As respondent had a substance abuse problem, an appropriate substance abuse condition of probation was warranted. The review department did not have the entire record before it on summary review and was unable to determine a suitable condition. It therefore remanded the case to the hearing judge. As the modification of one probation condition may require the modification of other conditions, the review department did not limit the hearing judge on remand to reconsideration of the substance abuse condition alone. The hearing judge could reconsider the entire discipline recommendation, including the probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [4]

In summary review proceedings, the full record was not before the review department therefore it could not consider any issues other than those raised by the parties, absent the conversion of the matter into a plenary review proceeding. Accordingly, where the review department did not modify the hearing judge's decision as a result of the summary review proceeding, the hearing judge's decision remained the final decision of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [5]

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227.

Where hearing judge concluded that certain alleged rule violations were duplicative and inconsequential in considering level of discipline, and State Bar did not take issue with such conclusion, and review department determined that respondent should be disbarred based on other findings, review department did not address allegations found to be duplicative. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [10]

Where respondent's wilful misappropriation of client trust funds was accompanied by aggravating factors which clearly predominated over mitigation, and where hearing judge recommended disbarment based on consideration of respondent's demeanor and related issues, review department concurred that disbarment was appropriate. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [8]

In considering whether respondent's misconduct constituted a pattern, hearing judge should not have considered charges which had been dismissed or of which respondent was not culpable. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [9]

Review department's review of record is independent, and it may draw its own conclusions from record whether or not a party has requested it to do so. Where hearing judge's conclusion that respondent had committed act of moral turpitude was difficult to reconcile with judge's conclusion as to appropriate discipline, it was appropriate for review department to give particular scrutiny to culpability conclusion as well as degree of discipline, even though respondent had not requested review of moral turpitude conclusion. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

Where hearing judge declined to order restitution but offered to reconsider if State Bar could show that misconduct victim had not already been compensated for funds taken by respondent, this ruling misallocated the burden of proof. Once State Bar met its burden to prove initial trust account violation, it was respondent's burden to prove that restitution had in effect already been made by a third party. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

The testimony of a single witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact. Where hearing judge found complaining witness's version of events to be more credible, and such testimony, though at odds with respondent's, was consistent on material issues, review department found no basis to disturb hearing judge's factual findings. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [4]

Where hearing judge's oral comments at close of case regarding appropriate discipline deviated from the recommendation made in judge's written decision, but hearing overall was fair and respondent's counsel had opportunity to present argument regarding degree of discipline, hearing judge's written decision controlled, and respondent was not denied due process. Respondent could not, as a matter of law, rely on hearing judge's oral or written discipline recommendation since it was not binding on review department or Supreme Court. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [10]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation or for purposes such as impeaching witness credibility. However, where hearing judge's findings on uncharged misconduct were too tentative to warrant consideration for enhanced discipline, review department did not adopt them as findings or conclusions, although it declined to strike them from the decision. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

Where there was clear conflict in testimony with regard to whether respondent provided clients with an accounting, and hearing judge was unable to resolve such conflict, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent did not provide accounting. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [6]

Where administrative proceeding in which respondent had not appeared had resulted in revocation of respondent's real estate license, and record of such administrative proceeding was relevant in State Bar disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge and parties should have addressed issues regarding whether administrative decision had preclusive weight; if not, whether it was admissible under any hearsay exception, and whether respondent should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning culpability or mitigation with respect to the license revocation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [10]

When judges are asked to approve stipulations, they cannot rely solely on State Bar's acquiescence in proposed discipline, but must exercise their independent judgment in carrying out their obligation to examine stipulation, admitted facts, and proposed discipline for fairness to parties and for extent to which public will be adequately protected thereby. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 407(a).) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [9]

Where respondent had missed a court appearance on behalf of a client shortly after stipulating to discipline based in part on similar past conduct; had brought an illegal drug to court, attempted to visit an incarcerated client with the drug in his possession, and thrown the drug on the floor after refusing to be searched; had been stopped on another occasion with the drug in his car; and had been observed to be under the influence of a controlled substance while with a client, there was a clear likelihood of harm to both respondent's clients and the public if respondent were allowed to practice law pending adjudication of criminal and State Bar proceedings, and hearing judge erred in focusing exclusively on threat of harm to clients and finding insufficient evidence thereof to justify inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [5]

Where there was uncontroverted evidence of repeated client harm and other violations of law by respondent, and no evidence of recognition by respondent of substance abuse problem, hearing judge erred in denying involuntary inactive enrollment of respondent without considering substantial harm which public was likely to suffer from such denial. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [8]

Culpability can be established in attorney disciplinary proceedings either by direct or circumstantial evidence, and circumstantial evidence has been considered on a regular basis in cases involving improper client solicitation by an attorney's agents. Culpability findings regarding charge of improper client solicitation were proper where, in addition to circumstantial evidence, there was inculpatory direct evidence in the record, and hearing judge properly evaluated and weighed witness testimony. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [10]

There are numerous factors to consider in assessing witness credibility beyond observing the witness while testifying. The hearing judge, as the trier of fact in State Bar proceedings, is to determine the credibility of witnesses and hearsay declarants. The fact that some witnesses testified at the State Bar hearing by way of a transcript of the witnesses' criminal court testimony, which is expressly authorized by statute in State Bar proceedings, is not reason to discount their testimony or find it less credible than live witness testimony. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [1]

Where, as a result of a hearing judge's dismissal of a disciplinary proceeding, the hearing judge did not make findings regarding aggravation/mitigation and concluded there was no need to rule on the admissibility of certain exhibits, thus foreclosing respondent's opportunity to substitute other evidence if the exhibits were not admitted, the review department concluded, when the dismissal was overturned, that it was appropriate to remand the matter to the hearing judge for further proceedings on the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [13]

The fact that no live witness appeared for the prosecution in a proceeding did not preclude the hearing judge from making a credibility determination based on prior recorded trial testimony which was subject to cross-examination. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [4]

Lack of candor toward the State Bar during disciplinary investigation or proceedings, including presenting intentionally misleading testimony, fabricating evidence, or attempting to mislead the court through material omissions, is an aggravating circumstance. However, a respondent's honest, if mistaken belief in his or her innocence, and resulting in failure to acquiesce in the State Bar Court's findings, is not in and of itself aggravating. Lack of candor cannot be found based merely on a respondent's different memory of events from that of complaining former clients. Where respondent's testimony concerning his former office manager's conduct in hiding or destroying letters and messages was uncontroverted and not implausible, and was corroborated by an eyewitness, hearing judge's finding that such testimony lacked candor was not adopted by review department. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [9]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

A respondent may be disciplined only for misconduct properly charged in the notice to show cause. In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause charged that respondent failed to deliver financial records to an accountant, and hearing judge found that respondent failed to render an accounting, respondent was properly found culpable of failing to deliver the records, based on his admission by default of the allegations of the notice to show cause. Respondent's failure to file quarterly reports other than those listed in the notice to show cause could not be used as a basis for culpability or as aggravating circumstances in a default matter. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [1]

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause informed respondent who was subject to stayed suspension that he could be enrolled inactive upon finding of probation violation and recommendation of actual suspension therefor, it would have been appropriate for hearing judge to order such inactive enrollment with or without request from Office of Trial Counsel, and where hearing judge had not done so, review department made such order. Under statute providing that inactive enrollment for probation violation shall be credited against ensuing actual suspension, review department recommended that respondent's one-year actual suspension commence as of the date of his inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [7]

Where Office of Trials argued that recommended discipline was too low in light of existing findings, and also suggested supplemental findings, and on de novo review, review department agreed that discipline was insufficient in light of findings made by hearing judge, review department did not need to address issue of supplemental findings. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [1]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for his son's law firm despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, but the evidence indicated that the firm name was beyond the resigned attorney's control, and there was no credible evidence that the public or clients were in fact misled or that the resigned attorney had practiced law after resigning, the review department deferred to the hearing judge's favorable credibility determinations and concluded that the resigned attorney had not held himself out as entitled to practice law. The resigned attorney's continued employment in a situation where the public and clients could easily be misled clearly called into question his suitability for reinstatement, but under all the circumstances did not establish his lack of rehabilitation or present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [18]

Where a hearing judge's decision in one matter indicated that if the respondent filed a post-decision declaration in that matter, this would be taken into account in assessing discipline in a second pending matter, the examiner's objections on review to this aspect of the decision were rendered moot by the respondent's failure to file any such declaration, by the State Bar's apparent satisfaction with the result in the second matter, and by the review department's recommendation of disbarment in the first matter based on other grounds. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [6]

Where respondent, who had pleaded guilty to welfare fraud based on eligibility statements signed by him but filled out by his wife, attempted to establish in mitigation that he did not know of his wife's fraudulent conduct, it was respondent's burden to prove such mitigation, and review department gave great weight to hearing judge's contrary finding based on evaluation of credibility of respondent and his wife. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Review department did not need to reach respondent's challenges to hearing judge's evidentiary rulings in order to uphold hearing judge's ultimate findings, where all essential elements of charged violation were established by evidence to which respondent did not object, and any evidentiary errors did not result in denial of a fair hearing. Where factual findings based on challenged evidence were not necessary to decision, remand for new hearing was not necessary even if evidentiary errors underlay some non-essential findings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [1]

Where aggravating factor of bad faith found by hearing judge rested entirely on inadmissible hearsay evidence, review department declined to adopt such finding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [10]

Written report from respondent's probation monitor was inadmissible as hearsay where it did not establish that respondent had notice of anything unless probation monitor's recitals of what he told respondent were accepted as true. However, where such evidence was merely cumulative on question of notice, any reliance thereon by hearing judge was harmless error. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [14]

In matter where record lacked any evidence of impropriety of respondent or respondent's staff in dealing with clients, case law requiring all reasonable inferences to be resolved in respondent's favor supported attribution of no base motives to respondent. Thus, in deciding to dismiss charges, hearing judge properly saw case as one involving a dispute between two attorneys over clients, files, and the first attorney's fee, and did not improperly fail to consider totality of respondent's conduct. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [4]

In order to find an attorney culpable of a rule violation, the attorney's misconduct must be found to have been wilful. Where no such finding was expressly set forth in hearing judge's decision, review department deemed it to have been made based on hearing judge's conclusions. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [3]

Where, in weighing conflicting evidence, hearing judge gave greater credence to complaining witness than to respondent based on witness's better record keeping and trustworthiness and on lack of documents to support respondent's decisions, review department was required to accord great weight to hearing judge's credibility assessments, and would not disregard hearing judge's findings without sufficient reason. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [4]

Where two or more acts of professional misconduct are found, the discipline should be the most severe of the several applicable sanctions, not the sum of the applicable standards. Accordingly, it was not appropriate to recommend 18-month actual suspension based on conclusion that one-year actual suspension was appropriate for misappropriation and six-month actual suspension was appropriate for writing insufficiently funded checks. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [20]

Testimony disregarded by the hearing judge which provides a plausible explanation of the respondent's conduct may be considered on de novo review as evidence that the hearing judge's fact findings were not supported by clear and convincing evidence. On independent review of the record, both the Supreme Court and the review department resolve all reasonable doubts and inferences in favor of the respondent. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [4]

Where State Bar's chief witness exhibited poor memory, repeatedly testified inconsistently on key issues, admittedly had misrepresented facts to insurance company and State Bar, and admittedly was motivated by anger and economic stress at time of complaint to State Bar, hearing judge's findings based solely on selected portions of such witness's inconsistent testimony were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in light of the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [11]

No deference was due to hearing judge's reliance on letters from complaining witness to State Bar, since such letters were not testimony but documentary evidence. Findings based on selected portions of the witness's testimony, which were contradicted in other portions of such testimony, and on the witness's demonstrably untrustworthy hearsay statements in the letters to the State Bar, were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [12]

Assuming hearing judge disbelieved testimony of all witnesses as to facts exculpating respondent, this was not a basis to find culpability. Testimony not worthy of belief does not reveal the truth itself or warrant an inference that the truth is the converse of the rejected testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [13]

The State Bar must prove aggravating factors as well as culpability by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty. Accordingly, finding in aggravation of bad faith could not be predicated on selected portions of complaining witness's unreliable correspondence and inconsistent testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [20]

Where the evidence concerning an attorney's authority to apply client trust funds to attorney's fees consisted largely of conflicting testimony, the hearing judge's finding that the attorney did not have the authority to use the funds, coupled with the documentary evidence supporting culpability, constituted clear and convincing evidence supporting the judge's conclusion that the attorney improperly used and misappropriated client trust funds. Because the attorney's trust account balance repeatedly dropped below the necessary amount over a period of many months, and the attorney did not have an adequate explanation for the inadequate trust account balance, the attorney's misconduct, though not involving intentional dishonesty, constituted gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

A hearing judge's announcement of tentative findings on culpability from the bench may be necessary due to the bifurcated nature of State Bar Court proceedings coupled with the desire to avoid an extra day of hearing. (Rules 1250, 1260, Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [8]

Where the hearing judge found the complaining witness worthy of belief on the crucial factual issues, and that witness's testimony was bolstered by other evidence in the record, and respondent's contrary contention that he had been discharged by his clients was not corroborated by documents that ordinarily would have been prepared by an attorney upon discharge, the hearing judge's conclusion that respondent abandoned his clients without notifying them was supported by the record, even though the complaining witness's testimony was not uniformly reliable regarding exact details. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [9]

Where respondent's testimony was plausible and uncontradicted, it should have been regarded as proof of the fact testified to, especially where contrary evidence, if it existed, would be readily available, but was not offered. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [4]

Evidence of respondent's extensive pro bono activities and community involvement was entitled to greater weight as mitigating evidence than given to it in the hearing judge's decision, in which it was not mentioned. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [16]

Where hearing judge's decision was issued prior to relevant Supreme Court and review department opinions, and did not discuss whether gross negligence resulting in misappropriation should be subjected to same suggested minimum sanction of one year actual suspension as is applied for intentional misappropriation, but hearing judge's recommendation of one-year minimum was justified by facts in record making suspension appropriate for public protection, review department concluded that hearing judge's discipline recommendation was based on an analysis of the record in light of the objectives of discipline rather than on a rigid application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [8]

Where there was no evidence in the record that a reinstatement petitioner had taken and passed a professional responsibility examination, and neither the parties nor the hearing judge focused on the issue when evaluating petitioner's request for reinstatement, the matter was remanded to give the petitioner an opportunity to take and pass the examination if he had not already done so, and for findings on the issue. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [7]

Where neither respondent nor respondent's former client testified as to respondent's hourly fee, but respondent had sent one bill to client reflecting an hourly rate of $100, and respondent apparently acquiesced in hearing judge's finding that respondent's fee was $100 per hour, review department adopted such finding. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [1]

A finding that the amount respondent withdrew from a client trust account was not an earned fee, even though the client did not dispute respondent's testimony that it was an earned fee, was consistent with the evidence that respondent had not performed any legal services during the period of time for which he withdrew the funds; that what work was done by the attorney occurred after the trust funds had been withdrawn; that no value had been placed on the attorney's services during that time, and that the attorney had otherwise been inattentive to the client's case. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [3]

Where hearing judge accepted respondent's testimony that respondent's prolonged failure to file personal income tax returns resulted from problems with respondent's accountants, and examiner did not object to hearing judge's determination that there was no clear and convincing evidence of misconduct in connection with respondent's failure to file tax returns, review department adopted judge's findings and conclusion of non-culpability. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3]

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the hearing judge is in a particularly appropriate position to resolve it, and the Rules of Procedure require the review department to afford great weight to the hearing judge's findings in such matters, absent a good reason for reaching a different result. Where the hearing judge accepted respondent's client's testimony regarding the timing of a request for a refund of advanced costs, and explained why the client's testimony was given greater weight than respondent's contrary testimony, the review department adopted the hearing judge's findings and conclusions on that issue. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [7]

Where hearing referee's decision contained virtually no findings of fact and did not relate the conclusions of law either to the facts or to specific counts of the notice to show cause, review department was compelled to exercise its authority to make its own findings and conclusions based on independent review of the record, as authorized by rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [1]

Where hearing referee failed to determine whether respondent's default was properly entered, review department was required to do so, and for that purpose it took judicial notice of respondent's membership records address under Evidence Code section 459; evidence of membership records address is essential in a default case to assess the propriety of the default procedures. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [3]

A complete charge in the notice to show cause does not necessitate a lengthy pleading but does necessitate particularity to provide sufficient notice. As a result of specific charging the State Bar Court hearing judge is then provided with a proper framework within which to decide the issues raised. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [5]

The hearing department should have made clear its reasons for recommending a lower level of discipline than that called for by an applicable standard. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [19]

Given the deference to be accorded to the referee's findings on issues of fact and credibility, the party requesting review does not advance his or her cause very effectively by ignoring those findings, especially when no contention is advanced that the findings are not supported by the evidence. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [9]

Although hearing referee did not specifically find that client had expressly authorized attorney to endorse settlement check on client's behalf, review department interpreted decision to have resolved this issue on the basis of express rather than implied authorization. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [8]

Where hearing referee's findings and conclusions were incomplete and in some instances irreconcilable with each other, and referee failed to make critical determinations regarding credibility of respondent's testimony asserting his innocence, which testimony conflicted with determinations of civil courts in related litigation, review department could not make its own findings and conclusions based on documentary evidence, but found it necessary to remand for new trial, including reassessment of witness credibility and weight of documentary evidence in light of such assessment. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [1]

Where court in civil action related to disciplinary proceeding had concluded (applying preponderance of evidence standard) that there was substantial evidence that purported transfer of partnership interest to respondent was fraudulent, and it was undisputed that respondent had prepared partnership transfer document, referee's conclusion in disciplinary proceeding that there was no evidence that respondent actively participated in fraud in preparation of document could only be consistent with civil court finding if referee's conclusion was based on difference in applicable standard of proof, in that culpability in disciplinary cases must be proven by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [7]

Where the record includes extensive documentary as well as testimonial evidence, it is incumbent on the hearing department to weigh all of the evidence and identify for the litigants and further reviewing bodies the way in which credibility assessments led to the court's ultimate conclusions regarding respondent's culpability or innocence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [8]

Where hearing referee concluded that respondent did not act dishonestly, but failed to exercise due diligence in learning the true facts before filing a declaration in a civil court, this conclusion was inconsistent with the conclusion that respondent's declaration violated the rule against seeking to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [9]

If respondent's only breach, in relation to a charge of filing a false declaration, was a lack of care in ascertaining the truth of the facts presented in the declaration, then it was incumbent on the hearing referee to determine whether that lack of care or diligence was culpable within the charges and fell below the level of conduct required of members of the State Bar. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [10]

Although referee indicated that he had not reached a final decision despite preparation of draft findings, he appeared to have placed a greater burden of proof on the respondent than permitted by law. If a trier of fact imposes the wrong burden of proof, that itself can constitute reversible error. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [6]

It is the duty of the review department to conduct an independent review of the record. The review department is therefore able to make its own findings on issues that turn on documentary evidence or are undisputed. However, as to issues where conflicting testimony requires credibility determinations which were not made by the hearing department, such issues must be remanded for resolution. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [8]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern with assuring that the record in disciplinary proceedings reflects the correct evidence and finding of prior discipline or lack thereof. Accordingly, where only one of respondent's two prior disciplinary proceedings was made a part of the record and weighed by the hearing judge, it was necessary for the review department to remand the matter to the hearing judge to take evidence on the other prior discipline and consider its effect on the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [5]

Where attorney testified to involvement in pro bono activities, but hearing referee's findings did not specify extent of such involvement and evidence in record was sketchy, review department accorded such evidence little weight as mitigation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [8]

Where referee made no finding that respondent misled clients' doctor about status of clients' case, and evidence in record was unclear, review department declined to find such misrepresentation as an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [9]

The hearing department may properly give greater credence to a witness's testimony on some issues than on others. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [3]

In default matter, hearing referee erred in basing findings of culpability partly on facts deemed admitted by failure to respond to improper post-default discovery, and in finding culpability on charges broader than those set forth in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [12]

General rule is that where record is silent, all intendments and presumptions are indulged to support a lower court order; moreover, inadvertent misuse of terms in an order does not require reversal. Review department therefore presumed that referee considered and denied alternate ground for relief from default which was addressed in moving papers of both parties but not listed in referee's order denying motion. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

It is important for decisions of the State Bar Court to identify with specificity both the rule or statutory provision that underlies each charge and the manner in which the conduct allegedly violated that rule or statutory provision. This specificity is essential to the respondent's due process right to adequate notice, as well as to meaningful Supreme Court review of the recommendation of the State Bar Court. The notice to show cause must be sufficient to support the charges relied upon in the decision, because the findings of the State Bar Court must rest on the charges filed. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [6]

Increased specificity in articulating the charged misconduct in the notice to show cause will enable the respondent to prepare to meet the charges; provide the hearing judge with a proper framework for findings and conclusions; and make it easier for the review department and the Supreme Court to conduct meaningful de novo review of the hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [22]

The State Bar Court must make appropriate findings as to the manner in which an attorney's conduct violated charged rules and statutes. Conclusory language in an examiner's papers indicating that the factual findings supported a conclusion of culpability under a given statute or rule was inadequate and did not promote meaningful review. The conduct proved under each count which supports culpability of particular charged violations must be identified. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [3]

Hearing referee's failure to make express findings specifying aggravating factors was not interpreted as evidence that he ignored those factors that were obvious from the record. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [13]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

Probation conditions which were not set forth in language of standard conditions of probation utilized in disciplinary proceedings were inadequate. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [20]

Where the hearing department's findings are incomplete, the review department, because its review of the record is independent, is empowered to reweigh the evidence and make its own findings and conclusions flowing appropriately from the record. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [1]

Review department's review of reinstatement matter was made more difficult by hearing referee's failure to make findings on many of the specific issues in dispute, but review department's independent review of the record permitted it to make the necessary findings. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [8]

Upon its independent review of the record, the review department found that circumstances of reinstatement petitioner's omission of two lawsuits from reinstatement petition demonstrated that petitioner had not met his heavy burden of showing clearly and convincingly his rehabilitation and present moral fitness. While review department was reluctant to differ with referee who weighed the credibility of witnesses, including petitioner, and who concluded that petitioner met reinstatement standards, it was review department's duty to independently examine record, reweigh evidence and pass on its sufficiency. Doing so, review department concluded that hearing referee had not given sufficient care to analyzing petitioner's evidence about his non-disclosure of two lawsuits as it bore on the qualities needed for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [9]

Where entry of attorney's default for failure to appear at disciplinary hearing resulted in the admission of all allegations in the notice to show cause, but certain of those allegations were in conflict with evidence adduced at hearing, examiner properly requested reconsideration of hearing decision to delete findings contrary to evidence adduced at hearing, and hearing referee properly deleted such findings from the decision, based on their conflict with the evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

166 Independent Review of Record

A member in default has various opportunities to seek relief from default. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 5.83(A), (C), (D), and 5.85(E).) Because the effects of a default may deny a disposition of the case on the merits irrespective of the charges or potential mitigation, the review department closely scrutinizes orders denying relief from default and any doubts must be resolved in favor of the member. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [3]

Under rule 9.12 of California Rules of Court, and rule 5.152(C) of Rules of Procedure of State Bar, Review Department independently reviews record, but considering only specific factual findings raised by parties; factual errors not raised on review are waived by parties. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [1]

Review Department gives great deference to hearing judge's credibility findings. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2 a,b]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do

too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

In view of the review department's duty to independently review the record and make findings of fact and conclusions of law, any alleged denial of due process by the hearing judge's failure to clearly identify respondent's misconduct in the hearing judge's decision was remedied by the review department's issuance of an opinion that superseded the hearing judge's decision. Therefore, respondent's due process contention was rendered moot and was not addressed on the merits.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[2]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.[1 a-c]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Without, at least, a factual stipulation establishing aggravation and mitigation, neither the review department nor the Supreme Court have a complete record upon which to evaluate the appropriate discipline for the misconduct that occurred. Where the record consisted of the parties' partial stipulation to facts which did not address any aggravating or mitigating circumstances and two character letters proffered by respondent, the review department determined that the sparse record precluded it from fulfilling its duty to independently review the record and remanded the case for a trial de novo at which an adequate record was made. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 884. [2]

The rule requiring the review department to give great weight to the hearing judge's findings of fact that resolve issues pertaining to the credibility of the witnesses, which rule is premised on the hearing judge's ability to see the witnesses' demeanor and conduct during trial, is not applicable when a witness's testimony is present only through a written transcript of the witness's deposition. Thus, in such a case, the review department may independently evaluate the credibility of the witness's deposition testimony without giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [3]

Regardless of who seeks review, the review department has the authority and obligation to conduct de novo review and to increase the discipline, if appropriate. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [3]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

Even where State Bar did not contest on review hearing judge's finding that respondent had not violated Rules of Professional Conduct, review department's obligation was to review record independently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [2]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

Review department's review of record is independent, and it may draw its own conclusions from record whether or not a party has requested it to do so. Where hearing judge's conclusion that respondent had committed act of moral turpitude was difficult to reconcile with judge's conclusion as to appropriate discipline, it was appropriate for review department to give particular scrutiny to culpability conclusion as well as degree of discipline, even though respondent had not requested review of moral turpitude conclusion. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

Although review department's review of record is independent, it must give great weight to hearing judge's credibility determinations and it is reluctant to deviate from hearing judge's credibility-based factual findings in absence of specific showing of error. Where respondent argued that his version of events was more credible because State Bar's witnesses had reason to be less than truthful, this argument ignored respondent's own obvious similar motive, and was not grounds to depart from hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [2]

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

Even though primary focus of respondent's arguments on review was degree of discipline, review department's review of the record was independent and therefore, review department was required to determine whether hearing judge's findings of fact and conclusions of law were supported by record. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [1]

Where parties to a disciplinary proceeding reached a stipulation but agreed to preserve right to seek review as to one contested culpability issue, review department construed order approving stipulation and hearing judge's partial decision as together constituting a decision for the purpose of review. However, review department was obligated to review entire record independently and had authority to make findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation at variance with those of hearing department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Agreement between parties could not restrict review department's obligation of independent review. Accordingly, review department declined to limit its review to contested culpability decision, and was not bound by stipulated discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [1]

The State Bar must prove culpability by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent requested review department to make supplementary finding concerning culpability, but record clearly and convincingly established a fact inconsistent with such proposed finding, review department declined to adopt proposed finding. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [4]

Respondent must establish mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent requested review department to make supplementary findings pertaining to mitigating circumstances, but did not present clear and convincing evidence in support of such proposed findings, review department declined to adopt them. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [5]

Where parties agreed to highly unusual stipulation expressly preserving right to seek review, but did not contemplate that review department would recommend discipline more severe than that set forth in order approving stipulation, parties' expectation that review department would be bound by stipulated discipline was unjustified. However, it was appropriate to relieve parties from stipulation due to their mutual mistake. Accordingly, review department vacated order approving stipulation and remanded proceeding for new stipulation or trial. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [11]

Because the review department must review the record independently and is not bound by the hearing judge's findings or recommendation (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a)), the issue of appropriate discipline in a matter involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court and other misconduct did not turn on the one narrow issue argued on review by the parties regarding the appropriateness of a retroactive suspension. The review department therefore considered whether any form of suspension was adequate discipline given Supreme Court precedent generally ordering disbarment for rule 955 violations. Although the State Bar's declination to recommend disbarment was accorded considerable weight, it could not be reconciled with the precedent making disbarment the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1]

Due to the requirement that the review department undertake an independent review of the record, the review department cannot be bound by a stipulation by the parties attempting to limit the scope of review. Also, the review department has the authority to adopt findings, conclusions, and a decision or recommendation at variance with those of the hearing judge. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [3]

Orders for inactive enrollment under section 6007(b)(1), like those under section 6007(b)(3), are subject to independent review pursuant to rule 450 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [2]

In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause informed respondent who was subject to stayed suspension that he could be enrolled inactive upon finding of probation violation and recommendation of actual suspension therefor, it would have been appropriate for hearing judge to order such inactive enrollment with or without request from Office of Trial Counsel, and where hearing judge had not done so, review department made such order. Under statute providing that inactive enrollment for probation violation shall be credited against ensuing actual suspension, review department recommended that respondent's one-year actual suspension commence as of the date of his inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [7]

Where Office of Trials argued that recommended discipline was too low in light of existing findings, and also suggested supplemental findings, and on de novo review, review department agreed that discipline was insufficient in light of findings made by hearing judge, review department did not need to address issue of supplemental findings. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [1]

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423.

The review department will not consider disputed, extrinsic evidence on review. Where respondent's counsel referred at oral argument to respondent's current activity, the review department permitted the parties an opportunity to file a stipulation regarding this subject, but when no stipulation was reached, the review department declined to consider the parties' separate declarations setting forth their individual views of the facts. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [2]

The standard of review on the issue of exclusion of evidence depends on the basis for the hearing judge's action. If the proffered evidence was inadmissible as a matter of law, then the standard is independent de novo review. If not, the review department must consider whether the hearing judge had discretion to exclude the evidence, and if so, whether that discretion was properly exercised. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [8]

The law of the case doctrine does not preclude the current review department from reviewing the former review department's decision de novo. If review is sought in a proceeding which had been previously decided by the former review department, the entire matter is before the review department for independent de novo review, and it may act on an issue regardless of whether the parties have raised it. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Accordingly, review department could reopen a charge dismissed by the former review department. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [1]

Former review department's alleged lack of quorum was moot where all issues in proceeding were before current review department for independent de novo review. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [3]

Where two unrelated matters were consolidated in the hearing department, and a party requested review in order to challenge the result in one of the matters, the entire matter was placed before the review department and reviewed by it even though in the other matter neither party challenged the findings and conclusions of the hearing judge. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [1]

The hearing judge's determinations of testimonial credibility must receive great weight because the hearing judge observed the witnesses' demeanor. However, the review department, examining the record independently, must reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. Where testimonial credibility was not an issue and the determination to be made was whether the quality and quantity of a party's evidence met the applicable burden of proof, the issue was a question of law. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [6]

In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234.

Review by review department is not the same as civil or criminal appeal. Even where neither party addressed issue of culpability on review, review department was not limited by issues raised by parties, and was required to analyze record independently, to determine whether clear and convincing evidence supported hearing judge's findings and conclusions regarding culpability, and to determine appropriate degree of discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

Where review is sought, the review department must independently review the entire record. Accordingly, the review department reviewed propriety of hearing judge's dismissal of one count even though examiner did not request such review. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [1]

Where, in weighing conflicting evidence, hearing judge gave greater credence to complaining witness than to respondent based on witness's better record keeping and trustworthiness and on lack of documents to support respondent's decisions, review department was required to accord great weight to hearing judge's credibility assessments, and would not disregard hearing judge's findings without sufficient reason. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [4]

The standard of review applied by the Supreme Court and the review department is independent review of the record, giving deference to the credibility determinations of the hearing judge. Unlike in the Supreme Court, in the review department the respondent does not have the burden of demonstrating that the hearing decision is erroneous. The review department makes its own independent determination whether there is clear and convincing evidence to support culpability, giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings resolving issues pertaining to testimony, but also taking into account the hearing judge's evaluation of the believed witness's general credibility. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [3]

Testimony disregarded by the hearing judge which provides a plausible explanation of the respondent's conduct may be considered on de novo review as evidence that the hearing judge's fact findings were not supported by clear and convincing evidence. On independent review of the record, both the Supreme Court and the review department resolve all reasonable doubts and inferences in favor of the respondent. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [4]

No deference was due to hearing judge's reliance on letters from complaining witness to State Bar, since such letters were not testimony but documentary evidence. Findings based on selected portions of the witness's testimony, which were contradicted in other portions of such testimony, and on the witness's demonstrably untrustworthy hearsay statements in the letters to the State Bar, were not supported by clear and convincing evidence in the record as a whole. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [12]

Given conflicting documentary evidence and unreliable and inconsistent testimony by complaining witness, review department may conclude on independent review, without attempting to resolve such evidentiary conflicts, that State Bar did not meet its burden to show culpability by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [16]

On review of a facial challenge to the legal sufficiency of charges in the notice to show cause, the sole issue presented is whether the facts alleged in the notice, if proven, would constitute a disciplinable offense. For the purpose of such review, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice as true, but draws independent conclusions regarding the legal import of those facts. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [1]

Where respondent failed to brief a contention raised on review, addressing it for the first time at oral argument, the review department was reluctant to consider it. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [9]

Even where the examiner does not seek review of the dismissal of a count of the notice to show cause, the review department is obligated to conduct a de novo review of the hearing judge's disposition of that count, and may reach a different conclusion based on the record. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [2]

A hearing judge's interpretation of a written exhibit is not a determination on the credibility of a witness. The review department is free to make its own findings on issues that turn on documentary evidence, and to disagree with the hearing judge's resolution of such issues. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

Factual findings made by a hearing judge and resolving issues concerning testimony deserve great weight, but may be supplemented by the review department's own findings interpreting documentary evidence. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [10]

Even where the record at the hearing level consists of stipulated facts and conclusions, the review department's review is nevertheless independent, and it may adopt findings, conclusions, and a disciplinary recommendation different from those of the hearing judge. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

The review department's inquiry into a matter does not end when it determines that the arguments of the party seeking review are unpersuasive. In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the record. In so doing, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [3]

Credibility findings by the finder of fact are to be accorded great weight by the review department and it should be reluctant to deviate from them. Nonetheless, the findings must be supported by the record. Where the review department found insufficient evidence to support challenged findings, it declined to adopt them. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [9]

Abuse of discretion is the standard generally applied to review of rulings on motions at the hearing level, but has never been the standard of review applied by the Supreme Court to findings of culpability. The review department must independently review the record as a whole. Great weight is given to credibility determinations based on testimony at the hearing, but none of the findings at the hearing level is binding upon the reviewing court. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [2]

Where respondent's client denied having had a certain conversation with respondent, and the hearing judge credited the client on that point, but the record as a whole showed that respondent lacked a motive to lie in testifying about the conversation, the evidence suggested that the client might have forgotten the conversation, and the client exaggerated in other testimony and was very bitter toward respondent, the review department, while not rejecting the credence given to the client's testimony by the hearing judge, did find that the client's testimony failed to constitute clear and convincing evidence of intentional misrepresentation by respondent. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [4]

Where the hearing judge accepted as true the testimony of two State Bar witnesses, but such testimony did not contradict respondent's own plausible version of events, the review department found that State Bar had failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had testified falsely. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [5]

The review department gives great weight to credibility determinations by hearing judges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [3]

Where respondent's client's testimony contradicted respondent's testimony, and the hearing judge found the client's testimony to be more credible on the disputed point, but other circumstances revealed by the record nonetheless limited the effect of the client's testimony, the review department held that the record did not establish

Belated restitution is not an appropriate basis for a finding in mitigation, and review department declined to adopt such finding even though not challenged by the parties. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [5]

Where the testimony of the State Bar's witnesses was in conflict with that of respondent, and the referee resolved those conflicts against respondent, respondent could not show error in the findings merely by repeating his own version of the facts, and respondent's generalized challenge to the complainant's credibility was not sufficient to persuade the review department to reject the referee's findings. In the absence of a strong showing that the referee was mistaken, the review department is required to defer to the referee's determinations as to credibility, and it is reluctant to deviate from the referee's credibility-based findings in the absence of a specific showing that they were in error. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [1]

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the hearing judge is in a particularly appropriate position to resolve it, and the Rules of Procedure require the review department to afford great weight to the hearing judge's findings in such matters, absent a good reason for reaching a different result. Where the hearing judge accepted respondent's client's testimony regarding the timing of a request for a refund of advanced costs, and explained why the client's testimony was given greater weight than respondent's contrary testimony, the review department adopted the hearing judge's findings and conclusions on that issue. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [7]

Pursuant to Transitional Rules of Procedure 453(a), review department's independent fact finding authority permits it to delete erroneous finding from hearing department's decision. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [2]

Where hearing referee's decision contained virtually no findings of fact and did not relate the conclusions of law either to the facts or to specific counts of the notice to show cause, review department was compelled to exercise its authority to make its own findings and conclusions based on independent review of the record, as authorized by rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [1]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, the arresting officer's testimony describing a victim's retelling of the incident was hearsay, but was properly admitted because respondent waived hearsay objection by failing to appear at the hearing. The review department independently reviewed the hearsay evidence, found sufficient trustworthiness, and concluded it was properly relied on by the referee. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [5]

The review department is obligated to afford great weight to the assessments of credibility made by the hearing referee, for the referee is in the best position to see witnesses and judge, by their demeanor and address, the truthfulness of each. Respondent's repeating his version of the events does not demonstrate that the referee's findings were unfounded. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [6]

The review department may appropriately exercise its independent review authority to reach an issue which is otherwise moot as a result of the hearing judge's disposition of the matter below, where the issue comes before the State Bar Court on a regular basis or is an issue of public importance likely to recur. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [3]

Where neither party sought review of the dismissal of misrepresentation charges, and the testimony at the hearing was in conflict on the matter, then in light of the weight accorded to credibility findings of the trier of fact and in view of the record as a whole, the review department adopted the hearing department's findings regarding the misrepresentation charge. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [9]

Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, requires review department, in all cases brought before it, to independently review record. Review department accords great weight to findings of fact by hearing department resolving testimonial issues. However, it may make findings, conclusions and recommendations differing from those of the hearing department. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

Issues raised or addressed by parties on review do not limit scope of issues to be resolved by review department. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

In analyzing disputed facts in a matter on review, the review department defers to the hearing department's explicit credibility findings premised on personal observation of the demeanor of the witnesses. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [1]

Even though party requesting review did not challenge certain of hearing department's conclusions as to culpability, review department reviewed these determinations as part of its independent de novo review of the record. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [3]

The review department's review of hearing decisions is independent; it may make findings of fact or adopt conclusions at variance with those of the hearing department. Nevertheless, the review department accords great weight to the hearing department's findings resolving issues pertaining to testimony. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [2]

Review department gave deference to hearing referee's findings and conclusions regarding reinstatement petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, since they rested largely on referee's superior position to evaluate testimony of witnesses. However, petitioner's two post-disbarment criminal convictions, and failure to establish that restitution had been made in disciplinary proceeding pending at time of disbarment, raised serious questions regarding rehabilitation. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [8]

In all cases brought before it, the review department must independently review the trial record just as the Supreme Court does upon review of the review department recommendation. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In doing so, the review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which resolve testimonial issues. However, the review department also has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. Moreover, the issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department; despite a party's initial failure to request review on one count which was addressed in the party's brief, the review department would address the propriety of the findings on that count. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [1]

Where hearing referee found respondent's testimony credible and candid, and client's testimony confusing and inconsistent, argument that review department should disbelieve attorney and believe client was unavailing in light of deference review department must give to referee's findings based on credibility of witnesses. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [7]

Although party requesting review raised only one issue regarding a legal conclusion drawn by the hearing judge, review department had duty to conduct independent, de novo review of record. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) Review department therefore undertook to determine whether remainder of hearing judge's findings and conclusions were supported by record, and whether recommended discipline was appropriate. In so doing, review department held that hearing judge erred in rejecting culpability on one charge. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [1]

Rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure provides that in all cases brought before it, the review department, like the Supreme Court, must independently review the record. The review department accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing judge which resolve issues pertaining to testimony, but the review department may make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing judge. The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of the issues to be resolved by the review department. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [2]

Where hearing referee's findings and conclusions were incomplete and in some instances irreconcilable with each other, and referee failed to make critical determinations regarding credibility of respondent's testimony asserting his innocence, which testimony conflicted with determinations of civil courts in related litigation, review department could not make its own findings and conclusions based on documentary evidence, but found it necessary to remand for new trial, including reassessment of witness credibility and weight of documentary evidence in light of such assessment. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [1]

On its independent review of the record, the review department may reweigh all evidence and adopt findings and a recommendation of discipline at odds with the referee on all issues. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [4]

The Rules of Procedure of the State Bar require that the review department give great weight to the hearing department's findings of fact resolving issues pertaining to testimony. This rule rests on the sound policy that when evidence turns on the assessment of credibility, the evaluation of such evidence should be made by a judicial officer who sees and hears the witnesses and can translate the credibility accorded witnesses into the weight to be given their testimony as it relates to other evidence in the case. Before disregarding any such credibility assessments, the review department must have a very good reason for doing so. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [6]

It is the duty of the review department to conduct an independent review of the record. The review department is therefore able to make its own findings on issues that turn on documentary evidence or are undisputed. However, as to issues where conflicting testimony requires credibility determinations which were not made by the hearing department, such issues must be remanded for resolution. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [8]

Although the review department conducts independent review, it accords great weight to factual findings of the hearing department which turn on evaluations of credibility. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [1]

Because the hearing department is in the best position to view witnesses and evaluate their truthfulness, the review department is reluctant to deviate from the hearing department's credibility findings. Reevaluation of witness credibility is limited by the nature of the review process, due to the effect of witness demeanor on credibility findings. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [2]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence. The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

The doctrine of law of the case did not preclude the full-time review department from reconsidering a decision of the former, volunteer review department. Due to the non-finality of recommendations of the former State Bar Court review department, law of the case did not apply to them. Upon its independent de novo review, review department was not bound to follow earlier factual determinations made prior to remand. Review department was also free to reconsider prior review department's legal interpretation of rule of professional conduct, given flexibility of law of the case doctrine in California appellate courts. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [3]

In evaluating the record on review, the review department is bound to give great deference to the referee's evaluation of the credibility of the witnesses. There is a strong presumption in favor of the referee's findings of fact regarding such credibility. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [4]

The review department must independently review all matters coming before it, and may adopt findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations at variance to those of hearing department. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [1]

Review department conducts de novo review of hearing department decisions, similar to that conducted by Supreme Court, based on the record established in the hearing department. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [1]

Issues must be addressed on de novo review despite lack of appropriate briefing. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [3]

The review department gives great weight to the findings of the hearing judge, who saw and heard the witnesses and resolved matters of testimonial credibility. Nevertheless, under rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, the hearing judge's decision serves as a recommendation to the review department, which undertakes an independent review and may make findings of fact or draw conclusions of law at variance with those of the judge. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

In order to reach merits on review of decision recommending discipline following default hearing, review department first had to be satisfied with the propriety of the entry of the respondent's default and the order denying respondent's motion for relief from default. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

General rule is that where record is silent, all intendments and presumptions are indulged to support a lower court order; moreover, inadvertent misuse of terms in an order does not require reversal. Review department therefore presumed that referee considered and denied alternate ground for relief from default which was addressed in moving papers of both parties but not listed in referee's order denying motion. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

Where record showed that respondent cured defects in otherwise timely answer within six days of mailing of notice to do so by clerk's office, review department's duty of independent record review precluded it from ignoring those facts in determining just disposition of motion for relief from default, despite weakness of respondent's moving papers. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

The review department has an obligation to conduct an independent review of the entire record and make its own determinations of fact and conclusions of law; its findings are not limited to issues raised by the parties, and it has the power to correct errors in the hearing department's decision even when not requested to do so by the parties. (Rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [1]

Rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar requires the review department to independently review the record as to all matters brought before it. The review department accords great weight to findings of fact by the hearing department resolving testimonial issues. However, the review department has the authority to adopt findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those of the hearing department. Moreover, the scope of review is not limited to the issues raised by the parties. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [3]

In reviewing hearing department's findings, conclusions, and recommendation, review department undertakes an independent examination of the record, but gives great deference to the referee's findings of fact and substantial weight to the referee's recommendation as to discipline. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [2]

On review, the burden remains on the State Bar to prove its case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Where the hearing department's findings are incomplete, the review department, because its review of the record is independent, is empowered to reweigh the evidence and make its own findings and conclusions flowing appropriately from the record. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [1]

Ambiguity in the record, created when hearing referee took judicial notice of respondent's prior record of discipline but failed to admit it into evidence, was removed when review department admitted in evidence the prior record of discipline that was previously offered at trial and judicially noticed. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [6]

Under rule 453(a) of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the review department independently reviews the record; that is, the review department treats the findings of the hearing referee as recommendations to it and may make findings or draw conclusions at variance with those of the referee. This type of review requires the review department to examine the record independently and reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. As to any matter resolving issues concerning testimony, the review department gives great weight to the hearing referee who saw and heard the witness. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [2]

The review department must independently review the record in all cases brought before the court. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453.) Since the review department does not have the opportunity to observe the demeanor of witnesses, it accords great weight to findings of fact made by the hearing department which involve resolving testimony and issues relating to testimony. However, the review department has the authority to make findings, conclusions and recommendations that differ from those made by the hearing department. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

The issues raised or addressed by the parties on review do not limit the scope of issues in a case that can be considered and resolved by the review department. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

Although the examiner sought review on the issue of degree of discipline, once the review department had jurisdiction over the proceeding, all issues were subject to its independent review. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) The review department's review of the record is an independent one and not limited by the examiner's position. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [1]

It is the duty of any accused member of the bar to present at the evidentiary hearing in the disciplinary proceeding all evidence favorable to him or her. The respondent cannot necessarily rely on the State Bar examiner's position conceding an issue in the case. The review department's review of the record is independent and not limited by the examiner's position, and the Supreme Court, in turn, is not limited by the recommendation of the review department or that of the hearing department in assessing the record. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [4]

As to matters of testimonial credibility, the review department properly gives great weight to the hearing referee who saw and heard the witnesses and who resolved those issues. The review department should ordinarily be reluctant to deviate from the factual findings of the referee resolving testimonial matters. (Rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [4]

Under rule 453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review by the review department is not an appeal from the hearing panel decision. The hearing panel's findings serve as a recommendation to the review department, which may make findings or draw conclusions at variance with those of the hearing referee. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [5]

The independent review conducted by the review department requires that it independently examine the record, and reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [6]

Review department's review of reinstatement matter was made more difficult by hearing referee's failure to make findings on many of the specific issues in dispute, but review department's independent review of the record permitted it to make the necessary findings. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [8]

Upon its independent review of the record, the review department found that circumstances of reinstatement petitioner's omission of two lawsuits from reinstatement petition demonstrated that petitioner had not met his heavy burden of showing clearly and convincingly his rehabilitation and present moral fitness. While review department was reluctant to differ with referee who weighed the credibility of witnesses, including petitioner, and who concluded that petitioner met reinstatement standards, it was review department's duty to independently examine record, reweigh evidence and pass on its sufficiency. Doing so, review department concluded that hearing referee had not given sufficient care to analyzing petitioner's evidence about his non-disclosure of two lawsuits as it bore on the qualities needed for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [9]

Government Code section 68081 does not apply to the review department of the State Bar Court, which has a different standard of review than that of a court of appeal. However, opportunities are afforded to the parties under State Bar Court procedure which parallel those provided by Government Code section 68081. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [6]

Proceedings before the review department are governed by rule 453 of the [Transitional] Rules of Procedure, which provides that the review department shall independently review the record and may adopt findings, conclusions and a decision or recommendation at variance with the hearing department and may take action as to an issue whether or not that issue was raised in the request for review or briefs of any party. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [7]

Pursuant to rule 453 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the review department independently reviews the record and may adopt findings, conclusions and a decision or recommendation at variance with the hearing department. Its decisions are in turn subject to review by the Supreme Court which likewise conducts independent review of the record below and is not bound by the factual findings of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

167 Abuse of Discretion

Where respondent filed opposition to petition for disbarment after default, and sought review of hearing judge's order granting petition, and Review Department remanded to permit hearing judge to exercise discretion regarding what relief was appropriate, hearing judge did not abuse discretion on remand by declining to set aside default except for limited purpose of conducting hearing on culpability, aggravation, and level of discipline, in which respondent was not permitted to participate. Hearing judge also properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted. By allowing his default to be entered, respondent waived right to participate in proceedings, to make evidentiary objections, and to present evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [4 a-c]

Hearing judge did not abuse discretion in denying respondent's motion to abate, filed one month before disciplinary trial, in order to protect public, where respondent's grounds for seeking abatement were not persuasive. Pending civil proceeding involving same client as disciplinary matter dealt with recovery of dam0ages based on breach of contract and fraud, while issue in discipline matter was whether respondent performed with competence. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

Trial judge did not prejudicially err in exercising discretion to excuse witness where respondent failed to either request that the witness be recalled or to make an offer of proof as to the testimony respondent expected to elicit from the witness. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [1]

Where respondent neither identified an exhibit for the record nor made an offer of proof demonstrating what the exhibit would have established, respondent failed to perfect his right to claim on appeal the that hearing judge improperly excluded the exhibit from evidence. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [2]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision not to terminate an attorney from the Alternative Discipline Program, the review department's examination of the issue is limited to deciding whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abused his discretion. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [1]

To determine if an abuse of discretion occurred, the review department is required to conclude that the judge contravened the uncontradicted evidence. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [2]

Where a hearing judge failed to terminate respondent from participating in the Alternative Discipline Program despite uncontroverted and overwhelming evidence demonstrating the respondent's repeated failure to comply with court orders and to cooperate in seven pending investigations involving serious misconduct, the hearing judge abused his discretion. In the Matter of Geyer (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 74 [3]

The scope of interlocutory review is limited to deciding whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abused his or her discretion. Under this standard, review is not undertaken with the intention of substituting the view of the review department for that of the hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting the trial court's resolution of credibility and conflicting substantial evidence, and its choice of possible reasonable inferences. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [1]

A judge has broad discretion to impose discovery sanctions and is subject to reversal only for arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical action. The sanctions the court may impose are such as are suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the objects of the discovery he seeks but the court may not impose sanctions which are designed not to accomplish the objects of the discovery but to impose punishment. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [2]

Where respondent elected not to attend a properly–noticed deposition which resulted in a court order to compel his deposition, where respondent was given the opportunity to comply with that order but willfully failed to do so, and where the hearing judge barred respondent from introducing any documentary or testimonial evidence, except for his own testimony, the sanction imposed was wholly inappropriate to respondent's disobedience, and the hearing judge abused her discretion by imposing an insufficient sanction that failed to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. This discovery sanction was ineffective to induce respondent to provide the discovery sought. Moreover, this lesser sanction hindered the State Bar's ability to proceed at trial and would allow respondent to testify without affording the State Bar the opportunity to impeach his testimony or credibility or even to adequately prepare for trial, opening the trial to surprise and delay. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [4 a–d]

Discovery sanctions should be appropriate to the dereliction and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. A court will generally impose lesser sanctions regarding a discovery request unless the lesser sanctions will not bring about the compliance of the offending party. A court's exercise of discretion should not reward the disobedient party, let alone at the expense of the fundamental reasons supporting the discovery process. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19 [5 a–c]

Hearing judge did not abuse her discretion in ordering the dismissal of proceeding without prejudice in furtherance of justice on her own motion under Rule of Procedure of State Bar 262 as an appropriate remedy for the deprivation of the opportunities (1) for respondent to meet and attempt to resolve the matter with the State Bar prosecuting attorney 20 days before any disciplinary charges were filed and (2) for respondent to request an early neutral evaluation conference with a State Bar Court judge before disciplinary charges were filed because the deprivation of the opportunities occurred when, as a consequence of respondent's prior incorrect change of address submission to the State Bar, respondent did not receive State Bar's letter notice of intent to file notice of disciplinary charges informing him of these pre-filing opportunities. Once the hearing judge contemplated dismissal under rule 262 and once the uncontroverted evidence emerged as to how respondent's change of address was mistakenly composed on the change of address form and mistakenly approved by respondent (essentially a typographical error), the hearing judge was justified in considering the mistake to come within the ambit of rule 262 and did not abuse her discretion in ordering dismissal. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [3 a-e]

The hearing judge did not abuse his discretion or make an error of law in denying respondent's motion to modify his probation on the ground that respondent was dilatory in bringing the motion where respondent was aware or should have been aware of both the factual and legal need to modify the probation long before the motion was filed. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [1]

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [2]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in determining that State Bar's evidence establishing that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of petitioner's former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers did not prevent petitioner from showing his rehabilitation because hearing judge based that determination on his findings that petitioner did not know (1) of the client's claim or (2) of Client Security Fund's actions until petitioner's deposition was taken in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding and because those two findings are supported by substantial evidence consisting of petitioner's own testimony, which was supported with a number of letters from the client's file demonstrating that medical providers had been paid. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [4]

The sole issue raised is whether the requirement set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.5, subdivision (c), that an attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending reimburse the Client Security Fund (CSF) for all sums paid out as a result of the former attorney's misconduct together with interest and costs, is a condition precedent to the former attorney's filing of a petition for reinstatement. The issue is not whether, at the time he filed his petition, petitioner was eligible for reinstatement, but rather whether he had a right to file his petition for reinstatement. Section 6140.5, subdivision (c) mandates that the amount paid out by CSF because of the dishonest conduct of a lawyer, plus applicable interest and costs, shall be paid as a condition of reinstatement of membership. There is no language in that section that precludes or purports to preclude the filing of a petition for reinstatement without including a showing of repayment to the CSF. And the review department was unaware of any law, rule of court, or rule of procedure that required an affirmative showing that reimbursement has been made to CSF before or at the time of filing a petition for reinstatement. Moreover, there was no dispute that reinstatement occurs only when the Supreme Court so directs after State Bar Court proceedings, not when a petition for reinstatement is filed. Accordingly, the State Bar failed to establish either an abuse of discretion or error of law. In the Matter of Jaurequi (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.56. [1 a-c]

Even though plenary review is sought, the issue of whether a hearing judge erred in setting aside a default as to the limited issue of the degree of discipline is reviewed under the limited scope of review customarily used for procedural questions, testing whether the hearing judge committed legal error or abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831. [1]

On review of a discovery order on appeal of a hearing judge's decision that fully disposes of an entire proceeding, not only must an abuse of discretion be shown, but also the erroneous ruling must be shown to have been so prejudicial that it constituted a miscarriage of justice. No abuse of discretion was found where respondent presented no competent evidence that the place of the depositions he sought to compel was within the 150-mile range; and no showing of a miscarriage of justice was made where the apparent reason for seeking the depositions was to show that the complaining clients had repudiated their State Bar complaint, a fact not relevant to the disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [3]

A hearing judge's determination to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with prejudice over the State Bar's objection that the dismissals should be without prejudice is reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [1]

Even though equitable estoppel does not control a hearing judge's determination whether to dismiss specified charges in the furtherance of justice with or without prejudice, the considerations in making such a determination are not dissimilar. Thus, in determining that the dismissals should be with prejudice in the present case, the hearing judge properly considered the positions of the parties and its effect on each side. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [2]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

Petitioner failed to establish that the hearing judge abused his discretion in denying petitioner's post-decision motion to reopen the record to present additional evidence because petitioner did not establish that the evidence he sought to proffer was newly discovered or that it could not have been presented at trial with the exercise of reasonable diligence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [6]

The standard of review in a proceeding for relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is abuse of discretion or error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 300(b), 639.) The review department determines abuse of discretion by using the equivalent of the substantial evidence test. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [1]

The State Bar Court determines whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension has met the requirements of standard 1.4(c)(ii) without reevaluating the petitioner's prior discipline, whether perceived as lenient or harsh. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [2]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

A party may not recall a witness who has been excused from giving further testimony without leave of court, which may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. Hearing judge did not deny due process to respondent by denying respondent's motion to recall State Bar witness who had been excused from giving further testimony. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [6]

Where State Bar witness had not been excused from giving further testimony, hearing judge erred in not permitting respondent to recall such witness for questioning about document respondent did not possess at time witness first testified. However, where such additional testimony was relevant only to refute factual contention later abandoned by State Bar, hearing judge's error did not result in prejudice to respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [7]

Review Department had jurisdiction under rule 113 of Transitional Rules of Procedure to review portion of order by hearing judge which, in dismissing disciplinary proceeding pursuant to agreement in lieu of discipline, placed conditions on reopening of underlying disciplinary matter. Scope of such review was to determine whether hearing judge abused discretion in including condition in agreement in lieu of discipline which had not been agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [1]

An agreement in lieu of discipline is an agreement between the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the respondent to substitute terms and conditions in place of the disciplinary process, at least provisionally. Hearing judges have authority to dismiss or not dismiss disciplinary proceedings in light of such agreements, and may include conditions in dismissal order which are not contained in agreement if they are accepted by both parties, but judges do not have authority to modify such agreements without parties' consent or to append binding conditions or duties not agreed to by parties. In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227. [2]

State Bar Court is reluctant to interfere with reasonable exercise of prosecutorial discretion. When presented with a complaint, State Bar can legitimately charge attorney based on facts as they appear from investigation. Where large number of counts filed against respondent resulted primarily from size and volume of respondent's practice and his chronic problem with handling medical liens, fact that State Bar could not establish factual or legal basis for some counts and charges was not sufficient to establish that charges were brought without reasonable basis or that respondent was victim of prosecutorial misconduct. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [13]

Where respondent was repeatedly warned by hearing judge concerning consequences of continued inaction regarding seeking relief from default, but respondent failed to seek such relief for over a year after his first default was entered and more than six months after he had actual notice of the proceedings, and where respondent made no sufficient showing justifying such extraordinary delay, hearing judge was well within her discretion in denying relief from default, and review department denied respondent's request for review of such ruling. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [3]

Where respondent had missed a court appearance on behalf of a client shortly after stipulating to discipline based in part on similar past conduct; had brought an illegal drug to court, attempted to visit an incarcerated client with the drug in his possession, and thrown the drug on the floor after refusing to be searched; had been stopped on another occasion with the drug in his car; and had been observed to be under the influence of a controlled substance while with a client, there was a clear likelihood of harm to both respondent's clients and the public if respondent were allowed to practice law pending adjudication of criminal and State Bar proceedings, and hearing judge erred in focusing exclusively on threat of harm to clients and finding insufficient evidence thereof to justify inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [5]

Where there was uncontroverted evidence of repeated client harm and other violations of law by respondent, and no evidence of recognition by respondent of substance abuse problem, hearing judge erred in denying involuntary inactive enrollment of respondent without considering substantial harm which public was likely to suffer from such denial. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [8]

The standard for review of rulings on chargeable costs is abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [3]

No decision denying specialist certification is permissible unless the applicant for certification receives some meaningful opportunity to be heard in his or her own defense. Where an attorney in good standing applied for certification as a legal specialist 14 years after committing misconduct, 11 years after the resulting suspension order, and 8 years after the completion of the suspension, the Board of Legal Specialization was required to allow the attorney an opportunity to be heard on the attorney's current qualifications. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [8]

Where the Board of Legal Specialization summarily denied an application for legal specialist certification solely on the basis of applicant's prior serious discipline, without considering any evidence or permitting a hearing on applicant's recent conduct and present qualifications, the Board violated its own rules and applicant's common law right to fair procedure. The Board's indication that it might reconsider the denial at a later date, without any enumerated criteria as to when it would do so, underscored the arbitrariness of its position. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [10]

Within due process limits, the Board of Legal Specialization has broad discretion in certifying specialists. It may consider any competent evidence rebutting an applicant's showing and may weigh and balance evidence in an appropriate manner. An applicant's prior discipline for very serious misconduct is clearly evidence that should be considered in this process. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [12]

A member of the State Bar is required by statute to be enrolled inactive upon the assertion of a claim of insanity or mental incompetence made in any pending proceeding, alleging inability to understand the proceeding's nature or to assist counsel. Where the member intentionally asserts such a claim, no further showing is required and the State Bar Court has no discretion not to enroll the member inactive. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [3]

An abatement order is a procedural matter, for which the standard of review is one of abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [5]

Where it was unclear what evidence hearing judge considered in deciding to abate disciplinary proceeding due to respondent's claimed inability to assist counsel, and where respondent's medical evidence lacked important elements and was conclusory, and respondent's counsel's declaration was undermined by contrast with earlier declaration regarding respondent's superior performance of paralegal tasks, review department concluded that hearing judge failed to exercise her discretion properly in abating proceeding without holding hearing to allow presentation and resolution of conflicting evidence. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [11]

The standard of review on the issue of exclusion of evidence depends on the basis for the hearing judge's action. If the proffered evidence was inadmissible as a matter of law, then the standard is independent de novo review. If not, the review department must consider whether the hearing judge had discretion to exclude the evidence, and if so, whether that discretion was properly exercised. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [8]

Where hearing judge determined that proffered evidence of additional uncharged misconduct was of marginal relevance; that it could be fully examined and made the basis of separate discipline, if appropriate, in a separate proceeding, and that its admission would involve a delay to permit respondent time to address the issues it raised, the exclusion of the evidence was not an abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [11]

It was not an abuse of discretion for the hearing judge to conclude that partial relief from costs was justified, even in the absence of evidence of bad faith on the part of counsel for the State Bar, based on the State Bar's lack of responsiveness to respondent's extraordinary efforts to provide information and good faith offers to settle the matter prior to the filing of formal charges. Elimination of all costs assessed for the stage after filing formal charges, and of half of the State Bar's costs for the pre-filing stage, was within the hearing judge's discretion. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [3]

The appropriate standard of review for an order granting relief from costs is abuse of discretion, which is the standard of review for orders taxing costs in civil cases and is also the standard of review generally applied to procedural motions in the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [5]

Where the standard of review is abuse of discretion, it is inappropriate for the review department to reconsider the evidence below as if it were deciding the matter de novo. The exercise of discretion will not be disturbed unless it is abused, and while an appellate court may have ruled differently on the motion, it cannot substitute its own view as to the proper decision. To find an abuse of discretion, it must clearly appear that the result was a manifest miscarriage of justice. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [6]

A hearing judge's denial of respondent's request to remove and copy exhibits already admitted into evidence, due to concern for the integrity of the record, was not improper, and did not show bias. Moreover, by failing to seek relief before the hearing judge after being denied access to the exhibits by the State Bar Court clerk's office, respondent waived his right to raise the issue before the review department. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [5]

Abuse of discretion is the standard generally applied to review of rulings on motions at the hearing level, but has never been the standard of review applied by the Supreme Court to findings of culpability. The review department must independently review the record as a whole. Great weight is given to credibility determinations based on testimony at the hearing, but none of the findings at the hearing level is binding upon the reviewing court. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [2]

The length of pendency of matters before the State Bar Court is a matter of great concern and continuances have long been disfavored by the court. A judge's denial of a motion for a continuance to prepare for the mitigation portion of a hearing was not an abuse of discretion where respondent had notice one month before trial of how the evidence would be presented, and respondent failed to take any steps to contact potential character witnesses. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [2]

Even if the procedure for a motion for judgment at the close of the moving party's case, as set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 631.8, does apply in State Bar proceedings, it was not error for the hearing referee to take respondent's motion under submission and rule on it after respondent had presented the defense case, and the motion was impliedly ruled on when the referee made initial rulings as to culpability. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [20]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence.

The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the hearing judge acted within his discretion in excluding a second affidavit from a character witness. Like a character reference letter in a disciplinary proceeding, the character reference, even though in affidavit rather than letter form, was excludable as hearsay absent a stipulation to the contrary. Further, the second affidavit was cumulative, and the hearing judge carefully considered the more detailed first affidavit, which he admitted into evidence as part of the reinstatement application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

Trial judge has discretion to refuse to admit evidence which is cumulative; hearing judge who carefully considered detailed affidavit from witness did not err in excluding second, less detailed affidavit from same witness. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [8]

In reviewing an order on a motion to set aside default, the standard of review is abuse of discretion. However, because law strongly favors resolution of matters on the merits, doubts are to be resolved in favor of the defaulted party, and orders denying relief are scrutinized more closely than orders permitting trial on the merits. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [5]

Respondent's fear, panic, or aversion to formal charges alone would not show abuse of discretion in failure to grant relief from default, but specific showing regarding preoccupation with mother's serious illness raised doubts as to proper exercise of discretion, which review department resolved in respondent's favor. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [8]

Review department declined to decide whether clerk's entry of default prior to expiration of reasonable time to respond to clerk's notice, which rejected answer due to technical defects, was void, or erroneous and voidable. Instead, review department determined that the denial of respondent's motion to set aside default was an abuse of discretion. An attorney's neglect in untimely filing papers must be evaluated in light of the reasonableness of the attorney's conduct; respondent acted reasonably in timely submitting answer to notice to show cause, and promptly resubmitting corrected answer after receiving clerk's rejection notice. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Appellate review under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is for abuse of discretion, the test being whether the trial court exceeded the bounds of reason. The Supreme Court has applied a similar abuse of discretion standard in reviewing procedural motions in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [10]

It would be an abuse of discretion to deny relief from default solely on the basis of the lack of a verification of respondent's proposed answer, without giving respondent a chance to cure the defect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

169 Miscellaneous Issues re Standard of Proof/Standard of Review

Review Department will not grant relief on the basis of evidentiary errors without a showing of prejudice. Hearing judge properly permitted State Bar to call respondent as first witness, even though respondent had not yet decided whether to testify on his own behalf. State Bar also properly called witnesses without prior disclosure of their statements, where witnesses had made no written or recorded statements, and respondent could not show prejudice because he knew witnesses' identities, and had a summary of their testimony, in advance of trial. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [5]

After a review department opinion remanding a case to the hearing department for a new trial had become final, respondent could not, on a subsequent review following the new trial, continue to attack the findings and conclusions set forth in that opinion. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [1 a-c]

To the extent that the grade of a crime, i.e., felony or misdemeanor, would influence the most significant actions following criminal conviction - eligibility for interim suspension, or summary disbarment - those issues are reserved to the review department rather than the hearing department.In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

A disciplinary proceeding arising from conviction of a crime is fundamentally different from and a complete alternative to an original proceeding brought under Business and Professions Code section 6075 et seq. The streamlined procedures following an attorney's conviction of a crime rest on proceedings in the criminal courts in which the burden is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These procedures recognize that the basis for attorney discipline is not the provable violation of a rule of professional conduct but the mere existence of a certified copy of an attorney's record of conviction. Only convictions which do not inherently involve moral turpitude are referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether there is a legal basis for imposing discipline, but even in these cases guilt is conclusively established by the record of conviction and is not subject to collateral attack. Thus, where a conviction proceeding was commenced in the State Bar Court, which proceeding arose from the same underlying facts as an earlier original proceeding in the State Bar Court, neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel acted as a bar to the conviction proceeding, since neither the issues nor the causes of action in the two types of proceedings are the same.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[2 a-g]

Standards governing an attorney's ethical duties do not vary according to the many areas of practice, even in specialized areas such as immigration law. Nor do those standards vary according to whether the attorney practices alone or in a partnership, small law firm, large law firm, or corporate law department.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [2]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Facts clients referred to respondent by nonattorney immigration services providers might have had a cultural bias in favor the referring nonattorney immigration services providers or that those clients might have viewed immigration attorneys, like respondent, as less important to their immigration cases than the referring nonattorney immigration services providers did not reduce or limit nature and scope of respondent's professional duties to his immigration clients.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [7]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

Regardless of whether respondent had the right on review to challenge the conclusions of culpability to which she stipulated to in the hearing department, the review department still had an affirmative duty to determine if the culpability findings were supported by the record.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [2]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[11]

Because bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud when attorney incurred credit card debts were made under preponderance of the evidence standard and not clear and convincing standard applicable in disciplinary proceedings, hearing judge correctly (1) declined to apply principles of collateral estoppel to bind attorney with bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud; (2) reweighed evidence from bankruptcy court proceedings under clear and convincing standard after giving attorney fair opportunity to contradict, temper, and explain that evidence; and (3) permitted State Bar to present additional evidence regarding attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[3]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

Unless civil sanctions issues arising under section 128.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are adequately litigated before the sanctioning court, it would appear inappropriate to apply collateral estoppel in the State Bar Court to the sanction order. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [2]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

Even though respondent was not entitled to any mitigating credit for five years of discipline free practice under standard 1.2(e)(i) and case law, there was no error in hearing judge's giving respondent mitigating credit for discipline free practice because weight assigned to such mitigation by hearing judge was nominal (i.e., "exists in name only;" not real or substantial). In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [2]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge is required to give respondent the benefit of all reasonable doubts, she was not required to devalue evidence she found stronger than that of respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [3]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [3]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

The rule requiring the review department to give great weight to the hearing judge's findings of fact that resolve issues pertaining to the credibility of the witnesses, which rule is premised on the hearing judge's ability to see the witnesses' demeanor and conduct during trial, is not applicable when a witness's testimony is present only through a written transcript of the witness's deposition. Thus, in such a case, the review department may independently evaluate the credibility of the witness's deposition testimony without giving great weight to the hearing judge's findings. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [3]

In a conviction referral proceeding involving respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), respondent's contention that, at the time she obtained the loan, she fully expected the farm to succeed and to repay the loan in full might avoid a finding in aggravation, but did not entitle her to any mitigating credit. Respondent was not entitled to any credit for merely intending to do that which she contracted to do. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [4]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

The complaining clients' settlement of their civil matter against respondent and the clients' release of all claims against him does not preclude the State Bar from proceeding with the disciplinary matter. A disciplinary proceeding is not a controversy between two individuals, the complainant and the accused attorney, but is an adverse proceeding against the accused attorney and may be instituted and prosecuted upon the complaint of any person knowing the facts upon which the proceeding is based. The complaining person or client is not a party to the disciplinary proceeding, and need not appear and testify at trial. Thus, the disciplinary case was not a right, claim, or cause of action that accrued to the complaining clients; and therefore it was not a claim that they could release or otherwise compromise. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [1]

On review of a discovery order on appeal of a hearing judge's decision that fully disposes of an entire proceeding, not only must an abuse of discretion be shown, but also the erroneous ruling must be shown to have been so prejudicial that it constituted a miscarriage of justice. No abuse of discretion was found where respondent presented no competent evidence that the place of the depositions he sought to compel was within the 150-mile range; and no showing of a miscarriage of justice was made where the apparent reason for seeking the depositions was to show that the complaining clients had repudiated their State Bar complaint, a fact not relevant to the disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [3]

In summary review proceedings, the full record was not before the review department therefore it could not consider any issues other than those raised by the parties, absent the conversion of the matter into a plenary review proceeding. Accordingly, where the review department did not modify the hearing judge's decision as a result of the summary review proceeding, the hearing judge's decision remained the final decision of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [5]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

Prior civil court findings made under the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in State Bar Court proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [7]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court is bound by civil findings that exculpate a respondent of charged misconduct, or by an attorney's acquittal in a criminal case, or by the dismissal of criminal charges against an attorney. The reasons the State Bar is not bound by exculpatory civil findings or criminal acquittals in disciplinary proceedings are that the parties are different, the quantum of proof required in each proceeding is virtually always different, and the purposes of each proceeding are vastly different. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [10]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

Even though Evidence Code permits legal experts to testify regarding ultimate legal issues, such issues are ultimately for independent decision-making of State Bar Court and Supreme Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [6]

Clients may not waive statutory limit on contingent fees in medical negligence cases, and superior court award of such fees in excess of statutory limits is erroneous. Where attorney did not reveal material issue of potential applicability of such statutory fee limit to superior court in connection with approval of settlement and award of fees, such award did not constitute res judicata, because attorney and client were not adversaries in proceeding. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [9]

Where the reason for each charged violation was specified by the State Bar in its pretrial statement and where respondent was not prejudiced at trial, the inadequate specification of the reasons for the charges in the notice to show cause was not grounds for reversal. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3]

Where hearing judge concluded that certain alleged rule violations were duplicative and inconsequential in considering level of discipline, and State Bar did not take issue with such conclusion, and review department determined that respondent should be disbarred based on other findings, review department did not address allegations found to be duplicative. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [10]

Respondent's conviction of grand theft and forgery was conclusive evidence of his guilt of all elements of those crimes. The grand theft conviction necessarily carried with it the specific intent to deprive the victim permanently of his funds. The forgery conviction necessarily showed that respondent acted without authority and with an intent to defraud. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [3]

On the issue of whether a respondent acted in good faith, the credibility determinations of the hearing judge deserve great weight. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a).) In addition, the State Bar Court must resolve all reasonable doubts about culpability in favor of the accused attorney and must choose the inference leading to innocence if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from the facts. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [6]

In a disciplinary proceeding, a culpability determination must not be debatable. Accordingly, where the applicable rule of professional conduct did not expressly require written consent to joint representation of clients with potentially conflicting interests, the issue for the court was whether the case law at the time of an attorney's alleged violation of the rule made it clear that such consent was required in civil litigation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

Where a party did not seek review of that portion of an order on a motion for relief from costs with which it disagreed, but stated its disagreement in its brief on review without seeking affirmative relief, that party's challenge to the order was not properly before the review department in a proceeding resulting from the opposing party's petition for review of a different portion of the same order. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [2]

Pretrial statements are an important tool in conducting an efficient multi-count trial. Unexcused failure to comply with an order requiring a pretrial statement (see rule 1222, Prov. Rules of Practice) should not be treated lightly. However, where counsel failed to make appropriate motions during trial resulting from the other party's failure to file a pretrial statement, no issue was preserved for appeal. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [1]

The law of the case doctrine is one of policy and does not preclude the relitigation of issues already determined in a prior appeal. However, strong reasons should be put forward for seeking to relitigate an issue already fully litigated and decided on a prior appeal. Where a party sought reconsideration, on a second appeal, of the review department's determination of an issue on an earlier appeal in the same proceeding, without offering any justification for its failure to seek reconsideration earlier, and relying on no new case law or statute, the review department had no cognizable reason to reconsider its prior conclusion. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [2]

The Office of Trial Counsel waived its right to argue on review that certain evidence should not have been admitted when it withdrew its opposition to a post-trial motion before the hearing judge for introduction of the evidence. Accordingly, the review department did not address in detail the Office of Trial Counsel's objections to the evidence. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [5]

An administrative determination by the Board of Legal Specialization regarding an application for certification must comport with due process, and review by the State Bar Court exists in part to test whether due process was afforded. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [5]

Although review department gives great deference to credibility findings by hearing judge in favor of petitioner for reinstatement, petitioner continues to bear a heavy burden of proof on review. Petitioner must present overwhelming proof of reform and must show by the most clear and convincing evidence that efforts toward rehabilitation have been successful. Such evidence must demonstrate sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [2]

Where a hearing judge's decision in one matter indicated that if the respondent filed a post-decision declaration in that matter, this would be taken into account in assessing discipline in a second pending matter, the examiner's objections on review to this aspect of the decision were rendered moot by the respondent's failure to file any such declaration, by the State Bar's apparent satisfaction with the result in the second matter, and by the review department's recommendation of disbarment in the first matter based on other grounds. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [6]

In addressing the constitutionality of imposing professional discipline for criminal conduct not involving moral turpitude, the State Bar Court must endeavor to interpret the "other misconduct warranting discipline" standard to render its application in the particular case constitutional. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [6]

Review department did not need to reach respondent's challenges to hearing judge's evidentiary rulings in order to uphold hearing judge's ultimate findings, where all essential elements of charged violation were established by evidence to which respondent did not object, and any evidentiary errors did not result in denial of a fair hearing. Where factual findings based on challenged evidence were not necessary to decision, remand for new hearing was not necessary even if evidentiary errors underlay some non-essential findings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [1]

The question of how a court order should be interpreted is a question of law for the court, not a question of fact, and the parties' subjective beliefs as to its meaning are not relevant to the court's interpretation. Whether language of respondent's probation reports complied with requirements of probation conditions was a legal issue, not a factual one. Moreover, probation order was a Supreme Court order, not a contract, and rules of contract interpretation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [4]

A respondent seeking review by the review department of a hearing department decision does not have the burden of showing that the hearing judge's findings are not supported by substantial evidence. That is a statutory burden applicable only to a respondent appearing before the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [3]

On review of a facial challenge to the legal sufficiency of charges in the notice to show cause, the sole issue presented is whether the facts alleged in the notice, if proven, would constitute a disciplinable offense. For the purpose of such review, the review department treats the factual allegations of the notice as true, but draws independent conclusions regarding the legal import of those facts. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [1]

Where there is no precedent regarding the standard of review to be applied in a matter coming before the review department in a certain procedural posture, the review department proceeds by analogy to the closest civil and criminal rules. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [2]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

Both at hearing and on review, the court considering a motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to state a disciplinable offense should disregard all factual matters outside the ambit of the notice, except for judicially noticeable facts. Accordingly, the review department considered respondent's uncontroverted statement that the alleged client referred to in the notice to show cause was respondent's spouse, and also considered respondent's date of admission to the bar and lack of any prior disciplinary record. However, respondent's other factual assertions in support of his motion to dismiss were not suited for judicial notice and were not considered on review. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [4]

Hearing department findings that were based on evidence admitted in discipline phase of trial were considered by review department solely with respect to discipline and not culpability. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [3]

The party making a claim of judicial bias must show that a person in possession of all the relevant facts would reasonably conclude that the hearing judge was biased or prejudiced against that party. The standard is an objective one and the partisan views of the litigants do not control. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [3]

Review department adopted parties' stipulated facts, noting that the Supreme Court ordinarily will hold an accused attorney to stipulated facts even in a matter arising from a stipulation as to facts and disposition. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Whether or not review department adopted parties' stipulated legal conclusions, the Supreme Court would not be bound by them in its independent review. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

Although an arbitrator's testimony is admissible on the question of what issues were tried in the arbitration, the arbitrator's expression of his own belief does not bind the State Bar Court in adjudicating the effect of the arbitration award. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [14]

Party claiming judicial bias has burden to clearly establish such bias and to show specific prejudice; disagreement with how referee weighed issues, and showing of immaterial factual errors, did not establish bias on part of referee who acted in patient, fair, and commendable manner during hearing. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [1]

Charging a violation of section 6068(a) without specifically identifying the underlying provision of law allegedly violated not only fails to put the attorney on sufficient notice of the alleged violation, but also undermines meaningful review of any decision based on such general charging allegation. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [14]

Review department's overriding concern is same as that of Supreme Court: preservation of public confidence in profession and maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

The probable cause determination necessary for the initiation of an involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding pursuant to section 6007(b)(3) does not suffice to order a mental examination pursuant to section 6053. Such an order necessitates the much stronger procedural and constitutional safeguards afforded by showings from the State Bar of "good cause" and "least intrusive means." In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [9]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence. The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

The doctrine of law of the case did not preclude the full-time review department from reconsidering a decision of the former, volunteer review department. Due to the non-finality of recommendations of the former State Bar Court review department, law of the case did not apply to them. Upon its independent de novo review, review department was not bound to follow earlier factual determinations made prior to remand. Review department was also free to reconsider prior review department's legal interpretation of rule of professional conduct, given flexibility of law of the case doctrine in California appellate courts. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [3]

As a rule, constitutional questions will not be reached if a decision can rest on a different ground. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [9]

Party seeking review is expected to set forth challenged finding, conclusion, or ruling below and point out wherein error lies. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [2]

Issues must be addressed on de novo review despite lack of appropriate briefing. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [3]

In ruling on a motion to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), State Bar Court interprets and applies terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" in same manner as in civil cases under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [4]

It is the policy of the law under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to favor a hearing on the merits; any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default. A trial court order denying relief is scrutinized more carefully than an order permitting trial on the merits. Nonetheless, it is the moving party's responsibility to recite facts that meet the burden of proving mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

Whether an attorney's misconduct involved moral turpitude is a question of law ultimately decided by the Supreme Court. The test is the same whether or not the act was a criminal offense. Where respondent failed to pay payroll taxes due to financial difficulty, such conduct did not constitute moral turpitude, because Supreme Court did not find moral turpitude in case involving similar but more egregious misconduct. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [9]

In determining whether nature of attorney's crimes warranted summary disbarment, review department gave great weight to decision of court of appeal issued on direct appeal from respondent's criminal conviction. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Where examiner stipulated to admissibility of character reference letters at hearing, and thus chose not to require the declarants to be cross-examined, examiner's attempt to discount letters before review department was without foundation. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [21]

170 Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline

Note: See also topic number 802.50 (Standard 1.4)

171 Restitution Requirements (rule 5.136; Standard 1.4(a))

Where the hearing judge recommended for a defaulting attorney, among other things, an actual suspension of 60 days and until the attorney made restitution of unearned fees and until the State Bar Court granted the attorney's motion to terminate her actual suspension under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 205, the hearing judge should also have recommended compliance with paragraphs (a) and (c) of California Rules of Court, rule 955 if the actual suspension exceeded 90 days. In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861. [2a, b]

Although the review department was sympathetic with respondent's claim that if he was actually suspended from practice for an extended period he would be unable to make timely restitution payments, it could not excuse a degree of discipline that was otherwise warranted. If avoidance of actual suspension were a prerequisite for respondent's continued restitution payments, it would have been more appropriate for respondent to have resolved his restitution obligation, thereby obviating this very proceeding. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678. [3]

Protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney are the primary aims of disciplinary probation. It is for this reason that discipline imposed for the wilful violation of probation often calls for substantial discipline as a reflection of the seriousness with which compliance with probationary duties is held. An attorney who wilfully violates a significant condition of probation, such as restitution, can anticipate actual suspension as the expected result, absent compelling mitigating circumstances. Here, respondent should have recognized the serious consequences of his failures to timely pay restitution and file quarterly reports because of his previous encounters with the State Bar disciplinary system. Furthermore, when, as here, an attorney commits multiple violations of the same probation condition, the gravity of each successive violation increases, resulting in more severe discipline. Balancing all relevant facts and circumstances, the review department determined that the 90-day actual suspension recommended by the hearing judge was sufficient to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation, but that an additional condition should be added that requires respondent's continued actual suspension until restitution was fully paid to his client. This was intended as an incentive to respondent to be pro-active in his efforts to satisfy his restitution obligations and bring to a conclusion this 10-year saga with the State Bar, and was necessary to ensure respondent's timely and full compliance. In reaching this conclusion, the review department took into account respondent's belated but complete satisfaction of his restitution and reporting conditions in the face of ongoing financial difficulties, the fact that all of the violations related to one client matter, and that the client testified that respondent had shown concern about his inability to pay and exhibited courteousness towards her. The need to protect the public by imposing a significantly longer period of stayed suspension was therefore diminished. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678. [4 a,b]

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Attorneys cannot recover for services rendered if services are rendered in contradiction of attorney professional responsibility. And where attorney improperly withdraws fees from a trust account, restitution to client or client's estate is appropriate. Thus, where respondent withdrew $29,875 from his client trust account as his attorney's fees without his corporate client's authorization, respondent should make restitution of $29,875 plus interest to either corporate client, its successor, appropriate recipient of its assets after its dissolution, or if such successor or recipient of assets after dissolution cannot be identified, the Client Security Fund. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [10 a,b]

Although respondent's conduct in the sale of residential real property to his client involved moral turpitude, it was not shown by clear and convincing evidence to have been either intentionally dishonest or venal; there was potential for benefits to the client; and it was impossible to allocate responsibility for the client's loss between respondent, who acted at least partially for his own benefit, and the client, who failed to act responsibly. Under these circumstances, restitution to the client was not recommended. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [8a,b]

Respondent's contention that revoking his probation was a violation of due process and equal protection, and was discriminatory based upon financial status was rejected. The premise upon which it was based, that respondent's probation was being revoked because of his financial condition, was flawed. The revocation was based on his wilful failure to pay the restitution coupled with his failure to make reasonable efforts to acquire the resources to pay or to make other good faith efforts to satisfy the restitution obligation. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [5]

In probation revocation proceedings the greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection or showing the probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. The significance of restitution is its probative value as an indicator of rehabilitation, not the repayment of the underlying indebtedness. Requiring restitution serves the rehabilitative and public protection goals of disciplinary probation by forcing attorneys to confront in concrete terms the consequences of the attorney's misconduct. Thus, a probationer's attitude toward the restitution is a significant factor to be weighed. In the stipulation to facts and disposition in the underlying disciplinary case, respondent asserted that he was financially unable to pay the sanctions. Yet, he agreed to pay restitution as a condition of probation. After the Supreme Court's order was filed and four days before its effective date, respondent sought to discharge the restitution in bankruptcy. Having received the benefit of the bargain provided by the stipulation, respondent promptly sought to relieve himself of one of the obligations of that bargain. In addition, even though respondent has asserted continued financial hardship since before the filing of the stipulation in underlying discipline case, he did not seek a modification of the restitution condition of probation until after he was charged with violating that probation. Further, respondent apparently made no attempt to inform himself of the effect of the bankruptcy discharge on his duty to comply with the Supreme Court's disciplinary order. Respondent's stated belief that the restitution issue was moot because the recipient of the money forgave the debt was also problematic. The important state interests accomplished by restitution are not rendered moot because the underlying indebtedness is forgiven by a private party. The goal is prophylactic, not pecuniary. Respondent's demonstrated failure to recognize these most fundamental concepts causes concern and increases the risk that future similar misconduct may occur. Respondent's attitude toward the restitution shows indifference and warrants increasing the recommended discipline and requiring that the restitution be paid prior to respondent's resumption of active practice. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [7]

Even if credit card cash advances that attorney obtained and lost while gambling in Nevada casinos were "gambling debts" and therefore not enforceable debts in California, hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to make restitution to credit card company was not only legal, but appropriate and necessary to respondent's rehabilitation and for protection of public in light of hearing judge's findings that attorney obtained the cash advances without intending to repay them. Requiring attorney to make restitution will force attorney to confront his misconduct in concrete terms. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [11]

It is inappropriate to use restitution as a means of awarding tort damages for harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

There is nothing in rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure that expressly precludes the State Bar Court from recommending appropriate preconditions to a defaulting and disciplined attorney bringing a motion to terminate his or her actual suspension under rule 205, such as recommended in this matter by the hearing judge, requiring respondent to make restitution and attend Ethics School. However, the requirement that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination prior to bringing a motion for relief from suspension is in conflict with Supreme Court case law requiring that a disciplined attorney be given a minimum of one year within which to pass the examination. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [5 a, b]

A condition attached to respondent's private reproval requiring respondent to pay the $1000 sanctions ordered by the superior court was necessary. To conclude otherwise would terminate respondent's professional obligation under Business and Professions Code section 6103 to obey the order and pay the sanctions. Such a result would be inconsistent with the purposes of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [9]

The review department rejected the argument that respondent should be required to make restitution before being relieved of his actual suspension because he intended to leave the United States. If ordered by the Supreme Court, respondent will be required to make restitution regardless of his place of residence. If he fails to comply with the Supreme Court order, his failure will result in further disciplinary action, again regardless of his place of residence. In short, respondent's place of residence was not relevant to the restitution requirement. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [4]

Even if an attorney returns money that he or she misappropriates, the attorney is still be culpable of the original misappropriation. Thus, restitution is not a defense to a misappropriation charge. Rather, it is a mitigating circumstance that could possibly support a reduction in the discipline. Respondent had the burden of proving mitigating circumstances, including restitution. Where there was no evidence that respondent paid the money back, he did not meet his burden of proving that restitution had been paid. Under these circumstances, restitution was an appropriate component of the discipline. In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541. [1]

Where an attorney retained unearned advanced fees for years and failed to prove factors justifying relief from actual suspension before the completion of restitution, the hearing judge erred in not requiring the attorney to make restitution forthwith. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6]

Sanction orders based upon specific out-of-pocket losses directly resulting from respondent's misconduct are proper subjects of restitution order. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [7]

Bankruptcy laws do not prohibit State Bar Court from recommending or Supreme Court from ordering a respondent to make restitution for an indebtedness arising from misconduct related to his practice of law even though the indebtedness has been discharged in bankruptcy. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [8]

Generally, restitution should be made in an amount consistent with the loss attributable to the respondent's misconduct. Thus, restitution for theft, misappropriation, or embezzlement should include interest. Where the debt which gave rise to the restitution did not provide for interest, the review department recommended that the restitution include interest at the legal rate (10 percent per annum) from the effective date of the Supreme Court disciplinary order. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [9]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation made no required restitution payments to former clients, but made some payments to State Bar in belief that probation monitor or other authority had so instructed, and where respondent had insufficient reason for such belief, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to make such payments to clients, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4]

Where respondent's failure to make restitution payments required by disciplinary probation was due to lack of income, but respondent did not attempt to have restitution requirement modified, and did not demonstrate that he made sufficient good faith efforts to acquire resources to pay restitution, respondent was culpable of gross negligence which violated conditions of probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5]

Requirements for quarterly probation reports and monthly restitution payments as conditions of disciplinary probation were important steps toward rehabilitation, and were appropriate from effective date of Supreme Court discipline order, rather than being delayed until after respondent resumed active law practice. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [14]

Where disciplinary probation conditions specified minimum amount for monthly restitution payment, and amount was such that restitution would not be completed within period of probation if only minimum payments were made, fact that probation conditions specified minimum monthly amount did not relieve respondent from paying full required amount of restitution within term of probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [15]

Where respondent had stipulated to discipline requiring restitution payments to be made by certain dates, and respondent did not set aside funds to make such restitution as soon as his own stipulation required first payment to be made, and where respondent had no credible excuse for failing to make at least first required payment at a time when respondent had significant income, respondent's failure to make at least partial restitution was a wilful violation of his probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [4]

Where respondent's probation violations (failure to file quarterly report and to pay restitution) and balance of aggravating and mitigating circumstances were comparable to those in another reported probation revocation matter, review department adopted hearing judge's essential discipline recommendation, based on discipline in comparable matter, of imposition of entire previously stayed one-year actual suspension, with suspension to continue until payment of restitution, and showing of rehabilitation and fitness to practice to be required if suspension lasted two years or more. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [9]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

Doing equity is not the principal purpose of restitution in disciplinary proceedings; rather, it is to force disciplined attorneys to confront the consequences of their misconduct in a concrete way, thus serving goals of rehabilitation and public protection. It would not be consistent with purposes of attorney discipline to decline to order an attorney to make restitution of funds which were clearly wrongfully taken, simply on basis of speculation that victim of misconduct might thereby be unjustly enriched. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [14]

Where hearing judge declined to order restitution but offered to reconsider if State Bar could show that misconduct victim had not already been compensated for funds taken by respondent, this ruling misallocated the burden of proof. Once State Bar met its burden to prove initial trust account violation, it was respondent's burden to prove that restitution had in effect already been made by a third party. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

Where respondent withdrew $2,500 for attorney's fees from a client's bank account at a time when his representation of the client was improper due to a conflict of interest, restitution of the funds to the client's estate was an appropriate condition of probation. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [13]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

Restitution payments made under pressure of disciplinary proceedings are entitled to little or no weight in mitigation of discipline. However, whether restitution has been completed is important to deciding whether it should be required as a condition of probation, or, if disbarment is recommended, to whether respondent must make restitution as an issue bearing on rehabilitation for reinstatement. Thus, evidence of restitution payments made by respondent's father was relevant and properly admissible, even though not constituting mitigation, and review department granted motion to admit such evidence on review where hearing judge had declined to accept it. However, other evidence offered by respondent on review regarding Client Security Fund claim filed by respondent's client was not admitted by review department where it was not relevant to issues in proceeding. (See rule 570, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [12]

Where respondent violated conditions of disciplinary probation by failing to turn over former client's files and records, precluding accountant from assessing losses incurred due to respondent's misconduct so that determination could be made regarding restitution, such probation violations were serious and warranted lengthy actual suspension and requirement to prove rehabilitation, learning in the law, and fitness to practice before returning to law practice. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [4]

Restitution is fundamental to the goal of rehabilitation. It forces attorneys to confront in concrete terms the harm caused by their misconduct. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [4]

In hearing to establish fitness to return to practice after suspension, respondent could either show that restitution had been completed or that restitution had been made to the best of respondent's financial ability. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [14]

Where respondent had wrongfully retained client's personal property, review department recommended condition of probation requiring respondent to provide proof of return of such property to client. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [11]

It is common in State Bar matters involving failure to perform services to require as a rehabilitative condition, restitution of unearned fees kept by the attorney and to deem as unearned the entire fee when only preliminary services were performed which did not result in benefit to the client. It is also common to recommend the payment of interest incident to such restitution. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [12]

If identity of party entitled to restitution of unearned attorney fees proved not to be ascertainable with reasonable diligence, review department recommended that, upon approval of probation monitor, such restitution be paid to Client Security Fund. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [13]

Most Supreme Court cases requiring restitution have involved misuse of client funds or unearned fees. Nevertheless, where client owed interest on inheritance taxes which were not timely paid due to attorney's failure to perform services competently, and attorney offered to make restitution in amount of such interest as condition of discipline, restitution requirement was appropriate in light of the rehabilitative purposes that it would serve. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [3]

It was appropriate to order respondent to make restitution to client of client's funds which were applied to respondent's fees without client's authorization, even though respondent performed substantial legal services for client, because restitution would effectuate respondent's rehabilitation and protect public from similar future misconduct. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [22]

Requirement that attorney who abandoned clients make restitution of amount paid by clients to successor counsel was imposed in furtherance of attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [15]

The State Bar Court, as an arm of the Supreme Court in attorney disciplinary matters, does not sit as a collection board for clients aggrieved over fee matters, nor is its jurisdiction derivative of fee arbitration proceedings. The administration of attorney discipline, including such remedial orders as restitution, is independent of any remedy that an aggrieved client may pursue. In a disciplinary proceeding to protect the public, the alleged flaws in a fee arbitration proceeding and resulting judgment have little relevance. Accordingly, the State Bar Court has jurisdiction over a disciplinary matter even though there has already been a factually related fee arbitration. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [4]

Where restitution was appropriate, but record reflected that client might have filed Client Security Fund claim, review department recommended that respondent be ordered to pay restitution either to client, or to Client Security Fund if client's claim had been paid. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [32]

It is inappropriate to use restitution as a means of awarding unliquidated tort damages for malpractice. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [33]

Attorney who rendered services to client before committing misconduct was entitled to collect fee earned prior to commencement of misconduct. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [3]

For the purpose of determining culpability for violation of restitution requirement imposed as condition of disciplinary probation, it is inappropriate to distinguish between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" violations. Restitution conditions are as significant as the notification requirements in rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, as to which the Supreme Court has declined to draw such a distinction. The importance of the goals of restitution makes distinctions between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" failures to make restitution inappropriate. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [9]

Requiring restitution forces errant attorneys to confront the consequences of their misconduct in a concrete way and thereby serves the state's interest in rehabilitating such attorneys and protecting the public. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [10]

As with the treatment of failure to pay restitution in reinstatement and criminal probation cases, in a disciplinary proceeding for failure to make timely restitution as a condition of attorney disciplinary probation, due process requires an examination of the probationer's ability to make restitution and the sufficiency and good faith of the probationer's efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [11]

A wilful breach of respondent's restitution duty was established where respondent: (1) had the financial ability to make some restitution payments during the period when he had not done so; (2) repeatedly chose to pursue professional goals which foreseeably rendered him financially unable to make timely restitution; (3) failed to protect his funds from attachment by creditors; and (4) failed to seek an extension of time to make his restitution payments. His conduct showed a conscious disregard of his restitution obligations and a failure to make sufficient good faith efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [12]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

Typically, Supreme Court orders actual suspension for an appropriate period and until restitution is made, rather than ordering suspension until restitution is made and then for an additional fixed term. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [2]

Requirement that respondent return unearned fees to client was consistent with finding that respondent did little if any of the work he agreed to perform for client. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [17]

Where evidence showed that another attorney, not respondent, was apparently responsible for certain thefts of trust funds, review department did not recommend requiring restitution as to those matters. In the Matter of

Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [11]

172 Monitoring, Treatment and Testing Requirements (Standard 1.4(e))

172.10 Probation Monitor

172.11 Appointed

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

Chaotic state of respondent's records and business practices, and lack of written fee agreements and client correspondence, warranted imposition of requirement to submit law office management plan and of State Bar supervision in order to protect the public and prevent any future misconduct. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [16]

172.15 Not appointed

Disciplinary probation furthers the fundamental purposes of attorney discipline only when attorney probationers are effectively monitored to ensure that they do not engage in further misconduct and are conforming their conduct to the ethical strictures of the profession. Historically, attorney probationers have been monitored to ensure their compliance with these requirements through appointed voluntary probation monitors or through court-ordered self-reporting by the attorney or both. Even though probation monitors have played an important role in monitoring attorneys on probation and were, at one time, appointed in most instances, the use of a probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple, periodic reporting conditions are recommended or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. Appointment of a probation monitor was not warranted in this case in light of the simple probation conditions recommended and the found misconduct, mitigation, and aggravation. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [3]

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

Where the only active steps required by the recommended conditions of probation were the submission of approximately four quarterly reports directly to the probation department, the review department revised the hearing judge's recommended conditions of probation, which included assignment of a probation monitor, because it did not consider a probation monitor necessary. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [11]

Appointment of probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple periodic reporting conditions are recommended, or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [12]

Compliance with rule 955 is customary for suspensions of two years, but is discretionary, and neither rule 955 order nor probation were necessary where respondent had not lived in California for several years, did not practice law, and had not committed any misconduct for over six years. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [21]

172.17 Powers and duties

It was unreasonable for respondent to believe that he had been excused by his probation monitor referee from filing one of the quarterly reports clearly required by his probation conditions, where respondent knew of his duty to file the quarterly reports timely and knew the exact dates on which those reports were due. Respondent therefore breached his probation duties by failing to file the report. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [14]

172.19 Other issues re probation and/or probation monitors

Disciplinary probation furthers the fundamental purposes of attorney discipline only when attorney probationers are effectively monitored to ensure that they do not engage in further misconduct and are conforming their conduct to the ethical strictures of the profession. Historically, attorney probationers have been monitored to ensure their compliance with these requirements through appointed voluntary probation monitors or through court-ordered self-reporting by the attorney or both. Even though probation monitors have played an important role in monitoring attorneys on probation and were, at one time, appointed in most instances, the use of a probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple, periodic reporting conditions are recommended or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. Appointment of a probation monitor was not warranted in this case in light of the simple probation conditions recommended and the found misconduct, mitigation, and aggravation. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [3]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

Reproval conditions attached to respondent's two prior reprovals requiring him to file quarterly probation reports were important steps towards respondent's rehabilitation and important means of protecting the public because they permitted the State Bar to monitor respondent's compliance with ethical standards. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

In respondent's second disciplinary proceeding for his failure to comply with the quarterly reporting requirements imposed on him under two prior reprovals, it was inappropriate to include, in the discipline recommendation, a reporting condition with a lower frequency of reporting than that previously imposed on respondent, which he had been unable or unwilling to comply. Absent extraordinary and enunciated circumstances, the reporting condition should have at least required that respondent demonstrate that he can now comply with the reporting requirements previously imposed on him under his two reprovals by imposing the same reporting requirements on him prospectively. Recommending a lower reporting requirement would "reward" respondent for his noncompliance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation made no required restitution payments to former clients, but made some payments to State Bar in belief that probation monitor or other authority had so instructed, and where respondent had insufficient reason for such belief, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to make such payments to clients, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4]

Protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney are chief aims of disciplinary probation. Violation of probation condition significantly related to attorney's prior misconduct merits greatest discipline, especially if such violation raises serious concern for public protection or shows attorney's failure to undertake rehabilitation. Where respondent was culpable of multiple probation violations reflecting adversely on his rehabilitation efforts, but showed substantial mitigating circumstances, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension and four years probation, conditioned on one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [12]

Requirements for quarterly probation reports and monthly restitution payments as conditions of disciplinary probation were important steps toward rehabilitation, and were appropriate from effective date of Supreme Court discipline order, rather than being delayed until after respondent resumed active law practice. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [14]

Where respondent's probation monitor placed calls to respondent and respondent did attempt to reply to such calls, and hearing judge found that although respondent did not respond promptly, he could not be said to have failed to comply with his duty, respondent was not culpable of violating condition of probation requiring him to meet with monitor to review probation terms. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [3]

Primary aims of attorney disciplinary probation are protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney. Greatest amount of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for breaches of probation conditions significantly related to misconduct for which probation was given, especially when circumstances raise serious concern about public protection or show probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Where misconduct for which respondent was placed on probation included practicing law in violation of court order, and respondent's current misconduct also involved violating numerous court orders and was aggravated by failure to participate in disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent's probation violations involved two of very first steps required by probation conditions, these factors indicated that respondent had a persistent problem with conforming his conduct to requirements of law, raised serious concerns for need to protect public, and showed that respondent had failed to even begin to take steps to rehabilitate himself. Accordingly, imposition of entire period of stayed suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's violation of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [12]

It is the responsibility of an attorney on probation to comply with a probation condition requiring the attorney to meet with an assigned probation monitor referee. Even if respondent encountered difficulty in setting up such a meeting, where respondent did not seek the assistance of the State Bar Court's clerk's office, and instead permitted a substantial delay to pass before the required meeting occurred, respondent's neglect constituted a wilful breach of his probation duties. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [13]

It was unreasonable for respondent to believe that he had been excused by his probation monitor referee from filing one of the quarterly reports clearly required by his probation conditions, where respondent knew of his duty to file the quarterly reports timely and knew the exact dates on which those reports were due. Respondent therefore breached his probation duties by failing to file the report. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [14]

The primary goal of disciplinary probation is the protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [3]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

As a matter of law, probation condition requiring respondent to include statement regarding abstinence from alcohol and drugs in any report required under probation conditions required respondent to include such statement in all required reports, including quarterly reports. Statement in quarterly reports that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions did not comply with such requirement, because it was not a clear and unequivocal statement of respondent's compliance with the abstinence condition. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [3]

The question of how a court order should be interpreted is a question of law for the court, not a question of fact, and the parties' subjective beliefs as to its meaning are not relevant to the court's interpretation. Whether language of respondent's probation reports complied with requirements of probation conditions was a legal issue, not a factual one. Moreover, probation order was a Supreme Court order, not a contract, and rules of contract interpretation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [4]

Where probation conditions required that respondent abstain from intoxicants and non-prescribed drugs, and respondent stated under penalty of perjury that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions, then even if State Bar proved respondent had consumed alcohol, respondent could have avoided perjury conviction by contending he did not consider abstinence condition to be valid, legally reasonable, and/or enforceable. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [5]

The goals of the State Bar's probation program are: (1) public protection; (2) rehabilitation of the respondent; (3) maintaining integrity of the legal profession; (4) enforcement of restitution orders; (5) aiding future enforcement and (6) partially alleviating discipline. These goals are to be realized by use of probation conditions which are innovative, individualized, rehabilitative and flexible and which are implemented using the efforts of volunteer probation monitor referees. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [6]

As a matter of policy, not all attorneys who fail to participate in disciplinary proceedings should be precluded from receiving discipline containing probation conditions. Defaulting attorneys do present a problem for the hearing department in that the cause of their misconduct is not always evident on the record, thus making it difficult to determine which probation conditions or duties would further the goals of discipline. Nonetheless, the view that an attorney's default is prima facie evidence that the attorney is not amenable to probation runs contrary to the duty to consider each case on its own merits to determine appropriate discipline, and also precludes the use of probation monitoring as an effective means of public protection. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [8]

Probation is not mandated in all cases where an actual suspension is imposed. When a lengthy period of actual suspension is recommended, imposing the provisions of standard 1.4(c)(ii) in lieu of a probation grant may serve adequately to protect the public and test the attorney's rehabilitation. Probation may not be indicated by virtue of the nature of the misconduct, the passage of time since the misconduct or clear evidence of the attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [11]

A respondent should not be admitted to disciplinary probation when there is clear evidence that the respondent will not comply with its conditions. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [13]

Where delay in commencement of disciplinary probation until end of actual suspension would not further rehabilitation objective of probation, review department recommended that probation commence on finality of Supreme Court's discipline order. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [21]

Review department recognized that respondent's default raised concerns regarding respondent's suitability for probation, but concluded that respondent should not be denied opportunity to comply with probation terms which would appear to have rehabilitative benefit. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [7]

172.20 Drug Testing/Treatment (Standard 1.4(c))

Absence of evidence of rehabilitation from drug and alcohol problems was significant where respondent's probation violation involved failure to give adequate assurance of compliance with probation requirement of abstention from alcohol and drugs. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [21]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

A requirement that a respondent with a drug and alcohol abuse history submit to warrantless searches by police and to blood, breath or urine testing was not an appropriate condition of probation, and the review department replaced it with the State Bar Court's standard substance abuse probation conditions. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [12]

Probation conditions which included regular substance screening were well directed to maintain respondent's program of rehabilitation from drug use and alcohol abuse and to offer appropriate protection to the public. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [9]

172.30 Alcohol Testing/Treatment (Standard 1.4(c))

Absence of evidence of rehabilitation from drug and alcohol problems was significant where respondent's probation violation involved failure to give adequate assurance of compliance with probation requirement of abstention from alcohol and drugs. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [21]

A requirement that a respondent with a drug and alcohol abuse history submit to warrantless searches by police and to blood, breath or urine testing was not an appropriate condition of probation, and the review department replaced it with the State Bar Court's standard substance abuse probation conditions. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [12]

Probation conditions which included regular substance screening were well directed to maintain respondent's program of rehabilitation from drug use and alcohol abuse and to offer appropriate protection to the public. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [9]

172.40 Prescribed Medication Testing/Treatment (Standard 1.4(c))

Blood testing and continuing psychological treatment were appropriate probation conditions where mitigating evidence included showing that mental condition responsible for attorney's misconduct had been successfully alleviated by ongoing medication and treatment. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [16]

172.50 Psychological Treatment (Standard 1.4(c))

It is proper to recommend a probation condition requiring appropriate mental health treatment even though no expert testimony was proffered that respondent suffered from a mental or other problem requiring psychiatric treatment where the record contains other clear evidence that respondent suffers from a mental or other problem requiring medical treatment. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

Where respondent was charged with violating disciplinary probation conditions by failing to submit evidence of having obtained assistance from a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, respondent could be found culpable only of failing to comply with requirement that he submit such evidence, and not of failing to comply with requirement that he obtain such assistance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

Where hearing judge had confidence in respondent's unlicensed therapist and the therapeutic relationship which respondent had established with such therapist, it was appropriate to allow respondent to satisfy therapy requirement of probation conditions by continuing to see that specific therapist; otherwise, therapist would have to be duly licensed psychiatrist or clinical psychologist. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [16]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

Where no clear or expert evidence was presented that respondent had a specific mental or other problem requiring psychiatric treatment, the review department declined to adopt the hearing judge's recommendation of such treatment as a condition of respondent's disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [14]

Blood testing and continuing psychological treatment were appropriate probation conditions where mitigating evidence included showing that mental condition responsible for attorney's misconduct had been successfully alleviated by ongoing medication and treatment. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [16]

Where attorney's expert witness testified that attorney still had personality traits that needed working on, protection of public required imposition of psychological treatment requirement as condition of probation. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [20]

172.90 Other Testing/Treatment (Standard 1.4(g))

173 Requirements to Take and Pass Ethics Exam/Ethics School (rule 5.135; Standard 1.4(d))

Despite the mandate in State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 290(a) that every imposition of discipline (other than reprovals) include a requirement that attorney attend State Bar Ethics School, the appropriate time to consider imposing State Bar Ethics School as a condition of probation in default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until the attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205, is at the time of ruling on the rule 205 motion to terminate the actual suspension. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [7]

Disciplinary recommendation in a default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205 may, in appropriate cases, require that attorney's actual suspension continue until attorney attends State Bar Ethics School. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [8]

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

There is nothing in rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure that expressly precludes the State Bar Court from recommending appropriate preconditions to a defaulting and disciplined attorney bringing a motion to terminate his or her actual suspension under rule 205, such as recommended in this matter by the hearing judge, requiring respondent to make restitution and attend Ethics School. However, the requirement that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination prior to bringing a motion for relief from suspension is in conflict with Supreme Court case law requiring that a disciplined attorney be given a minimum of one year within which to pass the examination. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [5 a, b]

The State Bar is correct that a private reproval is a sanction that constitutes discipline. And the State Bar is also correct that the plain and unambiguous language of rule 290(a), Rules of Procedure mandates that except as provided by order of the Supreme Court, a member shall be required to satisfactorily complete the State Bar Ethics School in all dispositions or decisions involving the imposition of discipline, unless the member previously completed the course within the prior two years. However, rule 956(a) of the California Rules of Court authorizes the attachment of conditions to reprovals. And that rule expressly requires that conditions attached to reprovals be based upon a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. In fact, it is error to attach a condition to a reproval in the absence of such an express finding. Moreover, rule 271, Rules of Procedure, explicitly directs that any conditions attached to reprovals must be attached in the manner authorized by California Rules of Court rule 956. Accordingly, the review department held that the mandatory directive in rule 290 to impose ethics school is not applicable in proceedings in which the discipline imposed is a reproval. To conclude otherwise would strip all meaning from the requirement in rule 956(a) that conditions attached shall be based on a finding that the interests of the public and attorney will be served thereby. In addition, to conclude otherwise would render a portion of rule 271 surplusage. In the Matter of Respondent Z (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 85. [1 a-d]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [1]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929. [4]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Where the record demonstrated that the conduct of respondent was not venal, but rather totally oblivious to his obligations as a lawyer, the review department had great concern that respondent's lack of understanding of his obligations as an attorney posed a risk to the public. Under these circumstances the review department recommend that respondent not return to practice until such time as he completed certain educational requirements imposed as conditions of probation. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [11]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [1]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [2]

When a party seeks or consents to a court's action that is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the party may be estopped to complain of the court's action as long as the court had subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent was estopped from collaterally attacking a final order extending the time in which he was required to comply with conditions attached to a reproval where he consented to the order and where the court had jurisdiction of the subject. The review department concluded that the application of estoppel was in harmony with the primary goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [3]

The greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations of probation which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection. Where the misconduct which gave rise to the probation involved failure to perform and communicate, the law office management plan, ethics school, and law office management course conditions of probation directly addressed the misconduct and were therefore significantly related to the underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.430.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

Where respondent had been ordered in prior disciplinary matter to take and pass professional responsibility examination, and remained suspended for failure to do so at time review department decided subsequent disciplinary matters, review department did not recommend imposing additional professional responsibility examination requirement in subsequent matters. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [13]

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

Where respondent had been directed in first disciplinary matter to take Multistate Professional Responsibility Examination rather than usually-imposed California Professional Responsibility Examination, and respondent had passed such examination, review department did not recommend in subsequent probation revocation matter that respondent be required to pass another professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [1]

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

Where there was no evidence that respondent's trust account practices were generally deficient, and respondent's essential ethical shortcoming involved misattributing ownership of funds, not failing to handle them properly as entrusted funds, it was not necessary to require respondent to attend special trust accounting class portion of Ethics School. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [16]

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

Where probation conditions requiring office organization plan and completion of Ethics School would amply address respondent's misconduct, review department deleted recommended probation condition requiring respondent to join and maintain membership in State Bar's Law Practice Management Section. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [6]

Where respondent's failure to adhere to statutory requirement of written attorney-client fee agreements was at heart of both matters in which he had been charged with misconduct, and respondent's attention needed to be directed to written fee agreements and also to his obligations upon withdrawal from employment, public reproval was properly conditioned on completion of State Bar Ethics School. Its format of classroom instruction, followed by a test, would better remedy these problems than the more passive experience of the California Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [14]

Where State Bar Court did not recommend respondent's suspension from law practice, it was not required to include, as condition of public reproval, requirement that respondent pass a professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [16]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In probation revocation matter, where order imposing probation had also required that respondent pass professional responsibility examination and respondent had not yet done so, review department recommended that this provision of original discipline order remain in effect notwithstanding revocation of probation. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [8]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

Where respondent had passed professional responsibility examination 10 years earlier, but seemed to have learned nothing from that experience which would have helped him avoid disciplinary proceeding arising out of his abdicating responsibility for his law practice to a non-lawyer, it was appropriate to require respondent to take and pass California Professional Responsibility Examination prior to expiration of his actual suspension. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [8]

Normally, a respondent who has recently been ordered to take a professional responsibility examination is not required to do so in connection with subsequent discipline. Where respondent had not been ordered to take any professional responsibility examination in connection with prior discipline, review department recommended that respondent be ordered to take the California Professional Responsibility Examination, focusing on the California Rules of Professional Conduct, which is now routinely ordered in discipline cases involving suspension in lieu of the national Professional Responsibility Examination, which focuses on the ABA rules. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [18]

Where time period between effective date of discipline and eligibility to apply to return to active practice would not necessarily be long enough for respondent to take and pass professional responsibility examination before hearing on fitness to practice, review department did not recommend that respondent be given less than the normal one-year period to pass such examination. Passage of the examination would be relevant evidence at fitness hearing but was not a condition precedent to return to practice. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [15]

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244.

The California Professional Responsibility Examination, when appropriately ordered, does assist in the rehabilitation of an errant attorney and, as a general proposition, the examination is an effective tool to measure an attorney's understanding and appreciation of the rules and statutes which are designed to protect the public and the best interests of the profession. However, when imposed as a condition of a reproval, the examination may only be required based on a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 956(a).) In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [2]

No decisional law requires automatic imposition of a requirement to take and pass a professional responsibility examination as a condition of a reproval. Routinely requiring the examination should be limited to cases in which the attorney's behavior has so far deviated from ethical norms as to warrant the serious step of either actual or wholly stayed suspension from practice. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [3]

Where the primary problem which caused respondent's misconduct was inadequate law office management, and respondent had already taken appropriate steps to ensure that future office management practices would greatly reduce the risk of a similar violation, ordering respondent to pass the California Professional Responsibility

Examination as a condition of respondent's private reproval would not be appropriate for public protection or have rehabilitative value. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [4]

Since 1976 the Supreme Court has required that all attorneys who are suspended from the practice of law in a disciplinary proceeding take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination. In the case of reprovals, however, an order that the reproved attorney take and pass the examination should not be imposed automatically. Conditions attached to a reproval may only be imposed based on a finding that protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. Where a reproved respondent had already taken steps to insure that his misdeeds would not reoccur, and taking the examination would not further assist him in recognizing his failings and preventing future misconduct, the examination requirement was not an appropriate condition of the reproval. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [4]

Review department declined to recommend that respondent take California Professional Responsibility Examination where respondent had recently taken and passed Professional Responsibility Examination in compliance with earlier public reproval. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [27]

Where respondent had timely complied with the requirement in a previous disciplinary matter that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination, by passing the exam less than three years earlier, the review department declined to recommend that respondent be required to take and pass the exam again in connection with subsequent discipline. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [14]

Respondent who did not fully appreciate fundamental office practices which would alleviate any future misunderstanding with a client concerning crucial decisions, status of litigation, fee disputes or withdrawal from representation was required to attend State Bar ethics school and complete a law office management course. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [16]

Where California Professional Responsibility Examination ("CPRE") had not yet been available when case was decided by hearing judge, review department modified hearing judge's discipline recommendation to substitute CPRE requirement for requirement to take and pass national professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [12]

Passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination would be relevant evidence in a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), but is not a condition precedent. Accordingly, respondent ordered to take PRE was given the standard period of one year to do so even though respondent's standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing might occur sooner. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [15]

There was no reason to recommend that respondent be ordered to take and pass the professional responsibility examination when he had recently been ordered to do so in a prior disciplinary matter; instead, the review department recommended that respondent be required to attend the State Bar's Ethics School program. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [20]

Ordinarily, a requirement that a disciplined attorney take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination is set forth as a separate requirement and not as a condition of probation. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [19]

Where respondent had been ordered to pass Professional Responsibility Examination in connection with recently-imposed prior discipline, review department deemed it unnecessary to require such passage in subsequent disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [16]

Requirement to take and pass professional responsibility examination was not appropriate where attorney had successfully completed examination in connection with previous discipline. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [19]

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had initially misrepresented his occupation in the course of his arrest, it was appropriate to impose requirement to take and pass professional responsibility examination as condition of public reproval. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [6]

When a requirement to take and pass the professional responsibility examination is attached as a condition to a reproval, wilful failure to comply may be cause for a separate disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [7]

174 Law Office Management/Trust Account Auditing Requirements (Standard 1.4(d))

Where the record demonstrated that the conduct of respondent was not venal, but rather totally oblivious to his obligations as a lawyer, the review department had great concern that respondent's lack of understanding of his obligations as an attorney posed a risk to the public. Under these circumstances the review department recommend that respondent not return to practice until such time as he completed certain educational requirements imposed as conditions of probation. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [11]

The greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations of probation which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection. Where the misconduct which gave rise to the probation involved failure to perform and communicate, the law office management plan, ethics school, and law office management course conditions of probation directly addressed the misconduct and were therefore significantly related to the underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

Greatest degree of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for violation significantly related to attorney's prior misconduct, especially where violation raises serious concern about need for public protection or shows probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Violation of probation which involved failing to comply with trust account audit condition was substantially related to respondent's underlying misconduct involving failure to keep accurate records of entrusted funds, failure to maintain sufficient funds in trust, and failure to account to clients and other persons to whom respondent had fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

Where there was no evidence that respondent's trust account practices were generally deficient, and respondent's essential ethical shortcoming involved misattributing ownership of funds, not failing to handle them properly as entrusted funds, it was not necessary to require respondent to attend special trust accounting class portion of Ethics School. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [16]

Where probation conditions requiring office organization plan and completion of Ethics School would amply address respondent's misconduct, review department deleted recommended probation condition requiring respondent to join and maintain membership in State Bar's Law Practice Management Section. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [6]

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

Where review department recommended actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law, and learning and ability in the general law, probation conditions requiring respondent to submit list of open files to probation monitor, draw up law office plan, and take law office management courses were unnecessary. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [20]

Where reproval would ordinarily have been appropriate for misconduct involving minor rule violations, but respondent had a prior public reproval and appeared to need to reorganize law practice, appropriate discipline was six months stayed suspension with probation conditions including trust accounting and completion of a law office management class. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [26]

Respondent who did not fully appreciate fundamental office practices which would alleviate any future misunderstanding with a client concerning crucial decisions, status of litigation, fee disputes or withdrawal from representation was required to attend State Bar ethics school and complete a law office management course. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [16]

Where respondent had abruptly abandoned both his client and his office, a requirement that respondent complete a course in law office management was an appropriate probation condition. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [19]

A trust account auditing requirement and a course on law office management were appropriate conditions of probation where respondent's misconduct included mishandling of client funds and stemmed from his failure to supervise his office staff properly. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [20]

An attorney's lengthy delay in notifying his client of receipt of a check in partial settlement of her case, and his failure to render a timely and appropriate accounting upon his withdrawal, which was aggravated by unilateral payment to himself of his fees, merited more than a public reproval. The attorney's handling of trust account records was required to be reviewed by an accountant for some period of time to ensure protection of other clients. However, in view of mitigating circumstances, subsequent corrective measures, and lack of harm to the client or her doctor, no actual suspension was necessary to protect the public. The Review Department recommended two months' stayed suspension, with one year's probation, periodic auditing of the attorney's trust account, and a professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [28]

Requirement of detailed trust account reporting as condition of probation was appropriate in matter involving misappropriation of entrusted funds. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [14]

Chaotic state of respondent's records and business practices, and lack of written fee agreements and client correspondence, warranted imposition of requirement to submit law office management plan and of State Bar supervision in order to protect the public and prevent any future misconduct. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [16]

Probation condition requiring detailed reporting on current client matters was excessively burdensome and not required for public protection in matter where respondent had not been found culpable of client neglect. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [17]

Trust account auditing was required as condition of probation in order to ensure against recurrence of respondent's misconduct, i.e., misappropriation of funds held to pay medical liens. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [23]

175 Required Notification re Imposition of Discipline (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 9.20; Standard 1.4(f))

For purposes of rule 9.20 of California Rules of Court, requiring attorneys to give advance notice of impending disciplinary suspension, notice is required for all cases pending as of filing date of suspension order, not effective date. Where respondent's declaration of compliance with rule 9.20 stated that respondent had given required notice in all cases pending as of suspension order's filing date, but State Bar alleged that respondent failed to do so in one client matter, respondent's having given informal notice of impending suspension and having substituted out of case prior to suspension order's effective date was not a defense. Notice of disciplinary charges thus properly alleged both violation of rule 9.20 and act of moral turpitude in filing false declaration. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [2 a, b]

California Rules of Court, rule 955 performs the critical prophylactic function of ensuring that all concerned parties learn about an attorney's discipline and keeps the disciplinary authorities apprised of the location of the attorney subject to discipline. While in isolated cases compliance with this rule has not been recommended for an attorney actually suspended for 90 days or more, the rule does not require a minimum actual suspension before recommending that an attorney comply with it, and it has on occasion been ordered by the Supreme Court in cases of 60 days' actual suspension; thus, judges have discretion to recommend compliance with the rule. In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861. [1a, b]

Where the hearing judge recommended for a defaulting attorney, among other things, an actual suspension of 60 days and until the attorney made restitution of unearned fees and until the State Bar Court granted the attorney's motion to terminate her actual suspension under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 205, the hearing judge should also have recommended compliance with paragraphs (a) and (c) of California Rules of Court, rule 955 if the actual suspension exceeded 90 days. In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861. [2a, b]

Where respondent made appearances without authority, committed acts of moral turpitude, failed to communicate with his clients and failed to return their file upon request, where there was aggravation including multiple acts of misconduct, bad faith, significant client harm, and indifference towards atonement or rectification, and where there was mitigation for no prior record in over 17 years of practice, the appropriate discipline recommendation was two years' stayed suspension and two years' probation on conditions, which included 75 days' actual suspension and compliance with rule 955. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [10]

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days, State Bar's request for a recommendation that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court as a means of forcing respondent to demonstrate submission to the disciplinary authority of the State Bar and the courts was rejected as no authority was found to support imposing a rule 955 requirement for this reason. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [5]

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days and the respondent had continuously been on administrative suspension for failing to pay bar dues for more than five years and on involuntary inactive enrollment for more than a year, there was no identifiable preventative benefit sufficient to recommend that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [6]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.430.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

Even though respondent had no clients or opposing counsel to notify of his disciplinary suspension under rule 955(a), California Rules of Court, he was still required to file the affidavit required by subdivision (c) of that rule. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent had been placed on inactive enrollment based on hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, review department recommended that if respondent provided proof of compliance with State Bar Court's notification rule (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 795.5) at time of inactive enrollment, respondent be excused from complying with Supreme Court's notification rule (rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court) upon disbarment, and also that respondent receive credit for time on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [9]

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729.

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

An attorney who is ordered to comply with rule 955 is required to file an affidavit under the rule whether or not the attorney has clients. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [3]

Disbarment is generally ordered for wilful breach of rule 955, and is particularly appropriate when a respondent repeatedly demonstrates indifference to successive disciplinary orders of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [8]

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

Where respondent had been continuously suspended from the practice of law for several years as a result of previous discipline, it was not appropriate to recommend that respondent be required to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court as part of the recommended discipline in a subsequent matter. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [13]

Where respondent had been interimly suspended following a criminal conviction, and had been ordered at that time to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, the State Bar Court did not recommend that he be required to comply with rule 955 again upon his disbarment. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [10]

Where the review department rejected the hearing judge's recommended discipline of three months actual suspension and imposed a private reproval, this rendered moot respondent's arguments against the hearing judge's recommended imposition of notification requirements pursuant to rule 955 of the California Rules of Court and the imposition of costs. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [23]

Where respondent in conviction matter had been ordered to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, at the time of respondent's interim suspension, and that suspension had remained in effect continuously since ordered, review department did not recommend that respondent be ordered to comply again in connection with final imposition of discipline. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [16]

For the purpose of determining culpability for violation of restitution requirement imposed as condition of disciplinary probation, it is inappropriate to distinguish between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" violations. Restitution conditions are as significant as the notification requirements in rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, as to which the Supreme Court has declined to draw such a distinction. The importance of the goals of restitution makes distinctions between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" failures to make restitution inappropriate. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [9]

Where respondent in conviction matter had complied with rule 955, California Rules of Court at time of respondent's interim suspension, and had not practiced since, order to comply with rule 955 again upon imposition of final discipline was not necessary. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [16]

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

Where respondent was already on actual suspension from prior matter and had been ordered to comply with rule 955 in that connection, review department recommended that Supreme Court again order compliance with rule 955 only if respondent's suspension in second matter was neither concurrent with nor immediately consecutive to suspension in first matter. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [15]

Compliance with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court (requiring notification of clients and other interested parties of the attorney's suspension) is not usually ordered where the period of actual suspension is less than ninety days. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [12]

Requirement to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court became inappropriate where length of recommended actual suspension was reduced to thirty (30) days. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [18]

Compliance with rule 955 is customary for suspensions of two years, but is discretionary, and neither rule 955 order nor probation were necessary where respondent had not lived in California for several years, did not practice law, and had not committed any misconduct for over six years. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [21]

Where review department rejected examiner's contention that one-year actual suspension should be recommended, and instead recommended sixty-day actual suspension, requirement that respondent comply with rule 955, Cal. Rules of Ct., was rejected as unnecessary. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [22]

176 Requirements to Show Rehabilitation (etc.) (Standard 1.2(c)(i)), 1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii))

Although case was submitted for ruling prior to effective date of 2014 revision of Standards, amended version of standard 1.2(c)(1), requiring showing of rehabilitation before resumption of practice after suspension, would apply to respondent when he became eligible to petition to resume practice. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [1]

Respondent's medical problems over the years were severe and extensive. The compelling circumstances clearly predominate and compel a look beyond a strict application of standard 1.7(b). Viewed holistically, respondent's extreme physical disabilities lessen the moral culpability of his misconduct. Thus, the public will be adequately protected by a lengthy suspension that will continue until respondent proves his rehabilitation, fitness, and ability to practice. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239. [5 a,b]

A showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, is normally required when an attorney is actually suspended for two or more years. Proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of the member's rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law are required by a preponderance of the evidence before the member is to be relieved of actual suspension. The purpose of staying the execution of a suspension and ordering probation with an actual suspension and a required showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is for public protection and attorney rehabilitation. Although all forms of attorney discipline have the key purpose of protecting the public, the legal community and the maintenance of high professional standards, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement offers public protection in a formal, although expedited proceeding which ensures moral fitness and legal learning before an attorney, suspended for over two years, is permitted to return to the practice of law. In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1 a-b]

In order to make a showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and be relieved from suspension, an attorney can petition as early as six months before the earliest date that the actual suspension may terminate. Also, since these proceedings are expedited, an attorney could demonstrate rehabilitation, fitness to practice law and present learning and ability in the general law without necessarily extending his or her actual suspension period. In probation revocation proceedings, the rules of procedure limit the actual suspension that can be imposed to the total amount of stayed execution originally imposed. However, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) condition does not necessarily extend the actual suspension of a respondent where a showing can be made within the period of actual suspension. Therefore, the review department concluded that the State Bar Court was not prohibited from recommending such a condition in a probation revocation proceeding even though the condition could result in an actual suspension that exceeded the length of the originally imposed stayed suspension. To do otherwise would permit respondent to violate probation and resume the practice of law after being suspended for over five years, without ever making a showing of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law or his learning and ability in the general law, thus defeating the important level of public protection regularly recommended in lengthy suspensions.In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2 a-c]

In the hearing judge's discipline recommendation that respondent "be suspended from the practice of law for three years and until he provides proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) [of the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct], that said suspension be stayed; and that he be placed on probation for four years subject to the following conditions: . . ," the provision that respondent's three-year suspension continue until he proves his rehabilitation, fitness, learning, and ability in accordance with standard 1.4(c)(ii) is stayed along with the recommended three-year suspension so that, if the State Bar files a probation revocation proceeding against respondent seeking to have all, or a part, of the three-year stayed suspension imposed on him, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) would be an available condition. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [13]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [3]

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.430.

The aggravating effect of prior discipline may be diminished if misconduct underlying prior discipline occurred contemporaneously with misconduct currently under consideration. However, where at time respondent committed current misconduct, he was either involved in disciplinary process or was actually on disciplinary probation, this indicated that respondent's prior discipline had very little impact on his behavior, and demonstrated respondent's inability to conform his conduct to ethical norms. In such circumstances, greater showing required in reinstatement would better protect public than showing required to return to practice after suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Accordingly, application of standard calling for disbarment for third imposition of discipline was appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [15]

Where respondent violated conditions of disciplinary probation by failing to turn over former client's files and records, precluding accountant from assessing losses incurred due to respondent's misconduct so that determination could be made regarding restitution, such probation violations were serious and warranted lengthy actual suspension and requirement to prove rehabilitation, learning in the law, and fitness to practice before returning to law practice. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [4]

Normally, the requirement that a disciplined attorney show rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the law prior to returning to practice is imposed where the attorney's actual suspension is two years or greater. However, where period of time that attorney was enrolled inactive on account of failure to answer notice to show cause, coupled with one-year actual suspension recommended by review department, resulted in attorney being continuously ineligible to practice law for greater than two years, it was appropriate to recommend compliance with such requirement. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [5]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

Where respondent had been found culpable of misconduct arising from his abdication of responsibility for his law practice to a non-lawyer, review department recommended that hearing regarding respondent's fitness to return to practice focus on adequate assurance that respondent could institute a law practice with appropriate ethical safeguards. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [9]

Where review department recommended that respondent be required to establish entitlement to return to good standing under standard 1.4(c)(ii) before actual suspension could be terminated, continuing education requirement recommended by hearing judge as condition of probation was not adopted by review department, because standard 1.4(c)ii) inquiry would evaluate steps respondent had taken to establish fitness to practice and present learning. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [10]

Where review department recommended actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law, and learning and ability in the general law, probation conditions requiring respondent to submit list of open files to probation monitor, draw up law office plan, and take law office management courses were unnecessary. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [20]

Requiring respondent to show rehabilitation and fitness to practice before termination of two-year actual suspension was particularly appropriate where respondent was placed on interim suspension shortly after admission to practice due to conviction for criminal conduct committed before admission, which, if conviction had occurred prior to admission, would likely have resulted in denial of admission and requirement to reapply after two years. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [13]

In hearing to establish fitness to return to practice after suspension, respondent could either show that restitution had been completed or that restitution had been made to the best of respondent's financial ability. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [14]

Where time period between effective date of discipline and eligibility to apply to return to active practice would not necessarily be long enough for respondent to take and pass professional responsibility examination before hearing on fitness to practice, review department did not recommend that respondent be given less than the normal one-year period to pass such examination. Passage of the examination would be relevant evidence at fitness hearing but was not a condition precedent to return to practice. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [15]

Where respondent was still on suspension in prior matter due to failure to make showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), hearing judge's recommendation that actual suspension in current matter be consecutive to such suspension was inconsistent with recommendation that only one 1.4(c)(ii) hearing be required to terminate both suspensions. Review department therefore recommended that actual suspension in current matter be prospective to Supreme Court's order, but concurrent with balance of all suspensions in effect as of entry of such order. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [22]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

Where respondent had not yet complied with a prior discipline order to demonstrate rehabilitation and present fitness to practice before being relieved of the actual suspension in that prior proceeding, no useful purpose would be served by requiring respondent to comply with this requirement twice; one showing would satisfy the requirement as to both the prior and subsequent proceedings. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [11]

Where an attorney previously involved in serious drug abuse had ceased such abuse unilaterally and did not present any expert evidence of current freedom from substance abuse, and the attorney did not submit any evidence of present learning and ability in the law following an interim suspension the length of which exceeded the attorney's prior period of licensure, public protection would be served by continuing the attorney's actual suspension until the attorney established freedom from drug dependency and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [4]

Under applicable expedited hearing procedures, a respondent may apply for a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) up to 150 days before the respondent's actual suspension is set to expire. (Rules 810-826, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [15]

Where relevant facts and circumstances surrounding perjury conviction were serious, and respondent had not yet demonstrated sufficient rehabilitation, but in light of mitigation and circumstances as a whole disbarment was not necessary, lengthy actual suspension, including some prospective suspension, and standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement were appropriate discipline. However, review department reduced length of recommended prospective suspension to reflect time expired since issuance of hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [12]

Where examiner was concerned to obtain detailed, complete information regarding respondent's anticipated application to resume practice pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), review department recommended that respondent follow same format in application as in an application for reinstatement; otherwise, examiner could seek such information by a discovery request which would be more time consuming. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [14]

For an egregious rule violation, the State Bar may seek suspension of at least two years and application of standard 1.4(c)(ii); an attorney who can satisfy the showing required by standards 1.4(c)(ii) poses no continuing threat to the public warranting disbarment. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [11]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

Requirement that respondent comply with standard 1.4(c)(ii) before returning to active practice after suspension was particularly appropriate where respondent defaulted in disciplinary proceeding, indicating a need for an affirmative showing of fitness prior to resuming practice. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [14]

Probation is not mandated in all cases where an actual suspension is imposed. When a lengthy period of actual suspension is recommended, imposing the provisions of standard 1.4(c)(ii) in lieu of a probation grant may serve adequately to protect the public and test the attorney's rehabilitation. Probation may not be indicated by virtue of the nature of the misconduct, the passage of time since the misconduct or clear evidence of the attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [11]

Where review department recommended that respondent be suspended for one year and until respondent made restitution to clients, review department also recommended that if respondent was suspended for more than two years, he be required to make showing required by standard 1.4(c)(ii). In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [16]

Where the review department recommended that an attorney be placed on actual suspension for six months and until payment of restitution, the review department also recommended that if such actual suspension amounted to more than two years, the attorney should be required, before being relieved of the suspension, to show fitness to practice, rehabilitation, and present ability and learning in the law. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [12]

While standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearings are not appropriate in all cases where a two-year suspension is ordered, such a hearing appears particularly appropriate where lengthy suspension is recommended in a default proceeding. A defaulting attorney has called into question the propriety of the attorney's automatic return to practice by failing to appear in defense of the serious charges levied against the attorney. Public protection requires that after a lengthy suspension, the attorney not resume practice without demonstrating rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [21]

Procedural rules proposed by State Bar which would permit attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing to make required showing by preponderance of evidence; would allow stipulation that attorney meets conditions; would guarantee opportunity to make required showing before expiration of two-year actual suspension; and would provide for expedited review, appeared to answer Supreme Court's concerns regarding conduct of such hearings. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [22]

177 Limitations on Practice

Where review department recommended actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law, and learning and ability in the general law, probation conditions requiring respondent to submit list of open files to probation monitor, draw up law office plan, and take law office management courses were unnecessary. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [20]

178 Requirement to Pay Costs (rules 5.129, 5.130)

Note: For award of costs to exonerated respondent (rule 5.131), see topic number 133.

178.10 Cost requirement imposed

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.430.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161.

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

178.50 Cost requirement not imposed

Since an admonition does not constitute either an exoneration or the imposition of discipline, neither respondent nor State Bar is entitled to an award of costs. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [7]

Where the review department rejected the hearing judge's recommended discipline of three months actual suspension and imposed a private reproval, this rendered moot respondent's arguments against the hearing judge's recommended imposition of notification requirements pursuant to rule 955 of the California Rules of Court and the imposition of costs. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [23]

178.70 Relief from Costs

178.71 Relief granted

In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161.

It was not an abuse of discretion for the hearing judge to conclude that partial relief from costs was justified, even in the absence of evidence of bad faith on the part of counsel for the State Bar, based on the State Bar's lack of responsiveness to respondent's extraordinary efforts to provide information and good faith offers to settle the matter prior to the filing of formal charges. Elimination of all costs assessed for the stage after filing formal charges,and of half of the State Bar's costs for the pre-filing stage, was within the hearing judge's discretion. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [3]

Reducing costs recoverable by the State Bar in a disciplinary matter by a significant amount where, in the interest of justice, it appears appropriate, serves the salutary purposes of both promoting substantial savings in litigant and judicial resources and enhancing public protection by discouraging unnecessary delay in the imposition of stipulated discipline. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [7]

178.75 Relief denied

The statute governing cost awards in disciplinary proceedings expressly excludes attorney fees from recoverable costs to either the State Bar or the respondent. Accordingly, the provision of the statute permitting reduction of costs for good cause cannot be interpreted to permit an offset for a party's incurrence of additional attorney's fees due to the other party's bad faith tactics in failing to comply with a settlement agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [11]

178.77 Showing required for relief

Under rules 460 and 461 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the costs assessed in discipline matters are derived from a formula established by a committee of the State Bar Board of Governors which reflects average chargeable costs. The level of costs assessed depends on the stage at which a matter is resolved. The use of these cost models is appropriate as a simple and efficient means of assessing costs, but does not prevent a respondent from seeking, or a hearing judge from granting, relief from costs in an appropriate case. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [1]

Under Business and Professions Code section 6086.10(c) and rules 462 and 464 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, an attorney ordered to pay disciplinary costs may be granted full or partial relief from such order, or an extension of time to pay, based on hardship, special circumstances, or other good cause. Good cause for such relief may include consideration of the conduct of counsel for the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [2]

178.90 Other Issues re Costs (including rules 5.132-5.134)

Right to recover costs is purely statutory. That is courts have no discretion to award costs that are not statutorily authorized. However, because Supreme Court retains inherent and original jurisdiction over attorney disciplinary proceedings, Supreme Court might well adopt rules providing for or regulating recovery of costs in State Bar Court proceedings, but has not yet done so. Accordingly, right of attorneys to recover costs from the State Bar is granted solely by statute, which statute State Bar Court must strictly construe. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [1]

Statutory provision granting attorneys the right to recover costs from State Bar provides that attorneys who have been exonerated of all disciplinary charges following a trial are entitled to reimbursement from the State Bar "in an amount determined by the State Bar to be the reasonable expenses, other than fees for attorneys or experts, of preparing for [trial]" without defining "reasonable expenses" (other than expressly excluding fees for attorneys and experts) and without prescribing the method by which State Bar is to determine what they are. Accordingly, State Bar Board of Governors properly exercised its statutory rule making authority and adopted State Bar Rule of Procedure 283 to define what expenses (or costs) are allowable as "reasonable expenses" for which exonerated attorneys may obtain reimbursement under statute and to provide the procedure by which exonerated attorneys are to seek reimbursement from the State Bar for those expenses. In absence of Supreme Court authority to the contrary, the State Bar Court may award exonerated attorneys reimbursement from the State Bar for reasonable expenses only if they are specified as allowable expenses in Rule of Procedure 283. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

A disciplinarily suspended attorney does not have to pay the costs of the disciplinary proceeding as a condition of reinstatement where the attorney has not also been administratively suspended for failure to pay such costs as part of the attorney's next annual bill for membership fees. No such automatic administrative suspension occurred here and therefore, respondent was not culpable of the unauthorized practice of law for appearing in court as counsel for a client after the date that his actual suspension terminated but before he had paid the disciplinary costs and was reinstated. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [8]

Under applicable provisions of the State Bar Act, read together, costs of a disciplinary proceeding need not be paid by a disciplinarily suspended member of the State Bar as a condition of reinstatement of active membership unless the member has also been administratively suspended for failure to pay such costs as part of the member's next annual bill for membership fees. (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 6140(b), 6140.7, 6142, 6143.) In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161. [1]

A statute raising constitutional questions must be construed in a manner that avoids any doubt as to its validity. Because there is no provision for challenging a disciplinary cost award prior to the issuance of the Supreme Court's disciplinary order, due process concerns would be implicated if the costs statute were interpreted to mean that a State Bar member receiving an actual disciplinary suspension must pay the associated costs prior to being entitled to resume practice at the conclusion of the disciplinary suspension. In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161. [2]

Statute providing for respondents to pay costs of disciplinary proceeding upon determination of sanction of public reproval or greater discipline, and also providing for assessment of costs against State Bar in case of complete exoneration of attorney, is neutral in its application. Moreover, since salaries of State Bar Court judges are set by statute and are unaffected by assessment or collection of costs by State Bar, and State Bar Court's ruling on costs is only a recommendation to Supreme Court that costs be assessed, cost statute does not provide basis for alleging bias of State Bar Court judges based on alleged personal financial interest. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [6]

Where review department imposed public reproval, it was statutorily required to order that respondent pay costs of disciplinary proceeding. Respondent's request to be relieved of such order to pay costs, on ground that State Bar abused its discretion in filing one of the charges, was rejected as premature in light of statute and rules permitting respondent to seek relief from order assessing costs after its effective date. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 460-464.) In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [10]

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

Respondents in public proceedings should anticipate that their names will be published in any opinion except those resulting in dismissal or private reproval or, in the case of remanded proceedings, those which may potentially result in dismissal or private reproval. Accordingly, where respondent was on notice that petition for review of order denying relief from costs would probably be referred to review department in bank, and where respondent had already been required to notify clients, courts and opposing counsel of his suspension, review department declined to omit respondent's name from published opinion in relief from costs matter. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [1]

Where a party did not seek review of that portion of an order on a motion for relief from costs with which it disagreed, but stated its disagreement in its brief on review without seeking affirmative relief, that party's challenge to the order was not properly before the review department in a proceeding resulting from the opposing party's petition for review of a different portion of the same order. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [2]

The standard for review of rulings on chargeable costs is abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [3]

Under rules 460 and 461 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, the costs assessed in discipline matters are derived from a formula established by a committee of the State Bar Board of Governors which reflects average chargeable costs. The level of costs assessed depends on the stage at which a matter is resolved. The use of these cost models is appropriate as a simple and efficient means of assessing costs, but does not prevent a respondent from seeking, or a hearing judge from granting, relief from costs in an appropriate case. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [1]

Where a party sought review by the Presiding Judge of an order granting relief from costs under rule 462(c) of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, and the matter presented an important question of first impression, the Presiding Judge referred the matter to the review department in bank. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [4]

The appropriate standard of review for an order granting relief from costs is abuse of discretion, which is the standard of review for orders taxing costs in civil cases and is also the standard of review generally applied to procedural motions in the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent J (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273. [5]

Where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed due to State Bar's failure to bring forth clear and convincing evidence to support any of the charges, respondent was entitled by statute to reimbursement for the reasonable expenses of preparation for hearing, but State Bar Court was not authorized to award respondent any amount for attorney fees. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [9]

179 Other Issues re Conditions Imposed as Part of Discipline

Respondent was unable to confront her husband concerning his handling of the trust account. Absent equally strong evidence of respondent's recovery from such a disability concerning such a fundamental duty of a lawyer the review department would recommend severe remedial discipline. Respondent's compelling evidence of her actions to terminate her relations with her husband and her continuing psychiatric treatment make clear that such a recovery is well under way. Respondent expressed remorse for the misconduct; was candid with the State Bar in stipulating to the misconduct; has taken effective steps to avoid a repetition of that misconduct including severing her relations with her husband and continuing in therapy; and has made a contribution to society in seeking, and obtaining, legislation dealing with human reproduction. While serious misconduct occurred as the result of respondent's inattention to financial matters, including the trust account she maintained with her husband, a future recurrence of such problems is unlikely. The hearing judge's recommended condition of continued psychiatric treatment lends assurance to this conclusion. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [7]

Where State Bar neither impeached nor rebutted attorney's testimony that he had not gambled for more than five years, where State Bar did not proffer any expert testimony that attorney suffered from compulsive gambling, and where there was no evidence that attorney currently suffered from compulsive gambling, record did not support hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to attend Gamblers Anonymous meetings while on disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [12]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [3]

In default proceeding, no loss of public protection occurs when specific probation conditions are not immediately imposed on attorney who is placed on actual suspension because such attorney will be prohibited from practicing law for duration of attorney's actual suspension and until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [4]

Failure to recommend period of stayed suspension merely because attorney failed to appear in disciplinary proceeding results in marked reduction in public protection and in defaulting attorney receiving less discipline than attorneys who appear and participate in disciplinary process. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [6]

Despite the mandate in State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 290(a) that every imposition of discipline (other than reprovals) include a requirement that attorney attend State Bar Ethics School, the appropriate time to consider imposing State Bar Ethics School as a condition of probation in default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until the attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205, is at the time of ruling on the rule 205 motion to terminate the actual suspension. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[7]

Disciplinary recommendation in a default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205 may, in appropriate cases, require that attorney's actual suspension continue until attorney attends State Bar Ethics School. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[8]

While rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure does not specifically preclude a hearing judge in a default matter from recommending a period of actual suspension be imposed as a condition of probation along with appropriate additional conditions of probation, the rule clearly contemplates that probation and its attendant conditions be imposed at the time the defaulting attorney brings a motion under rule 205(c) to terminate his or her actual suspension. The entire purpose of rule 205 is to eliminate the necessity of multiple proceedings against an attorney who is unwilling to participate in the disciplinary process and evidences no interest in maintaining his or her membership in the bar. Under rule 205 the burden is placed on a defaulting attorney to bring forward to the State Bar Court his or her interest in continuing the right to practice. The appropriate time to consider imposing probation and its attendant conditions is when the attorney seeks relief from the actual suspension that may be imposed following his or her default in a disciplinary proceeding. It is only at that time that the court has before it an attorney who evidences a willingness to comply with conditions of probation and a full understanding of the reasons for the attorney's failure to participate in the disciplinary process. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [2 a, b]

Attendant to a recommendation of suspension, the State Bar Court lacks the authority to impose conditions of probation without the prior approval of the Supreme Court. Therefore, it is appropriate, in any decision or opinion made under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure recommending the actual suspension of an attorney, to recommend to the Supreme Court that the disciplined attorney be ordered to comply with the conditions of probation, if any, reasonably related to the found misconduct that the State Bar Court may impose as conditions of probation attendant on terminating the actual suspension of that attorney. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [3]

Attorney discipline is under the control of the Supreme Court and the State Bar Court may only recommend such discipline for the approval of the Supreme Court. As a consequence the clear parameters of any proposed discipline must be included in the State Bar Court's recommendation to the Supreme Court. Both stayed and actual suspension are discipline within the context of attorney discipline. It follows that in any recommendation for discipline made to the Supreme Court under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure must include, if appropriate, a period of stayed suspension. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [4 a, b]

There is nothing in rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure that expressly precludes the State Bar Court from recommending appropriate preconditions to a defaulting and disciplined attorney bringing a motion to terminate his or her actual suspension under rule 205, such as recommended in this matter by the hearing judge, requiring respondent to make restitution and attend Ethics School. However, the requirement that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination prior to bringing a motion for relief from suspension is in conflict with Supreme Court case law requiring that a disciplined attorney be given a minimum of one year within which to pass the examination. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [5 a, b]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent, or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[1]

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[4]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[1]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[2]

When a party seeks or consents to a court's action that is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the party may be estopped to complain of the court's action as long as the court had subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent was estopped from collaterally attacking a final order extending the time in which he was required to comply with conditions attached to a reproval where he consented to the order and where the court had jurisdiction of the subject. The review department concluded that the application of estoppel was in harmony with the primary goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[3]

Disciplinary probation furthers the fundamental purposes of attorney discipline only when attorney probationers are effectively monitored to ensure that they do not engage in further misconduct and are conforming their conduct to the ethical strictures of the profession. Historically, attorney probationers have been monitored to ensure their compliance with these requirements through appointed voluntary probation monitors or through court-ordered self-reporting by the attorney or both. Even though probation monitors have played an important role in monitoring attorneys on probation and were, at one time, appointed in most instances, the use of a probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple, periodic reporting conditions are recommended or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. Appointment of a probation monitor was not warranted in this case in light of the simple probation conditions recommended and the found misconduct, mitigation, and aggravation. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [3]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

Reproval conditions attached to respondent's two prior reprovals requiring him to file quarterly probation reports were important steps towards respondent's rehabilitation and important means of protecting the public because they permitted the State Bar to monitor respondent's compliance with ethical standards. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

In respondent's second disciplinary proceeding for his failure to comply with the quarterly reporting requirements imposed on him under two prior reprovals, it was inappropriate to include, in the discipline recommendation, a reporting condition with a lower frequency of reporting than that previously imposed on respondent, which he had been unable or unwilling to comply. Absent extraordinary and enunciated circumstances, the reporting condition should have at least required that respondent demonstrate that he can now comply with the reporting requirements previously imposed on him under his two reprovals by imposing the same reporting requirements on him prospectively. Recommending a lower reporting requirement would "reward" respondent for his noncompliance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

The review department rejected the argument that respondent was not culpable of violating probation conditions because he was actually suspended from the practice of law during the entire time that the probation conditions were in effect as a result of other disciplinary orders and therefore his probation was de facto revoked. The Supreme Court placed respondent on probation and the order was not revoked or modified. If respondent believed that subsequent events impacted the order, or if he was unclear of the requirements of the order, he could have raised the issue with the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court, which he did not do. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [1]

Respondent was not given credit for the period of time he was ineligible to practice law against the time period he must wait before he may petition for reinstatement. The ban on respondent's practice for which he sought credit resulted from other disciplinary proceedings, not from the present case and, therefore, was not a related interim ban on his practice. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [8]

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days, State Bar's request for a recommendation that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court as a means of forcing respondent to demonstrate submission to the disciplinary authority of the State Bar and the courts was rejected as no authority was found to support imposing a rule 955 requirement for this reason. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [5]

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days and the respondent had continuously been on administrative suspension for failing to pay bar dues for more than five years and on involuntary inactive enrollment for more than a year, there was no identifiable preventative benefit sufficient to recommend that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [6]

Where, after prior discipline in connection with violation of statutory contingent fee limit in medical negligence cases, respondent continued to assert that such fee limit did not apply to particular case, it was appropriate to require as condition of disciplinary probation that respondent provide written retainer agreements to all medical negligence plaintiff clients not paying on hourly basis; that such agreements disclose statutory fee schedule; and that disclosures regarding fee limit be contained in such fee agreements and in declarations to be presented to judges approving respondent's petitions for attorney representation or attorney fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [24]

Respondent's unilateral and ill-conceived interpretations of disciplinary orders demonstrated tendency toward interpreting important and significant court orders in such a way as to fit his needs, which might negatively impact future clients and thus raised concern about need to protect public. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Period of stayed suspension was required for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c), California Rules of Court, so as to provide enforcement mechanism for compliance with terms and conditions of probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [16]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where respondent believed that after notice to show cause in disciplinary probation revocation proceeding had been filed, his probation was terminated and he no longer needed to comply with probation reporting requirement, but respondent took no steps to ascertain whether this belief was correct, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to file required probation report, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7]

Where respondent requested "credit for time served" based on his having voluntarily limited his law practice to avoid misconduct, but cited no authority supporting such request, and where much of respondent's misconduct occurred after date he testified he terminated his practice, review department declined to give such credit. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [11]

Requirements for quarterly probation reports and monthly restitution payments as conditions of disciplinary probation were important steps toward rehabilitation, and were appropriate from effective date of Supreme Court discipline order, rather than being delayed until after respondent resumed active law practice. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [14]

Where extended time had passed since hearing judge's decision in consolidated probation revocation and original discipline matters, during which time respondent had been ineligible to practice law, review department recommended that actual suspension in original discipline matter be fully concurrent with, and retroactive to effective date of, respondent's actual suspension in probation revocation matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [25]

Disbarment is a remedy generally available for statutory violations in original disciplinary proceedings, but not in probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [6]

Where review department recommended respondent's disbarment, issue of whether respondent should be given credit toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), on account of time spent on continuous suspension prior to disbarment, was properly reserved for consideration by a hearing judge on an appropriate petition following the disbarment. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7]

The Supreme Court has expressly approved retroactive disciplinary suspension. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [9]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

From the point of view of a suspended attorney, the effect of a suspension is the same regardless of whether it is called interim or actual: the attorney is denied the right to practice law for the duration of the suspension. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [12]

Normally, the requirement that a disciplined attorney show rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the law prior to returning to practice is imposed where the attorney's actual suspension is two years or greater. However, where period of time that attorney was enrolled inactive on account of failure to answer notice to show cause, coupled with one-year actual suspension recommended by review department, resulted in attorney being continuously ineligible to practice law for greater than two years, it was appropriate to recommend compliance with such requirement. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [5]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

Where review department recommended that respondent be required to establish entitlement to return to good standing under standard 1.4(c)(ii) before actual suspension could be terminated, continuing education requirement recommended by hearing judge as condition of probation was not adopted by review department, because standard 1.4(c)ii) inquiry would evaluate steps respondent had taken to establish fitness to practice and present learning. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [10]

Evidence needed to establish culpability of failure to comply with probation conditions regarding content of required quarterly reports was (1) text of probation conditions in question; (2) evidence that respondent had notice of such conditions; (3) text of quarterly reports at issue, and (4) evidence of wilful failure to comply with probation conditions, which was established by respondent's testimony that statement at issue was not included in reports due to respondent's interpretation of probation conditions. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [2]

Where respondent in probation revocation matter had been continually suspended from practice of law for preceding four years, review department did not need to order that respondent be placed on inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(d) pending final Supreme Court order. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 612(b).) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [23]

The California Professional Responsibility Examination, when appropriately ordered, does assist in the rehabilitation of an errant attorney and, as a general proposition, the examination is an effective tool to measure an attorney's understanding and appreciation of the rules and statutes which are designed to protect the public and the best interests of the profession. However, when imposed as a condition of a reproval, the examination may only be required based on a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 956(a).) In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [2]

An attorney is not a good candidate for suspension and/or probation where that attorney has failed to comply with the terms and conditions of a prior criminal probation, and has failed to participate in present and past disciplinary proceedings. These facts reflect the attorney's disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and clearly demonstrate that the risk of future misconduct is great. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [29]

Attorney could not be found culpable of violating probation by failing to respond to an inquiry from the State Bar Court, as required by conditions of his probation, where the notice to show cause in the probation revocation proceeding referred only to the requirement to file quarterly reports, an independent probation condition, and such charge would be factually duplicative of previously-adjudicated charge of failing to file quarterly report. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [2]

Where respondent had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(c) prior to hearing on underlying charges, and after review, proceeding on underlying charges was remanded for partial rehearing and new discipline recommendation, review department directed that on remand, whether suspension or disbarment was recommended, respondent should receive credit for time spent on inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [25]

The goals of the State Bar's probation program are: (1) public protection; (2) rehabilitation of the respondent; (3) maintaining integrity of the legal profession; (4) enforcement of restitution orders; (5) aiding future enforcement and (6) partially alleviating discipline. These goals are to be realized by use of probation conditions which are innovative, individualized, rehabilitative and flexible and which are implemented using the efforts of volunteer probation monitor referees. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [6]

Probation is not mandated in all cases where an actual suspension is imposed. When a lengthy period of actual suspension is recommended, imposing the provisions of standard 1.4(c)(ii) in lieu of a probation grant may serve adequately to protect the public and test the attorney's rehabilitation. Probation may not be indicated by virtue of the nature of the misconduct, the passage of time since the misconduct or clear evidence of the attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [11]

Probation conditions which were not set forth in language of standard conditions of probation utilized in disciplinary proceedings were inadequate. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [20]

Where delay in commencement of disciplinary probation until end of actual suspension would not further rehabilitation objective of probation, review department recommended that probation commence on finality of Supreme Court's discipline order. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [21]

179.10 Consistency with primary purpose of discipline (Standard 1.4(g))

179.20 Motions for relief under rule 9.10, Cal. Rules of Ct. (rule 5.162)

179.90 Other issues

190 Miscellaneous General Issues in State Bar Court Proceedings

191 Effect of/Relationship to Other Proceedings

Members of the State Bar may be disciplined on the basis of their pre-admission misconduct. State Bar Moral Character Committee's consideration for moral character purposes of respondent's pre-admission misdemeanor conviction did not bar State Bar Court from considering it for discipline purposes. Records relating to respondent's admission to the State Bar were admissible in his post-admission disciplinary proceeding, especially where respondent failed to object at trial to being questioned about such records. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [2]

Order issued by federal bankruptcy court in California suspending respondent from practice for misconduct was conclusive evidence that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [1]

State Bar Court gives strong presumption of validity to superior court's findings if supported by substantial evidence, and may rely on court of appeal opinion in case where attorney was party as conclusive determination of civil matters strongly similar or identical to charged disciplinary conduct. Where respondent had been ruled a vexatious litigant by both trial and appellate courts, and rulings were supported by clear and convincing evidence, respondent was culpable of maintaining unjust actions in violation of section 6068(c). In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [2]

Where respondent unsuccessfully sought restraining order seeking to halt disciplinary proceedings three days before trial, this was additional evidence of aggravating factor that respondent failed to accept responsibility for his actions. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [8]

Hearing judge did not abuse discretion in denying respondent's motion to abate, filed one month before disciplinary trial, in order to protect public, where respondent's grounds for seeking abatement were not persuasive. Pending civil proceeding involving same client as disciplinary matter dealt with recovery of damages based on breach of contract and fraud, while issue in discipline matter was whether respondent performed with competence. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

While the purpose of a civil proceeding differs from that of a disciplinary matter, review department considers findings in civil matter, which are entitled to a strong presumption of validity, where issues in civil matter bear a strong similarity or identity to charged disciplinary conduct. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [3]

Issues presented in civil matter bore strong identity with issues in disciplinary matter where the civil lawsuit involved the same sales transaction that was the focus of the disciplinary proceeding, an expert witness testified about the nature of the attorney/client relationship and its ramifications on sale in question, the jury considered the same facts contained in the stipulation in the disciplinary matter, and the jury found in favor of the respondent. Further, the jury's findings, which were made under the preponderance of the evidence standard, were supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [4]

There is no reason to preclude the use of civil findings merely because they are exculpatory of a respondent. To conclude otherwise would give the State Bar an unfair advantage, allowing it to use prior civil findings that are adverse to respondents in establishing culpability, while precluding those same respondents from relying on prior civil findings that help them defend against disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [5]

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

While allegations in an original proceeding are deemed admitted after a default is entered, in a conviction referral matter, even after a default, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence any facts or circumstances it maintains are relevant to the conviction. If respondent in conviction referral proceeding had repliedinstead of defaulting, he could have sought to discover the State Bar's contentions of specific facts surrounding the conviction, and the court could have required the parties to exchange pretrial statements to identify factual contentions still in dispute before trial. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [3]

Civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

Because a stipulation remains binding on a party in a subsequent proceeding unless the court relieves the party from the stipulation, respondent's stipulation with Sacramento county counsel as part of a settlement of a civil contempt proceeding which stipulated to the findings in a sanctions order constituted stipulated findings, which, standing alone, were sufficient to meet the clear and convincing standard. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

Where preliminary and permanent injunctions prohibited respondent's client and the agents of respondent's client from filing any actions relating to certain realty, respondent's filing of a quiet title action in superior court and recording of a lis pendens on behalf of a company the client owned violated Business and Professions Code section 6103 because respondent had actual knowledge of the restraints imposed by the injunctions and because respondent was acting as an agent of the client. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [1 a–c]

An attorney's conviction of a crime pursuant to a plea of nolo contendere is conclusive proof that the attorney committed all acts necessary to constitute the offense. Thus, respondent's convictions on two counts of violating Penal Code section 549 based on respondent's recklessness and not his actual knowledge conclusively establish that he acted in reckless disregard of the unlawful intentions of others. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [5]

The fact that petitioner waited almost ten years after he resigned before he made restitution did not detract from petitioner's showing of rehabilitation since he demonstrated a proper attitude and sincerity toward restitution by voluntarily choosing not to discharge debts owed to creditors who were former clients or lienholders and by fully reimbursing all but one of his victims. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [3a, b]

When a member of the State Bar has committed misconduct prior to admission to practice law, the State Bar may seek the attorney's discipline or seek to recommend the cancellation or revocation of the member's law license. Depending on the balance of facts and circumstances unique to each case, either or both alternatives could be considered in appropriate cases. It appears that the Supreme Court considers cancellation the appropriate step when an applicant has wrongfully obtained the benefits of admission such as by intentional misrepresentation which prevents the Committee of Bar Examiners from adequately considering the applicant's fitness to practice. Although respondent should have timely updated her application to disclose to the Committee of Bar Examiners misdemeanor charges against her, as she had a duty to do so under the Rules Regulating Admission to Practice Law and it bore upon her application to practice law, the nondisclosure was not intended to and did not result in wrongfully conferring on respondent the benefit of law licensure. Given the formal record of the events surrounding respondent's misdemeanor charges before the review department, the Committee of Bar Examiners was not deprived of the opportunity to adequately consider respondent's fitness to practice such that respondent wrongfully obtained the benefit of law licensure. Therefore, the review department did not recommend cancellation of respondent's law license. In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746. [1a–d]

There was sufficient evidence to find that respondent failed to refund an unearned fee promptly upon the termination of employment where: the fee agreement provided for a fixed nonrefundable retainer fee and a contingent fee and provided that any modifications to the agreement had to be in writing and signed by both parties; respondent orally requested and received another $5,000 from the client above the amount called for in the written fee agreement; there was never a written modification to the fee agreement, such that respondent never earned the additional $5,000 fee; and respondent refused for approximately six months after the client obtained a judgment against him to refund the $5,000. The review department concluded that it could not consider whether the value of respondent's services exceeded the price for which he had agreed to perform them, since respondent would have been entitled to the entire fee set forth in the agreement if the services had been worth less than the price set forth in the fee agreement. Further, because respondent drafted the fee agreement, any ambiguities should be interpreted against him. The fiduciary relationship between an attorney and a client is of the very highest character, and transactions between them which are beneficial to the attorney are closely scrutinized for unfairness. In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [2 a-g]

When an attorney pleads nolo contendere to a felony wobbler, i.e., a crime that may be charged or judged either as a felony or misdemeanor, and that offense is declared to be a misdemeanor at sentencing or at the imposition of probation under Penal Code section 17, subdivision (b), the Legislature made it clear that it remains a felony for State Bar Act purposes even if it is later declared a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings, including proceedings resulting in punishment or probation. This does not mean that an attorney's conviction of a wobbler will always be of a felony. If the attorney's plea of guilty or nolo contendere or the verdict of guilty is to a misdemeanor charge, including a felony reduced to a misdemeanor at the time of the plea or verdict, the conviction will be of a misdemeanor.In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.[1 a-c]

After a review department opinion remanding a case to the hearing department for a new trial had become final, respondent could not, on a subsequent review following the new trial, continue to attack the findings and conclusions set forth in that opinion.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[1 a-c]

The State Bar is required by statute to disclose to criminal investigatory agencies certain incriminating information discovered about an attorney as a result of an investigation or formal proceeding. The State Bar also is obligated by statute to refer all convictions to the State Bar Court. Where it appeared that the State Bar complied with these statutory duties by disclosing information to federal authorities well before the start of trial in an earlier original proceeding and by notifying the State Bar Court after respondent sustained a federal conviction, there was no evidence that the subsequent State Bar Court conviction proceeding was the product of vindictive prosecution tactics of the State Bar.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[1]

A disciplinary proceeding arising from conviction of a crime is fundamentally different from and a complete alternative to an original proceeding brought under Business and Professions Code section 6075 et seq. The streamlined procedures following an attorney's conviction of a crime rest on proceedings in the criminal courts in which the burden is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These procedures recognize that the basis for attorney discipline is not the provable violation of a rule of professional conduct but the mere existence of a certified copy of an attorney's record of conviction. Only convictions which do not inherently involve moral turpitude are referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether there is a legal basis for imposing discipline, but even in these cases guilt is conclusively established by the record of conviction and is not subject to collateral attack. Thus, where a conviction proceeding was commenced in the State Bar Court, which proceeding arose from the same underlying facts as an earlier original proceeding in the State Bar Court, neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel acted as a bar to the conviction proceeding, since neither the issues nor the causes of action in the two types of proceedings are the same.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[2 a-g]

Except in conviction proceedings eligible for summary disbarment, in determining the degree of discipline to be imposed in a conviction proceeding where an earlier original proceeding rested on the same underlying facts, a court should take into consideration any discipline imposed in the earlier original proceeding. To assess the appropriate discipline in the conviction proceeding, and to ensure fundamental fairness, a court should consider: (1) whether discipline in the conviction proceeding is needed to protect the public or the courts or to maintain the integrity of the administration of justice; (2) the extent to which the hearing judge or the parties in the original proceeding addressed the underlying facts supporting the criminal conviction which forms the basis for the subsequent conviction proceeding; (3) whether the criminal conviction yielded any relevant information that was not considered by the hearing judge in the original proceeding; (4) whether the discipline imposed in the conviction proceeding would unfairly duplicate any discipline actually imposed in the original proceeding, or would otherwise be unfair to the respondent; and (5) the extent to which the public policy sought to be protected in the original proceeding relates to the public policy sought to be protected in the criminal conviction which forms the basis for the conviction proceeding.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[3 a, b]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

Where respondent's character evidence was not from a sufficiently wide range of references, did not demonstrate that each witness was aware of the full extent of respondent's misconduct, and did not address the State Bar's disciplinary concerns or discuss respondent's fitness for practice, the evidence was entitled to only limited weight in mitigation.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [5]

Reinstatement petitioner's outstanding income tax delinquencies of $458,000 and his offer to compromise and settle the delinquency with Internal Revenue Service for $50,000 did not show adverse moral character. This was not a case where petitioner concealed assets or his delinquencies. Nor was this a case where petitioner failed to file tax returns. Further, petitioner should not be deprived of the ability to take advantage of the offer in compromise procedures open to any citizen seeking to resolve a large delinquency, particularly when that delinquency consists of sizeable penalties and interest. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [8 a-d]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. Nevertheless, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence test are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in disciplinary proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. Where the trial judge in a civil proceeding found that respondent knew prior to filing a lawsuit that he had not been defamed, that his law firm had not been disparaged, and that his retainer contract with his clients had not been interfered with at all, and those findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record, the hearing judge's conclusion in the disciplinary proceeding that respondent filed the lawsuit based on his honest and reasonable belief in its validity was contrary to the civil findings and did not appear to have accorded the civil findings the strong presumption of validity to which they were entitled. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[1]

There is no authority for the proposition that the strong presumption of validity accorded to civil findings in a disciplinary proceeding shifts the burden of proof in the disciplinary proceeding to the respondent attorney to rebut the presumption. As in any discipline case, the State Bar bears the burden of proving culpability by clear and convincing evidence.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[2]

As respondent did not appeal the dismissal of a civil lawsuit, he could not assert in the discipline proceeding that the dismissal was in error, as collateral attack is not available to challenge non jurisdictional error in a judgment. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[3]

A cause of action in a civil proceeding based on factual allegations that respondent knew he could not prove was patently frivolous and unjust, and respondent's continued pursuit of the meritless factual allegations was strong circumstantial evidence that he was motivated by vindictiveness. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[4]

The aggravating weight of prior discipline was diminished where the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as did the misconduct underlying the present matter. Under such circumstances, the totality of the charges brought in both cases was considered in order to determine the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.[6]

Wilfulness for purposes of probation revocation (and other disciplinary) proceedings is simply a general purpose or willingness to commit an act or to make an omission; it does not require any intent to violate the law or the probation condition and does not necessarily involve bad faith. Moreover, wilfulness does not require actual knowledge of the provision violated. Respondent admitted that he did not pay the restitution, and there was no evidence in the record suggesting that this omission was other than a purposeful act. Thus, the failure to pay the restitution was unquestionably wilful under the above definitions. Whether respondent believed that he had no obligation to pay the money because the restitution was discharged in his bankruptcy was simply not relevant to the issue of the wilfulness of his failure to pay, as it need not be shown that respondent intended the consequences of his omission or was even aware of the disciplinary provision he was violating. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[3]

Procedures for ruling on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 630-641) are expedited to avoid procedural delays that might effectively create a far longer period of actual suspension than that originally ordered by the Supreme Court. Proceedings on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions are summary in nature, not full-fledged reinstatement proceedings in which disbarred attorneys seek to be reinstated to the practice of law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.[3]

Even though petitioner in a standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension did not know that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of his former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers and even though letters from the client's file demonstrated that medical providers had been paid, petitioner must still reimburse Client Security Fund for the monies it paid the client. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6140.5, subd. (c).) In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [5]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, State Bar Court presumes that the prior discipline imposed on petitioner was, based on the facts as shown in the prior record of discipline, appropriate to accomplish the goals of attorney discipline to protect the public, the courts, and the profession. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [8]

Because record in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension established (1) that, when petitioner committed the misconduct in his prior record that resulted in his actual suspension, he was abusing and addicted to alcohol and cocaine, (2) that his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine causally contributed to his prior misconduct, (3) that he had undergone a meaningful and sustained period of rehabilitation from his abuses and addictions, (4) that, when the discipline was imposed on him in his prior record, these facts were not known to State Bar, State Bar Court, the Supreme Court, and (5) that when discipline was imposed in prior proceeding, petitioner was in denial regarding his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine, review department found, when it reviewed record to determine whether hearing judge's findings of rehabilitation and present fitness were supported by substantial evidence, that petitioner's addictions were not excuses for, but explanations of his prior misconduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [9]

Because bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud when attorney incurred credit card debts were made under preponderance of the evidence standard and not clear and convincing standard applicable in disciplinary proceedings, hearing judge correctly (1) declined to apply principles of collateral estoppel to bind attorney with bankruptcy court's findings that attorney engaged in actual fraud; (2) reweighed evidence from bankruptcy court proceedings under clear and convincing standard after giving attorney fair opportunity to contradict, temper, and explain that evidence; and (3) permitted State Bar to present additional evidence regarding attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [3]

The application of collateral estoppel with respect to prior civil findings does not modify the fundamental requirement that the State Bar must establish each element of a disciplinary violation and aggravating circumstance by clear and convincing evidence. The State Bar may rely upon collateral estoppel to establish an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance only if that same element was found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence. If the same element was not found against the attorney in the civil proceeding by clear and convincing evidence, the State Bar must established that element in the State Bar Court with clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [1 a-c]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

The relevant testimony of a witness given in civil proceeding is admissible in disciplinary proceedings without regard to the witness's availability and is considered and weighed as though the witness was present and testifying in the disciplinary proceeding. Moreover, the State Bar Court may take judicial notice of non-testimonial matters (i.e., pleadings, exhibits, findings) in a civil action that involved the same conduct underlying the disciplinary charges against an attorney. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [3]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

The agreement between respondent and his client's subsequent counsel for respondent to refund $500 in unearned fees was sufficient to defeat the client's small claims suit against respondent to collect the advanced fee the client had paid him. Nonetheless, their agreement does not affect the ethical conclusion that respondent failed to earn any part of the fee paid.In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [2 a, b]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

The hearing judge erred when he held that the record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent filed a frivolous appeal. The general rule is that civil findings are not, by themselves, dispositive of the issues in a disciplinary case. Often the issues in the civil case may be either broader or narrower than the operative issues in a disciplinary proceeding. However, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in the State Bar Court if supported by substantial evidence. In order to hold that an appeal is frivolous, the law requires an extremely high showing, so that zealous but good faith appeals having any merit are neither deterred nor sanctioned. Accordingly, the court of appeal's decision finding that respondent's appeal of a case was frivolous and pursued in bad faith was, at the very least, a prima facie determination of such. Respondent failed to adduce evidence that overcame that determination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [1 a-d]

Unless civil sanctions issues arising under section 128.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are adequately litigated before the sanctioning court, it would appear inappropriate to apply collateral estoppel in the State Bar Court to the sanction order.In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [2]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

Even though Rules of Procedure adopted by State Bar's Board of Governors are not legislative acts, it is appropriate to construe them using rules for statutory interpretation/construction. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [4]

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [1 a-c]

With respect the considered views of the federal judge who presided over the criminal proceeding, the review department was bound by Supreme Court precedent rejecting consideration of very similar remarks by a sentencing judge expressing an opinion on an issue within the unique province of the Supreme Court and of the State Bar Court acting as the Supreme Court's arm. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [3]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

A retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions and conditions which are performed or exist prior to the adoption of the statute. Respondent's crimes were committed and her conviction occurred when the prior version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) was in effect and her offenses were not within the scope of the former version of the statute. In addition, as respondent would not have been subject to summary disbarment, she had a right under the former version of the statute to a hearing and to present evidence prior to the imposition of discipline. The application of the present version of section 6102, subdivision (c) under these circumstances would be retrospective. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [2]

It is presumed an amendment to a statute operates prospectively unless the Legislature has expressly stated the contrary or, after considering all pertinent factors, there is clear indication of a legislative intent that the statute operate retrospectively. Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) does not contain an express retroactivity provision and after considering extrinsic factors, including public protection and due process, the review department concluded that section 6102, subdivision (c) should not be applied retroactively. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [3]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

The State Bar Court determines whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension has met the requirements of standard 1.4(c)(ii) without reevaluating the petitioner's prior discipline, whether perceived as lenient or harsh. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [2]

The State Bar Court considers the prior misconduct of a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii), as well as the aggravating and mitigating circumstances surrounding such misconduct, to determine the amount and nature of the required rehabilitation. In addition, other misconduct that predates the last discipline and was not considered in the underlying disciplinary matters should be considered in weighing the starting point for measuring discipline. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [3]

Compliance with the terms of actual suspension and probation presumptively satisfies the discipline required for a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) to become a productive attorney. However, the petitioner must also show rehabilitation, present fitness to practice law, and present learning and ability in the general law. That showing must be measured from the time of the last prior discipline. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [4]

Where a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) had been disciplined several times, the misconduct underlying that discipline could not be used to rebut the petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, but can be used as a point from which to measure rehabilitation. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [5]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) must show compliance with the terms of probation. Also, the petitioner must show by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) his conduct has been exemplary from the time of the imposition of the last prior discipline and (2) the conduct evidencing rehabilitation is such that the court may make a determination that the conduct leading to the discipline or other need for rehabilitation is not likely to recur. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [10]

In determining whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is likely to commit further misconduct, the State Bar Court should look to the nature of the petitioner's underlying offense or offenses; any aggravation, other misconduct, or mitigation that may have been considered; and any evidence about elimination of the cause or causes of such misconduct. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [11]

Substantial evidence supported a decision relieving a petitioner from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) where the petitioner had eliminated the medical, emotional, and financial problems underlying his misconduct; had been disciplined for violating probation conditions and eventually had complied with the terms of his probation; had provided 13 declarations attesting to his major life changes and to his good character; had suffered from undiagnosed diabetes when he had been administratively suspended for failing to take the California Professional Responsibility In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

Examination within the time prescribed by a Supreme Court order; had paid a great many debts; had reached an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service about failing to file federal income tax returns and was paying the outstanding tax debt; had only three other debts, which were unrelated to the practice of law and which totalled $2,800 to $3,200; and had received and later paid a traffic ticket for speeding. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

A prior record of discipline is an aggravating factor regardless of when the discipline was imposed. Where misconduct addressed by a current disciplinary proceeding resembles misconduct addressed by a prior disciplinary proceeding and occurred after the filing of a notice to show cause in the prior proceeding, the filing alerted the attorney to the ethically questionable nature of the misconduct. Thus, the prior disciplinary proceeding warranted significant weight in aggravation to the extent that the misconduct addressed by the current proceeding happened after the filing of a notice to show cause in the prior proceeding. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [5]

Before the State Bar Court orders that an attorney be involuntarily enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code, section 6007, subdivision (d), it must weigh the need for public protection in light of the Supreme Court's inherent and plenary jurisdiction over attorney admissions and discipline. To order the involuntary inactive enrollment of an attorney under subdivision (d) any time its requirements are met without regard to whether there is an issue of public protection and to the length of the actual suspension recommended could conceivably defeat or materially impair the Supreme Court's inherent prerogatives. When measured against these criteria, the review department enrolled respondent inactive, concluding that respondent's four prior records of discipline and lack of any mitigating circumstances established a public protection issue, and that as the review department recommended an actual suspension of almost a year, there could be no reasonable expectation that the time elapsing between when respondent was enrolled inactive and the finality of the matter would equal or exceed the final actual suspension imposed by Supreme Court. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [7 a-e]

The only prerequisite to initiating a conviction referral proceeding against an attorney in the State Bar Court is a guilty plea by the attorney or a guilty verdict rendered against the attorney. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [1]

Criminal court's lenient sentence did not change the nature of respondent's convictions of felony conspiracy to commit theft and theft for disciplinary purposes and was therefore not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [7]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

Respondent's argument that res judicata bars this disciplinary proceeding because a similar matter was dismissed by the state bar of another state was rejected. First, res judicata is applicable with respect to only final judgements rendered on the merits. Second, the State Bar was not a party to the other disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [4]

Civil court records are proper subjects of judicial notice in moral character proceedings. Therefore, where applicant was a party to the civil proceeding and that proceeding involved many issues substantially identical to issues in the moral character proceeding, the hearing judge properly considered the civil court's jury verdicts, trial minutes and judgment, and a Court of Appeal's unpublished opinion. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [3]

Section 6049.2 of the Business and Professions Code authorizes the admission of transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings in State Bar disciplinary proceedings without proof of the witnesses' unavailability. However, section 6049.2 is, under its express terms, applicable only in disciplinary proceedings, and there is no parallel section permitting admission of prior transcripts in moral character proceedings. Accordingly, if a proper objection is made, transcripts of testimony from civil proceedings are admissible in moral character proceedings only upon a showing that the witnesses whose testimony is recorded in such transcripts are unavailable to testify. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [4]

In moral character cases, the Supreme Court must independently assess the weight that any civil court findings have with respect to State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal of applicant's prima facie showing of good moral character, in light of other evidence on rebuttal and applicant's showing, if any, in rehabilitation. The ultimate question is unique to moral character proceeding, in which no deference is owed to a civil judgment. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [5]

Prior civil court findings made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof merely constitute evidence in a State Bar Court proceeding, not the exclusive record upon which an issue must be adjudicated. While the State Bar may choose to proffer prior civil court findings as its entire case against an attorney or applicant on the underlying issue, the attorney or applicant then has the right to controvert, temper, or explain the civil findings with other evidence, including live testimony from the same witnesses who testified in the civil trial. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [6]

Prior civil court findings made under the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in State Bar Court proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [7]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court is bound by civil findings that exculpate a respondent of charged misconduct, or by an attorney's acquittal in a criminal case, or by the dismissal of criminal charges against an attorney. The reasons the State Bar is not bound by exculpatory civil findings or criminal acquittals in disciplinary proceedings are that the parties are different, the quantum of proof required in each proceeding is virtually always different, and the purposes of each proceeding are vastly different. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [10]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Review department took judicial notice of stipulation and Court of Appeal opinion in civil cases involving respondent that post-dated hearing department proceedings and concerned matters discussed at hearing. (Rule 1304, Prov. Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [1]

Clients may not waive statutory limit on contingent fees in medical negligence cases, and superior court award of such fees in excess of statutory limits is erroneous. Where attorney did not reveal material issue of potential applicability of such statutory fee limit to superior court in connection with approval of settlement and award of fees, such award did not constitute res judicata, because attorney and client were not adversaries in proceeding. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [9]

Where respondent's client's settlement had always been treated by civil court and by counsel in civil proceeding as having certain value, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that settlement had different value for purpose of applying statutory contingent fee limits was without merit. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [10]

Respondent's alleged misconduct in federal civil appeal was not entitled to any weight in aggravation where State Bar did not introduce any evidence regarding respondent's conduct other than appellate court opinion establishing respondent's failure to comply with federal rule of appellate procedure regarding form of briefs, and where record did not provide basis to determine whether respondent's noncompliance with such rule was isolated act of negligence or disciplinable offense, or to assess respondent's conduct independently under clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [12]

The State Bar Court may take judicial notice of the records of any California court. (See Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1); Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Such notice may include the facts stated in court orders, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgments. Although civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, they must be assessed independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

Conviction of violation of criminal statute is conclusive evidence of guilt of elements of that crime. Where respondent was convicted of battery on a police officer engaged in performance of official duties, and such officer's use of excessive force would have required finding that officer was not engaged in performance of official duties, respondent's conviction precluded State Bar Court from considering his claim that police initiated altercation or used excessive force in incident leading to respondent's conviction. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [8]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

Where respondent was a creditor of a client's bankruptcy estate and also represented the client in the bankruptcy, and where the only evidence about the bankruptcy proceeding showed that the claims of two other creditors were found non-dischargeable, there was no clear and convincing evidence to sustain a charge that respondent's representation of the client was improper under bankruptcy law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [8]

An attorney is charged with knowledge that the legal consequences of the attorney's conviction include summary disbarment when statutory authority provides therefor. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [1]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

An attorney convicted of a felony is chargeable with notice that the crime remains a felony for State Bar discipline purposes irrespective of whether in a particular case the crime may be considered a misdemeanor as a result of post-conviction proceedings. Under some circumstances, prosecutorial discretion in originally charging a particular crime as a felony rather than a misdemeanor may raise questions as to the propriety of summary disbarment, but no such issue was presented where there was no evidence of abuse of discretion or other unfairness in charging forgery of a court document as a felony. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [3]

Where respondent contended that he had only pleaded guilty in order to avoid two separate trials, and that he had not intended to commit a crime, due process did not entitle him to a hearing before the State Bar Court to prove these contentions, because he would be precluded from presenting evidence thereof by the statute providing that proof of an attorney's conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the elements of the crime in any proceeding to suspend or disbar the attorney. This conclusive presumption precludes collateral attack on the conviction by attorneys who seek to reassert their innocence in subsequent State Bar proceedings. In this regard, a conviction following a guilty plea is just as conclusive as a conviction following a full criminal trial. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [5]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

Respondent's conviction of grand theft and forgery was conclusive evidence of his guilt of all elements of those crimes. The grand theft conviction necessarily carried with it the specific intent to deprive the victim permanently of his funds. The forgery conviction necessarily showed that respondent acted without authority and with an intent to defraud. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [3]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

Where administrative proceeding in which respondent had not appeared had resulted in revocation of respondent's real estate license, and record of such administrative proceeding was relevant in State Bar disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge and parties should have addressed issues regarding whether administrative decision had preclusive weight; if not, whether it was admissible under any hearsay exception, and whether respondent should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning culpability or mitigation with respect to the license revocation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [10]

Rules of evidence in civil cases are generally applicable in State Bar proceedings (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556) and include taking judicial notice of records of any federal court of record. Where neither party specifically requested augmentation of record with federal court's opinion on appeal in related matter, but respondent attached copy of such opinion to review brief, review department took judicial notice of such opinion. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [3]

It would have been inappropriate in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding for judge to draw any inference from pending criminal charges in and of themselves. However, testimony offered under oath and subject to cross-examination in preliminary hearings on such criminal charges supported judge's findings regarding facts of respondent's criminal conduct. This evidence was sufficient to demonstrate a reasonable probability that State Bar would prevail on merits of disciplinary charges brought thereon. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [3]

State Bar prosecutors have statutory authority to apply to superior court to grant immunity from criminal prosecution to a witness in an attorney disciplinary proceeding. Where such procedures were properly invoked, and respondents showed no prejudice to themselves on account of the procedures followed in seeking such immunity, respondents were not entitled to relief based on asserted error in such procedures. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [6]

Finality of an attorney's criminal conviction is not essential for an order referring the conviction to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether there is probable cause to conclude that the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude for purposes of interim suspension of the attorney. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

The possibility that criminal proceedings against an attorney may be dismissed if the attorney complies with the terms of criminal probation is not relevant to the effect of the conviction in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

A conviction after a plea of nolo contendere is a conviction for disciplinary purposes no less than a conviction after a plea or verdict of guilty. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

Respondent's conviction of assault conclusively established that he did not act in self-defense, i.e., that he did not have an honest and reasonable belief that he was about to suffer bodily injury. Hearing judge could not reach conclusions, even based on credible evidence, that were inconsistent with such conclusive effect. Thus, where hearing judge found that respondent honestly believed he was about to be assaulted, review department rejected any finding that such belief was reasonable as being inconsistent with the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [2]

In attorney discipline proceedings arising from a criminal conviction, the record of the attorney's conviction is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the crime for which the attorney was convicted. This conclusive presumption of guilt applies whether the convicted attorney seeks to reassert his or her innocence or merely to relitigate a claim of procedural error. The convicted attorney is conclusively presumed to have committed all of the elements of the crime. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [3]

An attorney's conviction for assault with a firearm is conclusive proof that the attorney committed the elements for that crime, i. e., that a person was assaulted and that the assault was committed with a firearm. An assault is defined as an unlawful attempt to apply physical force upon the person of another at a time when the accused had the present ability to apply such physical force. An attempt to apply physical force is not unlawful when done in lawful self-defense. An attorney's conviction of this crime therefore conclusively established that the attorney unlawfully attempted to apply physical force upon the victim. As the assault was by definition unlawful, the review department concluded that it was not done in self-defense. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [7]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

In considering whether to recommend summary disbarment, the State Bar Court is generally limited to determining whether the statutory and case law criteria have been met on the face of the conviction papers, although undisputed additional facts may also be taken into account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [3]

Where respondent committed grand theft by embezzlement, the felony conviction papers demonstrated that an element of respondent's offense was the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [5]

Interim suspension is imposed on an attorney who commits a crime of moral turpitude or a felony, unless an exception is appropriate in the interest of justice, with due regard to maintaining the integrity of, and confidence in, the legal profession. Whether interim suspension is warranted prior to a hearing on the merits of a felony conviction depends, among other things, on the nature of the crime, its relationship to the practice of law, the undisputed surrounding factual circumstances, and the likely range of final discipline. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [5]

Where a felony could have been charged as a misdemeanor, the reduction of the felony conviction to a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings does not affect the characterization of the crime as a felony for the purpose of interim suspension, but it may be taken into account in determining whether good cause exists for vacating an interim suspension order. If the reduction were ignored, arbitrary results might follow based on the discretionary charging practices of different prosecutors. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [8]

It was appropriate for both the hearing judge and the review department to take judicial notice of the status, at the time of their respective decisions, of a separate pending disciplinary matter involving the same respondent. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [5]

Where a hearing judge's decision in one matter indicated that if the respondent filed a post-decision declaration in that matter, this would be taken into account in assessing discipline in a second pending matter, the examiner's objections on review to this aspect of the decision were rendered moot by the respondent's failure to file any such declaration, by the State Bar's apparent satisfaction with the result in the second matter, and by the review department's recommendation of disbarment in the first matter based on other grounds. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [6]

Transcript of superior court trial regarding probate matter which was subject of disciplinary proceeding was admissible pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6049.2, and hearing judge did not err in admitting entire transcript, even though much of testimony was not relevant to disciplinary proceeding, where transcript was admitted subject to respondent's motion to strike parts that were not material or relevant, and respondent failed to make such motion. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [10]

While respondent's motive in appealing superior court's reduction of his fees as attorney and executor of estate might have been suspect, where there was no clear and convincing evidence that such appeal was in bad faith or was otherwise improper, review department declined to consider respondent's appeal as an aggravating factor in light of the important policies favoring unfettered access to the courts. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [15]

Where civil malpractice action against respondent involved essentially identical factual issues to those in discipline proceeding, nontestimonial exhibits consisting of documents relating to judgment in such civil proceeding, including unpublished appellate opinion explaining reasons for decision of civil courts, were admissible evidence in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [4]

Because the preponderance of the evidence standard of proof in a civil malpractice trial is lower than the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof in a disciplinary proceeding, the conclusions reached by civil courts in a malpractice action against respondent are not dispositive of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [6]

Where decisions by the former State Bar Court concerning a petitioner's prior reinstatement petition helped illuminate the petitioner's subsequent progress toward rehabilitation, the review department took judicial notice of such decisions pursuant to Evidence Code section 452(d). In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [3]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty plea to a crime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

In 1990, the majority of the California Supreme Court expressly declined to determine whether a nexus between criminal conduct and the practice of law is required in order to impose professional discipline based on a criminal conviction. The Court unanimously agreed, however, that it would be unreasonable to hold attorneys to such a high standard of conduct that every violation of law, however minor, would constitute a ground for professional discipline. Thus, the integrity of the profession does not require professional discipline in addition to criminal sanctions for every violation of law by an attorney. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [2]

Taking judicial notice of court records does not mean noticing the existence of facts asserted in the documents in the court file; a court cannot take judicial notice of the truth of hearsay just because it is part of a court record. Notice may be taken of another court's findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of a judgment, but not of hearsay allegations, even those of a judge-declarant. Accordingly, hearing judge erred in taking judicial notice of truth of testimony by respondent's criminal probation officer in criminal probation revocation proceeding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [9]

Where superior court appellate department had reversed decision revoking respondent's criminal probation due to municipal court's refusal to permit respondent's counsel to cross-examine prosecution's witness, transcript of municipal court proceeding could not have been considered as evidence pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6049.2. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [11]

Where complaining witness testified credibly that an attorney-client relationship existed between himself and respondent, respondent himself had filed pleadings in civil litigation acknowledging such relationship, and respondent's counsel conceded that respondent had held himself out as complaining witness's attorney, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that complaining witness was not his client was without merit. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [2]

Findings in aggravation of harm to client and indifference to rectification of misconduct, based on delay in restitution of funds, could not be supported where there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent had originally acted improperly in applying such funds to respondent's fees based on good faith belief that client had authorized such payment. Client's small claims court judgment against respondent did not operate as res judicata on issue of obligation to make restitution. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [21]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

It is appropriate for disciplinary purposes to consider any criminal charges that were dismissed as well as the charges for which the attorney was actually convicted. Thus, where the criminal complaint in a Vehicle Code violation matter charged respondent with being under the influence of phencyclidine, and clear and convincing evidence was presented establishing that respondent was under the influence of phencyclidine, that circumstance could be considered in the disciplinary proceeding even though respondent was not convicted of being under the influence of phencyclidine. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [7]

An attorney's interim suspension following a criminal conviction is not affected by the expungement of the conviction. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [1]

Because a suspended attorney is unqualified to sit as a judicial arbitrator, any decisions the attorney renders as an arbitrator could be open to attack as void. Thus, respondent's misconduct in failing to disclose his suspended status when applying for an arbitrator position was of most serious concern because of its potential for harm to public confidence in the court system. Respondent's very service as an unqualified arbitrator harmed the administration of justice. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [5]

In reviewing the record of an attorney's criminal conviction resulting from a guilty plea, for the purpose of determining the propriety of summary disbarment, the court does not take into account language in the information unnecessary to the crime to which the attorney pled guilty, but may consider additional undisputed facts based on the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [2]

Where the Supreme Court's order referring a conviction matter to the State Bar required the State Bar Court to determine whether the conviction involved misconduct warranting discipline, the order demonstrated that the attorney's conviction alone did not establish that the attorney was culpable of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [2]

A nexus between an attorney's criminal misconduct and the practice of law might have been established if the State Bar had proven that the attorney's present criminal conduct had violated the terms of the attorney's previously imposed criminal probation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [8]

Based on surrounding circumstances and on subsequent federal appellate decisions holding that conduct for which respondent was convicted is not a crime, referee properly determined that respondent's convictions for violating federal currency transaction reporting laws did not involve moral turpitude or other conduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2]

Where Supreme Court directed State Bar Court only to hear evidence on appropriate level of discipline, hearing referee correctly ruled that Supreme Court had already established nature of respondent's criminal offense as one inherently involving moral turpitude, and Supreme Court's classification of offense of harboring a fugitive as one involving moral turpitude per se was final and binding on the State Bar Court. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [5]

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to commit the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

It is generally presumed that the arbitrators heard and decided all disputed issues in an arbitration. Where issue regarding costs was raised in an attorney's fees arbitration, and the arbitration award showed on its face that it covered costs as well as fees, and neither party contested the arbitrators' jurisdiction to consider issues of costs, issue of whether costs had been reimbursed should not have had to be relitigated in subsequent State Bar disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [12]

The doctrine of res judicata seeks to curtail multiple litigation causing vexation and expense to the parties and wasted effort and expense in judicial administration. Mistakes of fact or law do not affect the conclusive nature of an arbitration award against collateral attack. If the contending parties had a full and fair opportunity to litigate, there must be compelling reasons to sustain a plea for a second chance. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [13]

Although an arbitrator's testimony is admissible on the question of what issues were tried in the arbitration, the arbitrator's expression of his own belief does not bind the State Bar Court in adjudicating the effect of the arbitration award. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [14]

Requests to augment the record at the review department level will be granted only if the original record is incomplete or incorrect. (Rule 1304, Provisional Rules of Practice.) Out-of-court evidence offered at the appellate level is ordinarily hearsay, and impossible to evaluate because of the absence of cross-examination to test the credibility of the declarant. The rule is to rely only on evidence which was presented to the trier of fact. The only general exception is to permit documentary evidence of subsequent rehabilitation when it is the only means to meet the heavy burden of demonstrating recovery from substance abuse or mental disorder. Where proffered additional evidence was derived from the record in another proceeding involving respondent, and was not offered to correct any omission in the record, the review department declined to grant respondent's motion to augment the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [2]

Disciplinary proceedings and involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are not related so as to require consolidation, and may be conducted on simultaneous, parallel tracks. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [3]

In reviewing hearing department decision in disciplinary proceeding, review department took judicial notice that in separate involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, respondent had been found to have rebutted the presumption, arising from hearing department's disbarment recommendation, that respondent's conduct posed a continuing threat of harm to clients and the public. However, the findings in the involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding were not binding in the disciplinary matter, nor did they have any probative value. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [4]

Where respondent did not agree in writing that statutory attorney-client fee arbitration would be binding, arbitration award was not binding even though it recited that it was. However, the award became binding when respondent failed to seek a post-arbitration trial within the statutory time limit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [3]

The State Bar Court, as an arm of the Supreme Court in attorney disciplinary matters, does not sit as a collection board for clients aggrieved over fee matters, nor is its jurisdiction derivative of fee arbitration proceedings. The administration of attorney discipline, including such remedial orders as restitution, is independent of any remedy that an aggrieved client may pursue. In a disciplinary proceeding to protect the public, the alleged flaws in a fee arbitration proceeding and resulting judgment have little relevance. Accordingly, the State Bar Court has jurisdiction over a disciplinary matter even though there has already been a factually related fee arbitration. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [4]

A finding of failure to return the unearned portion of an advanced fee upon termination of employment was legally independent of the validity of a related fee arbitration award. Where respondent took an advance fee, failed to complete the work, was discharged by the client, agreed to return the unearned portion of the fee, and then failed to do so, respondent was culpable of misconduct notwithstanding alleged defects in a subsequent fee arbitration proceeding. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [5]

Where restitution was appropriate, but record reflected that client might have filed Client Security Fund claim, review department recommended that respondent be ordered to pay restitution either to client, or to Client Security Fund if client's claim had been paid. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [32]

An attorney may be found culpable of professional misconduct, based on charges of failing to obey state law by failing to file tax returns, even if the attorney has not been convicted of a crime based on that conduct. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [4]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

While the leniency of an attorney's criminal sentence might be relevant in assessing final discipline, punishment by the criminal court serves a fundamentally different purpose than the provisions of the State Bar

Act, and leniency of the criminal sentence therefore is not relevant to the determination whether there is good cause to vacate the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [6]

The commercial or distribution aspect of respondent's crime was conclusively established by his conviction of possession of marijuana for sale. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [4]

Respondent's conviction for exhibiting a replica of a firearm in a threatening manner to cause reasonable fear or apprehension of harm conclusively established that respondent's acts were done in a threatening manner so as to cause a reasonable person apprehension or fear of bodily harm. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [7]

Although attorney disciplinary proceedings are sui generis and not criminal in nature, rules of criminal law may provide guidance in appropriate circumstances; case law and statutes in criminal law indicate that lack of wilfulness constitutes a reason not to revoke probation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [7]

Where a municipal court order finding an appeal frivolous and awarding sanctions did not explain the basis for such finding or the statutory basis for awarding sanctions, and no additional evidence was introduced to establish that the appeal was substantively without merit, the record did not clearly and convincingly establish for disciplinary purposes that the appeal was frivolous or pursued in bad faith. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [7]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. While civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, the disciplinary court must assess them independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [8]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

In proceedings on petition for reinstatement, the review department, with the concurrence of the parties, could take judicial notice of State Bar Court decisions on earlier unsuccessful reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [1]

Although prior civil court actions are not binding in disciplinary matters, they are admissible when they address issues substantially identical to those raised in the disciplinary hearing. Civil court decisions that are supported by substantial evidence are accorded a strong presumption of validity, and individual facts established by such civil court decisions may serve as a conclusive legal determination as to particular facts determined by the civil courts. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [5]

Where court in civil action related to disciplinary proceeding had concluded (applying preponderance of evidence standard) that there was substantial evidence that purported transfer of partnership interest to respondent was fraudulent, and it was undisputed that respondent had prepared partnership transfer document, referee's conclusion in disciplinary proceeding that there was no evidence that respondent actively participated in fraud in preparation of document could only be consistent with civil court finding if referee's conclusion was based on difference in applicable standard of proof, in that culpability in disciplinary cases must be proven by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [7]

At respondent's request, in a conviction proceeding, the review department took judicial notice of the record in a disciplinary case involving another attorney who was respondent's co-defendant in the underlying criminal matter. The discipline imposed on the co-defendant was considered in determining the appropriate discipline for respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [2]

In a reinstatement proceeding, records of prior discipline, including the proceeding in which the petitioner was disbarred, are admissible, because the evidence of the petitioner's present character must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the prior discipline. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

Court of appeal opinion regarding respondent's criminal appeal could be cited in related disciplinary proceeding, notwithstanding Supreme Court's depublication order, under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 977(b)(2). In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [1]

In determining whether nature of attorney's crimes warranted summary disbarment, review department gave great weight to decision of court of appeal issued on direct appeal from respondent's criminal conviction. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

The State Bar Office of Trial Counsel was bound by the ruling of the Supreme Court in a matter in which its counsel, the State Bar Office of General Counsel, did not request a rehearing before the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [3]

192 Constitutional Issues - Due Process/Procedural Rights

Where State Bar conceded at trial that respondent's conviction did not involve moral turpitude, but argued on review that conviction did involve moral turpitude, State Bar's unexplained change of position was troubling, because it denied respondent opportunity to develop trial record on the issue. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [2 a,b]

Respondent's discovery rights under the revised Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, which are based on similar discovery provisions in the California Administrative Procedure Act, satisfy fair trial concerns. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [4]

Respondent's discovery rights under the revised Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, which are based on similar discovery provisions in the California Administrative Procedure Act, satisfy fair trial concerns. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [1]

In conviction referral proceeding, ample due process protections were afforded to respondent where the State Bar served him via certified mail with a copy of the conviction referral order along with written notice that informed him of the specific conviction that was subject to the referral and of the specific issues to be decided at the hearing, warned him of the specific consequences of failure to timely reply, and directed him to attend the hearing to present evidence on his behalf and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Further, the motion for entry of default, also served by certified mail, again warned respondent of the consequences of his failure to participate and notified him of the minimum level of discipline the State Bar would recommend if the hearing judge found culpability. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [2]

Trial judge did not prejudicially err in exercising discretion to excuse witness where respondent failed to either request that the witness be recalled or to make an offer of proof as to the testimony respondent expected to elicit from the witness. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [1]

Where respondent neither identified an exhibit for the record nor made an offer of proof demonstrating what the exhibit would have established, respondent failed to perfect his right to claim on appeal the that hearing judge improperly excluded the exhibit from evidence. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [2]

Ordinarily in disciplinary proceedings culpability must be established by convincing proof and to a reasonable certainty. However, this standard does not apply where otherwise provided by law. Therefore in finding a violation of rule 1–300, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is constitutionally required because the applicable South Carolina statute regulating the profession makes the unauthorized practice of law a crime. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [8]

Respondent's Sixth Amendment claim to a jury trial does not attach to disciplinary proceedings in California because such proceedings are not governed by the rules of procedure governing criminal litigation. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [9]

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

The review department declined to consider applicant's argument that the Supreme Court's order in his previous disciplinary matter, filed in 1998, was void on its face because of numerous constitutional infirmities. The review department simply does not have the authority to set aside the Supreme Court's order. Once the record in applicant's previous disciplinary cases was transmitted to the Supreme Court, the review department no longer retained jurisdiction over the matter. Accordingly, the review department declined to consider applicant's collateral attack on his prior discipline.In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731.[1]

After the hearing judge gave respondent the express opportunity to present his evidence, respondent's unpersuasive reasons for failing to do so could not be the basis of any claim of error on review.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[2]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

Respondent's testimony and arguments regarding his customary practices (1) to limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and (2) to rely on or permit referring nonattorney immigration services providers to prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients placed respondent's practices in issue so that any uncharged improprieties in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [4 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Respondent's arguments and testimony that almost all hearing judge's findings of misconduct are erroneous because they are based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients placed respondent's methods of practicing law in issue so that any uncharged impropriety in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [9 a, b]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do

too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

In view of the review department's duty to independently review the record and make findings of fact and conclusions of law, any alleged denial of due process by the hearing judge's failure to clearly identify respondent's misconduct in the hearing judge's decision was remedied by the review department's issuance of an opinion that superseded the hearing judge's decision. Therefore, respondent's due process contention was rendered moot and was not addressed on the merits.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[2]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.[2]

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[16]

Respondent's argument that the State Bar should be estopped from raising the timeliness of his motion to modify the probation was rejected. It is not at all clear that estoppel is applicable in this disciplinary proceeding. Estoppel will not ordinarily lie against a governmental agency if the result will be the frustration of a strong public policy. The goals of attorney discipline - protection of the public, courts and legal profession - are strong public policy considerations that militate against applying the doctrine. Even if estoppel were applicable, respondent failed to demonstrate a factual basis for the claim as he failed to show that the State Bar's actions were intended to be acted upon by him to his injury and that he was ignorant of the true state of facts. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[2]

Considerations of due process and fundamental fairness require, under the circumstances presented in this case, an examination of both respondent's ability to pay the restitution and his efforts at acquiring the resources to pay. Respondent presented evidence of his income, but not of his assets and expenses. While respondent's income was not significant during the relevant period of time, it was not conclusive or persuasive when considered outside the context of total assets and expenses. The evidence presented regarding respondent's efforts at acquiring the resources to pay the restitution was also lacking. Based on the above, the review department concluded that no circumstances were presented showing that it would be fundamentally unfair to revoke respondent's probation in this case. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [4]

Respondent's contention that revoking his probation was a violation of due process and equal protection, and was discriminatory based upon financial status was rejected. The premise upon which it was based, that respondent's probation was being revoked because of his financial condition, was flawed. The revocation was based on his wilful failure to pay the restitution coupled with his failure to make reasonable efforts to acquire the resources to pay or to make other good faith efforts to satisfy the restitution obligation. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [5]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

Rule of Procedure requiring hearing judges to file decisions within 90 days after taking cases under submission is neither mandatory nor jurisdictional. Thus, respondent's contention that the hearing judge's decision was void because it was filed four days after the expiration of the ninety-day time limit was rejected. Furthermore, because respondent failed to establish that he suffered any actual harm or prejudice, he was not entitled to any relief for the hearing judge's failure to file his decision timely. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [8]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

The fact that a portion of a hearing judge's salary might be paid from part of the costs that the State Bar recovers from disciplined attorneys does not create a condition disqualifying the judge because the amount of costs actually recovered are relatively nominal to the State Bar's Budget. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [10]

Since over a year of respondent's Michigan misconduct was committed after the 1986 effective date of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, that statute was not retroactively applied to respondent. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [3]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [2 a-c]

In two situations, applying statute to acts before statute's effective date are not retroactive application of statute: when statute merely clarifies, rather than substantially changes law; and when statute changes trial procedure, but does not change legal consequences of parties' past conduct. Amendments effective January 1, 1997, to summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)) are not clarifying or procedural because they significantly broadened scope of crimes for which attorneys are subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[3 a-c]

When respondent's refusal to provide names of any witnesses or identify any exhibits as required by Rules of Practice regarding pretrial statements and exchange of exhibits was based on respondent's dissatisfaction over hearing judge's pretrial order, hearing judge did not abuse discretion in sanctioning respondent for not complying with Rules of Practice by precluding respondent from presenting any evidence at trial. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[6 a-g]

Neither due process nor former Transitional Rules of Procedure, rules 508 and 509 required State Bar to give respondent exhaustive list of each complaint against her before filing notice of disciplinary charges. Former rules 508 and 509 merely gave respondent right to deny or explain her actions to State Bar and inquire of State Bar concerning the charges against her. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[7 a-h]

It is not evident whether defense of selective prosecution is applicable in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, respondent would have been required to show an intentional violation of essential principle of practical uniformity and an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination. That is respondent would have been required to demonstrate that she had been deliberately singled out for prosecution on basis of some invidious criterion. There is no evidence in record on any of these issues. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[14 a-c]

Cases which hold that constitutional due process rights would be violated if a father delinquent in child support were held in a later criminal contempt proceeding to a statutory presumption of ability to pay the support order, in the face of the prosecutor's burden to prove criminal contempt beyond a reasonable doubt, are distinguishable as State Bar proceedings have long been defined by our Supreme Court as unique, and not as criminal proceedings. Moreover, even if respondent lacked the ability to pay, respondent would not be disciplined for failing to pay the sanction, but for failing to pay the sanction without first attempting to be relieved of the order in whole or in part in the superior court or Court of Appeal on the basis of ability to pay. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.[7]

An attorney's reliance on the former law is a factor to consider in determining the constitutional question of whether the retroactive application of the statute would deny due process. However, if, as a matter of statutory construction, the provision is prospective, no constitutional question is presented. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [5]

The fact that respondent may be placed in "indefinite limbo" if specified charges are dismissed in the furtherance of justice without prejudice is not sufficient cause to require that the charges be dismissed with prejudice. His remedy in any subsequent proceeding would be a due process argument for relief caused by unreasonable delay based upon a sufficient showing of specific prejudice resulting therefrom. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [3]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

Based on the determination that the provisions of the State Bar Act and the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar concerning investigative subpoenas for trust account records meet the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court in a prior case, the review department concluded that there was no need to import either the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1985 et seq., or the provisions of Government Code section 7470 et seq., for either due process or other reasons into the procedures for the issuance of State Bar investigative subpoenas. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [4]

In California, as in all the states, the regulation of the practice of law is a judicial function. The California Supreme Court has original, inherent, and plenary jurisdiction to regulate attorneys in California. The State Bar provides assistance in the area of attorney regulation; it serves as an administrative assistant to or adjunct of the Supreme Court, which nonetheless retains its inherent judicial authority. Thus, contrary to respondent's suggestions, the State Bar Court possesses the jurisdiction to adjudicate attorney disciplinary proceedings as an arm of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [1]

One to whose conduct a statute clearly applies may not successfully challenge it for vagueness. Accordingly, respondent could not successfully challenge section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code as unconstitutionally vague where he had deliberately misinformed a client about the receipt of a settlement check, misappropriated funds from four clients, and practiced law and held himself out as entitled to practice law when he knew he was suspended. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [3]

Respondent's argument that a new trial was necessary because the notices to show cause did not pair facts with each alleged ethical violation was rejected. Even though the Supreme Court has repeatedly criticized this practice, a defective notice entitles an attorney to relief only if the attorney shows that specific prejudice resulted from the defect. Respondent made no such showing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [4]

Respondent's suggestion that alleged ineffective assistance of his counsel necessitates a new trial was rejected. A disciplinary proceeding is administrative in nature, not governed by the rules of criminal procedure. Although an attorney in a disciplinary hearing must have a fair hearing, the attorney has no constitutional right to counsel or effective assistance from counsel. Any mistakes of respondent's counsel thus did not warrant retrial. Nor did the record establish that respondent received an unfair hearing. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [5]

Respondent's claim that the application of the Civil Discovery Act to attorney disciplinary proceedings denied him due process was rejected. State Bar disciplinary proceedings are administrative but of a nature of their own. It has been repeatedly held that they are not governed by the rules of procedure governing civil or criminal litigation although such rules have been invoked when necessary to insure administrative due process. The Supreme Court observed that the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar supply a wide array of procedural safeguards and that pursuant to these rules, the Civil Discovery Act, as adopted and limited by the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, constitutes the rules of discovery in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Under Supreme Court case law, such application is constitutional. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [6]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

Neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that by denying two continuance requests during the six days of trial, the hearing judge deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to be represented by counsel. An attorney in a disciplinary hearing has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. Further, continuances of State Bar Court hearings are disfavored. (State Bar Court Rules of Practice, rule 1131.) To prevail on a procedural argument in a disciplinary matter, an attorney must show both abuse of discretion by the hearing judge and specific prejudice resulting from the alleged procedural error. Respondent proved neither where respondent's counsel set a murder trial for the day before the scheduled start of the disciplinary hearings and failed to provide timely information about this conflict to the State Bar Court, where respondent failed to show that his counsel could not have anticipated or avoided the conflict, and where respondent failed to show that the only proper means of handling the conflict was to grant a continuance. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [1]

No merit was found to respondent's claim that California's disciplinary process violates due process because of the alleged financial interest of State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff in the outcome of disciplinary proceedings and in the collection of disciplinary costs. California provides attorneys subject to discipline with more than constitutionally sufficient procedural due process. The Supreme Court has inherent and plenary authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, and the State Bar serves as its administrative arm to assist with these matters. The Supreme Court appoints the judges of the State Bar Court, and the Legislature sets their salaries comparable to judges of courts of record. The State Bar Court judges are subject to discipline on the same grounds as a judge of any other state court. The annual membership fees of attorneys who belong to the State Bar, not the costs assessed upon the imposition of discipline, pay the salaries of the State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff. Thus, personal financial interest does not dictate the outcome of disciplinary proceedings or the imposition of disciplinary costs. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [3]

Although the burden of proof in State Bar proceedings is generally clear and convincing evidence, there is no State Bar rule that specifically sets forth the State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal in moral character proceedings. An applicant's claim for admission to the practice of law in this state is not a mere privilege, but a claim of right that is afforded the protection of due process. Even though there are distinctions between admission proceedings and disciplinary proceedings, the question involved in both disciplinary and admissions proceedings is the same—is the applicant for admission or the attorney sought to be disciplined a fit and proper person to be permitted to practice law. The test for admission and for discipline is and should be the same. Accordingly, except as otherwise provided by law, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [8]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, it cannot be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, gender, or exercise of constitutional rights. In absence of allegation of prohibited basis for prosecution, State Bar's failure to prove all charges was not sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [16]

A party may not recall a witness who has been excused from giving further testimony without leave of court, which may be granted or withheld in the court's discretion. Hearing judge did not deny due process to respondent by denying respondent's motion to recall State Bar witness who had been excused from giving further testimony. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [6]

Where State Bar witness had not been excused from giving further testimony, hearing judge erred in not permitting respondent to recall such witness for questioning about document respondent did not possess at time witness first testified. However, where such additional testimony was relevant only to refute factual contention later abandoned by State Bar, hearing judge's error did not result in prejudice to respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [7]

A statute raising constitutional questions must be construed in a manner that avoids any doubt as to its validity. Because there is no provision for challenging a disciplinary cost award prior to the issuance of the Supreme Court's disciplinary order, due process concerns would be implicated if the costs statute were interpreted to mean that a State Bar member receiving an actual disciplinary suspension must pay the associated costs prior to being entitled to resume practice at the conclusion of the disciplinary suspension. In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161. [2]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. If such defense were available, burden of proof to establish selective prosecution would be on respondent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [10]

Former disciplinary structure under which local administrative committees had both investigative and fact-finding powers raised due process concerns. Under volunteer State Bar Court system which superseded it, investigative and prosecutorial functions were separated from fact-finding and adjudicative functions. This separation was strengthened and institutionalized by reforms which created independently appointed State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [5]

When a disciplinary proceeding is pending in State Bar Court, the respondent may be able to argue that evidence sought to be used by the State Bar which was obtained by improper means should be excluded. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [9]

Where hearing judge's oral comments at close of case regarding appropriate discipline deviated from the recommendation made in judge's written decision, but hearing overall was fair and respondent's counsel had opportunity to present argument regarding degree of discipline, hearing judge's written decision controlled, and respondent was not denied due process. Respondent could not, as a matter of law, rely on hearing judge's oral or written discipline recommendation since it was not binding on review department or Supreme Court. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [10]

An attorney is charged with knowledge that the legal consequences of the attorney's conviction include summary disbarment when statutory authority provides therefor. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [1]

An attorney convicted of a felony is chargeable with notice that the crime remains a felony for State Bar discipline purposes irrespective of whether in a particular case the crime may be considered a misdemeanor as a result of post-conviction proceedings. Under some circumstances, prosecutorial discretion in originally charging a particular crime as a felony rather than a misdemeanor may raise questions as to the propriety of summary disbarment, but no such issue was presented where there was no evidence of abuse of discretion or other unfairness in charging forgery of a court document as a felony. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [3]

Where respondent contended that he had only pleaded guilty in order to avoid two separate trials, and that he had not intended to commit a crime, due process did not entitle him to a hearing before the State Bar Court to prove these contentions, because he would be precluded from presenting evidence thereof by the statute providing that proof of an attorney's conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the elements of the crime in any proceeding to suspend or disbar the attorney. This conclusive presumption precludes collateral attack on the conviction by attorneys who seek to reassert their innocence in subsequent State Bar proceedings. In this regard, a conviction following a guilty plea is just as conclusive as a conviction following a full criminal trial. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [5]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

A notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding meets the requirements of due process when it specifies the conduct at issue and the rule charged. Where a notice to show cause named the clients involved in each count, identified them as driver and passenger, averred that respondent agreed to represent each in a personal injury case without advising them of their potential conflict and obtaining their written consent, and cited the rule regarding representation of adverse interests, respondent was given adequate notice of the charge against him. Given the specificity of the factual allegations, adequate notice was given even in a count which did not specify the subsection of the rule being charged. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [5]

An administrative determination by the Board of Legal Specialization regarding an application for certification must comport with due process, and review by the State Bar Court exists in part to test whether due process was afforded. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [5]

No decision denying specialist certification is permissible unless the applicant for certification receives some meaningful opportunity to be heard in his or her own defense. Where an attorney in good standing applied for certification as a legal specialist 14 years after committing misconduct, 11 years after the resulting suspension order, and 8 years after the completion of the suspension, the Board of Legal Specialization was required to allow the attorney an opportunity to be heard on the attorney's current qualifications. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [8]

By controlling specialist certification, the Board of Legal Specialization substantially affects not only the professional status of an attorney, but also an important economic interest which is worthy of due process protection. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [9]

Where the Board of Legal Specialization summarily denied an application for legal specialist certification solely on the basis of applicant's prior serious discipline, without considering any evidence or permitting a hearing on applicant's recent conduct and present qualifications, the Board violated its own rules and applicant's common law right to fair procedure. The Board's indication that it might reconsider the denial at a later date, without any enumerated criteria as to when it would do so, underscored the arbitrariness of its position. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [10]

California courts have long recognized a common law right to fair procedure protecting individuals from arbitrary exclusion or expulsion from private organizations which have the practical power to affect substantially an important economic interest. A basic and indispensable ingredient of the fair procedure required under the common law is that an individual who will be adversely affected by a decision be afforded some meaningful opportunity to be heard in the individual's defense. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [11]

Within due process limits, the Board of Legal Specialization has broad discretion in certifying specialists. It may consider any competent evidence rebutting an applicant's showing and may weigh and balance evidence in an appropriate manner. An applicant's prior discipline for very serious misconduct is clearly evidence that should be considered in this process. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [12]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has a right to a fair hearing. The State Bar's interest in protecting the public and maintaining integrity and public confidence in the legal profession would not be served by disciplining an attorney who is mentally incompetent to the degree that she or he cannot assist in a defense against disciplinary charges. Therefore, if an attorney is unable to assist in his or her own defense, due process requires that the disciplinary proceeding be abated. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [7]

In addressing the constitutionality of imposing professional discipline for criminal conduct not involving moral turpitude, the State Bar Court must endeavor to interpret the "other misconduct warranting discipline" standard to render its application in the particular case constitutional. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [6]

A due process challenge to a discipline proceeding based on vagueness is appropriate where the misconduct involved is not clearly within the scope of a disciplinary standard and the standard is so broad that people of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [7]

Where respondent clearly was on notice that drinking and driving could result in criminal penalties, and it was established law that any vehicular homicide or felony conviction resulting from drunk driving could result in professional discipline, respondent apparently had sufficient notice that criminal behavior of driving under the influence could, depending on circumstances, result in professional discipline. However, review department declined to decide notice issue where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed on another ground. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [8]

Where notice to show cause could have been more clearly phrased with respect to duration of respondent's alleged misconduct, but hearing judge correctly concluded after colloquy at trial that it encompassed misconduct prior to as well as after a certain date, and where hearing judge prohibited introduction of evidence as to respondent's conduct prior to such date only after respondent had had ample time to present such evidence, and where respondent gave no offer of proof or explanation regarding any additional evidence on such issue, respondent's claims of denial of adequate notice of charges and fair opportunity to present evidence were without merit. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [8]

State Bar disciplinary proceedings are unique—not criminal, civil or administrative. Nonetheless, the respondent is entitled to a guarantee of a fair hearing, one of the elements of which is the right to offer relevant and competent evidence on a material issue. Denial of such right is almost always reversible error. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [10]

Where a certain set of facts was considered by the criminal court at the time of respondent's sentencing, and notice of such consideration was given to respondent at the time, there was sufficient notice to respondent prior to his disciplinary hearing of the relevance of such facts, and since respondent had an opportunity to present evidence on the issue at the disciplinary hearing, due process did not require remanding the case for submission of additional exculpatory evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [4]

Where record established that respondent had had opportunity to be heard by Supreme Court, prior to referral to State Bar Court, on question whether respondent's criminal offense involved moral turpitude per se, respondent was not denied due process by the Supreme Court's determination of that issue. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [6]

Where the original notice to show cause alleged misappropriation, and the examiner amended the notice to charge respondent with commingling resulting from his bookkeeper's negligence, and there was no evidence that respondent's defense was thereby prejudiced, respondent had sufficient notice of the charges to satisfy his due process rights, because the duty to keep client funds safe is a personal obligation of the attorney and nondelegable, and the attorney was therefore on notice that he could be culpable if his staff's conduct resulted in a violation of that duty. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

Denial of respondent's motion to compel discovery did not deprive respondent of due process, where the information sought (information concerning the race, practice and gender of members of the State Bar, and statistics allegedly maintained by the Bar) was not gathered or maintained by the State Bar, and the State Bar was under no obligation to survey its membership in order to respond to respondent's discovery request. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [6]

A notice to show cause may be amended, including amendment to conform to proof, so long as the attorney is given a reasonable opportunity to defend the charge and provided the amendment is not a trap for the unwary attorney. Where respondent was given informal, oral notice of an intended amendment five months prior to its filing, and formal notice one month prior to trial, respondent had adequate time to prepare a defense, and due process was not violated. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [8]

Respondent was not entitled to a three-member hearing panel as a matter of due process. Where it was evident from the pre-trial filings that the case would require more than one day of hearing, the State Bar Court did not have discretion to assign the matter to a three-member panel, under the then-applicable statue. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6079 (b).) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [9]

Bias on the part of the hearing referee was not demonstrated when the referee, without the knowledge of the parties, corresponded with an out-of-state trial court judge in an attempt to coordinate conflicting trial schedules. While the better method would have been for the referee to have advised the parties of his intent to contact the trial court judge and to have copied the parties on any correspondence, the referee's conduct was not improper in nature and did not establish an appearance of bias constituting a denial of due process. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [12]

Attorney discipline proceedings are sui generis, neither criminal nor civil, and ordinary criminal procedural safeguards do not apply. The proceedings are conducted pursuant to the Rules of Procedure adopted by the State Bar, which contain procedural safeguards that have been held to be adequate to assure procedural due process. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [26]

Respondents have a right to reasonable notice of the charges against them and they may not be disciplined for a violation not alleged either in the original or a properly amended notice to show cause. Where the notice to show cause charged respondent with dishonest acts with regard to non-payment of tax monies withheld from an employee's wages, respondent could not, based on that notice, be held culpable of improperly concealing personal money from the tax authorities by putting it in a client trust account. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

Probation revocation proceedings are disciplinary proceedings, and no additional discipline can be imposed for a breach of probation absent proof of such violation in conformity with fundamental due process (notice and an opportunity to be heard), as set forth in rules 612-613, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [4]

As with the treatment of failure to pay restitution in reinstatement and criminal probation cases, in a disciplinary proceeding for failure to make timely restitution as a condition of attorney disciplinary probation, due process requires an examination of the probationer's ability to make restitution and the sufficiency and good faith of the probationer's efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [11]

A respondent can only be found culpable of conduct which is charged in the notice to show cause. If the charges do not appear in the notice and the notice is not properly amended, the charges will not be sustained. However, culpability will be sustained in the event of a slight variation in the evidence from the notice, without an amendment, unless the respondent's defense can shown to have been compromised. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [2]

Given that the examiner's pretrial statement indicated that facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's perjury conviction would be at issue and that the record would include the transcript of a related infraction trial as well as respondent's perjury trial, and given the rule permitting the hearing judge to consider evidence of facts not directly connected with respondent's conviction if such facts are material to the issues stated in the order of reference, respondent had sufficient notice that all relevant facts and circumstances would be considered in the disciplinary proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [3]

The facts of each case will determine whether a particular rule of civil or criminal law should be applied in State Bar proceedings to ensure due process. This principle applies in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings as well as disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [12]

Where an attorney was not charged in the notice to show cause with violating the ethical rules governing attorneys' business transactions with clients, then even if compliance with those rules were required under the facts, the attorney could not be found culpable of violating those rules. It is a fundamental constitutional and statutory requirement that an attorney must be given notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to prepare his defense thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [12]

Attorney could not be found culpable of misconduct where not given adequate notice of charges, but this did not preclude consideration of such misconduct for other purposes, including aggravation. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. Right to notice of charges is not violated by use of uncharged misconduct in aggravation where evidence of such misconduct was necessarily elicited in cause of proving other charges; evidence was used in aggravation only; and facts were based on respondent's own testimony. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [19]

Aggravating factors are not required to be separately charged. However, facts that could have formed the basis for an additional charge omitted from the notice to show cause cannot be relied on in aggravation in a default matter, because respondent is not fairly put on notice that such facts will be relied on. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [12]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence. The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

Service of discovery requests after entry of default is inconsistent with fundamental fairness and due process, and does not serve purposes of modern discovery procedures such as exchanging information, informing parties of merits of case, and facilitate settlement or resolution of matter. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [10]

In default matter, hearing referee erred in basing findings of culpability partly on facts deemed admitted by failure to respond to improper post-default discovery, and in finding culpability on charges broader than those set forth in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [12]

Rule of Procedure 557, permitting amendment of notice to show cause to conform to proof without requiring additional time to prepare answer and defense, assumes respondent attorney's presence at disciplinary proceeding. Where respondent is not present due to entry of default, respondent does not have an opportunity to defend against charges. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [14]

A motion to dismiss a notice to show cause for failure to provide the respondent with sufficient notice of the alleged misconduct is available where appropriate to assure adequate notice of charges in compliance with statutory mandate and due process. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [1]

In order to defend against charges, a respondent needs to be adequately apprised of the precise nature of the charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [2]

Neither civil nor criminal rules of procedure govern State Bar disciplinary proceedings. However, the right to practice one's profession is sufficiently precious to be surrounded by a panoply of legal protection, including invocation of civil and criminal procedural rules when necessary to insure administrative due process. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [3]

Adequacy of notice is an essential element of due process, in order that the accused may have a reasonable opportunity to prepare and present a defense and not be taken by surprise by evidence offered at trial. The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding is entitled to reasonable notice of the specific charges, which is the purpose of the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [4]

The principle that due process requires notice of the specific charge, and a chance to be heard in a trial of the issues raised by that charge, applies with equal force in State Bar proceedings. The right to practice law is a valuable one which should be suspended or revoked only on charges alleged and proved and as to which full notice and opportunity to defend have been accorded. Thus, the charges in the notice to show cause should relate individual facts to specific statutory and rule violations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [5]

It is important for decisions of the State Bar Court to identify with specificity both the rule or statutory provision that underlies each charge and the manner in which the conduct allegedly violated that rule or statutory provision. This specificity is essential to the respondent's due process right to adequate notice, as well as to meaningful Supreme Court review of the recommendation of the State Bar Court. The notice to show cause must be sufficient to support the charges relied upon in the decision, because the findings of the State Bar Court must rest on the charges filed. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [6]

The opportunity for permissive amendment of the notice to show cause at a later stage in the proceedings on adequate notice of new factual allegations does not negate the State Bar's obligation in the first instance to provide adequate notice of the original charges. While developments during discovery may lead to augmentation or modification of the charges by amendment, the ability to amend does not affect the requirement of particularity in the original charges. Informal sharing of source material on which charges are based, while highly desirable, is no substitute for formal charges. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [15]

The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the original notice to show cause. If the evidence produced before the hearing department shows the attorney has committed an ethical violation that was not charged in the original notice, the State Bar must amend the notice to conform to the evidence adduced at the hearing. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [16]

Unless the respondent demonstrates that the respondent's defense was actually compromised, a slight variance in the evidence that relates to the noticed charge does not, in itself, deprive the respondent of adequate notice. This situation, however, is patently different from one in which ambiguity and lack of specificity in the notice to show cause make it unclear which aspect of the respondent's conduct over a number of years allegedly violated the rules and statutes cited in the notice. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [17]

The scope of the respondent's defense is determined by the scope of the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [20]

The degree of specificity required in a notice to show cause does not necessitate lengthy detailed pleading. A notice to show cause does not have to include explicit details of a respondent's alleged misconduct, nor does it have to match the subsequent proof at the hearing as long as the difference is immaterial or the pleading is amended and the respondent is given an opportunity to respond to the additional allegations. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [21]

Increased specificity in articulating the charged misconduct in the notice to show cause will enable the respondent to prepare to meet the charges; provide the hearing judge with a proper framework for findings and conclusions; and make it easier for the review department and the Supreme Court to conduct meaningful de novo review of the hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [22]

Review department will not consider misappropriation implied by evidence but not charged in notice to show cause, and not mentioned at trial, in hearing department decision, or in briefs on review. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [1]

Where an attorney had failed to comply with the statutory duty to maintain a current address on the State Bar's member records and to notify the State Bar within 30 days of any address change, the attorney failed to show good cause for relief from default even though he did not receive notice of the State Bar proceedings until the review department's opinion was published. Because the address requirement is reasonable, an attorney receives reasonable notice of documents properly sent to the attorney's address of record with the State Bar. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [2]

Respondent's claimed alcoholism did not excuse him from his statutory duties to notify the State Bar promptly of any change of his address of record, and to participate in State Bar disciplinary proceedings against him. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

Where notice to show cause did not charge that respondent misrepresented to his clients the status of their claims, and respondent defaulted and did not appear at hearing, the review department declined to find, based on client's testimony at hearing, that respondent had committed act of dishonesty by making such misrepresentation. The review department is most reluctant to consider, even for the purpose of aggravation, misconduct which could have been, but was not charged in notice to show cause, especially where respondent is in default and has no opportunity to learn of or rebut matters arising during hearing. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [3]

Where the examiner asserted for the first time in his request for reconsideration of the review department's decision that the respondent's misappropriation of client trust funds constituted an act of embezzlement within the meaning of Penal Code section 506, and, as such, constituted a wilful violation of the attorney's oath and duty to support the laws of this state, the review department concluded that the belated attempt to prove culpability through an uncharged violation of another statute was improper. The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [1]

193 Constitutional Issues - Other

Statutes regarding legal disciplinary system are not exclusive, but rather supplementary to California Supreme Court's disciplinary authority over members of California bar. Given Supreme Court's partial delegation of its disciplinary authority to State Bar Court, and its instruction that State Bar Court should follow disciplinary standards whenever possible, statute providing for actual suspension of up to three years for violations of Rules of Professional Conduct did not preclude State Bar Court from recommending disbarment for rules violation when otherwise justified by disciplinary standards. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [6]

Attorneys cannot be disciplined for speech that is protected by the First Amendment. However, because attorneys are officers of the court, reasonable speech restrictions may be imposed on them. Rule 1-700, which regulates speech by attorney candidates for judicial office, burdens a category of speech at the core of First Amendment freedoms, but false statements are not protected speech and may be basis for discipline if made intentionally or with reckless disregard for truth. Objective "reasonable attorney" test, rather than subjective test, is properly applied in determining whether statement was made with reckless disregard for truth. Attorney judicial candidate, who made a false claim that his opponent was involved in corporate fraud and bribery, was culpable of violating rule 1-700 because he made the factual misrepresentation knowingly or with reckless disregard for the truth as viewed under an objective standard. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370 [1 a-c]

Sending numerous, threatening voicemail messages is intentionally harassing and constitutes moral turpitude. Such conduct is not protected by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [2 a,b]

The review department declined to consider applicant's argument that the Supreme Court's order in his previous disciplinary matter, filed in 1998, was void on its face because of numerous constitutional infirmities. The review department simply does not have the authority to set aside the Supreme Court's order. Once the record in applicant's previous disciplinary cases was transmitted to the Supreme Court, the review department no longer retained jurisdiction over the matter. Accordingly, the review department declined to consider applicant's collateral attack on his prior discipline. In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731. [1]

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

While respondent's improper assertion of various constitutional and statutory privileges showed a lack of cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary proceedings and constituted an aggravating factor, such factor was given little weight because (1) there was no evidence of resulting excessive delay in the disciplinary proceedings, (2) respondent willingly responded to most of the questions presented to him and only asserted the privileges as to matters which he believed involved the possibility of criminal prosecution, (3) the delay which did occur was not caused solely by respondent, (4) respondent's assertion of the privileges did not interfere with the State Bar's ability to prove its case, and (5) there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent asserted the privileges in bad faith. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[17]

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by making unfounded and inflammatory statements in various pleadings filed in this disciplinary matter. Respondent's statements were not proper subjects for aggravation where the State Bar made no showing by clear and convincing evidence that they were false. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[18]

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by filing six petitions for interlocutory review with the review department, at least one petition for review with the California Supreme Court, and over 30 motions in the hearing department. These documents were not proper subjects for aggravation where it was not shown by clear and convincing evidence that the documents were completely lacking in merit and were filed in bad faith. Respondent acted as cocounsel during the hearing department proceedings and was entitled to reasonable access to the courts to seek judicial remedies. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[19]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[2 a-c]

In two situations, applying statute to acts before statute's effective date are not retroactive application of statute: when statute merely clarifies, rather than substantially changes law; and when statute changes trial procedure, but does not change legal consequences of parties' past conduct. Amendments effective January 1, 1997, to summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)) are not clarifying or procedural because they significantly broadened scope of crimes for which attorneys are subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[3 a-c]

Disciplinary rules governing legal profession cannot punish activity protected by First Amendment, but neither false statements made knowingly nor false statements made with reckless disregard for truth are protected by First Amendment. Thus, because respondent's statements in pleadings, which she filed in superior court action and this disciplinary action, that her opposing counsel in superior court action was "well-known racist," "champion of the Emeryville pedophile ring," "operated by organized crime," "intent upon avoiding his own criminal indictment," and "motivated by racial hatred," and described young children as "niggers, hood and scums" were proved false at trial; because those statements were not mere rhetorical hyperbole, incapable of being proved true or false; and because respondent either knew statements were false or made them with reckless disregard of truth as there was no objective evidence that statements were true, hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of violating professional rules requiring attorneys to employ only such means as are consistent with truth and not to seek to mislead courts and judicial officers as well as statute proscribing acts involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[2 a-i]

Charge for violating statute proscribing offensive personality was dismissed because statute was previously declared unconstitutionally vague by federal appeals court. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[3]

Party invoking Fifth Amendment bears burden of showing that proffered evidence might tend to incriminate. Thus, while respondents may not be disciplined solely for invoking Fifth Amendment, the improper invocation of that amendment and resulting refusal to testify may be considered as aggravation if culpability has otherwise been found. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[9 a-e]

Whether hearings to determine witness's right to Fifth Amendment privilege should be held in camera rather than open court is left to trial court's discretion. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[10]

Hearing judge did not error in drawing inferences against respondent with respect to authenticity of documents written by respondent when respondent refused to answer proper questions after respondent's claim against self incrimination under Fifth Amendment was denied and she had been ordered to answer. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[11]

It is not evident whether defense of selective prosecution is applicable in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, respondent would have been required to show an intentional violation of essential principle of practical uniformity and an element of intentional or purposeful discrimination. That is respondent would have been required to demonstrate that she had been deliberately singled out for prosecution on basis of some invidious criterion. There is no evidence in record on any of these issues. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[14 a-c]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.1.[3 a-b]

Cases which hold that constitutional due process rights would be violated if a father delinquent in child support were held in a later criminal contempt proceeding to a statutory presumption of ability to pay the support order, in the face of the prosecutor's burden to prove criminal contempt beyond a reasonable doubt, are distinguishable as State Bar proceedings have long been defined by our Supreme Court as unique, and not as criminal proceedings. Moreover, even if respondent lacked the ability to pay, respondent would not be disciplined for failing to pay the sanction, but for failing to pay the sanction without first attempting to be relieved of the order in whole or in part in the superior court or Court of Appeal on the basis of ability to pay. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.[7]

Disciplinary rules governing the legal profession cannot punish activity protected by the First Amendment. However, because attorneys are officers of the court with a special responsibility to protect the administration of justice, reasonable speech restrictions may be imposed on them. To survive judicial scrutiny such a restriction must (1) further an important or substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of expression and (2) be no greater than is necessary or essential to the protection of that important or substantial governmental interest. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [1]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

An attorney's statement impugning the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is not disciplinable if it constitutes rhetorical hyperbole, or uses language only in a loose, figurative sense, or if it is not capable of being proved true or false. The statement is not disciplinable unless it implies or is based upon a false assertion of fact. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [4]

The fact that respondent may be placed in "indefinite limbo" if specified charges are dismissed in the furtherance of justice without prejudice is not sufficient cause to require that the charges be dismissed with prejudice. His remedy in any subsequent proceeding would be a due process argument for relief caused by unreasonable delay based upon a sufficient showing of specific prejudice resulting therefrom. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [3]

Generally, it is in the public interest to dispose of disciplinary charges on the merits. However, the public interest and the interests of justice would not be served by permitting the State Bar to maintain specified charges for possible later prosecution by dismissing the charges without prejudice when respondent relied on the charges to his detriment in preparation for and during trial and in doing so exposed his defense case. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [4]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

A client has a reasonable expectation of privacy regarding her deposits in an attorney's trust account. However, that expectation of privacy is limited by the Business and Professions Code section that provides that all attorneys are deemed to have irrevocably authorized the disclosure of the contents of their trust account records to the State Bar. Thus, the right of privacy is not absolute, and must be balanced against the need for disclosure. The legislature has clearly determined that there is a public interest in disclosure of trust account information sought in attorney misconduct investigations. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [1 a-c]

Based on the determination that the provisions of the State Bar Act and the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar concerning investigative subpoenas for trust account records meet the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court in a prior case, the review department concluded that there was no need to import either the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1985 et seq., or the provisions of Government Code section 7470 et seq., for either due process or other reasons into the procedures for the issuance of State Bar investigative subpoenas. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [4]

Respondent's claim that the State Bar Court is an entity created, owned, and run by the prosecuting party was frivolous. The current State Bar Court is modeled after courts of record. State Bar Court judges are appointed for specified terms by the Supreme Court and are subject to discipline by the Supreme Court upon the same grounds as judges of courts of record. The prosecution does not assign cases to State Bar Court judges, nor do their salaries depend upon finding attorneys culpable of misconduct. Although the Board of Governors of the State Bar is responsible for paying the salaries of State Bar Court judges, these salaries are set by law to equal those of judges of courts of record and come from annual membership fees. Thus, respondent provided no evidence that the State Bar Court is improperly dependent on, or controlled by, the prosecution. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [2]

One to whose conduct a statute clearly applies may not successfully challenge it for vagueness. Accordingly, respondent could not successfully challenge section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code as unconstitutionally vague where he had deliberately misinformed a client about the receipt of a settlement check, misappropriated funds from four clients, and practiced law and held himself out as entitled to practice law when he knew he was suspended. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [3]

Where respondent contended that California's disciplinary process violates the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, respondent failed to recognize that the judiciary of each state has the right to regulate the practice of law in that state. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [2]

Where First Amendment rights are at stake, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Where the right of access to the courts is at stake, proof beyond a reasonable doubt may also be required. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [9]

It is not clear that selective prosecution may be raised as defense in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Even if such defense were available, it cannot be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, gender, or exercise of constitutional rights. In absence of allegation of prohibited basis for prosecution, State Bar's failure to prove all charges was not sufficient to show invidiously discriminatory prosecution. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [16]

Even if selective prosecution were a valid defense in State Bar proceedings, claim that respondent was singled out for prosecution based on success and fame could not succeed in absence of authority that claims of selective prosecution may be premised on asserted discrimination due to notoriety rather than on a constitutionally prohibited basis such as race, sex, or exercise of constitutional rights. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [9]

Claim of selective prosecution in probation revocation proceeding was without merit, where such claim was based on asserted failure to give respondent same opportunity as other lawyers to cure defects in probation report, but revocation proceeding was also based on failure to pay restitution due ten months earlier; respondent's subsequent probation reports were also inadequate; and respondent failed to connect cited authorities on doctrine of selective enforcement to facts of proceeding. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [8]

Former disciplinary structure under which local administrative committees had both investigative and fact-finding powers raised due process concerns. Under volunteer State Bar Court system which superseded it, investigative and prosecutorial functions were separated from fact-finding and adjudicative functions. This separation was strengthened and institutionalized by reforms which created independently appointed State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [5]

Statutory scheme regarding State Bar discipline system does not provide for State Bar Court judges to report to Board of Governors or any of its committees, nor does it require Chief Trial Counsel to report to State Bar Court. Consistent with separation of prosecutorial and judicial roles, State Bar Court has no administrative oversight role with respect to functions of Chief Trial Counsel, and does not have general, plenary authority to supervise the conduct of investigations. Board of Governors and its Discipline Committee have general statutory authority over Chief Trial Counsel and Office of Investigations, subject to review by California Supreme Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [6]

Review department declined to adopt construction of statute giving State Bar Court jurisdiction over motions to quash subpoenas (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) which would do violence both to plain meaning of statute and to necessary separation of powers within disciplinary system. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [8]

Solicitation of clients may be constitutionally protected under the First Amendment depending on the occupation or profession involved and certain other circumstances. Free speech guarantees have been held not to prevent enforcement of California's rules governing in-person solicitation, and solicitation of clients for lawyers has long been illegal in California. Where accident victims were tempted by persuasiveness of respondents' non-lawyer agents who had superior access to police reports, and in one instance a victim was solicited minutes after returning from the hospital, such facts showed constitutional justification for prohibition of such in-person solicitation. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [12]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

While respondent's motive in appealing superior court's reduction of his fees as attorney and executor of estate might have been suspect, where there was no clear and convincing evidence that such appeal was in bad faith or was otherwise improper, review department declined to consider respondent's appeal as an aggravating factor in light of the important policies favoring unfettered access to the courts. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [15]

Private personal information about a non-party to a proceeding may be privileged from discovery under some circumstances pursuant to the California constitutional right to privacy. The privacy right to be protected is that of the non-party, and the custodian of the private information may not waive it. The right to privacy is not absolute, but must be balanced against the need for disclosure. In a moral character proceeding, it was unreasonable for material witnesses against the applicant to claim a right of privacy preventing the disclosure of their identities to the applicant during discovery, while consenting to testify against the applicant at trial. However, as to the identities of persons whose testimony would not be used under any circumstances, the applicant had not made a sufficient showing of need to overcome these persons' privacy rights, and their names could be withheld from disclosure. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [10]

Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), providing for summary disbarment of attorneys convicted of crimes meeting the criteria set forth in the statute, must be read in the context of the statutory scheme of the State Bar Act as a whole, which indicates the Legislature's intent to defer to the Supreme Court's inherent authority to judge each case on its merits and disbar or suspend pursuant to its own view of the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [3]

Rule 951(a), California Rules of Court, delegating certain powers to the State Bar Court regarding the discipline of attorneys convicted of crimes, limits the State Bar Court to recommending summary disbarment to the Supreme Court, rather than imposing it directly. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [9]

No question on respondent's application for admission to practice law called upon respondent, as an applicant, to reveal criminal conduct for which respondent had not yet been convicted or arrested and for which respondent was not awaiting trial. If any such question had been asked, respondent would have had a good argument for withholding information that would lead to criminal liability. Nothing in respondent's manner of completing the application, or in respondent's subsequent two-month delay in reporting to the State Bar a criminal indictment handed down after the application was completed, undermined respondent's showing of rehabilitation from pre-admission criminal conduct. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [1]

Since attorney discipline matters are not criminal cases for purposes of the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, an attorney may be called to the witness stand at the attorney's own hearing, and immunized testimony may be introduced against the attorney. However, the attorney may assert the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination in response to specific questions, and no adverse inference may be drawn from such invocation. An attorney may not be disciplined solely based on invoking the privilege against self-incrimination. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [32]

Where respondent refused to take the witness stand when ordered to do so by the referee at the disciplinary hearing, and invoked the protection of the Fifth Amendment through counsel and not in response to specific questions, respondent's actions were improper. If appearing under subpoena, respondent's actions could have been certified for contempt before the Superior Court. If culpability had been found on the underlying misconduct charges, respondent's actions could have been considered evidence in aggravation. However, the referee did not have contempt power and lacked the authority to sanction respondent by striking respondent's answer to the notice to show cause and deeming the allegations admitted by default as a matter of law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [33]

In a disciplinary action, an attorney does not have a privilege not to be called to testify, but may refuse to answer specific questions on the grounds that answering the question may subject the attorney to criminal prosecution. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [13]

If an attorney wishes to invoke statutory or constitutional privileges which the attorney contends make a substantive response to a State Bar investigator's letter unnecessary, the attorney must nevertheless respond to the investigator's letter, if only to state that the attorney is claiming a privilege; otherwise, the attorney not only violates the statutory duty to cooperate, but also risks waiving the claimed privilege. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [14]

It is not clear that the doctrine of selective prosecution applies in State Bar disciplinary proceedings, in which respondents do not enjoy the full panoply of procedural protection afforded to criminal defendants. But even if it does, there are several threshold procedural and evidentiary hurdles to be overcome before a case of selective prosecution can be established, and where respondent did not even attempt to make the requisite showing, respondent's claim of selective prosecution was without merit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [22]

Section 6077 does not bind the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, should it decide that greater discipline than three years suspension for violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct is needed to protect the public in a particular case; the Supreme Court is not limited by the Legislature in exercising its disciplinary authority. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [7]

The test for the constitutional validity of a mental examination order is whether the mental examination serves a compelling government interest and constitutes the least intrusive means of accomplishing that interest. Mere convenience or avoidance of administrative costs does not make a means the least intrusive; otherwise the overriding value would be expediency, not the compelling government interest. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [4]

As a sui generis arm of the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court may recommend that the Supreme Court declare a statute or rule unconstitutional, but in proceedings not requiring Supreme Court action, the State Bar Court's authority is limited to interpreting existing law. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [5]

Section 6053, which allows the State Bar Court to order a mental examination when an attorney's mental condition is a material issue in a State Bar proceeding, does not violate the California constitutional right of privacy, because section 6053 serves a compelling government interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys and because section 6053's grant of discretion to order a mental examination may be construed so as to allow such examinations to be ordered only when they are the least intrusive means to satisfy the compelling government interest. In addition, the limited distribution of the mental examination report and the confidentiality of the proceeding serve as further protections of the attorney's privacy and thereby bolster the constitutionality of section 6053. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [6]

Where no evidence or finding indicated that a compulsory mental examination constituted the least intrusive means of determining a respondent's mental condition, the issuance of mental examination orders violated not only the applicable statutory requirements but also the respondent's California constitutional right of privacy. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [8]

The probable cause determination necessary for the initiation of an involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding pursuant to section 6007(b)(3) does not suffice to order a mental examination pursuant to section 6053. Such an order necessitates the much stronger procedural and constitutional safeguards afforded by showings from the State Bar of "good cause" and "least intrusive means." In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [9]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Statutes affecting a substantive right are generally construed prospectively to avoid a declaration of unconstitutionality. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [14]

There are marked differences between civil and criminal trials and the corresponding need to restrict free speech in order to assure fairness. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [7]

False statements made with reckless disregard of the truth do not enjoy constitutional protection under the First Amendment. Attorneys may be disciplined for making defamatory or disrespectful statements in pleadings or court papers which have no basis in fact and which are made with conscious disregard of their falsity or with intent to be maliciously contemptuous. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [8]

As a rule, constitutional questions will not be reached if a decision can rest on a different ground. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [9]

The issue of retroactive application of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102(c)) to conduct occurring prior to its enactment has not been decided by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [5]

As with any aspirant to membership in State Bar, reinstatement petitioner is entitled to access to courts to decide good faith claims, but where petitioner who worked for confusingly intertwined entities sued customer of one entity for punitive damages for complaining against one entity instead of another, and failed to show justification for suit, petitioner failed to sustain burden of showing exemplary conduct required to qualify for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [14]

194 Effect/Applicability of Statutes Outside State Bar Act

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19

In absence of specific statute or rule of procedure directing a specified mode of proceeding, it is not unreasonable or arbitrary for a hearing judge to utilize analogous civil procedures to resolve motions. In the Matter of Respondent AA (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 721. [4]

When an attorney pleads nolo contendere to a felony wobbler, i.e., a crime that may be charged or judged either as a felony or misdemeanor, and that offense is declared to be a misdemeanor at sentencing or at the imposition of probation under Penal Code section 17, subdivision (b), the Legislature made it clear that it remains a felony for State Bar Act purposes even if it is later declared a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings, including proceedings resulting in punishment or probation. This does not mean that an attorney's conviction of a wobbler will always be of a felony. If the attorney's plea of guilty or nolo contendere or the verdict of guilty is to a misdemeanor charge, including a felony reduced to a misdemeanor at the time of the plea or verdict, the conviction will be of a misdemeanor.In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.[1 a-c]

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]Under Civil Discovery Act, respondent had affirmative duty to answer each of the State Bar's interrogatories as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to him permitted.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [28]

The ability of federal courts and federal agencies to discipline attorneys who practice before them does not deprive a state bar of jurisdiction to discipline one of its members for engaging in misconduct while practicing before the federal courts or agencies. While neither the State Bar Court nor the Supreme Court has jurisdiction to prevent a person from practicing law in federal courts or agencies, the Supreme Court has the inherent authority to discipline attorneys licensed to practice in the State of California, and the State Bar Court has authority to conduct disciplinary proceedings and make recommendations of discipline to the Supreme Court. The federal regulations pertaining to discipline of attorneys practicing before federal immigration agencies themselves contemplate that the disciplinary agency of a state in which an attorney is admitted to practice has authority to discipline the attorney for misconduct committed in federal immigration agencies. In addition, various cases from federal courts and from the Board of Immigration Appeals have indicated that the disciplinary agencies of the states in which immigration attorneys are licensed have jurisdiction to discipline these attorneys for misconduct committed in immigration cases in federal courts and agencies.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[1 a-e]

Rule 219 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar provides that, after the party with the burden of proof has rested, the opposing party may move for a determination that the party with the burden of proof has failed to meet that burden. In deciding the motion, the hearing judge is required to consider all the evidence introduced, weigh that evidence and make determinations of credibility. The review department held that the hearing judge's ruling on a motion made pursuant to rule 219 is reviewable on plenary review under rule 301 of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar and that such review is de novo. The review department must determine, based upon its independent review of the evidence before the hearing judge at the time the motion was made, whether clear and convincing evidence was presented of each element of the charged offenses. In deciding these issues, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's credibility determinations. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [1 a-c]

Finding that an order of a worker's compensation judge was an order of a court within the meaning of Business and Professions Code section 6103, the review department found respondent culpable of violating section 6103 by disregarding such an order. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [4 a-b]

Unless civil sanctions issues arising under section 128.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure are adequately litigated before the sanctioning court, it would appear inappropriate to apply collateral estoppel in the State Bar Court to the sanction order. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [2]

Even though Rules of Procedure adopted by State Bar's Board of Governors are not legislative acts, it is appropriate to construe them using rules for statutory interpretation/construction. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [4]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [6 a-b]

The duty to report sanctions timely pursuant to section 6068, subdivision (o)(3), Business and Professions Code, is not excused solely because of the pendency of an appeal of the sanction order. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [2]

Respondent's calling and threatening State Bar witness shortly before trial can be for no purpose other than interference with disciplinary proceeding and tends to demonstrate knowledge of culpability on part of respondent. Because such evidence was not offered to show culpability in uncharged count, it was properly admitted and considered as serious aggravation; see Penal Code section 136.1, subdivision (a)(2) (crime to prevent of dissuade another from attending or testifying). In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [8 a-c]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [2] or (3) acted in excess of jurisdiction. The burden of proof is on the party who attacks the judgment to show lack of jurisdiction. Furthermore, to succeed on collateral attack, the jurisdictional defect must be proven from the face of the record in the prior proceeding. Respondent's contention that the conditions attached to his prior private reproval are subject to collateral attack because the hearing judge failed to explicitly recite in her decision two findings required by rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, that the reproval conditions would serve to protect the public and to serve respondent's interests, is an allegation that the hearing judge acted in excess of her jurisdiction. Respondent failed to prove from the face of the record in the prior reproval that the conditions attached to it would not serve to protect the public or serve respondent's interest. In any event, the unchallenged factual findings in the hearing judge's decision in the prior case establish that the hearing judge acted within her jurisdiction in attaching the conditions. Without question, the reproval conditions that he take and pass a professional responsibility examination and attend the State Bar's Ethics School will serve to protect the public and serve respondent's interests. The hearing judge's error is not a jurisdictional error that can subject the hearing judge's decision to collateral attack. At most, the error was a procedural defect that respondent waived by failing to appear in the prior proceeding and object to the hearing judge's decision on that ground. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[1]

As the reproval imposed on respondent in the prior disciplinary proceeding is final, it and the conditions attached to it are presumed valid and enforceable. The reproval decision is subject to collateral attack only on the grounds that the judge (1) lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter, (2) lacked personal jurisdiction over respondent,

In the absence of any direct precedent construing rule 956 of the California Rules of Court, the review department held that the purpose of the rule's findings is to aid in ensuring that any duties attached to a reproval are reasonably related to its purposes. Although rule 956 prescribes a salutary requirement, it cannot be said that it is jurisdictional. The findings themselves do not go to the essential fairness of the underlying disciplinary proceeding or even a subsequent enforcement proceeding. If findings are omitted from a reproval decision to which rule 956 applies, the error can be called to the State Bar Court's attention in a timely manner. If not done timely, the objection is waived, absent a showing that respondent was clearly prejudiced by the omitted findings. No showing of prejudice was made in this proceeding and such a claim would be hard to envision regarding the two duties that respondent was charged with violating in this proceeding: passage of a professional responsibility examination and attendance at the State Bar's Ethics School. These are requirements imposed in almost every disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Pyle (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 929.[4]

Code of Civil Procedure 916 does not stay either execution of a judicial sanctions order or respondent's duty to report it to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.[3]

The terms judges and judicial officers as used in Business and Professions Code section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct are limited to those individuals who are officers of a state or federal system and who perform judicial functions. Thus, the review department reversed the hearing judge's determination that respondent attempted to mislead judicial officers, in violation of section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B), when he told an arbitration panel that he had represented his clients previously. The local bar association's arbitration panel was not composed of judges or judicial officers as required under both section 6068(d) and rule 5-200 and the local bar association's arbitration panel was not court-appointed. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.[6]

California Rules of Court, rule 951, which explicitly authorizes the State Bar Court to extend the time within which an attorney must take and pass a professional responsibility examination, applies only when the Supreme Court orders the attorney take and pass such an examination. It does not apply when the State Bar Court orders an attorney to take and pass the examination as a condition attached to a reproval. When the State Bar Court imposes such a condition, its authority to extend the time for the attorney to comply is derived from California Rules of Court, rule 956, which authorizes the State Bar Court to attach conditions to the reprovals that it imposes. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[1]

The relationship between an attorney and client is of the highest order of fiduciary relation. Even where the attorney no longer represents the client, the attorney continues to owe the client a fiduciary duty of utmost good faith and fair dealing with respect to, at least, the subject matter of the attorney's prior representation of the client, including any express lien for attorney's fees. Respondent did not violate this duty by refusing to sign a settlement check which was in the possession of the former client's new attorney, and which was made payable to the former client, the former client's new attorney, and respondent. Respondent's fee agreement provided for a lien on any recovery, he perfected his lien as to part of the former client's recovery, he suggested, among other alternatives, that the disputed portion of the recovery be placed in his trust account or, alternatively, in a separate blocked account requiring both his and his former client's signatures, and he took prompt action to judicially resolve the competing claims to the settlement proceeds. Respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing did not require that he abandon his lawfully perfected lien by endorsing the settlement draft when it was under the client's control, as doing so would have immediately extinguished the lien as to the client's creditors and thereafter subjected the lien to extinguishment if the client spent the money. In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754. [1]

It is presumed an amendment to a statute operates prospectively unless the Legislature has expressly stated the contrary or, after considering all pertinent factors, there is clear indication of a legislative intent that the statute operate retrospectively. Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) does not contain an express retroactivity provision and after considering extrinsic factors, including public protection and due process, the review department concluded that section 6102, subdivision (c) should not be applied retroactively. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [3]

A hearing judge erroneously relied on an unpublished hearing department decision and a Supreme Court order in another case. The unpublished decision of the hearing department in another proceeding, involving another respondent, may not be relied on either as precedent or as evidence. While the hearing department could take judicial notice of the Supreme Court order, that order provided no information that would make it relevant as either evidence or precedent in the matter before the court. It merely recited the discipline ordered, without discussion of the relevant facts or law and therefore should not have been relied on in this proceeding. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [3]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

Based on the determination that the provisions of the State Bar Act and the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar concerning investigative subpoenas for trust account records meet the standard as enunciated by the Supreme Court in a prior case, the review department concluded that there was no need to import either the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 1985 et seq., or the provisions of Government Code section 7470 et seq., for either due process or other reasons into the procedures for the issuance of State Bar investigative subpoenas. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [4]

Respondent's claim that the application of the Civil Discovery Act to attorney disciplinary proceedings denied him due process was rejected. State Bar disciplinary proceedings are administrative but of a nature of their own. It has been repeatedly held that they are not governed by the rules of procedure governing civil or criminal litigation although such rules have been invoked when necessary to insure administrative due process. The Supreme Court observed that the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar supply a wide array of procedural safeguards and that pursuant to these rules, the Civil Discovery Act, as adopted and limited by the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, constitutes the rules of discovery in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. Under Supreme Court case law, such application is constitutional. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [6]

Illegal use of the Great Seal of the State of California on respondent's letterhead was inherently inappropriate even if no one was misled. Fact that no one was misled was only a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [2]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain only just causes and abused the bankruptcy process by filing and maintaining a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding for an insolvent client when he knew that the client's only assets were nine residential lots in which there was no equity and that the client had neither the ability nor the intention of making adequate protection payments to the lienholders on the nine lots in accordance with the law. Even if respondent was unaware of these facts, he would still be culpable. Under applicable federal rules of procedure, respondent's signature on the Chapter 11 petition as attorney of record for debtor was a certification that to the best of his knowledge and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the petition was well founded in fact and warranted by either existing law or a good faith argument for the modification of existing law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [3]

Where respondent violated rule of professional conduct which prohibits an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, and that misconduct was the same misconduct underlying the charge that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold law on account of his violation of provisions of the Probate Code which prohibit self-dealing by trustees, and where discipline did not depend on whether respondent violated both rule and statute, statutory violation was cumulative and review department did not address it. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Attorney discipline is an available sanction for violation of rule 11 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Where respondent testified that he had been disciplined by federal court as result of rule 11 matter, and federal court had suspended respondent from practice before it as part of relief granted in ruling on rule 11 motion, federal court's action constituted discipline. However, State Bar must prove aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where record before review department did not reveal factual underpinnings of federal court discipline, and review department was therefore unable to examine nature and chronology of respondent's prior discipline to determine impact it should have on current discipline recommendation, review department gave no weight to respondent's federal discipline as factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [11]

The State Bar Court may take judicial notice of the records of any California court. (See Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1); Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Such notice may include the facts stated in court orders, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgments. Although civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, they must be assessed independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

As officers of the court, sworn to uphold the law, attorneys have a duty to honor legislative mandate that government-funded health care expenses be entitled to reimbursement from any and all private funds available. By statute, it is a disciplinable offense to violate this duty unless the violation is the result of a negligent good faith mistake. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [16]

The Business and Professions Code section requiring attorneys to support federal and California constitution and laws proscribes attorney conduct which violates any federal or California statute. However, such Business and Professions Code section may be used to charge violation of another statute only if that statute is specifically identified in the notice to show cause. Otherwise, the attorney is not given adequate notice of the particular statute allegedly violated. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [17]

An attorney retained by a parent to represent the parent's child in a personal injury matter is thereby put on notice that the injured client may be a minor, a fact of critical importance. Statutes requiring court approval of compromise of minors' claims are intended for protection of minors. Respondent's failure to ascertain client's age after being retained by client's parent was grossly negligent as a matter of law and constituted reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [20]

Where statutory scheme requires tribunal to approve fees charged by counsel, it is professional misconduct for an attorney to secure or attempt to secure fees in excess of those allowed by tribunal. Respondent's collection of any fee from minor client without court approval, regardless of amount charged, violated prohibition against charging or collecting an illegal fee. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [21]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law does not provide basis for discipline except where it serves as conduit to charge violation of state or federal statute other than disciplinary provisions of Business and Professions Code. Where no such statutory violation was charged in matter involving failure to honor contractual lien, no violation could be found as a matter of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [22]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

Notice to show cause under rule 550 of Transitional Rules of Procedure of State Bar is not required in conviction referral proceeding. Pursuant to Supreme Court's delegation of authority to State Bar Court in conviction referral matters (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(a)), only State Bar Court referral order and notice of time and place of hearing are needed to initiate a conviction referral proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [2]

Nothing in the California Rules of Court delegates to the State Bar Court the Supreme Court's general review power over decisions of the State Bar Board of Governors and its committees. However, in the exercise of its inherent authority to regulate the legal profession, the Supreme Court could order the State Bar Court to adjudicate or make findings and recommendations regarding a motion for a protective order regarding a State Bar disciplinary investigation, or could adopt a rule of court giving the State Bar Court jurisdiction over such motions generally. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [10]

In order to promote membership understanding of lawyers' professional obligations and to enhance public awareness of review department dispositions, review department initially followed policy of publishing its opinions in all public matters in which oral argument was held. After reaching point at which automatic publication of all such matters no longer appeared necessary, review department began to publish its opinions in public matters generally in accordance with standards governing other intermediate appellate courts in California. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 976(b).) In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [1]

Where respondent was a creditor of a client's bankruptcy estate and also represented the client in the bankruptcy, and where the only evidence about the bankruptcy proceeding showed that the claims of two other creditors were found non-dischargeable, there was no clear and convincing evidence to sustain a charge that respondent's representation of the client was improper under bankruptcy law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [8]

Rules of evidence in civil cases are generally applicable in State Bar proceedings (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556) and include taking judicial notice of records of any federal court of record. Where neither party specifically requested augmentation of record with federal court's opinion on appeal in related matter, but respondent attached copy of such opinion to review brief, review department took judicial notice of such opinion. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [3]

In State Bar disciplinary proceedings, the formal rules of evidence apply as in civil cases, with the proviso that no error in admitting or excluding evidence invalidates a finding or decision unless the error deprived the party of a fair hearing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556.) Accordingly, hearsay evidence is not admissible unless the opposing party agrees to its admission or otherwise waives any hearsay objections, or the evidence is subject to an exception to the hearsay rule. Where facts needed to establish past recollection recorded exception were shown, hearsay statements in witness's notebooks were properly admitted, and admission of notebooks themselves, even if error, did not prejudice opposing parties. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [8]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim, without filing suit, on behalf of a client who was a Medi-Cal beneficiary, respondent's failure to notify the Department of Health Services of the settlement did not violate a statute which only required such notice if an action had been filed (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.79). In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [2]

An attorney's obligation to his or her client is limited by the attorney's and the client's obligation to third parties. Where respondent's client, a Medi-Cal beneficiary, had a statutory obligation (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) of the impending settlement of a personal injury matter in which DHS claimed a lien, respondent had a fiduciary obligation under decisional law to provide the required notice on his client's behalf. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [3]

Where a statute (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) required Medi-Cal beneficiaries to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) regarding the impending settlement of matters in which no suit had been filed and DHS claimed a lien, the review department construed the statute to require that attorneys representing such beneficiaries must also give the required notice, because to construe the statute otherwise would frustrate the Medi-Cal third party liability recovery system and be in derogation of an attorney's general fiduciary responsibility to lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [4]

The statute providing that attorneys have a duty to support the constitution and laws of California and the United States constitutes a conduit whereby attorneys may be disciplined for violating laws which are not otherwise disciplinable under the State Bar Act. However, a negligent mistake made in good faith does not constitute a violation of this statute. Thus, where respondent believed he had satisfied his obligation to a statutory medical lienholder by informing it of a source of insurance coverage, and thus believed that his client was entitled to all of the settlement funds obtained from a different source of coverage, respondent's failure to notify the lienholder of the impending settlement, as required by statute, did not violate his statutory duty to obey California law, because it constituted a negligent mistake, based on the good faith, erroneous belief that he was entitled to distribute all the settlement funds to the client and let the client deal with the statutory lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [5]

No method of enforcement of settlement agreements in disciplinary proceedings is set forth in the Transitional Rules of Procedure, but an express provision governing this subject is not essential to the court's inherent jurisdiction to exercise reasonable control over proceedings before it in order to avoid unnecessary delay. Where one party refused to abide by a settlement agreement, the other party could have made a motion to compel enforcement of the agreement, by analogy with the statutory motion permitted by Code of Civil Procedure section 664.6, or could have asserted the agreement as an affirmative defense in the pending proceeding. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [6]

It is well established that an aggrieved party may properly bring to the court's attention the alleged breach of a settlement agreement arrived at before a judge and reflected in an ensuing court order. Rule 1231 of the Provisional Rules of Practice and Evidence Code sections 1152, subdivision (a) and 1154 only preclude evidence of settlement offers and negotiations that do not result in an agreement. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [7]

Because section 1013 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies by rule in State Bar Court proceedings, service of a hearing department decision by mail to an address within California extends by five days the 30-day period for filing a request for review. (Rule 450, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar; rule 1111(b), Provisional Rules of Practice.) In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [3]

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

Under California civil evidence rules, which apply generally in State Bar proceedings, a hearing judge has discretion to exclude evidence if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the probability that its admission will necessitate undue consumption of time or create substantial danger of undue prejudice. Undue consumption of time alone is not in itself grounds for exclusion. Nor is unfair surprise, where the fairness if the trial may otherwise be ensured, if necessary by a continuance. Where evidence is cumulative or remote, however, there is discretion to exclude it. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [10]

Compliance with the time limitations set forth in the Probate Code is not a defense to a charge that the attorney failed to act competently, nor does noncompliance with such time limitations establish per se a failure to act competently. The focus of the inquiry on a charge of failure to act competently is whether the attorney intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failed to apply the learning, skill, and diligence necessary to discharge the duties arising from the attorney's employment or representation. Compliance with the time limitations of the Probate Code is but one factor to be considered in making this determination. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [11]

Normally, discovery objections not raised in a timely fashion will not be considered, and this provision applies in discovery in moral character proceedings even though the Civil Discovery Act has not been made applicable to such proceedings in its entirety. However, where a claim of privilege from discovery had been belatedly presented to the hearing judge without objection and raised an important issue, the review department considered its applicability on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [5]

The State Bar is a public entity within the scope of the statutory official information privilege (Evid. Code, § 1040). The procedure to be followed in State Bar Court proceedings where the official information privilege is asserted is the same as in civil cases. In a moral character proceeding, where the information sought was the identities of persons whom the State Bar had reserved the right to call as impeachment or rebuttal witnesses at trial, the official information privilege did not apply to such information, either because the consent exception was applicable, or because the reservation of the right to call such persons reduced the Committee of Bar Examiners' need for secrecy to the interest of a party in the outcome of the proceeding, which is not protected under section 1040 and which was outweighed by the interests of the public and the applicant in a fair trial. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [6]

The Civil Discovery Act has not been adopted in its entirety in the conduct of State Bar proceedings. The imposition of monetary costs as discovery sanctions is precluded under rule 321, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. Authorized discovery sanctions include orders precluding a party from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses or from introducing evidence or testimony. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [14]

The California Professional Responsibility Examination, when appropriately ordered, does assist in the rehabilitation of an errant attorney and, as a general proposition, the examination is an effective tool to measure an attorney's understanding and appreciation of the rules and statutes which are designed to protect the public and the best interests of the profession. However, when imposed as a condition of a reproval, the examination may only be required based on a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 956(a).) In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [2]

Where there is no precedent regarding the standard of review to be applied in a matter coming before the review department in a certain procedural posture, the review department proceeds by analogy to the closest civil and criminal rules. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [2]

The Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, unlike equivalent California and federal rules, provide for review as of right following the denial of a motion to dismiss, as well as the grant of such a motion. However, this does not affect the type of review to be afforded on the merits. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 554.1.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [3]

Rule 951(a), California Rules of Court, delegating certain powers to the State Bar Court regarding the discipline of attorneys convicted of crimes, limits the State Bar Court to recommending summary disbarment to the Supreme Court, rather than imposing it directly. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [9]

Where a standard for judicial disqualification in the State Bar's Rules of Procedure was drawn from a similar provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, case law under the statute could be looked to in applying the State Bar rule. (Rule 230, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [10]

The rules of evidence in civil cases in courts of record, including applicable sections of the Code of Civil Procedure and judicial decisions as well as the Evidence Code, are followed in State Bar disciplinary proceedings. (Rule 556, Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [27]

Evidence Code section 776, providing for calling the opposing party as an adverse witness, does not empower the State Bar to require the respondent's presence at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [29]

In State Bar Court proceedings, the court acts as an administrative arm of the Supreme Court, and State Bar Court judges and referees function as "judicial officers." Therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure section 1990, any person present at a State Bar Court hearing may be compelled to take the witness stand by the judge or referee. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [31]

The California Rule of Court regarding reinstatement requires petitioners for reinstatement to pass a professional responsibility examination, and to establish their learning and ability in the law, rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Applicants who fail to show sufficient learning in the law may be required to pass the examination required of initial applicants for admission. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [3]

Where respondent did not agree in writing that statutory attorney-client fee arbitration would be binding, arbitration award was not binding even though it recited that it was. However, the award became binding when respondent failed to seek a post-arbitration trial within the statutory time limit. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [3]

Even if the procedure for a motion for judgment at the close of the moving party's case, as set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 631.8, does apply in State Bar proceedings, it was not error for the hearing referee to take respondent's motion under submission and rule on it after respondent had presented the defense case, and the motion was impliedly ruled on when the referee made initial rulings as to culpability. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [20]

In general, State Bar disciplinary proceedings are governed exclusively by the State Bar's rules of procedure, and the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply unless expressly incorporated by reference. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [21]

It is not clear that the statute regarding inadmissibility of evidence regarding diversion proceedings (Penal Code section 1000.5), and related case law, applies in attorney disciplinary proceedings, since such proceedings are conducted in the judicial branch of government by the State Bar Court, acting as an arm of the Supreme Court, and are aimed at assessing the attorney's fitness to practice law. Even if such authorities are applicable, evidence of respondent's arrest which resulted in diversion was properly used to show that respondent had a long history of involvement with marijuana. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [2]

Although attorney disciplinary proceedings are sui generis and not criminal in nature, rules of criminal law may provide guidance in appropriate circumstances; case law and statutes in criminal law indicate that lack of wilfulness constitutes a reason not to revoke probation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [7]

As with the treatment of failure to pay restitution in reinstatement and criminal probation cases, in a disciplinary proceeding for failure to make timely restitution as a condition of attorney disciplinary probation, due process requires an examination of the probationer's ability to make restitution and the sufficiency and good faith of the probationer's efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [11]

Section 6068(a) is a conduit by which attorneys may be charged and disciplined for violations of other specific laws which are not otherwise made disciplinable under the State Bar Act, including a violation of: (1) a statute not specifically relating to the duties of attorneys; (2) a section of the State Act which is not, by its terms, a disciplinable offense, and (3) an established common law doctrine which is not governed by any other statute. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [15]

Discovery in State Bar proceedings must be completed within 90 days after service of notice to show cause, subject to reasonable extension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 316.) Where examiner noticed and took deposition well after 90-day cutoff, and did not seek extension of discovery period, deposition was clearly discovery, even though examiner's purpose in taking it was to preserve evidence for trial. However, provision of Civil Discovery Act governing time to object to deposition notice on certain grounds did not apply, because respondent's objection was not based on grounds set forth in Civil Discovery Act but on examiner's failure to comply with State Bar rules of procedure. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [17]

Even if respondent waived procedural objection to deposition by appearing and participating, deposition transcript should not have been admitted in evidence, because examiner failed to show that State Bar had been unable to procure deponent's attendance at trial despite reasonable diligence, as required by provision of Civil Discovery Act governing use of depositions at trial. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [18]

The rules governing the proceedings for the transfer of an attorney to inactive status incorporate by reference Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). (Rules 315, 321, 643, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Proceedings to obtain an order for a mental examination under section 6053 must comply with the procedural and substantive requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [7]

Where no evidence or finding indicated that a compulsory mental examination constituted the least intrusive means of determining a respondent's mental condition, the issuance of mental examination orders violated not only the applicable statutory requirements but also the respondent's California constitutional right of privacy. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [8]

The facts of each case will determine whether a particular rule of civil or criminal law should be applied in State Bar proceedings to ensure due process. This principle applies in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings as well as disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [12]

An attorney may not endorse a client's name to a check without express authority to perform that particular act. However, under Commercial Code section 3403, no specific form of authorization is required from a principal to an agent in order for the agent to sign the principal's name to a negotiable instrument, such as a settlement check. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [3]

Sections 2450, et seq., of the Civil Code did not mandate a different format for special powers of attorney than the one which the respondent used, where those statutes were not enacted until two years after the power of attorney was executed by the client and one year after it was acted upon by the respondent, and where section 2456 of the Civil Code, enacted simultaneously with section 2450, expressly provides that any form that complies with the requirements of any other law may be used in lieu of the form set forth in section 2450. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [13]

Under Commercial Code section 3403, a properly authorized agent may simply sign the principal's name on a check endorsement rather than indicating that the agent is signing as agent. Absent evidence to the contrary, the expectations of the bank must be presumed to be in accord with this statute. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [16]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the petitioner bears the burden of establishing rehabilitation, present moral qualifications for readmission and present ability and learning in the general law. (Rule 952(d), Cal. Rules of Court; rule 667, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [4]

Rule 232 of the California Rules of Court contemplates preparation of a tentative decision after the completion of the trial, not in midstream, as a preliminary stage in the procedure for requesting a statement of decision. Therefore, rule 232 does not support the legitimacy of issuing a tentative decision when only one side has presented evidence. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [3]

In finding respondent culpable of misappropriating trust funds and of knowingly issuing a check drawn on insufficient funds, the referee's statement that respondent's acts constituted crimes involving moral turpitude was improper since the criminal statutes were not charged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [16]

Under applicable provisions of Commercial Code, handwritten notation on attorney's check stating that it was issued "subject to verbal confirmation" destroys its negotiability and prevented attorney from being criminally liable for issuance of check drawn on insufficient funds. Dishonor of such check due to insufficient funds was not an aggravating factor, because check was issued in non-negotiable form and there was no clear evidence that payee was misled regarding nature of check. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [1]

In administrative mandamus proceedings where the court is authorized to exercise independent judgment on the evidence, abuse of discretion by the lower tribunal is established if the court determines that the findings are not supported by the weight of the evidence. Where the court is not authorized to exercise independent judgment, then it must determine whether the findings are supported by substantial evidence in the light of the whole record. In such cases, due process requires that the body deciding the case must at least review a transcript of the evidence. The argument that this standard had been violated on earlier review by the former review department was mooted by the full-time review department's de novo review of the record on a second review after the former review department's remand for further hearing. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [1]

State Bar proceedings are sui generis, and are not governed by the principles of administrative mandamus applicable to ordinary administrative proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [2]

As a formal proceeding of the State Bar Court, a reinstatement hearing is governed by the formal rules of evidence applicable in civil proceedings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) More liberal evidentiary standards applicable in certain other types of statutory proceedings do not apply in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

In ruling on a motion to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), State Bar Court interprets and applies terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" in same manner as in civil cases under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [4]

Respondent's fear, panic, or aversion to formal charges alone would not show abuse of discretion in failure to grant relief from default, but specific showing regarding preoccupation with mother's serious illness raised doubts as to proper exercise of discretion, which review department resolved in respondent's favor. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [8]

In proceedings to set aside default under Rule of Procedure 555.1(a), the terms "mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect" are interpreted and applied in the same manner as in motions in civil cases pursuant to section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [8]

Appellate review under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is for abuse of discretion, the test being whether the trial court exceeded the bounds of reason. The Supreme Court has applied a similar abuse of discretion standard in reviewing procedural motions in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [10]

It is the policy of the law under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to favor a hearing on the merits; any doubts in applying section 473 must be resolved in favor of the party seeking relief from default. A trial court order denying relief is scrutinized more carefully than an order permitting trial on the merits. Nonetheless, it is the moving party's responsibility to recite facts that meet the burden of proving mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

An attorney is ordinarily justified in relying on communications from the clerk as a basis for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Navarro (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Neither civil nor criminal rules of procedure govern State Bar disciplinary proceedings. However, the right to practice one's profession is sufficiently precious to be surrounded by a panoply of legal protection, including invocation of civil and criminal procedural rules when necessary to insure administrative due process. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [3]

Contention by State Bar that respondent violated attorney's duty to obey state and federal laws by failing to pay payroll taxes as required by penal and civil statutes was rejected by review department, despite respondent's admission that taxes were not paid, because notice to show cause did not charge violation of employer withholding statutes, and no evidence was introduced to prove they were violated, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [10]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §4,06 451 et seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

Government Code section 68081 does not apply to the review department of the State Bar Court, which has a different standard of review than that of a court of appeal. However, opportunities are afforded to the parties under State Bar Court procedure which parallel those provided by Government Code section 68081. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [6]

195 Effect of Discipline in Other Jurisdictions

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State

Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [2]

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides that, with exceptions not applicable here, the Illinois Supreme Court disciplinary order imposed on respondent conclusively established his culpability in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [1]

Respondent's Illinois misconduct, involving misappropriation of client funds, repeated commingling of trust funds with personal funds, settling a case without authority, issuing an insufficiently funded check, and forging a client's name to settlement documents, was serious and a clear ground for imposing lawyer discipline in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [2]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, the appropriate degree of discipline is not presumed by the other state's discipline, but is open for determination in this state. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [3]

Respondent's argument that res judicata bars this disciplinary proceeding because a similar matter was dismissed by the state bar of another state was rejected. First, res judicata is applicable with respect to only final judgements rendered on the merits. Second, the State Bar was not a party to the other disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [4]

Attorney's out-of-state discipline was not entitled to preclusive effect under California statute providing for expedited disciplinary proceeding based on discipline in other jurisdictions where State Bar did not proceed pursuant to procedures set forth in such statute. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [9]

Possible collateral estoppel effect of attorney's out-of-state discipline could not be addressed where record did not reveal factual underpinnings of such discipline and did not permit determination as to what issues were actually litigated in out-of-state disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [10]

Attorney discipline is an available sanction for violation of rule 11 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Where respondent testified that he had been disciplined by federal court as result of rule 11 matter, and federal court had suspended respondent from practice before it as part of relief granted in ruling on rule 11 motion, federal court's action constituted discipline. However, State Bar must prove aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where record before review department did not reveal factual underpinnings of federal court discipline, and review department was therefore unable to examine nature and chronology of respondent's prior discipline to determine impact it should have on current discipline recommendation, review department gave no weight to respondent's federal discipline as factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [11]

Seven years of law practice in California prior to respondent's misconduct was worth only slight weight in mitigation. Respondent's additional years in practice in a foreign jurisdiction were not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be mitigating because the record lacked information on the similarities and differences between the attorney discipline systems in the United States and the foreign jurisdiction. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [11]

196 Comparison to ABA Model Code and/or Model Rules

Respondent violated seven states' UPL rules of professional conduct, which are either identical or substantially similar to the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 5.5(b), prohibiting a lawyer not licensed in a state from either: 1) establishing an office or other systemic and continuous presence in the state; or 2) holding out to the public or otherwise representing that the lawyer is admitted to practice law in the state. The form of communications used by respondent—specifically the use of the term "The Law Offices of" on Legal Services Agreements and cease and desist letters, and representations that the office acted as a "law firm" for clients and provided "legal services"—was evidence that he held himself out as entitled to practice law in states where he was unlicensed. By implying he was licensed in these seven states, respondent gave the false impression to clients and creditors that he held an advantage over a non-attorney debt negotiator. He also explicitly represented to clients he would perform legal services, and informed creditors that he was representing each client using law office letterhead. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250. [3 a-c]

Respondent's conduct did not fall under any safe harbor provision under American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 5.5(b), which allows out-of-state attorneys to practice temporarily in states where they are not licensed without committing UPL. First, applying the factors defined by the model rule, respondent's contact with out-of-state clients was not reasonably related to his practice in California. Likewise, his contentions that the Model Rule enabled him to provide legal services related to bankruptcy law failed where his proposed legal services were not limited to issues of bankruptcy and he was not admitted to practice law in the federal courts or any of the seven states at issue. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250. [4 a-c]

Where it was not clear, given federal case law interpreting similar ABA ethics rule, that county employees contacted by respondent's office came within definition of "party" in rule prohibiting direct contact with opposing party represented by counsel, and where it was possible that such contact came within exception for communications with public officials or otherwise authorized by law, record did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that such contact violated rule. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Violent criminal behavior that does not rise to the level of moral turpitude may result in the imposition of discipline under both California case law and the ABA model ethics rules. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [11]

Normally, a respondent who has recently been ordered to take a professional responsibility examination is not required to do so in connection with subsequent discipline. Where respondent had not been ordered to take any professional responsibility examination in connection with prior discipline, review department recommended that respondent be ordered to take the California Professional Responsibility Examination, focusing on the California Rules of Professional Conduct, which is now routinely ordered in discipline cases involving suspension in lieu of the national Professional Responsibility Examination, which focuses on the ABA rules. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [18]

Under both ABA model ethics rules and California law, lawyers convicted simply of a single misdemeanor offense of driving under the influence may receive a disciplinary reprimand, but for the most part are treated like under citizens and sanctioned under the criminal law. Their suitability to practice law is called into question, however, where the incident is compounded by serious injury or death or is coupled with other aggravating behavior. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [10]

In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121.

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to commit the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

Wording of California rule governing post-trial contact with jurors differs significantly from parallel rules in ABA Model Code and Model Rules. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [10]

199 Other Miscellaneous General Issues

Where respondent and State Bar stipulated to facts, legal conclusions on culpability, and discipline, but Supreme Court remanded matter for reconsideration of discipline in light of Standards, parties remained bound by stipulation with regard to facts and culpability. State Bar Court permitted parties to present additional evidence on aggravation and mitigation, and reconsidered degree of discipline. However, State Bar was bound by original stipulation that respondent's misconduct was not serious. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.320. [1a-d]

Once the hearing judge who tried this case left the State Bar Court, he became ineligible to take any further action in the case. Of necessity, that judge was unavailable to consider respondent's post-trial motions.In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.[1]

Standards governing an attorney's ethical duties do not vary according to the many areas of practice, even in specialized areas such as immigration law. Nor do those standards vary according to whether the attorney practices alone or in a partnership, small law firm, large law firm, or corporate law department.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [2]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Respondent's testimony and arguments regarding his customary practices (1) to limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and (2) to rely on or permit referring nonattorney immigration services providers to prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients placed respondent's practices in issue so that any uncharged improprieties in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [4 a-c]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Facts clients referred to respondent by nonattorney immigration services providers might have had a cultural bias in favor the referring nonattorney immigration services providers or that those clients might have viewed immigration attorneys, like respondent, as less important to their immigration cases than the referring nonattorney immigration services providers did not reduce or limit nature and scope of respondent's professional duties to his immigration clients.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [7]

Because parties failed to address relevant immigration court and Board of Immigration Appeals rules and procedures that are set forth in the Code of Federal Regulation and have the force and effect of law, hearing judge and review department were required to take and did take judicial notice of those rules and procedures sua sponte. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 214; Evid. Code, §§ 451, subd. (b), 459, subd. (a).)In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [8]

Respondent's arguments and testimony that almost all hearing judge's findings of misconduct are erroneous because they are based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients placed respondent's methods of practicing law in issue so that any uncharged impropriety in them may appropriately be considered as aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [9 a, b]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Under State Bar Act and disciplinary case law, respondent had affirmative duty to insure that his answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar were true and correct even if he had to refresh his recollection of the facts by going to the immigration court and reviewing the court file and listening to the tapes of all relevant court hearings in each client matter that was a subject of the interrogatories.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [27]

An offer of proof is a summary of proffered evidence excluded by a trial judge, which is presented (1) to the trial judge to insure that he knows what evidence he has excluded and to provide him with an opportunity to reconsider his denial and permit the introduction of the evidence before the end of trial and (2) to an appellate court so that it may effectively review the trial judge's exclusion of the evidence. Thus, where respondent subpoenaed three immigration court judges to testify on his behalf in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding, but U.S. Department of Justice greatly restricted the scope of the testimony one immigration court judge could give and refused to permit the other two judges to testify at all, the declaration regarding the immigration judges' testimonies that was executed by respondent's counsel and filed in hearing department was not an offer of proof because hearing judge did not restrict or excluded immigration court judges' testimonies, Department of Justice did, and State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction to review Department's actions. Accordingly, review department struck all statements in respondent's brief based on the declaration of respondent's attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [29 a-c]

An attorney's lack of experience is not a mitigating circumstance. It is when an attorney is newly licensed or begins to practice in a new area of law that he should take proper steps necessary to learn governing law, rules, and regulations.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [30]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. Nevertheless, civil findings made under a preponderance of the evidence test are entitled to a strong presumption of validity in disciplinary proceedings if they are supported by substantial evidence. Where the trial judge in a civil proceeding found that respondent knew prior to filing a lawsuit that he had not been defamed, that his law firm had not been disparaged, and that his retainer contract with his clients had not been interfered with at all, and those findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record, the hearing judge's conclusion in the disciplinary proceeding that respondent filed the lawsuit based on his honest and reasonable belief in its validity was contrary to the civil findings and did not appear to have accorded the civil findings the strong presumption of validity to which they were entitled. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[1]

As respondent did not appeal the dismissal of a civil lawsuit, he could not assert in the discipline proceeding that the dismissal was in error, as collateral attack is not available to challenge non jurisdictional error in a judgment. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [3]

Right to recover costs is purely statutory. That is courts have no discretion to award costs that are not statutorily authorized. However, because Supreme Court retains inherent and original jurisdiction over attorney disciplinary proceedings, Supreme Court might well adopt rules providing for or regulating recovery of costs in State Bar Court proceedings, but has not yet done so. Accordingly, right of attorneys to recover costs from the State Bar is granted solely by statute, which statute State Bar Court must strictly construe. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [1]

Statutory provision granting attorneys the right to recover costs from State Bar provides that attorneys who have been exonerated of all disciplinary charges following a trial are entitled to reimbursement from the State Bar "in an amount determined by the State Bar to be the reasonable expenses, other than fees for attorneys or experts, of preparing for [trial]" without defining "reasonable expenses" (other than expressly excluding fees for attorneys and experts) and without prescribing the method by which State Bar is to determine what they are. Accordingly, State Bar Board of Governors properly exercised its statutory rule making authority and adopted State Bar Rule of Procedure 283 to define what expenses (or costs) are allowable as "reasonable expenses" for which exonerated attorneys may obtain reimbursement under statute and to provide the procedure by which exonerated attorneys are to seek reimbursement from the State Bar for those expenses. In absence of Supreme Court authority to the contrary, the State Bar Court may award exonerated attorneys reimbursement from the State Bar for reasonable expenses only if they are specified as allowable expenses in Rule of Procedure 283. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [2]

Under clear language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 283(b)(5), State Bar Court may award attorneys exonerated of all disciplinary charges after trial reimbursement for expenses incurred in obtaining transcripts of court proceedings only if the court ordered that the transcripts be prepared. Fact that exonerated attorney could not obtain plenary review of hearing judge's decision finding him culpable of professional misconduct without first obtaining and paying for trial transcript is not synonymous with the court ordering the preparation of a transcript. In fact, requirement of obtaining trial transcript for plenary review is not imposed by court, but by State Bar Rule of Procedure 301(a)(2), which makes clear that it is the party seeking review that orders the trial transcript. In the Matter of Wu (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [3]

State Bar Court does not have authority to conditionally grant standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension or to impose probation type conditions on attorneys when granting such petitions. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [5]

Collateral estoppel may be applied in the State Bar Court to deny an attorney the right to relitigate an issue that was litigated and resolved against him or her in a prior civil proceeding only if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the same issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the attorney was a party to civil proceeding, (4) there is final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, (5) the attorney fails to demonstrate any unfairness in precluding the relitigation of the issue, and (6) the civil finding was necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding. The requirement that the civil finding be necessary to the judgment in the civil proceeding is required by procedural fairness to insure that preclusive effect is not given to nonessential prior findings. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [2 a, b]

Whenever the State Bar relies upon all or part of the record in prior civil proceeding to prove an element of a disciplinary violation or aggravating circumstance independent of the application of collateral estoppel, neither the evidence nor any factual findings in the civil proceeding may be judicially noticed as conclusive or otherwise given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court, but must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof. In addition, the attorney must be given a fair opportunity to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence and findings in the civil proceeding with other evidence, including the live testimony of the same witnesses who testified in the civil proceeding. The attorney need not be given free reign to completely retry the civil suit in the State Bar Court. The hearing judge retains the sound discretion to restrict or excluded cumulative evidence and otherwise control the introduction of evidence as in any other case. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [4 a, b]

Independent of the application collateral estoppel, admissions made by an attorney in a prior civil proceeding are not conclusive and cannot be given preclusive effect in the State Bar Court even if they are admissible in the State Bar Court as party admissions. Such admissions must be independently assessed under the clear and convincing standard of proof.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [5]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

Even though the hearing judge properly admitted and judicially noticed the record in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party, the hearing judge erred in making factual findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations of the moral turpitude statute based upon the evidence in the civil record independent of the application of collateral estoppel because he did not first give respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain the evidence in it with other evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings as to the nature and extent of respondent's statutory violations and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the nature and extent of respondent's violations.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [7]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

In making his factual findings with respect to charged violations of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients, the hearing judge erred in reweighing and relying upon the evidence in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party without first giving respondent a fair opportunity to attempt to contradict, temper, or explain that evidence. That error required the reversal of the hearing judge's findings that respondent committed multiple violations of the former rule governing business transactions with clients and precluded the review department from exercising its authority to reweigh the evidence and independently make appropriate findings regarding the charged violations of that former rule.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [9 a, b]

Principles of collateral estoppel may be applied to preclude a respondent from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved against him in a prior civil proceeding. In State Bar Court proceedings, principles of collateral estoppel may be applied with respect to an adverse prior civil finding if (1) the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to that in the State Bar Court proceeding, (2) the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, (3) the respondent was a party to the civil proceeding, (4) there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and (5) the respondent does not establish that it would be unfair to bind him to the prior adverse civil finding.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where the only evidence presented in the hearing department to support the contention that it would be unfair to prohibit relitigation of harassment and emotional distress claims was respondent's own testimony without corroborating evidence, respondent's reiteration of his testimony on review does not provide a basis to disturb the hearing judge's rejection of respondent 's testimony. The review department gives great weight to hearing judges' factual findings resolving issues pertaining to credibility of witnesses.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2 a, b, c]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[3]

Even though Rules of Procedure adopted by State Bar's Board of Governors are not legislative acts, it is appropriate to construe them using rules for statutory interpretation/construction. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[4]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[6 a-b]

Even though respondent was not entitled to any mitigating credit for five years of discipline free practice under standard 1.2(e)(i) and case law, there was no error in hearing judge's giving respondent mitigating credit for discipline free practice because weight assigned to such mitigation by hearing judge was nominal (i.e., "exists in name only;" not real or substantial). In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[2]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[2 a-c]

In two situations, applying statute to acts before statute's effective date are not retroactive application of statute: when statute merely clarifies, rather than substantially changes law; and when statute changes trial procedure, but does not change legal consequences of parties' past conduct. Amendments effective January 1, 1997, to summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)) are not clarifying or procedural because they significantly broadened scope of crimes for which attorneys are subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[3 a-c]

To apply amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997, against an attorney whose disciplinary proceeding began before January 1, 1997, effective date of amendments would be impermissible retroactive application of amendments. That is because amendments had dramatic effect on attorney's legal ability to practice law and deprived attorney of right to request hearing on inactive enrollment and because amendments neither clarified prior law nor merely changed procedure of trial. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.[1 a-f]

Even though respondent received extensive trial on disciplinary charges, he was never formally notified that outcome of trial could result in his immediate and automatic inactive enrollment under amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997. Reasonable notice is crucial to a meaningful hearing. Thus, disciplinary trial itself could not have provided respondent with minimal protection on issue of inactive enrollment because issues can differ from case to case between the appropriate level of discipline for misconduct compared to the need for immediate public protection to protect existing or future clients from additional risk of harm. And disciplinary hearing did not fulfill explicitly recognized right to request hearing on the propriety of inactive enrollment provided for under former version of section 6007, subdivision (c)(4) before its amendment effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.[2 a-b]

Disciplinary rules governing legal profession cannot punish activity protected by First Amendment, but neither false statements made knowingly nor false statements made with reckless disregard for truth are protected by First Amendment. Thus, because respondent's statements in pleadings, which she filed in superior court action and this disciplinary action, that her opposing counsel in superior court action was "well-known racist," "champion of the Emeryville pedophile ring," "operated by organized crime," "intent upon avoiding his own criminal indictment," and "motivated by racial hatred," and described young children as "niggers, hood and scums" were proved false at trial; because those statements were not mere rhetorical hyperbole, incapable of being proved true or false; and because respondent either knew statements were false or made them with reckless disregard of truth as there was no objective evidence that statements were true, hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of violating professional rules requiring attorneys to employ only such means as are consistent with truth and not to seek to mislead courts and judicial officers as well as statute proscribing acts involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[2 a-i]

Hearing judge properly had respondent physically removed from courtroom upon respondent's repeated failure to comply with hearing judge's orders and warning with respect to respondent's disruptive conduct. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[15 a-b]

Even though hearing judge is required to give respondent the benefit of all reasonable doubts, she was not required to devalue evidence she found stronger than that of respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.[3]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3 a-b]

The terms judges and judicial officers as used in Business and Professions Code section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct are limited to those individuals who are officers of a state or federal system and who perform judicial functions. Thus, the review department reversed the hearing judge's determination that respondent attempted to mislead judicial officers, in violation of section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B), when he told an arbitration panel that he had represented his clients previously. The local bar association's arbitration panel was not composed of judges or judicial officers as required under both section 6068(d) and rule 5-200 and the local bar association's arbitration panel was not court-appointed. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [6]

Even after respondent's private reproval became final, the State Bar Court retained jurisdiction over the conditions attached to it under the Former Transitional Rules of Procedure of the State Bar (now the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings). Thus, when the hearing judge extended the time for respondent to comply with the conditions attached to the reproval after the time to comply had expired, the hearing judge did not act without jurisdiction; but in excess of jurisdiction. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [2]

When a party seeks or consents to a court's action that is in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the party may be estopped to complain of the court's action as long as the court had subject matter jurisdiction. Respondent was estopped from collaterally attacking a final order extending the time in which he was required to comply with conditions attached to a reproval where he consented to the order and where the court had jurisdiction of the subject. The review department concluded that the application of estoppel was in harmony with the primary goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [3]

An attorney's criminal conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is deemed a conviction for attorney disciplinary purposes and is conclusive proof of the attorney's guilt on each of the essential elements of the offense of which the attorney was convicted. Thus, respondent cannot collaterally attack his conviction in the State Bar Court even though the victim of respondent's crime lost her civil lawsuit against respondent for damages. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [4]

Disciplinary rules governing the legal profession cannot punish activity protected by the First Amendment. However, because attorneys are officers of the court with a special responsibility to protect the administration of justice, reasonable speech restrictions may be imposed on them. To survive judicial scrutiny such a restriction must (1) further an important or substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of expression and (2) be no greater than is necessary or essential to the protection of that important or substantial governmental interest. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [1]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

An attorney's statement impugning the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is not disciplinable if it constitutes rhetorical hyperbole, or uses language only in a loose, figurative sense, or if it is not capable of being proved true or false. The statement is not disciplinable unless it implies or is based upon a false assertion of fact. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [4]

The relationship between an attorney and client is of the highest order of fiduciary relation. Even where the attorney no longer represents the client, the attorney continues to owe the client a fiduciary duty of utmost good faith and fair dealing with respect to, at least, the subject matter of the attorney's prior representation of the client, including any express lien for attorney's fees. Respondent did not violate this duty by refusing to sign a settlement check which was in the possession of the former client's new attorney, and which was made payable to the former client, the former client's new attorney, and respondent. Respondent's fee agreement provided for a lien on any recovery, he perfected his lien as to part of the former client's recovery, he suggested, among other alternatives, that the disputed portion of the recovery be placed in his trust account or, alternatively, in a separate blocked account requiring both his and his former client's signatures, and he took prompt action to judicially resolve the competing claims to the settlement proceeds. Respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing did not require that he abandon his lawfully perfected lien by endorsing the settlement draft when it was under the client's control, as doing so would have immediately extinguished the lien as to the client's creditors and thereafter subjected the lien to extinguishment if the client spent the money. In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754. [1]

A hearing judge properly applied collateral estoppel and denied respondent the right to relitigate the issue of dishonest billing in a disciplinary proceeding where respondent had fully litigated the issue in a superior court action; where the jury in the prior action had determined by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had acted with oppression, fraud, and malice; and where no unfairness resulted from precluding the relitigation of the issue. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [1]

Generally, it is in the public interest to dispose of disciplinary charges on the merits. However, the public interest and the interests of justice would not be served by permitting the State Bar to maintain specified charges for possible later prosecution by dismissing the charges without prejudice when respondent relied on the charges to his detriment in preparation for and during trial and in doing so exposed his defense case. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [4]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days, State Bar's request for a recommendation that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court as a means of forcing respondent to demonstrate submission to the disciplinary authority of the State Bar and the courts was rejected as no authority was found to support imposing a rule 955 requirement for this reason. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [5]

Where the recommended period of actual suspension was less than 90 days and the respondent had continuously been on administrative suspension for failing to pay bar dues for more than five years and on involuntary inactive enrollment for more than a year, there was no identifiable preventative benefit sufficient to recommend that respondent be required to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [6]

Respondent's claim that the State Bar Court is an entity created, owned, and run by the prosecuting party was frivolous. The current State Bar Court is modeled after courts of record. State Bar Court judges are appointed for specified terms by the Supreme Court and are subject to discipline by the Supreme Court upon the same grounds as judges of courts of record. The prosecution does not assign cases to State Bar Court judges, nor do their salaries depend upon finding attorneys culpable of misconduct. Although the Board of Governors of the State Bar is responsible for paying the salaries of State Bar Court judges, these salaries are set by law to equal those of judges of courts of record and come from annual membership fees. Thus, respondent provided no evidence that the State Bar Court is improperly dependent on, or controlled by, the prosecution. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [2]

A disciplinarily suspended attorney does not have to pay the costs of the disciplinary proceeding as a condition of reinstatement where the attorney has not also been administratively suspended for failure to pay such costs as part of the attorney's next annual bill for membership fees. No such automatic administrative suspension occurred here and therefore, respondent was not culpable of the unauthorized practice of law for appearing in court as counsel for a client after the date that his actual suspension terminated but before he had paid the disciplinary costs and was reinstated. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [8]

The only prerequisite to initiating a conviction referral proceeding against an attorney in the State Bar Court is a guilty plea by the attorney or a guilty verdict rendered against the attorney. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [1]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

Even though statutes authorizing conviction referral proceedings authorize only the disbarment or suspension of attorneys convicted of crimes, the State Bar Court still had jurisdiction in conviction matter to recommend to the Supreme Court that it cancel respondent's license to practice law. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [9]

An applicant's continuing duty to update his answers to the moral character questions in his initial application for admission is an absolute duty that requires a high degree of frankness and truthfulness on the applicant's part. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [11]

Respondent's willful failure to disclose his arrest and pending trial on felony charges by updating his answers to the moral character questions on his initial application for admission to practice law was a fraud upon the Supreme Court because it allowed him to admitted without adequate consideration of his moral character. Thus, the State Bar Court may recommend that his license to practice be revoked without addressing the nature of his crimes or the facts and circumstances surrounding them. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [12]

Where respondent contended that California's disciplinary process violates the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, respondent failed to recognize that the judiciary of each state has the right to regulate the practice of law in that state. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [2]

No merit was found to respondent's claim that California's disciplinary process violates due process because of the alleged financial interest of State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff in the outcome of disciplinary proceedings and in the collection of disciplinary costs. California provides attorneys subject to discipline with more than constitutionally sufficient procedural due process. The Supreme Court has inherent and plenary authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, and the State Bar serves as its administrative arm to assist with these matters. The Supreme Court appoints the judges of the State Bar Court, and the Legislature sets their salaries comparable to judges of courts of record. The State Bar Court judges are subject to discipline on the same grounds as a judge of any other state court. The annual membership fees of attorneys who belong to the State Bar, not the costs assessed upon the imposition of discipline, pay the salaries of the State Bar Court judges and State Bar staff. Thus, personal financial interest does not dictate the outcome of disciplinary proceedings or the imposition of disciplinary costs. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [3]

Respondent's argument that res judicata bars this disciplinary proceeding because a similar matter was dismissed by the state bar of another state was rejected. First, res judicata is applicable with respect to only final judgements rendered on the merits. Second, the State Bar was not a party to the other disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [4]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court is bound by civil findings that exculpate a respondent of charged misconduct, or by an attorney's acquittal in a criminal case, or by the dismissal of criminal charges against an attorney. The reasons the State Bar is not bound by exculpatory civil findings or criminal acquittals in disciplinary proceedings are that the parties are different, the quantum of proof required in each proceeding is virtually always different, and the purposes of each proceeding are vastly different. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [10]

Neither the Supreme Court nor the State Bar Court will bind an applicant or a respondent to an adverse civil finding made upon the usual civil standard of proof of a preponderance of the evidence when the standard of proof in the State Bar proceeding is clear and convincing evidence. When civil findings are made under a preponderance of the evidence standard, they must be independently assessed under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings of clear and convincing evidence. It is only in this context that civil findings have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [11]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Discipline imposed in separate disciplinary proceedings may be "concurrent" without either starting together or ending at same time, in sense that periods of probation and actual suspension imposed in different proceedings run together only during time periods that they overlap. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [17]

Under applicable provisions of the State Bar Act, read together, costs of a disciplinary proceeding need not be paid by a disciplinarily suspended member of the State Bar as a condition of reinstatement of active membership unless the member has also been administratively suspended for failure to pay such costs as part of the member's next annual bill for membership fees. (Bus. & Prof. Code, §§ 6140(b), 6140.7, 6142, 6143.) In the Matter of Langfus (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 161. [1]

An attorney's wilful failure to cite controlling authority squarely contradicting the attorney's position could be held to violate statute and rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges. However, attorneys as advocates are under no duty to reveal decisions which do not constitute controlling precedent. In State Bar Court, only decisions of review department, subject to relevant Supreme Court case law, are considered controlling precedent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [15]

Statute providing for respondents to pay costs of disciplinary proceeding upon determination of sanction of public reproval or greater discipline, and also providing for assessment of costs against State Bar in case of complete exoneration of attorney, is neutral in its application. Moreover, since salaries of State Bar Court judges are set by statute and are unaffected by assessment or collection of costs by State Bar, and State Bar Court's ruling on costs is only a recommendation to Supreme Court that costs be assessed, cost statute does not provide basis for alleging bias of State Bar Court judges based on alleged personal financial interest. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [6]

In the statute establishing the State Bar Court (Business and Professions Code section 6086.5), the reference to "committees" which are replaced by the State Bar Court does not include the standing Discipline Committee of the Board of Governors. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [4]

Former disciplinary structure under which local administrative committees had both investigative and fact-finding powers raised due process concerns. Under volunteer State Bar Court system which superseded it, investigative and prosecutorial functions were separated from fact-finding and adjudicative functions. This separation was strengthened and institutionalized by reforms which created independently appointed State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [5]

Statutory scheme regarding State Bar discipline system does not provide for State Bar Court judges to report to Board of Governors or any of its committees, nor does it require Chief Trial Counsel to report to State Bar Court. Consistent with separation of prosecutorial and judicial roles, State Bar Court has no administrative oversight role with respect to functions of Chief Trial Counsel, and does not have general, plenary authority to supervise the conduct of investigations. Board of Governors and its Discipline Committee have general statutory authority over Chief Trial Counsel and Office of Investigations, subject to review by California Supreme Court. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [6]

Review department declined to adopt construction of statute giving State Bar Court jurisdiction over motions to quash subpoenas (Business and Professions Code section 6051.1) which would do violence both to plain meaning of statute and to necessary separation of powers within disciplinary system. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [8]

Nothing in the California Rules of Court delegates to the State Bar Court the Supreme Court's general review power over decisions of the State Bar Board of Governors and its committees. However, in the exercise of its inherent authority to regulate the legal profession, the Supreme Court could order the State Bar Court to adjudicate or make findings and recommendations regarding a motion for a protective order regarding a State Bar disciplinary investigation, or could adopt a rule of court giving the State Bar Court jurisdiction over such motions generally. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [10]

Where words used in a rule are unambiguous, there is no need to go beyond the plain language to extrinsic aids. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [6]

Where administrative proceeding in which respondent had not appeared had resulted in revocation of respondent's real estate license, and record of such administrative proceeding was relevant in State Bar disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge and parties should have addressed issues regarding whether administrative decision had preclusive weight; if not, whether it was admissible under any hearsay exception, and whether respondent should be permitted to introduce evidence concerning culpability or mitigation with respect to the license revocation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [10]

Even though a disciplinary proceeding is a public matter, the respondent's name is not publicized in the review department's opinion when the disposition at the hearing level was dismissal and the review department cannot determine what the ultimate disposition of the proceeding will be. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [1]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim on behalf of a Medi-Cal beneficiary without ensuring the payment of the applicable Medi-Cal lien, an issue to be addressed on remand was the effect, if any, on the appropriate degree of discipline of the policy adopted by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, with the approval of a committee of the Board of Governors, against prosecuting future health care provider "collection" cases, at least for private lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [15]

Respondents in public proceedings should anticipate that their names will be published in any opinion except those resulting in dismissal or private reproval or, in the case of remanded proceedings, those which may potentially result in dismissal or private reproval. Accordingly, where respondent was on notice that petition for review of order denying relief from costs would probably be referred to review department in bank, and where respondent had already been required to notify clients, courts and opposing counsel of his suspension, review department declined to omit respondent's name from published opinion in relief from costs matter. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [1]

Negotiations regarding an agreement ordinarily result in a binding contract when all of the essential terms are definitely understood, even if a formal writing is to be executed later and even if there is uncertainty in a minor, nonessential detail. Where all elements of a stipulation settling a disciplinary proceeding were resolved at a settlement conference, and the settlement judge's ensuing order indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the settlement agreement was binding even though no formal written stipulation had yet been signed. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [4]

Prosecutors must be held to the ethical standards which regulate the legal profession as a whole. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [10]

The law of the case doctrine is one of policy and does not preclude the relitigation of issues already determined in a prior appeal. However, strong reasons should be put forward for seeking to relitigate an issue already fully litigated and decided on a prior appeal. Where a party sought reconsideration, on a second appeal, of the review department's determination of an issue on an earlier appeal in the same proceeding, without offering any justification for its failure to seek reconsideration earlier, and relying on no new case law or statute, the review department had no cognizable reason to reconsider its prior conclusion. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [2]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Normally, no published opinion results from a petition to set aside an interim suspension order based on a criminal conviction. Where final discipline had not been entered and might not be warranted, the review department could not determine whether it was appropriate to publicize respondent's name in connection with opinion and order vacating interim suspension. Opinion therefore did not name respondent, although proceeding remained public. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [1]

Because hearings and records regarding inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(b) are confidential, respondent was not identified in review department's opinion regarding issues raised by such inactive enrollment. However, where such issues arose during a disciplinary proceeding, the record in that proceeding remained public, subject to the hearing judge's discretion to seal specific portions of the record where proper grounds appeared. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [1]

Given the severe consequences of inactive enrollment, public protection supports inactive enrollment of an attorney who intentionally makes a claim of mental incompetence, even if the attorney was actually rational and was misguidedly making the claim as a strategy to impede disciplinary prosecution. Any issue of bad faith may be addressed in the context of the requested abatement of the disciplinary case. The mere enrollment of the attorney inactive does not dictate abatement of the underlying disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [4]

Judges are required under canon 2B of the California Code of Judicial Conduct not to testify voluntarily as character witnesses, but where subpoenas were issued to compel judges to testify, their declarations regarding good character of disciplinary respondent could be considered by State Bar Court. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

Where a municipal court judge and a state appellate justice were subpoenaed as witnesses, it was proper for them to testify in a reinstatement proceeding. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [10]

Judges should not testify voluntarily as character witnesses. Judges should respond to requests from the State Bar, but absent such a request, should not write a letter of reference for an attorney facing discipline or a petitioner seeking reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [14]

Admission of attorneys to practice law is an exercise of one of the inherent powers of the California Supreme Court, which relies on the Committee of Bar Examiners of the State Bar to administer and carry out the bar admission process, including examining applicants for admission and investigating their fitness. An applicant who is denied certification by the Committee may seek independent adjudication by the State Bar Court. The determination of moral character made by that court is final and binding, subject to review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [1]

In 1990, the majority of the California Supreme Court expressly declined to determine whether a nexus between criminal conduct and the practice of law is required in order to impose professional discipline based on a criminal conviction. The Court unanimously agreed, however, that it would be unreasonable to hold attorneys to such a high standard of conduct that every violation of law, however minor, would constitute a ground for professional discipline. Thus, the integrity of the profession does not require professional discipline in addition to criminal sanctions for every violation of law by an attorney. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [2]

Where probation conditions required that respondent abstain from intoxicants and non-prescribed drugs, and respondent stated under penalty of perjury that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions, then even if State Bar proved respondent had consumed alcohol, respondent could have avoided perjury conviction by contending he did not consider abstinence condition to be valid, legally reasonable, and/or enforceable. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [5]

In a contingent fee matter, the client has the power to discharge the attorney at any time, with or without cause, subject to the obligation to pay the discharged attorney the reasonable quantum meruit value of services rendered up to the time of discharge. If the discharged attorney has a lien it may be enforced in the quantum meruit amount. However, unless there is adequate proof that a lien for the discharged attorney's fees was created, the attorney does not enjoy the status of a lienholder with an interest in the client's recovery. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [8]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

Review department adopted parties' stipulated facts, noting that the Supreme Court ordinarily will hold an accused attorney to stipulated facts even in a matter arising from a stipulation as to facts and disposition. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Whether or not review department adopted parties' stipulated legal conclusions, the Supreme Court would not be bound by them in its independent review. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

The State Bar Court acts as the administrative arm of the Supreme Court on attorney disciplinary matters and acts pursuant to its mandate. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [8]

Language used in an opinion is to be understood in the light of the facts and the issue then before the court, and an opinion is not authority for a proposition not therein considered. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [5]

A statute should be interpreted so as to produce a result that is reasonable and if two constructions are possible, that construction which leads to the more reasonable result should be adopted. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [7]

Focusing on technicalities in the law is a very shortsighted approach to the ethical obligations of attorneys; such technical approaches to the body of law regulating attorneys' ethics may be described as undermining the moral fiber of the profession. Evidence of good character does not rest on technicalities. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [9]

The Rules of Professional Conduct are binding on attorneys, but are not the equivalent of statutes; they merely supplement the statutory provisions. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [4]

Protection of the public, its confidence in the legal profession, and the maintenance of high professional standards are the greatest concerns of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [10]

A proceeding for involuntary inactive enrollment is not disciplinary in nature. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [3]

Absent unconscionable circumstances in its creation, an agreement granting an attorney express authority to sign a client's name on documents is clearly not contrary to public policy. Indeed, it is essential that express authority be obtained by an attorney seeking the power to sign the client's name to documents on the client's behalf. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [10]

The review department's overriding concern is the same as that of the Supreme Court: the protection of the public, preservation of public confidence in the profession and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [2]

Respondent's withdrawal of his resignation with charges pending should not have been relied on as an aggravating factor. Respondents should be permitted to submit their resignations without fear that if a resignation is subsequently withdrawn, the respondent will be penalized by the court's reliance on that fact as an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [15]

The doctrine of law of the case did not preclude the full-time review department from reconsidering a decision of the former, volunteer review department. Due to the non-finality of recommendations of the former State Bar Court review department, law of the case did not apply to them. Upon its independent de novo review, review department was not bound to follow earlier factual determinations made prior to remand. Review department was also free to reconsider prior review department's legal interpretation of rule of professional conduct, given flexibility of law of the case doctrine in California appellate courts. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [3]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

The State Bar Office of Trial Counsel was bound by the ruling of the Supreme Court in a matter in which its counsel, the State Bar Office of General Counsel, did not request a rehearing before the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [3]

200 Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally

203 Culpability

204 General substantive issues re culpability

204.10 Wilfulness requirement

Where respondent was unable to access client contact information because his former office staff locked him out of his office, hearing judge properly found respondent not culpable of failing to communicate with clients in violation of Business and Professions code section 6068(m). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [5].

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole, his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

While moral turpitude generally requires a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, or willfulness, the law is clear that where an attorney's fiduciary obligations are involved, particularly trust account duties, a finding of gross negligence will support such a charge.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [3]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Respondent's failure to perform any substantive work on client's workers' compensation case for more that five years was clearly repeated and reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[6]

The wilful violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068(0)(3)'s reporting requirement does not require a bad purpose or an evil intent. All that is required for a wilful violation of section 6068(o)(3) is a general purpose of willingness to commit the act or omission. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [4]

The failure to disclose a material fact on an application for admission is deemed willful whenever the application calls for disclosure with reasonable clarity. Respondent's arrest on felony charges of conspiracy to commit theft (which occurred after he filed his initial application for admission to practice law, but before he admitted to practice) and his pending trial on those charges were material facts that respondent was required to disclose, under the plain language of his initial application by updating his initial application. Thus, respondent's failure to do so was willful. eof. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [10]

The statutory duty to report to the State Bar any judicial sanction of more than $1,000 not imposed for failure to make discovery applies to a sanction incurred by an attorney during self-representation. Violation of this duty may serve as a basis for discipline even though the court imposing the sanction is also required to report the sanction. Knowledge of the reporting requirement is not necessary to find a violation thereof. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [11]

Respondent's ignorance of statute requiring attorneys to report court-ordered sanctions to State Bar was not a defense to violation of such statute, but respondent's awareness that court itself had reported sanctions to State Bar substantially mitigated such violation. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [4]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request also applies to obligation to pay third parties, including holders of medical liens, out of funds held in trust. Failure to pay a medical lien can violate such rule even if attorney acts in good faith. Even where respondent believed he had permission from medical lienholder to use settlement funds, such belief was not a defense to violation of rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [3]

As officers of the court, sworn to uphold the law, attorneys have a duty to honor legislative mandate that government-funded health care expenses be entitled to reimbursement from any and all private funds available. By statute, it is a disciplinable offense to violate this duty unless the violation is the result of a negligent good faith mistake. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [16]

Where hearing judge found that respondent acted with reckless disregard in failing to honor rights of statutory lienholder, and where in one matter respondent intentionally did not honor known statutory lien based on incorrect legal theory without any legal research, advice, or inquiry, and in two other matters respondent made no effort to determine whether clients' health care providers might have statutory liens, and where respondent took no steps to ascertain the law as to his obligations to statutory lienholder, respondent's failure to honor statutory liens was product of gross negligence rather than of good faith, negligent mistake, and thus constituted violation of statute requiring attorneys to support the law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [18]

Rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds on demand requires no special state of mind to establish violation; mere fact that payment was not made is sufficient to constitute wilfulness for purpose of finding wilful violation of rule. Without justification, failure to pay third party lien on demand violates such rule. Where attorney negotiates with lienholder to reduce lien amount, and it becomes clear negotiations will not be productive, attorney violates rule if attorney neither promptly pays lien in full nor takes appropriate steps to resolve dispute promptly. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [24]

The statute providing that attorneys have a duty to support the constitution and laws of California and the United States constitutes a conduit whereby attorneys may be disciplined for violating laws which are not otherwise disciplinable under the State Bar Act. However, a negligent mistake made in good faith does not constitute a violation of this statute. Thus, where respondent believed he had satisfied his obligation to a statutory medical lienholder by informing it of a source of insurance coverage, and thus believed that his client was entitled to all of the settlement funds obtained from a different source of coverage, respondent's failure to notify the lienholder of the impending settlement, as required by statute, did not violate his statutory duty to obey California law, because it constituted a negligent mistake, based on the good faith, erroneous belief that he was entitled to distribute all the settlement funds to the client and let the client deal with the statutory lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [5]

Unlike the proof of a violation of the State Bar Act, the proof of a wilful violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct merely has to demonstrate that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, that he knew what he was doing or not doing and that he intended either to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where respondent knew he was settling a personal injury claim without ensuring the payment of an applicable Medi-Cal lien and intended to do so, he acted wilfully; and a determination of culpability under the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds was appropriate even if he acted in good faith. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [10]

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

Wilfulness with regard to a rule of professional conduct violation does not require proof of an evil intent or bad purpose, but merely proof that the attorney intended to do that which the rule prohibits. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [3]

Where respondent established a law practice in total disregard of the principles of the rule requiring client funds to be held in trust accounts, respondent could have been charged with and found culpable of violating that rule based on mishandling of trust funds by non-lawyer who ran practice, at least as to cases which respondent was aware were being handled in respondent's name. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [1]

Where an attorney permitted a non-lawyer to misuse the attorney's name to conduct a large personal injury practice, the attorney could not be held separately culpable for each item of harm that resulted, without proof of his or her actual knowledge. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [3]

Bad faith is not a prerequisite to a finding of wilful failure to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [4]

An attorney has an obligation to perform services diligently and if the attorney knows he or she does not have or will not acquire sufficient time to do so, the attorney must not continue representation in the matter. Reckless or repeated inattention to client needs need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or purposeful failure to attend to duties in order to constitute wilful violation of duty to perform competently. Fact that respondent performed some services for a probate estate did not excuse his misconduct in delaying closure of the estate, especially where respondent's asserted justification for delay was that he was busy on other matters. Respondent's repeated failure to perform acts needed to distribute assets and close estate for five years, knowing that beneficiaries desired earliest possible distribution, constituted wilful violation of the duty to perform services competently. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [12]

Violations of probation require the same mental state to justify discipline as violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court. For such purposes, wilfulness need not involve bad faith; a general purpose or willingness to comment an act or permit an omission is sufficient. Accordingly, despite respondent's asserted good faith belief that probation reports were sufficient, respondent's intentional failure to include a required statement in such reports was wilful for purposes of a probation violation. Respondent's subjective intentions were relevant only with regard to aggravation and mitigation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [6]

Although the term "moral turpitude" has been defined very broadly, the Supreme Court has always required a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, wilfulness, or, at the very least, gross negligence before labelling an attorney's conduct moral turpitude. Where respondent reasonably and in good faith believed that he had the authority to endorse his clients' former attorney's name to settlement drafts, and there was no evidence that respondent misused funds intended for clients or medical providers and no evidence of fraud, hearing judge correctly concluded that there was no clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [3]

In order to find an attorney culpable of a rule violation, the attorney's misconduct must be found to have been wilful. Where no such finding was expressly set forth in hearing judge's decision, review department deemed it to have been made based on hearing judge's conclusions. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [3]

A finding of a wilful violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct does not necessarily indicate intent to violate ethical guidelines, but merely an intent to perform an act which results in a violation. Even where there was no evidence of intentional misconduct, evidence of repeated acts of negligence justified finding respondent culpable of wilfully violating the rule regarding failure to perform services competently. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [1]

An attorney's failure to communicate with and reckless or repeated inattention to the needs of a client have long been grounds for discipline. Such misconduct need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or a purposeful failure to attend to the duties due to a client, and the attorney's acts need not be shown to be wilful where there is a repeated failure of the attorney to attend to the needs of the client. Where respondent received several notices regarding the inheritance taxes owed by his client in a probate matter, and did not notify his client of any of them, and the client was reasonably relying on respondent to provide her with such notice, respondent failed to perform legal services competently in wilful violation of the applicable Rule of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [1]

Although an attorney cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, the attorney violates the trust account rules if the attorney does not manage funds as required by the rules, regardless of the attorney's intent or the absence of injury to anyone. Violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful despite the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. If an attorney's trust account balance drops below the necessary amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn. The burden then shifts to the attorney to show that office procedures were adequate. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [7]

Although attorneys cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, fiduciary violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful for disciplinary purposes even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [7]

The analysis of gross negligence in cases decided before the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct is not affected by the adoption of the standards, but the discipline imposed now takes into account guidelines provided by the standards, although they are not rigidly applied. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [8]

Misappropriation resulting from serious, inexcusable violation of a lawyer's duty to oversee trust funds is deemed wilful even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [10]

Wilfulness, for the purpose of finding a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, is defined as having acted or omitted to act purposely to do the act forbidden by the rule or not to do the act required by the rule. Where there was no evidence that respondent was incapable of forming the requisite purpose or intent, the review department upheld a finding that respondent was capable of the wilfulness necessary to commit the charged rule violation (accepting employment without resources to perform competently.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [24]

A transaction whereby a client signs a promissory note secured by the client's property to serve as security for the payment of an attorney's fees is subject to the provisions of the rule regulating business transactions with clients. However, where the failure to comply with the requirements of that rule resulted from the negligence of the attorney's employee, and the evidence clearly and convincingly established that the attorney had taken appropriate actions to guide office personnel as to proper steps to comply with the rule, the attorney was properly found not culpable of violating the rule. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [8]

Notwithstanding omission of term "wilful" from statute and rule governing imposition of discipline for probation violations, wilfulness is a necessary element to establish culpability in a probation revocation case alleging failure to pay restitution. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [6]

In disciplinary cases arising from violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, a showing of wilfulness requires only a "general purpose or willingness" to commit the act or suffer the omission, and need not involve bad faith. The same definition of wilfulness applies to the mental state required to justify discipline for violations of probation conditions. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [8]

Wilfulness is established by proof that the attorney acted or omitted to act purposely. No rational relationship exists between an attorney's years in practice and the attorney's ability to act or omit to act purposefully on a specified occasion. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [12]

Misconduct which is technically wilful may be less culpable if committed through negligence than if committed deliberately; term "wilful misappropriation" as used in attorney discipline cases covers broad range of conduct varying significantly in degree of culpability. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [6]

There is a distinction between the proof necessary to establish a rule violation where the only intent necessary is the intent to do the act, and the proof necessary to establish culpability of a disciplinary offense which requires proof of specific (i.e., subjective) intent. To prove a "wilful" breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is only necessary to prove that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, intended to commit the act. With respect to charges of which subjective intent is an element, however, such intent must be proven convincingly and to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [6]

Only violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct that are wilful are grounds for discipline. Where hearing referee's decision did not expressly state that respondent's rule violation was wilful, but referee's comments indicated conclusion of wilfulness, review department regarded referee as having found violation to be wilful. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [1]

204.20 Intent requirement

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole,

his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Respondent's deliberate and unjustified failure to attend a status conference in client's workers' compensation case was reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[4]

At least in absence of admission by attorney, proving that an attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it is rarely capable of being proved with direct evidence. Circumstantial evidence is sufficient, however, if it is clear and convincing. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[1]

Objective inferences drawn from consideration of the 12 factors often considered in bankruptcy proceedings to determine whether a debtor incurred credit card debts with fraudulent intent are also highly probative in determining whether attorney incurred credit card debts without intending to repay them. But 12 factors are not exclusive, none is dispositive, and attorney's conduct need not satisfy a minimum number to find that attorney lacked intent to repay debts. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[2]

Because attorney's act of borrowing money without intending to repay it involves dishonesty and moral turpitude as a matter of law, State Bar need only prove that attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it to establish that attorney violated statutory duty not to engage in acts of dishonesty or involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[4]

Intent to repay debt requires some factual underpinning that would lead person to a degree of certainty that he or she would have ability to repay. Mere hope and unrealistic or speculative sources of income are insufficient. This is particularly true where respondent obtained large cash advances on the same day he was repaying gambling debts in the form of casino markers. And it is particularly true where respondent did not proffer any documentary evidence to support his claims that he was an experienced and successful or winning blackjack player. Moreover, in light of the fact that respondent never kept any records of his gambling winnings and losses, any hope of repaying any portion of his credit card debts with gambling winnings was unreasonable. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[6]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[7]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

In broad terms, any act contrary to honesty and good morals involves moral turpitude. Although an evil intent is not necessary for moral turpitude, some level of guilty knowledge or at least gross negligence is required. Where respondent's failure to comply with a court order was either intentional or grossly negligent, this failure involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [7]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

Where there was no evidence that respondent acted intentionally in failing to notify statutory medical lienholder of settlement or in failing to honor statutory lien, but rather, respondent's state of mind was that he was not actually aware of existence of lien or his duties in regard to it because he took no steps to investigate his client's medical coverage or his obligations under law, respondent's conduct evidenced reckless disregard rather than intentional violation of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1]

Where respondent did not intend to deliberately defy a court order and did not have any dishonest or wrongful intent, and where respondent's improper conduct was based on beliefs and understandings which, although not only mistaken but also objectively unreasonable, were honestly held, respondent did not commit acts involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

An attorney's gross negligence in handling his clients' funds, which resulted in the issuance of several trust account checks that were not honored due to insufficient funds, involved moral turpitude even though there was no evidence of intentional wrongdoing or dishonest motive. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [13]

Even though an attorney's individual acts did not involve moral turpitude, the attorney's pattern of misconduct amounted to moral turpitude; habitual disregard of client interests, even where grossly negligent or careless rather than wilful or dishonest, constitutes moral turpitude and justifies disbarment. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

The rule regarding prejudicial withdrawal from representation applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel. Whether or not an attorney's ceasing to provide services amounts to an effective withdrawal depends on the surrounding circumstances. Where time is of the essence, failure to provide services constitutes an effective withdrawal even if the attorney's period of inaction is relatively brief. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [7]

An attorney's total cessation of services to a client for a period of two years, standing alone, and even though unintentional, was clear and convincing evidence that the attorney effectively withdrew from employment without taking steps to protect the client's interests. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [9]

In order to violate the statute prohibiting seeking to mislead a judge, or its parallel Rule of Professional Conduct, an attorney must knowingly make a false, material statement of fact or law to a court, with the intent to mislead. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [5]

Intent is a necessary element of an assignment. Where the physical transfer of an assignment of a promissory note and deed of trust from client to attorney was not intended to transfer an interest in the promissory note to the attorney, the transfer did not result in an acquisition by the attorney of an interest in the client's property, and thus did not violate the rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [14]

Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from representation may reasonably be construed to apply when attorney ceases to provide services, even in absence of intent to withdraw as counsel. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [5]

Appearing in court while suspended or enrolled inactive does not inherently involve moral turpitude; nor does it necessarily involve deception of the court, if the attorney is unaware of his or her inactive status. Evidence that an attorney made a single court appearance while ignorant of his or her inactive status is insufficient to establish clearly and convincingly that the attorney acted with moral turpitude or intent to deceive the court. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [22]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

There is a distinction between the proof necessary to establish a rule violation where the only intent necessary is the intent to do the act, and the proof necessary to establish culpability of a disciplinary offense which requires proof of specific (i.e., subjective) intent. To prove a "wilful" breach of the Rules of Professional Conduct, it is only necessary to prove that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, intended to commit the act. With respect to charges of which subjective intent is an element, however, such intent must be proven convincingly and to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [6]

The mere fact that the balance in an attorney's trust account falls below the amounts deposited and purportedly held in trust therein supports a conclusion of misappropriation. The rule regarding safekeeping of entrusted funds leaves no room for inquiry into the attorney's intent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [6]

204.90 Other General Substantive Issues re Culpability

The opinion of another attorney is not a defense to a violation of the rules or statutes governing attorney ethics. Where respondent claimed to have followed the advice of ethics counsel regarding permissible conduct during his suspension, but in fact continued to use his designation as an attorney in advertisements and on his website and stationery, totality of evidence left no doubt that respondent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law while suspended. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3]

Attorney may not rely on opinion of another attorney as a defense to violating the rules or sections governing attorney ethics. Attorney did not act in good faith when he chose interpretation of Civil Code section 2944.7, subdivision (a) that ignored a new statute's plain language and legislative history as well as his own knowledge of a State Bar ethics alert interpreting it. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [2]

Standards governing an attorney's ethical duties do not vary according to the many areas of practice, even in specialized areas such as immigration law. Nor do those standards vary according to whether the attorney practices alone or in a partnership, small law firm, large law firm, or corporate law department.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [2]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Facts clients referred to respondent by nonattorney immigration services providers might have had a cultural bias in favor the referring nonattorney immigration services providers or that those clients might have viewed immigration attorneys, like respondent, as less important to their immigration cases than the referring nonattorney immigration services providers did not reduce or limit nature and scope of respondent's professional duties to his immigration clients.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [7]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Because an attorney who is a general partner of a California limited partnership owes the limited partners fiduciary obligations, including the duty of good faith and fair dealing and the duty to safeguard funds to which the limited partners are entitled, the attorney is held to the high standards of the legal profession whether or not he or she acts in the capacity of an attorney. Moreover, the attorney is subject to discipline if he or she assumes a fiduciary relationship and violates a fiduciary duty in a way that would justify disciplinary action if the relationship were that of attorney and client. Thus, respondent was subject to discipline where the evidence established that respondent, as general partner, (1) breached his fiduciary duty to a limited partner by taking his share of profits in two different distributions without having first distributed to the limited partner his capital contribution and share of profits, contrary to both the applicable statute and the partnership agreement, and (2) misappropriated funds which the limited partner was entitled to receive. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [1a-f]

Because Rules of Professional Conduct 3-700(A)(2) (prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment) and 3-700(D)(1) (mandating return of client property) have not been amended or modified since they were first adopted and became effective on May 27, 1989, there are no "former" versions of those rules. Thus, the review department deemed the charged and found violations that State Bar and the hearing judge incorrectly described as violations of "former" rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1) to be charged and found violations of rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1), which became effective on May 27, 1989. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[1]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[3]

Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment (rule 3-700(A)(2)) is more comprehensive than rule requiring an attorney whose employment has been terminated to release the client's file upon the client's request (rule 3-700(D)(1)). Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, mandates compliance with rule requiring release of client files. Thus, attorney's failure to properly release a client's file in accordance with rule requiring release of client files may be a portion of the conduct disciplinable as a violation of rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal. Because respondent's failure to release the client's file in accordance with the client's request was relied on as part of the basis for finding that respondent violated rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, review department rejected the use that same failure to find a separate violation of rule requiring release of client files. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[7]

Disciplinary rules governing legal profession cannot punish activity protected by First Amendment, but neither false statements made knowingly nor false statements made with reckless disregard for truth are protected by First Amendment. Thus, because respondent's statements in pleadings, which she filed in superior court action and this disciplinary action, that her opposing counsel in superior court action was "well-known racist," "champion of the Emeryville pedophile ring," "operated by organized crime," "intent upon avoiding his own criminal indictment," and "motivated by racial hatred," and described young children as "niggers, hood and scums" were proved false at trial; because those statements were not mere rhetorical hyperbole, incapable of being proved true or false; and because respondent either knew statements were false or made them with reckless disregard of truth as there was no objective evidence that statements were true, hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of violating professional rules requiring attorneys to employ only such means as are consistent with truth and not to seek to mislead courts and judicial officers as well as statute proscribing acts involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[2 a-i]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge expressly found that respondent's violation of statute and rule of professional conduct was based on respondent's gross negligence, she inexplicably declined to apply that gross negligence to find that respondent's conduct involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prescribing attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding moral turpitude. Accordingly, review department independently found respondent culpable of act involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [2]

A client's acceptance of respondent's offer to advance costs and to pursue a complaint established an attorney-client relationship between them if such a relationship did not already exist. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. [1]

Disciplinary rules governing the legal profession cannot punish activity protected by the First Amendment. However, because attorneys are officers of the court with a special responsibility to protect the administration of justice, reasonable speech restrictions may be imposed on them. To survive judicial scrutiny such a restriction must (1) further an important or substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of expression and (2) be no greater than is necessary or essential to the protection of that important or substantial governmental interest. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [1]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

Illegal use of the Great Seal of the State of California on respondent's letterhead was inherently inappropriate even if no one was misled. Fact that no one was misled was only a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [2]

Respondent violated his duty to obey court orders when he intentionally failed to comply with two bankruptcy court orders directing him and his client to produce various documents to an examiner appointed by the bankruptcy court. It was no defense that the documents were ultimately determined to be of no use to the examiner. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [2]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain only just causes and abused the bankruptcy process by filing and maintaining a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding for an insolvent client when he knew that the client's only assets were nine residential lots in which there was no equity and that the client had neither the ability nor the intention of making adequate protection payments to the lienholders on the nine lots in accordance with the law. Even if respondent was unaware of these facts, he would still be culpable. Under applicable federal rules of procedure, respondent's signature on the Chapter 11 petition as attorney of record for debtor was a certification that to the best of his knowledge and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the petition was well founded in fact and warranted by either existing law or a good faith argument for the modification of existing law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [3]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain respect for courts by failing to appear as counsel of record at hearings and court-ordered meetings in his client's bankruptcy proceeding. Respondent's repeated failures to appear were not tantamount to a voluntarily dismissal of his client's bankruptcy petition. Once respondent signed and filed his client's Chapter 11 petition, he submitted to the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction and had a duty to appear and participate at hearings and court-ordered meetings in good faith, withdraw as counsel of record, or have the bankruptcy court dismiss the petition. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [4]

In broad terms, any act contrary to honesty and good morals involves moral turpitude. Although an evil intent is not necessary for moral turpitude, some level of guilty knowledge or at least gross negligence is required. Where respondent's failure to comply with a court order was either intentional or grossly negligent, this failure involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [7]

Non-clients may be treated as an attorney's clients for purposes of discipline where the attorney assumes a fiduciary relationship with the non-clients. Thus, where respondent was the trustee of a testamentary trust, and thus assumed a fiduciary relationship with the beneficiaries of that trust, the rule regulating attorneys' business transactions with their clients applied to respondent's dealings with the trust, as if the trust beneficiaries were respondent's clients. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

Clients may not waive statutory limit on contingent fees in medical negligence cases, and superior court award of such fees in excess of statutory limits is erroneous. Where attorney did not reveal material issue of potential applicability of such statutory fee limit to superior court in connection with approval of settlement and award of fees, such award did not constitute res judicata, because attorney and client were not adversaries in proceeding. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [9]

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Dishonest acts by an attorney are grounds for suspension or disbarment even if no harm results. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [4]

An attorney's disobedience of a court order involves moral turpitude for disciplinary purposes only if the attorney acted in either objective or subjective bad faith. Review department declined to find respondent culpable of moral turpitude for failure to appear as ordered at settlement conference, where such culpability was argued for first time on review, notice to show cause did not allege that failure to appear was in bad faith, and hearing judge made no findings regarding respondent's objective or subjective bad faith in failing to obey order to appear. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [6]

Attorney disciplinary proceedings are not decided on principles of contract law, but where, due to vagueness of terms of purported agreement allowing attorney to use client's funds, contract law principles would not permit court to find any binding contract, such purported agreement could not provide defense to charges of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [2]

Where record clearly and convincingly established that respondent had not kept client's settlement check in safe place, but did not specify whether respondent lost check before or after effective date of revised Rules of Professional Conduct, respondent violated either former or current version of rule requiring attorneys to keep client property in place of safekeeping. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [18]

Where respondent's failure to supervise his personal injury practice and fulfill trust fund responsibilities was so remiss as to be reckless, and his mismanagement of his trust account included repeated failure to provide competent legal services by promptly paying medical liens, respondent violated rule regarding reckless or repeated failure to perform competently. However, where misconduct forming basis for such violation also underlay charge of moral turpitude supporting identical or greater discipline, review department gave violation of competence rule no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [2]

Where respondent failed to file required at-issue memorandum at time when former Rules of Professional Conduct were in effect, but such failure was not intentional or reckless, and respondent failed to perform several other required acts in same litigation after revised Rules of Professional Conduct became effective, review department held that respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently in violation of revised rule precluding intentional, reckless, or repeated failure to perform legal services competently, and did not reach question whether initial failure to file at-issue memorandum constituted duplicative violation of earlier version of same rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [8]

Where respondent was charged with violating both former Rules of Professional Conduct and their current equivalents, but charged misconduct occurred prior to effective date of current rules, current rules were inapplicable. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [4]

An attorney retained by a parent to represent the parent's child in a personal injury matter is thereby put on notice that the injured client may be a minor, a fact of critical importance. Statutes requiring court approval of compromise of minors' claims are intended for protection of minors. Respondent's failure to ascertain client's age after being retained by client's parent was grossly negligent as a matter of law and constituted reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [20]

Where same misconduct was found in each of two consolidated matters, review department dismissed allegations of such misconduct in one matter, because disciplining respondent for same misconduct in both matters would not be appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [7]

Regardless of an attorney's belief that a court order was issued in error, the attorney is obligated to obey the order unless the attorney takes steps to have it modified or vacated. The attorney's belief as to the validity of the order is irrelevant to a charge of violating the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

Respondent's simultaneous representation of a client and of respondent's father during the time that respondent arranged real property transactions between the client and the father was an aggravating circumstance in that the dual representation was rife with potential and actual conflicts of interest that could have been, if charged, the basis for additional culpability for violating the rule regarding representation of conflicting interests. The fact that respondent was not found culpable of any misconduct involving the real property transactions did not preclude treating respondent's conduct therein as an aggravating factor, because other related misconduct involving the same client was surrounded by and followed by the attorney's conduct in the real property transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [11]

Attorneys are not permitted to set their fees unilaterally. If a client contests fees charged or paid, the disputed fees must be placed in a trust account until the conflict is resolved. The duty to account for client funds includes a duty to maintain adequate records of fees drawn against an advanced fee and of fee payments made thereafter, and to provide clients with an appropriate accounting. In evaluating the promptness and adequacy of such an accounting, it was appropriate to look to the standards set forth in the statute governing attorneys' bills for fees and costs, even where a violation of that statute was not charged. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [3]

Where words used in a rule are unambiguous, there is no need to go beyond the plain language to extrinsic aids. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [6]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

Attorneys have a personal duty to obey the State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct and to reasonably supervise their agents and employees to that end. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [4]

Culpability can be established in attorney disciplinary proceedings either by direct or circumstantial evidence, and circumstantial evidence has been considered on a regular basis in cases involving improper client solicitation by an attorney's agents. Culpability findings regarding charge of improper client solicitation were proper where, in addition to circumstantial evidence, there was inculpatory direct evidence in the record, and hearing judge properly evaluated and weighed witness testimony. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [10]

An attorney's obligation to his or her client is limited by the attorney's and the client's obligation to third parties. Where respondent's client, a Medi-Cal beneficiary, had a statutory obligation (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) of the impending settlement of a personal injury matter in which DHS claimed a lien, respondent had a fiduciary obligation under decisional law to provide the required notice on his client's behalf. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [3]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not the attorney's client must comply with the same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if an attorney-client relationship existed. Where an attorney represents a Medi-Cal beneficiary in a personal injury matter and has received notice of the Medi-Cal lien, the attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward the Department of Health Services as to its advancement of funds for the beneficiary and the Medi-Cal lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [8]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim on behalf of a Medi-Cal beneficiary without ensuring the payment of the applicable Medi-Cal lien, an issue to be addressed on remand was the effect, if any, on the appropriate degree of discipline of the policy adopted by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, with the approval of a committee of the Board of Governors, against prosecuting future health care provider "collection" cases, at least for private lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [15]

Although the former rule of professional conduct governing representation of clients with conflicting interests did not expressly state that it encompassed potential as well as actual conflicts of interest, once the rule had been interpreted in case law to make it clear that potential conflicts between clients required written consent for a single attorney to represent them in civil litigation, and in light of the prophylactic intent of the rule, an attorney had a duty to obtain the clients' informed consent before agreeing to represent both driver and passenger in an automobile accident case where there was no bar to a claim by the passenger against the driver. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [6]

In a disciplinary proceeding, a culpability determination must not be debatable. Accordingly, where the applicable rule of professional conduct did not expressly require written consent to joint representation of clients with potentially conflicting interests, the issue for the court was whether the case law at the time of an attorney's alleged violation of the rule made it clear that such consent was required in civil litigation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

Prosecutors must be held to the ethical standards which regulate the legal profession as a whole. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [10]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

An attorney is responsible for the reasonable supervision of the attorney's staff. Where a client repeatedly demanded her file from respondent's office over a six-month period, this was sufficient to establish respondent's lack of reasonable supervision. Respondent's ignorance of the client's demands and lack of prior notice of his staff's failure to inform him of client communications did not absolve respondent from culpability absent additional evidence demonstrating his reasonable supervision of his staff. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [2]

Where respondent received two letters from client's new counsel after respondent claimed to be confused as to whether client was discharging him, respondent's confusion did not excuse his delay in contacting successor counsel and forwarding client's file. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [3]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

Claim that respondent's failure to give required notice of suspension in four different client matters should not have been charged as four separate violations was relevant to degree of discipline but not to culpability. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [8]

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

An attorney owes the same fiduciary obligations to all clients, paying or nonpaying. Impecunious clients are ill-served by well-meaning attorneys who fail to deliver the services for which they were engaged. Nor are the courts or public served by litigation brought without likelihood it can be realistically be prosecuted to completion. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

Where record established that respondent agreed to handle litigation and thereafter abandoned case; former and current Rules of Professional Conduct were virtually identical regarding duties imposed on an attorney who wishes to withdraw from employment; both rules were charged in notice to show cause, and violation clearly occurred during period when either one rule or the other was in effect, review department found respondent culpable of improper withdrawal despite lack of evidence regarding exactly when relevant events occurred. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [2]

Uncharged misconduct relied upon to enhance discipline in one proceeding cannot later constitute grounds for additional discipline in an independent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [7]

Evidence that respondent paid court-ordered sanctions with a trust account check, and that the client had not provided the funds, established respondent's improper use of the trust account, either by commingling trust and personal funds or by misappropriating funds belonging to other clients. Weighing all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, a finding of commingling, the less serious offense, was appropriate. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [13]

Attorneys who engage in an extended practice of inattention to official actions should not be allowed to create the risk that it will extend to clients resulting in inevitable and grievous harm to them. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [10]

An attorney's failure to comply with successive orders of the Supreme Court is of concern to the State Bar Court because it repeatedly burdens the resources of the State Bar Court and the disciplinary system. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [11]

Where an attorney occupies a dual capacity, performing, for a single client or in a single matter, along with legal services, services that might otherwise be performed by a lay person, the services the attorney renders in the dual capacity all involve the practice of law, and the attorney must conform to the Rules of Professional Conduct in the provision of all of them. This rule applies to an attorney who is appointed both attorney and executor of a probate estate. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [1]

Compliance with the time limitations set forth in the Probate Code is not a defense to a charge that the attorney failed to act competently, nor does noncompliance with such time limitations establish per se a failure to act competently. The focus of the inquiry on a charge of failure to act competently is whether the attorney intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failed to apply the learning, skill, and diligence necessary to discharge the duties arising from the attorney's employment or representation. Compliance with the time limitations of the Probate Code is but one factor to be considered in making this determination. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [11]

The amount of client trust funds that an attorney mishandles goes to the issue of discipline, not culpability, and the mishandling of even an insignificant amount can constitute a disciplinable offense. No de minimis exception applies to the determination of culpability for mishandling trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [7]

A hearing judge should scrutinize with care any evidence bearing the earmarks of private spite. Nevertheless, any instigating factor or personal motive in the initiation of a State Bar proceeding is not a matter of controlling concern where the facts disclosed justify disciplinary action. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [11]

In addressing the constitutionality of imposing professional discipline for criminal conduct not involving moral turpitude, the State Bar Court must endeavor to interpret the "other misconduct warranting discipline" standard to render its application in the particular case constitutional. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [6]

A due process challenge to a discipline proceeding based on vagueness is appropriate where the misconduct involved is not clearly within the scope of a disciplinary standard and the standard is so broad that people of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [7]

Evidence that an attorney has taken steps to deal with an alcohol problem is mitigating evidence that may properly be taken into account in determining the degree and nature of discipline, but does not eliminate the initial misconduct as an appropriate basis for discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [11]

Review department did not need to reach respondent's challenges to hearing judge's evidentiary rulings in order to uphold hearing judge's ultimate findings, where all essential elements of charged violation were established by evidence to which respondent did not object, and any evidentiary errors did not result in denial of a fair hearing. Where factual findings based on challenged evidence were not necessary to decision, remand for new hearing was not necessary even if evidentiary errors underlay some non-essential findings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [1]

Where probation conditions required that respondent abstain from intoxicants and non-prescribed drugs, and respondent stated under penalty of perjury that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions, then even if State Bar proved respondent had consumed alcohol, respondent could have avoided perjury conviction by contending he did not consider abstinence condition to be valid, legally reasonable, and/or enforceable. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [5]

A disciplinary proceeding is seldom the proper forum for attorney fee disputes. In a matter arising from a dispute between attorneys, where respondent did not mishandle any sum that could be considered trust funds and respondent's instruction to staff to endorse the other attorney's name to settlement drafts was not dishonest, corrupt, or reflective of bad moral character, the review department affirmed the dismissal of the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [1]

Although the term "moral turpitude" has been defined very broadly, the Supreme Court has always required a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, wilfulness, or, at the very least, gross negligence before labelling an attorney's conduct moral turpitude. Where respondent reasonably and in good faith believed that he had the authority to endorse his clients' former attorney's name to settlement drafts, and there was no evidence that respondent misused funds intended for clients or medical providers and no evidence of fraud, hearing judge correctly concluded that there was no clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [3]

In matter where record lacked any evidence of impropriety of respondent or respondent's staff in dealing with clients, case law requiring all reasonable inferences to be resolved in respondent's favor supported attribution of no base motives to respondent. Thus, in deciding to dismiss charges, hearing judge properly saw case as one involving a dispute between two attorneys over clients, files, and the first attorney's fee, and did not improperly fail to consider totality of respondent's conduct. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [4]

Where complaining witness testified credibly that an attorney-client relationship existed between himself and respondent, respondent himself had filed pleadings in civil litigation acknowledging such relationship, and respondent's counsel conceded that respondent had held himself out as complaining witness's attorney, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that complaining witness was not his client was without merit. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [2]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not a client is held to the same fiduciary duties in dealing with those funds as if there were an attorney-client relationship. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [4]

Violations of standards of professional conduct not yet clarified by case law are less reprehensible than violations of more clear-cut and well-established rules. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [5]

A broad scope of activities may be held to constitute the practice of law, but the unauthorized practice of law outside of court appearances is difficult to define. Where respondent, while on inactive status, allegedly referred to a family member as respondent's client in a letter to another lawyer and expressed an intention to seek statutory fees in a probate matter involving the family member, respondent was properly charged with unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [8]

Hearing department findings that were based on evidence admitted in discipline phase of trial were considered by review department solely with respect to discipline and not culpability. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [3]

Restitution of client funds taken by an attorney is no defense to disciplinary charges of misappropriation. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Where respondent, who had been previously suspended from practice, described his legal career to a prospective employer in such a way as to indicate that respondent's practice of law had been uninterrupted, it was sufficient to establish culpability of misrepresentation to show that respondent knowingly presented a statement which itself tended to mislead. It was not material that the employer did not rely on the application or was not in fact deceived. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [6]

Where the stipulation of the parties did not preclude a conclusion that respondent's misappropriations were acts of moral turpitude, and given the number and similarity of the matters in which respondent admitted to misappropriating trust funds, the burden shifted to respondent to rebut the conclusion that moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

A nexus between an attorney's criminal misconduct and the practice of law might have been established if the State Bar had proven that the attorney's present criminal conduct had violated the terms of the attorney's previously imposed criminal probation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [8]

A nexus between an attorney's criminal misconduct and the practice of law may be established where the circumstances surrounding the attorney's conviction indicate that the attorney has problems with alcohol abuse. However, an attorney's ingestion of normal doses of legal medications for appropriate symptoms did not demonstrate a substance abuse problem. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [9]

Where the original notice to show cause alleged misappropriation, and the examiner amended the notice to charge respondent with commingling resulting from his bookkeeper's negligence, and there was no evidence that respondent's defense was thereby prejudiced, respondent had sufficient notice of the charges to satisfy his due process rights, because the duty to keep client funds safe is a personal obligation of the attorney and nondelegable, and the attorney was therefore on notice that he could be culpable if his staff's conduct resulted in a violation of that duty. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

Where respondent failed to inform a client that the five-year statute was about to run on the client's case, respondent violated the statutory duty to keep clients reasonably informed of significant developments in their cases; the fact that the failure to communicate resulted from the loss of the client's file did not render respondent any less culpable. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [11]

While attorneys have a duty to reasonably supervise their staffs, they cannot be held responsible for every event which takes place in their offices. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [9]

In a default proceeding, ambiguous evidence that can be interpreted as consistent with allegations of the notice to show cause does not negate the deemed admissions of the notice to show cause. Where evidence introduced at default hearing fell short of clear and convincing proof of charged violations, but was not inconsistent with charging allegations, defaulting respondent should have been found culpable of violations properly charged. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

Evidence of additional uncharged acts of misconduct could not constitute an independent basis for culpability. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

Where the State Bar chooses to present evidence in a default hearing that undercuts or negates the allegations of the notice to show cause, it is the evidence, and not the allegations, that controls the findings of fact. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [2]

A notice to show cause which alleged that an attorney was hired by a father to represent his son and that the attorney thereafter failed to perform services for, communicate with, and return unearned fees to, the father was sufficient to put the attorney on notice that he was charged with the specified misconduct in his dual representation of the father and son, because the attorney would not have had a duty to communicate with the father if he were not representing the father. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [22]

Statute which requires that if a party is represented by counsel, papers must be served on counsel rather than on the party, does not apply to the service of a summons or a writ. Therefore, respondent did not have to serve alternative writ and petition for writ on opposing party's counsel, but could serve opposing party personally. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [1]

Where a municipal court order finding an appeal frivolous and awarding sanctions did not explain the basis for such finding or the statutory basis for awarding sanctions, and no additional evidence was introduced to establish that the appeal was substantively without merit, the record did not clearly and convincingly establish for disciplinary purposes that the appeal was frivolous or pursued in bad faith. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [7]

Civil verdicts and judgments have no disciplinary significance apart from the underlying facts. While civil findings bear a strong presumption of validity if supported by substantial evidence, the disciplinary court must assess them independently under the more stringent standard of proof applicable to disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [8]

Respondent's decision not to send a copy of a writ petition to counsel who was representing the opposing party in a related appeal appeared to have been a breach of normally expected professional courtesy and was not a model of good practice; nonetheless, because allegations of notice to show cause failed to give respondent reasonable notice of charge of which he was found culpable, review department dismissed proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [10]

Focusing on technicalities in the law is a very shortsighted approach to the ethical obligations of attorneys; such technical approaches to the body of law regulating attorneys' ethics may be described as undermining the moral fiber of the profession. Evidence of good character does not rest on technicalities. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [9]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

The Rules of Professional Conduct are binding on attorneys, but are not the equivalent of statutes; they merely supplement the statutory provisions. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [4]

Where notice to show cause charged respondent with making misrepresentations to opposing counsel and at trial, and respondent testified at disciplinary hearing that similar misrepresentations were also made to court of appeal and to State Bar investigator, this later conduct was properly treated not as bearing on substantive culpability, but on the issue of discipline. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [1]

Attorneys are expected to be forceful advocates for clients' legitimate causes, but role played by attorneys in honest administration of justice is critical. Attorneys, by adherence to their high fiduciary duties and the truth, can sharply reduce or eliminate clashes and ease the way to dispute settlement. Where parties to marital dissolution matter agreed to allow husband's counsel to hold community funds in trust pending resolution of dispute regarding property settlement, relying on counsel's duty as an attorney to honor the trust nature of the money, attorney's misconduct in improperly disbursing funds and then misrepresenting to wife's counsel and courts that funds were still held in trust account was especially regrettable. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [19]

Where attorney's alleged failure to perform competently occurred after effective date of revised version of rule governing duty of competence, and notice to show cause charged attorney only with violating previous version of rule and notice was not amended, attorney was properly found not culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [6]

Where attorney's decision not to pursue client's damages action was not made until after effective date of revised rule regarding duty to perform competently, attorney's conduct in deciding not to pursue damages was covered by revised rule and attorney could not be found culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [7]

Statutory duty to communicate with clients is not an appropriate basis for discipline for failure to communicate which occurred well before effective date of statute. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [9]

Attorney was properly found not to be culpable of violating statutory duty to cooperate with State Bar investigation where alleged violation predated effective date of statute. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [16]

A justifiable and reasonably certain belief that a check will be paid by the bank despite insufficient funds is a valid defense to a charge of issuing checks drawn against insufficient funds. Where respondent had an oral agreement with a bank officer to pay all his checks automatically, which would not have been terminated without notice to respondent, and where all checks he wrote were honored and no creditor was put at risk, respondent's repeated issuance of insufficient funds checks did not constitute misconduct. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [1]

Although an attorney is culpable for misconduct committed by inadequately supervised office staff, the degree of the attorney's personal involvement in the misconduct is relevant to the degree of culpability and the appropriate discipline to be imposed. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [5]

While gross negligence is not a defense to a charge of misappropriation, the absence of evidence of intentional misappropriation is a substantial factor in mitigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [19]

Absent unconscionable circumstances in its creation, an agreement granting an attorney express authority to sign a client's name on documents is clearly not contrary to public policy. Indeed, it is essential that express authority be obtained by an attorney seeking the power to sign the client's name to documents on the client's behalf. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [10]

If violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct were automatically also violations of the statute governing an attorney's duty to obey the law, the statute limiting the discipline for rule violations to a maximum of three years' suspension would be rendered meaningless; such a construction of the statutory scheme would be illogical. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [16]

An attorney's deliberate use of dishonesty to further attempts to gain employment, particularly as a lawyer, is very serious. An attorney is not just another job-holder or job-seeker. Attorneys in this state are charged with high duties of honesty and professional responsibility. Any act of dishonesty by an attorney is an act of moral turpitude, and ground for serious professional misconduct, whether or not arising in the course of attorney-client relations; an attorney's dishonesty in seeking to further his or her career is simply inexcusable. An attorney's statements in a resume, job interview or research paper should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [13]

If respondent's only breach, in relation to a charge of filing a false declaration, was a lack of care in ascertaining the truth of the facts presented in the declaration, then it was incumbent on the hearing referee to determine whether that lack of care or diligence was culpable within the charges and fell below the level of conduct required of members of the State Bar. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [10]

When an attorney presents statements to a judicial tribunal while appearing in pro per as a party to litigation, the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers applies to him as an attorney. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [12]

In finding respondent culpable of misappropriating trust funds and of knowingly issuing a check drawn on insufficient funds, the referee's statement that respondent's acts constituted crimes involving moral turpitude was improper since the criminal statutes were not charged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [16]

In a default matter, to the extent that evidence negates allegations of notice to show cause, it is evidence and not allegations that controls findings of fact. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [19]

False statements made with reckless disregard of the truth do not enjoy constitutional protection under the First Amendment. Attorneys may be disciplined for making defamatory or disrespectful statements in pleadings or court papers which have no basis in fact and which are made with conscious disregard of their falsity or with intent to be maliciously contemptuous. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [8]

Where all of attorneys' acts of dishonesty were encompassed in charge of committing acts of moral turpitude, there would be no added value in straining to find in the same conduct a violation of another statute prohibiting misrepresentations to tribunals. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [5]

Whether an attorney's misconduct involved moral turpitude is a question of law ultimately decided by the Supreme Court. The test is the same whether or not the act was a criminal offense. Where respondent failed to pay payroll taxes due to financial difficulty, such conduct did not constitute moral turpitude, because Supreme Court did not find moral turpitude in case involving similar but more egregious misconduct. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [9]

Where entry of attorney's default for failure to appear at disciplinary hearing resulted in the admission of all allegations in the notice to show cause, but certain of those allegations were in conflict with evidence adduced at hearing, examiner properly requested reconsideration of hearing decision to delete findings contrary to evidence adduced at hearing, and hearing referee properly deleted such findings from the decision, based on their conflict with the evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

210 State Bar Act Violations

211.00 Section 6002.1 (address and reporting requirements)

By maintaining a post office box as his State Bar address of record, respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to maintain, on the State Bar's official membership records, their current office addresses and telephone numbers. It is only when an attorney does not have offices that he is permitted to maintain some other address and telephone number as his official State Bar address. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [19 a-b]

In addition to multiple State Bar administrative and investigative purposes, purpose of statute and State Bar rules and regulations requiring attorneys to maintain their current office addresses and telephone numbers on State Bar's official membership records is to establish a bar-wide database of every attorney's office address and telephone number from which clients may locate their attorneys should they lose contact with them. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [20]

Unless no office is maintained, every attorney has statutory duty to maintain his or her current office address on State Bar's official membership records (official address). Attorney violated this duty by maintaining his home address on State Bar's official membership records instead of maintaining his office address. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [10]

Respondent's highly generalized argument regarding inadequate notice of certain hearings warranted no relief, where respondent had been made aware of duty to keep State Bar informed of current address and given opportunity to correct the official State Bar record thereof, and notices had been served on respondent at another address in addition to the address of record. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

Section 6068(a) is not a proper basis for charging a violation of 6002.1, because section 6068(j) specifically makes it a duty of each State Bar member to comply with section 6002.1, and makes such compliance the subject of discipline. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [12]

The failure to charge a violation of section 6068(j) in the notice to show cause was harmless error, where the notice clearly charged an alleged violation of section 6002.1. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [13]

Respondent's claimed alcoholism did not excuse him from his statutory duties to notify the State Bar promptly of any change of his address of record, and to participate in State Bar disciplinary proceedings against him. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

211.01 Found

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

211.05 Not Found

213.10 Section 6068(a) (support Constitution and laws)

Where an attorney's actions, taken as a whole, create a false impression of ability to practice law while on suspension, this constitutes unauthorized practice of law in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 6125 and 6126, upon which is predicated a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). Here, respondent paid for television advertisements, recorded voice messages for the law office, failed to provide a disclaimer in the advertisements and voice messages that he was not entitled to practice law, failed to identify any other attorney as working for the law office, maintained a website for the law office that described his abilities and qualifications as an attorney, took no steps to correct the false impression of an insurance company and chiropractor as to his status as an attorney, and failed to ensure that no stationary identifying him as an attorney was used by the law office where he worked. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [1 a-c]

The practice of law embraces a wide range of activities, including giving legal advice and preparing documents to secure legal rights. Where, during disciplinary suspension, respondent told a client he would take her case; communicated with Medicare and an insurance company on the client's behalf; negotiated a settlement, and endorsed a settlement check, these actions constituted the practice of law, and established respondent's culpability of unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [2]

Attorney violated section Business and Professions Code, section 6106.3 in eight client matters by charging each client for preliminary financial analysis before all mortgage loan modification services were complete. Civil Code section 2944.7, subdivision (a) plainly prohibits any person, including a legal professional, from collecting any fee related to a loan modification until each and every service contracted for has been completed. Attorney was not allowed to charge unbundled fees for individual financial analysis services until he had completed all other loan modification services listed in his retainer agreement. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [1]

Attorney was culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106.3 by failing to provide a separate statement that it was not necessary for the client to retain a third party mortgage loan modification negotiator as required by Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) when he charged his client for loan modification services without first providing the client the retainer agreement which contained the separate statement. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [3]

Attorney was not culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106.3 by failing to provide a separate statement that it was not necessary for the client to retain a third party mortgage loan modification negotiator as required by Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) when he the client received the retainer agreement containing that section's mandatory language the same day she authorized payment. Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) requires the information be provided as a separate statement, but does not mandate that it be in a separate document. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [4]

Attorney's failure to timely disclose defendant's jail interview was a violation of Penal Code sections 1054.1(b) and (f) and 1054.7 which sufficiently established a failure to obey the law. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [6 a, b]

Attorney failed to obey the law when he informed the jury during closing argument what would happen to a defendant if the jury found the defendant to be a sexually violent predator. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [8]

Respondent violated his duty as an attorney to comply with the law by violating his duties as a civil trial juror. The Judicial Council has recognized that jury service is an "important civic responsibility," requiring court and staff use of all necessary and appropriate means to ensure that citizens fulfill this duty, and it is the accepted duty of citizens to serve, subject to the statutory provision for excuse for undue hardship. The harm to the parties and to the fair administration of justice is clear and serious when respondent disregarded his duty to vote as the facts and judge's instructions guided him, and instead voted as the convenience of his law practice swayed. Respondent's change of vote to avoid continuing to serve as a juror voided the verdict he rendered and required the parties, their counsel and the courts to bear the additional costs, time and burdens of appellate and further trial court proceedings. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [2 a, b]

In State Bar Court proceedings any reasonable doubts must be resolved in respondent's favor. Where construction of law prohibiting recording of confidential communications without consent was uncertain at the time respondent surreptitiously recorded a telephone conversation, it could have been possible to determine that respondent's conduct did not violate the law. Thus, the charge that respondent failed to support the laws of California was dismissed with prejudice. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [2]

Where respondent wrote letters to negotiate claims on behalf of clients while suspended from the practice of law, respondent was still culpable of engaging in the unauthorized practice of law despite having filed a motion to stay his suspension. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [2]

Where the record contains clear and convincing evidence that respondent led a witness to believe they had a special relationship of trust and confidence and that his interests would be protected by respondent, respondent assumed a fiduciary duty towards the witness, who was a vulnerable criminal defendant, when he used his superior knowledge and position as an attorney to create a confidential relationship of trust and dependency. In so doing, respondent caused the witness to reject his attorney's advice and accede to respondent's wishes thereby breaching his common law fiduciary duty to the witness in wilful violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [7 a–c]

Where respondent's failure to provide his client with a statutorily required disclosure statement when selling residential real property to the client was one of the factors used to determine that respondent entered into a business transaction with a client without disclosing all terms of the transaction and transmitting them in writing to the client in a manner that the client should reasonably understand, it would not be proper to again rely on that identical failure in order to establish respondent's culpability of failing to support the laws of this state. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [6]

Sections 6125 and 6126 of the Business and Professions Code, which prohibit practicing law or holding oneself out as entitled to practice law by anyone other than an active attorney, are not of themselves disciplinary offenses. The appropriate method of charging disciplinary violations of those sections is by way of adding a charge of a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a), which imposes upon an attorney the duty to support state laws, to sections 6125 and 6126. Even though section 6068, subdivision (a), was not charged, the review department upheld the hearing judge's findings that respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126 where the amended charges made it clear both by text and citation to sections 6125 and 6126 that respondent was being charged with accepting employment from and holding himself out as entitled to practice law while respondent was suspended, and where respondent failed to object and show any evidence of specific prejudice arising from the failure to add section 6068, subdivision (a), to the underlying charges. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [7]

Illegal use of the Great Seal of the State of California on respondent's letterhead was inherently inappropriate even if no one was misled. Fact that no one was misled was only a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [2]

Where respondent violated rule of professional conduct which prohibits an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, and that misconduct was the same misconduct underlying the charge that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold law on account of his violation of provisions of the Probate Code which prohibit self-dealing by trustees, and where discipline did not depend on whether respondent violated both rule and statute, statutory violation was cumulative and review department did not address it. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statutory limit on attorneys' contingent fees for representation of plaintiffs in medical negligence actions applies whether person represented is responsible adult, infant or person of unsound mind and regardless of whether recovery is by settlement, arbitration or judgment. Where respondent failed to reveal potential applicability of such statute to incompetent client's representative and superior court ruling on respondent's fee application, such conduct frustrated court's function in passing upon fee request and client's interest in receiving all of recovery to which she was entitled, and violated attorney's duty to uphold law and rule against charging or collecting illegal fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [8]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

As officers of the court, sworn to uphold the law, attorneys have a duty to honor legislative mandate that government-funded health care expenses be entitled to reimbursement from any and all private funds available. By statute, it is a disciplinable offense to violate this duty unless the violation is the result of a negligent good faith mistake. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [16]

The Business and Professions Code section requiring attorneys to support federal and California constitution and laws proscribes attorney conduct which violates any federal or California statute. However, such Business and Professions Code section may be used to charge violation of another statute only if that statute is specifically identified in the notice to show cause. Otherwise, the attorney is not given adequate notice of the particular statute allegedly violated. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [17]

Where hearing judge found that respondent acted with reckless disregard in failing to honor rights of statutory lienholder, and where in one matter respondent intentionally did not honor known statutory lien based on incorrect legal theory without any legal research, advice, or inquiry, and in two other matters respondent made no effort to determine whether clients' health care providers might have statutory liens, and where respondent took no steps to ascertain the law as to his obligations to statutory lienholder, respondent's failure to honor statutory liens was product of gross negligence rather than of good faith, negligent mistake, and thus constituted violation of statute requiring attorneys to support the law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [18]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law does not provide basis for discipline except where it serves as conduit to charge violation of state or federal statute other than disciplinary provisions of Business and Professions Code. Where no such statutory violation was charged in matter involving failure to honor contractual lien, no violation could be found as a matter of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [22]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim, without filing suit, on behalf of a client who was a Medi-Cal beneficiary, respondent's failure to notify the Department of Health Services of the settlement did not violate a statute which only required such notice if an action had been filed (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.79). In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [2]

Where a statute (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) required Medi-Cal beneficiaries to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) regarding the impending settlement of matters in which no suit had been filed and DHS claimed a lien, the review department construed the statute to require that attorneys representing such beneficiaries must also give the required notice, because to construe the statute otherwise would frustrate the Medi-Cal third party liability recovery system and be in derogation of an attorney's general fiduciary responsibility to lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [4]

The statute providing that attorneys have a duty to support the constitution and laws of California and the United States constitutes a conduit whereby attorneys may be disciplined for violating laws which are not otherwise disciplinable under the State Bar Act. However, a negligent mistake made in good faith does not constitute a violation of this statute. Thus, where respondent believed he had satisfied his obligation to a statutory medical lienholder by informing it of a source of insurance coverage, and thus believed that his client was entitled to all of the settlement funds obtained from a different source of coverage, respondent's failure to notify the lienholder of the impending settlement, as required by statute, did not violate his statutory duty to obey California law, because it constituted a negligent mistake, based on the good faith, erroneous belief that he was entitled to distribute all the settlement funds to the client and let the client deal with the statutory lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [5]

Where an attorney had been suspended from practice and had been contacted by new counsel retained by his former client, the attorney's subsequent negotiation with an insurance company on the client's behalf without the new counsel's consent constituted unauthorized practice of law and violated the statute prohibiting attorneys from appearing without authority. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Where respondent did not respond to client's reasonable inquiries and missed appointments with client both before and after effective date of statute regarding duty to communicate with clients, respondent was culpable of violating attorney's oath and duties, as to conduct before such effective date, and of violating statutory duty to communicate, after such effective date. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [5]

It is not inherently inconsistent to conclude that an attorney who withdrew from employment and failed to perform legal services competently is also culpable of failing to communicate with the client thereafter. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [7]

Under section 6125 of the Business and Professions Code, members of the State Bar who are on inactive status may not practice law in California. Section 6068(a) makes violation of section 6125 a disciplinable offense. A member on inactive status who is alleged to have committed acts constituting the practice of law is properly charged with violating sections 6125 and 6068(a). In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [6]

For a failure to communicate with a client which occurred prior to the enactment of the statute requiring such communication, grounds for discipline remain under the common law doctrine underlying this duty. However, where the information the attorney most significantly failed to convey was notice of the attorney's withdrawal from representation, the attorney's conduct violated former the rule against prejudicial withdrawal, and finding culpability of a common law failure to communicate would be unnecessarily duplicative. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [10]

Section 6106, in contrast to sections 6068(a) and 6103, does state a chargeable offense for which discipline may be imposed. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [10]

Where an attorney's failure to communicate with a client occurred prior to the effective date of the statute specifically requiring communication with clients, a violation of the underlying duty predating this statute may be charged as a violation of the attorney's oath and duties generally. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [15]

Where hearing judge accepted respondent's testimony that respondent's prolonged failure to file personal income tax returns resulted from problems with respondent's accountants, and examiner did not object to hearing judge's determination that there was no clear and convincing evidence of misconduct in connection with respondent's failure to file tax returns, review department adopted judge's findings and conclusion of non-culpability. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3]

An attorney may be found culpable of professional misconduct, based on charges of failing to obey state law by failing to file tax returns, even if the attorney has not been convicted of a crime based on that conduct. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [4]

Charging an attorney with a violation of the duty to support the Constitution and laws, by reason of the attorney's violation of the statutes prohibiting practicing law while suspended, provides the basis for imposition of professional discipline for unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [12]

The Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the duty to uphold the laws of this state, as set forth in section 6068(a), is violated by an attorney's violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [2]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little purpose; if misconduct violates a specific disciplinary provision of the State Bar Act or a Rule of Professional Conduct, there is no need to charge the same misconduct as a violation of sections 6068(a) and 6103. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [3]

Sections 6068(a) and 6103 were not intended to refer to the Rules of Professional Conduct or to make disbarment available for violations of such rules. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [5]

Section 6068(a) is not a proper basis for charging a violation of 6002.1, because section 6068(j) specifically makes it a duty of each State Bar member to comply with section 6002.1, and makes such compliance the subject of discipline. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [12]

Charging a violation of section 6068(a) without specifically identifying the underlying provision of law allegedly violated not only fails to put the attorney on sufficient notice of the alleged violation, but also undermines meaningful review of any decision based on such general charging allegation. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [14]

Section 6068(a) is a conduit by which attorneys may be charged and disciplined for violations of other specific laws which are not otherwise made disciplinable under the State Bar Act, including a violation of: (1) a statute not specifically relating to the duties of attorneys; (2) a section of the State Act which is not, by its terms, a disciplinable offense, and (3) an established common law doctrine which is not governed by any other statute. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [15]

Discipline may appropriately be imposed based on an attorney's unauthorized practice of law when the attorney is charged with violating sections 6068(a) and sections 6125 or 6126. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [16]

An attorney who failed to communicate adequately with a client prior to 1987 cannot be charged with a violation of section 6068(m), but can be charged with a violation of section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [17]

Prior to enactment of statute establishing attorney's duty to communicate with clients, Supreme Court had long held that failure to communicate was a proper ground for discipline. This common law duty to communicate falls within the parameters of an attorney's oath and duties, under attorney's general duty to uphold the law. Where attorney failed to inform client of attorney's decision not to pursue fruitless damages claim, finding of violation of duty to uphold the law by failing to communicate with client was appropriate basis for culpability. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [10]

Where respondent was found culpable of violating statutory duty to uphold the law by failing to adhere to common law duty to communicate with client, additional charge that respondent violated attorney's "oath and duties" under separate statute was duplicative, and resolution of case would not be affected by finding such violation. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [11]

Where respondent successfully performed services for which he was retained, and his sole culpability was for single act of failing to inform client of respondent's entirely proper exercise of judgment not to pursue damages, and both harm to client and extent of misconduct were minimal, appropriate discipline would have been private reproval. However, in light of attorney's many years of practice without prior disciplinary record, and other extenuating circumstances, discipline would be punitive and would not further purposes of attorney discipline. Since finding of culpability precluded dismissal, admonition was an appropriate disposition. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [20]

It would not have been proper to find an attorney culpable of violating his duty to uphold the law, where there was no such violation separate and distinct from other charged statutory violations or violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [4]

Where respondent's failure to respond to letters sent by another attorney whom clients had contacted occurred before enactment of specific statute requiring response to clients' reasonable status inquires, respondent could not be found culpable of violating that statute. Nevertheless, a longstanding common-law duty to communicate with clients was recognized by the Supreme Court prior to the adoption of the specific statute. Thus, for failures to communicate with clients occurring prior to the addition of the new statute, it is not duplicative nor otherwise inappropriate to charge an attorney with violating his general duties as an attorney. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [14]

Little, if any, purpose is served by duplicative allegations of misconduct; if misconduct violates a specific Rule of Professional Conduct or statute, there is no need for the State Bar to allege the same misconduct as a violation of an attorney's duty to obey the law. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [15]

If violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct were automatically also violations of the statute governing an attorney's duty to obey the law, the statute limiting the discipline for rule violations to a maximum of three years' suspension would be rendered meaningless; such a construction of the statutory scheme would be illogical. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [16]

In matter charging attorney with filing false declaration and assisting in preparation of fraudulent documents, hearing referee's conclusions that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold the law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068(a)) and statute regarding attorneys' violations of their oath and duties (id., § 6103) were inappropriate. Section 6068(a) charge was duplicative since same misconduct was charged as violation of specific Rule of Professional Conduct. Section 6103 does not define a duty or obligation, but rather provides grounds for discipline for violation of an oath or duty defined elsewhere. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [3]

Respondent's violation of statutes prohibiting unauthorized practice of law was established by unanswered charges and uncontroverted evidence showing that respondent appeared in court after the effective date of his involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [20]

When misconduct violates a specific Rule of Professional Conduct, it is unnecessary to allege the same misconduct as a violation of the attorney's statutory duty to uphold the law. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [4]

Sections 6125 and 6126 together, when coupled with a section 6068(a) charge, create a basis for discipline for unlawful practice of law by a member of the State Bar. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [4]

Accepting fees for services rendered while suspended from practice does not violate sections 6068(a) or 6103. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [7]

Finding of culpability of violating attorney's duty to uphold the law was proper, where attorney was found to have violated criminal provision of Business and Professions Code as charged in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [8]

Contention by State Bar that respondent violated attorney's duty to obey state and federal laws by failing to pay payroll taxes as required by penal and civil statutes was rejected by review department, despite respondent's admission that taxes were not paid, because notice to show cause did not charge violation of employer withholding statutes, and no evidence was introduced to prove they were violated, thus depriving respondent of opportunity to defend. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [10]

Where the notice to show cause did not allege a violation of the Penal Code, the alleged violations of sections 6068(a) and 6103 could not be construed as putting the attorney on notice of a possible Penal Code violation. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [2]

The Supreme Court has held that section 6068(a) is inapplicable to alleged violations of the State Bar Act or the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [5]

The duty to support the Constitution and laws of the United States and of this state is not violated in every case in which a violation of any provision of the Business and Professions Code has occurred. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

213.11 Found

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

Where the record contains clear and convincing evidence that respondent led a witness to believe they had a special relationship of trust and confidence and that his interests would be protected by respondent, respondent assumed a fiduciary duty towards the witness, who was a vulnerable criminal defendant, when he used his superior knowledge and position as an attorney to create a confidential relationship of trust and dependency. In so doing, respondent caused the witness to reject his attorney's advice and accede to respondent's wishes thereby breaching his common law fiduciary duty to the witness in wilful violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [7 a–c]

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

213.15 Not Found

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

213.20 Section 6068(b) (respect for courts and judges)

Attorney's violation of a judge's explicit instruction is an act of disrespect to the court. Further, where an attorney intentionally does not keep his promise to a judge, he is culpable of an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [5]

Respondent violated section 6068(b) when he repeatedly made false charges of bribery against an ex officio judge in probate matters. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [4]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An essential element to establishing an attorney's violation of his statutory duty to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers by making a statement that impugns the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is the falsity of the disparaging statement. Even though the State Bar has the burden of proving the essential element of falsity, it did not proffer any evidence to establish the falsity of the respondent's disparaging statements regarding various judicial officers because the hearing judge made a erroneous pre-trial ruling relieving the State Bar of its burden to prove falsity. Therefore, the review department remanded the matter to the hearing department to allow the State Bar an opportunity to prove that respondent's statements were false. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [3]

An attorney's statement impugning the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is not disciplinable if it constitutes rhetorical hyperbole, or uses language only in a loose, figurative sense, or if it is not capable of being proved true or false. The statement is not disciplinable unless it implies or is based upon a false assertion of fact. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [4]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain respect for courts by failing to appear as counsel of record at hearings and court-ordered meetings in his client's bankruptcy proceeding. Respondent's repeated failures to appear were not tantamount to a voluntarily dismissal of his client's bankruptcy petition. Once respondent signed and filed his client's Chapter 11 petition, he submitted to the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction and had a duty to appear and participate at hearings and court-ordered meetings in good faith, withdraw as counsel of record, or have the bankruptcy court dismiss the petition. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [4]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Respect due courts as required of attorneys by statute includes compliance with court orders absent good faith belief in legal right not to comply. Respondent violated statute where respondent did not attend settlement conference, as previously ordered by settlement judge, because he had other work to do and did not believe he was required to attend as he was not an attorney of record. Such facts did not establish good faith belief in legal right not to comply with order to appear. Respondent could not simply ignore order to appear before court because he believed his presence was unnecessary. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [7]

Respondent did not demonstrate disrespect for court by failing to fully disclose information about client's assets to opposing counsel in course of settlement negotiations, where obligation to disclose such information was based on a promise, not an order, to do so, and where even if failing to comply with a promise could amount to disrespect for court, record lacked clear and convincing evidence that respondent had failed to disclose known assets. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [8]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

By deliberately disobeying court orders, respondent violated an attorney's duty to maintain the respect due to courts of justice. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [6]

Where, in representing four criminal clients, respondent violated six court orders, was held in contempt four times, failed to appear at scheduled court hearings nine times, and had warrants issued against him three times, and where respondent had breached two separate disciplinary orders and defaulted in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent's misconduct reflected disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and inability to conform to the most basic duties of an attorney. These facts, coupled with lack of mitigation, demonstrated that risk of future misconduct was great and indicated that respondent was not a good candidate for probation and/or suspension. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [14]

Where respondent did not display disrespect for any court except insofar as he violated a court order, charge of violating statute requiring respect for courts was properly disregarded as duplicative of charge of violating statute requiring obedience to court orders, which more directly addressed respondent's specific misconduct. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Where an attorney failed to advise a client, the insurer-defendant or the superior court in which the client's lawsuit was filed of his disciplinary suspension, but filed an affidavit with the Supreme Court declaring under penalty of perjury that he had complied with the rule requiring him to notify all clients, courts, and opposing parties of his suspension, his false affidavit constituted an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty, and his failure to comply with the rule violated the statute requiring respect for courts and judges. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [2]

Where a settlement judge's order following a settlement conference indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the order was binding and an attorney's failure to abide by it, without moving for relief therefrom, constituted a violation of the statutes requiring obedience to court orders and respect for courts and judicial officers. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [5]

Where an attorney failed to pay court-ordered sanctions, and was charged with violating both the statute requiring respect for courts and the statute requiring obedience to court orders, the misconduct was more specifically addressed under the statute requiring obedience to court orders and that charge was therefore to be preferred. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [7]

Where respondent had been ordered to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension and to file affidavit of compliance with such order, and respondent failed to give timely notice and failed to notify opposing counsel in three matters, and respondent's affidavit of compliance was filed late and incorrectly stated that all courts and opposing counsel had been notified of his suspension, respondent's gross neglect and lack of diligence in complying with the order to give notice violated the statute requiring respect for courts, but did not constitute an intentional misrepresentation of facts to the Supreme Court in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [9]

In determining appropriate discipline to recommend for respondent found culpable of violating statute requiring respect for courts based on respondent's violation of Supreme Court order requiring him to give notice of his prior disciplinary suspension under rule 955, review department noted that respondent's failure to give timely and complete notice of suspension, and his filing of an affidavit which was untimely and inaccurate, would have warranted a recommendation of disbarment, absent strong mitigating circumstances, in a referral proceeding for violation of rule 955. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [15]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

When payment of sanctions is ordered by a court, an attorney is expected to follow the order or proffer a formal explanation by motion or appeal as to why the order cannot be obeyed; the attorney cannot sit back and await contempt proceedings before either complying or explaining his or her noncompliance. Where respondent had personal knowledge of the entry of two orders awarding sanctions against him, but ignored opposing counsel's efforts to secure compliance and failed to take any action to seek relief from the orders, respondent's failure to comply was not excused by his impecunious status, and constituted a violation of the statutes requiring attorneys to maintain respect for the courts and to obey court orders. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [12]

Because respondent made a good faith effort to pay court-awarded sanctions so that his client would not be adversely affected by his neglect of the case, and respondent did ultimately pay the sanctions, albeit after a complaint to the State Bar, respondent's initial attempt to pay the sanctions with a trust account check which was valid when written, but which failed to clear due to subsequent closure of the trust account by the bank, did not constitute a violation of statutes requiring attorneys to maintain respect for the courts and to obey court orders. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [14]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

An attorney's filing a lawsuit in the wrong court, and not paying sanctions awarded against the attorney in the change of venue order, did not support the contention that the attorney failed to maintain the respect due to the courts, when the attorney had no personal knowledge of the sanctions or the failure to pay them. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [10]

Where notice to show cause did not charge violation of statute requiring attorneys to maintain respect for courts and their officers, and no motion to amend was made at hearing, referee's conclusion that respondent violated the statute was inappropriate. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [2]

213.21 Found

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

213.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321.

213.30 Section 6068(c) (counsel only legal actions/defenses)

Respondent was culpable of maintaining unjust actions where he unreasonably persisted in pursuing numerous lawsuits after unqualified losses at trial and on appeal, repeatedly filed unmeritorious motions, pleadings, and other papers, engaged in tactics that were frivolous or intended to cause unnecessary delay, and acted with disregard for two vexatious litigant rulings. However, charges of violations of rule 3-200(A) based on same facts were properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360 [1 a-d]

State Bar Court gives strong presumption of validity to superior court's findings if supported by substantial evidence, and may rely on court of appeal opinion in case where attorney was party as conclusive determination of civil matters strongly similar or identical to charged disciplinary conduct. Where respondent had been ruled a vexatious litigant by both trial and appellate courts, and rulings were supported by clear and convincing evidence, respondent was culpable of maintaining unjust actions in violation of section 6068(c). In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [2]

Respondent was culpable of maintaining an unjust action by filing frivolous appeals, recycling previously rejected arguments, and resubmitting essentially the same complaint as "amended," resulting in wasteful, expensive relitigation of resolved matters. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [4]

Even though attorneys have duty to zealously represent their clients and assert unpopular position in advancing clients' legitimate objectives, attorneys, as officers of the court, have duty to judicial system to assert only legal claims or defenses warranted by law or supported by good faith belief in correctness. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [5]

A cause of action in a civil proceeding based on factual allegations that respondent knew he could not prove was patently frivolous and unjust, and respondent's continued pursuit of the meritless factual allegations was strong circumstantial evidence that he was motivated by vindictiveness. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [4]

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [6]

Respondent's frivolous appeal was a violation of section 6068 subdivision (c) of the Business and Professions Code and rule 3-200(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. However, since the rule 3-200(A) violation is essentially redundant, for purposes of assessing degree of discipline, the review department found respondent culpable of only the section 6068 subdivision (c) violation. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [3]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain only just causes and abused the bankruptcy process by filing and maintaining a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding for an insolvent client when he knew that the client's only assets were nine residential lots in which there was no equity and that the client had neither the ability nor the intention of making adequate protection payments to the lienholders on the nine lots in accordance with the law. Even if respondent was unaware of these facts, he would still be culpable. Under applicable federal rules of procedure, respondent's signature on the Chapter 11 petition as attorney of record for debtor was a certification that to the best of his knowledge and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the petition was well founded in fact and warranted by either existing law or a good faith argument for the modification of existing law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [3]

By repeatedly filing baseless and vexatious litigation, respondent violated an attorney's duty to counsel or maintain only such actions as appear legal or just. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [7]

Where respondent did not simply advise client of consequences of not paying child support order, but actively counseled client on ways to accomplish goal of violating order, respondent was culpable of violating statute requiring attorneys only to counsel actions that appear legal or just, and rule prohibiting attorneys from advising the violation of any law or court order. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [5]

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

213.31 Found

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

213.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

213.40 Section 6068(d) (do not mislead courts and judges)

Where respondent was found culpable of moral turpitude for filing bankruptcy petitions containing misrepresentations and material omissions, charge that respondent violated section 6068(d) based on same misconduct was duplicative, and was therefore dismissed. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [4]

Where respondent filed a motion with the Court of Appeal misrepresenting that his clients wanted to pursue an appeal and where respondent failed to disclose to the Court of Appeal that he had been fired, respondent's actions violated Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d) as well as section 6106. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [6 a–c]

Dismissal of duplicative violations is appropriate where misconduct establishing respondents' culpability for violating their duty never to seek to mislead a judge or other judicial offer by an artifice or false statement of law or fact is covered by the misconduct establishing culpability for committing acts of moral turpitude which supports identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [2]

The good faith of an attorney in making a false statement is a defense to the charge of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d). As a defense, respondent had the burden of proving that he acted in good faith and he failed to meet that burden. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.[2]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d) requires attorneys to refrain from misleading and deceptive acts without qualification. An attorney need not utter an affirmative falsehood in order to violate section 6068, subdivision (d). Concealment of a material fact misleads a judge just as effectively as a false statement. No distinction can therefore be drawn among concealment, half-truth, and false statement of fact. Respondent's unqualified and unequivocal statements to the judges that he served John under circumstances that should have caused him at least some uncertainty were, at a minimum, deceptive, in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 6068, subdivision (d) and 6106.In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.[3]

Respondent's argument is that a misrepresentation to a court is not material unless it successfully misleads the court is contrary to the express wording of Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (d), which provides that it is the duty of an attorney to never seek to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact or law. The conduct denounced by this statute is not the act of an attorney by which he successfully misleads the court, but the presentation of a statement of fact, known by him to be false, which tends to do so. It is the endeavor to secure an advantage by means of falsity which is denounced. Whether respondent violated section 6068, subdivision (d) depends first upon whether his representation to the court was in fact untrue, and second, whether he knew that his statement was false and he intended thereby to deceive the court. With regard to whether respondent intended to deceive the court, the presentation to a court of a statement of fact known to be false presumes an intent to secure a determination based upon it and is a clear violation of section 6068, subdivision (d). Respondent's statements to the two courts were in fact untrue and he knew they were untrue. Thus, it is presumed that the statements were made with an intent to secure an advantage. No credible evidence rebutted this presumption. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.[4 a-d]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.[1]

Even though hearing judge expressly found that respondent's violation of statute and rule of professional conduct was based on respondent's gross negligence, she inexplicably declined to apply that gross negligence to find that respondent's conduct involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prescribing attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding moral turpitude. Accordingly, review department independently found respondent culpable of act involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.[2]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

Respondent's endorsement of a client's false financial statement and misrepresentation that one of a client's companies was a successful business were willful violations of his duty to employ only such means as are consistent with the truth when representing clients, and were dishonest acts involving moral turpitude. However, to the extent that the facts underlying both violations were the same, the review department gave no additional weight to the duplication in determining discipline. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [1]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Statute and ethics rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges do not provide that only attorneys of record are subject to their requirements. Attorneys are required to refrain from deceptive acts without qualification. Thus, fact that respondent was not attorney of record and appeared voluntarily at mandatory settlement conference was not relevant to whether respondent was culpable of violating such statute and rule by intentionally misleading settlement conference judge. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [1]

Attorneys can be disciplined for making material misrepresentations to a court even when the facts are a matter of public record. Accordingly, where respondent's client's death was a matter of public record, but settlement judge in client's pending case was not aware of death, and death was material fact in settlement negotiations, respondent was culpable of misconduct for misleading settlement judge about client's death. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [2]

Concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements, and accordingly, is misconduct calling for discipline. Thus, respondent could be found culpable of intentionally misleading judge where he failed to reveal that his client had died, even though respondent was not directly asked if client was dead and even though respondent's answers to judge's questions may have been facially truthful, where respondent's statements to court and parties and his answers to judge's questions conveyed impression that client was alive and was exerting influence on respondent's ability to settle case. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [3]

Dishonest acts by an attorney are grounds for suspension or disbarment even if no harm results. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [4]

Statute prohibiting attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude applies to misrepresentation and concealment of material facts. An attorney has a duty under statute and ethics rule never to seek to mislead a judge and acting otherwise constitutes moral turpitude and warrants discipline. Thus, respondent's intentional, material misrepresentation to a settlement conference judge was an act of moral turpitude. Nevertheless, where same misconduct underlay both finding of moral turpitude and findings of violation of statute and rule prohibiting misleading courts, misconduct was treated as single violation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [5]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

Even if State Bar prosecutor had duty to disclose exculpatory evidence, unpublished, non-precedential trial court decision did not constitute such evidence, nor was it controlling precedent which prosecutor had duty to disclose to court. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [14]

An attorney's wilful failure to cite controlling authority squarely contradicting the attorney's position could be held to violate statute and rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges. However, attorneys as advocates are under no duty to reveal decisions which do not constitute controlling precedent. In State Bar Court, only decisions of review department, subject to relevant Supreme Court case law, are considered controlling precedent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [15]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

Where respondent's description of his car problems in explaining his failure to appear for a court hearing differed only in degree from the actual events, the difference did not constitute deception or an attempt to mislead the court. The steps respondent took once he experienced the car problems might not have been adequate to excuse his failure to appear, but this aspect of his conduct was not charged as a disciplinary violation and thus could not form the basis of a culpability finding. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [1]

Where respondent represented to a judge that he had failed to attend an earlier hearing because he had been in another city appearing before another judge in a family law matter, when in fact he had had no court appearance but had been in the other courthouse on other errands, his statement was materially dishonest, because the proffered excuse was intended to carry more weight than the truth would have. Respondent's deception therefore constituted an act of dishonesty in violation of the moral turpitude statute, as well as a violation of the statute and rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from misleading judicial officers. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [2]

In order for an attorney's misrepresentation to be a violation of the statute prohibiting the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, the misrepresentation must be made with an intent to mislead. Negligence in making a representation does not constitute a violation of the statute. Where no clear and convincing evidence established any misrepresentation or deception, attorney's statements did not involve moral turpitude and also did not violate statute requiring attorneys only to use means consistent with truth and not to deceive judicial officers. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [13]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

In order to violate the statute prohibiting seeking to mislead a judge, or its parallel Rule of Professional Conduct, an attorney must knowingly make a false, material statement of fact or law to a court, with the intent to mislead. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [5]

Where respondent falsely stated to the judge, during a trial, that one of his witnesses who had not yet arrived at court was under subpoena, such false statement was material, because it affected the court's scheduling of its daily calendar to accommodate the late witness and because it wrongfully caused the court to treat the witness initially as being in disobedience of a subpoena when he did arrive. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [6]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

Where respondent had asked a witness a question, knowing that the witness would testify falsely, in order to mislead the court, respondent was culpable of deceiving the court and of moral turpitude, but in the absence of evidence of an agreement between respondent and the witness, there was no proof that respondent suborned perjury. A determination of subornation of perjury requires clear and convincing proof of a corrupt agreement between the witness and the respondent for the witness to testify falsely. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [7]

Attorneys are expected to be forceful advocates for clients' legitimate causes, but role played by attorneys in honest administration of justice is critical. Attorneys, by adherence to their high fiduciary duties and the truth, can sharply reduce or eliminate clashes and ease the way to dispute settlement. Where parties to marital dissolution matter agreed to allow husband's counsel to hold community funds in trust pending resolution of dispute regarding property settlement, relying on counsel's duty as an attorney to honor the trust nature of the money, attorney's misconduct in improperly disbursing funds and then misrepresenting to wife's counsel and courts that funds were still held in trust account was especially regrettable. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [19]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

By acts of dishonesty in deceiving a corporation in a business transaction, attorneys violated the statute which prohibits attorneys from committing acts of moral turpitude whether committed in the capacity of an attorney or not, but did not violate the statute prohibiting attorneys from making misrepresentations to a tribunal in seeking to further a client's interests. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [4]

Where all of attorneys' acts of dishonesty were encompassed in charge of committing acts of moral turpitude, there would be no added value in straining to find in the same conduct a violation of another statute prohibiting misrepresentations to tribunals. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [5]

213.41 Found

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

213.45 Not Found

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

213.50 Section 6068(e) (preserve client confidences)

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Where respondent knew, at a minimum, that a letter was being sent to a third party from his office on his letterhead and that it contained a copy of, at least, the greater portion of a client's confidential settlement agreement, respondent was culpable of failing to maintain inviolate his client's confidence in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e).In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [3]

Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (e) is the most strongly worded duty binding on a California attorney. It requires the attorney to maintain inviolate the confidence and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve his client's secrets. The ethical duty of confidentiality is much broader in scope and covers communications that would not be privileged under the evidentiary attorney-client privilege. It prohibits an attorney from disclosing facts and even allegations that might cause a client or former client public embarrassment. The duty of confidentiality complements the evidentiary presumption that communications from client to attorney during their professional relationship are confidential. Respondent breached his client's confidence in violation of section 6068 subdivision (e) by disclosing to another, without good cause, that the client was a convicted felon, although the conviction was a public record, but not easily discovered. The client had communicated his status to respondent to aid respondent in effectively representing him. Even if respondent had not been charged with such a violation, the hearing judge could have concluded in aggravation of discipline that respondent's divulgence was of a fact prejudicial to his client in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f). In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3 a-c]

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to commit the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

213.51 Found

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

213.55 Not Found

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

213.60 Section 6068(f) (abstain from offensive personality)

Business and Professions Code section 6068 subdivision (e) is the most strongly worded duty binding on a California attorney. It requires the attorney to maintain inviolate the confidence and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve his client's secrets. The ethical duty of confidentiality is much broader in scope and covers communications that would not be privileged under the evidentiary attorney-client privilege. It prohibits an attorney from disclosing facts and even allegations that might cause a client or former client public embarrassment. The duty of confidentiality complements the evidentiary presumption that communications from client to attorney during their professional relationship are confidential. Respondent breached his client's confidence in violation of section 6068 subdivision (e) by disclosing to another, without good cause, that the client was a convicted felon, although the conviction was a public record, but not easily discovered. The client had communicated his status to respondent to aid respondent in effectively representing him. Even if respondent had not been charged with such a violation, the hearing judge could have concluded in aggravation of discipline that respondent's divulgence was of a fact prejudicial to his client in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f). In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [3 a-c]

Charge for violating statute proscribing offensive personality was dismissed because statute was previously declared unconstitutionally vague by federal appeals court. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [3]

By repeatedly requesting courts to hold all opponents in contempt or subject to sanctions with no legitimate grounds for such requests, which were gratuitously insulting and offensive, respondent violated an attorney's duty to abstain from offensive personality. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [8]

213.61 Found

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

213.65 Not Found

In the context of an emotional and adversarial lawsuit, propounding discovery that falsely intimated that respondent and the plaintiff, respondent's former client, had a sexual relationship and that the plaintiff was sexually promiscuous is not clear and convincing evidence of acts of moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Further, it is unclear that Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision

(f), which prohibits the advancing of prejudicial facts to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, proscribes the use of such intimations.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4 a - b]

Because the plaintiff in a civil lawsuit, who was respondent's former client, introduced into evidence respondent's offensive discovery requests, it is presumed, in the absence of any jury instruction to the contrary, that the jury relied on them in finding by clear and convincing evidence that respondent acted with oppression or malice when he harassed or intentionally inflicted emotional harm on the plaintiff. Therefore, to find a Business and Professions Code section 6106 moral turpitude violation on this basis would be duplicative of the moral turpitude violations already found based on respondent's harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on the plaintiff. For the same reasons, it would also be duplicative to use the offensive discovery to find culpability of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f). It is generally inappropriate to find redundant charged allegations. The appropriate level of discipline for an act of misconduct does not depend on how many rules of professional conduct or statutes proscribe the misconduct.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5 a - b]

The Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f) charge based on respondent's offensive discovery requests is duplicative of the Business and Professions Code section 6106 charge based on the same conduct. It is insufficient for culpability that the section 6068, subdivision (f) charge reflects the additional harm that respondent has caused to the administration of justice and to the right of the plaintiff, respondent's former client, to seek redress in the courts. Culpability of misconduct is determined by whether an attorney has violated the Rules of Professional Conduct, a disciplinable provision of the State Bar Act or other disciplinable provision of law. Harm or lack thereof is an aggravating circumstance.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775.

213.70 Section 6068(g) (corrupt motive for action)

A cause of action in a civil proceeding based on factual allegations that respondent knew he could not prove was patently frivolous and unjust, and respondent's continued pursuit of the meritless factual allegations was strong circumstantial evidence that he was motivated by vindictiveness. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [4]

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [6]

By acting in bad faith, out of spite, and with the purpose to harm others and cause delay, respondent violated an attorney's duty to refrain from encouraging the commencement or continuance of an action from a corrupt motive. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [9]

213.71 Found

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

213.75 Not Found

213.80 Section 6068(h) (reject cause of defenseless or oppressed)

213.81 Found

213.85 Not Found

213.90 Section 6068(i) (cooperate in disciplinary proceedings)

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Where attorney did not provide written response to State Bar investigative inquiry but allegedly met with State Bar two months after receiving inquiry, this is not timely cooperation. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [4]

Misrepresentations in an attorney's verified answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar, is a serious aggravation warranting increased discipline and might well constitute a greater offense than underlying misconduct. It is no defense that attorney's answers were prepared for him by his counsel. While it might be improper to penalize a lay client for not correcting mistakes that his counsel made in a pleading that the client verified, such reasoning carries little weight when the client is an attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [26 a-c]

Under State Bar Act and disciplinary case law, respondent had affirmative duty to insure that his answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar were true and correct even if he had to refresh his recollection of the facts by going to the immigration court and reviewing the court file and listening to the tapes of all relevant court hearings in each client matter that was a subject of the interrogatories.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [27]

Attorney's failure to respond to State Bar investigator's letter did not establish attorney's violation of statutory duty to cooperate with disciplinary investigations because State Bar did not mail letter to address that attorney maintained on State Bar's official membership records, but instead mailed letter to address it believed, but did not establish, to be attorney's home address. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[2]

Section 6068, subdivision(i), of the Business and Professions Code requires an attorney to cooperate in any disciplinary investigation or proceeding. By offering to pay a client for the withdrawal of the client's State Bar complaint against respondent, respondent was attempting to interfere with the State Bar's investigation and thus committed an uncharged violation of section 6068, subdivision (i). In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.[3]

Respondent's two serious instances of reckless failure to perform legal services which resulted in the dismissal of his clients' civil lawsuits, and respondent's failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigations warrants a discipline recommendation of 18-months stayed suspension, two years of probation, and a 90-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[4]

Once respondent met with State Bar deputy trial counsel in response to initial State Bar investigative letters and indicated a willingness to cooperate through his counsel in any matter raised by the State Bar, respondent should be accorded the benefit of the doubt in assuming that continued cooperation with deputy trial counsel constituted contemporaneous cooperation with State Bar regarding additional investigative letters subsequently sent to respondent. Thus, respondent was not culpable of failing to cooperate in the State Bar's investigation. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [9]

Respondent's participation in probation revocation proceeding was not a mitigating circumstance because his participation was mandated by Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (i). In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [2]

By choosing not to reply in writing to an investigatory letter from the State Bar when he knew a written reply was necessary, respondent intentionally violated an attorney's duty to cooperate with any State Bar investigation. Neither leaving telephone messages nor meeting with a State Bar attorney two years later exonerated respondent of the violation. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [12]

Where respondent did not answer letters from State Bar investigators, but testified that he had discussed matters under investigation with a State Bar attorney at generally the same or a somewhat later time, and State Bar did not call its attorney as witness and did not seek review, review department concluded that hearing judge did not err in finding lack of clear and convincing proof of respondent's failure to cooperate in investigation. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [5]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

Lack of candor toward the State Bar during disciplinary investigation or proceedings, including presenting intentionally misleading testimony, fabricating evidence, or attempting to mislead the court through material omissions, is an aggravating circumstance. However, a respondent's honest, if mistaken belief in his or her innocence, and resulting in failure to acquiesce in the State Bar Court's findings, is not in and of itself aggravating. Lack of candor cannot be found based merely on a respondent's different memory of events from that of complaining former clients. Where respondent's testimony concerning his former office manager's conduct in hiding or destroying letters and messages was uncontroverted and not implausible, and was corroborated by an eyewitness, hearing judge's finding that such testimony lacked candor was not adopted by review department. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [9]

The statute requiring cooperation in State Bar disciplinary proceedings contemplates that attorneys may be found culpable of violating that duty if they fail to cooperate either in the investigation or in the formal proceedings. An attorney may be found culpable of violating the statute by failing to respond to a State Bar investigator's letter, even if the attorney subsequently appears and fully participates in the formal proceeding. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [12]

If an attorney wishes to invoke statutory or constitutional privileges which the attorney contends make a substantive response to a State Bar investigator's letter unnecessary, the attorney must nevertheless respond to the investigator's letter, if only to state that the attorney is claiming a privilege; otherwise, the attorney not only violates the statutory duty to cooperate, but also risks waiving the claimed privilege. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [14]

The State Bar failed to establish that an attorney violated his duty to cooperate with the State Bar in a disciplinary investigation, where the evidence showed that letters were purportedly sent to the attorney by State Bar investigators, but no evidence was submitted proving that the letters were properly addressed to, or received by, the attorney. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [23]

Respondent's failure to cooperate with the State Bar's investigation of his misconduct was a substantive violation of the statute requiring such cooperation, not just an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [9]

Argument that accused attorney can wait and cooperate with attorney employed by State Bar rather than one of its investigators is not supported by authority and is contrary to express language of statute setting forth duty to cooperate with State Bar investigations. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [15]

Attorney was properly found not to be culpable of violating statutory duty to cooperate with State Bar investigation where alleged violation predated effective date of statute. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [16]

Respondent's claimed alcoholism did not excuse him from his statutory duties to notify the State Bar promptly of any change of his address of record, and to participate in State Bar disciplinary proceedings against him. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

Attorney's failure to participate in State Bar's investigation of misconduct was a clear breach of attorney's legal and ethical duties. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [5]

213.91 Found

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

213.95 Not Found

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

214.00 Section 6068(j) (comply with section 6002.1 address)

By maintaining a post office box as his State Bar address of record, respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to maintain, on the State Bar's official membership records, their current office addresses and telephone numbers. It is only when an attorney does not have offices that he is permitted to maintain some other address and telephone number as his official State Bar address.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [19 a-b]

In addition to multiple State Bar administrative and investigative purposes, purpose of statute and State Bar rules and regulations requiring attorneys to maintain their current office addresses and telephone numbers on State Bar's official membership records is to establish a bar-wide database of every attorney's office address and telephone number from which clients may locate their attorneys should they lose contact with them.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [20]

Unless no office is maintained, every attorney has statutory duty to maintain his or her current office address on State Bar's official membership records (official address). Attorney violated this duty by maintaining his home address on State Bar's official membership records instead of maintaining his office address. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [10]

Section 6068(a) is not a proper basis for charging a violation of 6002.1, because section 6068(j) specifically makes it a duty of each State Bar member to comply with section 6002.1, and makes such compliance the subject of discipline. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [12]

The failure to charge a violation of section 6068(j) in the notice to show cause was harmless error, where the notice clearly charged an alleged violation of section 6002.1. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [13]

Respondent's claimed alcoholism did not excuse him from his statutory duties to notify the State Bar promptly of any change of his address of record, and to participate in State Bar disciplinary proceedings against him. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [4]

214.01 Found

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

214.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

214.10 Section 6068(k) (comply with disciplinary probation)

The State Bar can prosecute a probation violation by way of a motion to revoke probation, or by way of an original disciplinary proceeding based on a violation of the Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). It was not error to charge a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 in this original disciplinary proceeding. The gravamen of this case was respondent's failure to comply with the conditions of his probation. Regardless of the statute charged, the proceeding was based on a violation of section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

Statutes providing (1) that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline; (2) that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and (3) that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension are all statutes that can be violated. The determination that an attorney violated the statute making probation violations cause for revocation of probation means that the attorney failed to comply with a probation condition. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation made no required restitution payments to former clients, but made some payments to State Bar in belief that probation monitor or other authority had so instructed, and where respondent had insufficient reason for such belief, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to make such payments to clients, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4]

Where respondent's failure to make restitution payments required by disciplinary probation was due to lack of income, but respondent did not attempt to have restitution requirement modified, and did not demonstrate that he made sufficient good faith efforts to acquire resources to pay restitution, respondent was culpable of gross negligence which violated conditions of probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5]

Where attorney violated statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline, and where misconduct underlying such charge was same as misconduct underlying charges of violating statutes providing that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions and that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension, latter two charges were given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Where respondent believed that after notice to show cause in disciplinary probation revocation proceeding had been filed, his probation was terminated and he no longer needed to comply with probation reporting requirement, but respondent took no steps to ascertain whether this belief was correct, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to file required probation report, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7]

Where respondent was charged with violating disciplinary probation conditions by failing to submit evidence of having obtained assistance from a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, respondent could be found culpable only of failing to comply with requirement that he submit such evidence, and not of failing to comply with requirement that he obtain such assistance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

Where respondent violated conditions of disciplinary probation by failing to turn over former client's files and records, precluding accountant from assessing losses incurred due to respondent's misconduct so that determination could be made regarding restitution, such probation violations were serious and warranted lengthy actual suspension and requirement to prove rehabilitation, learning in the law, and fitness to practice before returning to law practice. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [4]

214.11 Found

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

214.15 Not Found

214.20 Section 6068(l) (comply with agreements in lieu of discipline)

In the Matter of Respondent R (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 227.

214.21 Found

214.25 Not Found

214.30 Section 6068(m) (communicate with clients)

Where respondent stipulated he accepted representation of clients, and evidence showed respondent did not obtain clients' informed written consent to waive potential conflict, and case was later transferred to new attorney without clients' knowledge or consent, Review Department reversed hearing judge and found respondent culpable of violations of rules 3-310(C)(1) and 3-700(A)(2), and section 6068(m). In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [4 a,b]

Where respondent was unable to access client contact information because his former office staff locked him out of his office, hearing judge properly found respondent not culpable of failing to communicate with clients in violation of Business and Professions code section 6068(m). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [5].

Where no credible evidence showed that mortgage lender notified respondent that it had denied client's loan modification, respondent was not culpable of failing to inform client of denial. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221. [8]

It is not necessarily duplicative to find culpability for failure to communicate with clients and culpability for improperly withdrawing from employment when respondent's failure to communicate arose from her failure to inform clients of crucial information regarding representation and respondent's improper withdrawal was based on her failure to take reasonable steps to protect her clients' interests. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4 a, b]

Filing extensions and an opening appellate brief does not constitute a response to several letters from respondent's clients in which they expressly asked to be informed of respondent's intentions regarding his continued pursuit of an appeal. Where the clients' requests were reasonable given the perception that respondent was acting against their wishes and where there is no evidence that respondent made any communication as an answer to his clients' requests, respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m). In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [4 a, b]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

A client's efforts to communicate with respondent about a refund of fees and advanced costs were reasonable status inquiries for purposes of section 6068(m), of the Business and Professions Code. These efforts constituted status inquiries because they implicated the nature and conditions of respondent's representation. The efforts were reasonable because the clients quickly changed their mind about pursuing the matter for which respondent had been retained and deserved clarification about their financial arrangement with respondent. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.[4]

The terms judges and judicial officers as used in Business and Professions Code section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct are limited to those individuals who are officers of a state or federal system and who perform judicial functions. Thus, the review department reversed the hearing judge's determination that respondent attempted to mislead judicial officers, in violation of section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B), when he told an arbitration panel that he had represented his clients previously. The local bar association's arbitration panel was not composed of judges or judicial officers as required under both section 6068(d) and rule 5-200 and the local bar association's arbitration panel was not court-appointed. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.[6]

Attorney's failure to communicate with a client may also constitute incompetent legal practice or abandonment of the client when facts demonstrate that attorney's failure to communicate resulted in the effective cessation of work on client's cause of action, foreclosed client from choices regarding her cause of action, or indicated a withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [5]

An attorney's failure to adequately communicate with a client may evidence the attorney's lack of time to perform legal services competently in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [7]

The greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations of probation which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection. Where the misconduct which gave rise to the probation involved failure to perform and communicate, the law office management plan, ethics school, and law office management course conditions of probation directly addressed the misconduct and were therefore significantly related to the underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

Under the State Bar Act and Rules of Professional Conduct clients have the right to expect that attorneys will reasonably supervise the progress of cases for which they accept responsibility. The fact that the file was misplaced, or that there was misconduct by an employee, cannot excuse the failure to maintain an information system that permits a lawyer to periodically check the status of his or her cases. The failure to have such a system resulted in culpability for failing to keep the client reasonably informed of significant events. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [2]

An attorney's duty to communicate with a client includes the duty to communicate to persons who reasonably believe they are clients to the attorney's knowledge at least to the extent of advising them that they are not clients. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [4]

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

Where respondent was grossly negligent in failing to respond to requests for information from client and successor counsel, and where respondent failed to maintain client's settlement check in safe place, respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently. However, where charge of repeated failure to perform competently addressed same misconduct as charges of failure to communicate with client and failure to keep client property in safe place, failure to perform competently was given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [19]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

Conduct which falls below the standard of the statute requiring attorneys to communicate with their clients, but which occurred prior to the effective date of the statute, does not violate its ban. However, where the attorney's failure to communicate began prior to that effective date, but extended beyond it, discipline has been imposed under the statute. Accordingly, where respondent's principal failures to communicate with client occurred prior to effective date of statute, when he withdrew from representing her, but respondent thereafter continued to encourage client to contact him as a conduit for her new counsel after his withdrawal, and did not respond to her efforts to contact him after effective date of statute, respondent was properly found culpable of violating his statutory duty to communicate with the client. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

Where respondent with no prior record of discipline failed to communicate reasonably with two clients and failed to relinquish their files promptly, causing harm to clients, six-month stayed suspension, with no actual suspension, was well within appropriate range of discipline as indicated by comparable cases. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

Where respondent spoke with clients approximately eight or nine times during short period of representation, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent failed to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [5]

Where the overall number of phone calls made by a client to respondent may not have been reasonable, but they reflected the client's increasing frustration at her inability to speak with respondent, the hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of failing to respond to the client's reasonable inquiries. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [1]

Where respondent did not respond to client's reasonable inquiries and missed appointments with client both before and after effective date of statute regarding duty to communicate with clients, respondent was culpable of violating attorney's oath and duties, as to conduct before such effective date, and of violating statutory duty to communicate, after such effective date. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [5]

It is not inherently inconsistent to conclude that an attorney who withdrew from employment and failed to perform legal services competently is also culpable of failing to communicate with the client thereafter. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [7]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

When a client learned independently that the client's case might be endangered by a statutory deadline, and contacted the attorney regarding that potential problem, the attorney breached the duty to communicate with the client by not having an office system in place to assure that such calls would be brought to the attorney's attention. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [5]

While a lack of adequate communication with a client may warrant a finding of failure to perform legal services competently, it would be duplicative to draw such a conclusion when the attorney has been found culpable of violating the statutory duty to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [6]

Where respondent's disciplinable failure to communicate with his client may have prevented him from earlier discovering the non-disciplinable calendaring mistake that caused his client to lose his cause of action, the harm to the client was properly recognized as a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [8]

For a failure to communicate with a client which occurred prior to the enactment of the statute requiring such communication, grounds for discipline remain under the common law doctrine underlying this duty. However, where the information the attorney most significantly failed to convey was notice of the attorney's withdrawal from representation, the attorney's conduct violated former the rule against prejudicial withdrawal, and finding culpability of a common law failure to communicate would be unnecessarily duplicative. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [10]

Where an attorney's failure to communicate with a client occurred prior to the effective date of the statute specifically requiring communication with clients, a violation of the underlying duty predating this statute may be charged as a violation of the attorney's oath and duties generally. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [15]

Where a client's matter involved a large amount of money and the client was concerned that his reputation would be affected by the dispute, the client's anxiousness to resolve the matter as quickly as was practical, and his periodic attempts to learn the status of the matter, were reasonable. His attorney's failure to complete necessary legal services and to return the client's calls thus violated the duty to respond to reasonable status inquiries and to provide competent legal services. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [5]

Where client needed immediate action, and respondent recommended that client seek a temporary restraining order, respondent's failure to bring TRO application to hearing for over two months constituted reckless incompetence, and respondent's inaccessibility to the client, even though not as severe or protracted as in many disciplinary cases, violated the statutory duty to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [8]

Where respondent failed to inform a client that the five-year statute was about to run on the client's case, respondent violated the statutory duty to keep clients reasonably informed of significant developments in their cases; the fact that the failure to communicate resulted from the loss of the client's file did not render respondent any less culpable. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [11]

The statute requiring attorneys to communicate with their clients does not require a suspended attorney's continued practice of law, and a suspended attorney thus may be found culpable of violating the statute. It is extremely important for a suspended attorney to continue to communicate with the client so that prejudice to the client is minimized, though such communication must not take the form of legal advice. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [14]

A suspended attorney's failure to inform his client that he was suspended and that he was nonetheless filing an unauthorized complaint on her behalf, and his failure to communicate with the client in any other way, amounted to a violation of his statutory obligation to keep his client reasonably informed of significant developments with regard to her case. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [21]

A notice to show cause which alleged that an attorney was hired by a father to represent his son and that the attorney thereafter failed to perform services for, communicate with, and return unearned fees to, the father was sufficient to put the attorney on notice that he was charged with the specified misconduct in his dual representation of the father and son, because the attorney would not have had a duty to communicate with the father if he were not representing the father. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [22]

An attorney who failed to communicate adequately with a client prior to 1987 cannot be charged with a violation of section 6068(m), but can be charged with a violation of section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [17]

Statutory duty to communicate with clients is not an appropriate basis for discipline for failure to communicate which occurred well before effective date of statute. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [9]

Where respondent's failure to respond to letters sent by another attorney whom clients had contacted occurred before enactment of specific statute requiring response to clients' reasonable status inquires, respondent could not be found culpable of violating that statute. Nevertheless, a longstanding common-law duty to communicate with clients was recognized by the Supreme Court prior to the adoption of the specific statute. Thus, for failures to communicate with clients occurring prior to the addition of the new statute, it is not duplicative nor otherwise inappropriate to charge an attorney with violating his general duties as an attorney. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [14]

Culpability for violating statutory duty to communicate with clients may only be predicated on failure to communicate after effective date of statute. Where respondent failed to respond to letter sent by client after effective date, respondent's failure to communicate continued after effective date and culpability finding was appropriate. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [2]

Attorney whose failure to communicate with client occurred prior to effective date of statute requiring such communication could not be found culpable of violating that statute. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [3]

Attorney's failure to communicate with client prior to effective date of section 6068(m) did not violate that statute. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [11]

214.31 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

214.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

Culpability of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m) cannot be sustained by a factual finding based on allegations that respondent gave a client incorrect legal advice. This is addressed by rule 3-110(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, which was neither charged nor proved. Negligent legal representation, even that amounting to legal malpractice, does not establish a rule 3-110(A) violation. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7 a, b, c]

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

214.40 Section 6068(n) (comply with RPC re copies to client)

214.41 Found

214.45 Not Found

214.50 Section 6068(o) (comply with reporting requirements)

Respondent was required to report to the State Bar his criminal charges and conviction both under section 6068(o)(4) and (5), and under disciplinary probation conditions specifically requiring him to comply with the State Bar Act. His failure to report these charges and conviction was considered in aggravation as serious uncharged misconduct. By failing to report, respondent impeded the disciplinary process. The State Bar was not informed of respondent's criminal conduct when it made recommendations to the Supreme Court in two of his previous disciplinary matters, and the Supreme Court was also unaware of his conviction when it imposed discipline in those cases. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [3 a,b]

Respondent had an independent duty to report judicial sanctions. Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (o)(3) offers no exception to respondent's independent reporting obligation, regardless of his actual knowledge that the Supreme Court had complied with its own separate statutory duty to notify the State Bar. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [3]

The duty to report sanctions timely pursuant to section 6068, subdivision (o)(3), Business and Professions Code, is not excused solely because of the pendency of an appeal of the sanction order. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [2]

Despite the silence of the statutory text, the time for reporting judicial sanctions pursuant to section 6068(o)(3) of the Business and Professions Code runs from the time the attorney knows the sanctions were ordered, regardless of the pendency of any appeal. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [1]

The purpose of section 6068(o)(3) of the Business and Professions Code is to inform the State Bar promptly of events which could warrant disciplinary investigation. Depending on the facts, any such investigation might not focus primarily on the judicial sanction itself, but on the conduct preceding or surrounding a sanctions order. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [2]

Code of Civil Procedure 916 does not stay either execution of a judicial sanctions order or respondent's duty to report it to the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [3]

The wilful violation of Business and Professions Code section 6068(0)(3)'s reporting requirement does not require a bad purpose or an evil intent. All that is required for a wilful violation of section 6068(o)(3) is a general purpose of willingness to commit the act or omission. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [4]

As respondent was under a duty to report his criminal guilty plea to the State Bar under Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (o)(5), his action in doing so was not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [5]

The statutory duty to report to the State Bar any judicial sanction of more than $1,000 not imposed for failure to make discovery applies to a sanction incurred by an attorney during self-representation. Violation of this duty may serve as a basis for discipline even though the court imposing the sanction is also required to report the sanction. Knowledge of the reporting requirement is not necessary to find a violation thereof. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [11]

Respondent's ignorance of statute requiring attorneys to report court-ordered sanctions to State Bar was not a defense to violation of such statute, but respondent's awareness that court itself had reported sanctions to State Bar substantially mitigated such violation. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [4]

214.51 Found

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

214.55 Not Found

Where respondent testified that she timely informed the State Bar of the imposition of sanctions, and where the State Bar presented no evidence to contradict respondent's testimony nor any other independent evidence, the State Bar failed to satisfy the clear and convincing standard of proof for a violation of section 6068(o)(3). In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

215.00 Section 6077.5 (attorney collection agencies)

215.01 Found

215.05 Not Found

216.00 Section 6086.8(c) (reporting by uninsured members)

216.01 Found

216.05 Not Found

218.00 Section 6090.5 (requiring agreement not to complain)

Although respondent's attorney handled settlement negotiations with the opposing party, respondent acknowledged that he was on notice that one term of the proposed settlement was that the opposing party withdraw his complaint to the State Bar. Because respondent did nothing upon receiving notice of this fact to inform either his attorney or the opposing party that his attorney lacked authority to discuss such a settlement on his behalf, respondent's attorney had apparent authority to enter into such settlement discussions for respondent. Therefore, respondent intended to agree to this term of the settlement and was culpable of conditioning settlement on the withdrawal of the opposing party's complaint to the State Bar.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [7a-c]

Where respondent offered to repay client funds which respondent had misappropriated, and client in turn proposed different repayment terms which included client's agreement not to file complaint with State Bar, evidence did not clearly and convincingly show violation by respondent of statute prohibiting attorneys from requiring agreement not to complain to State Bar as condition of settlement of civil action for professional misconduct. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [3]

Respondent's attempts to have clients withdraw pending State Bar complaints as part of settlements of actions which were not for malpractice did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from conditioning malpractice settlements on agreement by client not to file State Bar complaint. The State Bar may proceed with a disciplinary matter whether or not the complainant is willing. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [12]

Respondent's letters to client demanding release from all liability, including for malpractice, in exchange for settling outstanding business disputes between them, violated rule prohibiting attorneys from attempting to exonerate themselves from liability for malpractice except in settlement of a malpractice claim. However, respondent's attempt to persuade client to withdraw State Bar complaint did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from requiring as a condition of malpractice settlement that plaintiff agree to not file a complaint with the State Bar. The plain language of the statute is limited to settlements involving the agreement not to file a disciplinary complaint. The effect of withdrawal of charges is not the same as not filing them. Once the State Bar becomes aware of possible misconduct by the filing of a complaint, it does not need a complaining witness in order to go forward with its investigation. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [11]

218.01 Found

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

218.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

219.00 Section 6093(b) (violation of probation condition)

219.01 Found

219.05 Not Found

220.00 Section 6103, clause 1 (disobedience of court order)

Where reasonable interpretation of a court order is that a dental exam would not be allowed unless the court ordered it after the parties filed supporting and opposing papers, such order was mandatory and not permissive. Therefore attorney's willful failure to obey the court order was a violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [1]

In order to be found culpable of wilfully violating Business and Professions Code section 6103, the State Bar need not prove that respondent violated court orders in bad faith. For disciplinary purposes, bad faith must be proved if the State Bar alleges that respondent's noncompliance with court orders involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [2]

Where preliminary and permanent injunctions prohibited respondent's client and the agents of respondent's client from filing any actions relating to certain realty, respondent's filing of a quiet title action in superior court and recording of a lis pendens on behalf of a company the client owned violated Business and Professions Code section 6103 because respondent had actual knowledge of the restraints imposed by the injunctions and because respondent was acting as an agent of the client. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [1 a–c]

Where the record concerning respondents' knowledge of the import of the Superior Court's sanctions decision is confusing at best, there is not clear and convincing evidence that respondents knew there was a final, binding court order and respondents were therefore not culpable of violating their duty not to disobey or violate an order of the court since knowledge is an essential element to establishing such a violation. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [3]

Finding that an order of a worker's compensation judge was an order of a court within the meaning of Business and Professions Code section 6103, the review department found respondent culpable of violating section 6103 by disregarding such an order. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [4 a-b]

Since respondent clearly knew about the judicial sanctions order, the only issue pending before the court regarding a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 was whether respondent had a reasonable time to comply with the order. Whatever a reasonable amount of time would have been for respondent to have paid the sanctions, much more than a year had elapsed from the time of the order during which he failed to comply. Respondent's failure to comply with the sanctions order in more than one year from the time of the order constituted a wilful violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [5]

Respondent's inability to pay court-ordered sanctions is not a defense to the charged violation of section 6103 where there is no evidence that respondent ever sought relief from the sanctions order in the civil courts because of an inability to pay. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [6]

Cases which hold that constitutional due process rights would be violated if a father delinquent in child support were held in a later criminal contempt proceeding to a statutory presumption of ability to pay the support order, in the face of the prosecutor's burden to prove criminal contempt beyond a reasonable doubt, are distinguishable as State Bar proceedings have long been defined by our Supreme Court as unique, and not as criminal proceedings. Moreover, even if respondent lacked the ability to pay, respondent would not be disciplined for failing to pay the sanction, but for failing to pay the sanction without first attempting to be relieved of the order in whole or in part in the superior court or Court of Appeal on the basis of ability to pay. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [7]

A condition attached to respondent's private reproval requiring respondent to pay the $1000 sanctions ordered by the superior court was necessary. To conclude otherwise would terminate respondent's professional obligation under Business and Professions Code section 6103 to obey the order and pay the sanctions. Such a result would be inconsistent with the purposes of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [9]

The State Bar can prosecute a probation violation by way of a motion to revoke probation, or by way of an original disciplinary proceeding based on a violation of the Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). It was not error to charge a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 in this original disciplinary proceeding. The gravamen of this case was respondent's failure to comply with the conditions of his probation. Regardless of the statute charged, the proceeding was based on a violation of section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

To establish a violation of an attorney's statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with the attorney's profession, State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence (1) that the attorney willfully disobeyed an order of a court and (2) that the court order required the attorney to do or forbear an act in connection with or in the course of the attorney's practice of law that he ought in good faith to have done or not done. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [1]

The rule is well settled in California that a void order cannot be the basis for a valid contempt judgment. A person affected by an injunctive order may challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by (1) complying with the order while seeking a judicial determination as to its jurisdictional validity or (2) disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge if and when he is sought to be punished for his disobedience. If a person affected by an injunctive order chooses to challenge the validity of the order on the ground that it was issued without or in excess of the court's jurisdiction by disobeying it and then raising the jurisdictional challenge as a defense against any contempt charges brought against him, his violation of the order constitutes no punishable wrong if it is ultimately determined that the order was issued without or in excess of jurisdiction. However, the contempt order here was final and there was no valid reason to go behind a now-final order. The State Bar Court properly defers to the judgements of the courts of record that rendered contempt judgements against respondent and that considered respondent's subsequent appeals, requests for reconsideration, and certiorari. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [2]

Even though respondent withdrew from employment because his client accepted a settlement agreement with a confidentiality order, he still had a fiduciary duty to his former client. The client, not respondent, had the right to decide to settle her lawsuit on the chosen terms. Thus, respondent had a good faith duty to act consistently with the client's settlement agreement to, at least, not reveal the settlement amount or the evidence obtained in the case except as allowed by the settlement judge. Respondent's failure to do so violated his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [3]

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

Respondent violated his duty to obey court orders when he intentionally failed to comply with two bankruptcy court orders directing him and his client to produce various documents to an examiner appointed by the bankruptcy court. It was no defense that the documents were ultimately determined to be of no use to the examiner. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [2]

Statutes providing (1) that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline; (2) that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and (3) that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension are all statutes that can be violated. The determination that an attorney violated the statute making probation violations cause for revocation of probation means that the attorney failed to comply with a probation condition. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation made no required restitution payments to former clients, but made some payments to State Bar in belief that probation monitor or other authority had so instructed, and where respondent had insufficient reason for such belief, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to make such payments to clients, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4]

Where respondent's failure to make restitution payments required by disciplinary probation was due to lack of income, but respondent did not attempt to have restitution requirement modified, and did not demonstrate that he made sufficient good faith efforts to acquire resources to pay restitution, respondent was culpable of gross negligence which violated conditions of probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5]

Where attorney violated statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline, and where misconduct underlying such charge was same as misconduct underlying charges of violating statutes providing that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions and that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension, latter two charges were given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Where respondent believed that after notice to show cause in disciplinary probation revocation proceeding had been filed, his probation was terminated and he no longer needed to comply with probation reporting requirement, but respondent took no steps to ascertain whether this belief was correct, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to file required probation report, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7]

Where respondent was charged with violating disciplinary probation conditions by failing to submit evidence of having obtained assistance from a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, respondent could be found culpable only of failing to comply with requirement that he submit such evidence, and not of failing to comply with requirement that he obtain such assistance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

Even though respondent was ineligible to practice law on day he was ordered to appear in court on behalf of a client, this did not relieve him of his obligation to appear as ordered. He was obligated to do everything in his power to obey court's order short of practicing law, and at a minimum should have been physically present in court and given accurate information about his eligibility to practice. This would not have constituted the practice of law. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [8]

Primary aims of attorney disciplinary probation are protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney. Greatest amount of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for breaches of probation conditions significantly related to misconduct for which probation was given, especially when circumstances raise serious concern about public protection or show probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Where misconduct for which respondent was placed on probation included practicing law in violation of court order, and respondent's current misconduct also involved violating numerous court orders and was aggravated by failure to participate in disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent's probation violations involved two of very first steps required by probation conditions, these factors indicated that respondent had a persistent problem with conforming his conduct to requirements of law, raised serious concerns for need to protect public, and showed that respondent had failed to even begin to take steps to rehabilitate himself. Accordingly, imposition of entire period of stayed suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's violation of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [12]

Where, in representing four criminal clients, respondent violated six court orders, was held in contempt four times, failed to appear at scheduled court hearings nine times, and had warrants issued against him three times, and where respondent had breached two separate disciplinary orders and defaulted in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent's misconduct reflected disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and inability to conform to the most basic duties of an attorney. These facts, coupled with lack of mitigation, demonstrated that risk of future misconduct was great and indicated that respondent was not a good candidate for probation and/or suspension. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [14]

Where respondent did not display disrespect for any court except insofar as he violated a court order, charge of violating statute requiring respect for courts was properly disregarded as duplicative of charge of violating statute requiring obedience to court orders, which more directly addressed respondent's specific misconduct. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Regardless of an attorney's belief that a court order was issued in error, the attorney is obligated to obey the order unless the attorney takes steps to have it modified or vacated. The attorney's belief as to the validity of the order is irrelevant to a charge of violating the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

Where respondent did not intend to deliberately defy a court order and did not have any dishonest or wrongful intent, and where respondent's improper conduct was based on beliefs and understandings which, although not only mistaken but also objectively unreasonable, were honestly held, respondent did not commit acts involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

Where an attorney disobeys a court order based on an unreasonable interpretation of the order or an untested belief that the order is not valid, or takes money that is not the attorney's based on an unreasonable view of the facts, public discipline is necessary to make clear to the bar, the courts and the public that attorneys face serious consequences for such misconduct. However, where respondent did not pose a threat to the public, and review department concluded that actual suspension was not required to reinforce respondent's understanding of his ethical obligations, no actual suspension was necessary. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

Where a disciplinary proceeding did not involve a court order, respondent did not violate the statute which authorizes discipline to be imposed upon an attorney who violates a court order, but otherwise is not a basis for charged misconduct. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [7]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Where a settlement judge's order following a settlement conference indicated that a final compromise had been reached, the order was binding and an attorney's failure to abide by it, without moving for relief therefrom, constituted a violation of the statutes requiring obedience to court orders and respect for courts and judicial officers. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [5]

The purpose of a proof of service is to establish notice of an order or other document, and it is the kind of document relied upon in the conduct of serious affairs. Where a proof of service of a sanctions order on respondent was in evidence, and there was no indication in the record of any misconduct by respondent's staff concerning receipt of the order, respondent was presumed to have been served with the court order. His receipt of the order and his admission that he did not satisfy it established a violation of the statute requiring attorneys to obey court orders. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [6]

Where an attorney failed to pay court-ordered sanctions, and was charged with violating both the statute requiring respect for courts and the statute requiring obedience to court orders, the misconduct was more specifically addressed under the statute requiring obedience to court orders and that charge was therefore to be preferred. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [7]

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

When payment of sanctions is ordered by a court, an attorney is expected to follow the order or proffer a formal explanation by motion or appeal as to why the order cannot be obeyed; the attorney cannot sit back and await contempt proceedings before either complying or explaining his or her noncompliance. Where respondent had personal knowledge of the entry of two orders awarding sanctions against him, but ignored opposing counsel's efforts to secure compliance and failed to take any action to seek relief from the orders, respondent's failure to comply was not excused by his impecunious status, and constituted a violation of the statutes requiring attorneys to maintain respect for the courts and to obey court orders. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [12]

Because respondent made a good faith effort to pay court-awarded sanctions so that his client would not be adversely affected by his neglect of the case, and respondent did ultimately pay the sanctions, albeit after a complaint to the State Bar, respondent's initial attempt to pay the sanctions with a trust account check which was valid when written, but which failed to clear due to subsequent closure of the trust account by the bank, did not constitute a violation of statutes requiring attorneys to maintain respect for the courts and to obey court orders. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [14]

An attorney's failure to comply with successive orders of the Supreme Court is of concern to the State Bar Court because it repeatedly burdens the resources of the State Bar Court and the disciplinary system. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [11]

Section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not provide a basis for charging an attorney with any misconduct other than violating a court order. Where respondent who was charged with unauthorized practice of law while inactive had transferred to inactive status voluntarily and not as a result of a court order, section 6103 charge should have been dismissed. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [7]

With the exception of a wilful violation of a court order, section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not define a duty or obligation of an attorney but provides only that the violation of the attorney's oath or duties defined elsewhere is ground for discipline. Thus, an attorney can not violate section 6103 unless he or she violated a court order. However, an attorney who is suspended for failure to pay State Bar membership fees is suspended by order of the Supreme Court. Thus, the attorney's continued practice of law after suspension is a violation of the court order suspending the attorney and therefore is a violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [13]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

Prior to 1989, the Supreme Court customarily upheld charges that an attorney had violated the "oath and duties" provision of section 6103, but in 1989, the Supreme Court determined that an attorney charged with other statute and rule violations does not violate section 6103 because that section "defines no duties," except with regard to violation of court orders. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [1]

Section 6103's authorization of discipline, including disbarment, is limited by its terms to occasions when an attorney violates the oath and duties defined in the Business and Professions Code or violates a court order. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [9]

Where respondent was found culpable of violating statutes prohibiting unauthorized practice of law, charge of violating statute requiring obedience to court orders was redundant. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [21]

Where sole court order violated by attorney was order suspending attorney from practice, and attorney was found culpable of unauthorized practice under other statutes, charge of violating section 6103 was superfluous. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [6]

220.01 Found

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

220.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

220.10 Section 6103, clause 2 (oath and duties)

Where a disciplinary proceeding did not involve a court order, respondent did not violate the statute which authorizes discipline to be imposed upon an attorney who violates a court order, but otherwise is not a basis for charged misconduct. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [7]

Unlike the statute regarding violations of an attorney's oath and duties, which has been construed only to state a sanction and not to proscribe conduct, the statute regarding conduct by attorneys which involves moral turpitude, corruption or dishonesty has been construed so as to permit violations thereof to be charged and proved. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [4]

Section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not provide a basis for charging an attorney with any misconduct other than violating a court order. Where respondent who was charged with unauthorized practice of law while inactive had transferred to inactive status voluntarily and not as a result of a court order, section 6103 charge should have been dismissed. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [7]

Section 6106, in contrast to sections 6068(a) and 6103, does state a chargeable offense for which discipline may be imposed. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [10]

With the exception of a wilful violation of a court order, section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not define a duty or obligation of an attorney but provides only that the violation of the attorney's oath or duties defined elsewhere is ground for discipline. Thus, an attorney can not violate section 6103 unless he or she violated a court order. However, an attorney who is suspended for failure to pay State Bar membership fees is suspended by order of the Supreme Court. Thus, the attorney's continued practice of law after suspension is a violation of the court order suspending the attorney and therefore is a violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [13]

Prior to 1989, the Supreme Court customarily upheld charges that an attorney had violated the "oath and duties" provision of section 6103, but in 1989, the Supreme Court determined that an attorney charged with other statute and rule violations does not violate section 6103 because that section "defines no duties," except with regard to violation of court orders. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [1]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little purpose; if misconduct violates a specific disciplinary provision of the State Bar Act or a Rule of Professional Conduct, there is no need to charge the same misconduct as a violation of sections 6068(a) and 6103. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [3]

Sections 6068(a) and 6103 were not intended to refer to the Rules of Professional Conduct or to make disbarment available for violations of such rules. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [5]

Section 6103's authorization of discipline, including disbarment, is limited by its terms to occasions when an attorney violates the oath and duties defined in the Business and Professions Code or violates a court order. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [9]

Where respondent was found culpable of violating statutory duty to uphold the law by failing to adhere to common law duty to communicate with client, additional charge that respondent violated attorney's "oath and duties" under separate statute was duplicative, and resolution of case would not be affected by finding such violation. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [11]

As terms of art, an attorney's "oath and duties" are defined by sections 6067 and 6068. Section 6103 confirms the Supreme Court's inherent authority to impose discipline for violation of oath or duties defined by other statutes. Accordingly, charge of violating section 6103 or finding that attorney has committed misconduct thereunder is redundant and adds nothing to charges otherwise pending. Charge of violating section 6103 "oath and duties" does not put respondent on notice of any particular misconduct without reference to other statutes defining the particular duty allegedly violated. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [7]

In matter charging attorney with filing false declaration and assisting in preparation of fraudulent documents, hearing referee's conclusions that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold the law (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068(a)) and statute regarding attorneys' violations of their oath and duties (id., § 6103) were inappropriate. Section 6068(a) charge was duplicative since same misconduct was charged as violation of specific Rule of Professional Conduct. Section 6103 does not define a duty or obligation, but rather provides grounds for discipline for violation of an oath or duty defined elsewhere. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [3]

Section 6103 is not a charging provision, but rather provides that violation of a duty defined elsewhere is grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [10]

Accepting fees for services rendered while suspended from practice does not violate sections 6068(a) or 6103. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [7]

Where the notice to show cause did not allege a violation of the Penal Code, the alleged violations of sections 6068(a) and 6103 could not be construed as putting the attorney on notice of a possible Penal Code violation. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [2]

The Supreme Court has unequivocally rejected section 6103 as a basis for culpability. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19. [4]

Business and Professions Code section 6103 does not define a duty or obligation of an attorney, but provides only that violation of an attorney's oath or duties defined elsewhere is a ground for discipline. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5]

220.11 Found

220.15 Not Found

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 19.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

220.20 Section 6103.5 (communicate settlement offer to client)

Even though respondent did not promptly communicate, to her client, the terms and conditions of settlement offer in letter respondent received from opposing counsel, respondent was not culpable of violating statute requiring attorneys to promptly communicate such information to their clients because opposing counsel sent a copy of letter to respondent's client, which client received. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [4 a-b]

220.21 Found

220.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

220.26 Section 6103.6 (violation of Probation Code)

220.27 Found

220.28 Not Found

Note: For section 6103.7, see topic number 220.50 below.

220.30 Section 6104 (appearing without authority)

Filing a complaint with a superior court constitutes an appearance within the meaning of Business and Professions Code section 6104. Similarly, respondent's filing of a notice of appeal initiated an appellate proceeding in the same way a complaint would initiate litigation. Furthermore, respondent's numerous extension requests to file an opening brief were associated with the perfection of the filing of an appeal, and each request constituted an appearance before the court. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [1]

Where respondent's clients decisively terminated his authority to pursue an appeal by expressly telling him in correspondence that they no longer wished the appeal pursued and where respondent thereafter filed requests for extensions and an appellate opening brief, the fact that respondent initially received authorization to initiate the appellate action did not insulate him from culpability for violating Business and Professions Code section 6104. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [2 a–c]

Respondent's duty under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 3–700(A)(2) to not withdraw from employment until reasonable steps are taken to avoid foreseeable client prejudice did not exonerate respondent from culpability under Business and Professions Code section 6104 for his continued appearances on behalf of his clients after the clients had discharged him. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [3]

Well-established definitions of "appearing" apply to the construction of section 6104 of the Business and Professions Code. For the purposes of jurisdiction, a defendant appears by answering or demurring to a complaint, by filing a notice of a motion to strike or transfer or by giving a plaintiff written notice of appearance. Also, an appearance occurs if the defendant or defendant's attorney participates in a trial or in a hearing on a motion or an order to show cause. Respondent's firm performed the following legal services for the client after respondent reviewed the letter terminating his services: review motion to compel, preparation of a letter to the client, telephone conversations with the client and with opposing counsel, research, preparation of a response to the motion to compel, preparation of a letter to the client about a status conference, and the preparation and filing of a substitution of attorney. There was not clear and convincing evidence that the preceding services amounted to "appearing" within the meaning of section 6104. Section 6104 does not prohibit legal services related to a possible appearance. It prohibits an actual appearance which is wilful or corrupt and without authority. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. [2]

A respondent who, without authority, wrote to an insurance carrier claiming that he represented a client is not culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6104. Such conduct does not constitute an "appearance" within the meaning of section 6104 which provides for discipline for "[c]orruptly or willfully and without authority appearing as attorney for a party to an action or proceeding." In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [2]

Where an attorney had been suspended from practice and had been contacted by new counsel retained by his former client, the attorney's subsequent negotiation with an insurance company on the client's behalf without the new counsel's consent constituted unauthorized practice of law and violated the statute prohibiting attorneys from appearing without authority. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Requiring a suspended attorney to comply with the statutory prohibition against appearing as attorney for a party without authority would not necessitate the attorney's continued practice of law. The attorney can comply with the unauthorized appearance statute by not practicing while suspended. Accordingly, an suspended attorney who wilfully filed a lawsuit on behalf of a client without her authority could be found culpable of violating the statute. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [20]

An attorney who receives a medical payment draft made payable to the client, simulates the client's signature on the draft, and deposits it in the attorney's trust account does not thereby corruptly or wilfully and without authority appear as attorney for a party to an action or proceeding. Merely signing the back of a check does not constitute an appearance. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [8]

220.31 Found

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

220.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

220.40 Section 6105 (lending name for use by non-attorney)

Where respondent was found culpable of aiding the unauthorized practice of law, in violation of rule 1-300(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and charges that respondent lent his name for use by non-attorneys, in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6105, were based entirely on same facts, section 6105 charges were duplicative. In the Matter of Huang(Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [4]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

220.41 Found

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

220.45 Not Found

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

220.50 Section 6103.7 (reporting suspected immigration status)

220.51 Found

220.55 Not Found

221.00 Section 6106 (moral turpitude, corruption, dishonesty)

For purposes of rule 9.20 of California Rules of Court, requiring attorneys to give advance notice of impending disciplinary suspension, notice is required for all cases pending as of filing date of suspension order, not effective date. Where respondent's declaration of compliance with rule 9.20 stated that respondent had given required notice in all cases pending as of suspension order's filing date, but State Bar alleged that respondent failed to do so in one client matter, respondent's having given informal notice of impending suspension and having substituted out of case prior to suspension order's effective date was not a defense. Notice of disciplinary charges thus properly alleged both violation of rule 9.20 and act of moral turpitude in filing false declaration. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [2 a, b]

Respondent was culpable of moral turpitude for noncompliance with court orders and serious and habitual abuse of the judicial system where he acted with "unclean hands" in suing his neighbors without attempting informal resolution, sought to use the judicial system as a weapon to inflict onerous litigation costs on neighbors for his own benefit, abused the judicial system in bringing at least 16 meritless appeals, and acted in bad faith for years by disregarding a vexatious litigant pre-filing order and pursuing his property interests in the guise of being plaintiff's counsel rather than the plaintiff. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [2]

Where an attorney knowingly converts client funds for his or her own purpose, the attorney clearly violates section 6106. Respondent's defense that he was entitled to CTA funds as compensation for post-judgment legal services lacked merit where the contingency fee agreement did not provide for compensation for these services, and the client did not otherwise agree to pay it. Likewise, respondent's claim that the withdrawals from the CTA were temporary loans lacked merit because he never obtained his client's consent to withdraw the money as loans or for any other reason. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [1 a-c]

Attorney who charged illegal fees in mortgage loan modification matters did not commit acts of moral turpitude. At most, attorney negligently breached agreements but did not make intentional misrepresentations or misappropriate client funds. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [5]

Attorney committed an act involving moral turpitude when he wrote several checks from a personal account to a client when he knew or should have known the bank would not honor them. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [1]

Attorney committed acts involving moral turpitude when he orally misrepresented case status to clients and sent them letters that omitted critical information the clients were entitled to know. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [3a,b]

Attorney committed act involving moral turpitude when he persuaded a client to pay him $68,500 by falsely stating he had settled the client's defense case for that amount. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [5]

Attorney committed act involving moral turpitude when he signed, or caused to be signed, his client's name to a forbearance agreement without the client's knowledge or consent. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [6]

Attorney committed acts involving moral turpitude by issuing five checks when he knew or should have known his account was negative. Since each check was made in an amount equal to his account overdraft protection limit and the account balance was negative when each check was written and presented for payment, the attorney could not reasonably expect his bank would honor any of the checks. Overdraft protection is not a substitute for the proper handling of client money and will not relieve an attorney from unethical conduct that caused the overdraft. Excessive use of overdraft protection is improper in any account for the purpose of covering checks paid to or on behalf of clients. The purpose of overdraft protection is to avoid harm to the client for an occasional shortfall in funds due to bank errors or delay in processing funds. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [7 a-e]

Prosecutors have a duty under California and federal law to disclose exculpatory materials after trial, including in habeas corpus proceedings. Attorney committed an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty when he intentionally concealed the statement and whereabouts of a favorable witness in a habeas corpus proceeding. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [2 a, b]

Attorney's violation of a judge's explicit instruction is an act of disrespect to the court. Further, where an attorney intentionally does not keep his promise to a judge, he is culpable of an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [5]

Where attorney suppressed evidence by intentionally failing to voluntarily disclose a defendant's jail interview, such conduct was dishonest and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [7]

Attorney committed an act of moral turpitude when he intentionally argued the consequences of a sexually violent predator finding in his closing argument to a jury in violation of California law and an in limine order. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [9]

Where respondent falsely represented to civil trial judge that his verdict was within the court's instructions and the trial evidence, respondent's deceit to the judge during questioning of him regarding his verdict was most certainly an act of moral turpitude and reprehensible conduct for an attorney. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [3]

Respondent ignored his role as a fiduciary to one client when, while negotiating the transfer of her real property to his other client, he failed to advise her that she would no longer have any right, title, or interest in the property, that she remained on the deed of trust placing her at risk of having to pay the mortgage upon default in the mortgage payments or recordation of the grant deed, or that she would continue to receive the tax bills. At best, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to disclose the terms of the sale and the pros and cons of the transactions to his client, and at worst, respondent intentionally concealed the information to the advantage of his other client and his son. Respondent exploited his superior knowledge and position of trust to the detriment of his vulnerable client, which constituted an act or moral turpitude. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [2 a–b]

In addition to the fiduciary duty to fully inform his client about the sale of her condominium, respondent breached correlative fiduciary duties to adequately document the terms of the sale in a manner reasonably calculated for the client to understand, to advise his client that she should consult another attorney, or to disclose the serious conflicts in representing both parties to the transfer transaction. Respondent's conduct constituted overreaching, and as a result of his multiple conflicts, he gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to his client. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [3 a–c]

Although it is not inherently wrong for an attorney to communicate with an opposing party not represented by counsel, where an attorney instigates a conversation with an adverse party under false pretenses, secretly tape–records the conversation and thereafter lies about the surreptitious recording during litigation, the attorney is culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [1]

Where respondent had actual knowledge that the court required her to continue to appear on behalf of her indigent clients at their upcoming hearings and where respondent expressly declined to proceed as ordered, respondent's disobedience was willful and constituted a violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

Where respondent's clients had English language limitations and where respondent used technical legalese in his engagement agreements in an effort to exempt himself from providing any service of consequence to his clients, respondent's exploitation of his superior knowledge and position of trust to the detriment of his vulnerable clients was evidence of overreaching that constituted moral turpitude forming the basis for additional uncharged misconduct in aggravation. In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [7]

Moral turpitude includes creating a false impression by concealment as well as affirmative misrepresentations. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [6]

Where respondent filed a motion with the Court of Appeal misrepresenting that his clients wanted to pursue an appeal and where respondent failed to disclose to the Court of Appeal that he had been fired, respondent's actions violated Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d) as well as section 6106. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [6 a–c]

Where respondent demanded a modification of an oral contingent fee agreement in a manner that was abusive of his client due to the timing of and circumstances surrounding the demand, the demand of a modification constituted a coercive act involving moral turpitude. Moreover, moral turpitude was involved even if respondent did not intend the demand to be abusive, since respondent was at least grossly negligent in timing the demand and respondent's fiduciary duties to a client were involved. In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829. [2a–d]

Where respondent elicited an incriminating statement from an individual who was incarcerated and awaiting the appeal of his confession to the police and where respondent was an experienced criminal attorney who knew that the incriminating statement could be used as evidence at re–trial, respondent's overreaching was the height of irresponsibility and constituted at least gross neglect establishing a basis for a finding of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [4]

Where respondent was aware that a witness's attorneys objected to his cooperation with respondent, where respondent circumvented their objections and ultimately convinced the witness to reject his attorneys' advice, and where there is no evidence that the witness gave a knowing and intelligent waiver of his right to counsel, respondent committed misconduct involving moral turpitude by allowing the witness to act as his own counsel. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [5]

Respondent was culpable of moral turpitude when he made misleading statements in order to induce a witness to sign a confession. Respondent was, at best, grossly negligent in not fully explaining to a witness the consequences of his cooperation. A finding of gross negligence in creating a false impression is sufficient for violation of section 6106. Acts of moral turpitude include concealment as well as affirmative misrepresentations and no distinction can be drawn among concealment, half–truth, and false statement of fact. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [6]

Respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by knowingly making repeated misrepresentations to the Superior Court when they submitted numerous pleadings for filing that were permeated with half–truths, omissions, and outright misstatements of fact and law. Respondents' misconduct was compounded by the fact that they signed many of their pleadings under penalty of perjury which should have put reasonable persons on notice to ensure their pleadings were accurate, complete and true. Because respondents' misleading statements to the court were not the result of mere carelessness but were intended to secure an advantage in litigation, respondents' misconduct reflected a disregard of their duty to adhere to the requirements of the law and professional responsibilities as officers of the court and constituted evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [1 a–c]

The review department concluded that respondent's failure to update her moral character application to disclose misdemeanor charges did not involve moral turpitude where (1) the hearing judge (and review department) gave credibility to respondent's testimony of innocent mistake and no intent to mislead the Committee of Bar Examiners; (2) respondent disclosed other litigated matters, including those involving her former husband; (3) the non–disclosed charges took place 10 or 11 months after the submission of the moral character application; and (4) the review department agreed with the hearing judge that respondent could not have reasonably believed that the disclosure of the misdemeanor charges of a domestic dispute, combined with all other information in the application, was crucial and would adversely affect her admission to practice law. In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746. [3a–c]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. This duty is nondelegable. The law is clear that where an attorney's fiduciary obligations are involved, particularly trust account duties, a finding of gross negligence will support a charge of violating section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code. Respondent gave control of her trust account to her bookkeeper and then failed to supervise the management of the account or to examine the bank statements or other records. The result was the theft of $1.7 million. Any procedure so lax as to produce that result was grossly negligent. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [2 a, b]

Once respondent deposited insurance settlement check that was made payable to his corporate client into his client trust account, he had a fiduciary duty to protect the settlement funds on behalf of all the members of the corporation's board of directors regardless of whether he considered them authorized to act on corporation's behalf. Respondent willfully misappropriated $50,000 of those funds when he disbursed $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors as he knew of intractable dispute between president and other three directors over control of the corporation and corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. Respondent's misappropriation involved moral turpitude.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [3 a-c]

When respondent, without the knowledge or consent of all of the directors, withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate settlement funds as his attorney's fees for representing the corporation in bankruptcy proceeding, he knowingly and intentionally misappropriated the $29,875.89 for his own purpose without an honest belief in his right to those funds because (1) he knew a majority of directors vigorously disputed his right to represent corporation and to incur legal fees; (2) he knew president could authorize payment of only $100 of respondent's fees; (3) he acknowledged, under penalty of perjury in a bankruptcy court declaration, he did not have right to withdraw fees from trust account without court's approval; yet, there is no evidence respondent ever obtained such court approval before paying himself; (4) he deceived and misled corporation's chairman and his legal counsel about existence and location of insurance settlement funds; (5) he refused to provide records of settlement check and funds to State Bar. Respondent's knowing and intentional misappropriation of $29,875.89 involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [4 a-d]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Misrepresentations in an attorney's verified answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar, is a serious aggravation warranting increased discipline and might well constitute a greater offense than underlying misconduct. It is no defense that attorney's answers were prepared for him by his counsel. While it might be improper to penalize a lay client for not correcting mistakes that his counsel made in a pleading that the client verified, such reasoning carries little weight when the client is an attorney.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [26 a-c]

Respondent committed acts involving moral turpitude where, in borrowing money from clients, he repeatedly misrepresented to the clients his business situation, his financial situation, and his ability to repay the loans. Notwithstanding respondent's argument on review that his inability to repay the loans to his clients did not constitute any ethical violation, the review department found respondent culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106 based on respondent's misrepresentations.In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [2 a-f]

While moral turpitude generally requires a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, or willfulness, the law is clear that where an attorney's fiduciary obligations are involved, particularly trust account duties, a finding of gross negligence will support such a charge.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [3]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Where there was ample evidence demonstrating respondent's violation of his fiduciary duty to his client, arising from the unfairness of the manner in which his residential real property was sold to his client, and that the transaction was, at least in part, for his own benefit, respondent was culpable of committing an act involving moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106.In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [2]

Respondent was culpable of an act involving moral turpitude in permitting his office to provide a copy of his client's confidential settlement agreement to a third party. The disclosure of the terms of that agreement placed the client at risk of action by the other party to the settlement agreement, and the sole purpose of providing the third party with information concerning the client's settlement was to aid respondent. In placing his interests above those of his client, respondent violated Business and Professions Code section 6106.In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [4]

Respondent's false statement in response to the State Bar's investigative letter, combined with respondent's ambiguous statement on a similar subject in response to the same letter, showed an intent to mislead the investigator. Such a deliberate attempt to mislead a State Bar investigation constitutes an act involving moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106.In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [5a,b]

Although respondent's conduct in the sale of residential real property to his client involved moral turpitude, it was not shown by clear and convincing evidence to have been either intentionally dishonest or venal; there was potential for benefits to the client; and it was impossible to allocate responsibility for the client's loss between respondent, who acted at least partially for his own benefit, and the client, who failed to act responsibly. Under these circumstances, restitution to the client was not recommended.In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [8a,b]

Respondent was culpable of committing an act involving moral turpitude where respondent, acting as a general partner of a California limited partnership, misappropriated a limited partner's share of distribution funds, which act was also a breach of respondent's fiduciary duties to the limited partner.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [2]

Disbarment was not warranted for misappropriation of over $20,000 where the matter appeared to have been an aberrational, isolated instance of misconduct, respondent had no prior record of discipline in over 40 years of practice, and respondent presented evidence of good character and community service.In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [8]

Because attorney's act of borrowing money without intending to repay it involves dishonesty and moral turpitude as a matter of law, State Bar need only prove that attorney borrowed money without intending to repay it to establish that attorney violated statutory duty not to engage in acts of dishonesty or involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[4]

Regardless of whether amount of money is small, act of borrowing money without intending to repay it is dishonest and involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[5]

Intent to repay debt requires some factual underpinning that would lead person to a degree of certainty that he or she would have ability to repay. Mere hope and unrealistic or speculative sources of income are insufficient. This is particularly true where respondent obtained large cash advances on the same day he was repaying gambling debts in the form of casino markers. And it is particularly true where respondent did not proffer any documentary evidence to support his claims that he was an experienced and successful or winning blackjack player. Moreover, in light of the fact that respondent never kept any records of his gambling winnings and losses, any hope of repaying any portion of his credit card debts with gambling winnings was unreasonable. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[6]

Hearing judge's findings that attorney incurred credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them and thereby committed acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude were supported by clear and convincing circumstantial evidence where, despite his meager and unpredictable income, and monthly living expenses in excess of $2,200, respondent continued to obtain cash advances totaling $32,054 on his four credit cards in the face of staggering gambling losses and lack of adequate liquid assets to repay his debts. Respondent could not have possibly have failed to perceive the hopelessness of repaying his mounting cash advances in the face of his gambling losses and lack of assets and current income. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[7]

In its answers to the special findings in a prior civil proceeding against respondent, the jury found that respondent was liable to the plaintiff on the plaintiff's claims for, among other things, breach of fiduciary duty and fraud. In a separate special finding on the issues of malice, oppression, and fraud, the jury found by clear and convincing evidence that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." The use of the disjunctive conjunction "or" in the phrase "malice, oppression or fraud," precluded the review department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof. And the use of the disjunctive correlative conjunction "either . . . or" in the phrase "finding of liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud" precluded the Review Department from determining whether the jury found that respondent was guilty of "malice, oppression or fraud" when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both. Nonetheless, regardless of whether the jury based its answer against respondent on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding on a finding that respondent was guilty of malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof when he breached his fiduciary duty to the plaintiff, when he defrauded the plaintiff, or both, the jury's answer against him on the malice, oppression, and fraud special finding established, under collateral estoppel principles, that he committed acts involving moral turpitude in violation of statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude, but did not establish the nature and extent of those acts. An attorney who breaches a fiduciary duty (whether to a client or non-client) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law. Similarly, an attorney who commits an act of fraud (whether in the capacity as of an attorney or not) with malice, oppression, fraud, or some combination thereof, as those terms were defined for the jury, commits an act of moral turpitude as a matter of law.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [6 a-f]

Respondent committed an act of moral turpitude by signing his client's name to a declaration under penalty of perjury without her approval or without her even seeing the declaration in advance. Even if he had the client's authority to sign her name to the declaration, respondent would still be culpable of moral turpitude. Respondent's acts, particularly if it was determined that the client had not agreed to the text of the declaration he had prepared in her name, could have resulted in his prosecution for forgery, a crime involving moral turpitude.In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [1 a, b]

Respondent's production of verifications purporting to bear his client's signature but which were signed by a manipulated means involved dishonesty, an aggravating circumstance. Respondent engaged in moral turpitude whether he was grossly negligent in offering the verifications as signed by his client or prepared them intentionally to mislead. Although there is no direct evidence that respondent personally simulated his client's signature, he offered the documents to exculpate himself and he must bear responsibility for their altered nature.In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [5]

Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (d) requires attorneys to refrain from misleading and deceptive acts without qualification. An attorney need not utter an affirmative falsehood in order to violate section 6068, subdivision (d). Concealment of a material fact misleads a judge just as effectively as a false statement. No distinction can therefore be drawn among concealment, half-truth, and false statement of fact. Respondent's unqualified and unequivocal statements to the judges that he served John under circumstances that should have caused him at least some uncertainty were, at a minimum, deceptive, in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 6068, subdivision (d) and 6106.In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.[3]

The Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f) charge based on respondent's offensive discovery requests is duplicative of the Business and Professions Code section 6106 charge based on the same conduct. It is insufficient for culpability that the section 6068, subdivision (f) charge reflects the additional harm that respondent has caused to the administration of justice and to the right of the plaintiff, respondent's former client, to seek redress in the courts. Culpability of misconduct is determined by whether an attorney has violated the Rules of Professional Conduct, a disciplinable provision of the State Bar Act or other disciplinable provision of law. Harm or lack thereof is an aggravating circumstance.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Respondent failed to seek approval for his fees in a workers' compensation matter as required by the Labor Code and withheld it for a two-year period. Respondent was thus culpable of charging an illegal fee in violation of rule 4-200(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Given the length of the rule 4-200(A) violation, the review department also found that such conduct was at least gross negligence and therefore involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [3]

Respondent's contention that he should not be found culpable of failing to use truthful means in a civil complaint he filed because his statements contained in an initial pleading were rejected. The State Bar Act makes any act of dishonesty or misleading of a court to be disciplinable.In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [4]

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent's many ethical violations featured harm to victims and the honest administration of justice. Offenses concerning the administration of justice have been considered as very serious by the Supreme Court. Disbarment is not reserved just for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor is respondent's complete lack of insight, recognition, or remorse for any of his wrongdoing. This factor makes disbarment appropriate despite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.[5]

Respondent engaged in an act involving moral turpitude when she had client sign blank pleading forms and then later completed the forms and filed them as having been executed under penalty of perjury without first confirming the accuracy of the information with client. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [1 a-b]

Disciplinary rules governing legal profession cannot punish activity protected by First Amendment, but neither false statements made knowingly nor false statements made with reckless disregard for truth are protected by First Amendment. Thus, because respondent's statements in pleadings, which she filed in superior court action and this disciplinary action, that her opposing counsel in superior court action was "well-known racist," "champion of the Emeryville pedophile ring," "operated by organized crime," "intent upon avoiding his own criminal indictment," and "motivated by racial hatred," and described young children as "niggers, hood and scums" were proved false at trial; because those statements were not mere rhetorical hyperbole, incapable of being proved true or false; and because respondent either knew statements were false or made them with reckless disregard of truth as there was no objective evidence that statements were true, hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of violating professional rules requiring attorneys to employ only such means as are consistent with truth and not to seek to mislead courts and judicial officers as well as statute proscribing acts involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [2 a-i]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge expressly found that respondent's violation of statute and rule of professional conduct was based on respondent's gross negligence, she inexplicably declined to apply that gross negligence to find that respondent's conduct involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prescribing attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding moral turpitude. Accordingly, review department independently found respondent culpable of act involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [2]

Respondent wilfully violated section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code by conditioning repayment of fees on the withdrawal of a client's State Bar complaint against him. The withdrawal of the complaint would not have prevented the State Bar from pursuing a disciplinary proceeding against respondent and there was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent knew the clients were entitled to a refund. However, in response to respondent's letter explaining the agreement with the client, a State Bar investigator warned him that attempting to induce the withdrawal of a State Bar complaint involved moral turpitude. Despite the warning, respondent refunded the fees and advanced costs, but the letter accompanying the refund did not inform the client of the investigator's warning or mention any change in the agreement between respondent and the client. After receiving the refunds, the clients withdrew their petition with a local bar association to arbitrate their fee dispute with respondent. Under these circumstances, respondent's attempt to thwart the disciplinary process involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. [5]

Respondent repeatedly used his client trust accounts for personal expenses and repeatedly wrote NSF checks. He made no effort to determine his responsibilities relating to his trust account, nor did he exercise any effort to determine the balance in the trust accounts, maintain a ledger, or even determine that, in fact, deposits had been made to the trust account. Such a total abdication of responsibility can be attributed to no less than gross negligence and constitutes moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [2]

A client may be billed the reasonable cost a firm itself incurs, but no more, for in-house costs such as photocopying, couriers, or meals eaten while working on a client's case. It appears that charging a flat periodic fee or lump sum to cover disbursements is permissible in any particular case if it does not result in an unreasonable amount of compensation and if the client has given informed consent to the arrangement. Respondent's collection of estimated lump sum costs was not an act involving moral turpitude as there was no evidence that costs were excessive or that respondent hid his lump sum costs reimbursement procedures from his client. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [3]

Respondent's practice of orally authorizing his staff to sign his name to declarations made under the penalty of perjury without disclosing, on the declaration, the fact that they were signing the declaration with respondent's permission or at his direction was misleading and inappropriate and thus was aggravation. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [8]

Considering that respondent treated a significant amount of his client's money as a ready pool to further his and his wife's forays into championship horse breeding and realty acquisition, there was little difference for moral turpitude purposes between this case and the traditional trust funds wilful misappropriation cases. Moral turpitude has been defined as an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellowmen, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. This case meets that definition without doubt. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [3]

Respondent's failure to control his law practice amounted to moral turpitude where he let a nonlawyer take over much of his practice, sign client trust account checks, and handle all financial records without proper supervision; where he took no decisive steps to stop the nonlawyer from telling clients and others that the nonlawyer was his partner; where his detachment enabled the nonlawyer to engage in extensive dishonesty and theft; and where, after the nonlawyer confessed to embezzlement, he did not report the nonlawyer to the authorities, fire the nonlawyer, or (at the very least) stop the nonlawyer's handling of his bank accounts so to protect his client's funds from further theft. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [1]

A pattern of misconduct may be found even though the acts and omissions encompass a wide range of improper behavior. Respondent's numerous acts of neglect extended over a long period of time, 10 years, indicating a continuous course of professional misconduct. It continued even after respondent attempted to address his case management problems by hiring a management consultant and after the State Bar contacted him about client complaints. Even though none of this neglect entailed dishonesty or false statement, the review department concluded that respondent habitually disregarded his client's interests and failed to communicate with them and, therefore, committed acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [10]

Even though none of respondent's individual acts of misconduct involved dishonesty, concealment, or mishandling of client funds and even though respondent had no prior record of discipline over a lengthy practice, respondent's disbarment was warranted as consistent with past case law and the standards for attorney discipline for respondent's panoply of protracted failure to communicate with clients, incompetent practice, and failure to supervise subordinate staff affecting many different clients over a 10-year period. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [11]

Respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude where he both knew that he was abdicating his responsibilities as an attorney and acted purposefully in allowing a non-lawyer to engage in activities constituting the practice of law. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [4]

Where respondent misled client into believing that he was working on her case when he was on administrative suspension for failing to pay his State Bar dues, he improperly held himself out as entitled to practice law in violation of Business and Professions Code section proscribing acts of moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [2]

Even if an attorney returns money that he or she misappropriates, the attorney is still be culpable of the original misappropriation. Thus, restitution is not a defense to a misappropriation charge. Rather, it is a mitigating circumstance that could possibly support a reduction in the discipline. Respondent had the burden of proving mitigating circumstances, including restitution. Where there was no evidence that respondent paid the money back, he did not meet his burden of proving that restitution had been paid. Under these circumstances, restitution was an appropriate component of the discipline. In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541. [1]

Misappropriation of client funds is a grievous breach of an attorney's ethical responsibilities, and generally warrants disbarment unless the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. Respondent bears the burden of proving mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent did not meet that burden, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [1]

Gross negligence or recklessness by an attorney in discharging fiduciary duties involves moral turpitude. Respondent displayed recklessness constituting moral turpitude where his failure to supervise staff for whom he was responsible resulted in the settlement of a client's matter without the client's knowledge or consent, the forging of the client's signature on the release and the settlement check, and the failure to distribute the client's share of the settlement funds to the client. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [5]

Respondent's endorsement of a client's false financial statement and misrepresentation that one of a client's companies was a successful business were willful violations of his duty to employ only such means as are consistent with the truth when representing clients, and were dishonest acts involving moral turpitude. However, to the extent that the facts underlying both violations were the same, the review department gave no additional weight to the duplication in determining discipline. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [1]

Respondent committed acts involving moral turpitude when he filed and knowingly maintained a client's meritless bankruptcy proceeding in bad faith. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [5]

An attorney's practice of issuing checks which he knows will not be honored violates the fundamental rule of ethics--that of common honesty--without which the profession is worse than valueless in the place it holds in the administration of justice. Such conduct involves moral turpitude. Nevertheless, a justifiable and reasonable belief that a check will be honored is a defense to this charge. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [3]

An attorney's failure to repay borrowed money, even if the attorney had funds to pay at least part of the money, without more, does not amount to moral turpitude. However, the failure to pay at least part of the money owed under these circumstances is a factor in aggravation as a demonstrated indifference toward rectification and atonement for respondent's misconduct. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [4]

In broad terms, any act contrary to honesty and good morals involves moral turpitude. Although an evil intent is not necessary for moral turpitude, some level of guilty knowledge or at least gross negligence is required. Where respondent's failure to comply with a court order was either intentional or grossly negligent, this failure involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [7]

An attorney's habitual disregard of clients' interests involves moral turpitude even if such disregard results only from carelessness or gross negligence. Where respondent recklessly or repeatedly failed to provide competent legal services in seven matters and failed to return files properly to clients in four matters, these failures together constituted habitual disregard of clients' interests and amounted to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [8]

Where the notice to show cause did not charge respondent with committing acts of moral turpitude on account of a violation of fiduciary duty, but did charge respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court, and the hearing judge and the parties understood that the charged moral turpitude violation was based on the misrepresentation, the review department declined the State Bar's request, made for the first time on review, that it find moral turpitude based on respondent's breach of fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Where notice to show cause charged respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court by filing an erroneous pleading, and where respondent consistently asserted that he did not intend to deceive the court and that the erroneous pleading resulted from his inadvertence, but where filing of misleading pleading did not result from single isolated instance of negligence, but from grossly negligent handling of entire matter to which pleading related, respondent could be found culpable of an act of moral turpitude due to his gross neglect in filing the pleading. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

Where respondent's entire course of conduct in handling his duties as the trustee of a testamentary trust amounted to a reckless failure to perform services competently, but the review department considered much of the same misconduct in reaching its conclusion that respondent committed moral turpitude through gross negligence in handling his duties as trustee, the failure to perform competently was given minimal weight as an aggravating circumstance in determining the appropriate discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [6]

Improper business transactions with clients have resulted in discipline ranging from reproval to suspension. Where, despite respondent's asserted intent to advance interests of beneficiaries of trust of which respondent was trustee, respondent realized significant benefits from improper loans from trust to himself, and where respondent also was grossly negligent in handling his duties as trustee, in view of the seriousness of respondent's misconduct, and comparable case law, the review department recommended three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and 60 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Disbelief of a respondent's testimony does not create evidence to the contrary. Where respondent allegedly misrepresented to insurer that respondent's personal bank account was a client trust account, but only evidence to rebut respondent's testimony to contrary was notation in insurer's records, presence of such notation was not sufficient to establish that it resulted from misrepresentation by respondent, even where hearing judge found respondent not credible. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [2]

Where client gave written authorization to respondent to apply portion of client's net settlement proceeds to outstanding legal fees client owed respondent on prior case, respondent was not required to prove existence of prior case to establish entitlement to funds applied to fees. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [3]

Fact that attorney obtained loan from client improperly, in violation of rule governing business transactions with clients, did not automatically convert attorney's acquisition of loan funds into misappropriation, and did not invalidate underlying loan transaction. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [11]

Attorney's failure to repay loan from client did not constitute theft, but did aggravate harm already suffered by client. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [12]

Where respondent, as attorney and close family member of client, exploited superior knowledge and position of trust to detriment of vulnerable client in obtaining loan from client with grossly unfair provisions, attorney's overreaching constituted act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [13]

Dishonest acts by an attorney are grounds for suspension or disbarment even if no harm results. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [4]

Statute prohibiting attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude applies to misrepresentation and concealment of material facts. An attorney has a duty under statute and ethics rule never to seek to mislead a judge and acting otherwise constitutes moral turpitude and warrants discipline. Thus, respondent's intentional, material misrepresentation to a settlement conference judge was an act of moral turpitude. Nevertheless, where same misconduct underlay both finding of moral turpitude and findings of violation of statute and rule prohibiting misleading courts, misconduct was treated as single violation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [5]

An attorney's disobedience of a court order involves moral turpitude for disciplinary purposes only if the attorney acted in either objective or subjective bad faith. Review department declined to find respondent culpable of moral turpitude for failure to appear as ordered at settlement conference, where such culpability was argued for first time on review, notice to show cause did not allege that failure to appear was in bad faith, and hearing judge made no findings regarding respondent's objective or subjective bad faith in failing to obey order to appear. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [6]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

Acts of moral turpitude are those done contrary to honesty and good morals and are a cause for discipline whether or not they are committed in the practice of law. Even if individual acts do not involve moral turpitude, a pattern of misconduct may amount to moral turpitude. Where respondent repeatedly misstated facts and failed to reveal prior adverse rulings to trial and appellate courts, failed to follow court rules, and flouted the authority of the courts, such serious, habitual abuse of the judicial system constituted moral turpitude. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [5]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Where hearing judge found that respondent discussed borrowing client's entrusted funds with client, but intentionally did so in vague terms, and that client's consent to respondent's use of funds was not knowing or intelligent, and review department concluded that at most, client had consented to some use of funds to be agreed upon in future, respondent had neither reasonable nor honest belief in right to use client's funds, and respondent's misappropriation of such funds involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [1]

Attorney disciplinary proceedings are not decided on principles of contract law, but where, due to vagueness of terms of purported agreement allowing attorney to use client's funds, contract law principles would not permit court to find any binding contract, such purported agreement could not provide defense to charges of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [2]

Where respondent had good faith but unreasonable belief that he had permission from clients' medical provider to use medical lien funds indefinitely, record did not establish that respondent misappropriated such funds, but due to respondent's abdication of his duty to supervise personal injury cases and reckless disregard of trust account obligations, respondent's mishandling of trust funds amounted to violation of statute providing that acts of moral turpitude are grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [1]

Where respondent's failure to supervise his personal injury practice and fulfill trust fund responsibilities was so remiss as to be reckless, and his mismanagement of his trust account included repeated failure to provide competent legal services by promptly paying medical liens, respondent violated rule regarding reckless or repeated failure to perform competently. However, where misconduct forming basis for such violation also underlay charge of moral turpitude supporting identical or greater discipline, review department gave violation of competence rule no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [2]

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

Review department's review of record is independent, and it may draw its own conclusions from record whether or not a party has requested it to do so. Where hearing judge's conclusion that respondent had committed act of moral turpitude was difficult to reconcile with judge's conclusion as to appropriate discipline, it was appropriate for review department to give particular scrutiny to culpability conclusion as well as degree of discipline, even though respondent had not requested review of moral turpitude conclusion. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

Where respondent did not intend to deliberately defy a court order and did not have any dishonest or wrongful intent, and where respondent's improper conduct was based on beliefs and understandings which, although not only mistaken but also objectively unreasonable, were honestly held, respondent did not commit acts involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

Where respondent, knowing that his client had stopped paying child support and intended to move with the express purpose of avoiding complying with a child support order, provided the client with affirmative help in moving, these facts demonstrated that respondent acted in conscious disregard of his obligation to uphold the law, and his misconduct therefore involved moral turpitude despite his lack of specific intent to help the client avoid the support order. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [6]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

Where respondent filed a foreclosure suit in good faith against persons whom he was representing in another lawsuit, his violation of his fiduciary duties under the rule governing adverse interests to clients did not constitute a per se violation of the statute regarding acts of moral turpitude or dishonesty by attorneys. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [6]

Where respondents made a shared decision to operate a distant branch office using non-lawyer independent contractors paid in cash to sign up clients, respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by violating the client solicitation rules and conspiring to violate such rules; their involvement in repeated client solicitation constituted "corruption" within the meaning of the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [13]

Unlike the statute regarding violations of an attorney's oath and duties, which has been construed only to state a sanction and not to proscribe conduct, the statute regarding conduct by attorneys which involves moral turpitude, corruption or dishonesty has been construed so as to permit violations thereof to be charged and proved. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [4]

Where, after receiving medical payments advanced by his personal injury client's first-party insurer, respondent misappropriated the funds; failed to apprise his client that the first-party insurer was subrogated to the client's recovery against the other driver; failed to ensure that the first-party insurer was reimbursed from the ultimate settlement; failed to deduct the subrogation amount from the settlement in calculating his fee, and failed to refund the resulting excess fee for three years after the client demanded the refund, respondent violated the statute prohibiting moral turpitude and dishonesty and the rule regarding prompt payment of client funds on demand. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [10]

Where an attorney failed to advise a client, the insurer-defendant or the superior court in which the client's lawsuit was filed of his disciplinary suspension, but filed an affidavit with the Supreme Court declaring under penalty of perjury that he had complied with the rule requiring him to notify all clients, courts, and opposing parties of his suspension, his false affidavit constituted an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty, and his failure to comply with the rule violated the statute requiring respect for courts and judges. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [2]

Where respondent represented to a judge that he had failed to attend an earlier hearing because he had been in another city appearing before another judge in a family law matter, when in fact he had had no court appearance but had been in the other courthouse on other errands, his statement was materially dishonest, because the proffered excuse was intended to carry more weight than the truth would have. Respondent's deception therefore constituted an act of dishonesty in violation of the moral turpitude statute, as well as a violation of the statute and rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from misleading judicial officers. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [2]

Where respondent honestly believed that he was entitled to retain portions of his clients' cost advances, even though this belief was unreasonable and unsubstantiated, respondent's retention of the funds did not necessarily warrant a conclusion that his conduct was dishonest, especially where respondent's gross negligence in handling the same funds had already been held to violate the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [5]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

Where respondent had been ordered to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension and to file affidavit of compliance with such order, and respondent failed to give timely notice and failed to notify opposing counsel in three matters, and respondent's affidavit of compliance was filed late and incorrectly stated that all courts and opposing counsel had been notified of his suspension, respondent's gross neglect and lack of diligence in complying with the order to give notice violated the statute requiring respect for courts, but did not constitute an intentional misrepresentation of facts to the Supreme Court in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [9]

Where respondent, oblivious to the Rules of Professional Conduct, intentionally created a personal injury practice in conjunction with a non-lawyer without adequate controls, and inadequately supervised the non-lawyer's conduct of the practice over a two-year period, acting with gross neglect and in a manner bordering on extreme recklessness, respondent's conduct violated the statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [4]

In order for an attorney's misrepresentation to be a violation of the statute prohibiting the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, the misrepresentation must be made with an intent to mislead. Negligence in making a representation does not constitute a violation of the statute. Where no clear and convincing evidence established any misrepresentation or deception, attorney's statements did not involve moral turpitude and also did not violate statute requiring attorneys only to use means consistent with truth and not to deceive judicial officers. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [13]

A disciplinary proceeding is seldom the proper forum for attorney fee disputes. In a matter arising from a dispute between attorneys, where respondent did not mishandle any sum that could be considered trust funds and respondent's instruction to staff to endorse the other attorney's name to settlement drafts was not dishonest, corrupt, or reflective of bad moral character, the review department affirmed the dismissal of the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [1]

Although the term "moral turpitude" has been defined very broadly, the Supreme Court has always required a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, wilfulness, or, at the very least, gross negligence before labelling an attorney's conduct moral turpitude. Where respondent reasonably and in good faith believed that he had the authority to endorse his clients' former attorney's name to settlement drafts, and there was no evidence that respondent misused funds intended for clients or medical providers and no evidence of fraud, hearing judge correctly concluded that there was no clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [3]

Where respondent had retained personal property given to respondent by client, claiming it was for legal fees owed, but respondent had no writing to support such claim and hearing judge rejected it based on client's testimony, respondent's retention of property was not reasonable or honest, and was in the nature of conversion, in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [8]

The statute regarding acts of moral turpitude or dishonesty prohibits any dishonest act by an attorney, whether or not committed while acting as an attorney. Where respondent falsely stated to client's prospective lessor that respondent was holding client's lease deposit in trust, respondent committed an act in violation of such statute. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [6]

A conclusion that an attorney engaged in acts of moral turpitude does not necessarily follow from a finding that the attorney misappropriated client funds. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [9]

An attorney's appropriation of client funds based on an unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to the funds constitutes only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where respondent could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to some of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of those funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [10]

An attorney's gross carelessness and negligence constitute violations of the attorney's oath to faithfully discharge duties to clients to the best of the attorney's knowledge and ability, and involve moral turpitude in that they breach the fiduciary relationship attorneys owe to clients. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [12]

An attorney's gross negligence in handling his clients' funds, which resulted in the issuance of several trust account checks that were not honored due to insufficient funds, involved moral turpitude even though there was no evidence of intentional wrongdoing or dishonest motive. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [13]

Even though notice to show cause did not expressly charge violation of rule requiring client funds to be held in trust, respondent could be found culpable of violating such rule by misappropriating client funds, where such charge was clearly encompassed within allegations in support of moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [15]

Where, as justification for taking client trust funds, respondent asserted that his written fee agreements had been modified to provide for a large contingent fee in one matter and a large flat fee in another matter, but did not produce any documents to support this contention, and offered varying characterizations of the alleged change in the fee arrangements, and, in contrast, the client testified credibly that he had never consented to a change in the fee agreements and had never been billed for additional fees, respondent failed to establish entitlement to the claimed fees. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [2]

Restitution of client funds taken by an attorney is no defense to disciplinary charges of misappropriation. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Where respondent was suspended from practice as a result of disciplinary charges, and by omitting this fact from his application for a position as a judicial arbitrator, created the false impression that he was currently able to practice law, respondent's gross negligence in failing to ascertain that active membership in the State Bar was a requirement of the position, and his improper holding himself out as entitled to practice law, constituted an act involving moral turpitude. A suspended attorney cannot expressly or impliedly create or leave undisturbed the false impression that the attorney has the ability to practice law. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [3]

Where respondent, who had been previously suspended from practice, described his legal career to a prospective employer in such a way as to indicate that respondent's practice of law had been uninterrupted, it was sufficient to establish culpability of misrepresentation to show that respondent knowingly presented a statement which itself tended to mislead. It was not material that the employer did not rely on the application or was not in fact deceived. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [6]

Instructions on a job application asking for a statement of those experiences which met the requirements of the position sought did not entitle respondent to misrepresent his employment history by selective omissions or misrepresentations calculated to imply that there had been no hiatus in his ability to practice law. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [7]

Misrepresentations are no less egregious when made to a public agency than when made to an individual client, and warrant discipline of no less magnitude. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [9]

Where an attorney's prior discipline involved culpability of moral turpitude for attempted receipt of stolen property, and the attorney's subsequent misconduct involved moral turpitude in misleading applications for employment, there was no pattern or common thread linking the former misconduct with the later case. However, the attorney's multiple breaches of ethical duties demonstrated that the attorney lacked a true understanding of professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [11]

Departure from the disciplinary standards was not justified based on the novelty of the issues raised in the matter, when the misconduct involved was respondent's misrepresentation of his status as an attorney, an area in which the governing rules have been clearly established for many years. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [12]

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

Where the evidence concerning an attorney's authority to apply client trust funds to attorney's fees consisted largely of conflicting testimony, the hearing judge's finding that the attorney did not have the authority to use the funds, coupled with the documentary evidence supporting culpability, constituted clear and convincing evidence supporting the judge's conclusion that the attorney improperly used and misappropriated client trust funds. Because the attorney's trust account balance repeatedly dropped below the necessary amount over a period of many months, and the attorney did not have an adequate explanation for the inadequate trust account balance, the attorney's misconduct, though not involving intentional dishonesty, constituted gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

Where respondent inadequately supervised her trust accounts over a period of several months and carelessly wrote a check which reduced the balance in a trust account slightly below the necessary amount, respondent's conduct did not amount to gross negligence, and thus did not constitute moral turpitude, but respondent did violate the rule requiring client funds to be held in trust. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [5]

An allegation of an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty encompasses the lesser allegation of a violation of the trust account rules, where the pleading clearly raises the issue of the misuse of trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [6]

Even though an attorney's individual acts did not involve moral turpitude, the attorney's pattern of misconduct amounted to moral turpitude; habitual disregard of client interests, even where grossly negligent or careless rather than wilful or dishonest, constitutes moral turpitude and justifies disbarment. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

Where the stipulation of the parties did not preclude a conclusion that respondent's misappropriations were acts of moral turpitude, and given the number and similarity of the matters in which respondent admitted to misappropriating trust funds, the burden shifted to respondent to rebut the conclusion that moral turpitude was involved. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4]

Where respondent failed to catch an isolated mistake in the billing of a single matter, but had an accounting system in place which was otherwise apparently working extremely well, and there was evidence that respondent had a long history of accurate and careful handling of client funds, respondent's isolated mistake in the billing of the single matter did not amount to gross negligence constituting moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [6]

Although attorneys cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, fiduciary violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful for disciplinary purposes even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [7]

The analysis of gross negligence in cases decided before the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct is not affected by the adoption of the standards, but the discipline imposed now takes into account guidelines provided by the standards, although they are not rigidly applied. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [8]

Section 6106, in contrast to sections 6068(a) and 6103, does state a chargeable offense for which discipline may be imposed. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [10]

Under the case law, the repeated dipping of a respondent's trust account below the required balance constitutes a sufficient basis for a finding of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [1]

An attorney's failure to return unspent costs advanced by the client did not violate the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds upon request, where there was no evidence that the client had requested the return of the funds. Nor did the attorney's inaction alone, in failing to return the funds for several years, support a finding that the attorney had misappropriated the funds or committed acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [18]

Providing a trust account check to pay for a personal expense, and then failing to satisfy the underlying obligation when the check was dishonored, constituted an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [19]

Because the retention of unearned advanced fees is a violation of an express duty under the Rules of Professional Conduct, it would be duplicative to find the same conduct to constitute an act of moral turpitude, and such a finding is not supported by the case law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [20]

Where an attorney representing a bankrupt client had possession of the proceeds of a court-ordered sale of estate assets, did not place the funds in a trust account, did not pay them as directed by the bankruptcy court, and did not otherwise account for the funds, the evidence supported a finding that the attorney misappropriated the funds, violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request, and committed an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [21]

While failure to keep a promise of future action alone is not ordinarily proof of dishonesty, where respondent promised to deliver client funds into court custody and soon thereafter misappropriated the funds, the review department upheld the hearing department's finding that respondent's actions were intended to mislead the client and therefore constituted deceitful conduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [22]

In an attorney discipline proceeding, all reasonable doubts must be weighed in favor of the attorney. Where the evidence presented by documents raised an inference of irregularity concerning the genuineness of a bankruptcy court order, but there was no evidence from the bankruptcy court concerning its practices nor any evaluation of the genuineness of the purported order itself, there was not clear and convincing evidence that the respondent had fabricated the order. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [23]

A finding that the amount respondent withdrew from a client trust account was not an earned fee, even though the client did not dispute respondent's testimony that it was an earned fee, was consistent with the evidence that respondent had not performed any legal services during the period of time for which he withdrew the funds; that what work was done by the attorney occurred after the trust funds had been withdrawn; that no value had been placed on the attorney's services during that time, and that the attorney had otherwise been inattentive to the client's case. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [3]

An attorney's withdrawal of client trust funds based on a reasonable or unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to fees may constitute only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where an attorney could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to most of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of the funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [4]

Misappropriation of client funds is a particularly serious ethical violation, which breaches the high duty of loyalty owed to the client, violates basic notions of honesty, and endangers public confidence in the legal profession. Misappropriation generally warrants disbarment of the attorney involved unless clearly extenuating circumstances are present. In assessing the appropriate discipline to recommend for a respondent who had misappropriated a large amount of client funds and also abandoned the client, the review department focused on the misappropriation, the most serious aspect of the misconduct. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [6]

Respondents have a right to reasonable notice of the charges against them and they may not be disciplined for a violation not alleged either in the original or a properly amended notice to show cause. Where the notice to show cause charged respondent with dishonest acts with regard to non-payment of tax monies withheld from an employee's wages, respondent could not, based on that notice, be held culpable of improperly concealing personal money from the tax authorities by putting it in a client trust account. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

Although it was improper to find respondent culpable of misconduct on the basis of his freely given evidence that he concealed funds from the Franchise Tax Board, because such conduct fell outside the proper scope of the charges, such evidence could be used to form the basis of an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [13]

Evidence that respondent practiced law while on suspension by making one court appearance prior to paying dues and being reinstated, did not establish culpability of moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, where hearing judge found credible respondent's statement during said court appearance that respondent believed his dues had been paid. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [5]

The statute providing that any act of moral turpitude by an attorney is cause for discipline applies regardless of whether the act was committed in the practice of law. Hence, a suspended attorney's duty under this statute does not contradict the attorney's duty to cease practicing while suspended. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [15]

An act of concealment can be dishonest and involve moral turpitude that is subject to professional discipline. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [16]

The use of a presigned verification, attesting to the truth of facts set forth in a civil complaint, without first consulting with the client to assure that the assertions of fact are true, constitutes an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [18]

A suspended attorney held himself out to a client as entitled to practice law when he discussed her legal problems with the client, accepted a fee and filed a lawsuit on her behalf. This conduct also involved moral turpitude in that the attorney deceived the client by not advising her that he was not entitled to practice law. An attorney's practice of deceit involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [19]

Where a municipal court order finding an appeal frivolous and awarding sanctions did not explain the basis for such finding or the statutory basis for awarding sanctions, and no additional evidence was introduced to establish that the appeal was substantively without merit, the record did not clearly and convincingly establish for disciplinary purposes that the appeal was frivolous or pursued in bad faith. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [7]

Where neither party sought review of the dismissal of misrepresentation charges, and the testimony at the hearing was in conflict on the matter, then in light of the weight accorded to credibility findings of the trier of fact and in view of the record as a whole, the review department adopted the hearing department's findings regarding the misrepresentation charge. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [9]

The commission of any act of dishonesty constitutes a violation of section 6106. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [7]

Where respondent had asked a witness a question, knowing that the witness would testify falsely, in order to mislead the court, respondent was culpable of deceiving the court and of moral turpitude, but in the absence of evidence of an agreement between respondent and the witness, there was no proof that respondent suborned perjury. A determination of subornation of perjury requires clear and convincing proof of a corrupt agreement between the witness and the respondent for the witness to testify falsely. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [7]

General charges in a notice to show cause of disbursing trust funds without permission or knowledge of the beneficiary did not give adequate notice of a charge of misappropriation of such funds, without further specification as to the facts giving rise to the accompanying charge of committing acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [8]

Improper withdrawal of entrusted funds in violation of duty to maintain funds in trust, and of fiduciary duty to opposing party, does not necessarily rise to the level of an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [9]

In a matter in which respondent prematurely disbursed entrusted funds to repay client for expenses later determined to have been properly reimbursable, and also withdrew funds for attorney's fees but later replaced those funds, the gravamen of the case, for the purpose of assessing the appropriate discipline, was the prolonged deceit perpetuated by respondent on opposing counsel and the courts regarding the unauthorized disbursements. Respondent's extended practice of deceit on courts and counsel made respondent's case far more serious as to discipline than the trust violations. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [10]

Violations of trust account rules which do not involve a misappropriation found to constitute an act of moral turpitude are not treated, for the purpose of determining appropriate discipline, as misappropriations within the contemplation of standard 2.2(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, for which disbarment is the presumed sanction. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [16]

A justifiable and reasonably certain belief that a check will be paid by the bank despite insufficient funds is a valid defense to a charge of issuing checks drawn against insufficient funds. Where respondent had an oral agreement with a bank officer to pay all his checks automatically, which would not have been terminated without notice to respondent, and where all checks he wrote were honored and no creditor was put at risk, respondent's repeated issuance of insufficient funds checks did not constitute misconduct. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [1]

Where attorney failed to reveal to clients the real reason for the delay in their receipt of settlement funds, and was grossly negligent in failing to supervise his staff in the handling of client funds and settling of personal injury cases, this misconduct, coupled with misappropriation from the attorney's client trust account due to his failure to maintain a sufficient balance, was an appropriate basis for a finding of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [2]

Attorney's reliance on clients' oral authorizations to simulate their endorsements on settlement checks did not constitute a basis to find moral turpitude. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [4]

An attorney's simulation of a client's endorsement on a check, pursuant to an express power of attorney, without expressly indicating the representational capacity of the signature, does not constitute an attempt to deceive the bank and is not an act of moral turpitude. An attorney may not endorse a client's name to a check without express authority to do so, but the representative capacity of the signature need not be indicated on the check. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [15]

Moral turpitude is not demonstrated simply by an attorney's failure to notify a client that a medical payment draft has arrived and that the attorney has endorsed it for the client. Although this conduct clearly violates the rule requiring attorneys to notify clients promptly upon receipt of client funds, it does not amount to dishonesty or other misconduct in any way characterizable as moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [17]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that the respondent attorney had misappropriated funds to his own use and purposes, and charged the attorney with acts of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, but did not charge the attorney with a breach of the ethical rule concerning the proper handling of client trust funds, and the notice to show cause did not clearly put the attorney on notice of a charge that he had violated the trust funds rule, the attorney therefore could not be found culpable of violating that rule in light of the mandate that the attorney be given adequate notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to respond thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [18]

An attorney's trust account violation, which consisted of unilaterally determining his fee and withdrawing trust funds to satisfy the fee, did not amount to an act of moral turpitude, because there was no evidence the attorney acted dishonestly in his payment to himself of a reduced fee taken in the good faith belief of a claim of right. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [24]

Possession of client funds in the form of a cashier's check is no defense to a charge of commingling. However, an attorney who held client funds outside his trust account in the form of cashier's checks, notified his client promptly of the receipt of the funds, forwarded them to the client promptly upon demand, and had adequate funds at all times to pay what he owed the client, did not commit misappropriation, violate obligation to deliver client funds promptly upon demand, or commit any act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [9]

Conclusion that respondent was not culpable on charge of violating section 6106 would be inconsistent with Supreme Court precedent where hearing judge made factual findings that respondent lied to clients about status of their claim and wrongfully held himself out during suspension as entitled to practice law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [6]

Charging a violation of section 6106 is the basis for imposing discipline for acts of moral turpitude. An attorney cannot be disciplined under section 6106 except based on an explicit determination that the attorney committed an act within its scope. The source of precise definition of such acts is not any specific statutes and rules, but case law and common understanding. The scope of section 6106 includes any act of moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption, whether or not violative of any civil or criminal statute. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [8]

Charge of violating section 6106 put respondent on notice, to which respondent was entitled, that misconduct charged involved moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption as described by statute and case law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [9]

Where hearing judge's finding of aggravation for conduct surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty and concealment reflected same conduct that review department relied on as basis for finding respondent culpable of acts of moral turpitude, finding in aggravation was deleted as duplicative. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [12]

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

Although respondent's acts of dishonesty did not occur during the actual practice of law, but rather while respondent was seeking employment as a lawyer, respondent's willingness to use false and misleading means in the employment process was a matter of serious concern. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [6]

An attorney's deliberate use of dishonesty to further attempts to gain employment, particularly as a lawyer, is very serious. An attorney is not just another job-holder or job-seeker. Attorneys in this state are charged with high duties of honesty and professional responsibility. Any act of dishonesty by an attorney is an act of moral turpitude, and ground for serious professional misconduct, whether or not arising in the course of attorney-client relations; an attorney's dishonesty in seeking to further his or her career is simply inexcusable. An attorney's statements in a resume, job interview or research paper should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [13]

Where hearing referee concluded that respondent did not act dishonestly, but failed to exercise due diligence in learning the true facts before filing a declaration in a civil court, this conclusion was inconsistent with the conclusion that respondent's declaration violated the rule against seeking to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [9]

In order to find a violation of the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers, the State Bar must show clearly and convincingly that the attorney knowingly presented a false statement intending to mislead the court, and such deceit would, in almost every case, be an act of dishonesty in violation of the statute authorizing discipline for acts of moral turpitude, corruption and dishonesty. When an attorney makes a false or misleading statement to a court, that act involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [11]

The knowing issuance of a check drawn on insufficient funds is a proper basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. Where such check was immediately negotiable on its face, respondent was culpable regardless of whether or not respondent orally instructed recipient to delay cashing it. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [11]

In finding respondent culpable of misappropriating trust funds and of knowingly issuing a check drawn on insufficient funds, the referee's statement that respondent's acts constituted crimes involving moral turpitude was improper since the criminal statutes were not charged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [16]

Appearing in court while suspended or enrolled inactive does not inherently involve moral turpitude; nor does it necessarily involve deception of the court, if the attorney is unaware of his or her inactive status. Evidence that an attorney made a single court appearance while ignorant of his or her inactive status is insufficient to establish clearly and convincingly that the attorney acted with moral turpitude or intent to deceive the court. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [22]

Respondent's conduct in placing trust funds in his personal account, using such funds, and delaying payment thereof to his clients' medical lienholder for a year and a half after demand for payment constituted commingling and misappropriation and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [5]

Where hearing department found unpersuasive client's testimony that he did not consent to respondent's application of client trust funds to respondent's outstanding legal fees, State Bar did not demonstrate trust account irregularities or misappropriation by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [9]

Unauthorized practice of law may or may not constitute moral turpitude. It did not constitute moral turpitude for attorney to continue to render, and accept fees for, legal services which, at client's insistence and with client's knowledge and consent, were rendered during attorney's suspension from practice. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [10]

Supreme Court has defined moral turpitude as an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow men or to society in general, or an act contrary to honesty and good morals. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [1]

Where respondent's involvement in capping was pervasive, and his law practice was built entirely on illegal payments to third parties for cases, respondent's conduct clearly involved corruption, and thus violated statute precluding acts of moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, even though no deceit was involved. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [2]

Absent additional evidence, attorney could not be found culpable of committing act of moral turpitude by misappropriating client trust funds, where evidence showed that attorney had transferred funds to successor counsel, and State Bar had stipulated that successor counsel had actually misappropriated funds. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [4]

By acts of dishonesty in deceiving a corporation in a business transaction, attorneys violated the statute which prohibits attorneys from committing acts of moral turpitude whether committed in the capacity of an attorney or not, but did not violate the statute prohibiting attorneys from making misrepresentations to a tribunal in seeking to further a client's interests. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [4]

Where all of attorneys' acts of dishonesty were encompassed in charge of committing acts of moral turpitude, there would be no added value in straining to find in the same conduct a violation of another statute prohibiting misrepresentations to tribunals. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [5]

Honesty is one of the most fundamental rules of ethics for attorneys. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [22]

Respondent's repeated misrepresentations to his client's husband were reprehensible conduct for an attorney and constituted dishonesty and moral turpitude. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [3]

Although respondent's misappropriation of client funds was not intentional, and resulted from poor management and misuse of trust account, respondent's gross carelessness, at best, in management of client's entrusted funds constituted moral turpitude, as such conduct breached his fiduciary duty to his client. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [8]

Whether an attorney's misconduct involved moral turpitude is a question of law ultimately decided by the Supreme Court. The test is the same whether or not the act was a criminal offense. Where respondent failed to pay payroll taxes due to financial difficulty, such conduct did not constitute moral turpitude, because Supreme Court did not find moral turpitude in case involving similar but more egregious misconduct. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [9]

Respondent's admitted improper use of trust account as an operating account into which he deposited personal funds in order to avoid tax levy which he anticipated, involved concealment and dishonesty, and thus constituted moral turpitude. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [11]

Records of respondent's trust account, showing that balance dropped to a negative sum without payment having been made to clients' treating physician, warranted the conclusion that respondent misappropriated trust funds. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [3]

Attorney's misrepresentation to clients that attorney had paid all of clients' medical bills, when attorney had not done so, constituted act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [4]

Attorney's repeated acts of deceit to clients in falsely representing that attorney had filed suit on clients' claims constituted acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [1]

Attorney's repeated, protracted deceit of clients, which had effect of forestalling them from discovering true status of their matters, was perhaps even more serious than harm caused by attorney's inattention to client duties. An attorney's practice of deceit is inimical to the high ethical standards of honesty and integrity required of members of the legal profession and to the promotion of confidence in the trustworthiness of members of the profession. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [4]

Where notice to show cause did not charge that respondent misrepresented to his clients the status of their claims, and respondent defaulted and did not appear at hearing, the review department declined to find, based on client's testimony at hearing, that respondent had committed act of dishonesty by making such misrepresentation. The review department is most reluctant to consider, even for the purpose of aggravation, misconduct which could have been, but was not charged in notice to show cause, especially where respondent is in default and has no opportunity to learn of or rebut matters arising during hearing. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [3]

Respondent's false representation to his clients that he was a partner in a law firm and respondent's conversion of advanced attorney's fees and costs without performing any services were acts of dishonesty. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [8]

The continued practice of issuing numerous checks which the attorney knows will not be honored violates the fundamental rule of ethics—that of common honesty—without which the profession is worse than valueless in the place it holds in the administration of justice. An attorney's issuance of multiple bad checks has consistently been found to be an act of moral turpitude, even when the checks were written on personal accounts for non-legal expenses. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [4]

In disciplinary cases, the Supreme Court has considered an attorney's acts of gross neglect in representing clients' interests to involve moral turpitude. Reinstatement petitioner's lack of care as to his own duties regarding disclosure of litigation on reinstatement petition, while not requiring strong label of moral turpitude, fell short of highest standard of fitness which petitioner must demonstrate for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [10]

An attorney's misappropriations of funds from his client trust account and other client funds constituted acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude. Misappropriation of funds is a serious offense involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

Writing checks when one knows or should know that there are not sufficient funds to cover them manifests a disregard for ethics and fundamental honesty, at least if such conduct occurs repeatedly. Writing bad checks may, by itself under some circumstances, constitute moral turpitude. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [11]

221.10 Found

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

221.11 Deliberate dishonesty/fraud

Where respondent intentionally filed bankruptcy petitions on behalf of sham corporations for the purpose of delaying foreclosures, and such petitions contained false information and material omissions, respondent's scheme to defraud creditors by abusing the bankruptcy system and misleading the court constituted moral turpitude. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [3]

Where respondent was found culpable of moral turpitude for filing bankruptcy petitions containing misrepresentations and material omissions, charge that respondent violated section 6068(d) based on same misconduct was duplicative, and was therefore dismissed. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [4]

Attorney's concealment of his suspension or creation of false impression of present ability to practice when consulted by a former client seeking representation is an act of moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [4]

Where respondent failed to inform client that her case had been dismissed due to respondent's fault; concealed facts from client regarding his ongoing neglect of her case; and falsely reassured her after she contacted him, Review Department reversed hearing judge and found respondent culpable of moral turpitude based on misrepresentations to client. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [5]

IIn the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273.

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141

Where respondent submitted invoices and binders of memoranda to the State Bar which were fraudulent and created after the fact in an attempt to justify respondent's fees, such conduct constitutes moral turpitude. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [6]

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

Review department recommended five years' stayed suspension and three years' actual suspension where, in a single client matter, (1) respondent committed multiple violations of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300; (2) respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude by concealing important information about a business transaction from his client and by overreaching his client; (3) respondent failed to report a civil fraud judgment to the State Bar; and (4) there were several factors in aggravation and two factors in mitigation, including respondent's long years of practice without prior discipline.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[3 a-g]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

221.12 Gross negligence

The requirement that attorneys submit an accurate MCLE compliance affirmation is essential to maintaining public confidence in the legal profession. Attorneys must accurately report compliance because the MCLE program is based on an honor system. Respondent was grossly negligent, and thereby culpable of an act of moral turpitude, when she affirmed her MCLE compliance without making any effort to confirm that she completed the required education and had the records to prove it. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [1 a, b]

Where respondent allowed his staff to access his client trust account (CTA) records without supervision, failed to regularly monitor CTA, and took no action to protect his clients or his CTA for lengthy period after learning that his office manager was under investigation for fraud, and balance in respondent's CTA dipped below amount held in trust for client, respondent was culpable of moral turpitude based on gross negligence. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [1 a,b]

The Rules of Professional Conduct require an attorney to manage his trust account and maintain a trust account recordkeeping system. The failure to manage the client trust account amounts to grossly negligent conduct constituting moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239 [1]

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Respondent was grossly negligent and culpable of moral turpitude when he jumped to the unreasonable conclusion without sufficient supporting evidence that his clients left the county. Additionally, respondent could have used a tailored affidavit explaining why his clients did not sign the verification rather than using a standard, pre-printed form provided by the Judicial Council. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [2 a, b]

Where respondent's slipshod procedures allowed a substantial sum of entrusted funds to be misappropriated without respondent's knowledge, such misappropriation resulted from respondent's gross negligence and constitutes moral turpitude. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [3]

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Where respondent elicited an incriminating statement from an individual who was incarcerated and awaiting the appeal of his confession to the police and where respondent was an experienced criminal attorney who knew that the incriminating statement could be used as evidence at re–trial, respondent's overreaching was the height of irresponsibility and constituted at least gross neglect establishing a basis for a finding of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [4]

Respondent was culpable of moral turpitude when he made misleading statements in order to induce a witness to sign a confession. Respondent was, at best, grossly negligent in not fully explaining to a witness the consequences of his cooperation. A finding of gross negligence in creating a false impression is sufficient for violation of section 6106. Acts of moral turpitude include concealment as well as affirmative misrepresentations and no distinction can be drawn among concealment, half–truth, and false statement of fact. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [6]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

221.19 Other factual basis

Respondent was culpable of moral turpitude for noncompliance with court orders and serious and habitual abuse of the judicial system where he acted with "unclean hands" in suing his neighbors without attempting informal resolution, sought to use the judicial system as a weapon to inflict onerous litigation costs on neighbors for his own benefit, abused the judicial system in bringing at least 16 meritless appeals, and acted in bad faith for years by disregarding a vexatious litigant pre-filing order and pursuing his property interests in the guise of being plaintiff's counsel rather than the plaintiff. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [3]

Where respondent's standard retainer agreement gave him unqualified authority to settle clients' cases, and respondent negotiated settlements and released clients' claims without their knowledge or consent, respondent breached his fiduciary duty by overreaching. Accordingly, Review Department reversed hearing judge's finding that respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [3]

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Sending numerous, threatening voicemail messages is intentionally harassing and constitutes moral turpitude. Such conduct is not protected by the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [2 a, b]

Where letter drafted on behalf of respondent threatened to disclose client confidences, impute criminal conduct, and cause financial harm, respondent's failure to retract the letter constituted serious overreaching that compromised respondent's fiduciary duties to his client and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [4 a-c]

Where respondent believed a client was mentally unstable and billed the client in excess of the amount authorized in the retainer agreement, billed in excess of a subsequently negotiated oral fee agreement and also billed for unnecessary research, respondent's exploitation of the vulnerable client was overreaching and constituted an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [9]

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Where respondent was aware that a witness's attorneys objected to his cooperation with respondent, where respondent circumvented their objections and ultimately convinced the witness to reject his attorneys' advice, and where there is no evidence that the witness gave a knowing and intelligent waiver of his right to counsel, respondent committed misconduct involving moral turpitude by allowing the witness to act as his own counsel. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [5]

Review department recommended five years' stayed suspension and three years' actual suspension where, in a single client matter, (1) respondent committed multiple violations of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300; (2) respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude by concealing important information about a business transaction from his client and by overreaching his client; (3) respondent failed to report a civil fraud judgment to the State Bar; and (4) there were several factors in aggravation and two factors in mitigation, including respondent's long years of practice without prior discipline. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3 a-g]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

221.50 Not Found

Respondent was not culpable of moral turpitude based on a "serious, habitual abuse of the judicial system," even though he filed frivolous appeals, recycled previously rejected arguments, and resubmitted essentially the same complaint as "amended," because he did not have a personal interest in the actions and acted at the direction of his clients. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [5]

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

Where record establishes that the jurors steadfastly remained divided into two groups based on their evaluation of the evidence and it was only the respondent who espoused a verdict for reasons of personal convenience, respondent was not culpable of the charge of moral turpitude for having sought to corrupt other jurors by unduly influencing them. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [4]

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746.

In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the context of an emotional and adversarial lawsuit, propounding discovery that falsely intimated that respondent and the plaintiff, respondent's former client, had a sexual relationship and that the plaintiff was sexually promiscuous is not clear and convincing evidence of acts of moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. Further, it is unclear that Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f), which prohibits the advancing of prejudicial facts to the honor or reputation of a party or witness, proscribes the use of such intimations. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4 a - b]

Because the plaintiff in a civil lawsuit, who was respondent's former client, introduced into evidence respondent's offensive discovery requests, it is presumed, in the absence of any jury instruction to the contrary, that the jury relied on them in finding by clear and convincing evidence that respondent acted with oppression or malice when he harassed or intentionally inflicted emotional harm on the plaintiff. Therefore, to find a Business and Professions Code section 6106 moral turpitude violation on this basis would be duplicative of the moral turpitude violations already found based on respondent's harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on the plaintiff. For the same reasons, it would also be duplicative to use the offensive discovery to find culpability of Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (f). It is generally inappropriate to find redundant charged allegations. The appropriate level of discipline for an act of misconduct does not depend on how many rules of professional conduct or statutes proscribe the misconduct.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5 a - b]

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

222.10 Section 6106.1 (advocating overthrow of government)

222.11 Found

222.15 Not Found

Note: For section 6106.2, see topic number 223.00 below.

222.20 Section 6106.3 (violation of Civil Code § 2944.6 or 2944.7 re mortgage loan modification)

Where record revealed that attorney complied with statute governing loan modification services by providing client with required statement that third party negotiator was not necessary, Review Department disagreed with finding that attorney violated Business and Professions Code 6106.3, and dismissed charge. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [2]

Attorney violated section Business and Professions Code, section 6106.3 in eight client matters by charging each client for preliminary financial analysis before all mortgage loan modification services were complete. Civil Code section 2944.7, subdivision (a) plainly prohibits any person, including a legal professional, from collecting any fee related to a loan modification until each and every service contracted for has been completed. Attorney was not allowed to charge unbundled fees for individual financial analysis services until he had completed all other loan modification services listed in his retainer agreement. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [1]

Attorney may not rely on opinion of another attorney as a defense to violating the rules or sections governing attorney ethics. Attorney did not act in good faith when he chose interpretation of Civil Code section 2944.7, subdivision (a) that ignored a new statute's plain language and legislative history as well as his own knowledge of a State Bar ethics alert interpreting it. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [2]

Attorney was culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106.3 by failing to provide a separate statement that it was not necessary for the client to retain a third party mortgage loan modification negotiator as required by Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) when he charged his client for loan modification services without first providing the client the retainer agreement which contained the separate statement. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [3]

Attorney was not culpable of violating Business and Professions Code section 6106.3 by failing to provide a separate statement that it was not necessary for the client to retain a third party mortgage loan modification negotiator as required by Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) when he the client received the retainer agreement containing that section's mandatory language the same day she authorized payment. Civil Code section 2944.6, subdivision (a) requires the information be provided as a separate statement, but does not mandate that it be in a separate document. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [4]

222.21 Found

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

222.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

222.50 Section 6106.5 (insurance fraud)

222.51 Found

222.55 Not Found

222.70 Section 6106.7 (overcharge for sports contract negotiation)

222.71 Found

222.75 Not Found

222.80 Section 6106.8 (violation of sex-with-clients rule)

222.81 Found

222.85 Not Found

222.90 Section 6106.9 (sex with clients)

222.91 Found

222.95 Not Found

223.00 Section 6106.2 (violation of Civil Code § 55.3, 55.31, or 55.32)

223.01 Found

223.05 Not Found

230.00 Section 6125 (practice of law while not active member)

Where an attorney's actions, taken as a whole, create a false impression of ability to practice law while on suspension, this constitutes unauthorized practice of law in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 6125 and 6126, upon which is predicated a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). Here, respondent paid for television advertisements, recorded voice messages for the law office, failed to provide a disclaimer in the advertisements and voice messages that he was not entitled to practice law, failed to identify any other attorney as working for the law office, maintained a website for the law office that described his abilities and qualifications as an attorney, took no steps to correct the false impression of an insurance company and chiropractor as to his status as an attorney, and failed to ensure that no stationary identifying him as an attorney was used by the law office where he worked. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [1 a-c]

The practice of law embraces a wide range of activities, including giving legal advice and preparing documents to secure legal rights. Where, during disciplinary suspension, respondent told a client he would take her case; communicated with Medicare and an insurance company on the client's behalf; negotiated a settlement, and endorsed a settlement check, these actions constituted the practice of law, and established respondent's culpability of unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [2]

The opinion of another attorney is not a defense to a violation of the rules or statutes governing attorney ethics. Where respondent claimed to have followed the advice of ethics counsel regarding permissible conduct during his suspension, but in fact continued to use his designation as an attorney in advertisements and on his website and stationery, totality of evidence left no doubt that respondent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law while suspended. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3]

Where respondent wrote letters to negotiate claims on behalf of clients while suspended from the practice of law, respondent was still culpable of engaging in the unauthorized practice of law despite having filed a motion to stay his suspension. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [2]

Where respondent misled client into believing that he was working on her case when he was on administrative suspension for failing to pay his State Bar dues, he improperly held himself out as entitled to practice law in violation of Business and Professions Code section proscribing acts of moral turpitude, dishonesty, and corruption. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [2]

Sections 6125 and 6126 of the Business and Professions Code, which prohibit practicing law or holding oneself out as entitled to practice law by anyone other than an active attorney, are not of themselves disciplinary offenses. The appropriate method of charging disciplinary violations of those sections is by way of adding a charge of a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a), which imposes upon an attorney the duty to support state laws, to sections 6125 and 6126. Even though section 6068, subdivision (a), was not charged, the review department upheld the hearing judge's findings that respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126 where the amended charges made it clear both by text and citation to sections 6125 and 6126 that respondent was being charged with accepting employment from and holding himself out as entitled to practice law while respondent was suspended, and where respondent failed to object and show any evidence of specific prejudice arising from the failure to add section 6068, subdivision (a), to the underlying charges. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [7]

Even though respondent was ineligible to practice law on day he was ordered to appear in court on behalf of a client, this did not relieve him of his obligation to appear as ordered. He was obligated to do everything in his power to obey court's order short of practicing law, and at a minimum should have been physically present in court and given accurate information about his eligibility to practice. This would not have constituted the practice of law. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [8]

An attorney's unauthorized practice of law while on suspension is an appropriate matter to be considered in aggravation. Where, during the trial in a disciplinary matter, the respondent made a court appearance in a client's case while suspended for nonpayment of dues, the deputy trial counsel was not obligated to wait to file another disciplinary action to address the issue. Where respondent's counsel agreed that the deputy trial counsel could introduce evidence regarding respondent's court appearance during a later phase of the hearing, respondent received proper notice of the charge in aggravation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [15]

Where an attorney appeared in court on the date his suspension began solely to report to the court that his client was now without representation, and acted under the trial court's instructions to speak with the client about possibly resolving the lawsuit that day, and the trial was continued for the client to retain new counsel, there was not clear and convincing evidence that the attorney knowingly practiced law while suspended. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [16]

Where an attorney had been suspended from practice and had been contacted by new counsel retained by his former client, the attorney's subsequent negotiation with an insurance company on the client's behalf without the new counsel's consent constituted unauthorized practice of law and violated the statute prohibiting attorneys from appearing without authority. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [3]

Where respondent knowingly permitted a civil complaint bearing his name as counsel to be filed after the effective date of his suspension from practice, respondent thereby violated statute prohibiting practicing while suspended. Even if respondent prepared complaint prior to suspension, did not intend to practice while suspended, and was only trying to assist client by having complaint filed, this did not constitute an excuse for respondent's conduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [7]

While suspended from practice, an attorney may research any point of law or draft any legal document so long as it is done for the independent review of an active member of the State Bar in good standing who will take responsibility for the work to the client. Where respondent drafted a detailed points and authorities directly for a client while respondent was suspended, this conduct constituted unauthorized practice of law, regardless of respondent's laudable motive in attempting to aid the client at a critical time in the client's case. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [10]

Once an attorney is placed on suspension, he or she is prohibited from engaging in any law practice or even holding himself or herself out to opposing counsel as entitled to practice. Respondent's sending a counteroffer in settlement to opposing counsel in one matter the day after his suspension became effective, and his post-suspension use of his secretary in another matter to communicate with opposing counsel concerning a settlement offer pending at the time of his suspension, constituted unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [11]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

It was not improper for petitioner for reinstatement to have continued to work as a paralegal for his son in his former office after resigning with charges pending, where petitioner did not engage in any acts constituting the practice of law while so employed. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [12]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for his son's law firm despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, but the evidence indicated that the firm name was beyond the resigned attorney's control, and there was no credible evidence that the public or clients were in fact misled or that the resigned attorney had practiced law after resigning, the review department deferred to the hearing judge's favorable credibility determinations and concluded that the resigned attorney had not held himself out as entitled to practice law. The resigned attorney's continued employment in a situation where the public and clients could easily be misled clearly called into question his suitability for reinstatement, but under all the circumstances did not establish his lack of rehabilitation or present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [18]

Under section 6125 of the Business and Professions Code, members of the State Bar who are on inactive status may not practice law in California. Section 6068(a) makes violation of section 6125 a disciplinable offense. A member on inactive status who is alleged to have committed acts constituting the practice of law is properly charged with violating sections 6125 and 6068(a). In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [6]

A broad scope of activities may be held to constitute the practice of law, but the unauthorized practice of law outside of court appearances is difficult to define. Where respondent, while on inactive status, allegedly referred to a family member as respondent's client in a letter to another lawyer and expressed an intention to seek statutory fees in a probate matter involving the family member, respondent was properly charged with unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [8]

The practice of law includes not only performing services in court but also legal advice and counsel and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts. Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud based on the attorney's fraudulent creation of a separate corporation in order to obtain payment for legal work for clients which otherwise would have been performed by the attorney's law firm, the crime was committed in the practice of law within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [5]

Notice to show cause properly charged respondent with practicing law while suspended, in violation of sections 6125 and 6126(b), despite language in notice describing respondent as having made court appearance while "on inactive . . . status," when respondent was actually suspended for nonpayment of dues. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

The mere holding out by a suspended attorney that he or she is practicing or is entitled to practice law constitutes the unauthorized practice of law. Where suspended attorney accepted money to perform legal services, attorney violated probation against law practice by anyone other than active State Bar members. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [4]

Suspended attorneys are expressly precluded by statute from practicing law. On the other hand, one of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires an attorney to perform the services for which he or she is hired, because the failure to do so can be an intentional or reckless failure to perform competently in violation of the rule. Thus, requiring a suspended attorney to comply with both the unauthorized practice statute and the rule regarding competent performance would result in incompatible duties. For this reason, the rule regarding failure to act competently has no applicability to attorneys practicing while suspended. The suspended attorney's only duty is to stop practicing until reestablished as an attorney in good standing. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [6]

There is no reason to require suspended attorneys to comply with the rules requiring competent representation and prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal even while they are precluded from practicing because suspended. A full range of discipline is available to protect the public, courts and profession for unauthorized practice alone. Recklessness or incompetence in the unauthorized practice of law, or a precipitous withdrawal, would cause harm to the client and would constitute an aggravating factor which justifies greater discipline than would have been appropriate if no harm had occurred. In order to minimize harm to clients, suspended attorneys should take all steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice, short of practicing law. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [8]

The Rule of Professional Conduct which provides that an attorney shall not withdraw until he or she takes steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of the client requires, by its express terms, that the attorney continue representing the client until the attorney has taken steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice. This obligation directly contradicts the duty of a suspended attorney to cease practicing law immediately. It is unreasonable to hold an attorney to a duty of having to continue to represent his or her client for a reasonable period of time to avoid prejudice prior to withdrawal, if the attorney has an absolute duty to stop practicing due to a suspension. Thus, the rule against prejudicial withdrawal has no applicability to attorneys while they are suspended. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [10]

An attorney must, upon withdrawal, promptly return any unearned fees. An attorney is not required to practice law in order to comply with this rule, and it therefore continues to apply even if an attorney is suspended. Moreover, a suspended attorney is legally precluded from practicing law and therefore, the attorney's agreement to provide legal services in exchange for a fee is illegal. Permitting a suspended attorney to retain any of the money paid him by a client for services rendered while suspended would condone the attorney's unauthorized practice of law and would be contrary to public policy. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [11]

Charging an attorney with a violation of the duty to support the Constitution and laws, by reason of the attorney's violation of the statutes prohibiting practicing law while suspended, provides the basis for imposition of professional discipline for unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [12]

With the exception of a wilful violation of a court order, section 6103 of the Business and Professions Code does not define a duty or obligation of an attorney but provides only that the violation of the attorney's oath or duties defined elsewhere is ground for discipline. Thus, an attorney can not violate section 6103 unless he or she violated a court order. However, an attorney who is suspended for failure to pay State Bar membership fees is suspended by order of the Supreme Court. Thus, the attorney's continued practice of law after suspension is a violation of the court order suspending the attorney and therefore is a violation of section 6103. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [13]

The statute requiring attorneys to communicate with their clients does not require a suspended attorney's continued practice of law, and a suspended attorney thus may be found culpable of violating the statute. It is extremely important for a suspended attorney to continue to communicate with the client so that prejudice to the client is minimized, though such communication must not take the form of legal advice. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [14]

The statute providing that any act of moral turpitude by an attorney is cause for discipline applies regardless of whether the act was committed in the practice of law. Hence, a suspended attorney's duty under this statute does not contradict the attorney's duty to cease practicing while suspended. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [15]

A suspended attorney held himself out to a client as entitled to practice law when he discussed her legal problems with the client, accepted a fee and filed a lawsuit on her behalf. This conduct also involved moral turpitude in that the attorney deceived the client by not advising her that he was not entitled to practice law. An attorney's practice of deceit involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [19]

Requiring a suspended attorney to comply with the statutory prohibition against appearing as attorney for a party without authority would not necessitate the attorney's continued practice of law. The attorney can comply with the unauthorized appearance statute by not practicing while suspended. Accordingly, an suspended attorney who wilfully filed a lawsuit on behalf of a client without her authority could be found culpable of violating the statute. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [20]

A suspended attorney's failure to inform his client that he was suspended and that he was nonetheless filing an unauthorized complaint on her behalf, and his failure to communicate with the client in any other way, amounted to a violation of his statutory obligation to keep his client reasonably informed of significant developments with regard to her case. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [21]

Practicing law while suspended has resulted in a range of discipline from suspension to disbarment, depending on the circumstances of the misconduct, including the nature of any companion charges and the existence and gravity of prior disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [27]

Discipline may appropriately be imposed based on an attorney's unauthorized practice of law when the attorney is charged with violating sections 6068(a) and sections 6125 or 6126. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [16]

Where reinstatement petitioner described himself as an attorney at law in public advertisement, but same document referred clearly to petitioner's disbarment, review department declined to find that petitioner had held himself out to the public as authorized to practice law. However, petitioner's use of term "attorney at law" when not an active member of State Bar was inappropriate, and its use in papers filed with State Bar Court in reinstatement proceeding did not aid petitioner in demonstrating sustained exemplary conduct. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [11]

To be accurate, petitioner should have stated that the minimum waiting period to apply for reinstatement is five years (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), rather than stating that he had been disbarred for five years. Nonetheless, petitioner's statement as a whole clearly indicated that petitioner was not then licensed to practice law, so misstatement was not serious. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [12]

Finding that respondent was culpable of prejudicial withdrawal from representation and of failure to perform competently was based only on respondent's failure to render services while not under suspension; during suspension, respondent was precluded from practicing law, and misconduct in that connection is governed by statute precluding unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [3]

Respondent's violation of statutes prohibiting unauthorized practice of law was established by unanswered charges and uncontroverted evidence showing that respondent appeared in court after the effective date of his involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [20]

Sections 6125 and 6126 together, when coupled with a section 6068(a) charge, create a basis for discipline for unlawful practice of law by a member of the State Bar. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [4]

230.01 Found

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

230.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

231.00 Section 6126 (unauthorized practice - misdemeanor)

Where an attorney's actions, taken as a whole, create a false impression of ability to practice law while on suspension, this constitutes unauthorized practice of law in violation of Business and Professions Code sections 6125 and 6126, upon which is predicated a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). Here, respondent paid for television advertisements, recorded voice messages for the law office, failed to provide a disclaimer in the advertisements and voice messages that he was not entitled to practice law, failed to identify any other attorney as working for the law office, maintained a website for the law office that described his abilities and qualifications as an attorney, took no steps to correct the false impression of an insurance company and chiropractor as to his status as an attorney, and failed to ensure that no stationary identifying him as an attorney was used by the law office where he worked. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [1 a-c]

The practice of law embraces a wide range of activities, including giving legal advice and preparing documents to secure legal rights. Where, during disciplinary suspension, respondent told a client he would take her case; communicated with Medicare and an insurance company on the client's behalf; negotiated a settlement, and endorsed a settlement check, these actions constituted the practice of law, and established respondent's culpability of unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [2]

The opinion of another attorney is not a defense to a violation of the rules or statutes governing attorney ethics. Where respondent claimed to have followed the advice of ethics counsel regarding permissible conduct during his suspension, but in fact continued to use his designation as an attorney in advertisements and on his website and stationery, totality of evidence left no doubt that respondent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law while suspended. In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3]

Where respondent wrote letters to negotiate claims on behalf of clients while suspended from the practice of law, respondent was still culpable of engaging in the unauthorized practice of law despite having filed a motion to stay his suspension. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [2]

Sections 6125 and 6126 of the Business and Professions Code, which prohibit practicing law or holding oneself out as entitled to practice law by anyone other than an active attorney, are not of themselves disciplinary offenses. The appropriate method of charging disciplinary violations of those sections is by way of adding a charge of a violation of section 6068, subdivision (a), which imposes upon an attorney the duty to support state laws, to sections 6125 and 6126. Even though section 6068, subdivision (a), was not charged, the review department upheld the hearing judge's findings that respondent violated sections 6125 and 6126 where the amended charges made it clear both by text and citation to sections 6125 and 6126 that respondent was being charged with accepting employment from and holding himself out as entitled to practice law while respondent was suspended, and where respondent failed to object and show any evidence of specific prejudice arising from the failure to add section 6068, subdivision (a), to the underlying charges. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [7]

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

It was not improper for petitioner for reinstatement to have continued to work as a paralegal for his son in his former office after resigning with charges pending, where petitioner did not engage in any acts constituting the practice of law while so employed. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [12]

Statement by resigning attorney to clients that he would assist another attorney in handling their matters was proper, where attorney did not suggest that he would be acting as clients' attorney in so doing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [14]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for another attorney, and two former clients of the resigned attorney, although aware he was no longer practicing law, submitted checks payable to him for legal services from the other attorney, and where he promptly endorsed the checks over to the other attorney, neither the checks nor the resigned attorney's handling of them supported the claim that he had held himself out as entitled to practice law. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [15]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for a sole practitioner, and attorney-client contracts and letters from the sole practitioner contained plural references to attorneys, these plural references did not establish that the resigned attorney had held himself out as entitled to practice law, where the resigned attorney was not aware of these plural references, and the sole practitioner hired other attorneys to assist on a contract basis. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [16]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for his son's law firm despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, but the evidence indicated that the firm name was beyond the resigned attorney's control, and there was no credible evidence that the public or clients were in fact misled or that the resigned attorney had practiced law after resigning, the review department deferred to the hearing judge's favorable credibility determinations and concluded that the resigned attorney had not held himself out as entitled to practice law. The resigned attorney's continued employment in a situation where the public and clients could easily be misled clearly called into question his suitability for reinstatement, but under all the circumstances did not establish his lack of rehabilitation or present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [18]

Where respondent was suspended from practice as a result of disciplinary charges, and by omitting this fact from his application for a position as a judicial arbitrator, created the false impression that he was currently able to practice law, respondent's gross negligence in failing to ascertain that active membership in the State Bar was a requirement of the position, and his improper holding himself out as entitled to practice law, constituted an act involving moral turpitude. A suspended attorney cannot expressly or impliedly create or leave undisturbed the false impression that the attorney has the ability to practice law. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [3]

Where respondent, who had been previously suspended from practice, described his legal career to a prospective employer in such a way as to indicate that respondent's practice of law had been uninterrupted, it was sufficient to establish culpability of misrepresentation to show that respondent knowingly presented a statement which itself tended to mislead. It was not material that the employer did not rely on the application or was not in fact deceived. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [6]

Instructions on a job application asking for a statement of those experiences which met the requirements of the position sought did not entitle respondent to misrepresent his employment history by selective omissions or misrepresentations calculated to imply that there had been no hiatus in his ability to practice law. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [7]

A hearing judge's statement that the State Bar Court has a duty to ensure that suspended attorneys are scrupulously honest regarding their suspensions did not indicate that the judge had improperly shifted the burden of proof on culpability at the disciplinary hearing from the State Bar to the respondent. The view that suspended attorneys have a duty not to mislead the public about their suspensions has also been expressed by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [8]

Departure from the disciplinary standards was not justified based on the novelty of the issues raised in the matter, when the misconduct involved was respondent's misrepresentation of his status as an attorney, an area in which the governing rules have been clearly established for many years. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [12]

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

Notice to show cause properly charged respondent with practicing law while suspended, in violation of sections 6125 and 6126(b), despite language in notice describing respondent as having made court appearance while "on inactive . . . status," when respondent was actually suspended for nonpayment of dues. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

Charging an attorney with a violation of the duty to support the Constitution and laws, by reason of the attorney's violation of the statutes prohibiting practicing law while suspended, provides the basis for imposition of professional discipline for unauthorized practice. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [12]

Discipline may appropriately be imposed based on an attorney's unauthorized practice of law when the attorney is charged with violating sections 6068(a) and sections 6125 or 6126. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [16]

Respondent's violation of statutes prohibiting unauthorized practice of law was established by unanswered charges and uncontroverted evidence showing that respondent appeared in court after the effective date of his involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [20]

Sections 6125 and 6126 together, when coupled with a section 6068(a) charge, create a basis for discipline for unlawful practice of law by a member of the State Bar. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [4]

231.01 Found

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

231.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

231.50 Section 6127 (unauthorized practice - contempt)

Business and Professions Code section 6127(b) does not apply to a member of the State Bar practicing law while suspended. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [4]

Section 6127 does not authorize discipline for unauthorized practice of law that constitutes contempt of federal court. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [5]

231.51 Found

231.55 Not Found

In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

232.00 Section 6128 (improper practices - misdemeanors)

Statute which requires that if a party is represented by counsel, papers must be served on counsel rather than on the party, does not apply to the service of a summons or a writ. Therefore, respondent did not have to serve alternative writ and petition for writ on opposing party's counsel, but could serve opposing party personally. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [1]

Where an appeal and a petition for extraordinary writ had each been pursued by respondent, a notice to show cause charging respondent with "pursu[ing] appeals in bad faith" did not convey sufficient information to advise respondent that the manner of service of the writ of mandate was at issue in the disciplinary case. Respondent therefore was not held culpable for alleged misconduct in connection with the writ proceeding since the notice to show cause did not provide reasonable notice of such charges. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [6]

Where neither party sought review of the dismissal of misrepresentation charges, and the testimony at the hearing was in conflict on the matter, then in light of the weight accorded to credibility findings of the trier of fact and in view of the record as a whole, the review department adopted the hearing department's findings regarding the misrepresentation charge. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [9]

232.01 Found

232.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517.

233.00 Section 6129 (buying claims - misdemeanor)

233.01 Found

233.05 Not Found

234.00 Section 6130 (suing on assigned claim while suspended)

234.01 Found

234.05 Not Found

235.00 Section 6131 (criminal defense by prosecutor or partner)

235.01 Found

235.05 Not Found

236.00 Section 6132 (removal of disbarred attorney from firm name)

A law firm is required by statute to remove from its business name the name of an attorney who is disbarred or resigns with discipline charges pending. The May 1989 Rules of Professional Conduct explicitly provide that a law firm's name can itself constitute a prohibited misleading communication, and the definition of "communication" in the predecessor rules was also broad enough to encompass law firm names. However, where a resigned attorney continued to work for his attorney son as a paralegal despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, any possible misconduct by the son regarding his firm's name was not before the State Bar Court on the father's petition for reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [17]

236.01 Found

236.05 Not Found

237.00 Section 6133 (employing disbarred attorney to practice law)

237.01 Found

237.05 Not Found

240.00 Section 6146 (medical malpractice contingent fee limits)

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statute limiting contingent fees in medical negligence cases prohibits attorneys from either contracting for or collecting a contingent fee in excess of statutory limits. Where respondent had no written fee agreement, but agreed orally to accept fee to be awarded by court if result was successful, evidence was not clear and convincing that respondent had a contingent fee contract. However, once respondent received court-awarded fee after settlement of case, respondent collected a contingent fee within meaning of fee limit statute. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [5]

When attorney contracts for contingent fee in medical negligence case, maximum collectible fee is set by statutory limits in effect at time contract was entered into. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [7]

Statutory limit on attorneys' contingent fees for representation of plaintiffs in medical negligence actions applies whether person represented is responsible adult, infant or person of unsound mind and regardless of whether recovery is by settlement, arbitration or judgment. Where respondent failed to reveal potential applicability of such statute to incompetent client's representative and superior court ruling on respondent's fee application, such conduct frustrated court's function in passing upon fee request and client's interest in receiving all of recovery to which she was entitled, and violated attorney's duty to uphold law and rule against charging or collecting illegal fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [8]

Clients may not waive statutory limit on contingent fees in medical negligence cases, and superior court award of such fees in excess of statutory limits is erroneous. Where attorney did not reveal material issue of potential applicability of such statutory fee limit to superior court in connection with approval of settlement and award of fees, such award did not constitute res judicata, because attorney and client were not adversaries in proceeding. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [9]

Where respondent's client's settlement had always been treated by civil court and by counsel in civil proceeding as having certain value, respondent's argument in disciplinary proceeding that settlement had different value for purpose of applying statutory contingent fee limits was without merit. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [10]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Respondent's failure to disclose potential applicability to client's case of statute limiting amount of attorney's fees caused significant harm to client and administration of justice. Failure to comply with statute requiring written fee agreement and disclosures also harmed client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [18]

In light of respondent's recognized expertise regarding statutory contingent fee limits in medical negligence cases, his persistent claim that he was not obligated to discuss potential applicability of every law in every book in his library with medical negligence client and superior court judge was frivolous and betrayed disdain for his client and trial court. Similarly, respondent's claim that he was victim of uncertain law regarding fee limitation statute demonstrated lack of candor with State Bar Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [19]

Respondent's duty to medical negligence client was not confined solely to obtaining successful recovery on client's claim. Respondent also had duty of utmost good faith and fidelity to client, which required him to advise client candidly of application of statutory limit on fee he could charge client. Where respondent overreached client by concealing such statute through recklessness or gross neglect, and collected excessive fee thereby, such conduct was patent breach of respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing to client, and was very serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [21]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Where, after prior discipline in connection with violation of statutory contingent fee limit in medical negligence cases, respondent continued to assert that such fee limit did not apply to particular case, it was appropriate to require as condition of disciplinary probation that respondent provide written retainer agreements to all medical negligence plaintiff clients not paying on hourly basis; that such agreements disclose statutory fee schedule; and that disclosures regarding fee limit be contained in such fee agreements and in declarations to be presented to judges approving respondent's petitions for attorney representation or attorney fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [24]

240.01 Found

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

240.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

241.00 Section 6147 (requirements for contingent fee agreements)

Although respondent never entered into a written contingent fee agreement with his client as required by Business and Professions Code section 6147, the failure to enter into a written contingent fee agreement is not a disciplinable offense. Thus, the review department did not adopt the hearing judge's aggravation determination with respect to this issue. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [7]

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

Respondent's failure to disclose potential applicability to client's case of statute limiting amount of attorney's fees caused significant harm to client and administration of justice. Failure to comply with statute requiring written fee agreement and disclosures also harmed client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [18]

Where, after prior discipline in connection with violation of statutory contingent fee limit in medical negligence cases, respondent continued to assert that such fee limit did not apply to particular case, it was appropriate to require as condition of disciplinary probation that respondent provide written retainer agreements to all medical negligence plaintiff clients not paying on hourly basis; that such agreements disclose statutory fee schedule; and that disclosures regarding fee limit be contained in such fee agreements and in declarations to be presented to judges approving respondent's petitions for attorney representation or attorney fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [24]

Respondent's oral contingent fee agreement with a personal injury client was voidable by the client under section 6147, but respondent was entitled to a reasonable fee. Where the reasonable value of respondent's services exceeded the amount of the contingency fee, the hearing judge properly found that respondent was entitled to the contingency fee amount. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [5]

241.01 Found

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

241.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

242.00 Section 6148 (written fee agreements)

Violation of State Bar Act section that is not, by its terms, disciplinable offense may be grounds for finding violation of statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. Where respondent was charged with violating statutory fee limitations and written fee agreement and disclosure requirements which are not, by their terms, disciplinable offenses, charge of violating statute requiring attorneys to uphold law was required as conduit to allege other violations, and such charge should not have been dismissed as unnecessary. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [4]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

Attorneys are not permitted to set their fees unilaterally. If a client contests fees charged or paid, the disputed fees must be placed in a trust account until the conflict is resolved. The duty to account for client funds includes a duty to maintain adequate records of fees drawn against an advanced fee and of fee payments made thereafter, and to provide clients with an appropriate accounting. In evaluating the promptness and adequacy of such an accounting, it was appropriate to look to the standards set forth in the statute governing attorneys' bills for fees and costs, even where a violation of that statute was not charged. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [3]

Where respondent's failure to adhere to statutory requirement of written attorney-client fee agreements was at heart of both matters in which he had been charged with misconduct, and respondent's attention needed to be directed to written fee agreements and also to his obligations upon withdrawal from employment, public reproval was properly conditioned on completion of State Bar Ethics School. Its format of classroom instruction, followed by a test, would better remedy these problems than the more passive experience of the California Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [14]

Keeping proper records prepares attorneys to prove honesty and fair dealing when their actions are called into question, and is part of their duty in the attorney-client relationship. Written fee agreements not only protect clients and help to ensure that a fair and understandable fee agreement is reached for specified services, but can also aid the attorney as well in proving the terms of engagement. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [15]

242.01 Found

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

242.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

243.00 Sections 6150-6154 (solicitation; runners and cappers)

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

The reason behind the long-standing prohibition in the rules of professional conduct or state law, against capping and improper partnership and fee division activities between lawyers and non-lawyers, is the potential these activities have to adversely affect the independent professional judgment of the lawyer. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [3]

Finding of culpability of violating attorney's duty to uphold the law was proper, where attorney was found to have violated criminal provision of Business and Professions Code as charged in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [8]

Supreme Court attorney disciplinary opinions in which prohibited solicitation or capping activities were a significant or sole part of the lawyer's misconduct have imposed discipline ranging from six months actual suspension for isolated acts to disbarment in a few aggravated cases. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [9]

243.01 Found

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

243.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

245.00 Section 6158.7 (violation of advertising statutes)

245.01 Found

245.05 Not Found

250 Rules of Professional Conduct (RPC) Violations

Note: References to "1975 RPC" are to the rules in effect from 1975 to May 26, 1989.

251.10 Obey discipline conditions (RPC 1-110; 1975 RPC 9-101)

Hearing judge properly deemed allegations in notice of disciplinary charges to be admitted by virtue of respondent's default. Where admitted allegations showed respondent had received public reproval with conditions attached in prior discipline matter, and had failed to comply with certain conditions, hearing judge properly found clear and convincing evidence that respondent violated conditions of prior disciplinary order, in violation of rule 1-110. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [5]

Even though respondent was culpable of failing to comply with the conditions attached to his private reproval, the review department did not strictly apply the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct for such violations which calls for suspension. Instead, the review department imposed a public reproval because of respondent's extensive participation in the proceeding and because respondent acknowledged his obligation to comply with State Bar Court orders. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[5]

Attorney violated duty to comply with conditions attached to reproval previously imposed on him by State Bar Court by failing to file two probation reports and not providing proof of completion of six hours of continuing legal education. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [1]

Where respondent violated Supreme Court order imposing disciplinary probation, and hearing judge properly found that respondent had violated statute requiring compliance with probation conditions, respondent was also culpable of violating statute requiring compliance with court orders. However, review department did not need to modify hearing judge's decision to include additional statute and rule violations where review department's recommendation did not depend on whether the misconduct also violated those additional duplicative violations. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [2]

When a requirement to take and pass the professional responsibility examination is attached as a condition to a reproval, wilful failure to comply may be cause for a separate disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [7]

251.11 Found

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

251.15 Not Found

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

251.20 Assist, solicit or induce violation (RPC 1-120)

251.21 Found

251.25 Not Found

251.30 Admissions fraud (RPC 1-200(A))

Respondent stipulated that she did not disclose to the Committee of Bar Examiners pending misdemeanor charges against her, nor did she disclose to the State Bar after her admission to practice law her conviction of challenging another person in a public place to fight. When respondent was charged criminally, there was no formal record of those events before the Committee of Bar Examiners. It was therefore incumbent on respondent to timely and candidly disclose the charges and her later conviction so that the Committee of Bar Examiners could make adequate inquiry. The criminal charges and subsequent convictions were "material facts" within the meaning of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 1–200(A). "Materiality" used in the context of this rule is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable person would consider it important in evaluating whether an applicant for admission to the practice of law is of requisite good moral character. Materiality for purposes of this rule does not mean facts that are necessarily outcome–determinative of a finding of moral character. Information is material for purposes of the rule when it is specifically required to be disclosed on the application for admission or is of the nature that it comes within the continuing duty to update the application. The information regarding respondent's criminal charges, when taken in the context of respondent's application for admission, would have been considered by the Committee of Bar Examiners as relevant to its determination of respondent's moral fitness or capacity to practice law and was therefore material, even though the information in all likelihood would not have affected the ultimate determination of moral fitness to practice law. In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746. [2a, b]

251.31 Found

In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746.

251.35 Not Found

251.40 Support unqualified applicant (RPC 1-200(B); 1975 RPC 1-101)

251.41 Found

251.45 Not Found

252.00 Aid unauthorized practice (RPC 1-300(A); 1975 RPC 3-101(A))

Where respondent repeatedly failed to review bankruptcy petitions prepared by paralegal before they were filed; filed petitions and supporting documents that were incomplete and contained false statements; failed to investigate corporate status of entities on whose behalf she filed bankruptcy petitions, and failed to supervise her paralegal, respondent was culpable both of reckless failure to perform competently, and of aiding her paralegal's unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [2 a, b]

Where respondent entered into "legal representation agreements" with loan modification clients, but his standard procedure was that nonattorney employees performed all services contemplated by such agreements, and he was not involved unless his staff consulted him, respondent in essence created a lay negotiating service that permitted nonlawyers to practice law without his oversight. While some services provided under the agreements could legally have been performed by nonlawyers, when they were performed in respondent's law office, they nonetheless constituted the practice of law. Accordingly, respondent violated rule 1-300(A) of Rules of Professional conduct, which prohibits aiding the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [3]

Where respondent was found culpable of aiding the unauthorized practice of law, in violation of rule 1-300(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and charges that respondent lent his name for use by non-attorneys, in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6105, were based entirely on same facts, section 6105 charges were duplicative. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [4]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Respondent aided a non-lawyer in the practice of law where the non-lawyer and the non-lawyer's staff worked in offices bearing respondent's name, answered phones in respondent's name, and conducted correspondence and negotiations in respondent's name, with little or no input from respondent. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3]

252.01 Found

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

252.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

252.10 Unauthorized practice in other jurisdiction (RPC 1-300(B); 1975 RPC 3-101(B)) (practice in other jurisdictions)

In order to find culpability under rule 1-300(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the State Bar Court must examine applicable out-of-state authority to determine whether a California attorney has violated professional regulations in a foreign jurisdiction. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [1]

Respondent committed UPL in violation of authority in Wisconsin and New York, which only allow attorneys currently licensed in those states to practice law there, when he: 1) held himself out to clients in those states as an attorney with knowledge and authority to settle consumer debts; 2) represented to creditors that they should follow debt collection laws or his clients were prepared to take legal action; and 3) reviewed client files to determine whether they should file for bankruptcy despite having no license to perform bankruptcies outside of California. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [2 a,b]

Respondent violated seven states' UPL rules of professional conduct, which are either identical or substantially similar to the American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 5.5(b), prohibiting a lawyer not licensed in a state from either: 1) establishing an office or other systemic and continuous presence in the state; or 2) holding out to the public or otherwise representing that the lawyer is admitted to practice law in the state. The form of communications used by respondent—specifically the use of the term "The Law Offices of" on Legal Services Agreements and cease and desist letters, and representations that the office acted as a "law firm" for clients and provided "legal services"—was evidence that he held himself out as entitled to practice law in states where he was unlicensed. By implying he was licensed in these seven states, respondent gave the false impression to clients and creditors that he held an advantage over a non-attorney debt negotiator. He also explicitly represented to clients he would perform legal services, and informed creditors that he was representing each client using law office letterhead. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [3 a-c]

Respondent's conduct did not fall under any safe harbor provision under American Bar Association's Model Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 5.5(b), which allows out-of-state attorneys to practice temporarily in states where they are not licensed without committing UPL. First, applying the factors defined by the model rule, respondent's contact with out-of-state clients was not reasonably related to his practice in California. Likewise, his contentions that the Model Rule enabled him to provide legal services related to bankruptcy law failed where his proposed legal services were not limited to issues of bankruptcy and he was not admitted to practice law in the federal courts or any of the seven states at issue. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [4 a-c]

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

Where respondent's representation of a client was not confined exclusively to the practice of law in federal court or before the EEOC but also included resolving the client's state tort claims as well as providing legal advice and counsel regarding the South Carolina Human Affairs Commission, the doctrine of federal preemption did not preclude a finding of culpability for the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [1a, b]

Where respondent stated on much of her correspondence and her business card that she was licensed in California and was of counsel to the law office of a South Carolina attorney and designated her South Carolina office as an out of state administrative office and where respondent failed to advise clients that she was licensed only in California or that she was unlicensed in South Carolina, respondent held herself out as entitled to practice law. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [2]

Ordinarily in disciplinary proceedings culpability must be established by convincing proof and to a reasonable certainty. However, this standard does not apply where otherwise provided by law. Therefore in finding a violation of rule 1–300, proof beyond a reasonable doubt is constitutionally required because the applicable South Carolina statute regulating the profession makes the unauthorized practice of law a crime. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [8]

(Former) rule 3-101(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, by its terms, appears to have been designed to permit the California State Bar to discipline its members for making unauthorized appearances in courts other than California state courts, and is not a proper basis for disciplining members for appearing in California state courts while suspended or inactive. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [23]

252.11 Found

In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418

In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

252.15 Not Found

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

252.20 Law partnership with non-lawyer (RPC 1-310; 1975 RPC 3-103)

Respondent did not enter into a partnership involving the practice of law with a non-lawyer where the evidence established that the non-lawyer shared in the firm's profits, but failed to show that the non-lawyer had an ownership interest in the firm's assets or the clients' files, had an obligation to pay any portion of the firm's liabilities, held himself out as respondent's partner during the term of the relationship with respondent, or had access to respondent's general account or trust account. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [1]

Where an attorney permitted a non-lawyer to misuse the attorney's name to conduct a large personal injury practice, the attorney could not be held separately culpable for each item of harm that resulted, without proof of his or her actual knowledge. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [3]

Where respondent, oblivious to the Rules of Professional Conduct, intentionally created a personal injury practice in conjunction with a non-lawyer without adequate controls, and inadequately supervised the non-lawyer's conduct of the practice over a two-year period, acting with gross neglect and in a manner bordering on extreme recklessness, respondent's conduct violated the statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [4]

Where respondent had passed professional responsibility examination 10 years earlier, but seemed to have learned nothing from that experience which would have helped him avoid disciplinary proceeding arising out of his abdicating responsibility for his law practice to a non-lawyer, it was appropriate to require respondent to take and pass California Professional Responsibility Examination prior to expiration of his actual suspension. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [8]

Where respondent had been found culpable of misconduct arising from his abdication of responsibility for his law practice to a non-lawyer, review department recommended that hearing regarding respondent's fitness to return to practice focus on adequate assurance that respondent could institute a law practice with appropriate ethical safeguards. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [9]

252.21 Found

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

252.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

Note: For rule 1-311 (employing lawyer ineligible to practice), see topic number 252.60 et seq.

252.30 Sharing fee with non-lawyer (RPC 1-320(A); 1975 RPC 3-102(A))

Respondent shared fees with a non-lawyer where the non-lawyer received a percentage of the net fees on the cases he handled for respondent. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [2]

The ethical prohibition against fee-splitting between lawyer and non-lawyer is directed at the risk posed by the possibility of control of legal matters by the non-lawyer, interested more in personal profit than the client's welfare. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [5]

252.31 Found

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

252.35 Not Found

252.40 Improper referral fees (RPC 1-320(B); 1975 RPC 3-102(B))

252.41 Found

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

252.45 Not Found

252.50 Paid publicity (RPC 1-320(C); 1975 RPC 3-102(C))

252.51 Found

252.55 Not Found

252.60 Employment of lawyer not eligible to practice (RPC 1-311)

252.61 Found

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

252.65 Not Found

253.00 Improper solicitation (RPC 1-400(C); 1975 RPC 2-101(B))

Where client's unchallenged testimony was that photographer who appeared at scene of car accident gave client respondent's business card, and told client he would send photos to respondent and respondent would represent client, and respondent confirmed receipt of photos and sent staff person to obtain client's signature on retainer agreement, improper solicitation was shown by clear and convincing evidence, and Review Department reversed hearing judge's finding of no culpability. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [2]

In a prosecution for a violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 1-400(C), the review department rejected respondent's assertion that he reasonably believed he had a prior professional relationship with the client where the evidence established (1) that respondent knew that another attorney, rather than respondent, had been assigned to represent the client and (2) that even if respondent did not know this fact at the time he set up a meeting with the client, respondent was put on notice of the fact once the client stated to him at the meeting that he was represented by another attorney. The danger of solicitation is that lawyers, trained in persuasion, may attempt to use such skills on potential clients who are vulnerable and susceptible to manipulation, and the record in this case demonstrated that a concern about that danger is justified. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [13]

Even if respondent had received messages to call each prospective client from a "friend" of the prospective client, his solicitation telephone call or calls to each prospective client violated rule 1-400(C) of the Rules of Professional Conduct because none of the prospective clients had requested the "friend" to ask respondent to call them. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [1]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

A State Bar disciplinary matter does not deal with civil responsibility where a party might be under a duty to mitigate harm or damages. The State Bar is entitled to investigate whatever information it acquires about misconduct without notifying the attorney involved contemporaneously, and it did not act improperly by failing to notify attorneys promptly when it learned of solicitation of clients by attorneys' agents. State Bar rules require only that attorneys be given an opportunity to explain or deny matters under investigation prior to issuance of notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 509(b).) In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [3]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

Culpability can be established in attorney disciplinary proceedings either by direct or circumstantial evidence, and circumstantial evidence has been considered on a regular basis in cases involving improper client solicitation by an attorney's agents. Culpability findings regarding charge of improper client solicitation were proper where, in addition to circumstantial evidence, there was inculpatory direct evidence in the record, and hearing judge properly evaluated and weighed witness testimony. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [10]

Where respondents set up distant branch office with intent to be present only one day per week; authorized non-lawyer independent contractors to explain complex and unusual fee agreements to prospective clients; did not review cases or speak with clients until after clients had signed fee agreements; paid contractors in cash based on viability of cases, and implausibly characterized contractors as investigators; ignored indications of excessive non-lawyer control of cases; chose to disbelieve clients' reports that contractors had solicited them, and did not present convincing explanation about how they believed clients had come to retain them, hearing judge's findings that respondents knew of contractors' solicitation of clients were supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [11]

Solicitation of clients may be constitutionally protected under the First Amendment depending on the occupation or profession involved and certain other circumstances. Free speech guarantees have been held not to prevent enforcement of California's rules governing in-person solicitation, and solicitation of clients for lawyers has long been illegal in California. Where accident victims were tempted by persuasiveness of respondents' non-lawyer agents who had superior access to police reports, and in one instance a victim was solicited minutes after returning from the hospital, such facts showed constitutional justification for prohibition of such in-person solicitation. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [12]

Where respondents made a shared decision to operate a distant branch office using non-lawyer independent contractors paid in cash to sign up clients, respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by violating the client solicitation rules and conspiring to violate such rules; their involvement in repeated client solicitation constituted "corruption" within the meaning of the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [13]

253.01 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

253.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

253.10 False/misleading communication (RPC 1-400(D); 1975 RPC 2-101(A))

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Illegal use of the Great Seal of the State of California on respondent's letterhead was inherently inappropriate even if no one was misled. Fact that no one was misled was only a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [2]

Because evidence established that respondent was at least reckless in allowing a misleading solicitation letter to be disseminated on his behalf by a temporary employee, he was technically culpable for violating the rule of professional conduct prohibiting misleading advertisements. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [6]

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

A State Bar disciplinary matter does not deal with civil responsibility where a party might be under a duty to mitigate harm or damages. The State Bar is entitled to investigate whatever information it acquires about misconduct without notifying the attorney involved contemporaneously, and it did not act improperly by failing to notify attorneys promptly when it learned of solicitation of clients by attorneys' agents. State Bar rules require only that attorneys be given an opportunity to explain or deny matters under investigation prior to issuance of notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 509(b).) In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [3]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

Where respondents set up distant branch office with intent to be present only one day per week; authorized non-lawyer independent contractors to explain complex and unusual fee agreements to prospective clients; did not review cases or speak with clients until after clients had signed fee agreements; paid contractors in cash based on viability of cases, and implausibly characterized contractors as investigators; ignored indications of excessive non-lawyer control of cases; chose to disbelieve clients' reports that contractors had solicited them, and did not present convincing explanation about how they believed clients had come to retain them, hearing judge's findings that respondents knew of contractors' solicitation of clients were supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [11]

Where respondents made a shared decision to operate a distant branch office using non-lawyer independent contractors paid in cash to sign up clients, respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by violating the client solicitation rules and conspiring to violate such rules; their involvement in repeated client solicitation constituted "corruption" within the meaning of the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [13]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

A law firm is required by statute to remove from its business name the name of an attorney who is disbarred or resigns with discipline charges pending. The May 1989 Rules of Professional Conduct explicitly provide that a law firm's name can itself constitute a prohibited misleading communication, and the definition of "communication" in the predecessor rules was also broad enough to encompass law firm names. However, where a resigned attorney continued to work for his attorney son as a paralegal despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, any possible misconduct by the son regarding his firm's name was not before the State Bar Court on the father's petition for reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [17]

253.11 Found

In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

253.15 Not Found

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

253.20 Runners and cappers (1975 RPC 2-101(C))

Where notice to show cause charging client solicitation did not identify clients allegedly solicited, but did name persons who were alleged to have performed such solicitations and fixed the period of charged misconduct, and where respondents were informed of identities of allegedly solicited clients well before most pre-trial discovery was completed, and at least six months before trial, respondents' motion to dismiss notice to show cause based on alleged vagueness, which was not made until first day of trial, was properly denied. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [1]

The purpose of the notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding is to serve as a determination that probable cause exists to warrant formal charges. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 510.) Accordingly, statements of probable cause, which identified clients allegedly involved in solicitation charged in notice to show cause, served as equivalent of amendments to notice to show cause. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [2]

A State Bar disciplinary matter does not deal with civil responsibility where a party might be under a duty to mitigate harm or damages. The State Bar is entitled to investigate whatever information it acquires about misconduct without notifying the attorney involved contemporaneously, and it did not act improperly by failing to notify attorneys promptly when it learned of solicitation of clients by attorneys' agents. State Bar rules require only that attorneys be given an opportunity to explain or deny matters under investigation prior to issuance of notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 509(b).) In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [3]

Where respondents' non-lawyer agents solicited a client who, unknown to them, was a State Bar attorney, and invited that attorney to respondents' office, that attorney did not improperly search respondents' law office by reading papers spread out on table in front of him by respondents' staff, without touching papers or opening any cabinets, drawers, or files. Such conduct would not have been improper if committed by a police agency in collecting evidence in a criminal case. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [5]

Where respondents set up distant branch office with intent to be present only one day per week; authorized non-lawyer independent contractors to explain complex and unusual fee agreements to prospective clients; did not review cases or speak with clients until after clients had signed fee agreements; paid contractors in cash based on viability of cases, and implausibly characterized contractors as investigators; ignored indications of excessive non-lawyer control of cases; chose to disbelieve clients' reports that contractors had solicited them, and did not present convincing explanation about how they believed clients had come to retain them, hearing judge's findings that respondents knew of contractors' solicitation of clients were supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [11]

Solicitation of clients may be constitutionally protected under the First Amendment depending on the occupation or profession involved and certain other circumstances. Free speech guarantees have been held not to prevent enforcement of California's rules governing in-person solicitation, and solicitation of clients for lawyers has long been illegal in California. Where accident victims were tempted by persuasiveness of respondents' non-lawyer agents who had superior access to police reports, and in one instance a victim was solicited minutes after returning from the hospital, such facts showed constitutional justification for prohibition of such in-person solicitation. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [12]

Where respondents made a shared decision to operate a distant branch office using non-lawyer independent contractors paid in cash to sign up clients, respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by violating the client solicitation rules and conspiring to violate such rules; their involvement in repeated client solicitation constituted "corruption" within the meaning of the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [13]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

253.21 Found

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

253.25 Not Found

253.30 Retain copies of communications (RPC 1-400(F); 1975 RPC 2-101(E))

253.31 Found

253.35 Not Found

255.00 Improper practice restrictions (RPC 1-500; 1975 RPC 2-109)

255.01 Found

255.05 Not Found

255.30 Improper legal service program (RPC 1-600(A); 1975 RPC 2-102(A))

255.31 Found

255.35 Not Found

256.00 Violation of ethics rules for judicial candidates (RPC 1-700)

Attorneys cannot be disciplined for speech that is protected by the First Amendment. However, because attorneys are officers of the court, reasonable speech restrictions may be imposed on them. Rule 1-700, which regulates speech by attorney candidates for judicial office, burdens a category of speech at the core of First Amendment freedoms, but false statements are not protected speech and may be basis for discipline if made intentionally or with reckless disregard for truth. Objective "reasonable attorney" test, rather than subjective test, is properly applied in determining whether statement was made with reckless disregard for truth. Attorney judicial candidate, who made a false claim that his opponent was involved in corporate fraud and bribery, was culpable of violating rule 1-700 because he made the factual misrepresentation knowingly or with reckless disregard for the truth as viewed under an objective standard. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [1 a-c]

Rule 1-700, on its face, prohibits attorney judicial candidates only from making false statements, not misleading ones. State Bar has burden of proving falsity of statements by clear and convincing evidence. Attorney judicial candidate was not culpable for violating rule 1-700 for engaging in truthful but misleading or potentially misleading speech about his opponent. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [2 a,b]

256.01 Found

In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370

256.05 Not found

In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370

256.50 Violation of ethics rules for adjudicators (RPC 1-710)

256.51 Found

256.55 Not Found

257.00 Communication with represented party (RPC 2-100; 1975 RPC 7-103)

Where respondent, who represented tenants in a negligence lawsuit against an apartment owner, communicated with an incarcerated individual, who was not a party to the negligence lawsuit but was nevertheless represented by counsel, such communications are not in violation of rule 2–100. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [1 a, b]

The review department determined that respondent's office contacted a represented party where, after respondent's employee sent a letter to a particular employee at an insurance company, counsel representing the insurance company sent a letter notifying respondent that he had contacted a represented party, but respondent's employee nevertheless sent a second letter to the same employee at the insurance company. The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the letter sent to respondent by counsel for the insurance company was either that the insurance company employee held one of the positions listed in Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 2-100(B)(1) or that the statements or actions of the insurance company employee pertaining to the matter would be binding upon, imputed to, or constitute an admission on the part of the insurance company. Moreover, respondent appeared to concede that the insurance company employee constituted a represented party in his letter to the State Bar. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[11]

Where respondent had been alerted to a problem in the way his employees ran his office but took no action to correct the problem, and it appeared that respondent failed to guide his staff and review their work, respondent was culpable of violating Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-110(A). In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[12]

Respondent's communication with an opposing client when he knew that the opposing client was represented by counsel was a wilful violation of rule 2-100 (A), Rules of Professional Conduct. The contact occurred during litigation and respondent had no excuse for the communication. Had he meant to extend a courtesy to opposing counsel, a much different method and communication would have been appropriate. It is well settled that rule 2-100 (A) and its predecessor former rule 12 are therapeutic rules designed, in part, to shield the represented party from well-meaning, but misguided advances by an attorney to an adverse party as well as deliberately improper ones. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[1]

Where it was not clear, given federal case law interpreting similar ABA ethics rule, that county employees contacted by respondent's office came within definition of "party" in rule prohibiting direct contact with opposing party represented by counsel, and where it was possible that such contact came within exception for communications with public officials or otherwise authorized by law, record did not establish by clear and convincing evidence that such contact violated rule. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

An attorney who is representing a client may not communicate directly or indirectly about the subject of the representation with a party whom the attorney knows to be represented by another lawyer in the matter, unless the attorney has the consent of the other lawyer. Where respondent represented a defendant in a criminal case, and a co-defendant's lawyer had authorized respondent to communicate with the co-defendant only for the purpose of preparing a joint defense, respondent's communication with the co-defendant about a plea bargain without the other lawyer's consent was improper. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [6]

When a party already represented by counsel seeks advice from an independent lawyer of the party's choice in order to hire new counsel or obtain a second opinion, attorneys may communicate with such party. However, where respondent represented a defendant in a criminal case, knew that another lawyer represented another defendant in the case, and conceded that a potential conflict existed between the interests of the two defendants, this potential conflict prevented respondent from acting as an independent attorney whom the other defendant might consult for an unbiased second opinion. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [7]

Where respondent engaged in serious improper communications with a represented party, exposing the party to serious risks of harm, some of which occurred, and committed other stipulated wrongdoing, recommended discipline of four years probation conditioned on thirty days actual suspension was inconsistent with decisional law and insufficient. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [10]

Statute which requires that if a party is represented by counsel, papers must be served on counsel rather than on the party, does not apply to the service of a summons or a writ. Therefore, respondent did not have to serve alternative writ and petition for writ on opposing party's counsel, but could serve opposing party personally. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [1]

257.01 Found

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

257.05 Not Found

Where respondent, who represented tenants in a negligence lawsuit against an apartment owner, communicated with an incarcerated individual, who was not a party to the negligence lawsuit but was nevertheless represented by counsel, such communications are not in violation of rule 2–100. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [1 a, b]

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

258.00 Fee splitting with other lawyers (RPC 2-200(A); 1975 RPC 2-108(A))

258.01 Found

258.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

258.20 Referral fees to lawyers (RPC 2-200(B); 1975 RPC 2-108(B))

258.21 Found

258.25 Not Found

259.00 Improper sale of law practice (RPC 2-300)

259.01 Found

259.05 Not Found

260.00 Discrimination conduct in law practice (RPC 2-400)

260.01 Found

260.05 Not Found

265.00 Improperly revealing confidential client information (RPC 3-100)

265.01 Found

265.05 Not Found

270.30 Intentional, reckless, or repeated incompetence (RPC 3-110(A); 1975 RPC 6-101(A)(2)/(B))

Where respondent repeatedly failed to review bankruptcy petitions prepared by paralegal before they were filed; filed petitions and supporting documents that were incomplete and contained false statements; failed to investigate corporate status of entities on whose behalf she filed bankruptcy petitions, and failed to supervise her paralegal, respondent was culpable both of reckless failure to perform competently, and of aiding her paralegal's unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [2 a, b]

Respondent willfully violated section 3-110(A) by failing to prepare documents, failing to provide any service of value to clients, and failing to respond to her clients' phone calls and emails, particularly since the clients were concerned that the time to file a claim would expire. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263. [5]

Attorney did not perform incompetently where attorney did not know that search warrant affidavit he completed was substituted with a deficient search warrant affidavit by out of state sheriff's deputy. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [4]

Although noncompliance with a time limitation does not establish per se a failure to act competently, such noncompliance can constitute a violation of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 3–110(A) if it is not the result of mere negligence. Where respondent was counsel of record for a decade on a capital appeal, successfully moved for appointment of associate counsel, conferred with California Appellate Project staff counsel with respect to relevant issues, sufficiently familiarized himself with the record on appeal, and obtained eight extensions of time over almost two years to file an opening brief, respondent's failure to ultimately file an opening brief evidenced a reckless failure to perform legal services competently. Neither the Supreme Court's refusal to permit respondent's withdrawal nor perceived inadequacies of his draft opening brief by others excused respondent's failure to file a brief. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [1]

Where respondent's conduct of intentionally making no further appearances on behalf of her indigent clients established culpability for failing to perform competently and where such conduct was duplicative of the conduct surrounding respondent's improper withdrawal, no additional weight was assigned to the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5 a, b]

To find a violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3–110(A) due to respondent's failure to perform any service of benefit to his client, it must be determined that respondent acted in reckless disregard of his client's cause and not merely that respondent acted negligently. Where a client needed to urgently remedy her illegal immigration status, and where respondent waited at least nine months after being retained before completing meager research on the client's behalf, respondent's conduct constituted a reckless failure to perform in violation of rule 3–110(A). In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [1]

Although respondent's contract for hire stated it was for "Purchase of Availability" and described his legal fee as a "True Retainer Fee,"such characterization did not determine the obligations of the parties. Where the contract did not define the term "True Retainer Fee" and did not expressly state that the fee was due and payable regardless of whether any professional services were actually rendered, where the contract did not require respondent to make any particular provision to allot or set aside blocks of time specifically devoted to pursuing the client's claims, where the contract did not set forth a specific period of time when respondent was obligated to turn away other business in order to proceed with the client's matter, and where the individual who paid the fee understood that the fee was an advance against respondent's future services, respondent had an obligation to take timely, substantive action on the client's behalf rather than merely make himself available to the client. In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [2 a–d]

Where a client hired respondent to resolve the client's traffic violations in Arizona so that they would not result in the loss of the client's California license, respondent's payment of the client's traffic fines without conducting research or doing any investigation of the relationship of Arizona and California motor vehicle laws and their effect on the client's status as a licensed driver in California constituted a violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3–110(A). In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [5 a, b]

Rule 3-110(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct includes the duty to supervise the work of attorney and non-attorney staff. Respondent operated a high volume personal injury practice with multiple financial transactions occurring on a regular basis and that the office procedures she had in place were so lax that she could not possibly ensure the integrity of her clients' funds. Respondent did not sign checks drawn on her business or trust accounts. Instead, she authorized her staff to do so using a rubber stamp of her signature. Having delegated this significant authority to her staff, respondent had no procedures in place to ensure that client funds were protected. She did not regularly review these accounts, she did not review any trust account bank statement herself, she never compared the settlement checks she received with the deposits in the trust account, she never reconciled the trust account, nor did she review any of the cancelled checks for any of her accounts. The review department concluded that clear and convincing evidence was presented showing that respondent failed to supervise her non-attorney staff and thereby wilfully violated rule 3-110(A). In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [1]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for the proper operation of his law office. At a minimum, attorney must develop and maintain procedures for proper maintenance and protection of client files; calendaring court hearings and filing deadlines; tracking court hearing dates and filing deadlines; tracking correspondence and client communications; proper handling and accurate accounting of client trust funds and other property. Attorney must also train his staff on those procedures and supervise staff to ensure that procedures are followed. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [14]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

Even if respondent failed to appear at an immigration court hearing because he simply forgot to record the date of the hearing in his calendar, his failure to appear must be viewed in light of the record as a whole because, even if an attorney does not act intentionally or recklessly, he violates the rule of professional conduct regarding attorneys' duty to competently perform legal services if he repeatedly fails to competently perform. Respondent's failure to appear at the hearing could not be excused for disciplinary purposes because, under record as a whole,

his failure to appear was not isolated, but one of many such failures. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [25]

In a prosecution for intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failing to perform legal services competently, failing to refund an unearned fee after employment was terminated, and failing to deliver clients' funds promptly upon request, there was sufficient evidence that respondent represented the clients involved where one of the clients was referred to respondent and went to his office intending to hire him, saw his name on the door and some of his business cards in the reception area, made several appointments with him, received one of two receipts for payment on respondent's letterhead, and filled out forms for respondent at the request of a member of the office staff who was an employee or agent for respondent. Moreover, respondent had a key to the office, worked out of the office for at least a few hours each week, and, by failing to deny the fact upon accusation by the State Bar, admitted that the clients were his. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [7]

The review department determined that respondent's office contacted a represented party where, after respondent's employee sent a letter to a particular employee at an insurance company, counsel representing the insurance company sent a letter notifying respondent that he had contacted a represented party, but respondent's employee nevertheless sent a second letter to the same employee at the insurance company. The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the letter sent to respondent by counsel for the insurance company was either that the insurance company employee held one of the positions listed in Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 2-100(B)(1) or that the statements or actions of the insurance company employee pertaining to the matter would be binding upon, imputed to, or constitute an admission on the part of the insurance company. Moreover, respondent appeared to concede that the insurance company employee constituted a represented party in his letter to the State Bar. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [11]

Where respondent had been alerted to a problem in the way his employees ran his office but took no action to correct the problem, and it appeared that respondent failed to guide his staff and review their work, respondent was culpable of violating Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-110(A). In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [12]

Because respondent failed to competently perform legal services both before and after the September 14, 1992, effective date of the revised version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110), he violated both the "former" and the "current" versions of that rule. Thus, State Bar erred when it amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule and replacing it with a charge that he violated the "former" rule. State Bar should not have deleted the charge that respondent violated the "current" rule, but should have added to it a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [2]

Even though State Bar erroneously amended the charges to "conform to proof" by deleting the charge that respondent violated the revised (i.e., "current") version of the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring attorneys to competently perform legal services (rule 3-110 as amended eff. Sept. 14, 1992) and replacing it with a charge that respondent violated the "former" version of that rule instead of correctly amending the charges by adding, to the charged violation of the "current" rule, a charge that respondent also violated the "former" rule, no due process violation occurred when review department held that respondent was culpable of violating both the "former" rule and the "current" rule because (1) the text of both rules was virtually identical, (2) respondent did not argue lack of notice, and (3) the trial in hearing department covered respondent's conduct during the time period in which the "former" rule was in effect and after the effective date of the "current" rule. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [3]

Respondent's deliberate and unjustified failure to attend a status conference in client's workers' compensation case was reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [4]

Respondent's failure to perform any substantive work on client's workers' compensation case for more that five years was clearly repeated and reckless failure to competently perform legal services and violated rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [6]

Culpability of violating Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (m) cannot be sustained by a factual finding based on allegations that respondent gave a client incorrect legal advice. This is addressed by rule 3-110(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, which was neither charged nor proved. Negligent legal representation, even that amounting to legal malpractice, does not establish a rule 3-110(A) violation. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7 a, b, c]

Respondent was found culpable of violating rule 3-110(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Even if his client could not decide which remedy to pursue or even if his client was unable to provide respondent with needed information, respondent could not simply let the months pass with no action. Respondent's choice was to either pursue remedies warranted by the facts and law based on effective investigation and research or to withdraw from employment if and as appropriate under rule 3-700(C) of the Rules of Professional Conduct.In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [2 a-c]

Reliance solely on a clerk's advice regarding a continuance of a motion, without ensuring that an order exists attesting to the continuance, constitutes negligence and might well be reckless on the part of an experienced practitioner. However, as respondent was newly admitted to practice, his practice consisted of appearing before administrative law judges on Social Security matters, and he had little experience in the superior court, the review department concluded that there was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent's conduct was reckless or intentional. Thus, the evidence did not support a culpability determination under rule 3-110 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [3]

After determining that he no longer wished to represent his client, respondent remained the attorney of record for approximately one year. His failure to either progress the action to trial or take affirmative steps to be relieved as attorney of record was at least reckless and a violation of rule 3-110 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. The client's failure to cooperate in permitting respondent's withdrawal in no way excused respondent from making the necessary motion to be relieved as counsel of record. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [4]

There is no clear and convincing evidence that respondent's failure to have his client's medical records available at the client's administrative hearing was either intentional or reckless. Thus, while such conduct was negligent, it did not reach the level of a disciplinable offense for failing to perform competently in violation of rule 3-110 of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [7]

Respondent's two serious instances of reckless failure to perform legal services which resulted in the dismissal of his clients' civil lawsuits, and respondent's failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigations warrants a discipline recommendation of 18-months stayed suspension, two years of probation, and a 90-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.[4]

Regardless of whether a criminal court erred in concluding that respondent did properly perfect an appeal, respondent's failure to perform services competently occurred as a result of his withdrawing and leaving his client in jail without counsel following the criminal court's ruling, whether that ruling was correct or not. Respondent had an ethical obligation to his client to perform competently regardless of the criminal court's ruling, especially in view of the client's incarceration and later release on a writ of habeas corpus. In the Matter of Aulakh (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 690. [2]

Attorney's failure to communicate with a client may also constitute incompetent legal practice or abandonment of the client when facts demonstrate that attorney's failure to communicate resulted in the effective cessation of work on client's cause of action, foreclosed client from choices regarding her cause of action, or indicated a withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [5]

An attorney is not responsible for every event that takes place in the attorney's office, but the attorney does have a duty to reasonably supervise his office staff. And, once alerted to them, an attorney's gross neglect in not adequately addressing problems in law office is disciplinable as a failure to competently perform legal services in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [6]

An attorney's failure to adequately communicate with a client may evidence the attorney's lack of time to perform legal services competently in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [7]

Former Rule of Professional Conduct 6-101(B)(2)'s express proscription of repeatedly accepting employment or continuing representation in legal matters by attorneys who do not have sufficient time and resources to provide competent legal representation is now encompassed within Rule of Professional Conduct 3-110's proscription of attorneys intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failing to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [8]

The greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations of probation which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection. Where the misconduct which gave rise to the probation involved failure to perform and communicate, the law office management plan, ethics school, and law office management course conditions of probation directly addressed the misconduct and were therefore significantly related to the underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

Respondent violated the prohibition against intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failing to provide competent legal services where he filed and served a complaint, but did not make claim on the client's purported insurance, did not take any other action to prosecute her case, did not cause any independent investigation to be made, did not perform any discovery, did not cause service to made of the amended complaint in such a manner to prevent a motion for discretionary dismissal, and remained counsel of record for three years after concluding that her case lacked merit. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [5]

The failure to maintain an effective calendaring and follow-up system as a means of supervising employees and monitoring cases subjects an attorney to the risk of recklessly and repeatedly failing to provide competent legal services. It is his or her obligation to know the status of cases, and failure to have effective systems in place to provide that information is likely to be reckless and may be repeated. The absence of such a system was reckless in this case. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [1]

Respondent recklessly provided incompetent legal services where he filed a compliant for a client, but did not serve the defendants within the three-year time limit or bring the case to trial within the five-year time limit under the Code of Civil Procedure. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [1]

Respondent recklessly provided incompetent legal services where he filed a complaint for a client and then took no substantive action on the client's behalf for three and one-half years despite inquiries from the client about the status of the case. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [1]

Respondent recklessly provided incompetent legal services where a matter presented serious evidentiary problems requiring timely and substantive action, but where he did not clearly advise the client of the problems and obtain her consent to a strategy for handling the matter, where he did not seek to terminate his employment, and where he did not aggressively pursue the matter. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [2]

Decisions of the Supreme Court and the review department involving abandonment of a client's case where the attorney has no prior record of misconduct have typically resulted in discipline ranging from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. However, most of the past abandonment cases involved the attorney's inattention in civil matters. Balancing all relevant factors in this case involving an attorney's inattention in a criminal case involving an incarcerated client, and giving weight to, but not relying too heavily on, the State Bar's recommendation of respondent's 90-day actual suspension, the review department concluded that a 6-month actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [5]

A client's nonpayment of fees did not excuse respondent's reckless and repeated failure to pursue the client's case diligently. Respondent had to seek permission from the court to withdraw, or pursue the case diligently. She did neither and therefore violated the rule of professional conduct regarding attorney competence. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [5]

An attorney's habitual disregard of clients' interests involves moral turpitude even if such disregard results only from carelessness or gross negligence. Where respondent recklessly or repeatedly failed to provide competent legal services in seven matters and failed to return files properly to clients in four matters, these failures together constituted habitual disregard of clients' interests and amounted to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [8]

Where respondent's entire course of conduct in handling his duties as the trustee of a testamentary trust amounted to a reckless failure to perform services competently, but the review department considered much of the same misconduct in reaching its conclusion that respondent committed moral turpitude through gross negligence in handling his duties as trustee, the failure to perform competently was given minimal weight as an aggravating circumstance in determining the appropriate discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [6]

Because an incarcerated client has a limited ability to assist an attorney or to stay apprised of the attorney's efforts, the abandonment of an incarcerated client is a serious matter warranting substantial discipline. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459 [3]

Where an attorney retained advanced fees long after failing to perform any legal services and agreeing to refund the unearned portion of the fees, such wrongful retention approached a practical appropriation of the client's property. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [4]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Where respondent was grossly negligent in failing to respond to requests for information from client and successor counsel, and where respondent failed to maintain client's settlement check in safe place, respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently. However, where charge of repeated failure to perform competently addressed same misconduct as charges of failure to communicate with client and failure to keep client property in safe place, failure to perform competently was given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [19]

Where record contained no evidence about circumstances of loss of client's settlement check, respondent could not be found culpable of reckless failure to perform competently based on such loss. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [20]

Where failure to file complaint for client within statute of limitations was not mentioned in notice to show cause, such failure could not form basis for culpability, but where such failure, although not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be intentional or reckless, constituted part of series of repeated failures to perform competently which significantly harmed client, such failure constituted aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [21]

Where respondent's failure to supervise his personal injury practice and fulfill trust fund responsibilities was so remiss as to be reckless, and his mismanagement of his trust account included repeated failure to provide competent legal services by promptly paying medical liens, respondent violated rule regarding reckless or repeated failure to perform competently. However, where misconduct forming basis for such violation also underlay charge of moral turpitude supporting identical or greater discipline, review department gave violation of competence rule no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [2]

Where respondent failed to file required at-issue memorandum at time when former Rules of Professional Conduct were in effect, but such failure was not intentional or reckless, and respondent failed to perform several other required acts in same litigation after revised Rules of Professional Conduct became effective, review department held that respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently in violation of revised rule precluding intentional, reckless, or repeated failure to perform legal services competently, and did not reach question whether initial failure to file at-issue memorandum constituted duplicative violation of earlier version of same rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [8]

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

Where there was no evidence that respondent acted intentionally in failing to notify statutory medical lienholder of settlement or in failing to honor statutory lien, but rather, respondent's state of mind was that he was not actually aware of existence of lien or his duties in regard to it because he took no steps to investigate his client's medical coverage or his obligations under law, respondent's conduct evidenced reckless disregard rather than intentional violation of law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1]

Where hearing judge did not find that respondent's lack of competence in failing to pay client's medical bill was intentional, reckless, or repeated, and record contained no clear and convincing evidence of anything more than negligence in this regard, respondent was not culpable of intentional, reckless, or repeated failure to perform competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [6]

Where respondent disbursed settlement funds to client without withholding funds to pay medical lien, in reliance on client's unverified representation that client had paid lien, and respondent had no reason to believe that lienholder had any alternative possible source of payment, respondent's error in fulfilling his fiduciary duties both to lienholder and to client, who was later sued by lienholder, was of sufficient magnitude to constitute reckless failure to perform competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [7]

Attorney who holds funds subject to legally enforceable lien has duty to lienholder to perform competently in handling those funds; such duty is inherent in attorney's role as fiduciary with respect to entrusted funds. Moreover, because failure to pay liens exposes clients to collection efforts by lienholders, it is for protection of client, not just lienholder, that attorney has duty to ensure that liens are properly paid. Where respondent recklessly disregarded his duty to pay statutory medical liens in personal injury matters, he was culpable of reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [19]

An attorney retained by a parent to represent the parent's child in a personal injury matter is thereby put on notice that the injured client may be a minor, a fact of critical importance. Statutes requiring court approval of compromise of minors' claims are intended for protection of minors. Respondent's failure to ascertain client's age after being retained by client's parent was grossly negligent as a matter of law and constituted reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [20]

A finding of reckless disregard, for the purpose of the rule prohibiting intentional, reckless or repeated failure to perform competently, cannot be premised on mere negligence. In matter where respondent failed to pay medical lien because it was negligently misplaced, and in matter where there was no evidence that failure to pay lien was result of anything other than simple negligence, respondent's conduct did not constitute a reckless failure to perform. Where counts involving failure to pay liens each involved different fact pattern, and did not involve deliberate indifference to lienholders' rights, record also did not show repeated failure to perform competently with respect to such liens. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [23]

An attorney's duties to a client do not cease to exist because client is also represented by another attorney. Where respondent wished to be relieved of responsibility for defending client's deposition, but knew that successor counsel was not available to do so, respondent had obligation to take appropriate steps to avoid prejudice to client. Where respondent intentionally absented himself from client's deposition even though he was still officially counsel of record and knew client would be unrepresented in his absence, respondent intentionally failed to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [28]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Prolonged delay in proceeding with an inherently urgent legal matter despite the client's repeated requests is sufficient to establish reckless disregard of an attorney's obligation to perform legal services with competence. Where respondent delayed filing bankruptcy petition despite need for prompt action to protect clients from creditors and despite one client's repeated requests that respondent proceed, and respondent also failed to communicate adequately with client regarding bankruptcy, respondent was culpable of reckless failure to perform competently. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Where respondent's failure to file answers to interrogatories when due flowed from a simple calendaring error, and respondent handled other discovery timely, respondent was properly found not culpable of failure to provide competent legal services. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [1]

Where a difference of opinion on the merits of a client's defense led respondent to withdraw from representing the client one month prior to trial, with the client's consent, the withdrawal did not violate the rule regarding the duty of competent representation. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [7]

Given relatively short duration of respondent's representation of two clients and work respondent performed for them, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent intentionally, or with reckless disregard, or repeatedly failed to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [4]

Where respondent filed a late response to a motion to dismiss, the response was considered by the court, and the late filing was an isolated and at most negligent act, it did not amount to a violation of the rule of professional conduct prohibiting intentional, reckless or repeated failures to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [8]

Where there was no clear and convincing evidence establishing services that were to be performed for fee paid, or establishing respondent's agreement to perform those services, evidence did not support charge of failing to perform services competently. Where, in addition, review department could not determine whether respondent's employment was ever terminated, as opposed to simply being completed, or whether respondent did not earn entire fee paid, review department did not find that respondent violated rule requiring attorneys to take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation, or rule requiring prompt refund of any unearned fee. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [9]

Where respondent negligently erred in failing to take proper steps to ensure payment of a medical lien, but the record did not contain clear and convincing evidence that respondent's misconduct was intentional, reckless, or repeated, respondent did not violate the former rule making intentional, reckless, or repeated incompetence a disciplinable offense. Respondent's conduct, which was invited by the client, in leaving his client open to a possible lawsuit by the medical lienholder, was not so extreme as to constitute recklessness. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [12]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

Where respondent did not believe his client had a strong case and thought more evidence was needed in order to prevail, he had a choice: proceed diligently in advancing the client's legitimate claims, or promptly advise the client that she had no meritorious claims and withdraw from representation if the client insisted on pursuing her claim. He could not simply let excessive time pass, lead his client to believe he would advance her claim and neither do so nor take appropriate action to withdraw so the client might consult other counsel. This course of action warranted a finding that respondent was culpable of incompetent representation. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [4]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

Where both respondent's admission in discovery and client's testimony supported finding that respondent accepted responsibility for proceeding with lawsuit on client's behalf, and there was no evidence that contradicted or undercut respondent's admission, no additional corroboration was necessary to find that respondent agreed to prosecute case, and respondent could therefore be found culpable of misconduct based on failure to perform legal services requested by client. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [1]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that respondent failed to perform services competently, and set forth in separate paragraphs specific facts which in the aggregate charged a lack of diligence upon which that violation was based, the alleged misconduct in the notice was pled with sufficient particularity and was adequately correlated with the rule violation charged to have provided respondent with reasonable notice of the specific charges at issue. There is no requirement that each paragraph of a single count in a notice to show cause must allege a violation of a rule or statute. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [2]

Hearing judge's refusal to permit respondent to present evidence that value of one estate asset increased during respondent's delay in completing probate did not entitle respondent to relief, where such increase in value did not justify respondent's misconduct in delaying distribution of other estate assets. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [7]

Hearing judge's denial of respondent's request for continuance to research probate practices in respondent's county was not error, where respondent had had ample time prior to trial to prepare his defense, and evidence sought would have had very little probative value as custom and practice in respondent's county would not explain or excuse respondent's prolonged delay in closing estate at issue. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [8]

Compliance with the time limitations set forth in the Probate Code is not a defense to a charge that the attorney failed to act competently, nor does noncompliance with such time limitations establish per se a failure to act competently. The focus of the inquiry on a charge of failure to act competently is whether the attorney intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failed to apply the learning, skill, and diligence necessary to discharge the duties arising from the attorney's employment or representation. Compliance with the time limitations of the Probate Code is but one factor to be considered in making this determination. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [11]

An attorney has an obligation to perform services diligently and if the attorney knows he or she does not have or will not acquire sufficient time to do so, the attorney must not continue representation in the matter. Reckless or repeated inattention to client needs need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or purposeful failure to attend to duties in order to constitute wilful violation of duty to perform competently. Fact that respondent performed some services for a probate estate did not excuse his misconduct in delaying closure of the estate, especially where respondent's asserted justification for delay was that he was busy on other matters. Respondent's repeated failure to perform acts needed to distribute assets and close estate for five years, knowing that beneficiaries desired earliest possible distribution, constituted wilful violation of the duty to perform services competently. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [12]

An attorney's failure to accept responsibility for, or to understand the wrongfulness of, his or her actions may be an aggravating factor unless it is based on an honest belief in innocence. Where respondent's assertions in defense of failure to perform services did not reflect an honest belief in innocence, but rather reinforced the conclusion that respondent simply did not understand or appreciate the requirement to devote diligence necessary to discharge duties arising from employment, respondent's assertions exhibited a disturbing lack of insight into misconduct which in turn caused concern that he would repeat his misdeeds. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [16]

Where respondent's misconduct in both first and second disciplinary matters involved similar lack of diligence causing delay in closing a simple probate estate, discipline in second matter ordinarily would warrant only slightly greater discipline than in first matter. However, where respondent had failed to understand or appreciate misconduct, causing concern about handling future cases, and in light of absence of mitigating factors and presence of several aggravating factors, significantly greater discipline than in first matter was appropriate in second matter, and review department recommended two-year stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [17]

Where hearing judge properly accepted client's testimony that advanced funds were for transcript costs and not for respondent's fees, and where applicable written fee agreement provided for respondent to advance costs, respondent's failure to pursue litigation because of client's failure to advance cost of transcripts constituted both a wrongful withdrawal from employment and a wilful violation of duty to perform legal services competently. Respondent was also culpable for failing to deposit the advanced funds in a trust account and for failing to return the client's file promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [6]

It is not inherently inconsistent to conclude that an attorney who withdrew from employment and failed to perform legal services competently is also culpable of failing to communicate with the client thereafter. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [7]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

A finding of a wilful violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct does not necessarily indicate intent to violate ethical guidelines, but merely an intent to perform an act which results in a violation. Even where there was no evidence of intentional misconduct, evidence of repeated acts of negligence justified finding respondent culpable of wilfully violating the rule regarding failure to perform services competently. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [1]

An attorney's failure to communicate with and reckless or repeated inattention to the needs of a client have long been grounds for discipline. Such misconduct need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or a purposeful failure to attend to the duties due to a client, and the attorney's acts need not be shown to be wilful where there is a repeated failure of the attorney to attend to the needs of the client. Where respondent received several notices regarding the inheritance taxes owed by his client in a probate matter, and did not notify his client of any of them, and the client was reasonably relying on respondent to provide her with such notice, respondent failed to perform legal services competently in wilful violation of the applicable Rule of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [1]

Private reproval was appropriate discipline for isolated and relatively minor incident of failure to perform services competently which occurred early in respondent's career and was followed by respondent's candor and cooperation, improvement in office procedures, and voluntary participation in State Bar's ethics course. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [2]

Respondent violated duty to communicate with client where, after receiving notice that client disputed respondent's use of client's settlement proceeds to pay respondent's bill for services to client's family, respondent failed to communicate with client to ensure that client's father had been authorized to discharge family's indebtedness for fees out of client's personal injury recovery. Such failure to communicate violated the duty to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [18]

When, without the client's consent, an attorney waived a client's rights to trial by jury, the presence of a shorthand reporter at the court proceeding, the preparation of findings of fact and conclusions of law and the right to appeal, the attorney's conduct constituted a failure to perform services competently. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [1]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Where there was no evidence that an attorney's failure to bring a client's lawsuit to trial within the statutory deadline resulted from anything other than the attorney's simple error in miscalculating the date, and the attorney had expended substantial efforts on the client's behalf, there was not clear and convincing evidence of a reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [4]

While a lack of adequate communication with a client may warrant a finding of failure to perform legal services competently, it would be duplicative to draw such a conclusion when the attorney has been found culpable of violating the statutory duty to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [6]

Wilfulness, for the purpose of finding a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct, is defined as having acted or omitted to act purposely to do the act forbidden by the rule or not to do the act required by the rule. Where there was no evidence that respondent was incapable of forming the requisite purpose or intent, the review department upheld a finding that respondent was capable of the wilfulness necessary to commit the charged rule violation (accepting employment without resources to perform competently.) In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [24]

Where an attorney was willing to accept employment when the attorney knew or should have known that the attorney was not in the position to represent the client competently, the attorney violated the (former) rule of professional conduct prohibiting knowingly accepting or continuing employment without the resources to perform competently. Respondent's acceptance of employment in four matters and subsequent abandonment of the clients demonstrated a violation of the rule. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [25]

Where a client's matter involved a large amount of money and the client was concerned that his reputation would be affected by the dispute, the client's anxiousness to resolve the matter as quickly as was practical, and his periodic attempts to learn the status of the matter, were reasonable. His attorney's failure to complete necessary legal services and to return the client's calls thus violated the duty to respond to reasonable status inquiries and to provide competent legal services. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [5]

Where client needed immediate action, and respondent recommended that client seek a temporary restraining order, respondent's failure to bring TRO application to hearing for over two months constituted reckless incompetence, and respondent's inaccessibility to the client, even though not as severe or protracted as in many disciplinary cases, violated the statutory duty to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [8]

Failure to perform competently, with reckless disregard, was demonstrated by respondent's failure to take any steps whatsoever to bring a client's case to trial, or to pursue it at all, prior to the expiration of the five-year statute, causing the client to lose a cause of action irrevocably. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [10]

An attorney's being busy with other personal and client-related matters at the time of the attorney's misconduct does not constitute mitigation; if the attorney is too busy to handle a matter competently and complete the necessary work within an appropriate time frame, the attorney should not take on the case. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [28]

The duty of an attorney to act competently requires the attorney to take timely positive, substantive action on a client's behalf, or, if appropriate, to withdraw from employment; if an impasse develops between the attorney and the client, the attorney cannot simply fail to take action. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [6]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

Suspended attorneys are expressly precluded by statute from practicing law. On the other hand, one of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires an attorney to perform the services for which he or she is hired, because the failure to do so can be an intentional or reckless failure to perform competently in violation of the rule. Thus, requiring a suspended attorney to comply with both the unauthorized practice statute and the rule regarding competent performance would result in incompatible duties. For this reason, the rule regarding failure to act competently has no applicability to attorneys practicing while suspended. The suspended attorney's only duty is to stop practicing until reestablished as an attorney in good standing. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [6]

There is no reason to require suspended attorneys to comply with the rules requiring competent representation and prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal even while they are precluded from practicing because suspended. A full range of discipline is available to protect the public, courts and profession for unauthorized practice alone. Recklessness or incompetence in the unauthorized practice of law, or a precipitous withdrawal, would cause harm to the client and would constitute an aggravating factor which justifies greater discipline than would have been appropriate if no harm had occurred. In order to minimize harm to clients, suspended attorneys should take all steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice, short of practicing law. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [8]

Where attorney's alleged failure to perform competently occurred after effective date of revised version of rule governing duty of competence, and notice to show cause charged attorney only with violating previous version of rule and notice was not amended, attorney was properly found not culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [6]

Where attorney's decision not to pursue client's damages action was not made until after effective date of revised rule regarding duty to perform competently, attorney's conduct in deciding not to pursue damages was covered by revised rule and attorney could not be found culpable of violating earlier version of rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [7]

Where attorney agreed to seek recovery of a client's vehicle and damages for loss of its use, and attorney promptly recovered vehicle but decided not to pursue damages because vehicle was inoperable, attorney was not culpable of violating either original or revised version of former rule regarding duty to perform competently. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [8]

Attorney who failed to distribute settlement funds and pay medical liens promptly, as a result of his grossly negligent office practices and failure to supervise employees, was culpable of repeated or reckless failure to perform competently. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [7]

Where attorney held settlement draft uncashed pending review of adequacy of settlement amount, attorney's misconduct consisted of failure to follow through, and improper handling of client funds, rather than misappropriation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [13]

Attorney's failure to apply the diligence necessary to discharge the duties arising from his employment, by failing to pursue his client's appeal in a timely fashion, did not establish reckless disregard or repeated failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [6]

An attorney's obligation to perform services competently must be construed to have covered the entire period that the attorney represented the clients, even after the clients' case was dismissed. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [11]

Where clients hired an attorney to represent them, and were not informed that the attorney had delegated responsibility for the case to an associate, the clients rightly looked to the attorney to pursue their claims diligently. Accordingly, the attorney's failure to supervise the associate's handling of the case amounted to a failure to perform services competently. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [12]

Where an attorney acted in good faith, and was kept in the dark by his associate either by design or negligence, his good faith did not relieve the attorney from culpability for failure to perform services competently, based on the attorney's prolonged failure to monitor his associates' handling of the case, after the ethics rule regarding competence was amended to delete the good faith exception. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [13]

Finding that respondent was culpable of prejudicial withdrawal from representation and of failure to perform competently was based only on respondent's failure to render services while not under suspension; during suspension, respondent was precluded from practicing law, and misconduct in that connection is governed by statute precluding unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [3]

Where notice to show cause failed to charge respondent with failing to perform services in a certain matter, and notice to show cause was not amended to conform to proof at hearing, review department struck hearing department's finding of culpability with respect to that matter. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [1]

Preliminary consultations with client created attorney-client relationship, but attorney was not culpable of misconduct for failure to proceed to file suit in absence of clear and convincing evidence that he had agreed to do so. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [5]

Client's issuance of check to attorney marked "for filing fees" was insufficient evidence to show clearly and convincingly that attorney was obligated to file suit on behalf of client. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [8]

If State Bar intends to charge violation of rule of professional conduct regarding duty of competence, there must be an allegation that respondent intentionally or with reckless disregard or repeatedly failed to perform legal services competently, and notice should state what particular conduct is characterize as violating this standard. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [12]

Respondent's failure to complete the services he undertook for his client and his de facto withdrawal from employment without taking reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of his client were wilful, and violated applicable Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [2]

Attorney's failure to perform legal services as agreed, and abandonment of three clients, constituted very serious misconduct. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [2]

Respondent wilfully failed to provide legal services competently, where although respondent's attention was repeatedly directed to clients' legal needs for which he had accepted significant advanced fees and costs, respondent failed to provide promised services for a year, resulting in prejudice to clients due to defendant's bankruptcy. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [4]

270.31 Found

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

Where attorney allowed a paralegal to conduct most of the negotiations regarding settlement of a client's case, granted the same paralegal unchecked authority over the law office accounts without providing adequate supervision or training, resulting in significant misappropriations, and ceded day-to-day operations of the firm to the same paralegal, respondent abdicated his duty to supervise the paralegal and thereby failed to perform legal services competently in violation of rule 3-110(A). In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [5]

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

270.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

270.50 Improper sexual relations with client (RPC 3-120)

270.51 Found

270.55 Not Found

271.00 Malicious/frivolous litigation (RPC 3-200; 1975 RPC 2-110)

Respondent was culpable of maintaining unjust actions where he unreasonably persisted in pursuing numerous lawsuits after unqualified losses at trial and on appeal, repeatedly filed unmeritorious motions, pleadings, and other papers, engaged in tactics that were frivolous or intended to cause unnecessary delay, and acted with disregard for two vexatious litigant rulings. However, charges of violations of rule 3-200(A) based on same facts were properly dismissed as duplicative. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360 [1 a-d]

Even though attorneys have duty to zealously represent their clients and assert unpopular position in advancing clients' legitimate objectives, attorneys, as officers of the court, have duty to judicial system to assert only legal claims or defenses warranted by law or supported by good faith belief in correctness.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [5]

Respondent's frivolous appeal was a violation of section 6068 subdivision (c) of the Business and Professions Code and rule 3-200(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. However, since the rule 3-200(A) violation is essentially redundant, for purposes of assessing degree of discipline, the review department found respondent culpable of only the section 6068 subdivision (c) violation. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [3]

271.01 Found

271.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

272.00 Advising violation of law (RPC 3-210; 1975 RPC 7-101)

Where respondent did not simply advise client of consequences of not paying child support order, but actively counseled client on ways to accomplish goal of violating order, respondent was culpable of violating statute requiring attorneys only to counsel actions that appear legal or just, and rule prohibiting attorneys from advising the violation of any law or court order. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [5]

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

Due to difference in applicable standards of proof, a civil court finding is not binding on the State Bar Court for purposes of discipline. Where, upon evidence presented to civil court plus additional testimony, hearing judge concluded, contrary to civil court's decision, that respondent's loan to a client was not a sham transaction, then, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, it was appropriate to dismiss charges that the loan transaction violated statutory duties to counsel only legal or just actions and to employ only truthful means of maintaining clients' causes; constituted act of moral turpitude; and violated rule against advising violations of law. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [1]

272.01 Found

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

272.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

273.00 Improper transaction with client (RPC 3-300; 1975 RPC 5-101)

No attorney/client relationship existed between respondent and her friend at the time respondent purchased duplex from her. The duration of an attorney/client relationship is dependent on the nature and scope of the relationship. Respondent had previously informally represented the friend in four minor matters, but these matters had no relationship to the purchase of the duplex and respondent did not obtain confidential or financial information during the earlier representation that she used in subsequent negotiations. Moreover, almost two and a half years elapsed between the services provided and the purchase of the duplex. The State Bar also provided insufficient evidence that the attorney/client relationship was resurrected at the time of the sale, and the review department afforded a presumption of validity to the findings in a civil matter that no attorney/client relationship existed during the negotiation and sale of the duplex and no legal services were provided at that time. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [6 a,b,c]

Rule 3-300 does not apply to a former client where, during transaction in question, respondent did not exercise undue influence over former client regarding the purchase agreement and their prior attorney/client relationship did not give respondent any advantage over former client. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [7]

In limited circumstances, rule 3-300 may apply to transactions between attorneys and former clients involving the fruits of the attorney's representation, if there is evidence that the client placed his trust in the attorney because of that representation. But, the Supreme Court has not been inclined to dramatically extend the definition of an attorney/client relationship beyond its common understanding. Whether an attorney/client relationship exists is a question of law. In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198 [8 a,b,c]

Respondent did not acquire a pecuniary or financial interest in his client's former condominium under rule 3-300. The fact that a second client, to whom the condominium was transferred, gave respondent's minor son a 50 percent ownership interest to induce respondent to manage the condominium did not create on the part of the respondent any ownership, possessory, security, or other interest in the property. To violate rule 3-300, an attorney must be a party to or financially gain from the business transaction. Respondent's role in the negotiations did not make him a party to the purchase of the condo, nor did his management of the condo or the ownership interest acquired by his son make him a third party beneficiary to the transaction. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [1 a–b]

Review department recommended five years' stayed suspension and three years' actual suspension where, in a single client matter, (1) respondent committed multiple violations of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300; (2) respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude by concealing important information about a business transaction from his client and by overreaching his client; (3) respondent failed to report a civil fraud judgment to the State Bar; and (4) there were several factors in aggravation and two factors in mitigation, including respondent's long years of practice without prior discipline. In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [3 a-g]

In a prosecution for a violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300, where respondent borrowed $25,000 from clients in 1994, an attorney-client relationship existed at the time of the loan where the clients had an ongoing relationship with respondent since the 1970's and sought and received legal advice from respondent intermittently from that time through 1996. In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [1 a-c]

Where respondent sold his residential real property to his client, the fact that the sale price was at or about the fair market value does not constitute compliance with the basic requirement that the transaction be both fair and reasonable to the client. The question is not merely whether the sale price is fair and reasonable, but rather whether the entire transaction is fair and reasonable. All of the client's circumstances must be considered to determine whether the transaction is a prudent investment for a person in the client's circumstances. Moreover, all terms of the transaction must be fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that the client should reasonably understand. Where respondent failed to disclose to the client many potential problems and risks involved with the manner of the sale of the property, and it was clear that the client was not otherwise aware of these risks, respondent was overreaching and acting at least in part for his own benefit. Under these circumstances, the transaction constituted a breach of a fiduciary obligation and violated Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [1a-d]

The requisite elements of a violation of the first subdivision of the former rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients (i.e., subdivision (A) of former rule 3-300) were that the transaction

was unfair to the client or that the terms of the transaction were not disclosed and transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that the client should have been able to understand. The requisite elements of a violation of the second subdivision of that former rule (i.e., subdivision B of former rule 3-300) were that the client was not advised, in writing, of the right to seek advice from an independent attorney of the client's choice or that the client was not given a reasonable opportunity to exercise that right. None of these elements are addressed in the special finding under which the jury in a prior civil proceeding in which respondent was a party found, by clear and convincing evidence, that respondent "was guilty of malice, oppression or fraud in the conduct upon which [the jury based its] finding of [respondent's] liability for either breach of fiduciary duty or fraud." Thus, collateral estoppel does not establish that respondent violated the former rule governing business transactions with clients.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 195. [8]

The State Bar proved that respondent used over $500,000 of his client's assets for speculative ventures in which he had a financial or ownership interest without any disclosures of the investments or his interests to the client and without providing any periodic accountings to her. In view of the evidence presented, to defend the charges, it was incumbent on respondent to present adequate, contemporaneous records showing that he had complied with the ethical and fiduciary duties of an attorney. He failed to do so. The lack of minimal formality and recordkeeping by respondent supports the hearing judge's findings and conclusions and erodes respondent's defense. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.[1]

Respondent's assertion of a broad power of attorney from his client did not relieve him of the duties of former rule 5-101 of the Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar regarding standards for attorneys engaged in business transactions with a client. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.[2]

Considering that respondent treated a significant amount of his client's money as a ready pool to further his and his wife's forays into championship horse breeding and realty acquisition, there was little difference for moral turpitude purposes between this case and the traditional trust funds wilful misappropriation cases. Moral turpitude has been defined as an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellowmen, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. This case meets that definition without doubt. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.[3]

Where respondent violated rule of professional conduct which prohibits an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, and that misconduct was the same misconduct underlying the charge that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold law on account of his violation of provisions of the Probate Code which prohibit self-dealing by trustees, and where discipline did not depend on whether respondent violated both rule and statute, statutory violation was cumulative and review department did not address it. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Non-clients may be treated as an attorney's clients for purposes of discipline where the attorney assumes a fiduciary relationship with the non-clients. Thus, where respondent was the trustee of a testamentary trust, and thus assumed a fiduciary relationship with the beneficiaries of that trust, the rule regulating attorneys' business transactions with their clients applied to respondent's dealings with the trust, as if the trust beneficiaries were respondent's clients. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

Where respondent, as trustee of a testamentary trust, loaned himself money from the trust, and one of the loans was unsecured and the loans lacked a due date for repayment of the principal, the loans were not fair and reasonable to the beneficiaries, and respondent thereby violated the rule against improper business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [5]

Improper business transactions with clients have resulted in discipline ranging from reproval to suspension. Where, despite respondent's asserted intent to advance interests of beneficiaries of trust of which respondent was trustee, respondent realized significant benefits from improper loans from trust to himself, and where respondent also was grossly negligent in handling his duties as trustee, in view of the seriousness of respondent's misconduct, and comparable case law, the review department recommended three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and 60 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

Rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients requires that terms and conditions of loan from client to attorney be fair and reasonable to client; that terms be explained in terms client understands; that client be advised to seek advice of independent counsel, and that client consent to transaction in writing. A violation of any portion of such rule is sufficient to constitute misconduct. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [8]

A loan from a client, like all attorney-client business transactions, is scrutinized for unfairness, and when such transactions are called into question, attorney has burden to prove that they were fair and reasonable to client. Where client's loan to attorney was unsecured in situation where security would ordinarily be considered essential, and where no periodic payments were provided for despite client's financial circumstances, such facts were evidence that terms and conditions of loan transaction were unfair to client. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [9]

Client's written consent to loan transaction with respondent was not knowing consent, where respondent knew that client lacked capacity to give informed consent because of her poor health, frequent use of alcohol, lack of business experience, and limited education. Respondent was obligated to insure that terms and conditions of loan were fully known and understood by client, and was required not merely to inform client of her right to consult another attorney, but to advise client to do so. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [10]

Fact that attorney obtained loan from client improperly, in violation of rule governing business transactions with clients, did not automatically convert attorney's acquisition of loan funds into misappropriation, and did not invalidate underlying loan transaction. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [11]

Where respondent, as attorney and close family member of client, exploited superior knowledge and position of trust to detriment of vulnerable client in obtaining loan from client with grossly unfair provisions, attorney's overreaching constituted act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [13]

There is no requirement, for purposes of the rule of professional conduct prohibiting an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, that the attorney represent the client with regard to the particular transaction in question. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [7]

Where there was no evidence that respondent was a party to or benefited financially from property transactions between respondent's client and respondent's parents in which respondent was closely involved, respondent was not culpable of improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [8]

The rule governing acquisition of adverse interests in clients' property, which requires adequate disclosure, written advice regarding consultation with independent counsel, and written client consent to the transaction, encompasses transactions where it is reasonably foreseeable that the interest acquired may become detrimental to the client. When an attorney acquires the ability to extinguish a client's interest in property, the attorney's interest is adverse, no matter what the motivation. Where respondent drafted a trust agreement for an elderly, infirm couple, naming them as trustees and himself as successor trustee, and included in the trust agreement a clause giving trustees unrestricted power to borrow trust assets without any security or oversight, respondent thereby acquired an adverse interest to his clients in the trust property, and the rule applied. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [4]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Business transactions between clients and their attorneys are closely scrutinized. The burden is on the attorney to demonstrate that the dealings are fair and reasonable. Where respondent loaned a large sum to one client so that the client could repay a debt to another client, respondent owed a fiduciary duty to both clients and was obligated to explain his role in the transaction and the impact it could have on his continued representation of their interests. Where one client, notwithstanding his written consent, did not understand the full implications of the transaction, and the other client did not consent in writing, respondent violated the rule governing business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [2]

A violation of any part of the rule governing business transactions with clients gives rise to culpability. The practice of using confessions of judgment to collect legal fees presents an opportunity for overreaching beyond judicial scrutiny which justifies a per se prohibition. Respondent's use of a confession of judgment to secure repayment of a loan to a client, a portion of which represented attorney's fees already owed by the client, made the transaction inherently unfair. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [3]

Where respondent had obtained a deed of trust on property owned by his client's relatives to secure a loan owed to respondent by the client, and respondent subsequently became the attorney for the relatives in a suit which involved in part the conveyance to respondent of the deed of trust, respondent had an interest adverse to his clients which warranted the disclosures and written consent required by the rule governing business transactions with clients, even though the transfer had actually occurred two years earlier. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [4]

Where respondent had made a loan to a client, and later represented that client in a lawsuit in which respondent was a codefendant, and where, in order to secure the client's debt to him, respondent had obtained an ownership interest in property which was a subject of that lawsuit and respondent later sued to foreclose on that interest, the fact that respondent's original business transaction with the client became the subject matter of litigation aggravated his initial misconduct in failing to comply with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but did not constitute a separate ethical violation. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [5]

Where respondent filed a foreclosure suit in good faith against persons whom he was representing in another lawsuit, his violation of his fiduciary duties under the rule governing adverse interests to clients did not constitute a per se violation of the statute regarding acts of moral turpitude or dishonesty by attorneys. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [6]

Where respondent represented a client in the client's bankruptcy and at the same time represented the client's landlord, a company owned by respondent, in negotiating and drafting a new lease with the client, respondent was culpable, as charged, of representing conflicting interests. In addition, respondent's failure to comply with the requirements for business transactions with clients, including giving the client a reasonable opportunity to seek independent counsel, constituted an aggravating factor as uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [9]

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

Advancing expenses to clients is not a generally accepted practice because it may cause clients to choose attorneys on the basis of the loans they are willing to make rather than the services they offer and may also create an attorney-client conflict. The rule permitting attorneys to advance client expenses is limited to expenses related to litigation or legal services. Where, after respondent was retained by a client in a personal injury action, he made an interest-free, unsecured loan to the client to cover funeral costs and other expenses, such advance was not permitted by the rule even though the expenses might be recoverable as damages in the litigation. The loan was also improper because respondent did not obtain the client's informed written consent. However, where there was no evidence of client harm, the violation was not serious. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [9]

In a loan transaction between an attorney and a client, the facts that the loan is unsecured and its terms are not in writing are sufficient to place the fairness of the transaction in doubt. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [3]

Where an attorney offered to pay a usurious interest rate in order to induce a reluctant client to make the attorney a loan, without advising the client that the high interest rate could render the interest on the loan uncollectible, and the attorney's financial condition was not disclosed to the client, the resulting unsecured transaction was not fair and reasonable to the client. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [4]

The absence of security for a loan, when security would ordinarily be considered essential to the client, is an indication of unfairness in a business transaction between an attorney and a client. Thus, respondent's admission that he should have provided security for a loan from his client was an indication that the transaction was not fair and reasonable to the client. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [1]

The characterization of a transaction between an attorney and a client as a loan or an investment is not critical to whether there was a violation of the rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. The rule prohibits attorneys from entering into business transactions with clients or acquiring an adverse interest in a client's property without compliance with the rule. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [2]

When an attorney-client business transaction is involved, the attorney bears the burden of showing that the dealings between the parties were fair and reasonable and were fully known and understood by the client. Attorneys are subject to discipline for inducing clients to invest in business enterprises without fully apprising them of the risks. Where respondent admitted entering into a business transaction with a client and failed to show full disclosure to the client regarding the risks involved in the transaction, a violation of the rule was established. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [3]

The Supreme Court has not overruled or otherwise negated the requirement that an attorney advise a client to seek independent counsel before entering into a business transaction with the attorney. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [4]

One of the purposes of the rule of professional conduct governing business transactions with clients is to protect clients from their attorneys' personal use of financial information gained from confidences disclosed during the attorney-client relationship. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [6]

Where client's father authorized respondent in advance to apply client's share of recovery in personal injury matter to respondent's fees for services to client and family in other matters, this did not establish that respondent obtained a pecuniary interest in the recovery adverse to that of client, in violation of rules governing business transactions with clients. Even if a pecuniary interest was acquired, respondent was not culpable of knowingly requiring such interest, where respondent did not rely on the initial authorization, and specifically sought authorization to apply the recovery to fees at the time the personal injury settlement proceeds were distributed. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [19]

A transaction whereby a client signs a promissory note secured by the client's property to serve as security for the payment of an attorney's fees is subject to the provisions of the rule regulating business transactions with clients. However, where the failure to comply with the requirements of that rule resulted from the negligence of the attorney's employee, and the evidence clearly and convincingly established that the attorney had taken appropriate actions to guide office personnel as to proper steps to comply with the rule, the attorney was properly found not culpable of violating the rule. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [8]

Where a client gave an attorney an assignment of a promissory note and deed of trust, but the attorney did not record the assignment or collect payments under the note until after issuance of court order assigning the note to the attorney in payment of attorney's fees, and the attorney did not make any use of the executed assignment that was unfair or detrimental to the client until after the court order, the attorney did not knowingly acquire an interest in the client's property until after the issuance of the court order, and the attorney's conduct did not violate the rule governing business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [13]

Intent is a necessary element of an assignment. Where the physical transfer of an assignment of a promissory note and deed of trust from client to attorney was not intended to transfer an interest in the promissory note to the attorney, the transfer did not result in an acquisition by the attorney of an interest in the client's property, and thus did not violate the rule governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [14]

Absent unconscionable circumstances in its creation, an agreement granting an attorney express authority to sign a client's name on documents is clearly not contrary to public policy. Indeed, it is essential that express authority be obtained by an attorney seeking the power to sign the client's name to documents on the client's behalf. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [10]

The inclusion in a fee agreement of a special power of attorney, authorizing the attorney to sign the client's name on settlement drafts and other documents, does not create a conflict of interest in and of itself such that it requires compliance with the ethical rules governing attorneys' business transactions with clients. The attorney does not acquire any adverse interest by virtue of the special power of attorney, and the rules governing attorney-client business transactions have never been interpreted to apply in such circumstances. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [11]

Where an attorney was not charged in the notice to show cause with violating the ethical rules governing attorneys' business transactions with clients, then even if compliance with those rules were required under the facts, the attorney could not be found culpable of violating those rules. It is a fundamental constitutional and statutory requirement that an attorney must be given notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to prepare his defense thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [12]

Where the first sentence of a paragraph in a notice to show cause referred to a single transaction and the rest of the same paragraph referred to multiple transactions, and where it was unclear whether some or all of the loans described earlier in the notice were alleged not to have been fair or reasonable, there was unnecessary ambiguity in the alleged misconduct with respect to the charge of improper business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [13]

When an attorney and his wholly-owned company, which the attorney did not represent as counsel, engaged in a deceptive business transaction with a company that employed the attorney as its counsel, the attorney violated the ethical rule regarding adverse interests between attorneys in their personal capacities and their clients, but did not violate the ethical rule prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [2]

Attorney violated ethical rule governing business transactions with clients where he acquired (through his wholly-owned company) a licensing agreement for a product of his client-employer, without disclosing his ownership interest in the licensee; the licensee's incapacity to fulfill the terms of the license; or his negotiations for sublicenses on more profitable terms. The true identity of the licensee was a material fact which the attorney had a fiduciary duty to disclose, even though the terms of the license were revealed and may not have been unfair. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [6]

273.01 Found

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

273.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Allen (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 198

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

273.30 Conflicts of interest (RPC 3-310; 1975 RPC 4-101 & 5-102)

Where respondent stipulated he accepted representation of clients, and evidence showed respondent did not obtain clients' informed written consent to waive potential conflict, and case was later transferred to new attorney without clients' knowledge or consent, Review Department reversed hearing judge and found respondent culpable of violations of rules 3-310(C)(1) and 3-700(A)(2), and section 6068(m). In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [4 a,b]

Where respondent believed that his contingency fee would be independent of the amount of fees his client was obligated to pay a prior attorney after fee arbitration, there is not clear and convincing evidence that respondent knew he had a financial interest in the outcome of the client's fee arbitration with the prior attorney and respondent was therefore not culpable of failing to disclose that interest to his client in writing before accepting or continuing his representation of the client. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [5 a, b]

A corporation's attorney must abstain from taking part in controversies amount corporation's directors and shareholders to avoid being placed in a position requiring attorney to choose between conflicting duties or to reconcile conflicting interests. As attorney for corporation, respondent's professional obligations were to corporation; not its officers, directors, or shareholders whether in their representative or individual capacities. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [6]

A corporation is a statutory person that can speak only through its constituent officers, directors, shareholders, and agents. Faced with dispute over who was authorized to speak for corporate client, respondent should have first looked at corporation's organizational documents and other pertinent agreements.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [7 a, b]

Because there was an actual conflict in intractable dispute between corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, and corporation's remaining three directors over control of the corporation, respondent's proper course of conduct in representing corporation was to obtain informed written consent of each of board member or to withdraw from representation if he could not do so. But respondent did not do so; he chose to join the fray asserting only the president's interest while representing the corporation. Because of respondent's multiple conflicts, he lost any objectivity or neutrality and gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to corporate client, which is a serious aggravating circumstance as uncharged, but proved misconduct under aggravation standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct with respect to surrounding violations of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [8 a-c]

Where respondent represented wife in marital dissolution proceeding, and at respondent's suggestion, husband also hired respondent to represent both clients in joint bankruptcy proceeding, and where there was no evidence that respondent had obtained any pertinent confidential information from wife, respondent's representation of husband did not violate former rule precluding attorneys from accepting employment adverse to a client in a matter in which the attorney has obtained confidential information from the client. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

Where respondent represented wife in marital dissolution proceeding, and at respondent's suggestion, husband also hired respondent to represent both clients in joint bankruptcy proceeding, and where consent to such joint representation signed by husband stated misleadingly that there was no conflict of interest between clients, and wife consented to joint representation orally but not in writing, respondent violated former rule prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests without written consent of all clients. However, where husband had consulted with separate counsel before retaining respondent; potential conflict was remote and no actual conflict materialized; and neither client was harmed, respondent's misconduct was substantially mitigated by surrounding circumstances and was relatively minor. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

Respondent's simultaneous representation of a client and of respondent's father during the time that respondent arranged real property transactions between the client and the father was an aggravating circumstance in that the dual representation was rife with potential and actual conflicts of interest that could have been, if charged, the basis for additional culpability for violating the rule regarding representation of conflicting interests. The fact that respondent was not found culpable of any misconduct involving the real property transactions did not preclude treating respondent's conduct therein as an aggravating factor, because other related misconduct involving the same client was surrounded by and followed by the attorney's conduct in the real property transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [11]

Where respondent was initially hired by a married couple to protect their interests arising out of their relationship with an elderly couple to whom they had given in-home care, and respondent subsequently undertook to represent the elderly couple and drafted a proposed agreement between the two couples regarding further in-home care, and the interests of the two couples were in clear conflict, respondent was required to obtain the written consent of all parties at the outset of his representation of the elderly couple. Even if respondent's representation of the two couples was consecutive rather than concurrent, written consent of all affected clients was still required, because the second employment involved the same subject matter as the first. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [8]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where respondent withdrew $2,500 for attorney's fees from a client's bank account at a time when his representation of the client was improper due to a conflict of interest, restitution of the funds to the client's estate was an appropriate condition of probation. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [13]

Where respondent represented a client in the client's bankruptcy and at the same time represented the client's landlord, a company owned by respondent, in negotiating and drafting a new lease with the client, respondent was culpable, as charged, of representing conflicting interests. In addition, respondent's failure to comply with the requirements for business transactions with clients, including giving the client a reasonable opportunity to seek independent counsel, constituted an aggravating factor as uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [9]

Under the former rule providing that an attorney shall not accept employment adverse to a client or former client relating to a matter in which the attorney has obtained confidential information, except with the written consent of the client, actual possession of confidential information was not required to be demonstrated; showing a substantial relationship between representations was enough to establish a conclusive presumption that the attorney possessed confidential information adverse to the client. Where respondent represented a client in many actions, most of which related to the client's financial status, respondent's representation of his own company against the client in unlawful detainer actions while representing the client in bankruptcy court constituted not only a violation of the former rule regarding adverse representation and confidential information, but also a representation of conflicting interests. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [10]

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

A notice to show cause in a disciplinary proceeding meets the requirements of due process when it specifies the conduct at issue and the rule charged. Where a notice to show cause named the clients involved in each count, identified them as driver and passenger, averred that respondent agreed to represent each in a personal injury case without advising them of their potential conflict and obtaining their written consent, and cited the rule regarding representation of adverse interests, respondent was given adequate notice of the charge against him. Given the specificity of the factual allegations, adequate notice was given even in a count which did not specify the subsection of the rule being charged. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [5]

Although the former rule of professional conduct governing representation of clients with conflicting interests did not expressly state that it encompassed potential as well as actual conflicts of interest, once the rule had been interpreted in case law to make it clear that potential conflicts between clients required written consent for a single attorney to represent them in civil litigation, and in light of the prophylactic intent of the rule, an attorney had a duty to obtain the clients' informed consent before agreeing to represent both driver and passenger in an automobile accident case where there was no bar to a claim by the passenger against the driver. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [6]

In a disciplinary proceeding, a culpability determination must not be debatable. Accordingly, where the applicable rule of professional conduct did not expressly require written consent to joint representation of clients with potentially conflicting interests, the issue for the court was whether the case law at the time of an attorney's alleged violation of the rule made it clear that such consent was required in civil litigation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [7]

By failing to disclose to clients the potential conflict between driver and passenger in an automobile accident case, and to secure their written consent to joint representation, an attorney exposes the clients to sharing confidences without realizing the potential impact of doing so; to possible delay if the attorney is later disqualified due to the development of an actual conflict; and to reduction of the passenger's recovery through failure to allege the driver's negligence. However, where it was not clear that respondent's clients would not have given their informed consent if they had been afforded the opportunity do so, respondent's violation of the rule requiring him to obtain such consent was not serious. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [8]

An attorney can be disciplined only for misconduct charged in the notice to show cause or an amendment thereto. Where notice to show cause charged violation of rule against representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent served interrogatory requesting identification of all such alleged conflicts, charges against respondent were limited to those identified in State Bar's answer to such interrogatory, and respondent could not be found culpable of violating conflict of interest rule based on a conflict not listed therein. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [9]

The former rule of professional conduct prohibiting an attorney from representing clients with conflicting interests without written client consent was violated where the attorney favored one client at the expense of another client. An attorney has a duty to secure as large a recovery as possible for a client and the attorney violates this duty when the representation of one client might have induced the attorney to negotiate a low settlement for another client. A conflict of interest between jointly represented clients occurs whenever their common lawyer's representation of one is rendered less effective by reason of the lawyer's representation of the other. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [10]

Representing over 700 clients by majority rule posed risk of conflicting interests among clients, since respondent owed same ethical obligations to each client, not just those in majority. However, respondent's representation of multiple clients did not violate the former rule of professional conduct prohibiting an attorney from representing clients with conflicting interests without written client consent where the clients' interests were compatible, not conflicting; respondent was not put in a position of choosing between conflicting duties or of attempting to reconcile conflicting interests; there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent's representation of one group of clients rendered his representation of the other group less effective; and there was not clear and convincing evidence that potential conflicts or favoritism ever materialized. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [11]

Respondent violated former rule of professional conduct prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests when he accepted more signatories to a settlement than were required, because interests of required signatories conflicted with interests of extra signatories, whose participation in settlement reduced amounts received by required signatories and by previous extra signatories. Where such violation of conflict of interest rule was not charged, it could not be basis of culpability, but could be relied on in aggravation. However, because of novelty of situation, which involved extremely unusual settlement, uncharged violation was given minimal aggravating weight. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [12]

When an attorney and his wholly-owned company, which the attorney did not represent as counsel, engaged in a deceptive business transaction with a company that employed the attorney as its counsel, the attorney violated the ethical rule regarding adverse interests between attorneys in their personal capacities and their clients, but did not violate the ethical rule prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [2]

273.31 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

273.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

273.50 Intimate relationship with opposing counsel (RPC 3-320)

273.51 Found

273.55 Not Found

274.00 Limiting liability to client (RPC 3-400; 1975 RPC 6-102)

Rule adopted in 1989, unlike former similar rule, precludes only actual contracts prospectively limiting an attorney's malpractice liability, not attempts to contract. The rule only applies to prospective claims, not to exposure for past malpractice. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [5]

Respondent's letters to client demanding release from all liability, including for malpractice, in exchange for settling outstanding business disputes between them, violated rule prohibiting attorneys from attempting to exonerate themselves from liability for malpractice except in settlement of a malpractice claim. However, respondent's attempt to persuade client to withdraw State Bar complaint did not violate statute prohibiting attorneys from requiring as a condition of malpractice settlement that plaintiff agree to not file a complaint with the State Bar. The plain language of the statute is limited to settlements involving the agreement not to file a disciplinary complaint. The effect of withdrawal of charges is not the same as not filing them. Once the State Bar becomes aware of possible misconduct by the filing of a complaint, it does not need a complaining witness in order to go forward with its investigation. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 507.) In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [11]

It was not improper for an attorney to request written confirmation from a client that the attorney had been discharged as counsel. Such a letter was not a release from liability of the type prohibited by the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [2]

274.01 Found

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

274.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

274.30 Failure to disclose uninsured status (RPC 3-410)

274.31 Found

274.35 Not Found

275.00 Failure to communicate with client (RPC 3-500)

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Attorney's failure to communicate with a client may also constitute incompetent legal practice or abandonment of the client when facts demonstrate that attorney's failure to communicate resulted in the effective cessation of work on client's cause of action, foreclosed client from choices regarding her cause of action, or indicated a withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [5]

An attorney's failure to adequately communicate with a client may evidence the attorney's lack of time to perform legal services competently in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [7]

An attorney's duty to communicate with a client includes the duty to communicate to persons who reasonably believe they are clients to the attorney's knowledge at least to the extent of advising them that they are not clients. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [4]

In a prior case, the Supreme Court expressed concern for the privacy of the targeted attorney's clients, and further noted that the proceedings of the State Bar were conducted in strict confidence. While such formal proceedings are now public, the investigative process is conducted in the same strict confidence that the Supreme Court noted in the prior case. In addition, in the event the records are sought to be used in a subsequent public proceeding following a confidential investigation, the attorney's duty of informing the client or clients whose trust account information may become public of that fact would come into play. The client or clients would then have the opportunity to seek relief from the State Bar Court under the rules of procedure that create a method for sealing portions of the record. In the Matter of Member W (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 535. [3]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Where respondent was grossly negligent in failing to respond to requests for information from client and successor counsel, and where respondent failed to maintain client's settlement check in safe place, respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently. However, where charge of repeated failure to perform competently addressed same misconduct as charges of failure to communicate with client and failure to keep client property in safe place, failure to perform competently was given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [19]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

Where respondent spoke with clients approximately eight or nine times during short period of representation, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent failed to communicate with clients. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [5]

275.01 Found

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

275.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

275.30 Failure to communicate settlement offer (RPC 3-510; 1975 RPC 5-105)

An attorney must promptly communicate a written offer of settlement to the client regardless of whether the offer is significant or binding under contract law. In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788 [1]

275.31 Found

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

275.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

276.00 Duty to organization as client (RPC 3-600)

Because insurance settlement check that respondent deposited into his client trust account was made payable to his corporate client, he became a fiduciary of all members of corporation's board of directors who asserted a claim to those funds on corporation's behalf, and he owed those directors the same high duty of honestly and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were their attorney. Respondent breached that duty when he distributed $50,000 of settlement funds to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in the president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of remaining three directors because he knew that president and other three directors were in intractable dispute over control of corporation and that corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [1]

Where respondent had certain knowledge of dispute over his fees and where respondent ignored explicit directive of board majority to immediately cease representing corporation, respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust when he withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate client's funds from his trust account as his attorney's fees. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [2]

Once respondent deposited insurance settlement check that was made payable to his corporate client into his client trust account, he had a fiduciary duty to protect the settlement funds on behalf of all the members of the corporation's board of directors regardless of whether he considered them authorized to act on corporation's behalf. Respondent willfully misappropriated $50,000 of those funds when he disbursed $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors as he knew of intractable dispute between president and other three directors over control of the corporation and corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. Respondent's misappropriation involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [3 a-c]

When respondent, without the knowledge or consent of all of the directors, withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate settlement funds as his attorney's fees for representing the corporation in bankruptcy proceeding, he knowingly and intentionally misappropriated the $29,875.89 for his own purpose without an honest belief in his right to those funds because (1) he knew a majority of directors vigorously disputed his right to represent corporation and to incur legal fees; (2) he knew president could authorize payment of only $100 of respondent's fees; (3) he acknowledged, under penalty of perjury in a bankruptcy court declaration, he did not have right to withdraw fees from trust account without court's approval; yet, there is no evidence respondent ever obtained such court approval before paying himself; (4) he deceived and misled corporation's chairman and his legal counsel about existence and location of insurance settlement funds; (5) he refused to provide records of settlement check and funds to State Bar. Respondent's knowing and intentional misappropriation of $29,875.89 involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [4 a-d]

A corporation's attorney must abstain from taking part in controversies amount corporation's directors and shareholders to avoid being placed in a position requiring attorney to choose between conflicting duties or to reconcile conflicting interests. As attorney for corporation, respondent's professional obligations were to corporation; not its officers, directors, or shareholders whether in their representative or individual capacities. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [6]

A corporation is a statutory person that can speak only through its constituent officers, directors, shareholders, and agents. Faced with dispute over who was authorized to speak for corporate client, respondent should have first looked at corporation's organizational documents and other pertinent agreements. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [7 a, b]

Because there was an actual conflict in intractable dispute between corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, and corporation's remaining three directors over control of the corporation, respondent's proper course of conduct in representing corporation was to obtain informed written consent of each of board member or to withdraw from representation if he could not do so. But respondent did not do so; he chose to join the fray asserting only the president's interest while representing the corporation. Because of respondent's multiple conflicts, he lost any objectivity or neutrality and gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to corporate client, which is a serious aggravating circumstance as uncharged, but proved misconduct under aggravation standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct with respect to surrounding violations of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [8 a-c]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Attorneys cannot recover for services rendered if services are rendered in contradiction of attorney professional responsibility. And where attorney improperly withdraws fees from a trust account, restitution to client or client's estate is appropriate. Thus, where respondent withdrew $29,875 from his client trust account as his attorney's fees without his corporate client's authorization, respondent should make restitution of $29,875 plus interest to either corporate client, its successor, appropriate recipient of its assets after its dissolution, or if such successor or recipient of assets after dissolution cannot be identified, the Client Security Fund. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [10 a,b]

276.01 Found

276.05 Not Found

277.10 Withdrawal without court permission (RPC 3-700(A)(1); 1975 RPC 2-111(A)(1))

Where respondent was appointed as counsel of record in cases involving indigent clients, where those clients disclosed confidential information to respondent, and where respondent provided legal advice to those clients, respondent's contention that such individuals were not her clients was disingenuous and respondent's failure to obtain approval of the court to withdraw from her cases violated rule 3–700(A)(1). In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7 a, b]

277.11 Found

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

277.15 Not Found

277.20 Prejudicial withdrawal (RPC 3-700(A)(2); 1975 RPC 2-111(A)(2))

Where respondent stipulated he accepted representation of clients, and evidence showed respondent did not obtain clients' informed written consent to waive potential conflict, and case was later transferred to new attorney without clients' knowledge or consent, Review Department reversed hearing judge and found respondent culpable of violations of rules 3-310(C)(1) and 3-700(A)(2), and section 6068(m). In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [4 a,b]

The duty to take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of a client when a member withdraws from employment continues until a court grants leave to withdraw and applies whether or not prejudice actually occurs. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8 a, b]

It is not necessarily duplicative to find culpability for failure to communicate with clients and culpability for improperly withdrawing from employment when respondent's failure to communicate arose from her failure to inform clients of crucial information regarding representation and respondent's improper withdrawal was based on her failure to take reasonable steps to protect her clients' interests. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [4 a, b]

Where respondent's conduct of intentionally making no further appearances on behalf of her indigent clients established culpability for failing to perform competently and where such conduct was duplicative of the conduct surrounding respondent's improper withdrawal, no additional weight was assigned to the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [5 a, b]

An attorney may effectively withdraw from a case without an intent to do so when the attorney virtually abandons a client and is grossly negligent in communicating with the client. If an attorney is essentially withdrawing from employment he or she is obligated to give due notice to the client. Whether or not an attorney's ceasing to provide services amounts to an effective withdrawal depends on the surrounding circumstances. Where respondent's strategy was to do nothing in anticipation that the immigration laws might be amended to be more favorable to his client, where respondent did not advise his client of his intention to adopt a wait–and–see approach, where respondent failed to communicate with his client for nearly one year, and where time was plainly of the essence to the services requested, respondent's failure to timely provide the necessary services constituted an effective withdrawal which prejudiced his client's ability to file a timely application for asylum in violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3–700(A)(2). In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [3 a–c]

Respondent's duty under Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 3–700(A)(2) to not withdraw from employment until reasonable steps are taken to avoid foreseeable client prejudice did not exonerate respondent from culpability under Business and Professions Code section 6104 for his continued appearances on behalf of his clients after the clients had discharged him. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [3]

Because review department relied on respondent's repeated and reckless failure to communicate with client to establish his culpability for violating rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from abandoning clients and withdrawing from employment without taking adequate steps to protect their clients' interests, review department did not adopt hearing judge's finding that respondent violated statute requiring attorneys to adequately communicate with their clients, but dismissed charge with prejudice as being duplicative. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [22]

Because Rules of Professional Conduct 3-700(A)(2) (prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment) and 3-700(D)(1) (mandating return of client property) have not been amended or modified since they were first adopted and became effective on May 27, 1989, there are no "former" versions of those rules. Thus, the review department deemed the charged and found violations that State Bar and the hearing judge incorrectly described as violations of "former" rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1) to be charged and found violations of rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1), which became effective on May 27, 1989. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [1]

Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment (rule 3-700(A)(2)) is more comprehensive than rule requiring an attorney whose employment has been terminated to release the client's file upon the client's request (rule 3-700(D)(1)). Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, mandates compliance with rule requiring release of client files. Thus, attorney's failure to properly release a client's file in accordance with rule requiring release of client files may be a portion of the conduct disciplinable as a violation of rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal. Because respondent's failure to release the client's file in accordance with the client's request was relied on as part of the basis for finding that respondent violated rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, review department rejected the use that same failure to find a separate violation of rule requiring release of client files. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [7]

Even though client who respondent was representing in a case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board terminated respondent's employment, respondent remained client's attorney of record in her case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board and continued to have duty, under rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment, to take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights until either a substitution of counsel was filed or a motion relieving respondent as attorney of record was granted. After client terminated respondent's employment, respondent violated rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal because he did not (1) advise client of dates of upcoming events such as the trial date and briefing schedule, (2) properly respond to client's request for her file, and (3) properly remove himself as client's attorney of record in her case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board. Fact that client, without respondent's knowledge, learned dates of the important upcoming events did not relieve respondent of his obligation to advise client of those dates, to properly respond to client's request for her file, and to remove himself as client's attorney of record. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [8]

Rule 3-700(A)(2), which requires that an attorney not withdraw from employment until the attorney has taken reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of the client, applies to an attorney's taking active steps to prejudice the rights of a client in an effort to withdraw. Respondent, who in his declaration in response to an order to show cause regarding dismissal of his client's action, offered his view that he would not be opposed to sanctions being levied against his client, and that he would personally like to see his client's action dismissed, is culpable of a violation of rule 3-700(A)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [5]

Respondent's leaving a client in the midst of a hearing is an abandonment of a client and a violation of rule 3-700(A)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [6]

Attorney's failure to communicate with a client may also constitute incompetent legal practice or abandonment of the client when facts demonstrate that attorney's failure to communicate resulted in the effective cessation of work on client's cause of action, foreclosed client from choices regarding her cause of action, or indicated a withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [5]

Respondent did not withdraw from employment without taking reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to a client where his failure to act promptly for the client may have inspired a dismissal motion, but where his successor counsel had ample time to resist the motion. In the Matter of Bragg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [6]

The rule of professional conduct prohibiting an attorney from withdrawing from employment unless the attorney has taken reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights applies to attorneys who are discharged as well as to attorneys who withdraw. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [1]

Where respondent disbursed settlement funds to client without withholding funds to pay medical lien, in reliance on client's unverified representation that client had paid lien, this conduct constituted failure to take steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to client in course of termination of respondent's employment. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [8]

Whether attorney or client initiates termination of attorney-client relationship, attorney's ethical duties upon such termination remain the same. An attorney of record in pending litigation remains counsel of record, and continues to have duty to take actions essential to avoid foreseeable prejudice to client's interests, until substitution of counsel is filed or court grants leave to withdraw. Rule requiring withdrawing or terminated counsel to protect client from foreseeable prejudice does not require that such prejudice actually occur. Where respondent failed to appear to defend client's deposition, it was foreseeable that client might be prejudiced. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [27]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where, at time client requested file, respondent had already transferred client's file to successor attorney, respondent was not culpable of failure to release file to client on demand. However, where, upon transferring file to successor counsel and withdrawing from representation, respondent had failed to give client due notice, and had allowed client to believe that respondent remained conduit for contact with successor counsel, respondent violated rule prohibiting withdrawal without taking steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to client. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [3]

Respondent's failure to notify counsel for the opposing side that respondent was no longer representing a client violated the rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to take steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to their clients prior to withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [3]

Where there was no clear and convincing evidence establishing services that were to be performed for fee paid, or establishing respondent's agreement to perform those services, evidence did not support charge of failing to perform services competently. Where, in addition, review department could not determine whether respondent's employment was ever terminated, as opposed to simply being completed, or whether respondent did not earn entire fee paid, review department did not find that respondent violated rule requiring attorneys to take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation, or rule requiring prompt refund of any unearned fee. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [9]

In light of comparable case law and absence of mitigating circumstances, public reproval was appropriate discipline for respondent who failed to refund promptly an unearned legal fee and failed to take reasonable steps to avoid prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation. Hearing judge's recommended discipline of stayed suspension was therefore modified. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [13]

Where respondent's failure to adhere to statutory requirement of written attorney-client fee agreements was at heart of both matters in which he had been charged with misconduct, and respondent's attention needed to be directed to written fee agreements and also to his obligations upon withdrawal from employment, public reproval was properly conditioned on completion of State Bar Ethics School. Its format of classroom instruction, followed by a test, would better remedy these problems than the more passive experience of the California Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [14]

Where record established that respondent agreed to handle litigation and thereafter abandoned case; former and current Rules of Professional Conduct were virtually identical regarding duties imposed on an attorney who wishes to withdraw from employment; both rules were charged in notice to show cause, and violation clearly occurred during period when either one rule or the other was in effect, review department found respondent culpable of improper withdrawal despite lack of evidence regarding exactly when relevant events occurred. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [2]

Where hearing judge properly accepted client's testimony that advanced funds were for transcript costs and not for respondent's fees, and where applicable written fee agreement provided for respondent to advance costs, respondent's failure to pursue litigation because of client's failure to advance cost of transcripts constituted both a wrongful withdrawal from employment and a wilful violation of duty to perform legal services competently. Respondent was also culpable for failing to deposit the advanced funds in a trust account and for failing to return the client's file promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [6]

It is not inherently inconsistent to conclude that an attorney who withdrew from employment and failed to perform legal services competently is also culpable of failing to communicate with the client thereafter. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [7]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

Where the hearing judge found the complaining witness worthy of belief on the crucial factual issues, and that witness's testimony was bolstered by other evidence in the record, and respondent's contrary contention that he had been discharged by his clients was not corroborated by documents that ordinarily would have been prepared by an attorney upon discharge, the hearing judge's conclusion that respondent abandoned his clients without notifying them was supported by the record, even though the complaining witness's testimony was not uniformly reliable regarding exact details. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [9]

For a failure to communicate with a client which occurred prior to the enactment of the statute requiring such communication, grounds for discipline remain under the common law doctrine underlying this duty. However, where the information the attorney most significantly failed to convey was notice of the attorney's withdrawal from representation, the attorney's conduct violated former the rule against prejudicial withdrawal, and finding culpability of a common law failure to communicate would be unnecessarily duplicative. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [10]

Where a client's matter involved a large amount of money and the client was concerned that his reputation would be affected by the dispute, the client's anxiousness to resolve the matter as quickly as was practical, and his periodic attempts to learn the status of the matter, were reasonable. His attorney's failure to complete necessary legal services and to return the client's calls thus violated the duty to respond to reasonable status inquiries and to provide competent legal services. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [5]

The rule regarding prejudicial withdrawal from representation applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel. Whether or not an attorney's ceasing to provide services amounts to an effective withdrawal depends on the surrounding circumstances. Where time is of the essence, failure to provide services constitutes an effective withdrawal even if the attorney's period of inaction is relatively brief. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [7]

An attorney's total cessation of services to a client for a period of two years, standing alone, and even though unintentional, was clear and convincing evidence that the attorney effectively withdrew from employment without taking steps to protect the client's interests. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [9]

There is no reason to require suspended attorneys to comply with the rules requiring competent representation and prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal even while they are precluded from practicing because suspended. A full range of discipline is available to protect the public, courts and profession for unauthorized practice alone. Recklessness or incompetence in the unauthorized practice of law, or a precipitous withdrawal, would cause harm to the client and would constitute an aggravating factor which justifies greater discipline than would have been appropriate if no harm had occurred. In order to minimize harm to clients, suspended attorneys should take all steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice, short of practicing law. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [8]

The Rule of Professional Conduct which sets forth the duties and obligations of an attorney who withdraws from employment applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel for the client. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [9]

The Rule of Professional Conduct which provides that an attorney shall not withdraw until he or she takes steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of the client requires, by its express terms, that the attorney continue representing the client until the attorney has taken steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice. This obligation directly contradicts the duty of a suspended attorney to cease practicing law immediately. It is unreasonable to hold an attorney to a duty of having to continue to represent his or her client for a reasonable period of time to avoid prejudice prior to withdrawal, if the attorney has an absolute duty to stop practicing due to a suspension. Thus, the rule against prejudicial withdrawal has no applicability to attorneys while they are suspended. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [10]

Where attorney completed all work he could have reasonably performed for client, attorney neither withdrew from employment nor was discharged, and was not culpable of prejudicial withdrawal from employment. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [1]

The rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment applies to attorneys who are discharged as well as to those that withdraw. Where respondent was discharged by a client, but nevertheless took reasonable steps to avoid prejudice to the client, record did not support a violation of the rule. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

The rules of ethics regarding the duties of an attorney upon withdrawal apply to attorneys who are discharged as well as those who withdraw. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [3]

Finding that respondent was culpable of prejudicial withdrawal from representation and of failure to perform competently was based only on respondent's failure to render services while not under suspension; during suspension, respondent was precluded from practicing law, and misconduct in that connection is governed by statute precluding unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [3]

Charge of prejudicial withdrawal from representation was established by clear and convincing evidence, even though respondent did continue to communicate with one of two joint clients through a certain date, where there was no evidence that respondent had communicated with either client, or taken any action on clients' behalf, during extended period of time between that date and filing of notice to show cause. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [4]

Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from representation may reasonably be construed to apply when attorney ceases to provide services, even in absence of intent to withdraw as counsel. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [5]

Preliminary consultations with client created attorney-client relationship, but attorney was not culpable of misconduct for failure to proceed to file suit in absence of clear and convincing evidence that he had agreed to do so. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [5]

Attorney's failure to discuss case with client after assuring her that he would investigate it upon receiving a copy of complaint from her, and his inaction and eventual abandonment of her case, warranted finding of culpability of misconduct even though attorney had obtained extensions of time to answer in effort to protect client's rights. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [7]

Client's issuance of check to attorney marked "for filing fees" was insufficient evidence to show clearly and convincingly that attorney was obligated to file suit on behalf of client. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [8]

To uphold a finding of culpability of withdrawal without taking steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client, it is not necessary that the precise nature of the prejudice to the client be foreseeable. A finding that it was reasonably foreseeable that some prejudice would result to the client is sufficient to support culpability. Where respondent ended his association with running and capping in a hasty manner, and failed to give adequate notice of withdrawal and change of counsel, prejudice to clients was foreseeable even though evidence did not show that successor counsel's subsequent dishonesty was foreseeable. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [7]

Respondent's failure to complete the services he undertook for his client and his de facto withdrawal from employment without taking reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights of his client were wilful, and violated applicable Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [2]

Attorney's failure to perform legal services as agreed, and abandonment of three clients, constituted very serious misconduct. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [2]

277.21 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

277.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

277.30 Failure to withdraw when required (RPC 3-700(B); 1975 RPC 2-111(B))

277.31 Found

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

277.35 Not Found

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

277.40 Improper permissive withdrawal (RPC 3-700(C); 1975 RPC 2-111(C))

Because there was an actual conflict in intractable dispute between corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, and corporation's remaining three directors over control of the corporation, respondent's proper course of conduct in representing corporation was to obtain informed written consent of each of board member or to withdraw from representation if he could not do so. But respondent did not do so; he chose to join the fray asserting only the president's interest while representing the corporation. Because of respondent's multiple conflicts, he lost any objectivity or neutrality and gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to corporate client, which is a serious aggravating circumstance as uncharged, but proved misconduct under aggravation standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct with respect to surrounding violations of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [8 a-c]

Respondent was found culpable of violating rule 3-110(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Even if his client could not decide which remedy to pursue or even if his client was unable to provide respondent with needed information, respondent could not simply let the months pass with no action. Respondent's choice was to either pursue remedies warranted by the facts and law based on effective investigation and research or to withdraw from employment if and as appropriate under rule 3-700(C) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [2 a-c]

A client's nonpayment of fees did not excuse respondent's reckless and repeated failure to pursue the client's case diligently. Respondent had to seek permission from the court to withdraw, or pursue the case diligently. She did neither and therefore violated the rule of professional conduct regarding attorney competence. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [5]

Where an attorney in a contingent fee case has a contractual lien for the attorney's fees, but withdraws before completion of the case, this renders uncertain both the amount, if any, which the attorney is entitled to be paid, and the attorney's entitlement to enforce the lien; they depend on whether the attorney had justifiable cause for withdrawing. Thus, in the event of such a withdrawal, the attorney's right to enforce the lien and the extent of the attorney's recovery cannot be determined unilaterally by the attorney. If the attorney and client cannot reach a new agreement, then the attorney's sole recourse is to an independent tribunal with the funds remaining in trust in the interim. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [23]

Where an attorney began to doubt his client's credibility and therefore believed he could not give the client effective representation, the attorney's difficulty in working with the client justified his consensual withdrawal. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [25]

277.41 Found

277.45 Not Found

277.50 Failure to release client papers/property (RPC 3-700(D)(1); 1975 RPC 2-111(A)(2))

By waiting at least two months to send client files to the client's new attorney and by not providing the client files until after the client's new attorney sent three additional requests, respondent violated Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3–700(D)(1). In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [6]

A client's file, absent uncommunicated attorney work product, is the property of the client and must be surrendered to the client promptly upon request once the representation has been terminated. An express element of a Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3–700(D)(1) violation is the client's request for return of the property. Where a client requested a case file approximately eight months before respondent's services were terminated, and where there was no request for the client file made after the date of termination, respondent was still obligated to follow the directives of rule 3–700(D)(1) because it is unnecessary for a client who has already requested return of papers and property prior to an attorney's discharge to be required to repeat that request after discharge occurs. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [5 a, b]

A client has an absolute right to retain counsel of choice and may discharge his or her attorney at any time, with or without cause. It is reasonable to assume that when a new attorney is retained, he or she will be able to communicate with and obtain the client's file from the former attorney. While the former attorney has the right and duty to ensure that the new attorney is acting with client consent, where the record showed that the new attorney attempted to communicate with respondent for several months before receiving a response and that respondent made no effort to obtain (1) specific proof that the clients had hired the new attorney or (2) permission to contact the clients to verify their authorization, respondent's failure to forward the clients' file to the new attorney promptly upon request constituted a willful violation of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-700(D)(1). In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[4]

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[16]

Because Rules of Professional Conduct 3-700(A)(2) (prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment) and 3-700(D)(1) (mandating return of client property) have not been amended or modified since they were first adopted and became effective on May 27, 1989, there are no "former" versions of those rules. Thus, the review department deemed the charged and found violations that State Bar and the hearing judge incorrectly described as violations of "former" rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1) to be charged and found violations of rules 3-700(A)(2) and 3-700(D)(1), which became effective on May 27, 1989. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[1]

Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal from employment (rule 3-700(A)(2)) is more comprehensive than rule requiring an attorney whose employment has been terminated to release the client's file upon the client's request (rule 3-700(D)(1)). Rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, mandates compliance with rule requiring release of client files. Thus, attorney's failure to properly release a client's file in accordance with rule requiring release of client files may be a portion of the conduct disciplinable as a violation of rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal. Because respondent's failure to release the client's file in accordance with the client's request was relied on as part of the basis for finding that respondent violated rule prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal, review department rejected the use that same failure to find a separate violation of rule requiring release of client files. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.[7]

An attorney did not promptly release a client's papers where the attorney failed to turn over the client's file for six months after a request from the client's new counsel. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [3]

The rule of professional conduct prohibiting an attorney from withdrawing from employment unless the attorney has taken reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights applies to attorneys who are discharged as well as to attorneys who withdraw. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [1]

Where clients terminated respondent's employment and demanded the return of their file, the rule of professional conduct regarding withdrawal from employment required respondent to deliver the clients' file promptly. Such delivery did not depend on the clients' signing a substitution of attorney. By waiting two months to send the file, respondent violated that rule. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [3]

Where the notice to show cause erroneously charged a violation of former rule 2-111(A)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, but where the factual allegations of the notice stated that respondent had not refunded unearned fees, the subject of former rule 2-111(A)(3) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, respondent had adequate notice of a charge under former rule 2-111(A)(3). In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [6]

An attorney's habitual disregard of clients' interests involves moral turpitude even if such disregard results only from carelessness or gross negligence. Where respondent recklessly or repeatedly failed to provide competent legal services in seven matters and failed to return files properly to clients in four matters, these failures together constituted habitual disregard of clients' interests and amounted to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [8]

Even under the threat of a malpractice action by a client, an attorney is not excused from complying with the duty to provide the client with his or her file. The trial court's determination of the requirements of discovery in the malpractice case is irrelevant to this ethical obligation. Where a client sued respondent for malpractice and respondent failed to turn over the client's file on request, respondent violated the rule requiring release of the client's file, but his misconduct was mitigated by his adherence to the discovery conditions allowing access to the client's files ordered by the trial judge in the malpractice case. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [12]

Where, at time client requested file, respondent had already transferred client's file to successor attorney, respondent was not culpable of failure to release file to client on demand. However, where, upon transferring file to successor counsel and withdrawing from representation, respondent had failed to give client due notice, and had allowed client to believe that respondent remained conduit for contact with successor counsel, respondent violated rule prohibiting withdrawal without taking steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to client. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [3]

Portion of client's file which is client's property must be surrendered promptly upon request to client or client's new counsel once representation has terminated. Client's failure to sign substitution of counsel did not excuse failure to release file, where respondent did not take position that file was needed to protect client's legal interests until client signed substitution. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [4]

Where respondent with no prior record of discipline failed to communicate reasonably with two clients and failed to relinquish their files promptly, causing harm to clients, six-month stayed suspension, with no actual suspension, was well within appropriate range of discipline as indicated by comparable cases. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

An attorney's failure to turn over client's file to successor counsel is not excused by fact that client has copies of documents in file. However, where respondent's employment was of limited duration, work respondent performed was of minimal nature, and there was no evidence that file contained any documents that had not been previously released to client, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent failed to return file. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [7]

An attorney is responsible for the reasonable supervision of the attorney's staff. Where a client repeatedly demanded her file from respondent's office over a six-month period, this was sufficient to establish respondent's lack of reasonable supervision. Respondent's ignorance of the client's demands and lack of prior notice of his staff's failure to inform him of client communications did not absolve respondent from culpability absent additional evidence demonstrating his reasonable supervision of his staff. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [2]

Where respondent received two letters from client's new counsel after respondent claimed to be confused as to whether client was discharging him, respondent's confusion did not excuse his delay in contacting successor counsel and forwarding client's file. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [3]

Where respondent had wrongfully retained client's personal property, review department recommended condition of probation requiring respondent to provide proof of return of such property to client. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [11]

The Rule of Professional Conduct which sets forth the duties and obligations of an attorney who withdraws from employment applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel for the client. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [9]

The rules of ethics regarding the duties of an attorney upon withdrawal apply to attorneys who are discharged as well as those who withdraw. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [3]

277.51 Found

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

277.55 Not Found

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

277.60 Failure to refund unearned fees (RPC 3-700(D)(2); 1975 RPC2-111(A)(3))

Although respondent performed some services for clients, her work was incomplete and she never provided any work product or advice to them. Thus, clients were entitled to a refund of entire fees since they received nothing of value from respondent. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263.[6]

There was sufficient evidence to find that respondent failed to refund an unearned fee promptly upon the termination of employment where: the fee agreement provided for a fixed nonrefundable retainer fee and a contingent fee and provided that any modifications to the agreement had to be in writing and signed by both parties; respondent orally requested and received another $5,000 from the client above the amount called for in the written fee agreement; there was never a written modification to the fee agreement, such that respondent never earned the additional $5,000 fee; and respondent refused for approximately six months after the client obtained a judgment against him to refund the $5,000. The review department concluded that it could not consider whether the value of respondent's services exceeded the price for which he had agreed to perform them, since respondent would have been entitled to the entire fee set forth in the agreement if the services had been worth less than the price set forth in the fee agreement. Further, because respondent drafted the fee agreement, any ambiguities should be interpreted against him. The fiduciary relationship between an attorney and a client is of the very highest character, and transactions between them which are beneficial to the attorney are closely scrutinized for unfairness.In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.[2 a-g]

There was no evidence that respondent earned a fee so as to justify failing to refund the fee to a client after his employment was terminated where (1) there was insufficient evidence to establish an amount of work which, at the quoted rate, would have justified retention of the fee and (2) respondent failed to obtain the result for which he was retained. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[2]

Respondent could not have earned any fee in a probate case absent prior court approval of his fee. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[3]

In a prosecution for intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failing to perform legal services competently, failing to refund an unearned fee after employment was terminated, and failing to deliver clients' funds promptly upon request, there was sufficient evidence that respondent represented the clients involved where one of the clients was referred to respondent and went to his office intending to hire him, saw his name on the door and some of his business cards in the reception area, made several appointments with him, received one of two receipts for payment on respondent's letterhead, and filled out forms for respondent at the request of a member of the office staff who was an employee or agent for respondent. Moreover, respondent had a key to the office, worked out of the office for at least a few hours each week, and, by failing to deny the fact upon accusation by the State Bar, admitted that the clients were his. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[7]

The fee agreement itself established that respondent's fee was not a true retainer but an advanced fee, since the fee was paid not to ensure respondent's availability either for this matter or for a given period of time, but rather to pay respondent in advance for his services. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[9]

In a prosecution for violating Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-700(D)(2), there was insufficient evidence in the record to establish that respondent earned the $1,000 fee. The fee agreement, as interpreted by respondent and as applicable here, provided for the client to pay respondent an hourly fee plus costs for consultants if the matter settled without a hearing. The actual cost due for one consultant was $100, but because respondent never paid the consultant, the client never became liable for such cost. In addition, respondent could not have reviewed the client's records because he never received them, did not have long telephone conversations with the consultant regarding the client's case, and performed insufficient research to have earned the $1,000 fee. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [10]

The agreement between respondent and his client's subsequent counsel for respondent to refund $500 in unearned fees was sufficient to defeat the client's small claims suit against respondent to collect the advanced fee the client had paid him. Nonetheless, their agreement does not affect the ethical conclusion that respondent failed to earn any part of the fee paid. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [2 a, b]

A retainer agreement's characterization of a fee as a "non-refundable retaining fee" is not determinative in ascertaining whether the fee was a true retainer and whether respondent's failure to refund it promptly upon the termination of his employment violated rule 3-700(D)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. A true retainer is paid to secure the availability of an attorney over a given period of time and is earned when paid regardless of whether the attorney actually performs services for the clients. Where the fee was intended to cover the initial 10 hours of respondent's work, the clients understood the fee to be an advanced payment for services, the bills sent to the client showed the fee as a credit for services to be rendered, the retainer agreement did not specify a period of time for which respondent was to be available to the clients and the record did not show that respondent set aside a particular period of time to devote to the clients' matter, the fee was not a true retainer and respondent had to comply with the requirement of rule 3-700(D)(2) to refund any unearned part of an advanced fee promptly upon termination. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. [6]

Where an attorney retained advanced fees long after failing to perform any legal services and agreeing to refund the unearned portion of the fees, such wrongful retention approached a practical appropriation of the client's property. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [4]

Where an attorney retained unearned advanced fees for years and failed to prove factors justifying relief from actual suspension before the completion of restitution, the hearing judge erred in not requiring the attorney to make restitution forthwith. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6]

The rule of professional conduct regarding withdrawal from employment requires an attorney who withdraws to refund promptly any part of a fee that has been paid in advance, but has not been earned. This rule also applies when a client terminates the employment of an attorney. By failing to return advanced fees after performing only minimal preliminary services, an attorney who withdraws from employment violates the rule. Yet an attorney who withdraws from employment after performing some services and providing an accounting does not necessarily violate the rule. Respondent did not violate the rule where she communicated regularly with the clients, negotiated a settlement which would have achieved the clients' purpose, sent them a billing statement showing a credit balance several months before they discharged her, was owed more than this balance by the time of her discharge, and agreed with the clients to call matters even. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [4]

Where the notice to show cause erroneously charged a violation of former rule 2-111(A)(2) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, but where the factual allegations of the notice stated that respondent had not refunded unearned fees, the subject of former rule 2-111(A)(3) of the Rules of Professional Conduct, respondent had adequate notice of a charge under former rule 2-111(A)(3). In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [6]

A true retainer fee is one which is paid solely to ensure the attorney's availability over a given period of time, and is earned when paid since the attorney is entitled to it regardless of whether any actual services are performed. Where respondent did not devote certain blocks of time to certain clients' claims or turn away other business to proceed with their matters, and it was evident that clients were paying for more than respondent's ability, respondent was not excused from accounting for an advanced fee on the ground that it was a retainer earned on receipt. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [2]

Attorneys are not permitted to set their fees unilaterally. If a client contests fees charged or paid, the disputed fees must be placed in a trust account until the conflict is resolved. The duty to account for client funds includes a duty to maintain adequate records of fees drawn against an advanced fee and of fee payments made thereafter, and to provide clients with an appropriate accounting. In evaluating the promptness and adequacy of such an accounting, it was appropriate to look to the standards set forth in the statute governing attorneys' bills for fees and costs, even where a violation of that statute was not charged. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [3]

Respondent's failure to return the unearned portion of an advanced legal fee for over a year violated the rule of professional conduct requiring that unearned fees be promptly returned to the client. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [2]

Where there was no clear and convincing evidence establishing services that were to be performed for fee paid, or establishing respondent's agreement to perform those services, evidence did not support charge of failing to perform services competently. Where, in addition, review department could not determine whether respondent's employment was ever terminated, as opposed to simply being completed, or whether respondent did not earn entire fee paid, review department did not find that respondent violated rule requiring attorneys to take reasonable steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation, or rule requiring prompt refund of any unearned fee. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [9]

In light of comparable case law and absence of mitigating circumstances, public reproval was appropriate discipline for respondent who failed to refund promptly an unearned legal fee and failed to take reasonable steps to avoid prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation. Hearing judge's recommended discipline of stayed suspension was therefore modified. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [13]

Where respondent was not charged with failure to return an unearned advance fee, no finding of culpability for such misconduct could be entered absent an amendment of the charges. Where evidence was insufficient to support such charge, motion to amend was properly denied as an idle act. However, where, despite a clear directive as to the need to amend and an opportunity to move for such amendment in advance of trial, deputy trial counsel waited until after evidence was in to move to amend to conform to proof, motion to amend could also have been denied simply for inexcusable delay in seeking amendment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [3]

It is common in State Bar matters involving failure to perform services to require as a rehabilitative condition, restitution of unearned fees kept by the attorney and to deem as unearned the entire fee when only preliminary services were performed which did not result in benefit to the client. It is also common to recommend the payment of interest incident to such restitution. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [12]

When an attorney withdraws from employment or the client terminates the attorney's employment, the attorney must promptly refund any unearned part of an advance fee. However, where respondent faced competing demands regarding the funds used to pay an advance fee, from a client and from a third party to whom respondent owed a fiduciary duty, respondent had a duty to retain the funds in trust until the client's entitlement to the funds was established, and therefore did not commit misconduct by declining to refund the advance fee. Respondent's motives for retaining the funds in trust were irrelevant because the issue turned on a question of law, not motivation. The State Bar had the burden of proving that the client was entitled to receive the funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [9]

Where respondent did some work on a lawsuit and provided a contemporaneous accounting of time to the client, the charge that respondent had retained unearned advanced fees was not supported by the record. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [16]

Advances by the client for expenses incurred during representation are not encompassed by the rule requiring the prompt refund of unearned advanced fees upon request. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [17]

Because the retention of unearned advanced fees is a violation of an express duty under the Rules of Professional Conduct, it would be duplicative to find the same conduct to constitute an act of moral turpitude, and such a finding is not supported by the case law. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [20]

A finding of failure to return the unearned portion of an advanced fee upon termination of employment was legally independent of the validity of a related fee arbitration award. Where respondent took an advance fee, failed to complete the work, was discharged by the client, agreed to return the unearned portion of the fee, and then failed to do so, respondent was culpable of misconduct notwithstanding alleged defects in a subsequent fee arbitration proceeding. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [5]

Even if respondent's advanced fee originally was a non-refundable "true retainer," respondent's subsequent oral agreement to refund the unearned balance modified the retainer agreement to make the unearned portion of the fee refundable. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [6]

Attorney who rendered services to client before committing misconduct was entitled to collect fee earned prior to commencement of misconduct. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [3]

The Rule of Professional Conduct which sets forth the duties and obligations of an attorney who withdraws from employment applies when an attorney ceases to provide services, even absent formation of an intent to withdraw as counsel for the client. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [9]

An attorney must, upon withdrawal, promptly return any unearned fees. An attorney is not required to practice law in order to comply with this rule, and it therefore continues to apply even if an attorney is suspended. Moreover, a suspended attorney is legally precluded from practicing law and therefore, the attorney's agreement to provide legal services in exchange for a fee is illegal. Permitting a suspended attorney to retain any of the money paid him by a client for services rendered while suspended would condone the attorney's unauthorized practice of law and would be contrary to public policy. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [11]

The rules of ethics regarding the duties of an attorney upon withdrawal apply to attorneys who are discharged as well as those who withdraw. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [3]

Where an attorney had performed some work on a client's case and believed he was entitled to retain the entire advance fee, it was reasonable for him to postpone refunding the fee until a small claims court had determined that a refund was required. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [4]

Where client denied seeing drafts or final copy of trust agreement which contained largely "boiler-plate" language and little if any unique or specially tailored provisions, record supported conclusion that respondent did not earn advanced fees for formation of family trust. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [6]

Where attorney was hired to handle two matters, but retainer agreement made clear that advanced fee was attributable only to one of the matters, attorney was obligated to return entire advanced fee after failing to perform any services on that matter, even though attorney did perform some services on the other matter. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [6]

An attorney's conversion of advanced attorney's fees and costs without performing any services is regarded most seriously by the Supreme Court. Taking money for services not performed or not to be performed is close to the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [9]

277.61 Found

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

277.65 Not Found

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

280.00 Trust account/commingling (RPC 4-100(A); 1975 RPC 8-101(A))

Where disciplinary charges were filed two years after respondent's withdrawal of funds from trust account, and remained pending for more than three years afterwards, respondent remained obligated to maintain trust account records despite expiration of five-year retention period required by Rules of Professional Conduct. Attorney handling client funds cannot escape culpability for misconduct by failing to maintain adequate records. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239 [2 a,b]

The review department found no merit to the State Bar's argument that money in a client trust account is presumed to belong to the clients and that it was respondent's burden to prove otherwise. The State Bar alleged in the notice of disciplinary charges that client money was stolen and it had the burden to present clear and convincing evidence proving that allegation. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [3]

Because insurance settlement check that respondent deposited into his client trust account was made payable to his corporate client, he became a fiduciary of all members of corporation's board of directors who asserted a claim to those funds on corporation's behalf, and he owed those directors the same high duty of honestly and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were their attorney. Respondent breached that duty when he distributed $50,000 of settlement funds to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in the president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of remaining three directors because he knew that president and other three directors were in intractable dispute over control of corporation and that corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [1]

Where respondent had certain knowledge of dispute over his fees and where respondent ignored explicit directive of board majority to immediately cease representing corporation, respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust when he withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate client's funds from his trust account as his attorney's fees. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [2]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Attorneys cannot recover for services rendered if services are rendered in contradiction of attorney professional responsibility. And where attorney improperly withdraws fees from a trust account, restitution to client or client's estate is appropriate. Thus, where respondent withdrew $29,875 from his client trust account as his attorney's fees without his corporate client's authorization, respondent should make restitution of $29,875 plus interest to either corporate client, its successor, appropriate recipient of its assets after its dissolution, or if such successor or recipient of assets after dissolution cannot be identified, the Client Security Fund. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [10 a,b]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Because respondent allowed herself to be disconnected from management of her law office over extended period of time and did not undertake any effort to fulfill her personal and nondelegable duty to monitor client funds and her trust account, hearing judge properly accepted parties' stipulation and correctly found, on respondent's plea of nolo contendere, that respondent was culpable of violating trust account rules even though respondent relied on her husband and law partner to manage the trust account.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [6]

Respondent's conduct of depositing personal funds in his client trust accounts and using those accounts for his personal expenses constituted commingling within the meaning of rule 4-100 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, even where there were no clients funds in the trust account. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.[1]

Even if an attorney returns money that he or she misappropriates, the attorney is still be culpable of the original misappropriation. Thus, restitution is not a defense to a misappropriation charge. Rather, it is a mitigating circumstance that could possibly support a reduction in the discipline. Respondent had the burden of proving mitigating circumstances, including restitution. Where there was no evidence that respondent paid the money back, he did not meet his burden of proving that restitution had been paid. Under these circumstances, restitution was an appropriate component of the discipline. In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541. [1]

Misappropriation of client funds is a grievous breach of an attorney's ethical responsibilities, and generally warrants disbarment unless the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. Respondent bears the burden of proving mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent did not meet that burden, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [1]

Respondent wilfully violated the rule of professional conduct which requires that all funds received for the benefit of clients be deposited in a trust account (rule 4-100(A)), where he failed to ensure that a settlement check was made out to the client and himself and was deposited in his trust account. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [6]

When respondent accepted money on behalf of a third party who was not his client, he had a duty not to misuse the money. Nevertheless, no authority provides that respondent was required or allowed under rule 4-100, Rules of Professional Conduct, to funnel the non-client's business funds through respondent's client trust account. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [1]

By placing a non-client's funds in his trust account for the purpose of allowing the trust account to be used by the non-client as a business account, and by failing to maintain and supervise the account, respondent violated both the letter and the spirit of rule 4-100(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [2]

Even though client had agreed to lend respondent all but a small amount of client's net settlement proceeds, character of such settlement proceeds remained mixed. Respondent's failure to place entire settlement proceeds into client trust account and to properly disburse small amount owed to client violated trust account rules. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [14]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

Attorneys must put all funds received for benefit of clients in a trust account. In event of dispute over amount owed to medical lienholder, attorney cannot withdraw funds from trust account and put them in general account. Where respondent retained funds to pay lien, but withdrew them from trust account, respondent violated trust account rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [4]

Even if attorney has no fiduciary obligation to client's medical provider due to absence of enforceable lien or judgment, attorney still has duty to client to keep all client funds in trust. Where respondent withdrew client funds from trust account which he later used to pay client's medical provider, respondent violated rule requiring client funds to be held in trust even though provider had no lien. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [6]

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

Where respondent had not paid a medical lien, but there was no evidence that respondent had failed to retain the appropriate sum to pay the lien in his trust account, respondent was not culpable of misappropriating the lien funds. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

Attorneys are not permitted to set their fees unilaterally. If a client contests fees charged or paid, the disputed fees must be placed in a trust account until the conflict is resolved. The duty to account for client funds includes a duty to maintain adequate records of fees drawn against an advanced fee and of fee payments made thereafter, and to provide clients with an appropriate accounting. In evaluating the promptness and adequacy of such an accounting, it was appropriate to look to the standards set forth in the statute governing attorneys' bills for fees and costs, even where a violation of that statute was not charged. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [3]

Where respondent honestly believed that he was entitled to retain portions of his clients' cost advances, even though this belief was unreasonable and unsubstantiated, respondent's retention of the funds did not necessarily warrant a conclusion that his conduct was dishonest, especially where respondent's gross negligence in handling the same funds had already been held to violate the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [5]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

Where respondent established a law practice in total disregard of the principles of the rule requiring client funds to be held in trust accounts, respondent could have been charged with and found culpable of violating that rule based on mishandling of trust funds by non-lawyer who ran practice, at least as to cases which respondent was aware were being handled in respondent's name. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [1]

The trust fund and trust account rules are designed to safeguard client funds from the serious risk of loss or misappropriation, whether through carelessness or design. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [6]

Evidence that respondent paid court-ordered sanctions with a trust account check, and that the client had not provided the funds, established respondent's improper use of the trust account, either by commingling trust and personal funds or by misappropriating funds belonging to other clients. Weighing all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, a finding of commingling, the less serious offense, was appropriate. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [13]

The amount of client trust funds that an attorney mishandles goes to the issue of discipline, not culpability, and the mishandling of even an insignificant amount can constitute a disciplinable offense. No de minimis exception applies to the determination of culpability for mishandling trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [7]

A client's objection to respondent taking any legal fee from a settlement triggered the provision of the rule of professional conduct requiring respondent to retain disputed funds in a trust account pending a resolution of the dispute even though respondent later reduced his legal fee. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [8]

A disciplinary proceeding is seldom the proper forum for attorney fee disputes. In a matter arising from a dispute between attorneys, where respondent did not mishandle any sum that could be considered trust funds and respondent's instruction to staff to endorse the other attorney's name to settlement drafts was not dishonest, corrupt, or reflective of bad moral character, the review department affirmed the dismissal of the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [1]

Supreme Court and review department look to elements of trust account rule, and their purposes, in determining whether a particular transaction violates the rule. Under this analysis, funds received by a member of the State Bar which are the subject of a medical lien held by the client's medical provider for services rendered in the matter for which the client hired the attorney are trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule, for they are, in effect, funds held for the benefit of clients. Similarly, funds of certain third parties which come into a lawyer's hands are required to be treated as trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [5]

State Bar Court can and should look to label and treatment of funds by attorney and client when considering whether they are trust or non-trust funds. However, it is the character and nature of the funds, not their label by either attorney or client, which must ultimately determine their status. Despite respondent's labelling of clients' prior attorney's claim for quantum meruit fees as a "lien," in the absence of adequate proof of creation of a lien, the funds claimed by the prior attorney for fees for services rendered were not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [6]

Attorney fees for legal services already performed are personal obligations of a client, and funds held to pay them are not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. A claim for attorney fees for past services has been raised to trust status within the meaning of the trust account rule only where such fees were legally recognized as a lien on the client's recovery. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [7]

Where hearing judge properly accepted client's testimony that advanced funds were for transcript costs and not for respondent's fees, and where applicable written fee agreement provided for respondent to advance costs, respondent's failure to pursue litigation because of client's failure to advance cost of transcripts constituted both a wrongful withdrawal from employment and a wilful violation of duty to perform legal services competently. Respondent was also culpable for failing to deposit the advanced funds in a trust account and for failing to return the client's file promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [6]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not a client is held to the same fiduciary duties in dealing with those funds as if there were an attorney-client relationship. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [4]

An attorney is prohibited from deviating from the rule requiring client funds to be deposited in a trust account even when the attorney has the client's consent to place trust funds in an account other than a trust account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [5]

An attorney's appropriation of client funds based on an unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to the funds constitutes only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where respondent could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to some of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of those funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [10]

An attorney's withdrawal of client funds after the client disputed the attorney's right to receive that money was a violation of the rule of professional conduct requiring disputed client funds to be held in trust. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [11]

Even though notice to show cause did not expressly charge violation of rule requiring client funds to be held in trust, respondent could be found culpable of violating such rule by misappropriating client funds, where such charge was clearly encompassed within allegations in support of moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [15]

Where, as justification for taking client trust funds, respondent asserted that his written fee agreements had been modified to provide for a large contingent fee in one matter and a large flat fee in another matter, but did not produce any documents to support this contention, and offered varying characterizations of the alleged change in the fee arrangements, and, in contrast, the client testified credibly that he had never consented to a change in the fee agreements and had never been billed for additional fees, respondent failed to establish entitlement to the claimed fees. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [2]

Restitution of client funds taken by an attorney is no defense to disciplinary charges of misappropriation. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Where a client authorized respondent to deduct attorney fees for one matter from settlement proceeds in another matter, respondent had no reason to keep the fees which were due to her in a trust account, and did not violate the trust account rules by failing to do so. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [2]

Absent guidelines from the State Bar, it was reasonable for respondent to keep $121.83 of personal funds in her trust account to pay for bank charges, as permitted by the trust account rules. This sum did not threaten the integrity of the clients' funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [3]

Where respondent inadequately supervised her trust accounts over a period of several months and carelessly wrote a check which reduced the balance in a trust account slightly below the necessary amount, respondent's conduct did not amount to gross negligence, and thus did not constitute moral turpitude, but respondent did violate the rule requiring client funds to be held in trust. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [5]

An allegation of an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty encompasses the lesser allegation of a violation of the trust account rules, where the pleading clearly raises the issue of the misuse of trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [6]

Although an attorney cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, the attorney violates the trust account rules if the attorney does not manage funds as required by the rules, regardless of the attorney's intent or the absence of injury to anyone. Violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful despite the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. If an attorney's trust account balance drops below the necessary amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn. The burden then shifts to the attorney to show that office procedures were adequate. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [7]

Not every trust account violation rises to the level of misappropriation. Because of the serious opprobrium attaching to the term "misappropriation," the term is appropriate only when the level of misconduct rises at least to gross negligence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [8]

An attorney who receives money on behalf of a party who is not the attorney's client becomes a fiduciary to the party. Where an attorney assumes the responsibility to disburse funds as agreed by the parties in an action, the attorney owes an obligation to the party who is not the attorney's client to ensure compliance with the terms of the agreement. If there is a dispute between the client and the third party, the attorney must retain the funds in trust until the resolution of the dispute. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [11]

Where respondent negligently committed a minor trust account violation, made voluntary restitution prior to any complaint to the State Bar, presented extensive character evidence, and was on the verge of retiring from a very respectable 40-year career, respondent was appropriately the subject of a private reproval. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [6]

Where the original notice to show cause alleged misappropriation, and the examiner amended the notice to charge respondent with commingling resulting from his bookkeeper's negligence, and there was no evidence that respondent's defense was thereby prejudiced, respondent had sufficient notice of the charges to satisfy his due process rights, because the duty to keep client funds safe is a personal obligation of the attorney and nondelegable, and the attorney was therefore on notice that he could be culpable if his staff's conduct resulted in a violation of that duty. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

Where respondent was involved in a dispute with a former client over the fees and costs incurred for the client, and discovered that three years earlier the client had mistakenly been billed for, and had paid, an expert witness fee which respondent had not paid, respondent should have either paid the bill, reimbursed the client, or, pending the resolution of the dispute, put the erroneous cost reimbursement into a trust account. Having instead kept the funds in his general account, respondent was culpable of commingling and of failing to maintain the funds in trust. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [9]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

Where an attorney representing a bankrupt client had possession of the proceeds of a court-ordered sale of estate assets, did not place the funds in a trust account, did not pay them as directed by the bankruptcy court, and did not otherwise account for the funds, the evidence supported a finding that the attorney misappropriated the funds, violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request, and committed an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [21]

A finding that the amount respondent withdrew from a client trust account was not an earned fee, even though the client did not dispute respondent's testimony that it was an earned fee, was consistent with the evidence that respondent had not performed any legal services during the period of time for which he withdrew the funds; that what work was done by the attorney occurred after the trust funds had been withdrawn; that no value had been placed on the attorney's services during that time, and that the attorney had otherwise been inattentive to the client's case. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [3]

An attorney's withdrawal of client trust funds based on a reasonable or unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to fees may constitute only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where an attorney could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to most of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of the funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [4]

Misappropriation of client funds is a particularly serious ethical violation, which breaches the high duty of loyalty owed to the client, violates basic notions of honesty, and endangers public confidence in the legal profession. Misappropriation generally warrants disbarment of the attorney involved unless clearly extenuating circumstances are present. In assessing the appropriate discipline to recommend for a respondent who had misappropriated a large amount of client funds and also abandoned the client, the review department focused on the misappropriation, the most serious aspect of the misconduct. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [6]

An attorney wilfully violated the rule against commingling by placing his personal funds into his client trust account and issuing checks from that account to pay business expenses, even though at times there were no trust funds in the improperly used client trust account. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [1]

Where respondent treated advanced costs as essentially part of a retainer package which could be used to satisfy fees if the retainer fee portion was used up, such treatment was contrary to the requirement that client funds, including advanced costs, be held in trust, and the failure to return the unused portion of such funds promptly when requested violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on demand. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [5]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

General charges in a notice to show cause of disbursing trust funds without permission or knowledge of the beneficiary did not give adequate notice of a charge of misappropriation of such funds, without further specification as to the facts giving rise to the accompanying charge of committing acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [8]

Improper withdrawal of entrusted funds in violation of duty to maintain funds in trust, and of fiduciary duty to opposing party, does not necessarily rise to the level of an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [9]

In a matter in which respondent prematurely disbursed entrusted funds to repay client for expenses later determined to have been properly reimbursable, and also withdrew funds for attorney's fees but later replaced those funds, the gravamen of the case, for the purpose of assessing the appropriate discipline, was the prolonged deceit perpetuated by respondent on opposing counsel and the courts regarding the unauthorized disbursements. Respondent's extended practice of deceit on courts and counsel made respondent's case far more serious as to discipline than the trust violations. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [10]

Premature withdrawal of trust funds in a marital dissolution to pay community debts, without misrepresentations or financial loss to the opposing party or opposing counsel, combined with impressive character testimony, would warrant discipline in the neighborhood of 30 days actual suspension, not lengthy suspension or disbarment. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [11]

Violations of trust account rules which do not involve a misappropriation found to constitute an act of moral turpitude are not treated, for the purpose of determining appropriate discipline, as misappropriations within the contemplation of standard 2.2(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, for which disbarment is the presumed sanction. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [16]

Any objection that a client raised to attorney's fees and costs, upon client's receipt of accounting of settlement funds, would have to be resolved prior to attorney's withdrawal of funds from trust account to pay fees and reimburse advanced costs. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [7]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that the respondent attorney had misappropriated funds to his own use and purposes, and charged the attorney with acts of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, but did not charge the attorney with a breach of the ethical rule concerning the proper handling of client trust funds, and the notice to show cause did not clearly put the attorney on notice of a charge that he had violated the trust funds rule, the attorney therefore could not be found culpable of violating that rule in light of the mandate that the attorney be given adequate notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to respond thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [18]

Under California law, absent an enforceable contractual lien, an attorney commits a trust account violation by unilaterally determining his or her fee and withdrawing trust funds to satisfy the fee, even though the attorney may be entitled to a fee in the withdrawn amount. Fact that small claims court eventually found in favor of attorney on fee dispute was not a defense to such violation; client should not have had to sue attorney after fees were taken. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [22]

Where an attorney in a contingent fee case has a contractual lien for the attorney's fees, but withdraws before completion of the case, this renders uncertain both the amount, if any, which the attorney is entitled to be paid, and the attorney's entitlement to enforce the lien; they depend on whether the attorney had justifiable cause for withdrawing. Thus, in the event of such a withdrawal, the attorney's right to enforce the lien and the extent of the attorney's recovery cannot be determined unilaterally by the attorney. If the attorney and client cannot reach a new agreement, then the attorney's sole recourse is to an independent tribunal with the funds remaining in trust in the interim. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [23]

Possession of client funds in the form of a cashier's check is no defense to a charge of commingling. However, an attorney who held client funds outside his trust account in the form of cashier's checks, notified his client promptly of the receipt of the funds, forwarded them to the client promptly upon demand, and had adequate funds at all times to pay what he owed the client, did not commit misappropriation, violate obligation to deliver client funds promptly upon demand, or commit any act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [9]

Practice of keeping minimal amounts of attorney's personal funds in "dormant" client trust accounts violates rule against commingling personal funds in trust accounts, regardless of rationale for so doing. Exception to this rule permitting trust accounts to contain non-client funds to extent necessary to pay bank charges has been strictly construed. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [9]

An attorney who repeatedly withdraws small amounts of cash for personal use from his or her trust account strongly indicates by such conduct that the attorney is improperly treating the trust account as a personal or general office account, and either allowing the attorney's own funds to remain in the trust account longer than they should (thus violating the rule against commingling), or misappropriating funds that properly belong to his or her clients. This is true regardless of the means by which the withdrawals are accomplished. Use of an ATM card for this purpose may slightly increase the risk of inadequate recordkeeping, but is not itself improper. Use of ATM cards to transfer funds from client trust accounts is not precluded by the Rules of Professional Conduct provided that the transfer is proper and adequate records are kept. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [13]

If respondent displayed a reckless or indifferent attitude toward his recordkeeping duties with regard to client trust funds, by using an ATM card to make repeated cash withdrawals of personal funds from his client trust account, this could constitute a factor in aggravation of commingling charges. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [14]

An attorney's practice of paying personal injury clients' doctor out of the attorney's own general account, including in some instances making such payments even before the clients' cases had closed, did not entitle the attorney to treat the doctor as the attorney's own creditor. The debt to the doctor was owed by the clients, and the attorney had a duty to honor the clients' agreement. Even with the doctor's consent, the attorney could not transform settlement funds earmarked for payment of medical liens into general funds. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [2]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to personal injury clients did not end with payment to them of their share of the recovery in their cases; the attorney had an ongoing fiduciary duty to hold in trust the remaining settlement funds, subject to clients' directions regarding disbursement. This duty did not end until the clients' debt to their treating physician was paid. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [3]

Assuming that an attorney was entitled to delay payment to a medical lienholder until resolution of a dispute with the clients' insurance company regarding settlement funds, the attorney was required nonetheless to place the amount earmarked for satisfaction of the medical lien in the attorney's trust account until payment to the lienholder in accordance with the terms of the lien. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [4]

Respondent's conduct in placing trust funds in his personal account, using such funds, and delaying payment thereof to his clients' medical lienholder for a year and a half after demand for payment constituted commingling and misappropriation and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [5]

Where hearing department found unpersuasive client's testimony that he did not consent to respondent's application of client trust funds to respondent's outstanding legal fees, State Bar did not demonstrate trust account irregularities or misappropriation by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [9]

Attorney's responsibility for maintaining entrusted funds on deposit in trust account does not end when checks purporting to distribute entrusted funds are issued; responsibility continues until the checks have cleared the account. Where attorney's trust account balance fell below amount of entrusted funds after checks were written but before they cleared, attorney thereby misappropriated funds and violated trust account rules. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [2]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

The mere fact that the balance in an attorney's trust account falls below the amounts deposited and purportedly held in trust therein supports a conclusion of misappropriation. The rule regarding safekeeping of entrusted funds leaves no room for inquiry into the attorney's intent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [6]

Respondent's admission that he used his trust account as an operating account and deposited his personal funds into his trust account when client funds were in the account supported finding of commingling in violation of rules governing use of trust accounts. Commingling is committed when a client's money is intermingled with that of the attorney and its separate identity lost so that it may be used for the attorney's personal expenses. Use of the trust account for personal purposes is absolutely prohibited, even if client funds are not on deposit. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [7]

Attorney's failure to keep sums owed to clients' treating physician in a proper trust account and to promptly pay the sums to the doctor as requested constituted a wilful violation of rules requiring keeping client funds in trust account and paying them promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [2]

Respondent's admission to a State Bar investigator that he misused advanced costs given to him by his clients and failed to place them in a trust account, and his clients' testimony that he did no work on the matter for which the costs were advanced and failed to refund or account for the advanced costs, established respondent's wilful violation of his duties to hold the funds in a trust account, to render an accounting for the funds, and to refund them on request. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [7]

Trust accounts, open or closed, are never to be used for personal purposes, barring the very narrow exceptions outlined in the rule governing such accounts. Using checks drawn on a client trust account to pay personal debts constituted a violation of the rule prohibiting use of a client trust account for personal purposes, even though there was no evidence that there were any client funds in the account. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [5]

Where the balance in a client trust account falls below the total of those client funds deposited and held in trust, that fact alone can support a finding of misappropriation. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [6]

An attorney's failure to deposit into his trust account settlement funds received for the benefit of a client is a direct violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct governing client trust funds. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

280.01 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308.

In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273.

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

280.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

280.20 Notify client re receipt of funds (RPC 4-100(B)(1); 1975 RPC 8-101(B)(1))

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

An uncharged violation of the rule requiring prompt notification to clients when client funds are received could be considered as an aggravating circumstance, where the respondent was put on notice of the nature of the uncharged misconduct in the notice to show cause and did not object to a finding of culpability under a different rule for the same conduct. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [10]

Where attorney's reluctance to inform client of arrival of partial settlement check was prompted by concern that client would demand payment rather than allowing funds to be held to satisfy medical and attorney's fee liens, this explanation did not excuse attorney's delay in informing client of receipt of funds and was not a defense to culpability for violating rule requiring prompt notice to clients of receipt of client funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [2]

Moral turpitude is not demonstrated simply by an attorney's failure to notify a client that a medical payment draft has arrived and that the attorney has endorsed it for the client. Although this conduct clearly violates the rule requiring attorneys to notify clients promptly upon receipt of client funds, it does not amount to dishonesty or other misconduct in any way characterizable as moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [17]

Possession of client funds in the form of a cashier's check is no defense to a charge of commingling. However, an attorney who held client funds outside his trust account in the form of cashier's checks, notified his client promptly of the receipt of the funds, forwarded them to the client promptly upon demand, and had adequate funds at all times to pay what he owed the client, did not commit misappropriation, violate obligation to deliver client funds promptly upon demand, or commit any act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [9]

Where respondent, represented by experienced counsel, stipulated to facts which respondent conceded supported uncharged violation of failing to notify clients of receipt of client funds, and respondent did not object to referee's amendment of notice to show cause to reflect such charge, review department held that any such objection was waived, and found culpability despite omission of charge from notice to show cause. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [6]

Reference in notice to show cause to undisclosed loans made from client trust funds would appear to charge violation of rule requiring disclosure of receipt of client funds, but not of rule requiring payment of funds to client on demand, since clients would not be in a position to demand funds which they were unaware were transferred out of trust. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [10]

280.21 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

280.25 Not Found

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

280.30 Preserve client property (RPC 4-100(B)(2); 1975 RPC 8-101(B)(2))

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee.In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Where record clearly and convincingly established that respondent had not kept client's settlement check in safe place, but did not specify whether respondent lost check before or after effective date of revised Rules of Professional Conduct, respondent violated either former or current version of rule requiring attorneys to keep client property in place of safekeeping. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [18]

Where respondent was grossly negligent in failing to respond to requests for information from client and successor counsel, and where respondent failed to maintain client's settlement check in safe place, respondent repeatedly failed to perform competently. However, where charge of repeated failure to perform competently addressed same misconduct as charges of failure to communicate with client and failure to keep client property in safe place, failure to perform competently was given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [19]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

280.31 Found

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

280.35 Not Found

280.40 Maintain records of client funds (RPC 4-100(B)(3); 1975 RPC 8-101(B)(3))

The obligation to render appropriate accounts to the client found in Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 4–100(B)(3) does not require as a predicate that the client demand such an accounting. In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [4]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Respondent did not disclose the costs sanctions he received from an insurance company in his accounting to his client. In the absence of an express agreement or court order to the contrary, any costs or attorney's fees awarded by a court as sanctions are for the account of the client. Respondent therefore failed to properly account to his client in violation of rule 4-100(B)(3) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [4]

A true retainer fee is one which is paid solely to ensure the attorney's availability over a given period of time, and is earned when paid since the attorney is entitled to it regardless of whether any actual services are performed. Where respondent did not devote certain blocks of time to certain clients' claims or turn away other business to proceed with their matters, and it was evident that clients were paying for more than respondent's ability, respondent was not excused from accounting for an advanced fee on the ground that it was a retainer earned on receipt. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [2]

Attorneys are not permitted to set their fees unilaterally. If a client contests fees charged or paid, the disputed fees must be placed in a trust account until the conflict is resolved. The duty to account for client funds includes a duty to maintain adequate records of fees drawn against an advanced fee and of fee payments made thereafter, and to provide clients with an appropriate accounting. In evaluating the promptness and adequacy of such an accounting, it was appropriate to look to the standards set forth in the statute governing attorneys' bills for fees and costs, even where a violation of that statute was not charged. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [3]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where there was clear conflict in testimony with regard to whether respondent provided clients with an accounting, and hearing judge was unable to resolve such conflict, there was insufficient evidence to support charge that respondent did not provide accounting. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [6]

Supreme Court and review department look to elements of trust account rule, and their purposes, in determining whether a particular transaction violates the rule. Under this analysis, funds received by a member of the State Bar which are the subject of a medical lien held by the client's medical provider for services rendered in the matter for which the client hired the attorney are trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule, for they are, in effect, funds held for the benefit of clients. Similarly, funds of certain third parties which come into a lawyer's hands are required to be treated as trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [5]

State Bar Court can and should look to label and treatment of funds by attorney and client when considering whether they are trust or non-trust funds. However, it is the character and nature of the funds, not their label by either attorney or client, which must ultimately determine their status. Despite respondent's labelling of clients' prior attorney's claim for quantum meruit fees as a "lien," in the absence of adequate proof of creation of a lien, the funds claimed by the prior attorney for fees for services rendered were not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [6]

Attorney fees for legal services already performed are personal obligations of a client, and funds held to pay them are not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. A claim for attorney fees for past services has been raised to trust status within the meaning of the trust account rule only where such fees were legally recognized as a lien on the client's recovery. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [7]

Invoice to client for hourly fees should not have included time spent on personal injury matter which was covered by a separate contingency fee agreement, because of potential client confusion. More importantly, respondent should have given clients an opportunity to review such bill before, not after, receiving authorization to pay portion of bill out of client's share of proceeds of personal injury matter. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [17]

Where respondent chose to place entrusted client funds in a complex series of numerous trust accounts, cashier's checks, and certificates of deposit, and failed to produce any accounting of the funds for more than three years after the client requested it, respondent's contention that his efforts to provide an accounting were impeded by an office fire which destroyed most of the records of the client's funds was unpersuasive given that a timely response to the client's request would have avoided the difficulties resulting from the loss of the records three years thereafter. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [4]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

Even though attorney belatedly supplied accountings to his clients, he violated duty to keep adequate records by failing to require his staff to maintain office records adequate to ensure that he would know of receipt of client funds and distribute them promptly upon receipt. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [8]

Where attorney held settlement draft uncashed pending review of adequacy of settlement amount, attorney's misconduct consisted of failure to follow through, and improper handling of client funds, rather than misappropriation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [13]

An attorney's accounting regarding the funds belonging to his client that he had received, which was transmitted solely to the client's new counsel, did not satisfy the attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts to his client, since the attorney was not directed by the client to render the account to her new counsel and since the obligation ran directly to the client. Nevertheless, the possibility that the attorney was relying on the new counsel to transmit the accounting to the client precluded clear and convincing proof of a violation. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [5]

An attorney's belated accounting of client funds was deficient in that it did not explain why it had not been made at the time the attorney originally forwarded the client's file to the client's new attorney. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [6]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, greater discipline may be imposed for a violation of an attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts than might otherwise be appropriate if the attorney's misconduct was surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment, or overreaching, as well as for other violations of the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct or refusal or inability to account for improper conduct toward trust funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [21]

Respondent's admission to a State Bar investigator that he misused advanced costs given to him by his clients and failed to place them in a trust account, and his clients' testimony that he did no work on the matter for which the costs were advanced and failed to refund or account for the advanced costs, established respondent's wilful violation of his duties to hold the funds in a trust account, to render an accounting for the funds, and to refund them on request. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [7]

When an attorney agrees to hold client funds in trust for the benefit of a non-client, the nature of that agreement creates a fiduciary duty to the non-client, as well as the client. As a fiduciary, the attorney's obligation to account for the funds extends to both parties claiming an interest in the funds. Accordingly, the rules governing handling and payment of client trust funds apply to a non-client's funds as well. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

280.41 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Invoices provided to the State Bar rather than respondent's former client do not satisfy the requirements of rule 4-100(B)(3). Invoices which account for only a portion of respondent's fees and which fail to indicate withdrawal of entrusted funds to pay a third party invoice violate rule 4-100(B)(3). In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [7]

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

280.45 Not Found

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

280.50 Pay client funds on request (RPC 4-100(B)(4); 1975 RPC 8-101(B)(4))

Rule 4-100(B)(4) of the Rules of Professional Conduct requires that an attorney promptly pay or deliver client money in possession of the member. By its terms, the important date for purposes of this rule is when respondent received the settlement money, not the date that clients signed releases or the date cases settled. Where no evidence was presented showing when respondent received settlement money, the review department, resolving all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, concluded that the rule 4-100(B)(4) charges were not sustained by convincing proof to a reasonable certainty. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [5 a-e]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

In a prosecution for intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly failing to perform legal services competently, failing to refund an unearned fee after employment was terminated, and failing to deliver clients' funds promptly upon request, there was sufficient evidence that respondent represented the clients involved where one of the clients was referred to respondent and went to his office intending to hire him, saw his name on the door and some of his business cards in the reception area, made several appointments with him, received one of two receipts for payment on respondent's letterhead, and filled out forms for respondent at the request of a member of the office staff who was an employee or agent for respondent. Moreover, respondent had a key to the office, worked out of the office for at least a few hours each week, and, by failing to deny the fact upon accusation by the State Bar, admitted that the clients were his. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [7]

Where a client asks an attorney to distribute funds claimed by the client and where the attorney claims an interest in the funds, the attorney violates rule 4-100(B)(4) if he or she does not promptly taken appropriate, substantive steps to resolve the dispute in order to disburse the funds. As respondent effectively took prompt, substantive action to resolve the dispute with his client by participating in the fee arbitration proceeding and by promptly abiding by the arbitrators' award, he did not violate the rule. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [5]

Rule of Professional Conduct 4-100(B)(4), requiring a lawyer to promptly deliver to a client on the client's request funds in possession of the lawyer which the client is entitled to receive, did not apply where respondent had no client funds in his possession. In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754. [2]

Respondent wilfully violated the rule requiring that an attorney promptly pay funds which the client has requested and is entitled to receive where a client asked respondent for her share of a settlement, where respondent disbursed his share of the settlement to himself, and where respondent waited without compelling reason for six weeks to disburse the client's share of the settlement to the client. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [4]

Respondent violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request where a client asked respondent to distribute certain trust funds to the client, where another person to whom respondent owed a fiduciary duty claimed a lien on these funds, and where respondent did not promptly take appropriate steps to resolve the dispute in order to disburse the funds. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [3]

Respondent wilfully violated the rule of professional conduct which requires an attorney, upon the request of a client, to deliver promptly funds which the client is entitled to receive and which are in the attorney's possession (rule 4-100(B)(4)), where some of respondent's office staff must have possessed the client's funds. Regardless of whether respondent personally possessed these funds, as the client's attorney, respondent was ethically responsible for reasonable oversight of office staff which did possess them. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [7]

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

Even though client had agreed to lend respondent all but a small amount of client's net settlement proceeds, character of such settlement proceeds remained mixed. Respondent's failure to place entire settlement proceeds into client trust account and to properly disburse small amount owed to client violated trust account rules. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [14]

Rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request also applies to obligation to pay third parties, including holders of medical liens, out of funds held in trust. Failure to pay a medical lien can violate such rule even if attorney acts in good faith. Even where respondent believed he had permission from medical lienholder to use settlement funds, such belief was not a defense to violation of rule. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [3]

Where medical lienholder demanded payment of liens; respondent disputed amount owed; negotiations ensued; lienholder did not object to respondent's waiting to make payment until dispute was resolved; and respondent promptly paid agreed amount upon resolution of dispute, respondent did not violate rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [5]

Rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on demand requires attorney to pay client's medical provider only if attorney has fiduciary obligation to provider. Where respondent had no such fiduciary obligation due to lack of enforceable lien or judgment, and record did not show that provider requested payment or that respondent did not promptly comply with such request, violation of rule was not established. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [7]

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

Rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds on demand requires no special state of mind to establish violation; mere fact that payment was not made is sufficient to constitute wilfulness for purpose of finding wilful violation of rule. Without justification, failure to pay third party lien on demand violates such rule. Where attorney negotiates with lienholder to reduce lien amount, and it becomes clear negotiations will not be productive, attorney violates rule if attorney neither promptly pays lien in full nor takes appropriate steps to resolve dispute promptly. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [24]

Where there was no evidence that medical provider had enforceable lien, and one-month delay from provider's demand to payment of medical bill was not unreasonable under circumstances, attorney's delay in paying client's medical bill from settlement proceeds did not violate rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds on demand. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [25]

Fact that attorney's failure to pay medical lien resulted from client's deception of attorney did not justify attorney's four-year delay in making payment after lienholder filed suit to enforce lien. Such delay was sufficient to establish violation of rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds on demand. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [26]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds upon demand requires attorneys to make such payment not only to the client, but also to a third party with a legitimate claim to those particular funds. Where respondent improperly collected funds belonging to client's estranged husband, respondent held funds in trust as fiduciary for husband, and failure to turn them over to husband's counsel on demand violated rule. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

By applying funds improperly collected from client's estranged husband to payment of client's debt for attorney's fees, respondent committed a trust account violation. Respondent's honest but mistaken belief in his own right to such funds did not absolve him of such violation. However, such violation did not constitute misappropriation, where respondent's essential ethical shortcoming involved misattributing ownership of funds to client rather than failing to handle them properly as entrusted funds. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Where an attorney disobeys a court order based on an unreasonable interpretation of the order or an untested belief that the order is not valid, or takes money that is not the attorney's based on an unreasonable view of the facts, public discipline is necessary to make clear to the bar, the courts and the public that attorneys face serious consequences for such misconduct. However, where respondent did not pose a threat to the public, and review department concluded that actual suspension was not required to reinforce respondent's understanding of his ethical obligations, no actual suspension was necessary. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

Where hearing judge declined to order restitution but offered to reconsider if State Bar could show that misconduct victim had not already been compensated for funds taken by respondent, this ruling misallocated the burden of proof. Once State Bar met its burden to prove initial trust account violation, it was respondent's burden to prove that restitution had in effect already been made by a third party. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

Where there was no evidence that respondent's trust account practices were generally deficient, and respondent's essential ethical shortcoming involved misattributing ownership of funds, not failing to handle them properly as entrusted funds, it was not necessary to require respondent to attend special trust accounting class portion of Ethics School. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [16]

Where respondent delayed in transferring client trust funds to a client's new counsel due to the new counsel's failure to provide adequate authority for respondent to relinquish the funds, respondent did not violate the rule requiring prompt payment of client trust funds on demand. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [7]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not the attorney's client must comply with the same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if an attorney-client relationship existed. Where an attorney represents a Medi-Cal beneficiary in a personal injury matter and has received notice of the Medi-Cal lien, the attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward the Department of Health Services as to its advancement of funds for the beneficiary and the Medi-Cal lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [8]

The rule regarding prompt payment of entrusted funds upon demand applies not only to an attorney's obligation to clients, but also to the attorney's obligation to pay third parties out of funds held in trust, including the obligation to pay holders of medical liens. Where respondent disbursed to a client the entire amount of the settlement of a personal injury claim without ensuring that the request by the Department of Health Services for payment of a Medi-Cal lien was honored, respondent wilfully violated such rule. It was no defense that respondent acted at the client's request, because the client was not entitled to receive all the settlement funds. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [9]

Unlike the proof of a violation of the State Bar Act, the proof of a wilful violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct merely has to demonstrate that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, that he knew what he was doing or not doing and that he intended either to commit the act or to abstain from committing it. Where respondent knew he was settling a personal injury claim without ensuring the payment of an applicable Medi-Cal lien and intended to do so, he acted wilfully; and a determination of culpability under the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds was appropriate even if he acted in good faith. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [10]

Duplicative allegations of misconduct serve little, if any purpose. It should be apparent by the time of the pretrial conference which charges are most apt, which other charges might show additional misconduct, and which are simply duplicative and unnecessary. Amendment or dismissal of charges, particularly at the time of filing the pretrial statement (rule 1222(k), Provisional Rules of Practice), serves the interest of litigant and judicial economy. Thus, where respondent failed to ensure payment of a medical lien when settling a personal injury case, there was no benefit to charging respondent with failing to act competently, when the charge that respondent violated the rule requiring proper payment of entrusted funds addressed the alleged misconduct far more aptly and supported identical or greater discipline. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [13]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim on behalf of a Medi-Cal beneficiary without ensuring the payment of the applicable Medi-Cal lien, an issue to be addressed on remand was the effect, if any, on the appropriate degree of discipline of the policy adopted by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, with the approval of a committee of the Board of Governors, against prosecuting future health care provider "collection" cases, at least for private lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [15]

Where, after receiving medical payments advanced by his personal injury client's first-party insurer, respondent misappropriated the funds; failed to apprise his client that the first-party insurer was subrogated to the client's recovery against the other driver; failed to ensure that the first-party insurer was reimbursed from the ultimate settlement; failed to deduct the subrogation amount from the settlement in calculating his fee, and failed to refund the resulting excess fee for three years after the client demanded the refund, respondent violated the statute prohibiting moral turpitude and dishonesty and the rule regarding prompt payment of client funds on demand. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [10]

Where respondent's signature was needed to negotiate a settlement draft, and respondent's former client insisted that her current counsel's messenger retain possession of the draft and not leave it with respondent or his staff, and the draft was tendered to respondent at his office and elsewhere but he declined to make himself available to endorse it, respondent was obligated to act promptly to release the client's funds by endorsing the check, he had constructive possession of the funds, and his unreasonable refusal to complete the endorsement in a timely manner constituted an improper withholding of the settlement funds. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [4]

Where a settlement draft was misplaced by respondent's temporary clerical employee for a little over a month, there was no indication that the client informed respondent of immediate need of the settlement funds, and there was no effort by successor counsel to alert respondent that the draft had not been returned, respondent's conduct did not rise to the level of negligent supervision of staff and the resulting delay in respondent's endorsement of the draft did not constitute improper withholding of requested client funds. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [8]

A disciplinary proceeding is seldom the proper forum for attorney fee disputes. In a matter arising from a dispute between attorneys, where respondent did not mishandle any sum that could be considered trust funds and respondent's instruction to staff to endorse the other attorney's name to settlement drafts was not dishonest, corrupt, or reflective of bad moral character, the review department affirmed the dismissal of the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [1]

Supreme Court and review department look to elements of trust account rule, and their purposes, in determining whether a particular transaction violates the rule. Under this analysis, funds received by a member of the State Bar which are the subject of a medical lien held by the client's medical provider for services rendered in the matter for which the client hired the attorney are trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule, for they are, in effect, funds held for the benefit of clients. Similarly, funds of certain third parties which come into a lawyer's hands are required to be treated as trust funds. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [5]

State Bar Court can and should look to label and treatment of funds by attorney and client when considering whether they are trust or non-trust funds. However, it is the character and nature of the funds, not their label by either attorney or client, which must ultimately determine their status. Despite respondent's labelling of clients' prior attorney's claim for quantum meruit fees as a "lien," in the absence of adequate proof of creation of a lien, the funds claimed by the prior attorney for fees for services rendered were not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [6]

Attorney fees for legal services already performed are personal obligations of a client, and funds held to pay them are not trust funds within the meaning of the trust account rule. A claim for attorney fees for past services has been raised to trust status within the meaning of the trust account rule only where such fees were legally recognized as a lien on the client's recovery. In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234. [7]

Where hearing judge properly accepted client's testimony that advanced funds were for transcript costs and not for respondent's fees, and where applicable written fee agreement provided for respondent to advance costs, respondent's failure to pursue litigation because of client's failure to advance cost of transcripts constituted both a wrongful withdrawal from employment and a wilful violation of duty to perform legal services competently. Respondent was also culpable for failing to deposit the advanced funds in a trust account and for failing to return the client's file promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [6]

An attorney's unjustified delay of over two months in paying client funds to the client after demand violated the rule of professional conduct requiring client funds to be paid promptly upon demand. Conversely, where a delay in payment to another client was minimal and not intentional, no violation of the rule occurred. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [14]

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

Where an attorney failed to refund entrusted funds to a client promptly when reasonable attention to the attorney's duties would have made it apparent that the client had overpaid the attorney for fees, the attorney violated the duty to pay clients their funds promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [3]

Where a client was not yet entitled to receive settlement proceeds because the client had not signed the necessary release, respondent's eight-month delay in sending a portion of the settlement funds to the client did not violate the obligation to pay client funds promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [4]

Where respondent's client made a belated demand for repayment of an improperly billed cost, by raising the issue during an arbitration proceeding concerning fees and costs owed by the client, and in response, respondent offered the client credit against other fees in the arbitration, respondent was not culpable of failing to pay or deliver the funds promptly. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [11]

Failure to honor medical liens violates the rule of professional conduct requiring prompt payment of client funds upon demand. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [2]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

An attorney's failure to return unspent costs advanced by the client did not violate the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds upon request, where there was no evidence that the client had requested the return of the funds. Nor did the attorney's inaction alone, in failing to return the funds for several years, support a finding that the attorney had misappropriated the funds or committed acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [18]

Where an attorney representing a bankrupt client had possession of the proceeds of a court-ordered sale of estate assets, did not place the funds in a trust account, did not pay them as directed by the bankruptcy court, and did not otherwise account for the funds, the evidence supported a finding that the attorney misappropriated the funds, violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request, and committed an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [21]

Where respondent treated advanced costs as essentially part of a retainer package which could be used to satisfy fees if the retainer fee portion was used up, such treatment was contrary to the requirement that client funds, including advanced costs, be held in trust, and the failure to return the unused portion of such funds promptly when requested violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on demand. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [5]

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the hearing judge is in a particularly appropriate position to resolve it, and the Rules of Procedure require the review department to afford great weight to the hearing judge's findings in such matters, absent a good reason for reaching a different result. Where the hearing judge accepted respondent's client's testimony regarding the timing of a request for a refund of advanced costs, and explained why the client's testimony was given greater weight than respondent's contrary testimony, the review department adopted the hearing judge's findings and conclusions on that issue. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [7]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

Attorney cannot be found culpable of failing to pay funds to client promptly upon request where, due to attorney's failure to notify client of receipt of funds, client has not requested payment. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [9]

Any objection that a client raised to attorney's fees and costs, upon client's receipt of accounting of settlement funds, would have to be resolved prior to attorney's withdrawal of funds from trust account to pay fees and reimburse advanced costs. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [7]

Where a client was never entitled to receive certain funds which were the subject of two liens, and where, by the time demand for the funds was made, the client's attorney had clearly become entitled to receive the funds to satisfy his lien, there was no basis for finding a violation of the ethical rule requiring that funds to which a client is entitled must be paid to the client promptly as requested by the client. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [20]

Possession of client funds in the form of a cashier's check is no defense to a charge of commingling. However, an attorney who held client funds outside his trust account in the form of cashier's checks, notified his client promptly of the receipt of the funds, forwarded them to the client promptly upon demand, and had adequate funds at all times to pay what he owed the client, did not commit misappropriation, violate obligation to deliver client funds promptly upon demand, or commit any act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [9]

Respondent's conduct in placing trust funds in his personal account, using such funds, and delaying payment thereof to his clients' medical lienholder for a year and a half after demand for payment constituted commingling and misappropriation and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [5]

Where hearing department found unpersuasive client's testimony that he did not consent to respondent's application of client trust funds to respondent's outstanding legal fees, State Bar did not demonstrate trust account irregularities or misappropriation by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [9]

Client who has consented to attorney's retention of illegal fees may properly demand return of such fees. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [8]

A request by a client for payment of funds or property held by the attorney is an essential element of the charge of failing to pay client trust funds promptly upon request. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [5]

In pleading a violation of the ethical rule requiring payment of client trust finds on demand, there must be an allegation that the respondent was in possession of identified funds, securities or other property of a client; that the client was entitled to receive the funds, securities or property, and that there was a request by the client that the respondent pay or deliver the funds, securities or other property. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [9]

Reference in notice to show cause to undisclosed loans made from client trust funds would appear to charge violation of rule requiring disclosure of receipt of client funds, but not of rule requiring payment of funds to client on demand, since clients would not be in a position to demand funds which they were unaware were transferred out of trust. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [10]

Attorney's failure to keep sums owed to clients' treating physician in a proper trust account and to promptly pay the sums to the doctor as requested constituted a wilful violation of rules requiring keeping client funds in trust account and paying them promptly upon demand. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [2]

Respondent's admission to a State Bar investigator that he misused advanced costs given to him by his clients and failed to place them in a trust account, and his clients' testimony that he did no work on the matter for which the costs were advanced and failed to refund or account for the advanced costs, established respondent's wilful violation of his duties to hold the funds in a trust account, to render an accounting for the funds, and to refund them on request. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [7]

Even though the Rule of Professional Conduct requiring payment of client funds upon demand refers only to an attorney's obligation to pay clients, not to any obligation to pay third parties out of funds held in trust, the rule also applies in instances where the attorney is in possession of funds to be paid to a client's medical provider. Accordingly, where an attorney failed to honor a medical lien and failed to make agreed-upon payments to the doctor, the attorney could properly be found culpable of violating that rule. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

When an attorney agrees to hold client funds in trust for the benefit of a non-client, the nature of that agreement creates a fiduciary duty to the non-client, as well as the client. As a fiduciary, the attorney's obligation to account for the funds extends to both parties claiming an interest in the funds. Accordingly, the rules governing handling and payment of client trust funds apply to a non-client's funds as well. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

280.51 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

280.55 Not Found

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Respondent H (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 234.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

290.00 Illegal or unconscionable fee (RPC 4-200; 1975 RPC 2-107)

A fee that seems, or in fact is, high is not the same as an unconscionable fee. A fee is unconscionable when it is so exorbitant and disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience and often involves an element of fraud or overreaching that practically constitutes an appropriation of client funds under the guise of fees. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [6]

Applying the non-exclusive factors in rule 4-200(B), fees attorney charged to provide a financial analysis to clients interested in mortgage loan modifications did not represent the type of truly shocking fees that the courts have found to be unconscionable. The level of client sophistication varied, with some clients familiar with the mortgage industry. Each client approved the financial analysis charge and provided payment information; most also signed a retainer agreement. Respondent had some expertise in mortgage law and was experienced in negotiating with banking institutions. Respondent spent many hours creating the proprietary financial analysis, which generated valuable information clients could use to pursue a mortgage loan modification without assistance. Most importantly, an unrebutted expert witness testified that the financial analysis was a valuable tool for a client deciding whether to pursue a loan modification, gathering information from distressed homeowners was time-consuming, and software respondent used to create the financial analysis was not readily available to the public. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [7]

Respondent violated the unconscionable fee prohibitions in Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 4-200 in connection with his client's personal injury case when he failed to disclose to the client that he intended his 35 percent contingency fee to be in addition to the fee earned by the client's previously discharged attorney. Respondent failed to disclose the true facts so that the fee charged under the circumstances constituted a practical appropriation of the client's funds under the guise of retaining them as fees. Respondent's written contingent fee agreement with his client was materially ambiguous resulting in his client's understanding that she would pay a total of 35 percent of any settlement or judgment to both respondent and her previously discharged attorney. Since neither respondent nor the client knew that each of them had a different interpretation of the contract language, there was no meeting of the minds and thus no agreement as to fees. In the absence of a valid fee agreement, respondent's compensation is based on a theory of quantum meruit rather than the full contract price and the agreed upon contingent fee acts as an upper limit on the amount to be divided on a quantum meruit theory between the discharged and retained attorneys hired on a contingency basis in the same case. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [1 a–d]

Where respondent charged a fee in a personal injury matter that was more than twice as much as his client agreed to and also double what he was entitled to under a quantum meruit theory, the charged fee was unconscionable. The fact that respondent's fee agreement in a personal injury matter contained two provisions that were void for public policy evidences respondent's overreaching which in turn supports a finding that he charged and collected an unconscionable fee. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [2 a–c]

Where respondent collected a fee in a workers' compensation case in which the contingency for the fee did not occur and where the fee agreement contained provisions void for public policy evidencing respondent's overreaching, respondent collected an unauthorized fee in violation of the unconscionability provisions of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 4–200. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [3]

Where respondent was not obliged to arbitrate a fee dispute between his client and the client's prior attorney, there is no basis to conclude that the fees respondent charged in preparing the client for the fee arbitration involving the client's prior attorney were unconscionable. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [4 a, b]

Since respondent was not entitled to charge or collect her fees for those services that constituted the unauthorized practice of law and since respondent was not allowed quantum meruit recovery for services rendered under a fee contract that was unenforceable as illegal or against public policy, the fees respondent charged constituted an illegal fee under rule 4–200(A). In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [3]

Where respondent collected fees and costs almost three times the amount her client agreed to pay, the fees and costs respondent wrongfully collected were so wholly disproportionate to what the client agreed to as to shock the conscience and were thus unconscionable under rule 4–200(A). In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [4]

Where respondent unilaterally collected over 43 percent of a client's gross recovery and where there was no evidence that the client agreed to such a fee, respondent's fees were unconscionable. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [5a, b]

Where respondent entered into a contingent fee agreement in a medical malpractice case for the maximum fee allowed under Business and Professions Code section 6146, subsequently modified that fee agreement to require an additional non–refundable minimum $25,000 fee, which would constitute credit against the contingent fee, and collected the $25,000 portion of the fee, respondent entered into an agreement for, charged and collected an illegal fee. In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829. [1a–c]

Even assuming that it was not initially clear to respondent at the first meeting with his client that the case was a probate matter, respondent knew by the third meeting that the matter involved probate but nevertheless proffered to the client at that time a retainer agreement which applied the $500 fee quoted at the initial meeting to the $2,000 total fee to be paid in advance for a probate matter. Therefore, at the time of the third meeting, the $500 fee was charged for work to be performed in a probate case in violation of the Probate Code sections which require court approval prior to attorney compensation. Moreover, because respondent charged the $500 fee at the time of the third meeting for services to be performed subsequently in a probate matter, it is irrelevant whether the Probate Code fee limit sections apply to payment for preliminary services performed prior to filing the probate matter. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [1]

Respondent failed to seek approval for his fees in a workers' compensation matter as required by the Labor Code and withheld it for a two-year period. Respondent was thus culpable of charging an illegal fee in violation of rule 4-200(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Given the length of the rule 4-200(A) violation, the review department also found that such conduct was at least gross negligence and therefore involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126. [3]

In civil rights litigation, an attorney may enter into an agreement for a contingent fee and a court-awarded fee if the agreement complies with the law governing attorney's fees in civil rights litigation to meet the requirement against entering into an illegal fee agreement. In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788 [2]

A fee agreement in federal civil rights litigation is illegal to the extent that it seeks to avoid the requirement of submitting the attorney's right to collect a contingent fee over and above a court-ordered statutory fee to the district court to measure whether the fees are reasonable. In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788 [3]

The former rule against charging or collecting an illegal or unconscionable fee was not unconstitutionally vague because the rule set forth standards which gave a person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what was prohibited. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [2]

The former rule against charging or collecting an illegal or unconscionable fee applied to cases where a third party had assumed the client's obligation to pay the attorney's fees. In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [3]

Statutory limit on attorneys' contingent fees for representation of plaintiffs in medical negligence actions applies whether person represented is responsible adult, infant or person of unsound mind and regardless of whether recovery is by settlement, arbitration or judgment. Where respondent failed to reveal potential applicability of such statute to incompetent client's representative and superior court ruling on respondent's fee application, such conduct frustrated court's function in passing upon fee request and client's interest in receiving all of recovery to which she was entitled, and violated attorney's duty to uphold law and rule against charging or collecting illegal fees. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [8]

Statute requiring attorneys to uphold law is not always proper vehicle for charging violation of State Bar Act when statute is already covered as a disciplinable offense in another part of the Act. Because statutes requiring written attorney fee agreements containing certain information specify non-disciplinary remedies for attorneys' failure to comply with them, and because failure to comply with such statutes may be charged as violations of Rules of Professional Conduct regarding illegal fees, competence, and communication with clients, violation of such statutes is not disciplinable under statute requiring attorneys to uphold law. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [11]

Where statutory scheme requires tribunal to approve fees charged by counsel, it is professional misconduct for an attorney to secure or attempt to secure fees in excess of those allowed by tribunal. Respondent's collection of any fee from minor client without court approval, regardless of amount charged, violated prohibition against charging or collecting an illegal fee. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [21]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

Attorney who rendered services to client before committing misconduct was entitled to collect fee earned prior to commencement of misconduct. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [3]

Client who has consented to attorney's retention of illegal fees may properly demand return of such fees. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [8]

Discipline cannot be imposed for violations not charged; where attorney was charged only with retaining client funds as fees without client consent, and referee found client had consented, attorney could not be disciplined on ground that fee was illegal. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [9]

290.01 Found

Where respondent conducted legal research despite the absence of any provision in the retainer agreement authorizing respondent to commence it and where respondent failed to obtain the client's approval to conduct the research, respondent's collection of fees for the legal research was unauthorized and violated the unconscionability provisions of rule 4-200. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [8]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

290.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

291.00 Payment of client expenses (RPC 4-210; 1975 RPC 5-104)

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

Advancing expenses to clients is not a generally accepted practice because it may cause clients to choose attorneys on the basis of the loans they are willing to make rather than the services they offer and may also create an attorney-client conflict. The rule permitting attorneys to advance client expenses is limited to expenses related to litigation or legal services. Where, after respondent was retained by a client in a personal injury action, he made an interest-free, unsecured loan to the client to cover funeral costs and other expenses, such advance was not permitted by the rule even though the expenses might be recoverable as damages in the litigation. The loan was also improper because respondent did not obtain the client's informed written consent. However, where there was no evidence of client harm, the violation was not serious. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [9]

291.01 Found

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

291.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

292.00 Purchase at foreclosure/probate sale (RPC 4-300(A); 1975 RPC 5-103)

292.01 Found

292.05 Not Found

292.10 Representing seller where purchaser is relative, etc. (RPC 4-300(B))

292.11 Found

292.15 Not Found

293.00 Inducing gift/bequest from client (RPC 4-400)

293.01 Found

293.05 Not Found

300.00 Improper threat to bring charges (RPC 5-100; 1975 RPC 7-104)

In response to a debt collector's collection efforts, respondent wrote him a letter stating that the collector's clients were under criminal investigation and that if collector attempted to damage respondent's credit or garnish her wages, she would make the collector's conduct part of the investigation by the District Attorney and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Respondent also stated that if the collector did not cease further action, she would turn over the collector's name and company information to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The letter indicated that a copy of the letter was sent to various state and federal agencies. The review department concluded that viewed from the perspective of the collection agent and in context, respondent's letter, with the notations that copies were being sent to the various agencies, was quite reasonably construed as a threat to present criminal, administrative, or disciplinary charges against the collection agent in order to gain an advantage in a civil dispute in violation of rule 5-100(A) of the Rules of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [6 a, b]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

300.01 Found

Respondent violated rule 5-100(A) when he threatened to report individuals to the FBI, State Attorney General and others if they did not comply with his various demands regarding administration of his father's estate and his litigation with a mortgage company. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [3]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

300.05 Not Found

310.00 Improper criminal prosecution (RPC 5-110; 1975 RPC 7-102)

310.01 Found

310.05 Not Found

315.00 Prejudicial statement re adjudication (RPC 5-120)

315.01 Found

315.05 Not Found

320.00 Misleading conduct during trial (RPC 5-200; 1975 RPC 7-105(1))

Disciplinary rules governing legal profession cannot punish activity protected by First Amendment, but neither false statements made knowingly nor false statements made with reckless disregard for truth are protected by First Amendment. Thus, because respondent's statements in pleadings, which she filed in superior court action and this disciplinary action, that her opposing counsel in superior court action was "well-known racist," "champion of the Emeryville pedophile ring," "operated by organized crime," "intent upon avoiding his own criminal indictment," and "motivated by racial hatred," and described young children as "niggers, hood and scums" were proved false at trial; because those statements were not mere rhetorical hyperbole, incapable of being proved true or false; and because respondent either knew statements were false or made them with reckless disregard of truth as there was no objective evidence that statements were true, hearing judge properly found respondent culpable of violating professional rules requiring attorneys to employ only such means as are consistent with truth and not to seek to mislead courts and judicial officers as well as statute proscribing acts involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [2 a-i]

The review department's duty to independently review the record is settled. At the same time, the review department must give great weight to the hearing judge's determination that turns on credibility to be assigned to witness testimony. The department was reluctant, therefore, to ascribe to respondent a specific intent to deceive when the hearing judge who considered respondent's testimony and that of other witnesses found none. This does not exonerate respondent from moral turpitude charges as to his false statement in his motion to disqualify a superior court judge. The hearing judge's conclusion that respondent violated statute and rule of professional conduct requiring attorneys to use only means consistent with truth must be read to find culpability by respondent's gross negligence, as simple neglect would not be sufficient for a statutory violation. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [1]

Even though hearing judge expressly found that respondent's violation of statute and rule of professional conduct was based on respondent's gross negligence, she inexplicably declined to apply that gross negligence to find that respondent's conduct involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prescribing attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude. Gross negligence is a well-established basis for finding moral turpitude. Accordingly, review department independently found respondent culpable of act involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9. [2]

The terms judges and judicial officers as used in Business and Professions Code section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B) of the Rules of Professional Conduct are limited to those individuals who are officers of a state or federal system and who perform judicial functions. Thus, the review department reversed the hearing judge's determination that respondent attempted to mislead judicial officers, in violation of section 6068(d) and rule 5-200(B), when he told an arbitration panel that he had represented his clients previously. The local bar association's arbitration panel was not composed of judges or judicial officers as required under both section 6068(d) and rule 5-200 and the local bar association's arbitration panel was not court-appointed. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [6]

Hearing judge's credibility findings based on respondent's demeanor while testifying are entitled to great weight. Where hearing judge found that respondent did not mislead court about applicability of statutory fee limitation because respondent had honest but unreasonable belief that statute did not apply, but review department concluded that respondent's failure to disclose fee limitation was unreasonable under circumstances, review department found that respondent violated duty not to mislead courts and committed act of dishonesty, but that such misconduct occurred through gross negligence rather than intentional dishonesty. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [14]

An attorney's concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements and constitutes misconduct warranting discipline. Where respondent had superior expertise regarding statutory fee limits in medical negligence cases, respondent had duty both to court and client to disclose material fact that such statutory limit might apply in particular case, even if respondent thought he had reasonable grounds to distinguish case from ambit of statute. Respondent's grossly negligent failure to disclose such material fact violated his duties to respect courts, not to commit acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude, and not to mislead judges by artifice or false statements. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [15]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Statute and ethics rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges do not provide that only attorneys of record are subject to their requirements. Attorneys are required to refrain from deceptive acts without qualification. Thus, fact that respondent was not attorney of record and appeared voluntarily at mandatory settlement conference was not relevant to whether respondent was culpable of violating such statute and rule by intentionally misleading settlement conference judge. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [1]

Attorneys can be disciplined for making material misrepresentations to a court even when the facts are a matter of public record. Accordingly, where respondent's client's death was a matter of public record, but settlement judge in client's pending case was not aware of death, and death was material fact in settlement negotiations, respondent was culpable of misconduct for misleading settlement judge about client's death. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [2]

Concealment of material facts is just as misleading as explicit false statements, and accordingly, is misconduct calling for discipline. Thus, respondent could be found culpable of intentionally misleading judge where he failed to reveal that his client had died, even though respondent was not directly asked if client was dead and even though respondent's answers to judge's questions may have been facially truthful, where respondent's statements to court and parties and his answers to judge's questions conveyed impression that client was alive and was exerting influence on respondent's ability to settle case. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [3]

Dishonest acts by an attorney are grounds for suspension or disbarment even if no harm results. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [4]

Statute prohibiting attorneys from engaging in acts of moral turpitude applies to misrepresentation and concealment of material facts. An attorney has a duty under statute and ethics rule never to seek to mislead a judge and acting otherwise constitutes moral turpitude and warrants discipline. Thus, respondent's intentional, material misrepresentation to a settlement conference judge was an act of moral turpitude. Nevertheless, where same misconduct underlay both finding of moral turpitude and findings of violation of statute and rule prohibiting misleading courts, misconduct was treated as single violation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [5]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

Even if State Bar prosecutor had duty to disclose exculpatory evidence, unpublished, non-precedential trial court decision did not constitute such evidence, nor was it controlling precedent which prosecutor had duty to disclose to court. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [14]

An attorney's wilful failure to cite controlling authority squarely contradicting the attorney's position could be held to violate statute and rule prohibiting attorneys from misleading judges. However, attorneys as advocates are under no duty to reveal decisions which do not constitute controlling precedent. In State Bar Court, only decisions of review department, subject to relevant Supreme Court case law, are considered controlling precedent. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [15]

Where respondent's description of his car problems in explaining his failure to appear for a court hearing differed only in degree from the actual events, the difference did not constitute deception or an attempt to mislead the court. The steps respondent took once he experienced the car problems might not have been adequate to excuse his failure to appear, but this aspect of his conduct was not charged as a disciplinary violation and thus could not form the basis of a culpability finding. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [1]

Where respondent represented to a judge that he had failed to attend an earlier hearing because he had been in another city appearing before another judge in a family law matter, when in fact he had had no court appearance but had been in the other courthouse on other errands, his statement was materially dishonest, because the proffered excuse was intended to carry more weight than the truth would have. Respondent's deception therefore constituted an act of dishonesty in violation of the moral turpitude statute, as well as a violation of the statute and rule of professional conduct prohibiting attorneys from misleading judicial officers. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [2]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

In order to violate the statute prohibiting seeking to mislead a judge, or its parallel Rule of Professional Conduct, an attorney must knowingly make a false, material statement of fact or law to a court, with the intent to mislead. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [5]

Where respondent falsely stated to the judge, during a trial, that one of his witnesses who had not yet arrived at court was under subpoena, such false statement was material, because it affected the court's scheduling of its daily calendar to accommodate the late witness and because it wrongfully caused the court to treat the witness initially as being in disobedience of a subpoena when he did arrive. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [6]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

Where respondent had asked a witness a question, knowing that the witness would testify falsely, in order to mislead the court, respondent was culpable of deceiving the court and of moral turpitude, but in the absence of evidence of an agreement between respondent and the witness, there was no proof that respondent suborned perjury. A determination of subornation of perjury requires clear and convincing proof of a corrupt agreement between the witness and the respondent for the witness to testify falsely. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [7]

Attorneys are expected to be forceful advocates for clients' legitimate causes, but role played by attorneys in honest administration of justice is critical. Attorneys, by adherence to their high fiduciary duties and the truth, can sharply reduce or eliminate clashes and ease the way to dispute settlement. Where parties to marital dissolution matter agreed to allow husband's counsel to hold community funds in trust pending resolution of dispute regarding property settlement, relying on counsel's duty as an attorney to honor the trust nature of the money, attorney's misconduct in improperly disbursing funds and then misrepresenting to wife's counsel and courts that funds were still held in trust account was especially regrettable. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [19]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

Where hearing referee concluded that respondent did not act dishonestly, but failed to exercise due diligence in learning the true facts before filing a declaration in a civil court, this conclusion was inconsistent with the conclusion that respondent's declaration violated the rule against seeking to mislead a judge by a false statement of fact. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [9]

If respondent's only breach, in relation to a charge of filing a false declaration, was a lack of care in ascertaining the truth of the facts presented in the declaration, then it was incumbent on the hearing referee to determine whether that lack of care or diligence was culpable within the charges and fell below the level of conduct required of members of the State Bar. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [10]

In order to find a violation of the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers, the State Bar must show clearly and convincingly that the attorney knowingly presented a false statement intending to mislead the court, and such deceit would, in almost every case, be an act of dishonesty in violation of the statute authorizing discipline for acts of moral turpitude, corruption and dishonesty. When an attorney makes a false or misleading statement to a court, that act involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [11]

When an attorney presents statements to a judicial tribunal while appearing in pro per as a party to litigation, the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers applies to him as an attorney. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [12]

Culpability of violating the rule against misleading courts and judicial officers may be established even where there is no direct evidence of malice, intent to deceive, or hope of personal gain. Actual deception is not necessary to sustain a violation; wilful deception is established where the attorney knowingly presents a false statement which may tend to mislead the court. Even where the fabrications are the work of another, and the attorney is unaware of the truth, the attorney remains culpable if the attorney learns of their bogus nature and continues to assert their authenticity. In the Matter of Temkin (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 321. [13]

Appearing in court while suspended or enrolled inactive does not inherently involve moral turpitude; nor does it necessarily involve deception of the court, if the attorney is unaware of his or her inactive status. Evidence that an attorney made a single court appearance while ignorant of his or her inactive status is insufficient to establish clearly and convincingly that the attorney acted with moral turpitude or intent to deceive the court. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [22]

320.01 Found

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

320.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

323.00 Advocate as witness (RPC 5-210; 1975 RPC 2-111(A)(4), (5))

323.01 Found

323.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

325.00 Suppression of evidence (RPC 5-220; 1975 7-107(A))

325.01 Found

325.05 Not Found

330.00 Gifts to adjudicators (RPC 5-300(A); 1975 RPC 7-108(A))

330.01 Found

330.05 Not Found

333.00 Ex parte contact with adjudicators (RPC 5-300(B); 1975 RPC 7-108(B))

A letter sent by counsel for one party in a disciplinary proceeding to the opposing counsel, with copies to the settlement judge and assigned trial judge, did not constitute a prohibited ex parte communication with the court. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [8]

333.01 Found

333.05 Not Found

335.00 Causing witness unavailability (RPC 5-310(A); 1975 RPC 7-107(B))

335.01 Found

335.05 Not Found

336.00 Contingent fee for testimony (RPC 5-310(B); 1975 RPC 7-107(C))

336.01 Found

336.05 Not Found

340.00 Contact with venire member (RPC 5-320(A); 1975 RPC 7-106(A))

340.01 Found

340.05 Not Found

341.00 Contact with juror by counsel in case (RPC 5-320(B); 1975 RPC 7-106(B)(1))

341.01 Found

341.05 Not Found

342.00 Contact with juror by any lawyer (RPC 5-320(C); 1975 RPC 7-106(B)(2))

342.01 Found

342.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

343.00 Post-trial juror harassment (RPC 5-320(D); 1975 RPC 7-106(D))

In order to find a violation under rule 5–320(D), the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass a juror, or influence a juror's actions in future jury service. Where respondent threatened to send a letter to a juror's employer only after the juror refused to sign an affidavit for respondent, and where respondent waited approximately one year before sending a letter to the juror's employer and then only after the State Bar filed a Notice of Disciplinary Charges, the facts convincingly establish respondent's subjective intent to harass the juror. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [3]

The difference in wording between the rules governing pretrial and mid-trial contact with jurors, and the rule governing post-trial contact, reflects a difference in the intent of the drafters as to the elements of each rule. In order to establish a violation of the rule governing post-trial contact, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the respondent subjectively had the specific intent to harass or embarrass the jurors or to influence the jurors' actions in future jury service. Where no such subjective intent was established, based on referee's findings as to witnesses' credibility, review department found no violation and dismissed proceeding without addressing question of rule's constitutional validity. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [5]

Wording of California rule governing post-trial contact with jurors differs significantly from parallel rules in ABA Model Code and Model Rules. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [10]

An attorney who loses a jury trial has the right to contact jurors after the trial and develop facts by way of juror affidavits to impeach their own verdict. Jurors are the obvious, and usually the only, source of available sworn testimony by affidavit which the law requires as a basis for new trial on the ground of juror misconduct. Likewise, attorneys who win jury trials and wish to protect the verdict should not be barred from writing jurors after trial to request notice of any contact by the adverse side. Attorneys have a right to communicate with jurors after the trial, but should strive to avoid unnecessarily causing the jurors to develop ill feelings regarding their jury service. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [11]

343.01 Found

343.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255.

344.00 Improper investigation of venire (RPC 5-320(E); 1975 RPC 7-106(E))

344.01 Found

344.05 Not Found

345.00 Contact with jurors' families (RPC 5-320(F); 1975 RPC 7-106(F))

345.01 Found

345.05 Not Found

346.00 Duty to reveal improper contact (RPC 5-320(G); 1975 RPC 7-106(G))

346.01 Found

346.05 Not Found

400 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations

401 Common Law/Other Statutory Violations in General

Because insurance settlement check that respondent deposited into his client trust account was made payable to his corporate client, he became a fiduciary of all members of corporation's board of directors who asserted a claim to those funds on corporation's behalf, and he owed those directors the same high duty of honestly and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were their attorney. Respondent breached that duty when he distributed $50,000 of settlement funds to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in the president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of remaining three directors because he knew that president and other three directors were in intractable dispute over control of corporation and that corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [1]

Attorneys cannot recover for services rendered if services are rendered in contradiction of attorney professional responsibility. And where attorney improperly withdraws fees from a trust account, restitution to client or client's estate is appropriate. Thus, where respondent withdrew $29,875 from his client trust account as his attorney's fees without his corporate client's authorization, respondent should make restitution of $29,875 plus interest to either corporate client, its successor, appropriate recipient of its assets after its dissolution, or if such successor or recipient of assets after dissolution cannot be identified, the Client Security Fund.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[10 a,b]

Standards governing an attorney's ethical duties do not vary according to the many areas of practice, even in specialized areas such as immigration law. Nor do those standards vary according to whether the attorney practices alone or in a partnership, small law firm, large law firm, or corporate law department.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [2]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Facts clients referred to respondent by nonattorney immigration services providers might have had a cultural bias in favor the referring nonattorney immigration services providers or that those clients might have viewed immigration attorneys, like respondent, as less important to their immigration cases than the referring nonattorney immigration services providers did not reduce or limit nature and scope of respondent's professional duties to his immigration clients.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [7]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he keep adequate non-financial client files and records. At a minimum, attorney must keep, for each client, an individual file that contains the client's name, address, and telephone number and all other items reasonably necessary to competently represent the client, such as written fee agreement, correspondence, pleadings, deposition transcripts, exhibits, physical evidence, and expert reports.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [13]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for the proper operation of his law office. At a minimum, attorney must develop and maintain procedures for proper maintenance and protection of client files; calendaring court hearings and filing deadlines; tracking court hearing dates and filing deadlines; tracking correspondence and client communications; proper handling and accurate accounting of client trust funds and other property. Attorney must also train his staff on those procedures and supervise staff to ensure that procedures are followed.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [14]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An attorney's statement impugning the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is not disciplinable if it constitutes rhetorical hyperbole, or uses language only in a loose, figurative sense, or if it is not capable of being proved true or false. The statement is not disciplinable unless it implies or is based upon a false assertion of fact. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [4]

Section 6068(a) is a conduit by which attorneys may be charged and disciplined for violations of other specific laws which are not otherwise made disciplinable under the State Bar Act, including a violation of: (1) a statute not specifically relating to the duties of attorneys; (2) a section of the State Act which is not, by its terms, a disciplinable offense, and (3) an established common law doctrine which is not governed by any other statute. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [15]

410.00 Failure to Communicate With Client (pre- or non-6068(m))

Conduct which falls below the standard of the statute requiring attorneys to communicate with their clients, but which occurred prior to the effective date of the statute, does not violate its ban. However, where the attorney's failure to communicate began prior to that effective date, but extended beyond it, discipline has been imposed under the statute. Accordingly, where respondent's principal failures to communicate with client occurred prior to effective date of statute, when he withdrew from representing her, but respondent thereafter continued to encourage client to contact him as a conduit for her new counsel after his withdrawal, and did not respond to her efforts to contact him after effective date of statute, respondent was properly found culpable of violating his statutory duty to communicate with the client. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [2]

An attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward a medical provider which holds a medical lien arising from advancement of funds to the attorney's client, and the attorney therefore has a duty to communicate with the provider as to the subject of the fiduciary obligation. However, where respondent was not charged in the notice to show cause with failing to communicate with the medical provider, respondent could not be found culpable on that basis. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [2]

Where respondent did not respond to client's reasonable inquiries and missed appointments with client both before and after effective date of statute regarding duty to communicate with clients, respondent was culpable of violating attorney's oath and duties, as to conduct before such effective date, and of violating statutory duty to communicate, after such effective date. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [5]

It is not inherently inconsistent to conclude that an attorney who withdrew from employment and failed to perform legal services competently is also culpable of failing to communicate with the client thereafter. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [7]

An attorney's failure to communicate with and reckless or repeated inattention to the needs of a client have long been grounds for discipline. Such misconduct need not involve deliberate wrongdoing or a purposeful failure to attend to the duties due to a client, and the attorney's acts need not be shown to be wilful where there is a repeated failure of the attorney to attend to the needs of the client. Where respondent received several notices regarding the inheritance taxes owed by his client in a probate matter, and did not notify his client of any of them, and the client was reasonably relying on respondent to provide her with such notice, respondent failed to perform legal services competently in wilful violation of the applicable Rule of Professional Conduct. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [1]

An attorney's failure to communicate with and inattention to the needs of a client are proper grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [7]

Where a client had difficulty communicating with respondent for a short period of time, but respondent did reply in some limited fashion to the client's status inquiries, and where it was not clear from the record whether any significant developments occurred with regard to the client's litigation during that period of time, there was not clear and convincing evidence of a failure to communicate. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [8]

Respondent violated duty to communicate with client where, after receiving notice that client disputed respondent's use of client's settlement proceeds to pay respondent's bill for services to client's family, respondent failed to communicate with client to ensure that client's father had been authorized to discharge family's indebtedness for fees out of client's personal injury recovery. Such failure to communicate violated the duty to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [18]

For a failure to communicate with a client which occurred prior to the enactment of the statute requiring such communication, grounds for discipline remain under the common law doctrine underlying this duty. However, where the information the attorney most significantly failed to convey was notice of the attorney's withdrawal from representation, the attorney's conduct violated former the rule against prejudicial withdrawal, and finding culpability of a common law failure to communicate would be unnecessarily duplicative. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [10]

An attorney who failed to communicate adequately with a client prior to 1987 cannot be charged with a violation of section 6068(m), but can be charged with a violation of section 6068(a). In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [17]

Prior to enactment of statute establishing attorney's duty to communicate with clients, Supreme Court had long held that failure to communicate was a proper ground for discipline. This common law duty to communicate falls within the parameters of an attorney's oath and duties, under attorney's general duty to uphold the law. Where attorney failed to inform client of attorney's decision not to pursue fruitless damages claim, finding of violation of duty to uphold the law by failing to communicate with client was appropriate basis for culpability. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [10]

Where respondent was found culpable of violating statutory duty to uphold the law by failing to adhere to common law duty to communicate with client, additional charge that respondent violated attorney's "oath and duties" under separate statute was duplicative, and resolution of case would not be affected by finding such violation. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [11]

Where respondent successfully performed services for which he was retained, and his sole culpability was for single act of failing to inform client of respondent's entirely proper exercise of judgment not to pursue damages, and both harm to client and extent of misconduct were minimal, appropriate discipline would have been private reproval. However, in light of attorney's many years of practice without prior disciplinary record, and other extenuating circumstances, discipline would be punitive and would not further purposes of attorney discipline. Since finding of culpability precluded dismissal, admonition was an appropriate disposition. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [20]

Where respondent's failure to respond to letters sent by another attorney whom clients had contacted occurred before enactment of specific statute requiring response to clients' reasonable status inquires, respondent could not be found culpable of violating that statute. Nevertheless, a longstanding common-law duty to communicate with clients was recognized by the Supreme Court prior to the adoption of the specific statute. Thus, for failures to communicate with clients occurring prior to the addition of the new statute, it is not duplicative nor otherwise inappropriate to charge an attorney with violating his general duties as an attorney. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [14]

Attorney's failure periodically to communicate with clients, standing alone, warrants discipline. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [5]

410.01 Found

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

410.05 Not Found

420.00 Misappropriation

Once respondent deposited insurance settlement check that was made payable to his corporate client into his client trust account, he had a fiduciary duty to protect the settlement funds on behalf of all the members of the corporation's board of directors regardless of whether he considered them authorized to act on corporation's behalf. Respondent willfully misappropriated $50,000 of those funds when he disbursed $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors as he knew of intractable dispute between president and other three directors over control of the corporation and corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. Respondent's misappropriation involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [3 a-c]

When respondent, without the knowledge or consent of all of the directors, withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate settlement funds as his attorney's fees for representing the corporation in bankruptcy proceeding, he knowingly and intentionally misappropriated the $29,875.89 for his own purpose without an honest belief in his right to those funds because (1) he knew a majority of directors vigorously disputed his right to represent corporation and to incur legal fees; (2) he knew president could authorize payment of only $100 of respondent's fees; (3) he acknowledged, under penalty of perjury in a bankruptcy court declaration, he did not have right to withdraw fees from trust account without court's approval; yet, there is no evidence respondent ever obtained such court approval before paying himself; (4) he deceived and misled corporation's chairman and his legal counsel about existence and location of insurance settlement funds; (5) he refused to provide records of settlement check and funds to State Bar. Respondent's knowing and intentional misappropriation of $29,875.89 involved moral turpitude in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [4 a-d]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Because an attorney who is a general partner of a California limited partnership owes the limited partners fiduciary obligations, including the duty of good faith and fair dealing and the duty to safeguard funds to which the limited partners are entitled, the attorney is held to the high standards of the legal profession whether or not he or she acts in the capacity of an attorney. Moreover, the attorney is subject to discipline if he or she assumes a fiduciary relationship and violates a fiduciary duty in a way that would justify disciplinary action if the relationship were that of attorney and client. Thus, respondent was subject to discipline where the evidence established that respondent, as general partner, (1) breached his fiduciary duty to a limited partner by taking his share of profits in two different distributions without having first distributed to the limited partner his capital contribution and share of profits, contrary to both the applicable statute and the partnership agreement, and (2) misappropriated funds which the limited partner was entitled to receive. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [1a-f]

Respondent was culpable of committing an act involving moral turpitude where respondent, acting as a general partner of a California limited partnership, misappropriated a limited partner's share of distribution funds, which act was also a breach of respondent's fiduciary duties to the limited partner. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [2]

Considering that respondent treated a significant amount of his client's money as a ready pool to further his and his wife's forays into championship horse breeding and realty acquisition, there was little difference for moral turpitude purposes between this case and the traditional trust funds wilful misappropriation cases. Moral turpitude has been defined as an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellowmen, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. This case meets that definition without doubt. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [3]

Misappropriation of client funds is a grievous breach of an attorney's ethical responsibilities, and generally warrants disbarment unless the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. Respondent bears the burden of proving mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent did not meet that burden, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [1]

Where client gave written authorization to respondent to apply portion of client's net settlement proceeds to outstanding legal fees client owed respondent on prior case, respondent was not required to prove existence of prior case to establish entitlement to funds applied to fees. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [3]

Fact that attorney obtained loan from client improperly, in violation of rule governing business transactions with clients, did not automatically convert attorney's acquisition of loan funds into misappropriation, and did not invalidate underlying loan transaction. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [11]

Attorney's failure to repay loan from client did not constitute theft, but did aggravate harm already suffered by client. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [12]

Where hearing judge found that respondent discussed borrowing client's entrusted funds with client, but intentionally did so in vague terms, and that client's consent to respondent's use of funds was not knowing or intelligent, and review department concluded that at most, client had consented to some use of funds to be agreed upon in future, respondent had neither reasonable nor honest belief in right to use client's funds, and respondent's misappropriation of such funds involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [1]

Attorney disciplinary proceedings are not decided on principles of contract law, but where, due to vagueness of terms of purported agreement allowing attorney to use client's funds, contract law principles would not permit court to find any binding contract, such purported agreement could not provide defense to charges of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [2]

Where respondent's wilful misappropriation of client trust funds was accompanied by aggravating factors which clearly predominated over mitigation, and where hearing judge recommended disbarment based on consideration of respondent's demeanor and related issues, review department concurred that disbarment was appropriate. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [8]

Where respondent had good faith but unreasonable belief that he had permission from clients' medical provider to use medical lien funds indefinitely, record did not establish that respondent misappropriated such funds, but due to respondent's abdication of his duty to supervise personal injury cases and reckless disregard of trust account obligations, respondent's mishandling of trust funds amounted to violation of statute providing that acts of moral turpitude are grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [1]

Where respondent had not paid a medical lien, but there was no evidence that respondent had failed to retain the appropriate sum to pay the lien in his trust account, respondent was not culpable of misappropriating the lien funds. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

By applying funds improperly collected from client's estranged husband to payment of client's debt for attorney's fees, respondent committed a trust account violation. Respondent's honest but mistaken belief in his own right to such funds did not absolve him of such violation. However, such violation did not constitute misappropriation, where respondent's essential ethical shortcoming involved misattributing ownership of funds to client rather than failing to handle them properly as entrusted funds. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

Where respondent honestly believed that he was entitled to retain portions of his clients' cost advances, even though this belief was unreasonable and unsubstantiated, respondent's retention of the funds did not necessarily warrant a conclusion that his conduct was dishonest, especially where respondent's gross negligence in handling the same funds had already been held to violate the moral turpitude statute. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [5]

Where hearing judge concluded that respondent misappropriated a portion of client's cost advance under trust account rule, and violated moral turpitude statute by gross negligence in supervising client trust funds, it was unnecessary for review department to amend hearing judge's conclusions to establish that those sections were violated, and review department declined to adopt additional conclusion that respondent acted dishonestly in misappropriating client's funds. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [6]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

The trust fund and trust account rules are designed to safeguard client funds from the serious risk of loss or misappropriation, whether through carelessness or design. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [6]

Evidence that respondent paid court-ordered sanctions with a trust account check, and that the client had not provided the funds, established respondent's improper use of the trust account, either by commingling trust and personal funds or by misappropriating funds belonging to other clients. Weighing all reasonable doubts in respondent's favor, a finding of commingling, the less serious offense, was appropriate. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [13]

A conclusion that an attorney engaged in acts of moral turpitude does not necessarily follow from a finding that the attorney misappropriated client funds. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [9]

An attorney's appropriation of client funds based on an unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to the funds constitutes only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where respondent could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to some of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of those funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [10]

Even though notice to show cause did not expressly charge violation of rule requiring client funds to be held in trust, respondent could be found culpable of violating such rule by misappropriating client funds, where such charge was clearly encompassed within allegations in support of moral turpitude charge. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [15]

Where, as justification for taking client trust funds, respondent asserted that his written fee agreements had been modified to provide for a large contingent fee in one matter and a large flat fee in another matter, but did not produce any documents to support this contention, and offered varying characterizations of the alleged change in the fee arrangements, and, in contrast, the client testified credibly that he had never consented to a change in the fee agreements and had never been billed for additional fees, respondent failed to establish entitlement to the claimed fees. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [2]

Restitution of client funds taken by an attorney is no defense to disciplinary charges of misappropriation. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [3]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Where the evidence concerning an attorney's authority to apply client trust funds to attorney's fees consisted largely of conflicting testimony, the hearing judge's finding that the attorney did not have the authority to use the funds, coupled with the documentary evidence supporting culpability, constituted clear and convincing evidence supporting the judge's conclusion that the attorney improperly used and misappropriated client trust funds. Because the attorney's trust account balance repeatedly dropped below the necessary amount over a period of many months, and the attorney did not have an adequate explanation for the inadequate trust account balance, the attorney's misconduct, though not involving intentional dishonesty, constituted gross negligence amounting to moral turpitude. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [2]

Although an attorney cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, the attorney violates the trust account rules if the attorney does not manage funds as required by the rules, regardless of the attorney's intent or the absence of injury to anyone. Violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful despite the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. If an attorney's trust account balance drops below the necessary amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn. The burden then shifts to the attorney to show that office procedures were adequate. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [7]

Not every trust account violation rises to the level of misappropriation. Because of the serious opprobrium attaching to the term "misappropriation," the term is appropriate only when the level of misconduct rises at least to gross negligence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [8]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

Where hearing judge's decision was issued prior to relevant Supreme Court and review department opinions, and did not discuss whether gross negligence resulting in misappropriation should be subjected to same suggested minimum sanction of one year actual suspension as is applied for intentional misappropriation, but hearing judge's recommendation of one-year minimum was justified by facts in record making suspension appropriate for public protection, review department concluded that hearing judge's discipline recommendation was based on an analysis of the record in light of the objectives of discipline rather than on a rigid application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [8]

In requiring an invariable minimum of one year's actual suspension, standard 2.2(a) is not faithful to the teachings of the Supreme Court's decisions. Negligent misappropriation quickly and voluntarily remedied may require no actual suspension or only a short suspension. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [9]

Misappropriation resulting from serious, inexcusable violation of a lawyer's duty to oversee trust funds is deemed wilful even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [10]

Where respondent's gross negligence resulted in several incidents of misappropriation over a number of years, and where the record established both compelling mitigating factors and substantial aggravating factors, including prolonged delay in making restitution, discipline including one year's actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [11]

An attorney's failure to return unspent costs advanced by the client did not violate the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds upon request, where there was no evidence that the client had requested the return of the funds. Nor did the attorney's inaction alone, in failing to return the funds for several years, support a finding that the attorney had misappropriated the funds or committed acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [18]

Where an attorney representing a bankrupt client had possession of the proceeds of a court-ordered sale of estate assets, did not place the funds in a trust account, did not pay them as directed by the bankruptcy court, and did not otherwise account for the funds, the evidence supported a finding that the attorney misappropriated the funds, violated the rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on request, and committed an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [21]

While failure to keep a promise of future action alone is not ordinarily proof of dishonesty, where respondent promised to deliver client funds into court custody and soon thereafter misappropriated the funds, the review department upheld the hearing department's finding that respondent's actions were intended to mislead the client and therefore constituted deceitful conduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [22]

A finding that the amount respondent withdrew from a client trust account was not an earned fee, even though the client did not dispute respondent's testimony that it was an earned fee, was consistent with the evidence that respondent had not performed any legal services during the period of time for which he withdrew the funds; that what work was done by the attorney occurred after the trust funds had been withdrawn; that no value had been placed on the attorney's services during that time, and that the attorney had otherwise been inattentive to the client's case. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [3]

An attorney's withdrawal of client trust funds based on a reasonable or unreasonable but honest belief of entitlement to fees may constitute only a violation of the rule of professional conduct regarding client trust funds, and not an act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. However, where an attorney could not have held an honest belief that he was entitled to most of the money he withdrew from a client trust account, his misappropriation of the funds not only violated the rule governing client trust funds, but also involved moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [4]

Misappropriation of client funds is a particularly serious ethical violation, which breaches the high duty of loyalty owed to the client, violates basic notions of honesty, and endangers public confidence in the legal profession. Misappropriation generally warrants disbarment of the attorney involved unless clearly extenuating circumstances are present. In assessing the appropriate discipline to recommend for a respondent who had misappropriated a large amount of client funds and also abandoned the client, the review department focused on the misappropriation, the most serious aspect of the misconduct. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [6]

Misappropriation can be committed in different degrees of culpability, deserving of different discipline. Even where the most compelling mitigating circumstances do not clearly predominate, extenuating circumstances relating to the facts of the misappropriation may render disbarment inappropriate. An attorney who acts deliberately and with deceit should receive more severe discipline than an attorney who acts negligently and without deception. Disbarment would rarely, if ever, be appropriate for an attorney whose only misconduct was a single act of misappropriation unaccompanied by deceit or other aggravating factors. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [12]

General charges in a notice to show cause of disbursing trust funds without permission or knowledge of the beneficiary did not give adequate notice of a charge of misappropriation of such funds, without further specification as to the facts giving rise to the accompanying charge of committing acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [8]

Violations of trust account rules which do not involve a misappropriation found to constitute an act of moral turpitude are not treated, for the purpose of determining appropriate discipline, as misappropriations within the contemplation of standard 2.2(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, for which disbarment is the presumed sanction. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [16]

Where attorney failed to reveal to clients the real reason for the delay in their receipt of settlement funds, and was grossly negligent in failing to supervise his staff in the handling of client funds and settling of personal injury cases, this misconduct, coupled with misappropriation from the attorney's client trust account due to his failure to maintain a sufficient balance, was an appropriate basis for a finding of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [2]

Misconduct which is technically wilful may be less culpable if committed through negligence than if committed deliberately; term "wilful misappropriation" as used in attorney discipline cases covers broad range of conduct varying significantly in degree of culpability. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [6]

Where attorney held settlement draft uncashed pending review of adequacy of settlement amount, attorney's misconduct consisted of failure to follow through, and improper handling of client funds, rather than misappropriation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [13]

Deficiency in respondent's trust account balance, coupled with respondent's grossly negligent handling of trust funds and delegation of responsibility, in and of itself established misappropriation, even where there was no evidence as to the cause of the shortfall or that it resulted from a deliberate conversion of funds by respondent. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [15]

Any objection that a client raised to attorney's fees and costs, upon client's receipt of accounting of settlement funds, would have to be resolved prior to attorney's withdrawal of funds from trust account to pay fees and reimburse advanced costs. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [7]

Where a notice to show cause alleged that the respondent attorney had misappropriated funds to his own use and purposes, and charged the attorney with acts of moral turpitude in violation of section 6106, but did not charge the attorney with a breach of the ethical rule concerning the proper handling of client trust funds, and the notice to show cause did not clearly put the attorney on notice of a charge that he had violated the trust funds rule, the attorney therefore could not be found culpable of violating that rule in light of the mandate that the attorney be given adequate notice of all charges and a reasonable opportunity to respond thereto. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [18]

Possession of client funds in the form of a cashier's check is no defense to a charge of commingling. However, an attorney who held client funds outside his trust account in the form of cashier's checks, notified his client promptly of the receipt of the funds, forwarded them to the client promptly upon demand, and had adequate funds at all times to pay what he owed the client, did not commit misappropriation, violate obligation to deliver client funds promptly upon demand, or commit any act of moral turpitude or dishonesty. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [9]

An attorney who repeatedly withdraws small amounts of cash for personal use from his or her trust account strongly indicates by such conduct that the attorney is improperly treating the trust account as a personal or general office account, and either allowing the attorney's own funds to remain in the trust account longer than they should (thus violating the rule against commingling), or misappropriating funds that properly belong to his or her clients. This is true regardless of the means by which the withdrawals are accomplished. Use of an ATM card for this purpose may slightly increase the risk of inadequate recordkeeping, but is not itself improper. Use of ATM cards to transfer funds from client trust accounts is not precluded by the Rules of Professional Conduct provided that the transfer is proper and adequate records are kept. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [13]

In finding respondent culpable of misappropriating trust funds and of knowingly issuing a check drawn on insufficient funds, the referee's statement that respondent's acts constituted crimes involving moral turpitude was improper since the criminal statutes were not charged in the notice to show cause. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [16]

Respondent's conduct in placing trust funds in his personal account, using such funds, and delaying payment thereof to his clients' medical lienholder for a year and a half after demand for payment constituted commingling and misappropriation and involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [5]

Where hearing department found unpersuasive client's testimony that he did not consent to respondent's application of client trust funds to respondent's outstanding legal fees, State Bar did not demonstrate trust account irregularities or misappropriation by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [9]

Absent additional evidence, attorney could not be found culpable of committing act of moral turpitude by misappropriating client trust funds, where evidence showed that attorney had transferred funds to successor counsel, and State Bar had stipulated that successor counsel had actually misappropriated funds. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [4]

Review department will not consider misappropriation implied by evidence but not charged in notice to show cause, and not mentioned at trial, in hearing department decision, or in briefs on review. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [1]

Attorney's responsibility for maintaining entrusted funds on deposit in trust account does not end when checks purporting to distribute entrusted funds are issued; responsibility continues until the checks have cleared the account. Where attorney's trust account balance fell below amount of entrusted funds after checks were written but before they cleared, attorney thereby misappropriated funds and violated trust account rules. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [2]

Respondent's failure to substantiate with documentary evidence his claim that he had earned funds which he claimed were advanced legal fees was properly considered by hearing panel in determining that respondent was not credible on this issue, even though burden of proof was not respondent's. Giving great weight to hearing panel's credibility determination and resolution of conflicting facts against respondent, review department found no basis to reject panel's finding that funds were advanced costs which respondent misappropriated. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [5]

The mere fact that the balance in an attorney's trust account falls below the amounts deposited and purportedly held in trust therein supports a conclusion of misappropriation. The rule regarding safekeeping of entrusted funds leaves no room for inquiry into the attorney's intent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [6]

Although respondent's misappropriation of client funds was not intentional, and resulted from poor management and misuse of trust account, respondent's gross carelessness, at best, in management of client's entrusted funds constituted moral turpitude, as such conduct breached his fiduciary duty to his client. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [8]

Records of respondent's trust account, showing that balance dropped to a negative sum without payment having been made to clients' treating physician, warranted the conclusion that respondent misappropriated trust funds. In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [3]

An attorney's conversion of advanced attorney's fees and costs without performing any services is regarded most seriously by the Supreme Court. Taking money for services not performed or not to be performed is close to the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [9]

Where the balance in a client trust account falls below the total of those client funds deposited and held in trust, that fact alone can support a finding of misappropriation. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [6]

Where an attorney issued checks for personal debts which were drawn on a client trust account that was closed and empty, the attorney could not be found culpable of misappropriating client funds. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [8]

An attorney's misappropriations of funds from his client trust account and other client funds constituted acts of dishonesty or moral turpitude. Misappropriation of funds is a serious offense involving moral turpitude. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

420.10 Found

420.11 Deliberate theft/dishonesty

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

420.12 Gross negligence

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

420.13 Funds wrongly taken under claim of right

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

420.14 Negligence/technical violation

420.19 Other fact patterns

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

420.50 Not Found

420.51 Lack of intent

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

420.52 Excusable negligence/technical violation

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

420.53 Lack of wilfulness

420.54 Overall failure of proof

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

420.55 Valid claim of right to funds

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

420.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

430.00 Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Respondent ignored his role as a fiduciary to one client when, while negotiating the transfer of her real property to his other client, he failed to advise her that she would no longer have any right, title, or interest in the property, that she remained on the deed of trust placing her at risk of having to pay the mortgage upon default in the mortgage payments or recordation of the grant deed, or that she would continue to receive the tax bills. At best, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to disclose the terms of the sale and the pros and cons of the transactions to his client, and at worst, respondent intentionally concealed the information to the advantage of his other client and his son. Respondent exploited his superior knowledge and position of trust to the detriment of his vulnerable client, which constituted an act or moral turpitude. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [2 a–b]

In addition to the fiduciary duty to fully inform his client about the sale of her condominium, respondent breached correlative fiduciary duties to adequately document the terms of the sale in a manner reasonably calculated for the client to understand, to advise his client that she should consult another attorney, or to disclose the serious conflicts in representing both parties to the transfer transaction. Respondent's conduct constituted overreaching, and as a result of his multiple conflicts, he gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to his client. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [3 a–c]

Where the record contains clear and convincing evidence that respondent led a witness to believe they had a special relationship of trust and confidence and that his interests would be protected by respondent, respondent assumed a fiduciary duty towards the witness, who was a vulnerable criminal defendant, when he used his superior knowledge and position as an attorney to create a confidential relationship of trust and dependency. In so doing, respondent caused the witness to reject his attorney's advice and accede to respondent's wishes thereby breaching his common law fiduciary duty to the witness in wilful violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [7 a–c]

Respondent owed an incarcerated witness the same high duty of honesty and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were acting as his attorney. An attorney's violation of the duty arising in a fiduciary or confidential relationship warrants discipline even in the absence of an attorney–client relationship. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [8 a, b]

Because insurance settlement check that respondent deposited into his client trust account was made payable to his corporate client, he became a fiduciary of all members of corporation's board of directors who asserted a claim to those funds on corporation's behalf, and he owed those directors the same high duty of honestly and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were their attorney. Respondent breached that duty when he distributed $50,000 of settlement funds to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in the president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of remaining three directors because he knew that president and other three directors were in intractable dispute over control of corporation and that corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [1]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he keep adequate non-financial client files and records. At a minimum, attorney must keep, for each client, an individual file that contains the client's name, address, and telephone number and all other items reasonably necessary to competently represent the client, such as written fee agreement, correspondence, pleadings, deposition transcripts, exhibits, physical evidence, and expert reports. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [13]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for the proper operation of his law office. At a minimum, attorney must develop and maintain procedures for proper maintenance and protection of client files; calendaring court hearings and filing deadlines; tracking court hearing dates and filing deadlines; tracking correspondence and client communications; proper handling and accurate accounting of client trust funds and other property. Attorney must also train his staff on those procedures and supervise staff to ensure that procedures are followed. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [14]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

While moral turpitude generally requires a certain level of intent, guilty knowledge, or willfulness, the law is clear that where an attorney's fiduciary obligations are involved, particularly trust account duties, a finding of gross negligence will support such a charge. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [3]

Respondent violated statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude through her gross negligence in fulfilling her trust account duties. Even though respondent had an agreement with her husband and law partner that he would manage their client trust account, there was no evidence of established or agreed on procedures for the operation of trust account. And respondent overextended herself in the handling landmark litigation cases and in advocating for legislation dealing in that specialized area of law, allowed herself to be disconnected from management of law office over extended period of time during a period when her husband (whom respondent knew was abusive and controlling) was grossly mismanaging their trust account, and made no inquiry as to operation of the trust account even after she heard of specific complaint regarding the underpayment of trust funds to clients. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [4]

An attorney has a personal obligation of reasonable care to comply with the critically important rules for the safekeeping and disposition of client funds. These duties are nondelegable. This does not mean that an attorney is culpable of a moral turpitude violation by not personally managing his or her trust account, provided that attorney reasonably relies on a partner, associate, or other responsible employee to care for that account. However, even that reasonable reliance on another to care for the trust account does not relieve the attorney from the professional responsibility to properly maintain funds in that account. That is, in the handling of client funds, an attorney has a direct professional responsibility to his or her client, and the attorney does not avoid that direct professional responsibility by, even reasonable, reliance on a partner, associate or responsible employee. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [5]

Where respondent sold his residential real property to his client, the fact that the sale price was at or about the fair market value does not constitute compliance with the basic requirement that the transaction be both fair and reasonable to the client. The question is not merely whether the sale price is fair and reasonable, but rather whether the entire transaction is fair and reasonable. All of the client's circumstances must be considered to determine whether the transaction is a prudent investment for a person in the client's circumstances. Moreover, all terms of the transaction must be fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that the client should reasonably understand. Where respondent failed to disclose to the client many potential problems and risks involved with the manner of the sale of the property, and it was clear that the client was not otherwise aware of these risks, respondent was overreaching and acting at least in part for his own benefit. Under these circumstances, the transaction constituted a breach of a fiduciary obligation and violated Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [1a-d]

Where there was ample evidence demonstrating respondent's violation of his fiduciary duty to his client, arising from the unfairness of the manner in which his residential real property was sold to his client, and that the transaction was, at least in part, for his own benefit, respondent was culpable of committing an act involving moral turpitude in violation of Business and Professions Code section 6106. In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [2]

Because an attorney who is a general partner of a California limited partnership owes the limited partners fiduciary obligations, including the duty of good faith and fair dealing and the duty to safeguard funds to which the limited partners are entitled, the attorney is held to the high standards of the legal profession whether or not he or she acts in the capacity of an attorney. Moreover, the attorney is subject to discipline if he or she assumes a fiduciary relationship and violates a fiduciary duty in a way that would justify disciplinary action if the relationship were that of attorney and client. Thus, respondent was subject to discipline where the evidence established that respondent, as general partner, (1) breached his fiduciary duty to a limited partner by taking his share of profits in two different distributions without having first distributed to the limited partner his capital contribution and share of profits, contrary to both the applicable statute and the partnership agreement, and (2) misappropriated funds which the limited partner was entitled to receive. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [1a-f]

Respondent was culpable of committing an act involving moral turpitude where respondent, acting as a general partner of a California limited partnership, misappropriated a limited partner's share of distribution funds, which act was also a breach of respondent's fiduciary duties to the limited partner. In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364 [2]

The State Bar proved that respondent used over $500,000 of his client's assets for speculative ventures in which he had a financial or ownership interest without any disclosures of the investments or his interests to the client and without providing any periodic accountings to her. In view of the evidence presented, to defend the charges, it was incumbent on respondent to present adequate, contemporaneous records showing that he had complied with the ethical and fiduciary duties of an attorney. He failed to do so. The lack of minimal formality and recordkeeping by respondent supports the hearing judge's findings and conclusions and erodes respondent's defense. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [1]

The relationship between an attorney and client is of the highest order of fiduciary relation. Even where the attorney no longer represents the client, the attorney continues to owe the client a fiduciary duty of utmost good faith and fair dealing with respect to, at least, the subject matter of the attorney's prior representation of the client, including any express lien for attorney's fees. Respondent did not violate this duty by refusing to sign a settlement check which was in the possession of the former client's new attorney, and which was made payable to the former client, the former client's new attorney, and respondent. Respondent's fee agreement provided for a lien on any recovery, he perfected his lien as to part of the former client's recovery, he suggested, among other alternatives, that the disputed portion of the recovery be placed in his trust account or, alternatively, in a separate blocked account requiring both his and his former client's signatures, and he took prompt action to judicially resolve the competing claims to the settlement proceeds. Respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing did not require that he abandon his lawfully perfected lien by endorsing the settlement draft when it was under the client's control, as doing so would have immediately extinguished the lien as to the client's creditors and thereafter subjected the lien to extinguishment if the client spent the money. In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754. [1]

Even though respondent withdrew from employment because his client accepted a settlement agreement with a confidentiality order, he still had a fiduciary duty to his former client. The client, not respondent, had the right to decide to settle her lawsuit on the chosen terms. Thus, respondent had a good faith duty to act consistently with the client's settlement agreement to, at least, not reveal the settlement amount or the evidence obtained in the case except as allowed by the settlement judge. Respondent's failure to do so violated his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [3]

Where the notice to show cause did not charge respondent with committing acts of moral turpitude on account of a violation of fiduciary duty, but did charge respondent with making a misrepresentation to a court, and the hearing judge and the parties understood that the charged moral turpitude violation was based on the misrepresentation, the review department declined the State Bar's request, made for the first time on review, that it find moral turpitude based on respondent's breach of fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Non-clients may be treated as an attorney's clients for purposes of discipline where the attorney assumes a fiduciary relationship with the non-clients. Thus, where respondent was the trustee of a testamentary trust, and thus assumed a fiduciary relationship with the beneficiaries of that trust, the rule regulating attorneys' business transactions with their clients applied to respondent's dealings with the trust, as if the trust beneficiaries were respondent's clients. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

Respondent's duty to medical negligence client was not confined solely to obtaining successful recovery on client's claim. Respondent also had duty of utmost good faith and fidelity to client, which required him to advise client candidly of application of statutory limit on fee he could charge client. Where respondent overreached client by concealing such statute through recklessness or gross neglect, and collected excessive fee thereby, such conduct was patent breach of respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing to client, and was very serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [21]

Client's written consent to loan transaction with respondent was not knowing consent, where respondent knew that client lacked capacity to give informed consent because of her poor health, frequent use of alcohol, lack of business experience, and limited education. Respondent was obligated to insure that terms and conditions of loan were fully known and understood by client, and was required not merely to inform client of her right to consult another attorney, but to advise client to do so. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [10]

Where respondent, as attorney and close family member of client, exploited superior knowledge and position of trust to detriment of vulnerable client in obtaining loan from client with grossly unfair provisions, attorney's overreaching constituted act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [13]

Even if attorney has no fiduciary obligation to client's medical provider due to absence of enforceable lien or judgment, attorney still has duty to client to keep all client funds in trust. Where respondent withdrew client funds from trust account which he later used to pay client's medical provider, respondent violated rule requiring client funds to be held in trust even though provider had no lien. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [6]

Rule requiring prompt payment of client funds on demand requires attorney to pay client's medical provider only if attorney has fiduciary obligation to provider. Where respondent had no such fiduciary obligation due to lack of enforceable lien or judgment, and record did not show that provider requested payment or that respondent did not promptly comply with such request, violation of rule was not established. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [7]

Where respondent disbursed settlement funds to client without withholding funds to pay medical lien, in reliance on client's unverified representation that client had paid lien, and respondent had no reason to believe that lienholder had any alternative possible source of payment, respondent's error in fulfilling his fiduciary duties both to lienholder and to client, who was later sued by lienholder, was of sufficient magnitude to constitute reckless failure to perform competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [7]

Attorney who holds funds subject to legally enforceable lien has duty to lienholder to perform competently in handling those funds; such duty is inherent in attorney's role as fiduciary with respect to entrusted funds. Moreover, because failure to pay liens exposes clients to collection efforts by lienholders, it is for protection of client, not just lienholder, that attorney has duty to ensure that liens are properly paid. Where respondent recklessly disregarded his duty to pay statutory medical liens in personal injury matters, he was culpable of reckless failure to perform legal services competently. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [19]

Rule requiring prompt payment of entrusted funds upon demand requires attorneys to make such payment not only to the client, but also to a third party with a legitimate claim to those particular funds. Where respondent improperly collected funds belonging to client's estranged husband, respondent held funds in trust as fiduciary for husband, and failure to turn them over to husband's counsel on demand violated rule. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character. In light of such fiduciary obligations, respondent's conduct in arranging real property transactions between respondent's client and respondent's father involved overreaching, where respondent was closely involved with his father and did not safeguard the client's interests in the transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [10]

Business transactions between clients and their attorneys are closely scrutinized. The burden is on the attorney to demonstrate that the dealings are fair and reasonable. Where respondent loaned a large sum to one client so that the client could repay a debt to another client, respondent owed a fiduciary duty to both clients and was obligated to explain his role in the transaction and the impact it could have on his continued representation of their interests. Where one client, notwithstanding his written consent, did not understand the full implications of the transaction, and the other client did not consent in writing, respondent violated the rule governing business transactions with clients. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [2]

An attorney's obligation to his or her client is limited by the attorney's and the client's obligation to third parties. Where respondent's client, a Medi-Cal beneficiary, had a statutory obligation (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) of the impending settlement of a personal injury matter in which DHS claimed a lien, respondent had a fiduciary obligation under decisional law to provide the required notice on his client's behalf. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [3]

Where a statute (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.76) required Medi-Cal beneficiaries to notify the Department of Health Services (DHS) regarding the impending settlement of matters in which no suit had been filed and DHS claimed a lien, the review department construed the statute to require that attorneys representing such beneficiaries must also give the required notice, because to construe the statute otherwise would frustrate the Medi-Cal third party liability recovery system and be in derogation of an attorney's general fiduciary responsibility to lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [4]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not the attorney's client must comply with the same fiduciary duties in dealing with such funds as if an attorney-client relationship existed. Where an attorney represents a Medi-Cal beneficiary in a personal injury matter and has received notice of the Medi-Cal lien, the attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward the Department of Health Services as to its advancement of funds for the beneficiary and the Medi-Cal lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [8]

An attorney owes the same fiduciary obligations to all clients, paying or nonpaying. Impecunious clients are ill-served by well-meaning attorneys who fail to deliver the services for which they were engaged. Nor are the courts or public served by litigation brought without likelihood it can be realistically be prosecuted to completion. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

An attorney has a fiduciary obligation toward a medical provider which holds a medical lien arising from advancement of funds to the attorney's client, and the attorney therefore has a duty to communicate with the provider as to the subject of the fiduciary obligation. However, where respondent was not charged in the notice to show cause with failing to communicate with the medical provider, respondent could not be found culpable on that basis. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [2]

An attorney holding funds for a person who is not a client is held to the same fiduciary duties in dealing with those funds as if there were an attorney-client relationship. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [4]

An attorney's gross carelessness and negligence constitute violations of the attorney's oath to faithfully discharge duties to clients to the best of the attorney's knowledge and ability, and involve moral turpitude in that they breach the fiduciary relationship attorneys owe to clients. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [12]

When an attorney withdraws from employment or the client terminates the attorney's employment, the attorney must promptly refund any unearned part of an advance fee. However, where respondent faced competing demands regarding the funds used to pay an advance fee, from a client and from a third party to whom respondent owed a fiduciary duty, respondent had a duty to retain the funds in trust until the client's entitlement to the funds was established, and therefore did not commit misconduct by declining to refund the advance fee. Respondent's motives for retaining the funds in trust were irrelevant because the issue turned on a question of law, not motivation. The State Bar had the burden of proving that the client was entitled to receive the funds. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [9]

An attorney who receives money on behalf of a party who is not the attorney's client becomes a fiduciary to the party. Where an attorney assumes the responsibility to disburse funds as agreed by the parties in an action, the attorney owes an obligation to the party who is not the attorney's client to ensure compliance with the terms of the agreement. If there is a dispute between the client and the third party, the attorney must retain the funds in trust until the resolution of the dispute. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [11]

Although attorneys cannot be held responsible for every detail of office operations, fiduciary violations resulting from serious and inexcusable lapses in office procedure may be deemed wilful for disciplinary purposes even in the absence of deliberate wrongdoing. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [7]

The duty to keep clients' funds safe is a personal, nondelegable obligation of an attorney. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [4]

Improper withdrawal of entrusted funds in violation of duty to maintain funds in trust, and of fiduciary duty to opposing party, does not necessarily rise to the level of an act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [9]

Attorneys are expected to be forceful advocates for clients' legitimate causes, but role played by attorneys in honest administration of justice is critical. Attorneys, by adherence to their high fiduciary duties and the truth, can sharply reduce or eliminate clashes and ease the way to dispute settlement. Where parties to marital dissolution matter agreed to allow husband's counsel to hold community funds in trust pending resolution of dispute regarding property settlement, relying on counsel's duty as an attorney to honor the trust nature of the money, attorney's misconduct in improperly disbursing funds and then misrepresenting to wife's counsel and courts that funds were still held in trust account was especially regrettable. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [19]

An attorney may not endorse a client's name to a check without express authority to perform that particular act. However, under Commercial Code section 3403, no specific form of authorization is required from a principal to an agent in order for the agent to sign the principal's name to a negotiable instrument, such as a settlement check. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [3]

An attorney's practice of paying personal injury clients' doctor out of the attorney's own general account, including in some instances making such payments even before the clients' cases had closed, did not entitle the attorney to treat the doctor as the attorney's own creditor. The debt to the doctor was owed by the clients, and the attorney had a duty to honor the clients' agreement. Even with the doctor's consent, the attorney could not transform settlement funds earmarked for payment of medical liens into general funds. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [2]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to personal injury clients did not end with payment to them of their share of the recovery in their cases; the attorney had an ongoing fiduciary duty to hold in trust the remaining settlement funds, subject to clients' directions regarding disbursement. This duty did not end until the clients' debt to their treating physician was paid. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [3]

Assuming that an attorney was entitled to delay payment to a medical lienholder until resolution of a dispute with the clients' insurance company regarding settlement funds, the attorney was required nonetheless to place the amount earmarked for satisfaction of the medical lien in the attorney's trust account until payment to the lienholder in accordance with the terms of the lien. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [4]

Attorney violated ethical rule governing business transactions with clients where he acquired (through his wholly-owned company) a licensing agreement for a product of his client-employer, without disclosing his ownership interest in the licensee; the licensee's incapacity to fulfill the terms of the license; or his negotiations for sublicenses on more profitable terms. The true identity of the licensee was a material fact which the attorney had a fiduciary duty to disclose, even though the terms of the license were revealed and may not have been unfair. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [6]

Although respondent's misappropriation of client funds was not intentional, and resulted from poor management and misuse of trust account, respondent's gross carelessness, at best, in management of client's entrusted funds constituted moral turpitude, as such conduct breached his fiduciary duty to his client. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [8]

When an attorney agrees to hold client funds in trust for the benefit of a non-client, the nature of that agreement creates a fiduciary duty to the non-client, as well as the client. As a fiduciary, the attorney's obligation to account for the funds extends to both parties claiming an interest in the funds. Accordingly, the rules governing handling and payment of client trust funds apply to a non-client's funds as well. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

430.01 Found

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

Where the record contains clear and convincing evidence that respondent led a witness to believe they had a special relationship of trust and confidence and that his interests would be protected by respondent, respondent assumed a fiduciary duty towards the witness, who was a vulnerable criminal defendant, when he used his superior knowledge and position as an attorney to create a confidential relationship of trust and dependency. In so doing, respondent caused the witness to reject his attorney's advice and accede to respondent's wishes thereby breaching his common law fiduciary duty to the witness in wilful violation of section 6068, subdivision (a). In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [7 a–c]

Respondent owed an incarcerated witness the same high duty of honesty and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were acting as his attorney. An attorney's violation of the duty arising in a fiduciary or confidential relationship warrants discipline even in the absence of an attorney–client relationship. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [8 a, b]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

430.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Feldsott (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 754.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

490.00 Miscellaneous

Because insurance settlement check that respondent deposited into his client trust account was made payable to his corporate client, he became a fiduciary of all members of corporation's board of directors who asserted a claim to those funds on corporation's behalf, and he owed those directors the same high duty of honestly and obedience to fiduciary duty as if he were their attorney. Respondent breached that duty when he distributed $50,000 of settlement funds to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in the president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of remaining three directors because he knew that president and other three directors were in intractable dispute over control of corporation and that corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[1]

Where respondent had certain knowledge of dispute over his fees and where respondent ignored explicit directive of board majority to immediately cease representing corporation, respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust when he withdrew $29,875.89 of corporate client's funds from his trust account as his attorney's fees.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[2]

Once respondent deposited insurance settlement check that was made payable to his corporate client into his client trust account, he had a fiduciary duty to protect the settlement funds on behalf of all the members of the corporation's board of directors regardless of whether he considered them authorized to act on corporation's behalf. Respondent willfully misappropriated $50,000 of those funds when he disbursed $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors as he knew of intractable dispute between president and other three directors over control of the corporation and corporation's board had suspended president and denied him access to corporation's funds. Respondent's misappropriation involved moral turpitude.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[3 a-c]

Even though attorneys have duty to zealously represent their clients and assert unpopular position in advancing clients' legitimate objectives, attorneys, as officers of the court, have duty to judicial system to assert only legal claims or defenses warranted by law or supported by good faith belief in correctness.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[5]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[9 a-d]

Attorneys cannot recover for services rendered if services are rendered in contradiction of attorney professional responsibility. And where attorney improperly withdraws fees from a trust account, restitution to client or client's estate is appropriate. Thus, where respondent withdrew $29,875 from his client trust account as his attorney's fees without his corporate client's authorization, respondent should make restitution of $29,875 plus interest to either corporate client, its successor, appropriate recipient of its assets after its dissolution, or if such successor or recipient of assets after dissolution cannot be identified, the Client Security Fund.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[10 a,b]

Standards governing an attorney's ethical duties do not vary according to the many areas of practice, even in specialized areas such as immigration law. Nor do those standards vary according to whether the attorney practices alone or in a partnership, small law firm, large law firm, or corporate law department.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [2]

In attorney discipline, ethical standards for attorneys are primarily established by State Bar Rules of Professional Conduct and State Bar Act. But, when an attorney practices in a specific area or jurisdiction, those standards may be measured by reference to other relevant state and federal statutes, rules of court, regulations, and administrative rules.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [3]

Under controlling federal regulation and Board of Immigration Appeals precedent, respondent could not properly limit the scope of his representation of clients referred to him by nonattorney immigration services providers to that of an "appearance attorney," which respondent asserts is an attorney who appears in his clients' immigration cases only for the limited purpose of making court appearances, and when respondent did so, he effectively provided those clients with no legal representation or services.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [5 a-h]

Facts clients referred to respondent by nonattorney immigration services providers might have had a cultural bias in favor the referring nonattorney immigration services providers or that those clients might have viewed immigration attorneys, like respondent, as less important to their immigration cases than the referring nonattorney immigration services providers did not reduce or limit nature and scope of respondent's professional duties to his immigration clients.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [7]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Keeping proper non-financial client files and records is necessary for attorneys to be able to prove their honesty and fair dealings when their actions are called into question such that justice will not permit an attorneys to escape responsibility for his misconduct by simple act of not keeping adequate non-financial client files and records from which his conduct may be reviewed and any misconduct proved. Thus, an attorney's failure to keep such adequate files and records is itself a suspicious circumstance.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [12]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he keep adequate non-financial client files and records. At a minimum, attorney must keep, for each client, an individual file that contains the client's name, address, and telephone number and all other items reasonably necessary to competently represent the client, such as written fee agreement, correspondence, pleadings, deposition transcripts, exhibits, physical evidence, and expert reports.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [13]

Attorney's fiduciary duties to his clients require that he develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for the proper operation of his law office. At a minimum, attorney must develop and maintain procedures for proper maintenance and protection of client files; calendaring court hearings and filing deadlines; tracking court hearing dates and filing deadlines; tracking correspondence and client communications; proper handling and accurate accounting of client trust funds and other property. Attorney must also train his staff on those procedures and supervise staff to ensure that procedures are followed.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [14]

Attorney's fiduciary duty to develop and maintain adequate management and accounting procedures for proper operation of his law office is fundamental to fulfillment of multiple duties, including duties to competently perform legal services, adequately communicate with clients, protect client confidential information, and properly handle and account for client funds and other property.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [15]

Even if an attorney of record did not have actual knowledge of a trial setting, if a notice of trial setting was properly served on him, his failure to appear at trial will not be excused for State Bar disciplinary purposes unless he establishes that he had office procedures in place that, at a minimum, required his staff (1) to promptly inform him each time a notice of court or administrative trial or hearing is delivered to office, (2) to promptly record date of the trial or hearing in attorney's court calendaring system and in client's file, and (3) to promptly give client actual notice of date, time, and location of the trial or hearing. Respondent did not have any such proper office procedures in place. Thus, where record established that a notice of a hearing was properly served on him in an immigration court case in which he was attorney of record for the alien, respondent's failures to inform client of hearing, to prepare himself for the hearing, and to counsel and prepare client for the hearing could not be excused even if respondent did not learn of the hearing until the day of the hearing.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [23 a-d]

Principle that, in the normal course of operation of a law office, an attorney should not be at risk of discipline for failure to have knowledge of every item of information that comes in his office is based on presumptions that the attorney has adequate office procedures in place for the proper operation of his office, trains his staff on those procedures; employs safeguards to insure that procedures are followed, and supervises staff to insure they perform their jobs.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [24]

An attorney may be disciplined for making a false statement that attacks the honesty, motivation, integrity, or competence of a judicial officer without violating the attorney's First Amendment guarantee of free speech so long as the attorney knew the statement was false when he made it or made it with a reckless disregard for its truth or falsity. Truth is an absolute defense. The State Bar has the burden of proving the falsity of the statement. The issue of whether a false statement was made with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity is governed by an objective standard under which the court must determine what a reasonable attorney, considered in light of all his professional functions, would do in the same or similar circumstances. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [2]

An attorney's statement impugning the honesty or integrity of a court or judicial officer is not disciplinable if it constitutes rhetorical hyperbole, or uses language only in a loose, figurative sense, or if it is not capable of being proved true or false. The statement is not disciplinable unless it implies or is based upon a false assertion of fact. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 775 [4]

Respondent violated his duty to maintain only just causes and abused the bankruptcy process by filing and maintaining a Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceeding for an insolvent client when he knew that the client's only assets were nine residential lots in which there was no equity and that the client had neither the ability nor the intention of making adequate protection payments to the lienholders on the nine lots in accordance with the law. Even if respondent was unaware of these facts, he would still be culpable. Under applicable federal rules of procedure, respondent's signature on the Chapter 11 petition as attorney of record for debtor was a certification that to the best of his knowledge and belief, formed after a reasonable inquiry, the petition was well founded in fact and warranted by either existing law or a good faith argument for the modification of existing law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [3]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim, without filing suit, on behalf of a client who was a Medi-Cal beneficiary, respondent's failure to notify the Department of Health Services of the settlement did not violate a statute which only required such notice if an action had been filed (Welfare and Institutions Code section 14124.79). In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [2]

The statute providing that attorneys have a duty to support the constitution and laws of California and the United States constitutes a conduit whereby attorneys may be disciplined for violating laws which are not otherwise disciplinable under the State Bar Act. However, a negligent mistake made in good faith does not constitute a violation of this statute. Thus, where respondent believed he had satisfied his obligation to a statutory medical lienholder by informing it of a source of insurance coverage, and thus believed that his client was entitled to all of the settlement funds obtained from a different source of coverage, respondent's failure to notify the lienholder of the impending settlement, as required by statute, did not violate his statutory duty to obey California law, because it constituted a negligent mistake, based on the good faith, erroneous belief that he was entitled to distribute all the settlement funds to the client and let the client deal with the statutory lien. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [5]

Statute which requires that if a party is represented by counsel, papers must be served on counsel rather than on the party, does not apply to the service of a summons or a writ. Therefore, respondent did not have to serve alternative writ and petition for writ on opposing party's counsel, but could serve opposing party personally. In the Matter of Respondent D (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 517. [1]

Where respondent had asked a witness a question, knowing that the witness would testify falsely, in order to mislead the court, respondent was culpable of deceiving the court and of moral turpitude, but in the absence of evidence of an agreement between respondent and the witness, there was no proof that respondent suborned perjury. A determination of subornation of perjury requires clear and convincing proof of a corrupt agreement between the witness and the respondent for the witness to testify falsely. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [7]

Sections 2450, et seq., of the Civil Code did not mandate a different format for special powers of attorney than the one which the respondent used, where those statutes were not enacted until two years after the power of attorney was executed by the client and one year after it was acted upon by the respondent, and where section 2456 of the Civil Code, enacted simultaneously with section 2450, expressly provides that any form that complies with the requirements of any other law may be used in lieu of the form set forth in section 2450. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [13]

An attorney's simulation of a client's endorsement on a check, pursuant to an express power of attorney, without expressly indicating the representational capacity of the signature, does not constitute an attempt to deceive the bank and is not an act of moral turpitude. An attorney may not endorse a client's name to a check without express authority to do so, but the representative capacity of the signature need not be indicated on the check. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [15]

Although hearing referee did not specifically find that client had expressly authorized attorney to endorse settlement check on client's behalf, review department interpreted decision to have resolved this issue on the basis of express rather than implied authorization. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [8]

Under applicable provisions of Commercial Code, handwritten notation on attorney's check stating that it was issued "subject to verbal confirmation" destroys its negotiability and prevented attorney from being criminally liable for issuance of check drawn on insufficient funds. Dishonor of such check due to insufficient funds was not an aggravating factor, because check was issued in non-negotiable form and there was no clear evidence that payee was misled regarding nature of check. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [1]

False statements made with reckless disregard of the truth do not enjoy constitutional protection under the First Amendment. Attorneys may be disciplined for making defamatory or disrespectful statements in pleadings or court papers which have no basis in fact and which are made with conscious disregard of their falsity or with intent to be maliciously contemptuous. In the Matter of Respondent A (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 255. [8]

Honesty is one of the most fundamental rules of ethics for attorneys. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [22]

Writing checks when one knows or should know that there are not sufficient funds to cover them manifests a disregard for ethics and fundamental honesty, at least if such conduct occurs repeatedly. Writing bad checks may, by itself under some circumstances, constitute moral turpitude. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [11]

490.01 Found

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

490.05 Not Found

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

500 Aggravation (references in parentheses are to the Standards)

510 Prior record of discipline (1.5(a); 1986 Standard 1.2(b))

Note: See topic number 802.21 for definition of prior record.

511 Found

In theMatter of Wittenberg (Review Dept 2015) 5 Cal. StateBar Ct.Rptr. 418

In theMatter of Carver (Review Dept 2014) 5 Cal. StateBar Ct.Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 20 14)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter ofLenard (Review Dept. 20 13)5 Cal.State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250

In theMatterofSu/livan (ReYiewDept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189

Where respondent's prior misconduct extended over several years and was very serious innature,the record of prior discipline constituted a significant aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009)5Cal.StateBarCt.Rptr.l51 [4a,b)

Review Department applied standard 1.7(a) where respondent 's prior misconduct rested on the serious offense of willful misappropriation ,the prior misconduct occurred fouryears before the current misconduct, both matters involved deceit, respondent v as defending the charges in the prior at the time he was committing misconduct as a juror, and respondent continued to serve his actual suspension for the prior. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept 2009) 5 Cal.StateBar Ct.Rptr. 141 [6a,b]

In theMatter ofl lzomson (Review Dept 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct Rptr. 966.

In theMatterofBrockway (Review Dept 2006) 4 Cal.StateBar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In theMatter ofWells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr.896.

In theMatter ofShalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. StateBar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Contrary to the hearingjudge' sconclusion,the weight to be accorded to respondent's prior discipline should not be di.m.in.ished. Although the prior discipline was remote intime itwas serious innature, and respondent's prior discipline was properly be considered in circumstances where an attorney has been disbarred, reinstated, and committed further misconductln the Matter ofTenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. StateBar Ct. Rptr. 688.[1]

The hearing judge gave little weight to respondent 's prior discipline because he found that the nature of the violations in this matter did not raise a serious concern about public protection or demonstrate that respondent had failed to undertake steps towards rehabilitation. The review department disagreed. This was the third matter that bad been brought by the State Bar as the result ofrespondent's failure to make timely restitution to his client At this point, respondent should have had a heightened awareness of his need for strict compliance with his reporting and payment obligations. The fact that his present probation violations were closely related to his past disciplinary infractions raised concerns about respondent's rehabilitation. Ordinarily, when there is a close nexus between previous misconduct and the present probation violation, a substantially greater degree of discipline is needed than would otherwise be necessary. The review department assigned significant weight in aggravation because ofrespondent 'sprior disciplinary record. In theMatter ofLaden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal StateBar Ct. Rptr.678.[1]

In theMatter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State BarCt. Rptr. 567.

Where respondent's prior misconduct occurred between late 1980 and 1984 and his pre ent misconduct spanned the period between 1994 and 1999,the review department concluded that the prior misconduct was not too remote tobe considered asan aggravating circumstance. Inthis case,particularly because the prior misconduct was very similar to that found in the present case, respondent 's prior record of discipline was considered to be a serious aggravating circumstance, made even more serious as the prior discipline did not serve to rehabilitate respondent and prevent the present misconductJn theMatter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.416.[5]

In theMatter ofFreydl (Review Dept. 2001)4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

Even though respondent's misconduct in present proceeding did not resemble the serious misconduct to which respondent stipulated in his prior record of discipline and even though respondent's present misconduct began well before State Bar initiated the prior disciplinary proceeding against him, review department gave respondent's prior record of discipline some greater weight in aggravation than did the hearing judge because respondent's present misconduct continued and accelerated during pendency of the prior proceeding, with the more egregious portion of the present misconduct occurring after respondent had stipulated to culpability on the charges of seriousmisconduct brought against inthe prior proceeding. In the Matter ofDahlz (Review Dept. 200 1) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [9]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Stansbwy (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent 'smany ethical violations featured hann to victims and the bon est administration ofjustice. Offenses concerning the administration ofjustice have been considered as very seriousby the Supreme Court. Disbarment isnot reservedjust for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor isrespondent 'scomplete lackofinsight, recognition, orremorse for any ofhiswrongdoing .This factor makes disbarment appropriatedespite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In theMatter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.[5]

In theMatter ofBouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Respondent was found culpable of ten disciplinable acts ofmoral turpitude (seven acts ofmisrepresentation, one act of improperly retaining for his own benefit funds out of a medical provider's lien reduction, and one act of attempting to obtain a greater fee than that to which he was entitled by failing to disclose to his client costs he recovered), eight instances of improper solicitation of clients, and two instances of failing to properly account to his client. There were substantial aggravating factors, including a prior record of discipline, but no mitigating circumstances. The review department recommended that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for a period of five years, that execution be stayed, and that respondent be placed on probation for a period of five years on conditions including three years actual suspension and until respondent pays restitution and until he provides proof ofhis rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In theMatter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.[9]

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Berg (ReviewDept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter ofMeyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal.State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

Respondent's extensive record of prior discipline demonstrated that probation and suspension have proven inadequate in the past to protect against future misconduct, and the record in the current proceeding did not give assurance that such a sanction would ensure that future misconduct would not occur. Accordingly, the review department concluded that disbarment was appropriate to protect the public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter ofRose (Review Dept. 1997)3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [7]

A prior record of discipline is an aggravating factor regardless of when the discipline was imposed. Where misconduct addressed by a current disciplinary proceeding resembles misconduct addressed by a prior disciplinary proceeding and occurred after the filing of a notice to show cause inthe prior proceeding, the filing alerted the attorney to the ethically questionable nature of the misconduct. Thus, the prior disciplinary proceeding warranted significant weight in aggravation to the extent that the misconduct addressed by the current proceeding happened after the filing of a notice to show cause in the prior proceeding. In theMatter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr 547. [5)

In theMatter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

Aggravating circumstance of prior misconduct was magnified by fact that respondent committed the current misconduct while on probation in prior disciplinary proceeding. In theMatter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430. [6]

Prior record of discipline is always aggravating factor, regardless of when discipline was imposed, but aggravating force may be diminished if present misconduct occurred during same period as prior misconduct. Where respondent's present misconduct, which was similar to misconduct found in his prior discipline proceeding, was committed after notice to show cause had been filed in prior proceeding, but before State Bar Court's decision was filed, filing of formal charges in prior proceeding gave respondent notice that State Bar considered his conduct ethically questionable. Therefore, respondent's prior record was aggravating evidence. In theMatter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [17]

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In theMatter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

Where respondent attempted to file required affidavit of compliance with rule 955, California Rules of Court, within two weeks after it was due and before he was aware of initiation of rule 955 violation proceeding, and no clients were harmed, but respondent had also violated probation and had substantial prior discipline record, nine months actual suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Only if attomey's prior and present misconduct occurred during same time period and within narrow timeframe can many years of discipline-free practice before prior misconduct be deemed mitigating circumstance. Where respondent's prior and present misconduct occurred neither during same period nor within narrow time frame, and where misconduct in subsequent matter continued while prior matter was pending before State Bar court, respondent's discipline-free practice before prior misconduct was not mitigating in subsequent proceeding. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [22]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

The aggravating effectofprior discipline maybe diminished if misconduct underlying prior discipline occurred contemporaneously with misconduct currently under consideration. However, where at time respondent committed current misconduct, he was either involved in disciplinary process or was actually on disciplinary probation, this indicated that respondent's prior discipline had very little impact on his behavior, and demonstrated respondent's inability to conform his conduct to ethical norms. In such circwnstances, greater showing required in reinstatement would better protect public than showing required to return to practice after suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Accordingly, application of standard calling for disbarment for third imposition of discipline was appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [15]

In theMatter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

The fact that misconduct arose from aberrant facts and circumstances has been accorded mitigating weight in appropriate cases. However, where respondent's prior misconduct had involved multiple acts overhis relatively few years of practice, and his prior and current misconduct together spanned six of his ten years inpractice, it was not appropriate to consider respondent's misconduct as aberrational. In theMatter of Snyder (ReviewDept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In theMatter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

In theMatter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993)2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

In the Matter of Grueneich (ReviewDept.1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

A short delay in compliance with rule 955, by itself, would not necessitate disbarment. However, where respondent also had failed to appear in the rule 955 violation proceeding, had failed to appear in two prior disciplinary proceedings, and had continued to ignore her obligations thereafter, showing a clear pattern of failure to participate in the disciplinary process and to comply with requirements of Supreme Court, disbarment was clearly appropriate. In theMatter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [2]

Prior discipline includes discipline imposed for violation of probation. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. StateBar Ct.Rptr. 382. [9]

An attorney's failure to comply with successive orders of the Supreme Court is of concern to the State Bar Courtbecause itrepeatedly burdens the resources ofthe StateBar Court and the disciplinary system. In theMatter ofPierce (Review Dept. 1993)2 Cal. State Bar *Ct.*Rptr. 382. [11]

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

Maximum available discipline in probation revocation matter was appropriate where respondent's priors, which included a prior probation violation, combined with misconduct in current case, showed both a persistent problem with drugs and alcohol and a persistent problem with conforming conduct to requirements of law and court orders. Policy underlying disciplinary standard calling for disbarment after two priors, and standard calling for increasing severity of discipline in successive matters, also militated toward imposing severe discipline given respondent's extensive prior record. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [20]

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 219.

Where respondent's drunk driving convictions involved more serious misconduct than in prior reported disciplinary cases involving drunk driving, including repeated abusive conduct with law enforcement officers, and respondent had two prior disciplinary reprovals, but respondent presented favorable evidence of professional ability and character references as well as efforts toward overcoming his addiction to alcohol, a 60 day actual suspension was appropriate to serve the aims of attorney discipline and, coupled with three years of probation, to assist in convincing respondent to deal with his alcohol abuse problems seriously. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.208. [7]

A literal application of standard 1.7(b) would call for disbarment of any attorney who is found culpable in a third disciplinary proceeding, unless compelling mitigating circumstances predominate. However, this standard must be applied in lightof the nature and extent of the prior record. Where respondent's prior record of two reprovals involved inattention to the needs of clients, misconduct of a different nature than the drunk driving convictions involved in respondent's third proceeding, respondent's prior disciplinary record did not warrant disbarment, but did constitute a proper aggravating factor. In the Matter ofAnderson (ReviewDept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 208. [8]

Where reproval would ordinarily have been appropriate for misconduct involving minor rule violations, but respondent had a prior public reproval and appeared to need to reorganize law practice, appropriate discipline was six months stayed suspension with probation conditions including trust accounting and completion of a law office management class.In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [26]

In the Matterof Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.108.

The passage of time since respondent's misconduct and the failure of the State Bar to consolidate respondent's two disciplinary matters did not render the disbarment recommendation in the second matter unfair. Consolidation of disciplinary matters, while preferable when reasonably possible and not prejudicial, is not mandatory, and independent consideration of separate matters involving the same attorney is not uncommon. Where an investigation by state law enforcement and the State Bar of respondent's misconduct in the second matter was still ongoing after the initiation and disposition of respondent's earlier disciplinary matter, consolidation would not have been possible. Further, it could not be presumed that if the matters had been consolidated, the recommended discipline would have been suspension rather than disbarment, given the far greater seriousness of the misconduct in the second matter. Finally, respondent had shown no prejudice from the delay, and had benefited from being able to practice almost continually in the interim. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (ReviewDept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect offour clientmatters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

Where respondent had received a reproval for four separate instances of misconduct which had occurred seven years prior to the instant misconduct, the reproval was not too remote in time and was properly considered an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [12]

Even though criminal conduct underlying attorney's prior disciplinary suspension occurred partly at same time as professional misconduct involved in subsequent disciplinary matter, prior suspension was properly considered in aggravation in subsequent matter. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [25]

In determining appropriate discipline for probation violations, respondent's original disciplinary matter, in which probation conditions were imposed, constituted a prior disciplinary record and was required to be treated as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [19]

Although non-final prior discipline recommendation for probation violation, still pending before Supreme Court, is record of prior discipline under rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review department does not apply rigidly, or without regard to facts of prior matters, disciplinary standard indicating disbarment as appropriate sanction for third disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [22]

Where, at the time of the hearing, respondent's prior discipline record consisted only of another hearing department decision, and the examiner moved to augment the record on review with the review department minutes in the prior matter, the motion was construed by the review department as a motion to take judicial notice and was granted. Thereafter, the review department took judicial notice on its own motion of the Supreme Court's order in the prior matter. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [11]

An attorney's prior private reproval which originated only four years before his current misconduct was not so remote in time to the current proceeding that the imposition of greater discipline in the present case based on the prior discipline would be manifestly unjust, even though the prior private reproval involved misconduct which did not bear any substantive relationship to the subsequent misconduct. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [17]

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

The Supreme Court has long considered an attorney's prior record of discipline to be an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [5]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

513 Found but discounted or not relied on

513.10 Contemporaneous with current misconduct

Aggravating weight of respondent's prior discipline greatly diminished since the misconduct in the current proceeding occurred before the Notice of Disciplinary Charges was filed and the suspension ordered in the prior matter. Respondent did not have an opportunity to appreciate or heed the import of the earlier discipline. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263 [7]

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

The aggravating weight of prior discipline was diminished where the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as did the misconduct underlying the present matter. Under such circumstances, the totality of the charges brought in both cases was considered in order to determine the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [6]

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

Prior discipline is always a proper factor in aggravation. However, because part of the rationale for considering it is that it is indicative of a recidivist attorney's inability to conform to ethical norms, the aggravating force of prior discipline is diminished if the misconduct occurred during the same period as the misconduct in the prior matter. In this circumstance, it is appropriate to consider what the discipline would have been if all the charged misconduct during the time period had been brought as one case. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [12]

Whenever discipline is imposed, consideration is properly given to the presence of a prior disciplinary record, even where the facts giving rise to the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as the present misconduct. However, the aggravating force of the prior discipline is diminished when it occurred during the same time period as the present misconduct and thus did not provide the attorney with an opportunity to heed the import of that discipline. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [19]

Although respondent's prior misconduct was similar to the misconduct in a second matter, the aggravating force of respondent's prior disciplinary record was somewhat diluted where the misconduct in the second matter occurred before the notice to show cause in the prior matter was served, because it did not reflect a failure on respondent's part to learn from the prior misconduct. Nevertheless, the prior was a factor in aggravation, and it was appropriate for the discipline in the second matter to be greater than in the previous matter. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [24]

Aggravating force of prior disciplinary record was diminished by fact that it involved misconduct occurring at same time as that in subsequent matter, and therefore did not constitute prior warning to respondent of the wrongful nature and possible disciplinary consequences of respondent's conduct. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [11]

In order to properly fulfill the purposes of lawyer discipline, the review department must examine the nature and chronology of a respondent's record of discipline. Mere fact that attorney has three impositions of discipline, without further analysis, may not justify disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [7]

Where misconduct in current proceeding occurred prior to imposition of discipline in prior proceeding, record of prior discipline does not carry with it as full a need for severity as if misconduct had occurred after respondent had been disciplined and had failed to heed the import of that discipline. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [8]

513.20 Remote in time and/or minor in nature

Where last acts of misconduct in prior discipline matter occurred approximately 17 years before first acts of misconduct in second matter, and prior misconduct itself was minimal in nature and involved misconduct for which respondent was found not culpable in second matter, prior misconduct did not merit significant weight in aggravation, and it would be manifestly unjust to impose greater discipline in second matter than in prior proceeding solely because of prior discipline. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [12]

A private reproval more than 20 years earlier, for improperly stopping payment on a $500 check to another law firm, was too remote in time to merit significant weight on the issue of degree of discipline. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor sex offense not involving moral turpitude and not related to practice of law, respondent's record of two prior private reprovals made it appropriate to impose public reproval rather than private reproval that would otherwise have been warranted, but due to lack of common thread among matters and their collective lack of severity, it would have been manifestly unjust to recommend suspension. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [5]

513.90 Other reason

Attorney's two prior records of discipline from 2007 and 2011 assigned limited aggravating weight given the nature and extent of the prior misconduct, the minimal discipline imposed, the fact the attorney committed some of the misconduct in his second disciplinary case before his wrongdoing in the first disciplinary case, and because the misconduct in the second disciplinary case occurred before the attorney was disciplined in the first disciplinary case. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [5]

Attorney discipline is an available sanction for violation of rule 11 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Where respondent testified that he had been disciplined by federal court as result of rule 11 matter, and federal court had suspended respondent from practice before it as part of relief granted in ruling on rule 11 motion, federal court's action constituted discipline. However, State Bar must prove aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where record before review department did not reveal factual underpinnings of federal court discipline, and review department was therefore unable to examine nature and chronology of respondent's prior discipline to determine impact it should have on current discipline recommendation, review department gave no weight to respondent's federal discipline as factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [11]

Where respondent had been disciplined in another jurisdiction, his record of practice prior to his first California disciplinary proceeding was not "unblemished." However, his over 30 years of practice prior to such out-of-state discipline constituted an important mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [14]

Where last acts of misconduct in prior discipline matter occurred approximately 17 years before first acts of misconduct in second matter, and prior misconduct itself was minimal in nature and involved misconduct for which respondent was found not culpable in second matter, prior misconduct did not merit significant weight in aggravation, and it would be manifestly unjust to impose greater discipline in second matter than in prior proceeding solely because of prior discipline. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [12]

Respondent's record of prior discipline did not warrant great weight in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, where respondent's first prior disciplinary matter was unrelated to present conduct, and State Bar had stipulated in second prior matter that respondent's misconduct was only worthy of a short suspension not requiring client notification. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [6]

Where respondent's two prior discipline cases occurred during the same four-month period when respondent's practice disintegrated, the two matters were considered as essentially a single matter in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [1]

Where it was unclear whether or not the former review department had considered respondent's delayed restitution in its assessment of the appropriate discipline in a prior probation revocation matter still pending before the Supreme Court, no significant aggravating weight was accorded that prior probation matter as prior discipline. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [23]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern with assuring that the record in disciplinary proceedings reflects the correct evidence and finding of prior discipline or lack thereof. Accordingly, where only one of respondent's two prior disciplinary proceedings was made a part of the record and weighed by the hearing judge, it was necessary for the review department to remand the matter to the hearing judge to take evidence on the other prior discipline and consider its effect on the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [5]

Disbarment based on presence of multiple prior disciplinary matters is appropriate upon demonstration of common thread among disciplinary matters, pattern of misconduct, or increasing severity, but was not appropriate in matter where those factors were not present and compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [14]

515 Declined to find

While a suspension for failure to pass the Professional Responsibility Examination may be considered in determining appropriate discipline, it is not prior discipline under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [2]

Where two separate disciplinary proceedings were consolidated on review, the first proceeding did not constitute prior discipline for the purpose of enhanced discipline in the consolidated matter. Nonetheless, where the misconduct involved in the second proceeding had continued during the period that the first proceeding was pending in hearing department, the fact that respondent engaged in additional misconduct while he was aware that his conduct was being scrutinized in a pending disciplinary proceeding was significant. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [18]

Suspension resulting from respondent's failure to pass professional responsibility examination as ordered by Supreme Court did not constitute prior discipline, but was relevant to determination of appropriate discipline for failure to comply with rule 955 as required by same Supreme Court order. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [12]

An attorney's administrative suspension for failure to pay bar dues does not constitute prior discipline for purposes of weighing the appropriate discipline in a subsequent disciplinary case, in that the prior suspension is administrative in nature and does not result from a finding of misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [36]

The payment of State Bar membership fees is only a prerequisite to practicing law. No statute or rule of professional conduct requires payment of the fees unless the attorney intends to practice law in this state. Failure to pay fees is not improper in and of itself. The impropriety occurs when the attorney continues to practice law after suspension. Accordingly, an attorney's previous suspension for failure to pay membership fees is not a prior disciplinary record and is not an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [24]

An attorney's suspension from the practice of law for nonpayment of State Bar fees is not a disciplinary suspension and is not considered a prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [12]

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

Neither a respondent's section 6007(c) inactive enrollment itself nor the unproven charges underlying it should be relied upon as aggravation in a subsequent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [24]

520 Multiple acts of misconduct (1.5(b); 1986 Standard 1.2(b)(ii))

Where respondent was culpable of 24 counts of misconduct in four client matters over four-year period, respondent committed multiple acts of misconduct, but was not culpable of pattern of misconduct, as his actions did not amount to serious misconduct over prolonged period of time. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [6]

521 Found

In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

Filing of 82 fraudulent bankruptcy petitions within period of just over three years demonstrated both multiple acts of misconduct and a pattern of misconduct, which were a single aggravating factor under former standard 1.2(b)(ii), but are now two separate aggravating factors under standards 1.5(b) and 1.5(c). In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. . [5 a,b]

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

Multiple acts of misconduct as aggravation are not limited to the counts pleaded. Respondent's 65 improper CTA withdrawals were multiple acts of misconduct that constitute significant aggravation. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [2]

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

Where respondents' misconduct was comprised of multiple acts committed in concert with each other over a three–month period and where respondents chose to expressly or impliedly create a false picture of the true state of affairs and ignore contrary facts and legal position and where respondents had numerous opportunities to correct their misleading statements but chose not to do so, respondents' repeated acts of misconduct demonstrated a pattern of disrespect for professional norms and was considered an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [9]

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

The review department agreed with the hearing judge that respondents multiple acts of wrongdoing were an aggravating circumstance. The review department also viewed respondent's continuous disregard of her trust account duties over the approximately one and one-half years as demonstrating a pattern of misconduct. However, for the purposes of determining aggravation the result is the same whether respondent's conduct is characterized as multiple acts of wrongdoing or as a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [7]

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

The fact that misconduct arose from aberrant facts and circumstances has been accorded mitigating weight in appropriate cases. However, where respondent's prior misconduct had involved multiple acts over his relatively few years of practice, and his prior and current misconduct together spanned six of his ten years in practice, it was not appropriate to consider respondent's misconduct as aberrational. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

Where an attorney's prior discipline involved culpability of moral turpitude for attempted receipt of stolen property, and the attorney's subsequent misconduct involved moral turpitude in misleading applications for employment, there was no pattern or common thread linking the former misconduct with the later case. However, the attorney's multiple breaches of ethical duties demonstrated that the attorney lacked a true understanding of professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [11]

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

While two matters of misconduct might not be considered multiple acts, the addition of a finding of culpability of another count of misconduct made a finding of multiple acts appropriate; however, the three instances of misconduct did not amount to a pattern or practice even when coupled with the additional misconduct involved in respondent's prior disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [26]

Attorney's deceit of client's agent on 11 separate occasions over a considerable period was an aggravating factor, and militated strongly against considering attorney's misconduct as one-time or aberrant. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [6]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

Attorney's abandonment of two clients comprised multiple acts of wrongdoing but did not constitute a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [14]

Where respondent filed three annual federal tax returns containing false information as to charitable contributions, respondent's misconduct involved multiple acts of misconduct separated by time sufficient to allow the member to consider his actions, and therefore constituted a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [3]

Although an attorney committed multiple acts of misconduct, these acts did not rise to the level of a "pattern of misconduct," a characterization reserved only for the most serious instances of misconduct over a prolonged period of time. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [10]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

Abandonment of three clients did not constitute a pattern of abandonment, but did constitute multiple acts of severe disregard of clients' interests. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [3]

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

523 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

Fact that, in addition to unintentionally misappropriating client's funds, attorney had committed act of moral turpitude by concealing personal assets in trust account to avoid tax levy might, but would not necessarily, indicate greater discipline to be in order, based on Supreme Court precedent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [19]

Existence of multiple acts of theft added to overall gravity of respondent's misconduct, but did not preclude consideration of mitigation to reach a result short of disbarment. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [14]

525 Declined to find

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

Where misconduct involved only two counts, and both counts arose from a single transaction of modifying a contingent fee agreement with a client, review department did not find aggravation on account of multiple acts of misconduct. In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829. [3]

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Where respondent misappropriated client trust funds and failed to report court-ordered sanctions, aggravation on account of multiple acts of misconduct was not present, but respondent's misconduct was aggravated by failure to pay sanctions; by failure to make restitution; and, most grievously, by his abuse of his vulnerable client's trust and his misrepresentation of his actions to client and opposing counsel. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [7]

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

530 Pattern of misconduct (1.5(c); 1986 Standard 1.2(b)(ii))

Filing of 82 fraudulent bankruptcy petitions within period of just over three years demonstrated both multiple acts of misconduct and a pattern of misconduct, which were a single aggravating factor under former standard 1.2(b)(ii), but are now two separate aggravating factors under standards 1.5(b) and 1.5(c). In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [5 a,b]

Respondent demonstrated a pattern of misconduct by repeatedly engaging in vexatious litigation for more than six years in one set of related cases and committing an ethical violation in another set of litigations during the same period, because he committed serious instances of repeated misconduct over a prolonged period of time. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [6]

Where respondent was culpable of 24 counts of misconduct in four client matters over four-year period, respondent committed multiple acts of misconduct, but was not culpable of pattern of misconduct, as his actions did not amount to serious misconduct over prolonged period of time. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308 [6]

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

531 Found

Twelve acts of UPL across nine different states constitute a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [5]

Attorney's misconduct evidenced a 10-year pattern of deception for personal gain or to cover up mismanagement of client cases. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [8]

The review department agreed with the hearing judge that respondents multiple acts of wrongdoing were an aggravating circumstance. The review department also viewed respondent's continuous disregard of her trust account duties over the approximately one and one-half years as demonstrating a pattern of misconduct. However, for the purposes of determining aggravation the result is the same whether respondent's conduct is characterized as multiple acts of wrongdoing or as a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627. [7]

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

Respondent's regular use of his client trust accounts to conduct his personal business affairs over a period approaching three years, combined with his lack of attention to the requirements of maintaining a trust account and his issuance of 28 NSF checks from that account, establishes a pattern of misconduct and is an aggravating circumstances under standard 1.2(b)(ii). In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [8]

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

Respondent engaged in a pattern of misconduct where he sent a client multiple fraudulent billings, representing numerous monthly bills, covering a continuous period of in excess of 10 months.

A pattern of misconduct may be found even though the acts and omissions encompass a wide range of improper behavior. Respondent's numerous acts of neglect extended over a long period of time, 10 years, indicating a continuous course of professional misconduct. It continued even after respondent attempted to address his case management problems by hiring a management consultant and after the State Bar contacted him about client complaints. Even though none of this neglect entailed dishonesty or false statement, the review department concluded that respondent habitually disregarded his client's interests and failed to communicate with them and, therefore, committed acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [10]

Even though none of respondent's individual acts of misconduct involved dishonesty, concealment, or mishandling of client funds and even though respondent had no prior record of discipline over a lengthy practice, respondent's disbarment was warranted as consistent with past case law and the standards for attorney discipline for respondent's panoply of protracted failure to communicate with clients, incompetent practice, and failure to supervise subordinate staff affecting many different clients over a 10-year period. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [11]

Respondent engaged in a pattern of misconduct where he recklessly provided incompetent legal services to clients in eight matters during a period of more than seven years, where one of these clients lost a $25,000 settlement, where a dispute over $70,000 in payments which he had received for another of the clients remained unresolved for at least six years, and where three more of the clients lost their causes of action. The period of time over which the misconduct accrued, combined with the frequency of the occurrences lead the review department to conclude that respondent's failure to competently perform had become habitual and thus involved moral turpitude. An attorney's habitual disregard of clients' interests constitutes moral turpitude, even if such disregard results only from gross negligence rather than dishonesty. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [6 a-d]

In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

Acts of moral turpitude are those done contrary to honesty and good morals and are a cause for discipline whether or not they are committed in the practice of law. Even if individual acts do not involve moral turpitude, a pattern of misconduct may amount to moral turpitude. Where respondent repeatedly misstated facts and failed to reveal prior adverse rulings to trial and appellate courts, failed to follow court rules, and flouted the authority of the courts, such serious, habitual abuse of the judicial system constituted moral turpitude. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [5]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Even though an attorney's individual acts did not involve moral turpitude, the attorney's pattern of misconduct amounted to moral turpitude; habitual disregard of client interests, even where grossly negligent or careless rather than wilful or dishonest, constitutes moral turpitude and justifies disbarment. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Finding a pattern in aggravation is not limited to consideration of the counts pleaded. Where respondent stipulated to misconduct involving eight clients over six years, that number of cases only, in a high volume practice, might not have constituted a pattern. However, where respondent also testified to his prolonged, systematic failure to supervise his staff, his staff's inability to handle the caseload, and numerous other problems besides the ones listed in the notice to show cause, he had no grounds to challenge the finding in aggravation based thereon that a pattern of neglect existed. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [6]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

533 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

535 Declined to find

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

535.10 Insufficient number of acts

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

While two matters of misconduct might not be considered multiple acts, the addition of a finding of culpability of another count of misconduct made a finding of multiple acts appropriate; however, the three instances of misconduct did not amount to a pattern or practice even when coupled with the additional misconduct involved in respondent's prior disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [26]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

Attorney's abandonment of two clients comprised multiple acts of wrongdoing but did not constitute a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [14]

Although an attorney committed multiple acts of misconduct, these acts did not rise to the level of a "pattern of misconduct," a characterization reserved only for the most serious instances of misconduct over a prolonged period of time. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [10]

Abandonment of three clients did not constitute a pattern of abandonment, but did constitute multiple acts of severe disregard of clients' interests. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [3]

535.20 Dissimilarity of acts

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

Where vast majority of respondent's prior misconduct involved inattention to needs of clients, and current misconduct involved inattention to disciplinary orders, there was no common thread demonstrating a pattern of misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [10]

Where an attorney's prior discipline involved culpability of moral turpitude for attempted receipt of stolen property, and the attorney's subsequent misconduct involved moral turpitude in misleading applications for employment, there was no pattern or common thread linking the former misconduct with the later case. However, the attorney's multiple breaches of ethical duties demonstrated that the attorney lacked a true understanding of professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [11]

535.90 Other reason

Because respondent's misconduct affected over 300 clients, substantial weight was accorded to the fact that respondent's misconduct involved multiple acts of wrongdoing, but since respondent's misconduct was confined to one month, respondent's misconduct did not constitute a habitual pattern. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [11]

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In considering whether respondent's misconduct constituted a pattern, hearing judge should not have considered charges which had been dismissed or of which respondent was not culpable. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [9]

Habitual disregard of client interests is ground for disbarment. However, only the most serious instances of repeated misconduct over a prolonged period of time can be characterized as demonstrating a pattern of wrongdoing. Thus, the number of clients involved is but one factor to be considered. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [13]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

540 Intentional misconduct, bad faith, dishonesty, misrepresentation, concealment (1.5 (d), (e), (f); interim Standard 1.5(d); 1986 Standard 1.2(b)(iii))

Where respondent made unsupported claims that his clients were mentally ill and senile, respondent's disparaging remarks were made in bad faith and were appropriately considered an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [9]

541 Found

Where respondent repeatedly misrepresented facts underlying his untimely response to notice of disciplinary charges and lack of notice of disciplinary proceeding, and asserted that misrepresentations were merely "technically inaccurate," respondent's inability to understand high degree of honesty expected of attorneys constituted significant factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [6]

Where respondent made misleading statements in connection with efforts to set aside default in disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge's finding in aggravation that respondent acted with dishonesty was not improper finding of uncharged misconduct, but proper finding that dishonesty surrounded respondent's underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [11]

Respondent's representations involved bad faith and dishonesty where he falsely implied he could provide legal representation in states where he was not licensed, advised clients to cease contact with their creditors because he was representing their interests but provided no services beyond sending cease and desist letters, terminated representation without helping clients find local counsel as promised, and included debt settlements in scope of services agreements when he had no specific knowledge of debt collection laws in states where the clients resided. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [6]

Where respondent failed to demonstrate recognition of his mistake in filing a false verification by promptly taking steps to rectify it and instead twice concealed it through legal semantics, respondent's misconduct was followed by dishonesty and concealment. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [5]

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

Where respondent misrepresented facts regarding her interim suspension to superior court; deliberately sought to mislead State Bar Court Review Department regarding facts supporting motion for modification of interim suspension order; and intentionally tried to deceive State Bar Court hearing judge regarding correctness of transcript offered as evidence by State Bar, respondent's acts of dishonesty to courts constituted aggravating circumstances surrounding her failure to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court in connection with interim suspension. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [7]

Where respondent misappropriated client trust funds and failed to report court-ordered sanctions, aggravation on account of multiple acts of misconduct was not present, but respondent's misconduct was aggravated by failure to pay sanctions; by failure to make restitution; and, most grievously, by his abuse of his vulnerable client's trust and his misrepresentation of his actions to client and opposing counsel. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [7]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

Where respondent made, and urged his clients to make, misleading statements to the opposing party in connection with a settlement, wrongfully demanded the return of a partial settlement payment from a client who was entitled to the funds, and delayed sending the same client other partial settlement payments to which the client was entitled, this conduct constituted bad faith and was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [14]

Even if respondent's demand that client return settlement check demonstrated lack of candor or cooperation with client, review department would not consider it as separate aggravating circumstance where it had already been found to be a factor establishing bad faith, a different aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [15]

Where respondent failed to make restitution efforts until after disciplinary actions had been instituted; asserted that it was the State Bar's duty to contact her clients when she abandoned her practice; and had committed misconduct involving acts of deceit and bad faith, respondent's conduct evidenced a lack of understanding of her duties and insight into her misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [39]

Attorney's deceit of client's agent on 11 separate occasions over a considerable period was an aggravating factor, and militated strongly against considering attorney's misconduct as one-time or aberrant. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [6]

Suspension rather than disbarment might be appropriate for isolated misappropriation that is unlikely to be repeated, but was not appropriate where misappropriation was accompanied by lengthy practice of deceit on client's agent and lack of forthrightness during State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [11]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

In a matter in which respondent prematurely disbursed entrusted funds to repay client for expenses later determined to have been properly reimbursable, and also withdrew funds for attorney's fees but later replaced those funds, the gravamen of the case, for the purpose of assessing the appropriate discipline, was the prolonged deceit perpetuated by respondent on opposing counsel and the courts regarding the unauthorized disbursements.

Respondent's extended practice of deceit on courts and counsel made respondent's case far more serious as to discipline than the trust violations. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [10]

Attorneys are expected to be forceful advocates for clients' legitimate causes, but role played by attorneys in honest administration of justice is critical. Attorneys, by adherence to their high fiduciary duties and the truth, can sharply reduce or eliminate clashes and ease the way to dispute settlement. Where parties to marital dissolution matter agreed to allow husband's counsel to hold community funds in trust pending resolution of dispute regarding property settlement, relying on counsel's duty as an attorney to honor the trust nature of the money, attorney's misconduct in improperly disbursing funds and then misrepresenting to wife's counsel and courts that funds were still held in trust account was especially regrettable. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [19]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had initially misrepresented his occupation in the course of his arrest, it was appropriate to impose requirement to take and pass professional responsibility examination as condition of public reproval. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [6]

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

Attorney's repeated, protracted deceit of clients, which had effect of forestalling them from discovering true status of their matters, was perhaps even more serious than harm caused by attorney's inattention to client duties. An attorney's practice of deceit is inimical to the high ethical standards of honesty and integrity required of members of the legal profession and to the promotion of confidence in the trustworthiness of members of the profession. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [4]

543 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141

543.10 Duplicative of section 6106 charge

Where State Bar Court, in finding that respondent's misdemeanor crimes involved moral turpitude, had already considered respondent's bad faith in making false statements to arresting officers and making improper use of his position as a prosecutor, as well as his harm to the administration of justice in violating the law and his criminal probation, it would be improper to consider those facts in aggravation. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [4]

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

It was not appropriate to use same conduct which constituted violation of statute regarding acts of moral turpitude as basis for finding of bad faith in aggravation of same charge. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [10]

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

Respondent's having willfully misled a court during trial and failed to cooperate with the State Bar's investigation of his misconduct were not properly considered as aggravating factors because they were part of the basis for finding respondent culpable of substantive violations. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [10]

Where hearing judge's finding of aggravation for conduct surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty and concealment reflected same conduct that review department relied on as basis for finding respondent culpable of acts of moral turpitude, finding in aggravation was deleted as duplicative. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [12]

Respondent's false representation to his client that he was a partner in a law firm was not appropriately considered as aggravating factor because it was already the basis for finding respondent culpable of dishonesty. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [14]

Where an attorney was charged with, and found culpable of, embezzling client funds, and this conduct was found to constitute moral turpitude, it was not appropriate to consider such conduct also as an aggravating factor based on dishonesty. However, it was appropriate to consider the attorney's subsequent conduct in writing bad checks as reimbursement for the embezzled funds as an aggravating factor, where the evidence showed that the attorney knew or should have known that one of the checks was drawn on insufficient funds. The weight of such aggravation was not great, however, since the bad check was closely tied to the underlying misconduct and was repaid within a few months. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

543.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.

Where respondent's criminal conduct involved concealment, which was considered as a factor establishing respondent's culpability for acts of moral turpitude, it was duplicative to consider such concealment an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [4]

Where respondent was culpable of failing to set aside $942 of his legal fee in a trust account pending resolution of a dispute with his client; aggravating factor of bad faith arose from respondent's intent to serve his clients rather than from any venal purpose; aggravating factors were outweighed by mitigating factors including long period of unblemished practice since misconduct, indicating unlikelihood of further misconduct; and prior similar cases indicated that it would be appropriate to depart from the 90-day minimum actual suspension for trust account violations, appropriate discipline was private reproval conditioned on passage of professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [22]

Severe emotional problems which can be related to the misconduct at issue can be considered to have a mitigating weight. Respondent's misrepresentations to his clients, made two days after the funeral of his murdered son, while not excusable, were tempered in their otherwise aggravating effect by respondent's emotional stress, and the hearing judge should have given such stress more weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [13]

Where an attorney was charged with, and found culpable of, embezzling client funds, and this conduct was found to constitute moral turpitude, it was not appropriate to consider such conduct also as an aggravating factor based on dishonesty. However, it was appropriate to consider the attorney's subsequent conduct in writing bad checks as reimbursement for the embezzled funds as an aggravating factor, where the evidence showed that the attorney knew or should have known that one of the checks was drawn on insufficient funds. The weight of such aggravation was not great, however, since the bad check was closely tied to the underlying misconduct and was repaid within a few months. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

545 Declined to find

Where State Bar's evidence that respondent lied to law enforcement included inconsistencies and hearsay statements, evidence did not clearly and convincingly establish aggravating factor of dishonesty. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [6]

Where respondent misappropriated entrusted funds and thereafter structured transactions to create the false appearance that he had maintained the funds in the form of cashier's checks from the time he misappropriated them until they were deposited into a second trust account, respondent's attempt to deceive the State Bar was more appropriately viewed as an uncharged violation of section 6106 rather than misconduct surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment and overreaching. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [10]

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

While respondent's motive in appealing superior court's reduction of his fees as attorney and executor of estate might have been suspect, where there was no clear and convincing evidence that such appeal was in bad faith or was otherwise improper, review department declined to consider respondent's appeal as an aggravating factor in light of the important policies favoring unfettered access to the courts. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [15]

Where aggravating factor of bad faith found by hearing judge rested entirely on inadmissible hearsay evidence, review department declined to adopt such finding. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [10]

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

The State Bar must prove aggravating factors as well as culpability by clear and convincing evidence to a reasonable certainty. Accordingly, finding in aggravation of bad faith could not be predicated on selected portions of complaining witness's unreliable correspondence and inconsistent testimony. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [20]

Misappropriation can be committed in different degrees of culpability, deserving of different discipline. Even where the most compelling mitigating circumstances do not clearly predominate, extenuating circumstances relating to the facts of the misappropriation may render disbarment inappropriate. An attorney who acts deliberately and with deceit should receive more severe discipline than an attorney who acts negligently and without deception. Disbarment would rarely, if ever, be appropriate for an attorney whose only misconduct was a single act of misappropriation unaccompanied by deceit or other aggravating factors. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [12]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, greater discipline may be imposed for a violation of an attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts than might otherwise be appropriate if the attorney's misconduct was surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment, or overreaching, as well as for other violations of the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct or refusal or inability to account for improper conduct toward trust funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [21]

An attorney's trust account violation, which consisted of unilaterally determining his fee and withdrawing trust funds to satisfy the fee, did not amount to an act of moral turpitude, because there was no evidence the attorney acted dishonestly in his payment to himself of a reduced fee taken in the good faith belief of a claim of right. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [24]

Under applicable provisions of Commercial Code, handwritten notation on attorney's check stating that it was issued "subject to verbal confirmation" destroys its negotiability and prevented attorney from being criminally liable for issuance of check drawn on insufficient funds. Dishonor of such check due to insufficient funds was not an aggravating factor, because check was issued in non-negotiable form and there was no clear evidence that payee was misled regarding nature of check. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [1]

Where referee made no finding that respondent misled clients' doctor about status of clients' case, and evidence in record was unclear, review department declined to find such misrepresentation as an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [9]

Where notice to show cause did not charge that respondent misrepresented to his clients the status of their claims, and respondent defaulted and did not appear at hearing, the review department declined to find, based on client's testimony at hearing, that respondent had committed act of dishonesty by making such misrepresentation. The review department is most reluctant to consider, even for the purpose of aggravation, misconduct which could have been, but was not charged in notice to show cause, especially where respondent is in default and has no opportunity to learn of or rebut matters arising during hearing. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [3]

Where evidence showed that attorney was candid about mishandling of trust funds, but failed to keep promises to repay the money, this did not constitute clear and convincing evidence that the attorney made misrepresentations, because failure to keep a promise of future action, without more, is not proof of fraudulent intent. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

550 Overreaching (1.5(g); interim Standard 1.5(d); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(iii))

551 Found

Where respondent wrote letter to a bank asserting a rival tribal faction had unconditional authority to dispossess another tribe of its property when respondent knew that the results of a tribal election were only preliminary, respondent's action was evidence of overreaching and considered in aggravation. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [6]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

Aggravating circumstances were found where respondent conspired to steal and stole from a school while he was working for it. Respondent's participation in the conspiracy to steal and theft were not only criminal acts, but also brazen breaches of the fiduciary duties an employee owes his employer. Observance of such fiduciary responsibility is central to the practice of law. Moreover, that respondent committed these felonies while he was in law school was also a factor of grave concern. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [3]

Respondent's duty to medical negligence client was not confined solely to obtaining successful recovery on client's claim. Respondent also had duty of utmost good faith and fidelity to client, which required him to advise client candidly of application of statutory limit on fee he could charge client. Where respondent overreached client by concealing such statute through recklessness or gross neglect, and collected excessive fee thereby, such conduct was patent breach of respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing to client, and was very serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [21]

Where respondent, as attorney and close family member of client, exploited superior knowledge and position of trust to detriment of vulnerable client in obtaining loan from client with grossly unfair provisions, attorney's overreaching constituted act of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [13]

Fact that respondent's misconduct involved client who was member of respondent's family was not mitigating but rather aggravating circumstance, since respondent's family ties to client made respondent more aware of client's vulnerabilities and trust client placed in respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [16]

Where respondent misappropriated client trust funds and failed to report court-ordered sanctions, aggravation on account of multiple acts of misconduct was not present, but respondent's misconduct was aggravated by failure to pay sanctions; by failure to make restitution; and, most grievously, by his abuse of his vulnerable client's trust and his misrepresentation of his actions to client and opposing counsel. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [7]

The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character. In light of such fiduciary obligations, respondent's conduct in arranging real property transactions between respondent's client and respondent's father involved overreaching, where respondent was closely involved with his father and did not safeguard the client's interests in the transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [10]

Respondent's simultaneous representation of a client and of respondent's father during the time that respondent arranged real property transactions between the client and the father was an aggravating circumstance in that the dual representation was rife with potential and actual conflicts of interest that could have been, if charged, the basis for additional culpability for violating the rule regarding representation of conflicting interests. The fact that respondent was not found culpable of any misconduct involving the real property transactions did not preclude treating respondent's conduct therein as an aggravating factor, because other related misconduct involving the same client was surrounded by and followed by the attorney's conduct in the real property transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [11]

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

553 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

555 Declined to find

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

Although respondent's misconduct was surrounded by concealment and overreaching, it was appropriate not to consider this as a factor in aggravation since it would be duplicative of the misconduct comprising acts of moral turpitude for which respondent was found culpable. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [9]

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, greater discipline may be imposed for a violation of an attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts than might otherwise be appropriate if the attorney's misconduct was surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment, or overreaching, as well as for other violations of the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct or refusal or inability to account for improper conduct toward trust funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [21]

560 Uncharged violations (1.5(h); interim Standard 1.5(d); 1986 Standard(1.2(b)(iii))

Where respondent's clients had English language limitations and where respondent used technical legalese in his engagement agreements in an effort to exempt himself from providing any service of consequence to his clients, respondent's exploitation of his superior knowledge and position of trust to the detriment of his vulnerable clients was evidence of overreaching that constituted moral turpitude forming the basis for additional uncharged misconduct in aggravation. In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [7]

Because there was an actual conflict in intractable dispute between corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, and corporation's remaining three directors over control of the corporation, respondent's proper course of conduct in representing corporation was to obtain informed written consent of each of board member or to withdraw from representation if he could not do so. But respondent did not do so; he chose to join the fray asserting only the president's interest while representing the corporation. Because of respondent's multiple conflicts, he lost any objectivity or neutrality and gravely compromised his duty of loyalty to corporate client, which is a serious aggravating circumstance as uncharged, but proved misconduct under aggravation standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct with respect to surrounding violations of State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct.In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.[8 a-c]

Section 6068, subdivision(i), of the Business and Professions Code requires an attorney to cooperate in any disciplinary investigation or proceeding. By offering to pay a client for the withdrawal of the client's State Bar complaint against respondent, respondent was attempting to interfere with the State Bar's investigation and thus committed an uncharged violation of section 6068, subdivision (i). In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. [3]

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

561 Found

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

Respondent was required to report to the State Bar his criminal charges and conviction both under section 6068(o)(4) and (5), and under disciplinary probation conditions specifically requiring him to comply with the State Bar Act. His failure to report these charges and conviction was considered in aggravation as serious uncharged misconduct. By failing to report, respondent impeded the disciplinary process. The State Bar was not informed of respondent's criminal conduct when it made recommendations to the Supreme Court in two of his previous disciplinary matters, and the Supreme Court was also unaware of his conviction when it imposed discipline in those cases. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [3 a,b]

Where respondent misappropriated entrusted funds and thereafter structured transactions to create the false appearance that he had maintained the funds in the form of cashier's checks from the time he misappropriated them until they were deposited into a second trust account, respondent's attempt to deceive the State Bar was more appropriately viewed as an uncharged violation of section 6106 rather than misconduct surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment and overreaching. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [10]

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

Where respondents chose to conceal the full and complete factual circumstances surrounding a disputed tribal election as well as the novelty of the legal theories and authorities upon which they were seeking to induce the Superior Court to dismiss a case and where the record is replete with additional pleadings and verbal statements which were rife with material omissions and express misstatements of fact and law not identified in the notice of disciplinary charges, such uncharged but proven misconduct is properly considered for purposes of aggravation. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [5]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

Although not charged, record established that respondent repeatedly aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to represent aliens in violation of federal law and to engage in the unauthorized practice of law by relying on or permitting nonattorney providers who referred clients to him to, inter alia, prepare and file immigration applications, pleadings, and other documents for his clients. Respondent's aiding and abetting nonattorneys' violation of federal law involved moral turpitude, while his aiding and abetting nonattorneys' unauthorized practice of law violated rule of professional conduct prohibiting such conduct and violation rose to a level involving moral turpitude. Since much of this misconduct was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of it as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [6 a-j]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

Although not charged, record established that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness and thereby engaged in acts of moral turpitude. Since much of respondent's recklessness and carelessness in his practice of law was established by respondent's testimony and evidence, he had no grounds to challenge review department's independent consideration of his recklessness and carelessness as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [11 a-d]

Absent an appropriate objection to the introduction of evidence of misconduct other than that charged in the notice of disciplinary charges, such evidence may, when appropriate, be used as an aggravating factor in disciplinary matters.In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [3 a-c]

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Respondent's agreement with former client to withdraw client's complaint with State Bar and not to testify against respondent in State Bar Court was aggravation as uncharged violations of professional rules proscribing suppression of evidence (rule 5-220) and prohibiting attorneys from causing persons to be unavailable as witnesses (rule 5-310(A)). In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23. [13 a-c]

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

Where respondent stated at oral argument that she did not object to judicial notice of her conviction for the unlicensed practice of law and admitted that she had improperly practiced law, the review department augmented the record on review to note the record of her conviction and considered the unlicensed practice as an aggravating circumstance. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (d)(1).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [4]

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

Respondent's simultaneous representation of a client and of respondent's father during the time that respondent arranged real property transactions between the client and the father was an aggravating circumstance in that the dual representation was rife with potential and actual conflicts of interest that could have been, if charged, the basis for additional culpability for violating the rule regarding representation of conflicting interests. The fact that respondent was not found culpable of any misconduct involving the real property transactions did not preclude treating respondent's conduct therein as an aggravating factor, because other related misconduct involving the same client was surrounded by and followed by the attorney's conduct in the real property transactions. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [11]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where respondent represented a client in the client's bankruptcy and at the same time represented the client's landlord, a company owned by respondent, in negotiating and drafting a new lease with the client, respondent was culpable, as charged, of representing conflicting interests. In addition, respondent's failure to comply with the requirements for business transactions with clients, including giving the client a reasonable opportunity to seek independent counsel, constituted an aggravating factor as uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [9]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

An attorney's admitted cocaine dependency is an appropriate factor to consider in determining the appropriate discipline for public protection. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [17]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

Uncharged misconduct relied upon to enhance discipline in one proceeding cannot later constitute grounds for additional discipline in an independent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [7]

Fact that respondent's failure to take responsibility for substituting out of two cases properly had not been the subject of respondent's prior disciplinary matter did not preclude Office of Trials from raising such incidents in subsequent proceeding against respondent for failure to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [6]

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

Although it was improper to find respondent culpable of misconduct on the basis of his freely given evidence that he concealed funds from the Franchise Tax Board, because such conduct fell outside the proper scope of the charges, such evidence could be used to form the basis of an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [13]

Where notice to show cause charged respondent with making misrepresentations to opposing counsel and at trial, and respondent testified at disciplinary hearing that similar misrepresentations were also made to court of appeal and to State Bar investigator, this later conduct was properly treated not as bearing on substantive culpability, but on the issue of discipline. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [1]

An uncharged violation of the rule requiring prompt notification to clients when client funds are received could be considered as an aggravating circumstance, where the respondent was put on notice of the nature of the uncharged misconduct in the notice to show cause and did not object to a finding of culpability under a different rule for the same conduct. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [10]

Attorney could not be found culpable of misconduct where not given adequate notice of charges, but this did not preclude consideration of such misconduct for other purposes, including aggravation. Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent ground of discipline, but may be considered for other relevant purposes. Right to notice of charges is not violated by use of uncharged misconduct in aggravation where evidence of such misconduct was necessarily elicited in cause of proving other charges; evidence was used in aggravation only; and facts were based on respondent's own testimony. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [19]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, greater discipline may be imposed for a violation of an attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts than might otherwise be appropriate if the attorney's misconduct was surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment, or overreaching, as well as for other violations of the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct or refusal or inability to account for improper conduct toward trust funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [21]

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

563 Found but discounted or not relied on

563.10 Procedural impropriety

Where a proceeding under rule 955 of the California Rules of Court was started by an order of referral rather than the issuance of formal charges, culpability could be based on all evidence introduced. Thus, where the evidence demonstrated that respondent failed to give timely notices of her suspension to her clients, opposing counsel, and courts in which her clients' cases were pending, she wilfully violated rule 955, subdivision (a), and the review department considered that violation as substantive and not just an aggravating circumstance as found by the hearing judge. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [5]

In default proceeding for violation of probation, review department deleted findings in aggravation based on probation violations not charged in notice to show cause. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [6]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent basis for discipline, but may be used in a contested proceeding for purposes such as impeaching the credibility of the respondent's testimony regarding rehabilitation, or establishing evidence of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [6]

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

Aggravating factors are not required to be separately charged. However, facts that could have formed the basis for an additional charge omitted from the notice to show cause cannot be relied on in aggravation in a default matter, because respondent is not fairly put on notice that such facts will be relied on. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [12]

563.90 Other reason

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

Where respondent's entire course of conduct in handling his duties as the trustee of a testamentary trust amounted to a reckless failure to perform services competently, but the review department considered much of the same misconduct in reaching its conclusion that respondent committed moral turpitude through gross negligence in handling his duties as trustee, the failure to perform competently was given minimal weight as an aggravating circumstance in determining the appropriate discipline to recommend. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [6]

Where respondent committed uncharged violations of trust fund rules, but conclusions as to respondent's culpability directly addressed respondent's mishandling of trust funds, uncharged violations did not count as separate aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [11]

Respondent violated former rule of professional conduct prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests when he accepted more signatories to a settlement than were required, because interests of required signatories conflicted with interests of extra signatories, whose participation in settlement reduced amounts received by required signatories and by previous extra signatories. Where such violation of conflict of interest rule was not charged, it could not be basis of culpability, but could be relied on in aggravation. However, because of novelty of situation, which involved extremely unusual settlement, uncharged violation was given minimal aggravating weight. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [12]

565 Declined to find

Where respondent made misleading statements in connection with efforts to set aside default in disciplinary proceeding, hearing judge's finding in aggravation that respondent acted with dishonesty was not improper finding of uncharged misconduct, but proper finding that dishonesty surrounded respondent's underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [11]

Review Department declined to find uncharged misconduct where State Bar had ample opportunity but did not move to amend the notices of disciplinary charges to include new charges; therefore, respondent did not have sufficient notice or opportunity to defend against them. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [7]

Where State Bar had notice of respondent's additional alleged acts of misconduct and failed to charge them in initial pleading and to amend charges to conform to proof at trial, respondent was denied fair opportunity to defend against additional charges, and Review Department declined State Bar's late request on review to consider them in aggravation. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221. [12]

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Even though respondent's uncharged acts of misconduct (1) in permitting name of his law offices to be printed on a paralegal's business card that also had insignia of a nonattorney immigration services provider partnership printed on it and (2) in later posting name of his law offices and name of a nonattorney immigration services provider on the front door of small office space respondent shared with that nonattorney appear to have violated statute that prohibits attorneys from lending their names and titles for use by nonattorneys and might have violated Rule of Professional Conduct prohibiting attorney communications, including business cards, from containing any matter or presenting or arranging any matter in a manner or format that is false or deceptive or tends to confuse or mislead, review department did not consider these acts as uncharged misconduct aggravation warranting increased discipline because acts supported review department's conclusion that respondent aided and abetted nonattorney immigration services providers to engage in the unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [17 a-b]

Absent a motion by the State Bar to amend the notice of disciplinary charges in a way that would have given respondent a sufficient opportunity to defend, the hearing judge should have sustained respondent's objection to evidence of uncharged misconduct on the ground that it was beyond the scope of the charge set forth in the notice of disciplinary charges. In view of respondent's timely and specific objection, the review department declined to adopt the finding of uncharged misconduct as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [16]

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

Hearing judge erred in concluding that respondent's agreement with former client to withdraw client's complaint with State Bar and not to testify against respondent in State Bar Court was aggravation as uncharged violation of statute making an agreement to withdraw complaint to State Bar disciplinable because that statute was not in effect at time respondent made agreement with former client. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [12 a-b]

Although respondent never entered into a written contingent fee agreement with his client as required by Business and Professions Code section 6147, the failure to enter into a written contingent fee agreement is not a disciplinable offense. Thus, the review department did not adopt the hearing judge's aggravation determination with respect to this issue. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [7]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

Respondent's alleged misconduct in federal civil appeal was not entitled to any weight in aggravation where State Bar did not introduce any evidence regarding respondent's conduct other than appellate court opinion establishing respondent's failure to comply with federal rule of appellate procedure regarding form of briefs, and where record did not provide basis to determine whether respondent's noncompliance with such rule was isolated act of negligence or disciplinable offense, or to assess respondent's conduct independently under clear and convincing standard of proof. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [12]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct can be considered in aggravation or for purposes such as impeaching witness credibility. However, where hearing judge's findings on uncharged misconduct were too tentative to warrant consideration for enhanced discipline, review department did not adopt them as findings or conclusions, although it declined to strike them from the decision. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

An attorney's unauthorized practice of law while on suspension is an appropriate matter to be considered in aggravation. Where, during the trial in a disciplinary matter, the respondent made a court appearance in a client's case while suspended for nonpayment of dues, the deputy trial counsel was not obligated to wait to file another disciplinary action to address the issue. Where respondent's counsel agreed that the deputy trial counsel could introduce evidence regarding respondent's court appearance during a later phase of the hearing, respondent received proper notice of the charge in aggravation. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [15]

In determining whether evidence of additional uncharged ethical misconduct should be admitted as aggravating evidence in the discipline phase of the hearing, the hearing judge must balance the desire for additional relevant evidence against the due process requirement of fair notice of all discipline charges. Where there was sufficient evidence in the record to warrant a recommendation of disbarment, it was unnecessary for the review department to resolve a claim that the hearing judge erred in failing to admit aggravating evidence of uncharged misconduct. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [18]

A respondent may be disciplined only for misconduct properly charged in the notice to show cause. In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause charged that respondent failed to deliver financial records to an accountant, and hearing judge found that respondent failed to render an accounting, respondent was properly found culpable of failing to deliver the records, based on his admission by default of the allegations of the notice to show cause. Respondent's failure to file quarterly reports other than those listed in the notice to show cause could not be used as a basis for culpability or as aggravating circumstances in a default matter. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [1]

Where hearing judge determined that proffered evidence of additional uncharged misconduct was of marginal relevance; that it could be fully examined and made the basis of separate discipline, if appropriate, in a separate proceeding, and that its admission would involve a delay to permit respondent time to address the issues it raised, the exclusion of the evidence was not an abuse of discretion. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [11]

A respondent's criminal conduct might well be relevant as an aggravating factor in a different case, but where respondent's criminal conviction had been found not to constitute a basis for discipline and State Bar had not challenged that conclusion, it was not appropriate to consider such conviction as a factor in aggravation of other misconduct. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [14]

Where no evidence was introduced establishing that respondent knew his out-of-state driver's license was not valid at the time he presented it to police, and where respondent's explanation of his failure to disclose all of his driving under the influence convictions on his application for such license was unrebutted and not inherently incredible, examiner failed to establish by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's use or obtaining of the license were aggravating factors. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [4]

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

Uncharged facts cannot be relied upon for evidence of aggravation in a default matter because the respondent is not fairly apprised of the fact that additional uncharged facts will be used against him. The use of uncharged aggravating factors in contested proceedings presents a different question. In the Matter of Hazelkorn (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [8]

Neither a respondent's section 6007(c) inactive enrollment itself nor the unproven charges underlying it should be relied upon as aggravation in a subsequent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [24]

570 Refusal/inability to account for funds (1.5(i); interim Standard 1.5(e); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(iii))

571 Found

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Where respondent took up to two years to pay outstanding medical liens after he discovered them, such delay was the most significant factor in justifying a sanction of one year's actual suspension. Respondent's preoccupation with remedying other unspecified problems in his caseload did not justify his delay in remedying these negligent misappropriations. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [7]

Where respondent's gross negligence resulted in several incidents of misappropriation over a number of years, and where the record established both compelling mitigating factors and substantial aggravating factors, including prolonged delay in making restitution, discipline including one year's actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [11]

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

Failure to make restitution is an aggravating factor; thus, incomplete restitution to clients' medical providers constitutes an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [14]

573 Found but discounted or not relied on

575 Declined to find

575.10 Belated restitution efforts

Timing of restitution is a factor which may affect the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [2]

575.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, greater discipline may be imposed for a violation of an attorney's duty to render appropriate accounts than might otherwise be appropriate if the attorney's misconduct was surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, concealment, or overreaching, as well as for other violations of the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct or refusal or inability to account for improper conduct toward trust funds. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [21]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

580 Harm (1.5(j); interim Standard 1.5(f); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(iv))

582 To client

582.10 Found

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Respondent took advantage of several clients' financial desperation and exploited his fiduciary position by repeatedly charging up-front fees for loan modification services that the new laws prohibited. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [10]

Client was significantly harmed where, as a result of respondent's actions, she had to hire new counsel, incurred a significant amount of attorney's fees, and unsuccessfully attempted to reclaim her condominium for three years. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [5]

Respondent's failure to interplead the full amount of sales proceeds he misappropriated from client causing client to incur considerable legal expenses and impeding client's ability to negotiate a settlement constituted significant client harm. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [11]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

Respondent's misconduct harmed his clients. Respondent breached his clients' trust by misappropriating their identities for his own personal gain and by allowing his clients to be misled into signing phony checks or permitting their signatures to be forged. Such actions were a clear betrayal of his clients' best interests in favor of respondent's own selfish desires and exposed his clients to possible tax audits and their unwitting involvement in his conspiracy to defraud the Internal Revenue Service.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [3]

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

Even though short delays, even if resulting in client harm, standing alone are ordinarily not sufficient to warrant conclusion that a client suffered significant harmed within the context of standard providing that significant client harm is an aggravating circumstance, present case did not involve a short delay, but an inexcusable delay of more than five years during which respondent did not perform any substantive work on a client's workers' compensation case. Even though the delay did not cause the client to lose her cause of action, it had a substantial impact on her. After holding that a reasonable economic measure of harm to the client was the client's lost use of the value of her settlement proceeds for five years, the review department expressly declined to define the extent of the client's economic harm. Nonetheless, it held that the client's economic harm met the requirement of significant harm in standard providing that significant client harm is aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [12]

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

Respondent's failure to disclose potential applicability to client's case of statute limiting amount of attorney's fees caused significant harm to client and administration of justice. Failure to comply with statute requiring written fee agreement and disclosures also harmed client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [18]

Respondent's duty to medical negligence client was not confined solely to obtaining successful recovery on client's claim. Respondent also had duty of utmost good faith and fidelity to client, which required him to advise client candidly of application of statutory limit on fee he could charge client. Where respondent overreached client by concealing such statute through recklessness or gross neglect, and collected excessive fee thereby, such conduct was patent breach of respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing to client, and was very serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [21]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Attorney's failure to repay loan from client did not constitute theft, but did aggravate harm already suffered by client. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [12]

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

Where failure to file complaint for client within statute of limitations was not mentioned in notice to show cause, such failure could not form basis for culpability, but where such failure, although not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be intentional or reckless, constituted part of series of repeated failures to perform competently which significantly harmed client, such failure constituted aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [21]

Fact that respondent's clients received funds which should have gone to pay clients' medical bills did not negate aggravating factor of harm to clients, where several clients were sued by medical creditors whom respondent should have paid. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [30]

Where sole evidence of respondent's indifference toward rectification of or atonement for misconduct was failure to refund unearned advanced fee, and such misconduct also formed basis for finding in aggravation of har to client, finding of indifference to rectification or atonement was rejected as duplicative. In the Matter of AHunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63 [10]

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

Where respondent with no prior record of discipline failed to communicate reasonably with two clients and failed to relinquish their files promptly, causing harm to clients, six-month stayed suspension, with no actual suspension, was well within appropriate range of discipline as indicated by comparable cases. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

An attorney owes the same fiduciary obligations to all clients, paying or nonpaying. Impecunious clients are ill-served by well-meaning attorneys who fail to deliver the services for which they were engaged. Nor are the courts or public served by Wtion brought without likelihood it can be realistically be prosecuted to completion. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim that his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. iN In In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim the his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. Respondent's conduct in connection with such transfer constituted evidence in aggravation, because respondent irresponsibly executed in blank hundreds of substitution association or substitution of counsel forms and relinquished of the client files to successor counsel without obtaining the clients' consent, safeguarding their interests, or even keeping a list of the clients or case names transferred. This conduct posed a significant potential harm to the clients and to the public interest generally. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [7]

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud based on fraudulently billing an insurance company for services rendered on behalf of its insureds, the insureds, as the attorney's clients, were victimized by the crime, and the crime therefore involved a client as a victim within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). The attorney's subsequent restitution to the insurance company, ordered as part of the attorney's criminal sentence, did not negate the harm caused by the crime. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [6]

Where respondent's disciplinable failure to communicate with his client may have prevented him from earlier discovering the non-disciplinable calendaring mistake that caused his client to lose his cause of action, the harm to the client was properly recognized as a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [8]

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

A lengthy suspension with a standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing was not adequate discipline, where respondent committed extensive misdeeds which became commonplace in respondent's practice, caused harm to a number of clients, and failed to rectify the harm. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

Even where respondent's client could not reasonably have expected to receive a substantial award of damages had the client's case settled or gone to trial, where respondent's conduct deprived the client of the ability to receive any damages at all, this harm was significant and was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [25]

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

There is no reason to require suspended attorneys to comply with the rules requiring competent representation and prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal even while they are precluded from practicing because suspended. A full range of discipline is available to protect the public, courts and profession for unauthorized practice alone. Recklessness or incompetence in the unauthorized practice of law, or a precipitous withdrawal, would cause harm to the client and would constitute an aggravating factor which justifies greater discipline than would have been appropriate if no harm had occurred. In order to minimize harm to clients, suspended attorneys should take all steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice, short of practicing law. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [8]

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

Attorney who represented the administrator of a decedent's estate owed a duty of care both to the client and to the estate's beneficiary; harm caused to these parties by the attorney's misconduct was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [18]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

Where attorney caused client corporation to enter into mutually inconsistent licenses without its knowledge, harm to client in being forced to hire counsel and pay money to resolve its conflicting obligations to licensees outweighed any profit client may have obtained from royalties paid by licensees. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [11]

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

582.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

582.31 Weak case and/or small damages

582.32 Harm otherwise slight

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

582.33 Problem resolved by other means

582.39 Other reason

Although attorney stipulated to causing significant client harm, minimal weight assigned to harm as aggravating factor where foreclosure of client's home and misrepresentations made by company representatives occurred before respondent accepted client's case. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [2]

While respondent's misconduct that arose in selling residential real property to a client was aggravated by foreseeable harm caused to the client, arising from the client's demonstrated inability to manage her funds or understand that she alone was responsible for making the payments to preserve the property, the client's failure to make any payments after four months or make any effort to either save or sell the property was not foreseeable, and the client must bear the primary responsibility for the resulting loss of the property.In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387 [7]

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

Harm to public and to administration of justice, and risk of harm to client, is inherent in unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [11]

582.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

The State Bar's argument that respondent significantly harmed his client each time he failed to make timely restitution payments and caused harm to the administration of justice each time he violated his probation was rejected. Although respondent's failures to timely make restitution were numerous, they should not be considered as separate and independent bases of aggravation since, to a great extent, the harm was inherent in the probation violations and therefore would be duplicative. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.[2]

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

Where respondent's client refused to cooperate in responding to interrogatories and would not have prevailed on merits of case, respondent's repeated failure to perform competently in handling client's case did not cause client significant harm. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [12]

Review department declined to find in aggravation that respondent's misconduct resulted in prolonging client's pretrial custody unnecessarily, where there was no evidence of disposition of client's criminal case and client could have been given credit for pretrial custody if convicted. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [9]

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

Attorneys who engage in an extended practice of inattention to official actions should not be allowed to create the risk that it will extend to clients resulting in inevitable and grievous harm to them. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [10]

While respondent's motive in appealing superior court's reduction of his fees as attorney and executor of estate might have been suspect, where there was no clear and convincing evidence that such appeal was in bad faith or was otherwise improper, review department declined to consider respondent's appeal as an aggravating factor in light of the important policies favoring unfettered access to the courts. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [15]

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

Findings in aggravation of harm to client and indifference to rectification of misconduct, based on delay in restitution of funds, could not be supported where there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent had originally acted improperly in applying such funds to respondent's fees based on good faith belief that client had authorized such payment. Client's small claims court judgment against respondent did not operate as res judicata on issue of obligation to make restitution. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [21]

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

Where, as soon as respondent's client discovered a billing error and brought it to respondent's attention, respondent recognized the error and offered to take care of it, and where respondent offered the client credit for the erroneous billing as part of a fee arbitration, the review depart rejected the hearing judge's finding that the client was significantly harmed by respondent's negligence with respect to the error. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [21]

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

Where attorney delayed in pursuing client's appeal, but client ultimately dropped appeal after discharging attorney, there was no basis for determining that client was harmed by attorney's conduct, and in any event, a delay of a few months in prosecuting an appeal does not, standing alone, warrant a finding of significant harm to the client. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [5]

584 To public

Respondent caused significant harm to the public and to the administration of justice where his relentless litigation campaigns inflicted serious financial and emotional harm on the opposing parties, causing them to spend considerable time and money defending against baseless claims, and clogging the court system for manifestly improper purposes. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [7]

584.10 Found

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[6]

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

Where respondent engaged in serious improper communications with a represented party, exposing the party to serious risks of harm, some of which occurred, and committed other stipulated wrongdoing, recommended discipline of four years probation conditioned on thirty days actual suspension was inconsistent with decisional law and insufficient. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [10]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim that his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. Respondent's conduct in connection with such transfer constituted evidence in aggravation, because respondent irresponsibly executed in blank hundreds of substitution association or substitution of counsel forms and relinquished of the client files to successor counsel without obtaining the clients' consent, safeguarding their interests, or even keeping a list of the clients or case names transferred. This conduct posed a significant potential harm to the clients and to the public interest generally. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [7]

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

584.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

584.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

586 To administration of justice

Respondent caused significant harm to the public and to the administration of justice where his relentless litigation campaigns inflicted serious financial and emotional harm on the opposing parties, causing them to spend considerable time and money defending against baseless claims, and clogging the court system for manifestly improper purposes. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [7]

Attorney's repeated failure to disclose exculpatory evidence harmed the administration of justice by depriving criminal defendants valuable evidence to which they were entitled, causing court delays, creating unnecessary litigation, compromising serious criminal cases and negatively impacting the reputation of the District Attorney's Office and the public's trust in the criminal justice system. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [10]

586.10 Found

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

Even though respondent was not acting as an attorney in the case but as a citizen, his change of vote for the defense to break a jury deadlock so he could return his attention to his law practice caused significant harm to the administration of justice. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [5]

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

Where respondent's absence from court hearings resulted in substantial disruption of juvenile court proceedings and where respondent's actions impacted the underpinnings of the indigent dependency hearings, respondent's harm to the administration of justice was assigned significant weight in aggravation. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [12]

Where respondent's conduct undermined a witness's relationship with his attorneys and compromised the witness's Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights, such conduct significantly harmed the administration of justice and is properly considered as a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [10]

Where respondents' conduct required an opposing party to perform substantial additional work and incur additional expense and resulted in a court order for additional monetary sanctions against respondents because of the burden respondents imposed on the court, such actions threatened the efficient administration of justice and improperly burdened the court system constituting an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [8]

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent's many ethical violations featured harm to victims and the honest administration of justice. Offenses concerning the administration of justice have been considered as very serious by the Supreme Court. Disbarment is not reserved just for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor is respondent's complete lack of insight, recognition, or remorse for any of his wrongdoing. This factor makes disbarment appropriate despite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [5]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

586.11 Inherent in nature of misconduct

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[6]

Appropriate level of discipline for respondent's misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of two clients (Ins. Code, § 750, subd. (a)), where circumstances surrounding conviction involved moral turpitude, was two-year stayed suspension with two-year period of probation and six-month period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61.[6 a-g]

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

Respondent's failure to disclose potential applicability to client's case of statute limiting amount of attorney's fees caused significant harm to client and administration of justice. Failure to comply with statute requiring written fee agreement and disclosures also harmed client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [18]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

Where, in representing four criminal clients, respondent violated six court orders, was held in contempt four times, failed to appear at scheduled court hearings nine times, and had warrants issued against him three times, and where respondent had breached two separate disciplinary orders and defaulted in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent's misconduct reflected disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and inability to conform to the most basic duties of an attorney. These facts, coupled with lack of mitigation, demonstrated that risk of future misconduct was great and indicated that respondent was not a good candidate for probation and/or suspension. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [14]

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Because a suspended attorney is unqualified to sit as a judicial arbitrator, any decisions the attorney renders as an arbitrator could be open to attack as void. Thus, respondent's misconduct in failing to disclose his suspended status when applying for an arbitrator position was of most serious concern because of its potential for harm to public confidence in the court system. Respondent's very service as an unqualified arbitrator harmed the administration of justice. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [5]

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

586.12 Specific interference with justice

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent's many ethical violations featured harm to victims and the honest administration of justice. Offenses concerning the administration of justice have been considered as very serious by the Supreme Court. Disbarment is not reserved just for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor is respondent's complete lack of insight, recognition, or remorse for any of his wrongdoing. This factor makes disbarment appropriate despite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[5]

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

586.19 Other basis

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

An attorney owes the same fiduciary obligations to all clients, paying or nonpaying. Impecunious clients are ill-served by well-meaning attorneys who fail to deliver the services for which they were engaged. Nor are the courts or public served by litigation brought without likelihood it can be realistically be prosecuted to completion. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

586.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

586.31 Duplicative of other charges

Where State Bar Court, in finding that respondent's misdemeanor crimes involved moral turpitude, had already considered respondent's bad faith in making false statements to arresting officers and making improper use of his position as a prosecutor, as well as his harm to the administration of justice in violating the law and his criminal probation, it would be improper to consider those facts in aggravation. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [4]

Where harm to administration of justice was inherent in respondent's probation violation, it would be duplicative to find such harm as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [5]

Harm to public and to administration of justice, and risk of harm to client, is inherent in unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [11]

586.39 Other reason

586.50 Declined to find

Attorney judicial candidate's misrepresentation about opponent was not shown to have caused harm where attorney lost election by significant margin and extensive media coverage exposed the statement as false prior to the election. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [4]

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

Where State Bar did not argue at trial that respondent's inaccurate reporting of her MCLE compliance harmed administration of justice because State Bar expended resources to conduct investigation, it waived argument regarding this potential aggravating factor, and Review Department declined to consider it. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [3 a,b]

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283

The State Bar's argument that respondent significantly harmed his client each time he failed to make timely restitution payments and caused harm to the administration of justice each time he violated his probation was rejected. Although respondent's failures to timely make restitution were numerous, they should not be considered as separate and independent bases of aggravation since, to a great extent, the harm was inherent in the probation violations and therefore would be duplicative. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678. [2]

Where, in a particular case involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court, and of disciplinary probation reporting requirements, there was no evidence to support a finding of significant harm to the administration of justice, separate and apart from evidence that supported culpability for charged violations, no finding in aggravation based on such harm was appropriate. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

Facts that respondent's misconduct required unnecessary sanction motions and hearings in one matter, and that respondent filed a cross-complaint against an unpaid medical lienholder in another matter, did not by themselves clearly and convincingly establish significant harm to the administration of justice. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [13]

588 To all of the above (or unspecified, or other)

588.10 Found

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

Where respondent collected illegal and unconscionable fees and interfered with the investigations by the California State Bar and the State of South Carolina by giving false and misleading information, such conduct significantly harmed the public, administration of justice and her clients and is properly considered as a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [10]

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

Attorney who represented the administrator of a decedent's estate owed a duty of care both to the client and to the estate's beneficiary; harm caused to these parties by the attorney's misconduct was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [18]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

588.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

588.31 Minimal extent of harm

588.32 Duplicative of other charges

Harm to public and to administration of justice, and risk of harm to client, is inherent in unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [11]

588.39 Other reason

588.50 Declined to find

Where victim of respondent's crime of misdemeanor child endangerment suffered only potential harm from being left alone in hotel room, and child's vulnerability had already been considered in finding that respondent's crime warranted discipline, Review Department declined to consider harm as aggravating factor. In addition, fact that hotel staff, police, and child services personnel had to participate in criminal investigation did not, by itself, clearly and convincingly prove significant harm to the public or the administration of justice. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [7]

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

590 Indifference to rectification/atonement (1.5(k); interim Standard 1.5(g); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(v))

Where respondent refused at trial to take responsibility for mismanagement of his client trust account; did not recognize that retainer agreement giving him complete control over clients' cases constituted overreaching; and failed to respond when State Bar argued for disbarment in Review Department, respondent's misconduct was aggravated by his indifference to his wrongdoing. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [7]

Where respondent refused at trial to take responsibility for mismanagement of his client trust account; did not recognize that retainer agreement giving him complete control over clients' cases constituted overreaching; and failed to respond when State Bar argued for disbarment in Review Department, respondent's misconduct was aggravated by his indifference to his wrongdoing. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

591 Found

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

Where respondent unsuccessfully sought restraining order seeking to halt disciplinary proceedings three days before trial, this was additional evidence of aggravating factor that respondent failed to accept responsibility for his actions. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [8]

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

Although respondent acknowledged his misconduct and expressed regret for his misappropriation at oral argument before review department, the record provided clear and convincing evidence of lack of insight and remorse. Throughout proceedings before the hearing judge respondent denied culpability for wrongdoing and argued the reasonableness of his conduct; in face of those actions, occasional utterances at trial that he feels remorse were not persuasive. Lack of insight was assigned the most significant weight in aggravation because it showed respondent was an ongoing danger to the public. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [3]

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

Respondent failed to acknowledge that he may not charge any fees in loan modification cases until all services have been completed, as clearly provided in new statute and ethics alert. A respondent may freely urge any creative legal theory in good faith, but must accept responsibility for acts and come to grips with culpability. Where respondent argued against new law prohibiting the collection of up-front fees in loan modification cases, his lack of insight was assigned significant aggravating weight because it suggested his misconduct may reoccur. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [11]

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

Substantial weight in aggravation assigned to respondent's lack of insight into his wrongdoing where he failed to realize his actions while representing both parties to a real property transfer compromised his fiduciary duties, and he believed he was not culpable because one of the clients was awarded only nominal damages in a civil suit against him. Respondent thus misperceived the purpose of disciplinary proceedings, which is protection of the public and the profession, and on which the extent of civil damages awarded have little or no relevance. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [6]

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80

Despite executing a stipulation establishing her misconduct as charged, respondent continued to deny any culpability and sought to shift responsibility for the procedural gridlock occasioned by her actions. An attorney's failure to accept responsibility for her actions when it is not based on an honest belief of innocence may be considered an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966.

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

Since as of the date of the hearing respondent had not yet refunded the fees and costs she wrongfully collected, such conduct demonstrated indifference towards the consequences of her misconduct. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [11]

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Respondents went beyond tenacity to truculence when they continued to claim in the face of overwhelming facts and legal authority that their conduct was justified which demonstrates an indifference toward rectification of or atonement for the consequences of their misconduct. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [10]

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Where respondent violated conditions attached to reproval by failing to file two quarterly probation reports and provide proof of completion of six hours of continuing legal education, respondent's failure to rectify those violations by belatedly filing the reports and providing the proof of completion once he learned a reproval violation proceeding was pending against him was an aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [2]

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

An attorneys failure to repay borrowed money, even if the attorney had funds to pay at least part of the money, without more, does not amount to moral turpitude. However, the failure to pay at least part of the money owed under these circumstances is a factor in aggravation as a demonstrated indifference toward rectification and atonement for respondent's misconduct. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [4]

Where respondent misappropriated client trust funds and failed to report court-ordered sanctions, aggravation on account of multiple acts of misconduct was not present, but respondent's misconduct was aggravated by failure to pay sanctions; by failure to make restitution; and, most grievously, by his abuse of his vulnerable client's trust and his misrepresentation of his actions to client and opposing counsel. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [7]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

Respondent's sporadic participation in disciplinary proceedings, despite warning from hearing judge regarding consequences of continuing to be derelict in duty to State Bar, demonstrated both respondent's indifference to his professional obligations and a substantial risk to the public. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [17]

Disbarment is generally ordered for wilful breach of rule 955, and is particularly appropriate when a respondent repeatedly demonstrates indifference to successive disciplinary orders of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [8]

An attorney's failure to accept responsibility for, or to understand the wrongfulness of, his or her actions may be an aggravating factor unless it is based on an honest belief in innocence. Where respondent's assertions in defense of failure to perform services did not reflect an honest belief in innocence, but rather reinforced the conclusion that respondent simply did not understand or appreciate the requirement to devote diligence necessary to discharge duties arising from employment, respondent's assertions exhibited a disturbing lack of insight into misconduct which in turn caused concern that he would repeat his misdeeds. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [16]

Where respondent's misconduct in both first and second disciplinary matters involved similar lack of diligence causing delay in closing a simple probate estate, discipline in second matter ordinarily would warrant only slightly greater discipline than in first matter. However, where respondent had failed to understand or appreciate misconduct, causing concern about handling future cases, and in light of absence of mitigating factors and presence of several aggravating factors, significantly greater discipline than in first matter was appropriate in second matter, and review department recommended two-year stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [17]

In rule 955 matter, where respondent did not present any evidence of remedial steps to assist clients in four cases in which he had failed to substitute out when suspended, and remained attorney of record in three of such cases in which litigation was still pending, respondent's inaction indicated indifference to the consequences of his misconduct and was an aggravating circumstance, as was his continued failure to file an affidavit conforming to the requirements of rule 955. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [13]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Respondent's belief that he had not violated probation in framing his probation reports was unreasonable, at least once respondent was advised by probation department that his interpretation of probation conditions was incorrect. Hearing judge was therefore correct in treating respondent's failure to file corrected reports as a failure to rectify his misconduct and therefore an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [8]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

A lengthy suspension with a standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing was not adequate discipline, where respondent committed extensive misdeeds which became commonplace in respondent's practice, caused harm to a number of clients, and failed to rectify the harm. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

Where respondent took up to two years to pay outstanding medical liens after he discovered them, such delay was the most significant factor in justifying a sanction of one year's actual suspension. Respondent's preoccupation with remedying other unspecified problems in his caseload did not justify his delay in remedying these negligent misappropriations. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [7]

Where respondent's gross negligence resulted in several incidents of misappropriation over a number of years, and where the record established both compelling mitigating factors and substantial aggravating factors, including prolonged delay in making restitution, discipline including one year's actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [11]

Where respondent failed to make restitution efforts until after disciplinary actions had been instituted; asserted that it was the State Bar's duty to contact her clients when she abandoned her practice; and had committed misconduct involving acts of deceit and bad faith, respondent's conduct evidenced a lack of understanding of her duties and insight into her misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [39]

An attorney's obligation to make restitution is not limited to legally enforceable claims. An attorney may have a moral obligation to make restitution as part of the duties of an attorney, in order to confront the harm caused by the theft. Nonetheless, payment of restitution is neither mandatory nor determinative of rehabilitation. The attorney's attitude toward payment to the victim is considered as well as the ability to pay. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [9]

An attorney's moral duty to make restitution is not limited to clients, and extends to an employer to whom the attorney owed a fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [10]

Respondent's use of specious and unsupported arguments in an attempt to evade culpability in his disciplinary matter revealed respondent's lack of appreciation both for his misconduct and for his obligations as an attorney, and his persistent lack of insight into the deficiencies of his professional behavior, and constituted an independent aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [27]

Attorney's failure to make full restitution was an aggravating factor, where partial restitution was made largely out of attempt to deceive client; client's refusal to accept further restitution after State Bar complaint was filed did not extinguish attorney's moral obligation to complete restitution. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [7]

Where attorney displayed indifference and lack of remorse by failing to participate in past and present disciplinary proceedings, far more severe discipline was required than in other cases involving similar misconduct where attorneys did participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [28]

Failure to make restitution is an aggravating factor; thus, incomplete restitution to clients' medical providers constitutes an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [14]

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

593 Found but discounted or not relied on

595 Declined to find

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

Substantial weight in aggravation assigned to respondent's lack of insight into his wrongdoing where he failed to realize his actions while representing both parties to a real property transfer compromised his fiduciary duties, and he believed he was not culpable because one of the clients was awarded only nominal damages in a civil suit against him. Respondent thus misperceived the purpose of disciplinary proceedings, which is protection of the public and the profession, and on which the extent of civil damages awarded have little or no relevance. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [6]

595.10 Belated restitution efforts

Where respondent had already tendered restitution to a former client in an arbitration proceeding, and nevertheless, after a culpability determination by the hearing judge, placed funds in a trust account to cover the amount which the hearing judge considered to be still at issue, the review department rejected the hearing judge's finding in aggravation that respondent displayed indifference toward rectification. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [20]

Timing of restitution is a factor which may affect the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [2]

595.90 Other reason

Respondent's statements to bankruptcy court that she believed she was doing the right thing for her clients, and was using her abilities to help people who were scared, were not clear and convincing evidence that respondent was indifferent to, or failed to understand, her misconduct in filing multiple improper bankruptcy petitions. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [6]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

Where respondent's untimely compliance with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court formed a basis for her culpability for violating the rule, and delay in complying with the rule was also found to be an aggravating circumstance because it reflected respondent's indifference toward rectification of her misconduct, the latter finding was duplicative. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [6]

Where sole evidence of respondent's indifference toward rectification of or atonement for misconduct was failure to refund unearned advanced fee, and such misconduct also formed basis for finding in aggravation of harm to client, finding of indifference to rectification or atonement was rejected as duplicative. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [10]

Where respondent was legitimately entitled to fees for services to wife in marital dissolution, and honestly believed that couple had allocated trust funds to husband in marital settlement in order to prevent respondent from applying trust funds to wife's debt for fees, there was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent's failure to make restitution of funds to husband was an aggravating circumstance. Respondent's legal position in defense of his retention and use of husband's funds did not evidence a persistent unwillingness to conform his behavior to ethical standards, and did not undercut the force of his mitigating evidence of subsequent reputable practice and community service. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

Community service activities may bear on the showing of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, but discontinuance of such activity, without more, is not necessarily an adverse factor. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [1]

Respondent's long period of postmisconduct practice of law without further discipline was a significant mitigating circumstance, because it demonstrated that respondent was able to adhere to acceptable standards of professional behavior and was not likely to commit misconduct in the future. Respondent's good faith defense of his innocence, in which he honestly believed, did not constitute a lack of understanding of his misconduct so as to preclude such finding, especially where respondent offered evidence about his sensitivity to misconduct of which he had been found culpable at an earlier stage in the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [20]

Findings in aggravation of harm to client and indifference to rectification of misconduct, based on delay in restitution of funds, could not be supported where there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent had originally acted improperly in applying such funds to respondent's fees based on good faith belief that client had authorized such payment. Client's small claims court judgment against respondent did not operate as res judicata on issue of obligation to make restitution. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [21]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

Where evidence established that victim of attorney's misconduct had received in compensation from attorney an amount greater than the amount originally embezzled by attorney, attorney's belief that victim was not economically harmed, and failure to make additional restitution, did not demonstrate attorney's failure to appreciate wrongfulness of acts, or lack of remorse. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [15]

600 Lack of candor/cooperation with victim (1.5(l); interim Standard 1.5(h); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(vi))

Respondent's lack of candor; which consisted of respondent (1) falsely stating in letters to a State Bar investigator that he had made an "appearance" before a specified workers' compensation judge and that he had attended the trial/hearing in his client's case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board; (2) sending the State Bar investigator a copy of the stipulation under which respondent's client settled her workers' compensation case on her own and without respondent's help which copy respondent signed to indicate his approval when he claimed that he did not know whether he was still representing the client and when he had not signed or approved the original that was executed by the client and the opposing party and that filed with and approved by the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board without respondent's involvement; (3) falsely testifying in State Bar Court that he had a conversation with his client in which she told him that she had moved and gave him her new address; (4) falsely testifying in the State Bar Court that he had been in contact with his client with respect to letter from the opposing party and that the client instructed him to proceed with her claim; (5) knowingly making an entry into his client telephone log that inaccurately indicated that, during the logged telephone conversation, the client implied that she was "basically not interested in pursuing this matter" and introducing this telephone log into evidence in the State Bar Court with knowledge that the statement was not true; and (6) falsely testifying in the State Bar Court that he did not know the trial/hearing date in his client's case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board; was more egregious than the found misconduct; which consisted of respondent (1) violating rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence by not performing any substantive work on his client's workers' compensation case for more than five years and deliberately and unjustifiably not attending a status conference in the case; (2) violating statutory duty to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries by not responding to a status request letter from the client; (3) violating rule against prejudicial withdrawal from employment by not advising client of dates of upcoming events, not properly responding to client's request for her file, and not removing himself as client's attorney of record; and (4) violating statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude by lying to the opposing party about his activity on the case and they by later lying to the opposing party that his client no longer wanted to purse her workers' compensation case. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [5]

601 Found

In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

Respondent's duty to medical negligence client was not confined solely to obtaining successful recovery on client's claim. Respondent also had duty of utmost good faith and fidelity to client, which required him to advise client candidly of application of statutory limit on fee he could charge client. Where respondent overreached client by concealing such statute through recklessness or gross neglect, and collected excessive fee thereby, such conduct was patent breach of respondent's duty of good faith and fair dealing to client, and was very serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [21]

Where respondent failed to make restitution efforts until after disciplinary actions had been instituted; asserted that it was the State Bar's duty to contact her clients when she abandoned her practice; and had committed misconduct involving acts of deceit and bad faith, respondent's conduct evidenced a lack of understanding of her duties and insight into her misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [39]

Suspension rather than disbarment might be appropriate for isolated misappropriation that is unlikely to be repeated, but was not appropriate where misappropriation was accompanied by lengthy practice of deceit on client's agent and lack of forthrightness during State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [11]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

Attorney's repeated, protracted deceit of clients, which had effect of forestalling them from discovering true status of their matters, was perhaps even more serious than harm caused by attorney's inattention to client duties. An attorney's practice of deceit is inimical to the high ethical standards of honesty and integrity required of members of the legal profession and to the promotion of confidence in the trustworthiness of members of the profession. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [4]

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

603 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

605 Declined to find

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

Even if respondent's demand that client return settlement check demonstrated lack of candor or cooperation with client, review department would not consider it as separate aggravating circumstance where it had already been found to be a factor establishing bad faith, a different aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [15]

Under applicable provisions of Commercial Code, handwritten notation on attorney's check stating that it was issued "subject to verbal confirmation" destroys its negotiability and prevented attorney from being criminally liable for issuance of check drawn on insufficient funds. Dishonor of such check due to insufficient funds was not an aggravating factor, because check was issued in non-negotiable form and there was no clear evidence that payee was misled regarding nature of check. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [1]

Where referee made no finding that respondent misled clients' doctor about status of clients' case, and evidence in record was unclear, review department declined to find such misrepresentation as an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [9]

Where evidence showed that attorney was candid about mishandling of trust funds, but failed to keep promises to repay the money, this did not constitute clear and convincing evidence that the attorney made misrepresentations, because failure to keep a promise of future action, without more, is not proof of fraudulent intent. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

610 Lack of candor/cooperation with Bar (1.5(l); interim Standard 1.5(h); 1986 Standard (1.2(b)(vi))

Misrepresentations in an attorney's verified answers to interrogatories propounded to him by the State Bar, is a serious aggravation warranting increased discipline and might well constitute a greater offense than underlying misconduct. It is no defense that attorney's answers were prepared for him by his counsel. While it might be improper to penalize a lay client for not correcting mistakes that his counsel made in a pleading that the client verified, such reasoning carries little weight when the client is an attorney. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [26 a-c]

Respondent's lack of candor; which consisted of respondent (1) falsely stating in letters to a State Bar investigator that he had made an "appearance" before a specified workers' compensation judge and that he had attended the trial/hearing in his client's case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board; (2) sending the State Bar investigator a copy of the stipulation under which respondent's client settled her workers' compensation case on her own and without respondent's help which copy respondent signed to indicate his approval when he claimed that he did not know whether he was still representing the client and when he had not signed or approved the original that was executed by the client and the opposing party and that filed with and approved by the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board without respondent's involvement; (3) falsely testifying in State Bar Court that he had a conversation with his client in which she told him that she had moved and gave him her new address; (4) falsely testifying in the State Bar Court that he had been in contact with his client with respect to letter from the opposing party and that the client instructed him to proceed with her claim; (5) knowingly making an entry into his client telephone log that inaccurately indicated that, during the logged telephone conversation, the client implied that she was "basically not interested in pursuing this matter" and introducing this telephone log into evidence in the State Bar Court with knowledge that the statement was not true; and (6) falsely testifying in the State Bar Court that he did not know the trial/hearing date in his client's case before the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board; was more egregious than the found misconduct; which consisted of respondent (1) violating rule regarding attorneys' duty of competence by not performing any substantive work on his client's workers' compensation case for more than five years and deliberately and unjustifiably not attending a status conference in the case; (2) violating statutory duty to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries by not responding to a status request letter from the client; (3) violating rule against prejudicial withdrawal from employment by not advising client of dates of upcoming events, not properly responding to client's request for her file, and not removing himself as client's attorney of record; and (4) violating statute proscribing acts of moral turpitude by lying to the opposing party about his activity on the case and they by later lying to the opposing party that his client no longer wanted to purse her workers' compensation case. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [5]

611 Found

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

Where the record is at complete odds with respondents' testimony in the hearing department and respondents' testimony is evasive, inconsistent and replete with convenient memory lapses, respondents' lack of candor constitutes a strong aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [7 a–c]

In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

Respondent's calling and threatening State Bar witness shortly before trial can be for no purpose other than interference with disciplinary proceeding and tends to demonstrate knowledge of culpability on part of respondent. Because such evidence was not offered to show culpability in uncharged count, it was properly admitted and considered as serious aggravation; see Penal Code section 136.1, subdivision (a)(2) (crime to prevent of dissuade another from attending or testifying). In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23. [8 a-c]

Party invoking Fifth Amendment bears burden of showing that proffered evidence might tend to incriminate. Thus, while respondents may not be disciplined solely for invoking Fifth Amendment, the improper invocation of that amendment and resulting refusal to testify may be considered as aggravation if culpability has otherwise been found. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23. [9 a-e]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Respondent's failure to file pre-trial statement and appear at various State Bar Court hearings were serious aggravating circumstances because they showed respondent comprehended neither the seriousness of the charges nor his duty to participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [3]

Respondent's failure to appear at disciplinary trial in accordance with a notice to appear in lieu of subpoena served on him by State Bar was a particularly aggravating circumstance because it was the equivalent of disobeying a subpoena to appear at trial as the service of a notice to appear on a party has the same effect as the service of a subpoena. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [5]

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In light of respondent's recognized expertise regarding statutory contingent fee limits in medical negligence cases, his persistent claim that he was not obligated to discuss potential applicability of every law in every book in his library with medical negligence client and superior court judge was frivolous and betrayed disdain for his client and trial court. Similarly, respondent's claim that he was victim of uncertain law regarding fee limitation statute demonstrated lack of candor with State Bar Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [19]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

Respondent's use of obstructive tactics during his disciplinary proceeding, including abuse of discovery and frivolous motions, constituted a serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [13]

Respondent's failure to comply with proper pretrial procedures and to provide list of witnesses prior to day of trial was properly considered as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [7]

An attorney's lack of concern for the disciplinary process and failure to appreciate the seriousness of the charges is a factor in aggravation. Where respondent displayed a lack of appreciation of the necessity for timely, meaningful participation in the disciplinary process, as demonstrated by his repeated attempts to appear without timely seeking relief from default in both the hearing and review departments, despite repeated warnings by the court, respondent's dilatory conduct was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [11]

Primary aims of attorney disciplinary probation are protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney. Greatest amount of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for breaches of probation conditions significantly related to misconduct for which probation was given, especially when circumstances raise serious concern about public protection or show probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Where misconduct for which respondent was placed on probation included practicing law in violation of court order, and respondent's current misconduct also involved violating numerous court orders and was aggravated by failure to participate in disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent's probation violations involved two of very first steps required by probation conditions, these factors indicated that respondent had a persistent problem with conforming his conduct to requirements of law, raised serious concerns for need to protect public, and showed that respondent had failed to even begin to take steps to rehabilitate himself. Accordingly, imposition of entire period of stayed suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's violation of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [12]

Where, in representing four criminal clients, respondent violated six court orders, was held in contempt four times, failed to appear at scheduled court hearings nine times, and had warrants issued against him three times, and where respondent had breached two separate disciplinary orders and defaulted in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent's misconduct reflected disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and inability to conform to the most basic duties of an attorney. These facts, coupled with lack of mitigation, demonstrated that risk of future misconduct was great and indicated that respondent was not a good candidate for probation and/or suspension. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [14]

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

Additional misconduct which occurred after respondent's claimed rehabilitation, and respondent's subsequent failure to participate fully in disciplinary proceedings, were cogent evidence that respondent had not yet dealt effectively with the problems underlying his misconduct. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [15]

Respondent's sporadic participation in disciplinary proceedings, despite warning from hearing judge regarding consequences of continuing to be derelict in duty to State Bar, demonstrated both respondent's indifference to his professional obligations and a substantial risk to the public. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [17]

A short delay in compliance with rule 955, by itself, would not necessitate disbarment. However, where respondent also had failed to appear in the rule 955 violation proceeding, had failed to appear in two prior disciplinary proceedings, and had continued to ignore her obligations thereafter, showing a clear pattern of failure to participate in the disciplinary process and to comply with requirements of Supreme Court, disbarment was clearly appropriate. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [2]

An attorney's failure to comply with successive orders of the Supreme Court is of concern to the State Bar Court because it repeatedly burdens the resources of the State Bar Court and the disciplinary system. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [11]

Respondent's declaration presented in an attempt to comply with rule 955 bore little mitigating weight when it was submitted almost two months after respondent's rule 955 affidavit was due to be filed with the Supreme Court, contained inaccurate information and misrepresented a hearing date in one case. The inaccurate declaration raised serious doubts as to respondent's credibility and was an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [8]

Respondent's tardy and intermittent participation in disciplinary proceedings was an aggravating circumstance, where respondent gave no excuse for failure to appear on last day of hearing, was not represented by counsel, and displayed several failures to participate or tardiness in participating. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [9]

Where respondent answered one letter from State Bar, but ignored two others before answering a fourth, and was not diligent in responding the State Bar's inquiry, lack of full cooperation with State Bar was a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [24]

Despite respondent's cooperation in executing a detailed and broad pretrial stipulation, his efforts to show his innocence through testimony which was not credible, and his admitted misleading of a State Bar investigator, were aggravating factors. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [6]

Respondent's failure to maintain a current address with the State Bar's membership records office, which delayed and stymied the investigation of respondent's misconduct, constituted failure to cooperate with the State Bar. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [37]

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

Where attorney displayed indifference and lack of remorse by failing to participate in past and present disciplinary proceedings, far more severe discipline was required than in other cases involving similar misconduct where attorneys did participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [28]

An attorney is not a good candidate for suspension and/or probation where that attorney has failed to comply with the terms and conditions of a prior criminal probation, and has failed to participate in present and past disciplinary proceedings. These facts reflect the attorney's disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and clearly demonstrate that the risk of future misconduct is great. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [29]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

Respondent's deceit in his responses to the State Bar's interrogatories seriously aggravated his misconduct, and might perhaps constitute a greater offense. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [7]

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

613 Found but discounted or not relied on

613.10 Duplicative of section 6068(i) charge

Attorney's failure to participate in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding before entry of default was aggravating circumstances, but warranted little aggravating weight because it closely equaled conduct that constituted attorney's violation of statutory duty to cooperate with disciplinary investigations and that resulted in entry of attorney's default. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[1]

Respondent's failure to cooperate with the State Bar's investigation of his misconduct was a substantive violation of the statute requiring such cooperation, not just an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [9]

Respondent's having willfully misled a court during trial and failed to cooperate with the State Bar's investigation of his misconduct were not properly considered as aggravating factors because they were part of the basis for finding respondent culpable of substantive violations. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [10]

613.90 Other reason

