding inadmissibility of evidence regarding diversion proceedings (Penal Code section 1000.5), and related case law, applies in attorney disciplinary proceedings, since such proceedings are conducted in the judicial branch of government by the State Bar Court, acting as an arm of the Supreme Court, and are aimed at assessing the attorney's fitness to practice law. Even if such authorities are applicable, evidence of respondent's arrest which resulted in diversion was properly used to show that respondent had a long history of involvement with marijuana. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [2]

There is no rule that excludes the admission of proper evidence because the object to which testimony relates is not introduced into evidence. Evidence relating to replica gun was therefore admissible, even though gun was not offered into evidence. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [4]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, the arresting officer's testimony describing a victim's retelling of the incident was hearsay, but was properly admitted because respondent waived hearsay objection by failing to appear at the hearing. The review department independently reviewed the hearsay evidence, found sufficient trustworthiness, and concluded it was properly relied on by the referee. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [5]

Where facts deemed conclusively established by court order, following respondent's failure to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, showed that respondent had wilfully misled judge, but respondent was permitted to testify that representations made to judge, though false, were true to the best of respondent's knowledge at the time they were made, respondent's testimony on this point was properly received, but only in mitigation, and not to contradict deemed admissions on which culpability findings were based. Deemed admissions, while conclusive as to literal truth of facts clearly set forth in request for admissions, did not preclude referee from admitting and considering other evidence that tended to explain or helped to interpret admitted facts. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [2]

Where respondent failed to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, those facts deemed admitted were properly considered as conclusive where there had been no timely motion for relief. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [3]

Respondent's testimony that he unsuccessfully tried to telephone a State Bar investigator in response to a letter the investigator sent him regarding his possible misconduct was admissible only in mitigation, not in defense to his culpability of failing to cooperate in the investigation, which was conclusively established by his deemed admissions resulting from his failure to respond to discovery. Such testimony was not a sufficient basis for a finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [8]

Where respondent's testimony was admitted subject to a motion to strike, and examiner thereafter moved to strike only as to culpability, not as to mitigation, and then proceeded to elicit testimony from respondent on cross-examination on same subject matter, examiner thereby waived any objection to such testimony. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [13]

The hearing department has broad discretion in determining the admissibility and relevance of evidence. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [14]

Confidentiality for marital communications does not apply to testimony concerning matters prior to the marriage or after the couple's estrangement. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [5]

The hearing department has wide latitude to receive all admissible evidence, especially since it sits without a jury. Where respondent's ex-spouse's testimony was properly admitted, but because there was little corroboration and due to the marital dissolution the chance of bias was great, the hearing department properly disregarded such testimony, respondent could not successfully claim prejudicial error. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [6]

Even if respondent waived procedural objection to deposition by appearing and participating, deposition transcript should not have been admitted in evidence, because examiner failed to show that State Bar had been unable to procure deponent's attendance at trial despite reasonable diligence, as required by provision of Civil Discovery Act governing use of depositions at trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [18]

Error in admitting evidence in State Bar proceedings does not invalidate a finding of fact unless the error resulted in the denial of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) In light of deposition witness's hazy memory and respondent's contrary testimony, proper determination weighing the conflicting testimony could not be made without face-to-face assessment, and admission of witness's deposition transcript therefore denied respondent a fair trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [19]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Where attorney represented to State Bar Court that no disciplinary investigations against him were pending, examiner's failure to rebut this contention, as permitted by rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, warranted inference that State Bar did not dispute attorney's representation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [16]

Where document was marked as exhibit at hearing and clearly related to central issue in case, and both parties referred to it in briefs on review, review department had it made part of official court file despite offering party's failure to move it into evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [2]

In a reinstatement proceeding, records of prior discipline, including the proceeding in which the petitioner was disbarred, are admissible, because the evidence of the petitioner's present character must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the prior discipline. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the hearing judge acted within his discretion in excluding a second affidavit from a character witness. Like a character reference letter in a disciplinary proceeding, the character reference, even though in affidavit rather than letter form, was excludable as hearsay absent a stipulation to the contrary. Further, the second affidavit was cumulative, and the hearing judge carefully considered the more detailed first affidavit, which he admitted into evidence as part of the reinstatement application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

As a formal proceeding of the State Bar Court, a reinstatement hearing is governed by the formal rules of evidence applicable in civil proceedings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) More liberal evidentiary standards applicable in certain other types of statutory proceedings do not apply in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

Trial judge has discretion to refuse to admit evidence which is cumulative; hearing judge who carefully considered detailed affidavit from witness did not err in excluding second, less detailed affidavit from same witness. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [8]

As sole trier of fact, hearing judge had responsibility to declare in decision how he weighed evidence at hearing, including credibility of party as witness, where party's attitude toward reformation and restitution was fundamental issue in proceeding. Judge's occasional use of blunt language did not show bias. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [9]

In a conviction matter, the respondent's criminal conviction by itself constitutes conclusive proof that the respondent committed all acts necessary to constitute the offense charged. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [2]

Court's rejection, based on documentary and other evidence, of respondent's testimony regarding his knowledge and state of mind six years earlier, did not result in finding that such testimony lacked candor or was offered in bad faith. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [12]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

Court of appeal opinion regarding respondent's criminal appeal could be cited in related disciplinary proceeding, notwithstanding Supreme Court's depublication order, under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 977(b)(2). In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [1]

160 Standards of Proof/Standards of Review

161 Duty to Present Evidence

After the hearing judge gave respondent the express opportunity to present his evidence, respondent's unpersuasive reasons for failing to do so could not be the basis of any claim of error on review. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

There is no authority for the proposition that the strong presumption of validity accorded to civil findings in a disciplinary proceeding shifts the burden of proof in the disciplinary proceeding to the respondent attorney to rebut the presumption. As in any discipline case, the State Bar bears the burden of proving culpability by clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[2]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.[4]

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by making unfounded and inflammatory statements in various pleadings filed in this disciplinary matter. Respondent's statements were not proper subjects for aggravation where the State Bar made no showing by clear and convincing evidence that they were false. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[18]

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by filing six petitions for interlocutory review with the review department, at least one petition for review with the California Supreme Court, and over 30 motions in the hearing department. These documents were not proper subjects for aggravation where it was not shown by clear and convincing evidence that the documents were completely lacking in merit and were filed in bad faith. Respondent acted as cocounsel during the hearing department proceedings and was entitled to reasonable access to the courts to seek judicial remedies. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[19]

The standard of proof in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceedings for relief from actual suspension is preponderance of the evidence. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 634.) Thus, to be entitled to relief from actual suspension, petitioners must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, their rehabilitation, present fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[1]

In comparison to a disbarred attorney, who has been found unfit to practice law and whose name has been stricken from the roll of attorneys, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension has suffered a more modest negative evaluation of his character by virtue of his prior misconduct. Thus, in marked contrast to the disbarred attorney whose showing of rehabilitation must be made with stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time and with proof of a sustained period of exemplary conduct, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding may show his rehabilitation, even before the completion of the term of his actual suspension, with proof overcoming a reduced prior finding of a danger to the public and with a relaxed showing of exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[6]

Even though moral shortcomings that previously resulted in discipline of the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension are proportionally less than moral shortcomings that would result in disbarment, the suspended attorney must still show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he meets the same high moral standards required of all attorneys in this state. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[7]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

The good faith of an attorney in making a false statement is a defense to the charge of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d). As a defense, respondent had the burden of proving that he acted in good faith and he failed to meet that burden. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.[2]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[1]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[4]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[3]

The hearing judge's appropriate role is to decide the issues on the evidence presented. If that process leads the hearing judge to conclude that the party bearing the burden of proof had not prevailed, then the judge's duty is to find against the particular party on that issue or to recommend that only that degree of discipline, if any, which is warranted by the evidence presented. The party failing in its burden runs the very risk that the judge will so act. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a hearing judge is not authorized to require the production of added evidence beyond which the parties have chosen to present. If parties or witnesses testify, the hearing judge is at liberty to ask questions of a type consistent with the judicial function of supervising or regulating the trial. Moreover, allegations against other attorneys can be referred to the State Bar for new investigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888. [2]

The State Bar proved that respondent used over $500,000 of his client's assets for speculative ventures in which he had a financial or ownership interest without any disclosures of the investments or his interests to the client and without providing any periodic accountings to her. In view of the evidence presented, to defend the charges, it was incumbent on respondent to present adequate, contemporaneous records showing that he had complied with the ethical and fiduciary duties of an attorney. He failed to do so. The lack of minimal formality and recordkeeping by respondent supports the hearing judge's findings and conclusions and erodes respondent's defense. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [1]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Petitioner failed to establish that the hearing judge abused his discretion in denying petitioner's post-decision motion to reopen the record to present additional evidence because petitioner did not establish that the evidence he sought to proffer was newly discovered or that it could not have been presented at trial with the exercise of reasonable diligence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [6]

Possible collateral estoppel effect of attorney's out-of-state discipline could not be addressed where record did not reveal factual underpinnings of such discipline and did not permit determination as to what issues were actually litigated in out-of-state disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [10]

Respondent's alleged misconduct in federal civil appeal was not entitled to any weight in aggravation where State Bar did not introduce any evidence regarding respondent's conduct other than appellate court opinion establishing respondent's failure to comply with federal rule of appellate procedure regarding form of briefs, and where record did not provide basis to determine whether respondent's noncompliance with such rule was isolated act of negligence or disciplinable offense, or to assess respondent's conduct independently under clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [12]

Respondent's contention that he detrimentally relied on advice from his probation monitor and counsel regarding compliance with rule 955 might have been persuasive as mitigation if respondent had raised it at the hearing level and produced supporting evidence. However, where record did not support and even contradicted such contention, review department rejected respondent's attempt to argue it as mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [3]

Where examiner failed to introduce appropriate documentary evidence of respondent's prior discipline record, review department notified parties of intent to take judicial notice of specified documents from official State Bar Court records regarding such discipline, and took such notice after neither party objected. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [7]

While disciplinary hearings can be stressful for accused attorneys to attend, Supreme Court has made clear that accused attorneys must avail themselves of opportunity to participate and present all favorable evidence. Failing that opportunity, the accused may not demand a new hearing to present evidence belatedly. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

Where the respondent's testimony is plausible and uncontradicted, it should be regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available but was not offered. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [6]

On a motion to present additional evidence, the moving party did not show good cause where the substance of the evidence sought to be admitted was not summarized and there was no claim that the witnesses or affiants were unavailable to present their evidence at the disciplinary hearing or that their evidence related to events or observations which occurred after the disciplinary hearing. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 562.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [5]

Where evidence offered by State Bar at default hearing neither established nor controverted or undermined allegations of notice to show cause, such allegations, which were deemed admitted by respondent's default, could properly be relied on to establish attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [17]

The State Bar failed to establish that an attorney violated his duty to cooperate with the State Bar in a disciplinary investigation, where the evidence showed that letters were purportedly sent to the attorney by State Bar investigators, but no evidence was submitted proving that the letters were properly addressed to, or received by, the attorney. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [23]

Attorneys facing charges of professional misconduct must present to the hearing department all evidence favorable to themselves. A failure to do so may justify denial of a motion for rehearing to present additional evidence. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [4]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

While the law does look with favor upon the regeneration of erring attorneys, the petitioner seeking reinstatement bears the burden to show by clear and convincing evidence that the petitioner meets the requirements, and that burden is a heavy one. The person seeking reinstatement after disbarment should be required to present stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time whose character has never been called into question. A disbarred attorney may be able to show by sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time that the attorney has reattained the standard of fitness to practice law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [3]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

In disciplinary matters, where the State Bar has the burden of proof, the examiner is obligated to produce sufficient evidence to permit the State Bar Court to make adequate determinations and appropriate recommendations to the Supreme Court as to discipline. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 402.) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [9]

It is the duty of any accused member of the bar to present at the evidentiary hearing in the disciplinary proceeding all evidence favorable to him or her. The respondent cannot necessarily rely on the State Bar examiner's position conceding an issue in the case. The review department's review of the record is independent and not limited by the examiner's position, and the Supreme Court, in turn, is not limited by the recommendation of the review department or that of the hearing department in assessing the record. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [4]

The Supreme Court has consistently held that petitioners seeking reinstatement have the burden to show by clear and convincing evidence that they meet readmission requirements, and that burden is a heavy one. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [1]

Persons seeking reinstatement after disbarment should be required to present stronger proof of their present honesty and integrity than persons seeking admission for the first time whose character has never been called into question. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [2]

162 Quantum of Proof Required in Disciplinary Matters

162.10 State Bar's burden (rule 5.103)

162.11 Clear and convincing standard

Rule 1-700, on its face, prohibits attorney judicial candidates only from making false statements, not misleading ones. State Bar has burden of proving falsity of statements by clear and convincing evidence. Attorney judicial candidate was not culpable for violating rule 1-700 for engaging in truthful but misleading or potentially misleading speech about his opponent. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [2 a,b]

Where State Bar presented no evidence or witnesses to rebut respondent's testimony that her inaccurate report of her MCLE compliance was unintentional, and hearing judge declined to find that respondent acted intentionally, Review Department rejected argument that respondent's conduct intentionally misrepresented her MCLE compliance. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [2]

The burden is on the State Bar to prove misconduct by clear and convincing evidence. This showing requires evidence so clear as to leave no substantial doubt and sufficiently strong to command the unhesitating assent of every reasonable mind. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [1]

Although the State Bar may prove an attorney's misconduct with clear and convincing circumstantial evidence, the fact that respondent knew his associate was buying personal injury cases involving vehicles with multiple occupants, had resigned with disciplinary charges pending, had stolen and forged settlement checks from respondent, and had negotiated settlements in cases he referred to respondent, was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent knew of the staged accidents when he was representing the clients his associate referred to him. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [3 a, b]

Where the record supports an inference beneficial to respondent as equally as it supports an inference adverse to respondent, the inference favoring the attorney must be accepted. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [4]

The review department found no merit to the State Bar's argument that money in a client trust account is presumed to belong to the clients and that it was respondent's burden to prove otherwise. The State Bar alleged in the notice of disciplinary charges that client money was stolen and it had the burden to present clear and convincing evidence proving that allegation. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.[3]

Regardless of what inferences that may be drawn from an attorney's failure to keep proper books of account or records in an appropriate case, the review department must ultimately recognize that the State Bar's burden requires it to present proof in the form of stipulated facts or admissible evidence to support each of the elements of its disciplinary case. Considering that the State Bar alleged that $1.7 million of trust funds was lost, the State Bar failed to present expected probative testimonial or documentary evidence, choosing to rest solely on respondent's testimony and then criticizing respondent for not having presented records listing her clients and detailing payments to them. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.[4]

Rule 4-100(B)(4) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires that an attorney promptly pay or deliver client money in possession of the member. By its terms, the important date for purposes of this rule is when respondent received the settlement money, not the date that clients signed releases or the date cases settled. Where no evidence was presented showing when respondent received settlement money, the review department, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, concluded that the rule 4-100(B)(4) charges were not sustained by convincing proof to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.[5a-e]

There is no authority for the proposition that the strong presumption of validity accorded to civil findings in a disciplinary proceeding shifts the burden of proof in the disciplinary proceeding to the respondent attorney to rebut the presumption. As in any discipline case, the State Bar bears the burden of proving culpability by clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[2]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.[4]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[11]

Because bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud when attorney incurred credit card debts were made under preponderance of the evidence standard and not clear and convincing standard applicable in disciplinary proceedings, hearing judge correctly (1) declined to apply principles of collateral estoppel to bind attorney with bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud; (2) reweighed evidence from bankruptcy court proceedings under clear and convincing standard after giving attorney fair opportunity to contradict, temper, and explain that evidence; and (3) permitted State Bar to present additional evidence regarding attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[3]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

In the context of an emotional and adversarial lawsuit, propounding discovery that falsely intimated that respondent and the plaintiff, respondent's former client, had a sexual relationship and that the plaintiff was sexually promiscuous is not clear and convincing evidence of acts of moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Further, it is unclear that Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f), which prohibits the advancing of prejudicial facts to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, proscribes the use of such intimations.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4 a - b]

Although the burden of proof in State Bar proceedings is generally clear and convincing evidence, there is no State Bar rule that specifically sets forth the State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal in moral character proceedings. An applicant's claim for admission to the practice of law in this state is not a mere privilege, but a claim of right that is afforded the protection of due process. Even though there are distinctions between admission proceedings and disciplinary proceedings, the question involved in both disciplinary and admissions proceedings is the same—is the applicant for admission or the attorney sought to be disciplined a fit and proper person to be permitted to practice law. The test for admission and for discipline is and should be the same. Accordingly, except as otherwise provided by law, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [8]

Statute limiting contingent fees in medical negligence cases prohibits attorneys from either contracting for or collecting a contingent fee in excess of statutory limits. Where respondent had no written fee agreement, but agreed orally to accept fee to be awarded by court if result was successful, evidence was not clear and convincing that respondent had a contingent fee contract. However, once respondent received court-awarded fee after settlement of case, respondent collected a contingent fee within meaning of fee limit statute. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [5]

Where State Bar failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's client's signatures on loan agreement and release were forgeries, and evidence submitted did not undermine authenticity of loan agreement, State Bar Court resolved doubt in respondent's favor and found that loan was made. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [1]

Disbelief of a respondent's testimony does not create evidence to the contrary. Where respondent allegedly misrepresented to insurer that respondent's personal bank account was a client trust account, but only evidence to rebut respondent's testimony to contrary was notation in insurer's records, presence of such notation was not sufficient to establish that it resulted from misrepresentation by respondent, even where hearing judge found respondent not credible. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [2]

Attorney discipline is an available sanction for violation of rule 11 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Where respondent testified that he had been disciplined by federal court as result of rule 11 matter, and federal court had suspended respondent from practice before it as part of relief granted in ruling on rule 11 motion, federal court's action constituted discipline. However, State Bar must prove aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where record before review department did not reveal factual underpinnings of federal court discipline, and review department was therefore unable to examine nature and chronology of respondent's prior discipline to determine impact it should have on current discipline recommendation, review department gave no weight to respondent's federal discipline as factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [11]

Respondent's alleged misconduct in federal civil appeal was not entitled to any weight in aggravation where State Bar did not introduce any evidence regarding respondent's conduct other than appellate court opinion establishing respondent's failure to comply with federal rule of appellate procedure regarding form of briefs, and where record did not provide basis to determine whether respondent's noncompliance with such rule was isolated act of negligence or disciplinable offense, or to assess respondent's conduct independently under clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [12]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Where record contained no evidence about circumstances of loss of client's settlement check, respondent could not be found culpable of reckless failure to perform competently based on such loss. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [20]

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

Where there was clear conflict in testimony with regard to whether respondent provided clients with an accounting, and hearing judge was unable to resolve such conflict, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent did not provide accounting. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [6]

The State Bar must prove culpability by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent requested review department to make supplementary finding concerning culpability, but record clearly and convincingly established a fact inconsistent with such proposed finding, review department declined to adopt proposed finding. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [4]

Where respondents set up distant branch office with intent to be present only one day per week; authorized non-lawyer independent contractors to explain complex and unusual fee agreements to prospective clients; did not review cases or speak with clients until after clients had signed fee agreements; paid contractors in cash based on viability of cases, and implausibly characterized contractors as investigators; ignored indications of excessive non-lawyer control of cases; chose to disbelieve clients' reports that contractors had solicited them, and did not present convincing explanation about how they believed clients had come to retain them, hearing judge's findings that respondents knew of contractors' solicitation of clients were supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [11]

Ordinarily, the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings is by clear and convincing evidence, and that standard has been applied in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under both section 6007(c) and section 6007(b)(3). In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [8]

Because the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof in a civil malpractice trial is lower than the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof in a disciplinary proceeding, the conclusions reached by civil courts in a malpractice action against respondent are not dispositive of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [6]

Disciplinary charges must be proved by the State Bar examiner by clear and convincing evidence. All reasonable doubts must be resolved in favor of the accused attorney. If equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact, the inference leading to innocence must be chosen. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [2]

Where a client had difficulty communicating with respondent for a short period of time, but respondent did reply in some limited fashion to the client's status inquiries, and where it was not clear from the record whether any significant developments occurred with regard to the client's litigation during that period of time, there was not clear and convincing evidence of a failure to communicate. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [8]

Testimony disregarded by the hearing judge which provides a plausible explanation of the respondent's conduct may be considered on de novo review as evidence that the hearing judge's fact findings were not supported by clear and convincing evidence. On independent review of the record, both the Supreme Court and the review department resolve all reasonable doubts and inferences in favor of the respondent. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [4]

Where State Bar's chief witness exhibited poor memory, repeatedly testified inconsistently on key issues, admittedly had misrepresented facts to insurance company and State Bar, and admittedly was motivated by anger and economic stress at time of complaint to State Bar, hearing judge's findings based solely on selected portions of such witness's inconsistent testimony were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in light of the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [11]

No deference was due to hearing judge's reliance on letters from complaining witness to State Bar, since such letters were not testimony but documentary evidence. Findings based on selected portions of the witness's testimony, which were contradicted in other portions of such testimony, and on the witness's demonstrably untrustworthy hearsay statements in the letters to the State Bar, were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [12]

State Bar has burden to prove culpability by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of the facts is plausible, even if controverted, it supports a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [14]

Given conflicting documentary evidence and unreliable and inconsistent testimony by complaining witness, review department may conclude on independent review, without attempting to resolve such evidentiary conflicts, that State Bar did not meet its burden to show culpability by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [16]

The State Bar must prove aggravating factors as well as culpability by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty. Accordingly, finding in aggravation of bad faith could not be predicated on selected portions of complaining witness's unreliable correspondence and inconsistent testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [20]

Proof by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty means that irreconcilable conflicts in the testimony of the chief State Bar witness by their very nature severely undermine the State Bar's case. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [23]

Where no evidence was introduced establishing that respondent knew his out-of-state driver's license was not valid at the time he presented it to police, and where respondent's explanation of his failure to disclose all of his driving under the influence convictions on his application for such license was unrebutted and not inherently incredible, examiner failed to establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's use or obtaining of the license were aggravating factors. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [4]

Rejection of a witness's testimony by the hearing judge does not in and of itself create affirmative evidence to the contrary. Where respondent's testimony on a factual issue was plausible and uncontradicted, it was appropriate to resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of respondent and reject a finding contrary to respondent's testimony as unsupported by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of events was plausible, even though controverted, it supported a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct, and where there was only circumstantial evidence to the contrary, misconduct was not established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [10]

Findings in aggravation, like findings of culpability, must be supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [3]

Where respondent's client denied having had a certain conversation with respondent, and the hearing judge credited the client on that point, but the record as a whole showed that respondent lacked a motive to lie in testifying about the conversation, the evidence suggested that the client might have forgotten the conversation, and the client exaggerated in other testimony and was very bitter toward respondent, the review department, while not rejecting the credence given to the client's testimony by the hearing judge, did find that the client's testimony failed to constitute clear and convincing evidence of intentional misrepresentation by respondent. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [4]

Where the hearing judge accepted as true the testimony of two State Bar witnesses, but such testimony did not contradict respondent's own plausible version of events, the review department found that State Bar had failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had testified falsely. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [5]

In an attorney discipline proceeding, all reasonable doubts must be weighed in favor of the attorney. Where the evidence presented by documents raised an inference of irregularity concerning the genuineness of a bankruptcy court order, but there was no evidence from the bankruptcy court concerning its practices nor any evaluation of the genuineness of the purported order itself, there was not clear and convincing evidence that the respondent had fabricated the order. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [23]

Circumstances in mitigation and aggravation must be established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [35]

Where hearing judge accepted respondent's testimony that respondent's prolonged failure to file personal income tax returns resulted from problems with respondent's accountants, and examiner did not object to hearing judge's determination that there was no clear and convincing evidence of misconduct in connection with respondent's failure to file tax returns, review department adopted judge's findings and conclusion of non-culpability. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3]

In a default proceeding, ambiguous evidence that can be interpreted as consistent with allegations of the notice to show cause does not negate the deemed admissions of the notice to show cause. Where evidence introduced at default hearing fell short of clear and convincing proof of charged violations, but was not inconsistent with charging allegations, defaulting respondent should have been found culpable of violations properly charged. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

Specific charging in the notice to show cause is important; it prevents a respondent from having to guess at the charges. In addition, since the standard for a culpability finding in attorney discipline matters is clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar has the burden to charge the alleged misconduct correctly so that this standard can be met. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [3]

Where a municipal court order finding an appeal frivolous and awarding sanctions did not explain the basis for such finding or the statutory basis for awarding sanctions, and no additional evidence was introduced to establish that the appeal was substantively without merit, the record did not clearly and convincingly establish for disciplinary purposes that the appeal was frivolous or pursued in bad faith. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [7]

Like the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings and in proceedings under section 6007(c), the standard of proof in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b)(3) is clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [2]

Where court in civil action related to disciplinary proceeding had concluded (applying preponderance of evidence standard) that there was substantial evidence that purported transfer of partnership interest to respondent was fraudulent, and it was undisputed that respondent had prepared partnership transfer document, referee's conclusion in disciplinary proceeding that there was no evidence that respondent actively participated in fraud in preparation of document could only be consistent with civil court finding if referee's conclusion was based on difference in applicable standard of proof, in that culpability in disciplinary cases must be proven by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [7]

In order to find a violation of the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers, the State Bar must show clearly and convincingly that the attorney knowingly presented a false statement intending to mislead the court, and such deceit would, in almost every case, be an act of dishonesty in violation of the statute authorizing discipline for acts of moral turpitude, corruption and dishonesty. When an attorney makes a false or misleading statement to a court, that act involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [11]

State Bar must prevail by clear and convincing evidence; if it is equally likely that respondent is telling the truth about controverted facts, State Bar has not met its burden. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [7]

Client's issuance of check to attorney marked "for filing fees" was insufficient evidence to show clearly and convincingly that attorney was obligated to file suit on behalf of client. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [8]

Where hearing department found unpersuasive client's testimony that he did not consent to respondent's application of client trust funds to respondent's outstanding legal fees, State Bar did not demonstrate trust account irregularities or misappropriation by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [9]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

In every disciplinary proceeding it is the State Bar's burden to prove specific charged misconduct by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [14]

On review, the burden remains on the State Bar to prove its case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Reasonable doubts in proving a charge of professional misconduct must be resolved in the accused attorney's favor. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [11]

The State Bar must prove aggravating factors by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [12]

162.12 Preponderance of evidence standard

Wilfully failing to comply fully with a disciplinary probation condition constitutes a violation of the statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline. Wilfulness in this context requires merely that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, knew what he was doing or not doing and intended either to commit the act or abstain from committing it. The violation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Substantial compliance is insufficient to avoid culpability on this charge, and any good faith on the part of the attorney is relevant to mitigation rather than culpability. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Because the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof in a civil malpractice trial is lower than the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof in a disciplinary proceeding, the conclusions reached by civil courts in a malpractice action against respondent are not dispositive of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [6]

162.19 Other/general

Ordinarily in disciplinary proceedings culpability must be established by convincing proof and to a reasonable certainty. However, this standard does not apply where otherwise provided by law. Therefore in finding a violation of rule 1–300, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is constitutionally required because the applicable South Carolina statute regulating the profession makes the unauthorized practice of law a crime. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [8]

At least in absence of admission by attorney, proving that an attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it is rarely capable of being proved with direct evidence. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient, however, if it is clear and convincing. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[1]

Because attorney's act of borrowing money without intending to repay it involves dishonesty and moral turpitude as a matter of law, State Bar need only prove that attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it to establish that attorney violated statutory duty not to engage in acts of dishonesty or involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[4]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[7]

Where State Bar neither impeached nor rebutted attorney's testimony that he had not gambled for more than five years, where State Bar did not proffer any expert testimony that attorney suffered from compulsive gambling, and where there was no evidence that attorney currently suffered from compulsive gambling, record did not support hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to attend Gamblers Anonymous meetings while on disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[12]

Where hearing judge declined to order restitution but offered to reconsider if State Bar could show that misconduct victim had not already been compensated for funds taken by respondent, this ruling misallocated the burden of proof. Once State Bar met its burden to prove initial trust account violation, it was respondent's burden to prove that restitution had in effect already been made by a third party. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

The testimony of a single witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact. Where hearing judge found complaining witness's version of events to be more credible, and such testimony, though at odds with respondent's, was consistent on material issues, review department found no basis to disturb hearing judge's factual findings. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [4]

Culpability can be established in attorney disciplinary proceedings either by direct or circumstantial evidence, and circumstantial evidence has been considered on a regular basis in cases involving improper client solicitation by an attorney's agents. Culpability findings regarding charge of improper client solicitation were proper where, in addition to circumstantial evidence, there was inculpatory direct evidence in the record, and hearing judge properly evaluated and weighed witness testimony. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [10]

On the issue of whether a respondent acted in good faith, the credibility determinations of the hearing judge deserve great weight. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In addition, the State Bar Court must resolve all reasonable doubts about culpability in favor of the accused attorney and must choose the inference leading to innocence if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from the facts. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [6]

In a disciplinary proceeding, a culpability determination must not be debatable. Accordingly, where the applicable rule of professional conduct did not expressly require written consent to joint representation of clients with potentially conflicting interests, the issue for the court was whether the case law at the time of an attorney's alleged violation of the rule made it clear that such consent was required in civil litigation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

An attorney is responsible for the reasonable supervision of the attorney's staff. Where a client repeatedly demanded her file from respondent's office over a six-month period, this was sufficient to establish respondent's lack of reasonable supervision. Respondent's ignorance of the client's demands and lack of prior notice of his staff's failure to inform him of client communications did not absolve respondent from culpability absent additional evidence demonstrating his reasonable supervision of his staff. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [2]

Where both respondent's admission in discovery and client's testimony supported finding that respondent accepted responsibility for proceeding with lawsuit on client's behalf, and there was no evidence that contradicted or undercut respondent's admission, no additional corroboration was necessary to find that respondent agreed to prosecute case, and respondent could therefore be found culpable of misconduct based on failure to perform legal services requested by client. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [1]

Where record established that respondent agreed to handle litigation and thereafter abandoned case; former and current Rules of Professional Conduct were virtually identical regarding duties imposed on an attorney who wishes to withdraw from employment; both rules were charged in notice to show cause, and violation clearly occurred during period when either one rule or the other was in effect, review department found respondent culpable of improper withdrawal despite lack of evidence regarding exactly when relevant events occurred. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [2]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty plea to a crime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

Documents must be authenticated before they can be introduced into evidence. Authentication means establishing by evidence or other means that the document is the writing which its proponent claims it is. By admitting a document into evidence, hearing judge initially concluded that there was sufficient evidence that it was what it was claimed to be. By allowing the document to be admitted as an authenticated exhibit and not offering affirmative evidence of fabrication, examiner provided court with no basis to find that document was in fact fabricated. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [15]

Where respondent, who had been previously suspended from practice, described his legal career to a prospective employer in such a way as to indicate that respondent's practice of law had been uninterrupted, it was sufficient to establish culpability of misrepresentation to show that respondent knowingly presented a statement which itself tended to mislead. It was not material that the employer did not rely on the application or was not in fact deceived. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [6]

When an attorney withdraws from employment or the client terminates the attorney's employment, the attorney must promptly refund any unearned part of an advance fee. However, where respondent faced competing demands regarding the funds used to pay an advance fee, from a client and from a third party to whom respondent owed a fiduciary duty, respondent had a duty to retain the funds in trust until the client's entitlement to the funds was established, and therefore did not commit misconduct by declining to refund the advance fee. Respondent's motives for retaining the funds in trust were irrelevant because the issue turned on a question of law, not motivation. The State Bar had the burden of proving that the client was entitled to receive the funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [9]

A respondent's default results in the admission of the facts alleged in the charging allegations of the notice to show cause, and no further proof is required to establish the truth of those charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 552.1(e), 555(e).) In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

Where hearing referee failed to determine whether respondent's default was properly entered, review department was required to do so, and for that purpose it took judicial notice of respondent's membership records address under Evidence Code section 459; evidence of membership records address is essential in a default case to assess the propriety of the default procedures. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [3]

An attorney's license to practice law creates a continuing presumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the attorney is not only morally fit but also mentally competent to practice law. This presumption underlies the rule in disciplinary proceedings that all reasonable doubts are to be resolved in favor of respondents and that, if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a fact, the inference to be accepted is the one leading to a conclusion of innocence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [13]

Where attorney represented to State Bar Court that no disciplinary investigations against him were pending, examiner's failure to rebut this contention, as permitted by rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, warranted inference that State Bar did not dispute attorney's representation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [16]

In a default matter, the well-pleaded allegations in the notice to show cause must be deemed admitted even if the State Bar did not so request. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 552.1(d)(iii).) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [18]

Where examiner stipulated to admissibility of character reference letters at hearing, and thus chose not to require the declarants to be cross-examined, examiner's attempt to discount letters before review department was without foundation. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [21]

Where entry of attorney's default for failure to appear at disciplinary hearing resulted in the admission of all allegations in the notice to show cause, but certain of those allegations were in conflict with evidence adduced at hearing, examiner properly requested reconsideration of hearing decision to delete findings contrary to evidence adduced at hearing, and hearing referee properly deleted such findings from the decision, based on their conflict with the evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

162.20 Respondent's burden in disciplinary matters

Where respondent's therapist chose not to testify, in order to preserve confidential nature of therapeutic relationship, and respondent did not subpoena the therapist and did not identify any other evidence he was prevented from introducing, Review Department rejected respondent's argument that he was prevented from presenting evidence regarding his abstention from alcohol. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402 [1]

The opinion of another attorney is not a defense to a violation of the rules or statutes governing attorney ethics. Where respondent claimed to have followed the advice of ethics counsel regarding permissible conduct during his suspension, but in fact continued to use his designation as an attorney in advertisements and on his website and stationery, totality of evidence left no doubt that respondent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law while suspended. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3]

An attorney has a duty to present all favorable evidence at his disciplinary trial. Where an attorney did not call witnesses from his bank or provide other documentary evidence to prove dishonored checks he wrote were actually paid, his claim that the checks were ultimately honored was properly rejected. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [2]

Where respondent claims that others should have presented evidence to exculpate him, it was respondent's burden to undertake the defense of the charges against him. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [1]

Where respondent failed to corroborate or substantiate his testimony with evidence that one would have expectedly produced, respondent's unexplained failure to produce such evidence is a strong indication that respondent's testimony is not credible. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [7]

After the hearing judge gave respondent the express opportunity to present his evidence, respondent's unpersuasive reasons for failing to do so could not be the basis of any claim of error on review. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

There is no authority for the proposition that the strong presumption of validity accorded to civil findings in a disciplinary proceeding shifts the burden of proof in the disciplinary proceeding to the respondent attorney to rebut the presumption. As in any discipline case, the State Bar bears the burden of proving culpability by clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[2]

Where respondent failed (1) to establish through expert testimony that his depression, his physical maladies, and his financial difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct and (2) to establish through clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffered from the difficulties and disabilities or even that he could take, and was taking, steps to overcome them, the difficulties and disabilities were not treated as mitigating circumstances.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[4]

Financial difficulties may be considered in mitigation if they are extreme and result from circumstances that are not reasonably foreseeable or that are beyond the attorney's control. Respondent bears the burden of establishing mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Respondent failed to present a complete picture of his financial condition and therefore failed to establish that any financial problems he was facing were extreme or beyond his control. Further, the little evidence that was presented indicated that respondent's income was limited at the time he entered into the stipulation to facts and disposition in the underlying disciplinary case. Thus, respondent also failed to establish that any financial problems he experienced were not reasonably foreseeable. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[6]

Intent to repay debt requires some factual underpinning that would lead person to a degree of certainty that he or she would have ability to repay. Mere hope and unrealistic or speculative sources of income are insufficient. This is particularly true where respondent obtained large cash advances on the same day he was repaying gambling debts in the form of casino markers. And it is particularly true where respondent did not proffer any documentary evidence to support his claims that he was an experienced and successful or winning blackjack player. Moreover, in light of the fact that respondent never kept any records of his gambling winnings and losses, any hope of repaying any portion of his credit card debts with gambling winnings was unreasonable. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[6]

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[8]

The good faith of an attorney in making a false statement is a defense to the charge of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d). As a defense, respondent had the burden of proving that he acted in good faith and he failed to meet that burden. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.[2]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

It is not evident whether defense of selective prosecution is applicable in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, respondent would have been required to show an intentional violation of essential principle of practical uniformity and an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination. That is respondent would have been required to demonstrate that she had been deliberately singled out for prosecution on basis of some invidious criterion. There is no evidence in record on any of these issues. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [14 a-c]

The State Bar proved that respondent used over $500,000 of his client's assets for speculative ventures in which he had a financial or ownership interest without any disclosures of the investments or his interests to the client and without providing any periodic accountings to her. In view of the evidence presented, to defend the charges, it was incumbent on respondent to present adequate, contemporaneous records showing that he had complied with the ethical and fiduciary duties of an attorney. He failed to do so. The lack of minimal formality and recordkeeping by respondent supports the hearing judge's findings and conclusions and erodes respondent's defense. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [1]

In order to establish good faith as a mitigating circumstance, an attorney must prove that his or her beliefs were both honestly held and reasonable. Respondent's beliefs regarding his interpretation of the Supreme Court order were honestly held but were unreasonable and, therefore, were not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [5]

Rehabilitation from alcoholism or drug addiction is a mitigating circumstance only if the substance abuse caused the attorney's misconduct. Where respondent failed to present clear and convincing evidence of a causal nexus between her substance abuse and her misconduct, the review department denied her request for a remand to the hearing department to provide evidence of her continued sobriety, and did not consider her steps toward recovery a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [1]

Where respondent's client's settlement had always been treated by civil court and by counsel in civil proceeding as having certain value, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that settlement had different value for purpose of applying statutory contingent fee limits was without merit. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [10]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, it cannot be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, gender, or exercise of constitutional rights. In absence of allegation of prohibited basis for prosecution, State Bar's failure to prove all charges was not sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [16]

Where client gave written authorization to respondent to apply portion of client's net settlement proceeds to outstanding legal fees client owed respondent on prior case, respondent was not required to prove existence of prior case to establish entitlement to funds applied to fees. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [3]

Hearing judges are accorded wide latitude to receive all relevant evidence, and relief from their decisions will not be granted on the basis of alleged error in admitting evidence unless actual prejudice is established. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [5]

A loan from a client, like all attorney-client business transactions, is scrutinized for unfairness, and when such transactions are called into question, attorney has burden to prove that they were fair and reasonable to client. Where client's loan to attorney was unsecured in situation where security would ordinarily be considered essential, and where no periodic payments were provided for despite client's financial circumstances, such facts were evidence that terms and conditions of loan transaction were unfair to client. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [9]

Where respondent moved to augment record on review to include documentary evidence regarding respondent's pro bono activities, but respondent did not establish good cause why such evidence could not have been presented to hearing department, review department declined to consider such evidence. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [15]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Attorney disciplinary proceedings are not decided on principles of contract law, but where, due to vagueness of terms of purported agreement allowing attorney to use client's funds, contract law principles would not permit court to find any binding contract, such purported agreement could not provide defense to charges of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [2]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

Even if selective prosecution were a valid defense in State Bar proceedings, claim that respondent was singled out for prosecution based on success and fame could not succeed in absence of authority that claims of selective prosecution may be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on a constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, sex, or exercise of constitutional rights. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [9]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. If such defense were available, burden of proof to establish selective prosecution would be on respondent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [10]

Pursuant to case law, selective prosecution claims should be raised by motion prior to trial, and as a practical matter, such claims have little chance of success if not raised initially by pretrial motion, due to difficulty of proving them without aid of discovery. However, it is not clear that such claims cannot be raised as part of respondent's defense case at trial; accordingly, review department considered such claim despite respondent's failure to raise it by pretrial motion. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [11]

Even if claim of selective prosecution could be founded on alleged discrimination on basis of success and fame, there was insufficient evidence to support such claim, where principal factual basis was that many charges were dismissed or were assertedly without merit. A prosecutor's failure to prove all charges brought in a case has not been held to be sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [12]

State Bar Court is reluctant to interfere with reasonable exercise of prosecutorial discretion. When presented with a complaint, State Bar can legitimately charge attorney based on facts as they appear from investigation. Where large number of counts filed against respondent resulted primarily from size and volume of respondent's practice and his chronic problem with handling medical liens, fact that State Bar could not establish factual or legal basis for some counts and charges was not sufficient to establish that charges were brought without reasonable basis or that respondent was victim of prosecutorial misconduct. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [13]

Where hearing judge declined to order restitution but offered to reconsider if State Bar could show that misconduct victim had not already been compensated for funds taken by respondent, this ruling misallocated the burden of proof. Once State Bar met its burden to prove initial trust account violation, it was respondent's burden to prove that restitution had in effect already been made by a third party. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

Business transactions between clients and their attorneys are closely scrutinized. The burden is on the attorney to demonstrate that the dealings are fair and reasonable. Where respondent loaned a large sum to one client so that the client could repay a debt to another client, respondent owed a fiduciary duty to both clients and was obligated to explain his role in the transaction and the impact it could have on his continued representation of their interests. Where one client, notwithstanding his written consent, did not understand the full implications of the transaction, and the other client did not consent in writing, respondent violated the rule governing business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [2]

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

Respondent must establish mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent requested review department to make supplementary findings pertaining to mitigating circumstances, but did not present clear and convincing evidence in support of such proposed findings, review department declined to adopt them. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [5]

Where respondent's declaration attached to stipulation suggested mitigating circumstances, but stipulation did not specify whether State Bar accepted statements in declaration as true and hearing judge did not indicate whether statements were found to be persuasive, review department declined to reach conclusion regarding possible mitigating factors suggested by declaration. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [8]

State Bar prosecutors have statutory authority to apply to superior court to grant immunity from criminal prosecution to a witness in an attorney disciplinary proceeding. Where such procedures were properly invoked, and respondents showed no prejudice to themselves on account of the procedures followed in seeking such immunity, respondents were not entitled to relief based on asserted error in such procedures. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [6]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

An attorney is responsible for the reasonable supervision of the attorney's staff. Where a client repeatedly demanded her file from respondent's office over a six-month period, this was sufficient to establish respondent's lack of reasonable supervision. Respondent's ignorance of the client's demands and lack of prior notice of his staff's failure to inform him of client communications did not absolve respondent from culpability absent additional evidence demonstrating his reasonable supervision of his staff. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [2]

Where respondent received two letters from client's new counsel after respondent claimed to be confused as to whether client was discharging him, respondent's confusion did not excuse his delay in contacting successor counsel and forwarding client's file. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [3]

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

A motion supported by written submissions, including a detailed psychiatric report, could, if unopposed, be sufficient evidence to warrant abating a disciplinary proceeding due to the respondent's inability to assist in the defense. However, where the adequacy of the respondent's showing is questioned, the respondent's evidence may be weighed in the context of the whole record in the disciplinary proceeding. Any proffered medical submission regarding the respondent's mental competency should address the nature of the medical examination or tests conducted; the attorney's symptoms; the diagnosis and cause of the condition, and any past or proposed treatment. The report should note whether the illness raises doubts about the respondent's ability to assist in the defense, and should relate the respondent's condition to a recognized legal definition of competency. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [9]

Medical evidence regarding an attorney's competency to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding should be submitted to the State Bar Court at the hearing level. The reliability of evidence concerning a person's mental state is virtually impossible to test in the absence of cross-examination. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [10]

A showing of specific prejudice is required to invalidate a hearing judge's decision based on procedural errors. Where respondent did not allege and/or demonstrate that he suffered any specific prejudice as a result of numerous alleged procedural errors, he was not entitled to relief. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [3]

No delay in bringing disciplinary charges occurred where complaint against respondent was sent to State Bar in July 1988, respondent's last act of misconduct was in June 1989, and notice to show cause was filed in May 1990. In addition, where none of evidence allegedly lost due to delay was material to issue of respondent's misconduct, no specific prejudice was demonstrated from alleged delay in bringing charges. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [4]

Where discovery period was extended, giving respondent ample time to conduct discovery, and where respondent engaged in discovery, did not seek additional time for further discovery, and did not move to compel further responses or to compel attendance of witnesses at depositions, respondent's contentions that errors occurred during discovery lacked merit. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [5]

State Bar's pretrial dismissal of three out of four original counts in notice to show cause did not entitle respondent to any relief, where respondent did not demonstrate how such dismissal caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [6]

Hearing judge's refusal to permit respondent to present evidence that value of one estate asset increased during respondent's delay in completing probate did not entitle respondent to relief, where such increase in value did not justify respondent's misconduct in delaying distribution of other estate assets. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [7]

Hearing judge's denial of respondent's request for continuance to research probate practices in respondent's county was not error, where respondent had had ample time prior to trial to prepare his defense, and evidence sought would have had very little probative value as custom and practice in respondent's county would not explain or excuse respondent's prolonged delay in closing estate at issue. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [8]

Compliance with the time limitations set forth in the Probate Code is not a defense to a charge that the attorney failed to act competently, nor does noncompliance with such time limitations establish per se a failure to act competently. The focus of the inquiry on a charge of failure to act competently is whether the attorney intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failed to apply the learning, skill, and diligence necessary to discharge the duties arising from the attorney's employment or representation. Compliance with the time limitations of the Probate Code is but one factor to be considered in making this determination. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [11]

A respondent has the burden of proving mitigation by clear and convincing evidence. While respondent's honest belief in his innocence was not an aggravating factor, it precluded finding by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's recognition of his wrongdoing was a mitigating factor. Recognition of wrongdoing does not require false penitence, but it does require acceptance of culpability. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [19]

Excessive delay in the conduct of a disciplinary proceeding may be a mitigating circumstance, but the attorney must demonstrate that the delay impeded the preparation or presentation of an effective defense. A delay in a disciplinary proceeding merits consideration only if it has caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice. Where respondent was able to present evidence on all issues as to which respondent claimed prejudicial delay, and did not specify what missing evidence would have shown, respondent failed to show that delay caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [21]

Respondent's contention that he detrimentally relied on advice from his probation monitor and counsel regarding compliance with rule 955 might have been persuasive as mitigation if respondent had raised it at the hearing level and produced supporting evidence. However, where record did not support and even contradicted such contention, review department rejected respondent's attempt to argue it as mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [3]

Where respondent, who had pleaded guilty to welfare fraud based on eligibility statements signed by him but filled out by his wife, attempted to establish in mitigation that he did not know of his wife's fraudulent conduct, it was respondent's burden to prove such mitigation, and review department gave great weight to hearing judge's contrary finding based on evaluation of credibility of respondent and his wife. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Medical emergency might have excused respondent's failure to attend pre-trial conference, but did not excuse respondent's failure to file pre-trial statement which would have better preserved respondent's posture at trial. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [2]

While disciplinary hearings can be stressful for accused attorneys to attend, Supreme Court has made clear that accused attorneys must avail themselves of opportunity to participate and present all favorable evidence. Failing that opportunity, the accused may not demand a new hearing to present evidence belatedly. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

A respondent seeking review by the review department of a hearing department decision does not have the burden of showing that the hearing judge's findings are not supported by substantial evidence. That is a statutory burden applicable only to a respondent appearing before the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [3]

When an attorney-client business transaction is involved, the attorney bears the burden of showing that the dealings between the parties were fair and reasonable and were fully known and understood by the client. Attorneys are subject to discipline for inducing clients to invest in business enterprises without fully apprising them of the risks. Where respondent admitted entering into a business transaction with a client and failed to show full disclosure to the client regarding the risks involved in the transaction, a violation of the rule was established. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [3]

Where a fire which destroyed some of respondent's files did not occur until over a year after respondent had promised the State Bar to check his files in response to a client complaint, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the State Bar's delay in bringing formal charges arising out of the complaint. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [1]

Under Supreme Court precedent and the State Bar Rules of Procedure, before entering into a stipulation resolving a disciplinary matter, the State Bar should notify the respondent of any other pending investigations or complaints. However, where respondent had been notified of a second complaint before respondent entered into a stipulation to a public reproval in an earlier, separate matter, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the failure of the earlier stipulation to refer to the pendency of the second complaint. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 406.) In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [2]

The standard of review applied by the Supreme Court and the review department is independent review of the record, giving deference to the credibility determinations of the hearing judge. Unlike in the Supreme Court, in the review department the respondent does not have the burden of demonstrating that the hearing decision is erroneous. The review department makes its own independent determination whether there is clear and convincing evidence to support culpability, giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings resolving issues pertaining to testimony, but also taking into account the hearing judge's evaluation of the believed witness's general credibility. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [3]

Although not constituting a factor in aggravation, respondent's trial tactics in not revealing exhibits to examiner in advance undermined respondent's credibility with hearing judge, created risk that exhibits would be excluded, and unnecessarily prolonged hearing. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [25]

Where, as justification for taking client trust funds, respondent asserted that his written fee agreements had been modified to provide for a large contingent fee in one matter and a large flat fee in another matter, but did not produce any documents to support this contention, and offered varying characterizations of the alleged change in the fee arrangements, and, in contrast, the client testified credibly that he had never consented to a change in the fee agreements and had never been billed for additional fees, respondent failed to establish entitlement to the claimed fees. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [2]

Where the evidence concerning an attorney's authority to apply client trust funds to attorney's fees consisted largely of conflicting testimony, the hearing judge's finding that the attorney did not have the authority to use the funds, coupled with the documentary evidence supporting culpability, constituted clear and convincing evidence supporting the judge's conclusion that the attorney improperly used and misappropriated client trust funds. Because the attorney's trust account balance repeatedly dropped below the necessary amount over a period of many months, and the attorney did not have an adequate explanation for the inadequate trust account balance, the attorney's misconduct, though not involving intentional dishonesty, constituted gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

In order to establish a denial of a fair trial because of delay between the making of a complaint to the State Bar and the filing of a formal notice to show cause, an attorney must show specific instances of actual prejudice from the delay. Where information in support of respondent's claim of prejudice was available and known to respondent at the time of respondent's motion to dismiss before the hearing judge, but was not set forth in support of the motion, respondent could not improve on review the record he had the opportunity to make in the hearing department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [2]

Although an attorney cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, the attorney violates the trust account rules if the attorney does not manage funds as required by the rules, regardless of the attorney's intent or the absence of injury to anyone. Violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful despite the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. If an attorney's trust account balance drops below the necessary amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn. The burden then shifts to the attorney to show that office procedures were adequate. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [7]

Where the stipulation of the parties did not preclude a conclusion that respondent's misappropriations were acts of moral turpitude, and given the number and similarity of the matters in which respondent admitted to misappropriating trust funds, the burden shifted to respondent to rebut the conclusion that moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Testimony concerning a psychological disorder related to respondent's misconduct constitutes at most mitigating evidence, and is not admissible during the culpability phase of the hearing unless the respondent asserts a defense of insanity or claims to be unable to assist in his or her own defense. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [14]

Circumstances in mitigation and aggravation must be established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [35]

Where neither respondent nor respondent's former client testified as to respondent's hourly fee, but respondent had sent one bill to client reflecting an hourly rate of $100, and respondent apparently acquiesced in hearing judge's finding that respondent's fee was $100 per hour, review department adopted such finding. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [1]

Where the testimony of the State Bar's witnesses was in conflict with that of respondent, and the referee resolved those conflicts against respondent, respondent could not show error in the findings merely by repeating his own version of the facts, and respondent's generalized challenge to the complainant's credibility was not sufficient to persuade the review department to reject the referee's findings. In the absence of a strong showing that the referee was mistaken, the review department is required to defer to the referee's determinations as to credibility, and it is reluctant to deviate from the referee's credibility-based findings in the absence of a specific showing that they were in error. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [1]

It is not clear that the doctrine of selective prosecution applies in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy the full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. But even if it does, there are several threshold procedural and evidentiary hurdles to be overcome before a case of selective prosecution can be established, and where respondent did not even attempt to make the requisite showing, respondent's claim of selective prosecution was without merit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [22]

There is no statutory or case law definition for the type of showing necessary to support the setting aside of an interim suspension order of an attorney convicted of a felony or of a crime of moral turpitude. Generally, "good cause" is dependent on the particular facts of each case. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [1]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

Every attorney convicted of a felony or crime of moral turpitude can anticipate an order of interim suspension and attendant hardships, but hardship to the attorney's family does not outweigh the need to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the legal profession pending a full hearing on the merits. Where, due to delay in transmittal of conviction, attorney had had several months to make alternative employment arrangements, and attorney had given no details of his current income, recent earnings, or efforts to seek other employment, attorney's showing of hardship was insufficient in light of all factors to constitute good cause to vacate interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [9]

Although the Supreme Court requires that lawyers' claims in mitigation based upon substance abuse show adequate evidence of a causal connection between the abuse and misconduct and a meaningful and sustained rehabilitative period, the Court does not require that the respondent's rehabilitation be complete to qualify as mitigation. Where respondent showed that his marijuana use and alcohol abuse led in part to his criminal activity, and that he had undertaken a program of steady progress toward rehabilitation, and had successfully dealt with his addiction and maintained sobriety, mitigation was properly found. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [8]

To prevail on a claim of error by the hearing referee in denying respondent's motion for mistrial based on the assertedly prejudicial effect on the referee of the examiner's revelation during the hearing that the examiner had been hired as State Bar Court counsel, respondent was required to do more than hint at bias. Where respondent failed to show how any bias specifically prejudiced him, and record showed no error or bias, motion for mistrial was properly denied. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [2]

Attorneys facing charges of professional misconduct must present to the hearing department all evidence favorable to themselves. A failure to do so may justify denial of a motion for rehearing to present additional evidence. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [4]

Party requesting relief from default has burden of proving excusable neglect by a preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [6]

It is the policy of the law under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to favor a hearing on the merits; any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default. A trial court order denying relief is scrutinized more carefully than an order permitting trial on the merits. Nonetheless, it is the moving party's responsibility to recite facts that meet the burden of proving mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

Where record showed that respondent cured defects in otherwise timely answer within six days of mailing of notice to do so by clerk's office, review department's duty of independent record review precluded it from ignoring those facts in determining just disposition of motion for relief from default, despite weakness of respondent's moving papers. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

Unless the respondent demonstrates that the respondent's defense was actually compromised, a slight variance in the evidence that relates to the noticed charge does not, in itself, deprive the respondent of adequate notice. This situation, however, is patently different from one in which ambiguity and lack of specificity in the notice to show cause make it unclear which aspect of the respondent's conduct over a number of years allegedly violated the rules and statutes cited in the notice. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [17]

The scope of the respondent's defense is determined by the scope of the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [20]

Even if it were established that examiner had sent complaining witness's letter to hearing referee, respondent had waived any claim of prejudicial misconduct by his counsel's failure to preserve the objection at trial, and in any event no identifiable prejudice resulted from the referee's exposure to the letter's hearsay statements where the referee heard five days of testimony, including testimony on the same subject by the letter's author and by persons with personal knowledge. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [7]

Where respondent failed to identify any specific prejudice resulting from delay of approximately three and one half years in filing of notice to show cause after client's initial complaint, and merely made generalized reference to fading memories, delay was not a basis for the dismissal of charges. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [8]

A respondent's own testimony regarding the respondent's community service may be considered as some evidence in mitigation notwithstanding that it does not meet the requirement that good character be established by a wide range of references. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [16]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

It is the duty of any accused member of the bar to present at the evidentiary hearing in the disciplinary proceeding all evidence favorable to him or her. The respondent cannot necessarily rely on the State Bar examiner's position conceding an issue in the case. The review department's review of the record is independent and not limited by the examiner's position, and the Supreme Court, in turn, is not limited by the recommendation of the review department or that of the hearing department in assessing the record. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [4]

162.30 Issues and burden of proof in section 6049.1 proceedings

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [2]

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides that, with exceptions not applicable here, the Illinois Supreme Court disciplinary order imposed on respondent conclusively established his culpability in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [1]

Respondent objects to giving conclusive weight to the Michigan proceedings, since they were adjudicated under a lower standard of proof than that required in California. Respondent's license revocation and judicial removal were judged under standards requiring only a preponderance of evidence to find him culpable of judicial misconduct. However, the Michigan Supreme Court considered the evidence of respondent's culpability overwhelming; and, in any event, the record of this proceeding contains ample evidence that was received in the Michigan proceedings to permit us to independently determine that sufficient evidence is present to clearly and convincingly establish respondent's culpability in California. Respondent's argument lacks merit. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [2]

Attorney's out-of-state discipline was not entitled to preclusive effect under California statute providing for expedited disciplinary proceeding based on discipline in other jurisdictions where State Bar did not proceed pursuant to procedures set forth in such statute. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [9]

162.90 Other/general

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

The hearing judge's appropriate role is to decide the issues on the evidence presented. If that process leads the hearing judge to conclude that the party bearing the burden of proof had not prevailed, then the judge's duty is to find against the particular party on that issue or to recommend that only that degree of discipline, if any, which is warranted by the evidence presented. The party failing in its burden runs the very risk that the judge will so act. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a hearing judge is not authorized to require the production of added evidence beyond which the parties have chosen to present. If parties or witnesses testify, the hearing judge is at liberty to ask questions of a type consistent with the judicial function of supervising or regulating the trial. Moreover, allegations against other attorneys can be referred to the State Bar for new investigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.[2]

In a conviction referral proceeding involving respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), respondent's contention that, at the time she obtained the loan, she fully expected the farm to succeed and to repay the loan in full might avoid a finding in aggravation, but did not entitle her to any mitigating credit. Respondent was not entitled to any credit for merely intending to do that which she contracted to do. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [4]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

The review department rejected the argument that substantial compliance with a probation condition was a defense to culpability. Disciplinary probation serves the critical function of protecting the public and rehabilitating the attorney. The importance of these goals makes distinctions between substantial and insubstantial or technical violations of probation inappropriate. However, for purposes of discipline, not every probation violation should be treated the same. Belated compliance with a probation condition may be considered as a mitigating factor in determining discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court is bound by civil findings that exculpate a respondent of charged misconduct, or by an attorney's acquittal in a criminal case, or by the dismissal of criminal charges against an attorney. The reasons the State Bar is not bound by exculpatory civil findings or criminal acquittals in disciplinary proceedings are that the parties are different, the quantum of proof required in each proceeding is virtually always different, and the purposes of each proceeding are vastly different. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [10]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

Clients may not waive statutory limit on contingent fees in medical negligence cases, and superior court award of such fees in excess of statutory limits is erroneous. Where attorney did not reveal material issue of potential applicability of such statutory fee limit to superior court in connection with approval of settlement and award of fees, such award did not constitute res judicata, because attorney and client were not adversaries in proceeding. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [9]

Disbelief of a respondent's testimony does not create evidence to the contrary. Where respondent allegedly misrepresented to insurer that respondent's personal bank account was a client trust account, but only evidence to rebut respondent's testimony to contrary was notation in insurer's records, presence of such notation was not sufficient to establish that it resulted from misrepresentation by respondent, even where hearing judge found respondent not credible. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [2]

The State Bar Court may take judicial notice of the records of any California court. (See Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1); Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Such notice may include the facts stated in court orders, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgments. Although civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, they must be assessed independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim.

The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

Interim suspension is imposed on an attorney who commits a crime of moral turpitude or a felony, unless an exception is appropriate in the interest of justice, with due regard to maintaining the integrity of, and confidence in, the legal profession. Whether interim suspension is warranted prior to a hearing on the merits of a felony conviction depends, among other things, on the nature of the crime, its relationship to the practice of law, the undisputed surrounding factual circumstances, and the likely range of final discipline. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [5]

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

Evidence that respondent paid court-ordered sanctions with a trust account check, and that the client had not provided the funds, established respondent's improper use of the trust account, either by commingling trust and personal funds or by misappropriating funds belonging to other clients. Weighing all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, a finding of commingling, the less serious offense, was appropriate. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [13]

The hearing judge's determinations of testimonial credibility must receive great weight because the hearing judge observed the witnesses' demeanor. However, the review department, examining the record independently, must reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. Where testimonial credibility was not an issue and the determination to be made was whether the quality and quantity of a party's evidence met the applicable burden of proof, the issue was a question of law. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [6]

In matter where record lacked any evidence of impropriety of respondent or respondent's staff in dealing with clients, case law requiring all reasonable inferences to be resolved in respondent's favor supported attribution of no base motives to respondent. Thus, in deciding to dismiss charges, hearing judge properly saw case as one involving a dispute between two attorneys over clients, files, and the first attorney's fee, and did not improperly fail to consider totality of respondent's conduct. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [4]

Where the respondent's testimony is plausible and uncontradicted, it should be regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available but was not offered. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [6]

State Bar has burden to prove culpability by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of the facts is plausible, even if controverted, it supports a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [14]

A hearing judge's statement that the State Bar Court has a duty to ensure that suspended attorneys are scrupulously honest regarding their suspensions did not indicate that the judge had improperly shifted the burden of proof on culpability at the disciplinary hearing from the State Bar to the respondent. The view that suspended attorneys have a duty not to mislead the public about their suspensions has also been expressed by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [8]

Where the hearing judge found the complaining witness worthy of belief on the crucial factual issues, and that witness's testimony was bolstered by other evidence in the record, and respondent's contrary contention that he had been discharged by his clients was not corroborated by documents that ordinarily would have been prepared by an attorney upon discharge, the hearing judge's conclusion that respondent abandoned his clients without notifying them was supported by the record, even though the complaining witness's testimony was not uniformly reliable regarding exact details. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [9]

Rejection of a witness's testimony by the hearing judge does not in and of itself create affirmative evidence to the contrary. Where respondent's testimony on a factual issue was plausible and uncontradicted, it was appropriate to resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of respondent and reject a finding contrary to respondent's testimony as unsupported by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent's version of events was plausible, even though controverted, it supported a reasonable inference of lack of misconduct, and where there was only circumstantial evidence to the contrary, misconduct was not established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [10]

Where respondent's testimony was plausible and uncontradicted, it should have been regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available, but was not offered. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [4]

Where respondent's client's testimony contradicted respondent's testimony, and the hearing judge found the client's testimony to be more credible on the disputed point, but other circumstances revealed by the record nonetheless limited the effect of the client's testimony, the review department held that the record did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's testimony was a lie. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

While attorneys have a duty to reasonably supervise their staffs, they cannot be held responsible for every event which takes place in their offices. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [9]

Where the State Bar chooses to present evidence in a default hearing that undercuts or negates the allegations of the notice to show cause, it is the evidence, and not the allegations, that controls the findings of fact. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [2]

Where evidence offered by State Bar at default hearing neither established nor controverted or undermined allegations of notice to show cause, such allegations, which were deemed admitted by respondent's default, could properly be relied on to establish attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [17]

Probation revocation proceedings are disciplinary proceedings, and no additional discipline can be imposed for a breach of probation absent proof of such violation in conformity with fundamental due process (notice and an opportunity to be heard), as set forth in rules 612-613, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [4]

For the purpose of determining culpability for violation of restitution requirement imposed as condition of disciplinary probation, it is inappropriate to distinguish between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" violations. Restitution conditions are as significant as the notification requirements in rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, as to which the Supreme Court has declined to draw such a distinction. The importance of the goals of restitution makes distinctions between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" failures to make restitution inappropriate. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [9]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. While civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, the disciplinary court must assess them independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [8]

Where court in civil action related to disciplinary proceeding had concluded (applying preponderance of evidence standard) that there was substantial evidence that purported transfer of partnership interest to respondent was fraudulent, and it was undisputed that respondent had prepared partnership transfer document, referee's conclusion in disciplinary proceeding that there was no evidence that respondent actively participated in fraud in preparation of document could only be consistent with civil court finding if referee's conclusion was based on difference in applicable standard of proof, in that culpability in disciplinary cases must be proven by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [7]

Although referee indicated that he had not reached a final decision despite preparation of draft findings, he appeared to have placed a greater burden of proof on the respondent than permitted by law. If a trier of fact imposes the wrong burden of proof, that itself can constitute reversible error. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [6]

In a default matter, to the extent that evidence negates allegations of notice to show cause, it is evidence and not allegations that controls findings of fact. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [19]

In a conviction matter, the respondent's criminal conviction by itself constitutes conclusive proof that the respondent committed all acts necessary to constitute the offense charged. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [2]

The State Bar Court must make appropriate findings as to the manner in which an attorney's conduct violated charged rules and statutes. Conclusory language in an examiner's papers indicating that the factual findings supported a conclusion of culpability under a given statute or rule was inadequate and did not promote meaningful review. The conduct proved under each count which supports culpability of particular charged violations must be identified. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [3]

In disciplinary matters, where the State Bar has the burden of proof, the examiner is obligated to produce sufficient evidence to permit the State Bar Court to make adequate determinations and appropriate recommendations to the Supreme Court as to discipline. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 402.) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [9]

Taking of evidence which negated allegation of notice to show cause permitted hearing department to reject allegations based on a conflict between the admission of the allegations by default and the evidence adduced at trial. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [10]

163 Proof of Wilfulness

Where respondent admitted that he hid cameras in restaurant bathrooms for specific purpose of making surreptitious recordings, and that he knew at the time his actions were unethical and illegal, and where respondent's psychiatrist was unaware of respondent's prior similar conduct, had not directly observed respondent in manic state, and based his opinion solely on respondent's version of the facts, psychiatrist's opinion that respondent was not responsible for his misconduct due to bipolar disorder was contrary to evidence, and did not preclude finding that respondent's criminal conduct involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [2]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

While moral turpitude generally requires a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, or willfulness, the law is clear that where an attorney's fiduciary obligations are involved, particularly trust account duties, a finding of gross negligence will support such a charge.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [3]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Wilfulness for purposes of probation revocation (and other disciplinary) proceedings is simply a general purpose or willingness to commit an act or to make an omission; it does not require any intent to violate the law or the probation condition and does not necessarily involve bad faith. Moreover, wilfulness does not require actual knowledge of the provision violated. Respondent admitted that he did not pay the restitution, and there was no evidence in the record suggesting that this omission was other than a purposeful act. Thus, the failure to pay the restitution was unquestionably wilful under the above definitions. Whether respondent believed that he had no obligation to pay the money because the restitution was discharged in his bankruptcy was simply not relevant to the issue of the wilfulness of his failure to pay, as it need not be shown that respondent intended the consequences of his omission or was even aware of the disciplinary provision he was violating. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [3]

Respondent's failure to perform any substantive work on client's workers' compensation case for more that five years was clearly repeated and reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [6]

The failure to disclose a material fact on an application for admission is deemed willful whenever the application calls for disclosure with reasonable clarity. Respondent's arrest on felony charges of conspiracy to commit theft (which occurred after he filed his initial application for admission to practice law, but before he admitted to practice) and his pending trial on those charges were material facts that respondent was required to disclose, under the plain language of his initial application by updating his initial application. Thus, respondent's failure to do so was willful. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [10]

Where hearing judge found that respondent acted with reckless disregard in failing to honor rights of statutory lienholder, and where in one matter respondent intentionally did not honor known statutory lien based on incorrect legal theory without any legal research, advice, or inquiry, and in two other matters respondent made no effort to determine whether clients' health care providers might have statutory liens, and where respondent took no steps to ascertain the law as to his obligations to statutory lienholder, respondent's failure to honor statutory liens was product of gross negligence rather than of good faith, negligent mistake, and thus constituted violation of statute requiring attorneys to support the law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [18]

Rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds on demand requires no special state of mind to establish violation; mere fact that payment was not made is sufficient to constitute wilfulness for purpose of finding wilful violation of rule. Without justification, failure to pay third party lien on demand violates such rule. Where attorney negotiates with lienholder to reduce lien amount, and it becomes clear negotiations will not be productive, attorney violates rule if attorney neither promptly pays lien in full nor takes appropriate steps to resolve dispute promptly. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [24]

The statute providing that attorneys have a duty to support the constitution and laws of California and the United States constitutes a conduit whereby attorneys may be disciplined for violating laws which are not otherwise disciplinable under the State Bar Act. However, a negligent mistake made in good faith does not constitute a violation of this statute. Thus, where respondent believed he had satisfied his obligation to a statutory medical lienholder by informing it of a source of insurance coverage, and thus believed that his client was entitled to all of the settlement funds obtained from a different source of coverage, respondent's failure to notify the lienholder of the impending settlement, as required by statute, did not violate his statutory duty to obey California law, because it constituted a negligent mistake, based on the good faith, erroneous belief that he was entitled to distribute all the settlement funds to the client and let the client deal with the statutory lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [5]

Unlike the proof of a violation of the State Bar Act, the proof of a wilful violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct merely has to demonstrate that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, that he knew what he was doing or not doing and that he intended either to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where respondent knew he was settling a personal injury claim without ensuring the payment of an applicable Medi-Cal lien and intended to do so, he acted wilfully; and a determination of culpability under the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds was appropriate even if he acted in good faith. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [10]

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

The purpose of a proof of service is to establish notice of an order or other document, and it is the kind of document relied upon in the conduct of serious affairs. Where a proof of service of a sanctions order on respondent was in evidence, and there was no indication in the record of any misconduct by respondent's staff concerning receipt of the order, respondent was presumed to have been served with the court order. His receipt of the order and his admission that he did not satisfy it established a violation of the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [6]

Wilfulness with regard to a rule of professional conduct violation does not require proof of an evil intent or bad purpose, but merely proof that the attorney intended to do that which the rule prohibits. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [3]

Where an attorney permitted a non-lawyer to misuse the attorney's name to conduct a large personal injury practice, the attorney could not be held separately culpable for each item of harm that resulted, without proof of his or her actual knowledge. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [3]

Bad faith is not a prerequisite to a finding of wilful failure to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [4]

An attorney has an obligation to perform services diligently and if the attorney knows he or she does not have or will not acquire sufficient time to do so, the attorney must not continue representation in the matter. Reckless or repeated inattention to client needs need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or purposeful failure to attend to duties in order to constitute wilful violation of duty to perform competently. Fact that respondent performed some services for a probate estate did not excuse his misconduct in delaying closure of the estate, especially where respondent's asserted justification for delay was that he was busy on other matters. Respondent's repeated failure to perform acts needed to distribute assets and close estate for five years, knowing that beneficiaries desired earliest possible distribution, constituted wilful violation of the duty to perform services competently. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [12]

Violations of probation require the same mental state to justify discipline as violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court. For such purposes, wilfulness need not involve bad faith; a general purpose or willingness to comment an act or permit an omission is sufficient. Accordingly, despite respondent's asserted good faith belief that probation reports were sufficient, respondent's intentional failure to include a required statement in such reports was wilful for purposes of a probation violation. Respondent's subjective intentions were relevant only with regard to aggravation and mitigation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [6]

Although the term "moral turpitude" has been defined very broadly, the Supreme Court has always required a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, wilfulness, or, at the very least, gross negligence before labelling an attorney's conduct moral turpitude. Where respondent reasonably and in good faith believed that he had the authority to endorse his clients' former attorney's name to settlement drafts, and there was no evidence that respondent misused funds intended for clients or medical providers and no evidence of fraud, hearing judge correctly concluded that there was no clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [3]

In order to find an attorney culpable of a rule violation, the attorney's misconduct must be found to have been wilful. Where no such finding was expressly set forth in hearing judge's decision, review department deemed it to have been made based on hearing judge's conclusions. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [3]

A finding of a wilful violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct does not necessarily indicate intent to violate ethical guidelines, but merely an intent to perform an act which results in a violation. Even where there was no evidence of intentional misconduct, evidence of repeated acts of negligence justified finding respondent culpable of wilfully violating the rule regarding failure to perform services competently. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [1]

An attorney's failure to communicate with and reckless or repeated inattention to the needs of a client have long been grounds for discipline. Such misconduct need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or a purposeful failure to attend to the duties due to a client, and the attorney's acts need not be shown to be wilful where there is a repeated failure of the attorney to attend to the needs of the client. Where respondent received several notices regarding the inheritance taxes owed by his client in a probate matter, and did not notify his client of any of them, and the client was reasonably relying on respondent to provide her with such notice, respondent failed to perform legal services competently in wilful violation of the applicable Rule of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [1]

Although an attorney cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, the attorney violates the trust account rules if the attorney does not manage funds as required by the rules, regardless of the attorney's intent or the absence of injury to anyone. Violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful despite the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. If an attorney's trust account balance drops below the necessary amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn. The burden then shifts to the attorney to show that office procedures were adequate. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [7]

Although attorneys cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, fiduciary violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful for disciplinary purposes even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [7]

The analysis of gross negligence in cases decided before the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct is not affected by the adoption of the standards, but the discipline imposed now takes into account guidelines provided by the standards, although they are not rigidly applied. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [8]

Misappropriation resulting from serious, inexcusable violation of a lawyer's duty to oversee trust funds is deemed wilful even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [10]

Wilfulness, for the purpose of finding a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, is defined as having acted or omitted to act purposely to do the act forbidden by the rule or not to do the act required by the rule. Where there was no evidence that respondent was incapable of forming the requisite purpose or intent, the review department upheld a finding that respondent was capable of the wilfulness necessary to commit the charged rule violation (accepting employment without resources to perform competently.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [24]

Notwithstanding omission of term "wilful" from statute and rule governing imposition of discipline for probation violations, wilfulness is a necessary element to establish culpability in a probation revocation case alleging failure to pay restitution. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [6]

Although attorney disciplinary proceedings are sui generis and not criminal in nature, rules of criminal law may provide guidance in appropriate circumstances; case law and statutes in criminal law indicate that lack of wilfulness constitutes a reason not to revoke probation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [7]

In disciplinary cases arising from violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, a showing of wilfulness requires only a "general purpose or willingness" to commit the act or suffer the omission, and need not involve bad faith. The same definition of wilfulness applies to the mental state required to justify discipline for violations of probation conditions. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [8]

A wilful breach of respondent's restitution duty was established where respondent: (1) had the financial ability to make some restitution payments during the period when he had not done so; (2) repeatedly chose to pursue professional goals which foreseeably rendered him financially unable to make timely restitution; (3) failed to protect his funds from attachment by creditors; and (4) failed to seek an extension of time to make his restitution payments. His conduct showed a conscious disregard of his restitution obligations and a failure to make sufficient good faith efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [12]

Wilfulness is established by proof that the attorney acted or omitted to act purposely. No rational relationship exists between an attorney's years in practice and the attorney's ability to act or omit to act purposefully on a specified occasion. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [12]

There is a distinction between the proof necessary to establish a rule violation where the only intent necessary is the intent to do the act, and the proof necessary to establish culpability of a disciplinary offense which requires proof of specific (i.e., subjective) intent. To prove a "wilful" breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is only necessary to prove that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, intended to commit the act. With respect to charges of which subjective intent is an element, however, such intent must be proven convincingly and to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [6]

Only violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct that are wilful are grounds for discipline. Where hearing referee's decision did not expressly state that respondent's rule violation was wilful, but referee's comments indicated conclusion of wilfulness, review department regarded referee as having found violation to be wilful. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [1]

Respondent's admission to a State Bar investigator that he misused advanced costs given to him by his clients and failed to place them in a trust account, and his clients' testimony that he did no work on the matter for which the costs were advanced and failed to refund or account for the advanced costs, established respondent's wilful violation of his duties to hold the funds in a trust account, to render an accounting for the funds, and to refund them on request. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [7]

164 Proof of Intent

Where State Bar presented no evidence or witnesses to rebut respondent's testimony that her inaccurate report of her MCLE compliance was unintentional, and hearing judge declined to find that respondent acted intentionally, Review Department rejected argument that respondent's conduct intentionally misrepresented her MCLE compliance. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [2]

Great weight is given to a hearing judge's finding as to intent. Where hearing judge determined respondent was grossly negligent when verifying his clients' complaint and State Bar relied on same evidence already considered by the hearing judge to argue respondent was intentionally deceitful, there was no basis to conclude that respondent's decision to sign verification rose to an act of intentional dishonesty rather than mere gross neglect. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [1]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Respondent's deliberate and unjustified failure to attend a status conference in client's workers' compensation case was reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [4]

At least in absence of admission by attorney, proving that an attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it is rarely capable of being proved with direct evidence. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient, however, if it is clear and convincing. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [1]

Objective inferences drawn from consideration of the 12 factors often considered in bankruptcy proceedings to determine whether a debtor incurred credit card debts with fraudulent intent are also highly probative in determining whether attorney incurred credit card debts without intending to repay them. But 12 factors are not exclusive, none is dispositive, and attorney's conduct need not satisfy a minimum number to find that attorney lacked intent to repay debts. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [2]

Because attorney's act of borrowing money without intending to repay it involves dishonesty and moral turpitude as a matter of law, State Bar need only prove that attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it to establish that attorney violated statutory duty not to engage in acts of dishonesty or involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [4]

Intent to repay debt requires some factual underpinning that would lead person to a degree of certainty that he or she would have ability to repay. Mere hope and unrealistic or speculative sources of income are insufficient. This is particularly true where respondent obtained large cash advances on the same day he was repaying gambling debts in the form of casino markers. And it is particularly true where respondent did not proffer any documentary evidence to support his claims that he was an experienced and successful or winning blackjack player. Moreover, in light of the fact that respondent never kept any records of his gambling winnings and losses, any hope of repaying any portion of his credit card debts with gambling winnings was unreasonable. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [6]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [7]

The good faith of an attorney in making a false statement is a defense to the charge of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d). As a defense, respondent had the burden of proving that he acted in good faith and he failed to meet that burden. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [2]

Respondent's argument is that a misrepresentation to a court is not material unless it successfully misleads the court is contrary to the express wording of Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (d), which provides that it is the duty of an attorney to never seek to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact or law. The conduct denounced by this statute is not the act of an attorney by which he successfully misleads the court, but the presentation of a statement of fact, known by him to be false, which tends to do so. It is the endeavor to secure an advantage by means of falsity which is denounced. Whether respondent violated section 6068, subdivision (d) depends first upon whether his representation to the court was in fact untrue, and second, whether he knew that his statement was false and he intended thereby to deceive the court. With regard to whether respondent intended to deceive the court, the presentation to a court of a statement of fact known to be false presumes an intent to secure a determination based upon it and is a clear violation of section 6068, subdivision (d). Respondent's statements to the two courts were in fact untrue and he knew they were untrue. Thus, it is presumed that the statements were made with an intent to secure an advantage. No credible evidence rebutted this presumption. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [4 a-d]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

In broad terms, any act contrary to honesty and good morals involves moral turpitude. Although an evil intent is not necessary for moral turpitude, some level of guilty knowledge or at least gross negligence is required. Where respondent's failure to comply with a court order was either intentional or grossly negligent, this failure involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [7]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

Where there was no evidence that respondent acted intentionally in failing to notify statutory medical lienholder of settlement or in failing to honor statutory lien, but rather, respondent's state of mind was that he was not actually aware of existence of lien or his duties in regard to it because he took no steps to investigate his client's medical coverage or his obligations under law, respondent's conduct evidenced reckless disregard rather than intentional violation of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1]

Where hearing judge found that respondent acted with reckless disregard in failing to honor rights of statutory lienholder, and where in one matter respondent intentionally did not honor known statutory lien based on incorrect legal theory without any legal research, advice, or inquiry, and in two other matters respondent made no effort to determine whether clients' health care providers might have statutory liens, and where respondent took no steps to ascertain the law as to his obligations to statutory lienholder, respondent's failure to honor statutory liens was product of gross negligence rather than of good faith, negligent mistake, and thus constituted violation of statute requiring attorneys to support the law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [18]

An attorney's duties to a client do not cease to exist because client is also represented by another attorney. Where respondent wished to be relieved of responsibility for defending client's deposition, but knew that successor counsel was not available to do so, respondent had obligation to take appropriate steps to avoid prejudice to client. Where respondent intentionally absented himself from client's deposition even though he was still officially counsel of record and knew client would be unrepresented in his absence, respondent intentionally failed to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [28]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty plea to a crime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

Although the term "moral turpitude" has been defined very broadly, the Supreme Court has always required a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, wilfulness, or, at the very least, gross negligence before labelling an attorney's conduct moral turpitude. Where respondent reasonably and in good faith believed that he had the authority to endorse his clients' former attorney's name to settlement drafts, and there was no evidence that respondent misused funds intended for clients or medical providers and no evidence of fraud, hearing judge correctly concluded that there was no clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [3]

The rule regarding prejudicial withdrawal from representation applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel. Whether or not an attorney's ceasing to provide services amounts to an effective withdrawal depends on the surrounding circumstances. Where time is of the essence, failure to provide services constitutes an effective withdrawal even if the attorney's period of inaction is relatively brief. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [7]

An attorney's total cessation of services to a client for a period of two years, standing alone, and even though unintentional, was clear and convincing evidence that the attorney effectively withdrew from employment without taking steps to protect the client's interests. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [9]

The commercial or distribution aspect of respondent's crime was conclusively established by his conviction of possession of marijuana for sale. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [4]

Intent is a necessary element of an assignment. Where the physical transfer of an assignment of a promissory note and deed of trust from client to attorney was not intended to transfer an interest in the promissory note to the attorney, the transfer did not result in an acquisition by the attorney of an interest in the client's property, and thus did not violate the rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [14]

Appearing in court while suspended or enrolled inactive does not inherently involve moral turpitude; nor does it necessarily involve deception of the court, if the attorney is unaware of his or her inactive status. Evidence that an attorney made a single court appearance while ignorant of his or her inactive status is insufficient to establish clearly and convincingly that the attorney acted with moral turpitude or intent to deceive the court. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [22]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

There is a distinction between the proof necessary to establish a rule violation where the only intent necessary is the intent to do the act, and the proof necessary to establish culpability of a disciplinary offense which requires proof of specific (i.e., subjective) intent. To prove a "wilful" breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is only necessary to prove that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, intended to commit the act. With respect to charges of which subjective intent is an element, however, such intent must be proven convincingly and to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [6]

The commercial or distribution aspect of respondent's crime was conclusively established by his conviction of possession of marijuana for sale. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [4]

Intent is a necessary element of an assignment. Where the physical transfer of an assignment of a promissory note and deed of trust from client to attorney was not intended to transfer an interest in the promissory note to the attorney, the transfer did not result in an acquisition by the attorney of an interest in the client's property, and thus did not violate the rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [14]

Appearing in court while suspended or enrolled inactive does not inherently involve moral turpitude; nor does it necessarily involve deception of the court, if the attorney is unaware of his or her inactive status. Evidence that an attorney made a single court appearance while ignorant of his or her inactive status is insufficient to establish clearly and convincingly that the attorney acted with moral turpitude or intent to deceive the court. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [22]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

There is a distinction between the proof necessary to establish a rule violation where the only intent necessary is the intent to do the act, and the proof necessary to establish culpability of a disciplinary offense which requires proof of specific (i.e., subjective) intent. To prove a "wilful" breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is only necessary to prove that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, intended to commit the act.

With respect to charges of which subjective intent is an element, however, such intent must be proven convincingly and to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [6]

165 Adequacy of Hearing Department Decision

Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262, which authorizes proceedings to be dismissed in the furtherance of justice, is construed in the State Bar Court in the same manner as its analog Penal Code section 1385 is construed in criminal proceedings. State Bar rule does not permit respondents to make motions. Motions may be made only by the State Bar as the prosecutor or a dismissal may be entered on State Bar Court's own motion after taking required steps. Hearing judge's dismissal of proceeding comported with those required pre-dismissal steps because she issued an order to show cause to the parties, allowed for responses from them, considered all appropriate interests, and stated in detail her reason for dismissal, and since the hearing judge acted promptly after the proceeding was filed and since the dismissal was expressly without prejudice to refiling, review department saw no prejudice to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721.[2 a-c]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. Nevertheless, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence test are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in disciplinary proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. Where the trial judge in a civil proceeding found that respondent knew prior to filing a lawsuit that he had not been defamed, that his law firm had not been disparaged, and that his retainer contract with his clients had not been interfered with at all, and those findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record, the hearing judge's conclusion in the disciplinary proceeding that respondent filed the lawsuit based on his honest and reasonable belief in its validity was contrary to the civil findings and did not appear to have accorded the civil findings the strong presumption of validity to which they were entitled. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[1]

In view of the review department's duty to independently review the record and make findings of fact and conclusions of law, any alleged denial of due process by the hearing judge's failure to clearly identify respondent's misconduct in the hearing judge's decision was remedied by the review department's issuance of an opinion that superseded the hearing judge's decision. Therefore, respondent's due process contention was rendered moot and was not addressed on the merits.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[2]

Even though the parties entered into a stipulation as to facts and conclusions of law (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 132) in which they agreed to be bound by stipulated facts regardless of the degree of discipline recommended or imposed and in which respondent pleaded nolo contendere to the disciplinary charges in the stipulation (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6085.5, subd. (c)) and acknowledged that her "the plea of nolo contendere shall be considered the same as an admission of culpability" for disciplinary purposes, the State Bar Court still had an affirmative duty to independently determine whether the parties' stipulated conclusions of law were supported by the record before accepting them.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [1a-c]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[2]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in determining that State Bar's evidence establishing that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of petitioner's former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers did not prevent petitioner from showing his rehabilitation because hearing judge based that determination on his findings that petitioner did not know (1) of the client's claim or (2) of Client Security Fund's actions until petitioner's deposition was taken in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding and because those two findings are supported by substantial evidence consisting of petitioner's own testimony, which was supported with a number of letters from the client's file demonstrating that medical providers had been paid. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[4]

Because record in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension established (1) that, when petitioner committed the misconduct in his prior record that resulted in his actual suspension, he was abusing and addicted to alcohol and cocaine, (2) that his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine causally contributed to his prior misconduct, (3) that he had undergone a meaningful and sustained period of rehabilitation from his abuses and addictions, (4) that, when the discipline was imposed on him in his prior record, these facts were not known to State Bar, State Bar Court, the Supreme Court, and (5) that when discipline was imposed in prior proceeding, petitioner was in denial regarding his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine, review department found, when it reviewed record to determine whether hearing judge's findings of rehabilitation and present fitness were supported by substantial evidence, that petitioner's addictions were not excuses for, but explanations of his prior misconduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[9]

Substantial evidence supported hearing judge's findings in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension that petitioner established his rehabilitation and present fitness to practice where petitioner proved (1) that he eliminated his abuses of alcohol and cocaine that causally contributed to his prior misconduct; (2) that he openly described his prior misconduct to an insurance company for whom he worked and to his church, Cocaine Anonymous group, friends, and relatives and to the five character witnesses who convincingly testified as to his rehabilitation and good moral character; and (3) that he became a leader in Cocaine Anonymous and president of his church. State Bar did not impeach petitioner's showings of rehabilitation and present fitness with the incomplete copy of petitioner's application for license to act as a life insurance agent to which State Bar alleged, but did not prove, petitioner attached an addendum that contained a false and misleading description of his prior record of discipline. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[10]

Hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in finding that petitioner in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension established his present learning and ability in the general law where petitioner proved that he recently (1) completed 100 hours of classes dealing with insurance contracts, claims, procedures, and ethics; (2) spent more than 200 hours studying estate planning and taxation for small business; (3) litigated his personal bankruptcy and his own child custody case; (4) obtained a dismissal of criminal charges his child's mother brought against him regarding visitation rights with his daughter; and (5) two attorneys testified that he had extensive knowledge of laws regarding estate and business taxation. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[11]

Because Rules of Professional Conduct 3-700(A)(2) (prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment) and 3-700(D)(1) (mandating return of client property) have not been amended or modified since they were first adopted and became effective on May 27, 1989, there are no "former" versions of those rules. Thus, the review department deemed the charged and found violations that State Bar and the hearing judge incorrectly described as violations of "former" rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1) to be charged and found violations of rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1), which became effective on May 27, 1989. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[1]

Even though respondent's misconduct in present proceeding did not resemble the serious misconduct to which respondent stipulated in his prior record of discipline and even though respondent's present misconduct began well before State Bar initiated the prior disciplinary proceeding against him, review department gave respondent's prior record of discipline some greater weight in aggravation than did the hearing judge because respondent's present misconduct continued and accelerated during pendency of the prior proceeding, with the more egregious portion of the present misconduct occurring after respondent had stipulated to culpability on the charges of serious misconduct brought against in the prior proceeding. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [9]

In the hearing judge's discipline recommendation that respondent "be suspended from the practice of law for three years and until he provides proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) [of the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct], that said suspension be stayed; and that he be placed on probation for four years subject to the following conditions: . . ," the provision that respondent's three-year suspension continue until he proves his rehabilitation, fitness, learning, and ability in accordance with standard 1.4(c)(ii) is stayed along with the recommended three-year suspension so that, if the State Bar files a probation revocation proceeding against respondent seeking to have all, or a part, of the three-year stayed suspension imposed on him, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) would be an available condition. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [13]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [7]

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [8]

Even if credit card cash advances that attorney obtained and lost while gambling in Nevada casinos were "gambling debts" and therefore not enforceable debts in California, hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to make restitution to credit card company was not only legal, but appropriate and necessary to respondent's rehabilitation and for protection of public in light of hearing judge's findings that attorney obtained the cash advances without intending to repay them. Requiring attorney to make restitution will force attorney to confront his misconduct in concrete terms. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [11]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [3]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

Where the State Bar Court recommends that an attorney who has defaulted in a disciplinary proceeding be placed on actual suspension, rule 205(a) of the Rules of Procedure requires that the discipline recommendation contain two elements: (1) a specific period of actual suspension; and (2) a statement that the attorney's actual suspension shall continue unless the State Bar Court grants a motion to terminate the actual suspension at the conclusion of the specific period of actual suspension or upon such later date ordered by the court. In the present case the hearing judge recommended that respondent be actually suspended until he accomplishes certain tasks (i.e., provide evidence of reimbursement to his former client, attend Ethics School, pass the professional responsibility examination, and make a motion to the State Bar Court to terminate the actual suspension). This recommendation does not meet the requirement of rule 205(a) that the recommended discipline include a specific period of actual suspension. At best, the hearing judge's recommendation will result in an indefinite, as distinguished from a specific, period of actual suspension. To extend an attorney's recommended actual suspension until he or she moves the State Bar Court to terminate that suspension under rule 205 there must be a stated, defined and measurable period of actual suspension recommended. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [1 a, h]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Where hearing judge did not issue written ruling on his denial of State Bar's motion to dismiss former attorney's petition for reinstatement, review department determined hearing judge's reasoning from written transcript of hearing on motion, which was included in appendix to State Bar's petition for interlocutory review. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [2]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

Even though respondent was not entitled to any mitigating credit for five years of discipline free practice under standard 1.2(e)(i) and case law, there was no error in hearing judge's giving respondent mitigating credit for discipline free practice because weight assigned to such mitigation by hearing judge was nominal (i.e., "exists in name only;" not real or substantial). In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [2]

Good character evidence consisting of recent letters from two judges before whom respondent had regularly appeared and two attorneys who had known respondent since 1986 was not entitled to substantial mitigating credit because evidence did not come from a wide range of references in general and legal communities as required by standard 1.2(e)(vi). However, respondent was entitled to some mitigating weight for that evidence because it represented a fair reference from legal community. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [4 a-b]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge expressly found that respondent's violation of statute and rule of professional conduct was based on respondent's gross negligence, she inexplicably declined to apply that gross negligence to find that respondent's conduct involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prescribing attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding moral turpitude. Accordingly, review department independently found respondent culpable of act involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [2]

A close reading of the hearing judge's conclusion that petitioner had proven rehabilitation, together with several adverse findings of petitioner's actions regarding her former husband led the review department to support the judge's positive recommendation. Regarding petitioner's testimony about the restraining orders she attempted to obtain in the State Bar Court against her former husband, the judge found it either negligent or intentionally misleading. However, he did not specify at which end of that wide range petitioner's testimony rested. Certainly, if petitioner's understanding of restraining orders was simply careless, no adverse conclusions were justified. The review department found no basis for a conclusion of dishonesty on petitioner's part regarding the status of the restraining orders. The review department also drew no adverse moral conclusions from petitioner's frequent litigation in the State Bar Court over a protective order. Petitioner had a right of reasonable access to this court to seek judicial remedies. Her contact of members of the Board of Governors and senior State Bar staff was also within her rights and she did not pursue inappropriate means to influence judicial decisions. The review department also concluded that petitioner disclosed adequate facts about the matter in her communications. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2 a-b]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3 a-b]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [1]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [4]

Without, at least, a factual stipulation establishing aggravation and mitigation, neither the review department nor the Supreme Court have a complete record upon which to evaluate the appropriate discipline for the misconduct that occurred. Where the record consisted of the parties' partial stipulation to facts which did not address any aggravating or mitigating circumstances and two character letters proffered by respondent, the review department determined that the sparse record precluded it from fulfilling its duty to independently review the record and remanded the case for a trial de novo at which an adequate record was made. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [2]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

