While respondent's improper assertion of various constitutional and statutory privileges showed a lack of cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary proceedings and constituted an aggravating factor, such factor was given little weight because (1) there was no evidence of resulting excessive delay in the disciplinary proceedings, (2) respondent willingly responded to most of the questions presented to him and only asserted the privileges as to matters which he believed involved the possibility of criminal prosecution, (3) the delay which did occur was not caused solely by respondent, (4) respondent's assertion of the privileges did not interfere with the State Bar's ability to prove its case, and (5) there was no clear and convincing evidence that respondent asserted the privileges in bad faith. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.[17]

Attorney's failure to participate in State Bar Court disciplinary proceeding before entry of default was aggravating circumstances, but warranted little aggravating weight because it closely equaled conduct that constituted attorney's violation of statutory duty to cooperate with disciplinary investigations and that resulted in entry of attorney's default. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[1]

Where respondent falsely described incident leading to respondent's battery conviction, such conduct did not so much involve lack of candor as it manifested respondent's obsession with his view of facts and lack of insight into seriousness of his actions, itself an important factor bearing on need for measurable discipline. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [1]

While respondent was less than fully candid with the State Bar Court in his lack of explanation of some of the circumstances surrounding his conviction, the hearing judge properly found that respondent's lapses of candor were not so egregious as to require a finding in aggravation. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [10]

Respondent's failure to cooperate in disciplinary proceeding was an aggravating factor, but respondent was not deemed entirely uncooperative since he did meet with investigator on one occasion and attended oral argument on review despite entry of default. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [14]

615 Declined to find

Where respondent failed to file motion to set aside default until after original trial date was set, adverse consequences of failure to file timely motion were sufficient sanction, and Review Department declined to find, in addition, that respondent's failure to cooperate with State Bar constituted aggravating factor. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348 [6]

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by making unfounded and inflammatory statements in various pleadings filed in this disciplinary matter. Respondent's statements were not proper subjects for aggravation where the State Bar made no showing by clear and convincing evidence that they were false. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [18]

The review department rejected a finding that respondent displayed a lack of cooperation during State Bar proceedings by filing six petitions for interlocutory review with the review department, at least one petition for review with the California Supreme Court, and over 30 motions in the hearing department. These documents were not proper subjects for aggravation where it was not shown by clear and convincing evidence that the documents were completely lacking in merit and were filed in bad faith. Respondent acted as cocounsel during the hearing department proceedings and was entitled to reasonable access to the courts to seek judicial remedies. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [19]

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

While it is true that the hearing judge found that some aspects of respondent's testimony lacked credibility, she did not find that respondent's testimony lacked candor or was dishonest. Absent such a finding, aggravation under standard 1.2(b)(vi) is inappropriate. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61. [5a-b]

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

An attorney's failure to appear at a disciplinary hearing of which he was not given notice is not an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [4]

Respondent's failure to appear at and participate in a State Bar Court status conference noticed and held five days before respondent's answer to the notice of disciplinary charges was due or filed was not considered an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [6]

Where hearing judge did not find respondent's testimony regarding respondent's interpretation of certain events to be credible, record did not, without more, establish that respondent's testimony was less than truthful for purposes of aggravation. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [9]

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

Lack of candor toward the State Bar during disciplinary investigation or proceedings, including presenting intentionally misleading testimony, fabricating evidence, or attempting to mislead the court through material omissions, is an aggravating circumstance. However, a respondent's honest, if mistaken belief in his or her innocence, and resulting in failure to acquiesce in the State Bar Court's findings, is not in and of itself aggravating. Lack of candor cannot be found based merely on a respondent's different memory of events from that of complaining former clients. Where respondent's testimony concerning his former office manager's conduct in hiding or destroying letters and messages was uncontroverted and not implausible, and was corroborated by an eyewitness, hearing judge's finding that such testimony lacked candor was not adopted by review department. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [9]

Where respondent was candid and displayed examplary conduct during disciplinary proceedings, respondent's vigorous defense of the charges, which was motivated only by his honest belief in his innocence, did not negate

the mitigating force of his candor and cooperation with the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [16]

It was not an aggravating circumstance that respondent did not personally attend the hearing on the degree of discipline, since respondent was represented by counsel who appeared on respondent's behalf. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [1]

Finding in aggravation of lack of candor with State Bar was not justified, where respondent's testimony was not implausible, and contrary testimony of complaining witness contained repeated self-contradictions. Respondent's failure to respond to client's small claims complaint did not establish that respondent was not candid, nor did respondent's lapses in memory. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [22]

Although not constituting a factor in aggravation, respondent's trial tactics in not revealing exhibits to examiner in advance undermined respondent's credibility with hearing judge, created risk that exhibits would be excluded, and unnecessarily prolonged hearing. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [25]

Respondent's persisting in his belief in his innocence of fundamental misconduct did not necessarily show that respondent was deceitful or had misled the hearing judge, and was not a basis for a finding in aggravation, nor did it prevent a finding in mitigation that respondent had showed recognition of ways he could handle client matters more professionally in the future. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [7]

Where respondent's client denied having had a certain conversation with respondent, and the hearing judge credited the client on that point, but the record as a whole showed that respondent lacked a motive to lie in testifying about the conversation, the evidence suggested that the client might have forgotten the conversation, and the client exaggerated in other testimony and was very bitter toward respondent, the review department, while not rejecting the credence given to the client's testimony by the hearing judge, did find that the client's testimony failed to constitute clear and convincing evidence of intentional misrepresentation by respondent. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [4]

Where the hearing judge accepted as true the testimony of two State Bar witnesses, but such testimony did not contradict respondent's own plausible version of events, the review department found that State Bar had failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that respondent had testified falsely. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [5]

Where the review department rejected the hearing judge's finding that respondent had lied, it also rejected the hearing judge's finding in aggravation that respondent had lacked candor in part of his testimony. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [18]

Respondent's failure to obey the hearing referee's order to take the witness stand at the disciplinary hearing was not considered an aggravating factor, where respondent was acting on the advice of counsel and the law was not clear at the time. Nor was the courtroom behavior of respondent's counsel attributable to respondent in assessing respondent's cooperation with the State Bar. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [38]

Court's rejection, based on documentary and other evidence, of respondent's testimony regarding his knowledge and state of mind six years earlier, did not result in finding that such testimony lacked candor or was offered in bad faith. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [12]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

Where respondent admitted many of the serious charges against him during State Bar investigation, review department declined to find failure to cooperate with State Bar as aggravating factor, despite respondent's failure to participate in proceedings against him. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59 [13]

616 Failure to make restitution (1.5(m); interim Standard 1.5(i))

616.10 Found

616.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

616.31 Partial or attempted restitution

616.33 Inability to make full restitution

616.39 Other reason

616.50 Declined to find

616.51 Partial or attempted restitution

616.53 Inability to make full restitution

Where respondent's clients could not be located despite State Bar's efforts to find them, Review Department declined to consider respondent's delay in paying restitution as aggravating factor. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. [6]

616.59 Other reason

Where respondent's clients could not be located despite State Bar's efforts to find them, Review Department declined to consider respondent's delay in paying restitution as aggravating factor. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. [6]

618 High level of vulnerability of victim (1.5(n))

618.10 Found

618.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

618.50 Declined to find

620 Lack of remorse/failure to appreciate seriousness

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[6]

621 Found

Respondent failed to acknowledge that he may not charge any fees in loan modification cases until all services have been completed, as clearly provided in new statute and ethics alert. A respondent may freely urge any creative legal theory in good faith, but must accept responsibility for acts and come to grips with culpability. Where respondent argued against new law prohibiting the collection of up-front fees in loan modification cases, his lack of insight was assigned significant aggravating weight because it suggested his misconduct may reoccur. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [11]

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent's many ethical violations featured harm to victims and the honest administration of justice. Offenses concerning the administration of justice have been considered as very serious by the Supreme Court. Disbarment is not reserved just for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor is respondent's complete lack of insight, recognition, or remorse for any of his wrongdoing. This factor makes disbarment appropriate despite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. [5]

Respondent failed to demonstrate an appreciation of his misconduct or insight into his wrongdoing. The review department considered this factor to be most related to its adoption of the hearing judge's recommendation of disbarment, noting that as late as oral argument on review, respondent showed no insight into having learned from his extended period of overreaching of his vulnerable client. The review department concluded that the public was therefore at great risk unless respondent was required to successfully complete a reinstatement proceeding before again being allowed to practice law in this state. In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824. [4]

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In light of respondent's recognized expertise regarding statutory contingent fee limits in medical negligence cases, his persistent claim that he was not obligated to discuss potential applicability of every law in every book in his library with medical negligence client and superior court judge was frivolous and betrayed disdain for his client and trial court. Similarly, respondent's claim that he was victim of uncertain law regarding fee limitation statute demonstrated lack of candor with State Bar Court. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [19]

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Where respondent did not appear from record to be venal or dishonest, but overall nature of respondent's misconduct revealed somewhat indifferent attitude toward ethical obligations, especially those to administration of justice and persons other than current clients, some actual suspension was warranted in order to protect public by augmenting respondent's understanding of his duties. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [34]

An attorney's lack of concern for the disciplinary process and failure to appreciate the seriousness of the charges is a factor in aggravation. Where respondent displayed a lack of appreciation of the necessity for timely, meaningful participation in the disciplinary process, as demonstrated by his repeated attempts to appear without timely seeking relief from default in both the hearing and review departments, despite repeated warnings by the court, respondent's dilatory conduct was an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [11]

Where respondent falsely described incident leading to respondent's battery conviction, such conduct did not so much involve lack of candor as it manifested respondent's obsession with his view of facts and lack of insight into seriousness of his actions, itself an important factor bearing on need for measurable discipline. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [1]

Respondent's sporadic participation in disciplinary proceedings, despite warning from hearing judge regarding consequences of continuing to be derelict in duty to State Bar, demonstrated both respondent's indifference to his professional obligations and a substantial risk to the public. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [17]

Where two separate disciplinary proceedings were consolidated on review, the first proceeding did not constitute prior discipline for the purpose of enhanced discipline in the consolidated matter. Nonetheless, where the misconduct involved in the second proceeding had continued during the period that the first proceeding was pending in hearing department, the fact that respondent engaged in additional misconduct while he was aware that his conduct was being scrutinized in a pending disciplinary proceeding was significant. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [18]

Disbarment is generally ordered for wilful breach of rule 955, and is particularly appropriate when a respondent repeatedly demonstrates indifference to successive disciplinary orders of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [8]

An attorney's failure to accept responsibility for, or to understand the wrongfulness of, his or her actions may be an aggravating factor unless it is based on an honest belief in innocence. Where respondent's assertions in defense of failure to perform services did not reflect an honest belief in innocence, but rather reinforced the conclusion that respondent simply did not understand or appreciate the requirement to devote diligence necessary to discharge duties arising from employment, respondent's assertions exhibited a disturbing lack of insight into misconduct which in turn caused concern that he would repeat his misdeeds. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [16]

Where respondent's misconduct in both first and second disciplinary matters involved similar lack of diligence causing delay in closing a simple probate estate, discipline in second matter ordinarily would warrant only slightly greater discipline than in first matter. However, where respondent had failed to understand or appreciate misconduct, causing concern about handling future cases, and in light of absence of mitigating factors and presence of several aggravating factors, significantly greater discipline than in first matter was appropriate in second matter, and review department recommended two-year stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [17]

Where an attorney's prior discipline involved culpability of moral turpitude for attempted receipt of stolen property, and the attorney's subsequent misconduct involved moral turpitude in misleading applications for employment, there was no pattern or common thread linking the former misconduct with the later case. However, the attorney's multiple breaches of ethical duties demonstrated that the attorney lacked a true understanding of professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [11]

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

Where respondent failed to make restitution efforts until after disciplinary actions had been instituted; asserted that it was the State Bar's duty to contact her clients when she abandoned her practice; and had committed misconduct involving acts of deceit and bad faith, respondent's conduct evidenced a lack of understanding of her duties and insight into her misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [39]

Disbarment was not appropriate in a misappropriation case where the misconduct resulted more from respondent's lack of understanding of an attorney's ethical duties rather than innate venality. However, because there was more serious misconduct and less mitigation than in other cases, and respondent had not recognized the seriousness of the misconduct, a three-year actual suspension, a showing of rehabilitation and fitness to practice before termination of the actual suspension, and strict probation conditions were required. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [13]

Respondent's use of specious and unsupported arguments in an attempt to evade culpability in his disciplinary matter revealed respondent's lack of appreciation both for his misconduct and for his obligations as an attorney, and his persistent lack of insight into the deficiencies of his professional behavior, and constituted an independent aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [27]

Where attorney displayed indifference and lack of remorse by failing to participate in past and present disciplinary proceedings, far more severe discipline was required than in other cases involving similar misconduct where attorneys did participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [28]

The law does not require false penitence; however, it does require that the respondent accept responsibility for his acts and come to grips with his culpability. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [6]

623 Found but discounted or not relied on

Appropriate level of discipline for respondent's misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of two clients (Ins. Code, § 750, subd. (a)), where circumstances surrounding conviction involved moral turpitude, was two-year stayed suspension with two-year period of probation and six-month period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [6 a-g]

625 Declined to find

625.10 Good faith belief in innocence

Where respondent was legitimately entitled to fees for services to wife in marital dissolution, and honestly believed that couple had allocated trust funds to husband in marital settlement in order to prevent respondent from applying trust funds to wife's debt for fees, there was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent's failure to make restitution of funds to husband was an aggravating circumstance. Respondent's legal position in defense of his retention and use of husband's funds did not evidence a persistent unwillingness to conform his behavior to ethical standards, and did not undercut the force of his mitigating evidence of subsequent reputable practice and community service. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

Respondent's long period of postmisconduct practice of law without further discipline was a significant mitigating circumstance, because it demonstrated that respondent was able to adhere to acceptable standards of professional behavior and was not likely to commit misconduct in the future. Respondent's good faith defense of his innocence, in which he honestly believed, did not constitute a lack of understanding of his misconduct so as to preclude such finding, especially where respondent offered evidence about his sensitivity to misconduct of which he had been found culpable at an earlier stage in the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [20]

Respondent's inconsistent responses to State Bar investigators precluded a finding in mitigation that respondent was cooperative with the State Bar. However, respondent's behavior while acting as his own counsel during the disciplinary proceeding, which was consistent with an honest, if mistaken, belief in his own innocence, did not demonstrate an intent to hinder or mislead the court. A respondent is not required to acquiesce in the findings and conclusions of the State Bar Court, but the respondent's attitude toward the disciplinary process and amenability in conforming to the Rules of Professional Conduct are proper issues for the court's review, particularly in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [14]

625.20 Failure of proof

Respondent's statements to bankruptcy court that she believed she was doing the right thing for her clients, and was using her abilities to help people who were scared, were not clear and convincing evidence that respondent was indifferent to, or failed to understand, her misconduct in filing multiple improper bankruptcy petitions. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [6]

Respondent's submission of allegedly frivolous review brief did not constitute aggravating circumstance where respondent's attorney filed brief in question and there was no evidence that respondent drafted or controlled its contents. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [13]

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

Where evidence established that victim of attorney's misconduct had received in compensation from attorney an amount greater than the amount originally embezzled by attorney, attorney's belief that victim was not economically harmed, and failure to make additional restitution, did not demonstrate attorney's failure to appreciate wrongfulness of acts, or lack of remorse. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [15]

625.90 Other reason

690 Other aggravating factors

691 Found

The fact that respondent intentionally engaged in misconduct for personal gain and, in fact, personally profited from his misconduct are aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [13]

Respondents' efforts to simultaneously represent opposing parties in a harassment lawsuit where an actual conflict existed was considered an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [11 a, b]

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In probation revocation proceeding, repeated reminders and pressure from State Bar needed to secure respondent's completion of restitution in accordance with the stipulated discipline imposed on attorney in prior disciplinary proceeding were aggravating factors and inconsistent with the self-governing nature of probation as a rehabilitative part of attorney discipline system. In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567. [4]

Attorney's injection of the district attorney's office in which he worked into the defense in his disciplinary probation revocation proceeding, by using its name in caption of his pleadings, when that office had no role in his defense was, at very least, a misrepresentation of that office's official participation and an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567. [5]

It was a factor in aggravation that respondent personally gained from his misconduct. In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [2]

Where respondent misappropriated his clients' identities, authorized the forgery of clients' signatures, and conspired to use his trust account as a subterfuge to avoid paying income taxes due on legal fees and to fund a massive capping and fee splitting scheme, respondent's misconduct was directly related to his obligations as an attorney. This direct relation between the misconduct and attorney obligations constituted a factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [4]

Respondent's repeated failure to respond to inquiries by clients as to the status of their cases and to investigation inquiries by professional organizations responsible for maintaining standards within the profession constituted an aggravating factor. The combination of respondent's misconduct presented respondent's disregard for his obligations to his profession as well as disregard for his obligations to his clients. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [7]

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

Respondent's disclosure of former client's confidential information to defendants in lawsuit in which former client was plaintiff was serious aggravating circumstance and was not justified by former client's lawsuit against respondent for return of fees and legal malpractice. In the Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [16 a-d]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9.

Respondent's placement of his interests above the interests of his client warrants significant additional discipline. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [10]

Respondent's practice of orally authorizing his staff to sign his name to declarations made under the penalty of perjury without disclosing, on the declaration, the fact that they were signing the declaration with respondent's permission or at his direction was misleading and inappropriate and thus was aggravation. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [8]

Respondent's failure to file pre-trial statement and appear at various State Bar Court hearings were serious aggravating circumstances because they showed respondent comprehended neither the seriousness of the charges nor his duty to participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [3]

Respondent's failure to appear at disciplinary trial in accordance with a notice to appear in lieu of subpoena served on him by State Bar was a particularly aggravating circumstance because it was the equivalent of disobeying a subpoena to appear at trial as the service of a notice to appear on a party has the same effect as the service of a subpoena. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [5]

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

Aggravating circumstances were found where respondent conspired to steal and stole from a school while he was working for it. Respondent's participation in the conspiracy to steal and theft were not only criminal acts, but also brazen breaches of the fiduciary duties an employee owes his employer. Observance of such fiduciary responsibility is central to the practice of law. Moreover, that respondent committed these felonies while he was in law school was also a factor of grave concern. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [3]

Respondent's argument that his employer's action in forcing him to become the supervisor of employees that the employer knew were stealing from the employer was the equivalent of entrapment, was found to be meritless and an aggravating circumstance because it patently demonstrated that respondent lacked insight into the wrongfulness of his actions and that he had not accepted responsibility for them. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [4]

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

Fact that respondent's misconduct involved client who was member of respondent's family was not mitigating but rather aggravating circumstance, since respondent's family ties to client made respondent more aware of client's vulnerabilities and trust client placed in respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [16]

Respondent's carelessness in losing control of four to five hundred case files when respondent's practice closed raised grave doubts about respondent's ability to protect client interests and constituted evidence in aggravation. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [17]

Respondent's use of obstructive tactics during his disciplinary proceeding, including abuse of discovery and frivolous motions, constituted a serious aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [13]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Disciplinary conviction referral cases in which assaultive behavior was the principal offense have generally resulted in suspension of varying degrees. In matter arising from misdemeanor conviction for battery on police officer, it was an aggravating circumstance that respondent provoked a dangerous and risky confrontation with police responding to his own domestic disturbance notwithstanding respondent's significant experience as a practicing lawyer in handling family law matters. Where this and other aggravating circumstances clearly outweighed mitigating ones, discipline of two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and 60 days actual suspension was abundantly fair and warranted. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [10]

Where respondent had made a loan to a client, and later represented that client in a lawsuit in which respondent was a codefendant, and where, in order to secure the client's debt to him, respondent had obtained an ownership interest in property which was a subject of that lawsuit and respondent later sued to foreclose on that interest, the fact that respondent's original business transaction with the client became the subject matter of litigation aggravated his initial misconduct in failing to comply with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but did not constitute a separate ethical violation. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [5]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

An attorney's admitted cocaine dependency is an appropriate factor to consider in determining the appropriate discipline for public protection. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [17]

Suspension resulting from respondent's failure to pass professional responsibility examination as ordered by Supreme Court did not constitute prior discipline, but was relevant to determination of appropriate discipline for failure to comply with rule 955 as required by same Supreme Court order. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [12]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

An attorney's criminal misconduct is aggravated when the attorney's previous experiences demonstrate that the attorney was aware of the issues involved in the criminal behavior. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [4]

Where respondent's drunk driving convictions involved more serious misconduct than in prior reported disciplinary cases involving drunk driving, including repeated abusive conduct with law enforcement officers, and respondent had two prior disciplinary reprovals, but respondent presented favorable evidence of professional ability and character references as well as efforts toward overcoming his addiction to alcohol, a 60-day actual suspension was appropriate to serve the aims of attorney discipline and, coupled with three years of probation, to assist in convincing respondent to deal with his alcohol abuse problems seriously. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [7]

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

An attorney is not a good candidate for suspension and/or probation where that attorney has failed to comply with the terms and conditions of a prior criminal probation, and has failed to participate in present and past disciplinary proceedings. These facts reflect the attorney's disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and clearly demonstrate that the risk of future misconduct is great. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [29]

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

Failure to make restitution is an aggravating factor; thus, incomplete restitution to clients' medical providers constitutes an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [14]

If respondent displayed a reckless or indifferent attitude toward his recordkeeping duties with regard to client trust funds, by using an ATM card to make repeated cash withdrawals of personal funds from his client trust account, this could constitute a factor in aggravation of commingling charges. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [14]

Respondent's extensive law enforcement background, first as FBI agent and then as deputy district attorney, was factor in aggravation in conviction referral matter as it gave respondent special awareness of law's requirements. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [4]

693 Found but discounted or not relied on

695 Declined to find

Where factual findings were used by the hearing judge to find culpability, it would be improper to again consider those same findings as factors in aggravation. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [7]

Review department is very reluctant to consider State Bar's request for a holding that respondent's failure to comply with the terms of a civil settlement agreement was an aggravating circumstance because the State Bar did not request such a holding from the hearing judge, but requested it for the first time on review. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [3]

In default proceedings, uncharged facts cannot be relied on as evidence of aggravating circumstances because the respondents are not fairly apprised that additional uncharged facts will be used against them. The use of uncharged facts in a contested proceeding presents a different question. In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585. [4]

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Community service activities may bear on the showing of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, but discontinuance of such activity, without more, is not necessarily an adverse factor. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [1]

While a suspension for failure to pass the Professional Responsibility Examination may be considered in determining appropriate discipline, it is not prior discipline under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [2]

Where an attorney permitted a non-lawyer to misuse the attorney's name to conduct a large personal injury practice, the attorney could not be held separately culpable for each item of harm that resulted, without proof of his or her actual knowledge. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [3]

A respondent's criminal conduct might well be relevant as an aggravating factor in a different case, but where respondent's criminal conviction had been found not to constitute a basis for discipline and State Bar had not challenged that conclusion, it was not appropriate to consider such conviction as a factor in aggravation of other misconduct. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [14]

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

While respondent's criminal offense was surrounded by his possession of firearms, such possession was not a separate aggravating circumstance, where there was no evidence that the firearms were illegal or that they were used in an aggressive or threatening manner. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [11]

While attorneys' illicit conduct involving minors has been viewed critically by the Supreme Court in the past, the presence of marijuana in respondent's home where his teenage sons resided was not an aggravating factor in the absence of direct evidence that the minors were exposed to illegal conduct or had access to the marijuana. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [12]

In a disciplinary hearing, the record of a felony conviction conclusively establishes the attorney's guilt of the felony. Nevertheless, testimony from attorney character witnesses as to their belief that the respondent was innocent should not have been considered as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [8]

Respondent's withdrawal of his resignation with charges pending should not have been relied on as an aggravating factor. Respondents should be permitted to submit their resignations without fear that if a resignation is subsequently withdrawn, the respondent will be penalized by the court's reliance on that fact as an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [15]

Neither a respondent's section 6007(c) inactive enrollment itself nor the unproven charges underlying it should be relied upon as aggravation in a subsequent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [24]

Under applicable provisions of Commercial Code, handwritten notation on attorney's check stating that it was issued "subject to verbal confirmation" destroys its negotiability and prevented attorney from being criminally liable for issuance of check drawn on insufficient funds. Dishonor of such check due to insufficient funds was not an aggravating factor, because check was issued in non-negotiable form and there was no clear evidence that payee was misled regarding nature of check. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [1]

Fact that in a disciplinary proceeding arising from an attorney's criminal conviction, the conviction is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt, is not an aggravating factor, but the basis of the attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [11]

Failure to present expert psychological testimony regarding purportedly aberrant nature of attorney's misconduct was not an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [12]

Failure to explain motive for misconduct is not an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [13]

700 Mitigation (references in parentheses are to Standards)

710 Long practice with no prior discipline record (1.6(a); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(i))

710.10 Found

Where respondent was a licensed attorney for 22 and one-half years before her misconduct, but she worked in non-attorney positions for 12 years, she was entitled to credit for 10 and one-half years of discipline-free practice, which is significant mitigation. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [4]

Where attorney had practiced for over 30 years without prior discipline, and State Bar stipulated that present misconduct was not serious, attorney's lack of prior record was entitled to significant weight in mitigation. Even if present misconduct had been serious, lack of prior record still would have established that respondent's misconduct was not likely to recur, where misconduct occurred during single, relatively short period of aberrant behavior, respondent voluntarily ceased committing misconduct before authorities or State Bar became involved, and respondent was remorseful and accepted responsibility for misconduct. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [3 a,b]

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

Mitigative credit must be given in a disciplinary proceeding where an attorney sufficiently proves the absence of a prior record of discipline over many years and where the misconduct is not deemed serious. However, the Supreme Court and this court routinely have considered the absence of prior discipline in mitigation even when the misconduct was serious. Therefore, respondent's practice of law for over twelve years with no prior record of discipline was a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [12]

Although standard 1.2(e) of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct describes instances when consideration of certain mitigating circumstances is mandatory, it is by no means an exclusive list of every factor that may be considered in mitigation. The Supreme Court has considered the absence of prior discipline in mitigation even when the misconduct was serious, thus respondent's practice of law for more than 17 years with no prior record of discipline is a significant mitigating factor. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [4]

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

The review department recommended a one-year stayed suspension and three-year probation, conditioned on a sixty-day actual suspension, where an attorney had recklessly failed to provide competent legal services in four matters, had failed to communicate properly with a client in one matter, had failed to forward a client's file promptly upon request in one matter, and had significantly harmed two clients, but where the attorney had practiced law without discipline for over 21 years, had recognized his misconduct, had reshaped his office procedures, and had demonstrated full candor and acknowledgment of responsibility for his misconduct before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

Where respondent had been disciplined in another jurisdiction, his record of practice prior to his first California disciplinary proceeding was not "unblemished." However, his over 30 years of practice prior to such out-of-state discipline constituted an important mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [14]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where respondent had practiced law for more than 25 years before committing misconduct, such practice was entitled to considerable weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [14]

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

Not all serious trust fund misappropriation cases warrant disbarment. Where respondent had a 21-year record of practice without prior discipline and respondent's misconduct took place within a relatively narrow time frame, standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing, with three-year actual suspension and five-year stayed suspension and probation, would be adequate to protect public, despite gravity of respondent's misconduct and lack of evidence regarding its cause. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [8]

Even though an attorney has a record of prior discipline, it is appropriate to consider a lengthy period of blemish-free practice prior to the attorney's first act of misconduct as a mitigating circumstance, where the prior misconduct occurred during the same time period as the present misconduct and both the prior and current misconduct occurred within a narrow time frame. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [18]

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Where respondent had practiced law for over 30 years before his current misconduct and where respondent's prior disciplinary record consisted solely of a private reproval for minor misconduct early in his career, respondent was entitled to a finding in mitigation based on his long years of practice. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [15]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

Where respondent successfully performed services for which he was retained, and his sole culpability was for single act of failing to inform client of respondent's entirely proper exercise of judgment not to pursue damages, and both harm to client and extent of misconduct were minimal, appropriate discipline would have been private reproval. However, in light of attorney's many years of practice without prior disciplinary record, and other extenuating circumstances, discipline would be punitive and would not further purposes of attorney discipline. Since finding of culpability precluded dismissal, admonition was an appropriate disposition. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [20]

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

Thirteen years of practice without discipline, before engaging in first act of misconduct, is appropriate factor in mitigation; such factor was appropriately considered even though respondent had prior disciplinary record, because such record stemmed from conduct roughly contemporaneous with that involved in subsequent disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [10]

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

Record of practicing without complaint subsequent to misconduct is as valid a mitigating circumstance as lack of a prior record. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [18]

Contrary to express terms of standard 1.2(e)(i), case law permits long record of practice without prior discipline to be treated as mitigation notwithstanding seriousness of present misconduct. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [19]

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

710.30 Mitigation—Long Practice With No Prior Discipline Record—Found but discounted or not relied on

Where respondent had a license to practice law in Nebraska since 1973 but offered no evidence as to the scope or continuing nature of his practice there, mitigating credit for 27 years of discipline–free practice in Nebraska is severely diminished. However, respondent is entitled to full credit for 10 years of discipline–free practice in California. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [4]

710.31 Not in practice long enough

710.32 Prior to discipline proceedings

710.33 Prior to commission of misconduct

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

The absence of a prior disciplinary record over many years of practice is a mitigating circumstance. Where respondent had practiced law discipline-free for about eight years prior to the start of his misconduct, such a period of unblemished practice was a mitigating factor, but did not merit significant weight. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [5]

Respondent's unblemished practice of law for slightly less than eight years and four months prior to the start of her misconduct was a mitigating circumstance, but did not deserve significant weight. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [8]

Where respondent had refrained from practicing law for five years and then had committed misconduct just over a year after returning to practice, respondent's lack of prior discipline record was properly discounted as mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [6]

Where respondent had no prior record of discipline in sixteen years from admission to bar until hearing judge's decision, but respondent's misconduct began nine years after his admission to practice and continued for at least four years, review department did not view respondent's clean record as being as long or entitled to as much weight as did hearing judge. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [31]

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Seven years of law practice in California prior to respondent's misconduct was worth only slight weight in mitigation. Respondent's additional years in practice in a foreign jurisdiction were not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be mitigating because the record lacked information on the similarities and differences between the attorney discipline systems in the United States and the foreign jurisdiction. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [11]

Respondent's lack of a prior record was not a significant mitigating factor since he had only been in practice for eight years prior to his misconduct. However, where respondent had practiced without incident for more than twelve years since the misconduct occurred, he was entitled to have this taken into account, and the review department concluded based on respondent's record that respondent's criminal conduct was aberrational and unlikely to recur. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [13]

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

710.34 Both (or unclear from opinion)

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

Even though respondent was not entitled to any mitigating credit for five years of discipline free practice under standard 1.2(e)(i) and case law, there was no error in hearing judge's giving respondent mitigating credit for discipline free practice because weight assigned to such mitigation by hearing judge was nominal (i.e., "exists in name only;" not real or substantial). In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[2]

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

710.35 Present misconduct too serious (interim Standard 1.6(a); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(i))

Where respondent's misconduct was serious, involved intentional dishonesty, and continued over three and a half years, and respondent's only evidence that it was aberrational consisted of a short letter from a psychologist who had only treated respondent for six months and who did not testify at trial, respondent's record of 22 years in practice without prior discipline was entitled to only minimal credit in mitigation. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [7]

Respondent was not entitled to mitigation for lack of prior discipline, despite his 31 years of discipline-free practice, where the misconduct was serious, part of a pattern, and highly likely to recur. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [7]

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

Respondent's 12-years of discipline-free practice before misappropriation from CTA was assigned limited weight in mitigation; respondent acted dishonestly for three years, during which time he made 65 unauthorized withdrawals from his CTA that did not reflect aberrational misconduct, and he demonstrated lack of insight about his misappropriations. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [4]

No mitigation credit for attorney's 13-year discipline-free record because attorney engaged in 10-year pattern of dishonesty and serious misconduct and did not prove significant mitigation or rehabilitation. Attorney's lack of prior record was irrelevant to prove he would avoid future misconduct. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [9]

Case law permits long period of discipline free practice to be treated as mitigation even though present misconduct is serious.In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[3]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Respondent's lack of a prior record of discipline in 14 years of practice was entitled to mitigating weight but did not of itself prove that disbarment was excessive for convictions of grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [6]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Record of 14 years of practice without prior discipline was mitigating circumstance but could not outweigh seriousness of attorney's misconduct and aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [9]

Contrary to express terms of standard 1.2(e)(i), case law permits long record of practice without prior discipline to be treated as mitigation notwithstanding seriousness of present misconduct. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [19]

710.36 Present misconduct likely to recur (1.6(a))

Where respondent's misconduct was serious, involved intentional dishonesty, and continued over three and a half years, and respondent's only evidence that it was aberrational consisted of a short letter from a psychologist who had only treated respondent for six months and who did not testify at trial, respondent's record of 22 years in practice without prior discipline was entitled to only minimal credit in mitigation. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [7]

When present misconduct is serious, long record of practice without prior discipline is most relevant when misconduct is aberrational. Where respondent with over 30 years of discipline-free practice planned and repeatedly committed misdemeanor even after having time to reflect on and consider consequences of misconduct, misconduct could not be characterized as aberrational or unlikely to recur. Accordingly, respondent's lack of prior record warranted only modest mitigation. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [3]

710.39 Other reason

Even though respondent was not entitled to any mitigating credit for five years of discipline free practice under standard 1.2(e)(i) and case law, there was no error in hearing judge's giving respondent mitigating credit for discipline free practice because weight assigned to such mitigation by hearing judge was nominal (i.e., "exists in name only;" not real or substantial). In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [2]

Respondent's 15 years of blemish-free practice prior to committing the misconduct did not indicate that his misconduct was aberrational where respondent intentionally misappropriated a substantial sum of money from his client for no apparent reason other than to keep his practice afloat. Then, for the next year, he repeatedly covered-up his misdeeds by means of misrepresentation and concealment. Thus, the totality of respondent's misconduct was serious and repeated. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [7]

Where respondent had been disciplined in another jurisdiction, his record of practice prior to his first California disciplinary proceeding was not "unblemished." However, his over 30 years of practice prior to such out-of-state discipline constituted an important mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [14]

Where respondent had refrained from practicing law for five years and then had committed misconduct just over a year after returning to practice, respondent's lack of prior discipline record was properly discounted as mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [6]

Seven years of law practice in California prior to respondent's misconduct was worth only slight weight in mitigation. Respondent's additional years in practice in a foreign jurisdiction were not shown by clear and convincing evidence to be mitigating because the record lacked information on the similarities and differences between the attorney discipline systems in the United States and the foreign jurisdiction. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [11]

710.50 Declined to find

710.51 Not in practice long enough

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

710.52 Prior to discipline proceedings

710.53 Prior to commission of misconduct

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

Where an attorney had been admitted to practice less than seven years at the time of his misconduct, his prior good record was not significant as mitigation. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [8]

Where respondent had practiced for only four years prior to his misconduct, his lack of prior discipline was not mitigating. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [17]

Six or seven years of trouble-free law practice prior to commission of misconduct was an insufficient period to be considered a mitigating factor, despite evidence that misconduct was aberrational, had not recurred, and had resulted from lax supervision of staff rather than venality. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [11]

An attorney's unblemished record for eight years prior to the attorney's misconduct was not long enough to constitute strong mitigation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [7]

Where respondents had been in practice without prior discipline for approximately four years before the commission of their misconduct, their records were far too short to constitute significant mitigation, but it was appropriate to consider their prior clean records in conjunction with their subsequent good conduct to demonstrate the aberrational nature of their misconduct. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [14]

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

710.54 Both (or unclear from opinion)

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

710.55 Prior record exists

Note: See topic number 802.21 for a definition of prior record.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

Only if attorney's prior and present misconduct occurred during same time period and within narrow time frame can many years of discipline-free practice before prior misconduct be deemed mitigating circumstance. Where respondent's prior and present misconduct occurred neither during same period nor within narrow time frame, and where misconduct in subsequent matter continued while prior matter was pending before State Bar court, respondent's discipline-free practice before prior misconduct was not mitigating in subsequent proceeding. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [22]

Where respondent's 17 years of practice without misconduct had been considered a compelling mitigating circumstance in respondent's first disciplinary proceeding, this factor was not properly considered mitigating in respondent's second disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [11]

Because respondent's first and second episodes of misconduct did not occur during same time period or within narrow time frame, his many years of practice before his first misconduct were not an important mitigating factor in his second discipline matter, especially where other facts in case indicated risk that misconduct would be repeated. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [13]

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

An attorney's prior private reproval which originated only four years before his current misconduct was not so remote in time to the current proceeding that the imposition of greater discipline in the present case based on the prior discipline would be manifestly unjust, even though the prior private reproval involved misconduct which did not bear any substantive relationship to the subsequent misconduct. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [17]

710.56 Present misconduct likely to recur (1.6(a))

Respondent was not entitled to mitigation for lack of prior discipline, despite his 31 years of discipline-free practice, where the misconduct was serious, part of a pattern, and highly likely to recur. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [9]

710.59 Other reason

Respondent was not entitled to mitigation for lack of prior discipline, despite his 31 years of discipline-free practice, where the misconduct was serious, part of a pattern, and highly likely to recur. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [9]

Case law permits long period of discipline free practice to be treated as mitigation even though present misconduct is serious. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [3]

Because respondent's first and second episodes of misconduct did not occur during same time period or within narrow time frame, his many years of practice before his first misconduct were not an important mitigating factor in his second discipline matter, especially where other facts in case indicated risk that misconduct would be repeated. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [13]

715 Good faith (1.6(b); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(ii))

715.10 Found

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

Wilfully failing to comply fully with a disciplinary probation condition constitutes a violation of the statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline. Wilfulness in this context requires merely that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, knew what he was doing or not doing and intended either to commit the act or abstain from committing it. The violation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Substantial compliance is insufficient to avoid culpability on this charge, and any good faith on the part of the attorney is relevant to mitigation rather than culpability. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

The lack of judicial precedent clearly establishing an attorney's duty at the time of the attorney's misconduct may be considered on the issue of possible mitigation. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [11]

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had acted in what he believed to be the best interests of both his client and the criminal justice system, his good motives were not a defense to his breach of duty, but did constitute a strong factor in mitigation. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [16]

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Where facts deemed conclusively established by court order, following respondent's failure to respond to examiner's requests for admissions, showed that respondent had wilfully misled judge, but respondent was permitted to testify that representations made to judge, though false, were true to the best of respondent's knowledge at the time they were made, respondent's testimony on this point was properly received, but only in mitigation, and not to contradict deemed admissions on which culpability findings were based. Deemed admissions, while conclusive as to literal truth of facts clearly set forth in request for admissions, did not preclude referee from admitting and considering other evidence that tended to explain or helped to interpret admitted facts. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [2]

Although an attorney is culpable for misconduct committed by inadequately supervised office staff, the degree of the attorney's personal involvement in the misconduct is relevant to the degree of culpability and the appropriate discipline to be imposed. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [5]

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

It was an important mitigating factor that respondents, due to youth and inexperience, honestly believed their conduct was not wrongful, and intended no harm; were very remorseful once they realized they had acted wrongfully, and thereafter candidly discussed the facts with their principal victim and disgorged the money they had received as a result of their acts. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [18]

715.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

Improper business transactions with clients have resulted in discipline ranging from reproval to suspension. Where, despite respondent's asserted intent to advance interests of beneficiaries of trust of which respondent was trustee, respondent realized significant benefits from improper loans from trust to himself, and where respondent also was grossly negligent in handling his duties as trustee, in view of the seriousness of respondent's misconduct, and comparable case law, the review department recommended three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and 60 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

715.50 Declined to find

Respondent's honest belief that his reinstatement to practice in California permitted him also to resume practicing trademark law without applying for reinstatement to patent and trademark bar was not objectively reasonable, and therefore did not provide a basis for finding good faith as a mitigating circumstance. Expert witness's testimony that respondent's belief was reasonable did not establish respondent's good faith, where expert admitted that respondent's exclusion from practice by federal agency applied to trademark as well as patent law. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418. [3 a-c]

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

Where respondent was unaware of duty to report to State Bar that respondent had engaged services of resigned attorney, Review Department reversed hearing judge's consideration of this fact in mitigation as good faith, because attorneys are not rewarded for ignorance of their ethical responsibilities. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [7]

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In order to establish good faith as a mitigating circumstance, an attorney must prove that his or her beliefs were both honestly held and reasonable. To conclude otherwise would reward an attorney for his unreasonable beliefs and for his ignorance of his ethical responsibilities. Where injunctions proscribed certain conduct, respondent's claim that he believed he was not subject to the injunctions was not reasonable, particularly because the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure made them binding on him. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [3 a, b]

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

Although attorneys have a duty to zealously represent their clients and assert unpopular and novel positions in advancing their clients' legitimate objectives, they also have a duty to the judicial system to assert only legal claims or defenses that are warranted by the law or are supported by a good faith belief in their correctness. Thus, in order to establish good faith as a mitigating circumstance, an attorney must prove that his or her beliefs were both honestly held and reasonable. Even though respondents and the State Bar stipulated that respondents had researched the law and believed a tribal election was valid, that stipulation does not establish good faith mitigation since respondents' misrepresentations of fact and law went far beyond the specific issue of the validity of the election results. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [4a, b]

Individually and collectively, (1) hearing judge's finding that respondent repeatedly and deliberately abdicated his ethical duties to properly represent his immigration clients and to competently perform the legal services that he had a legal duty to perform, repeatedly accepted more immigration cases than he could properly handle, routinely placed his interests above those of his clients by permitting nonattorneys to prepare and file applications, pleadings, and other documents in his clients' immigration court cases, and consistently demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of his duty of fidelity to his clients and (2) review department's independent finding of uncharged misconduct aggravation that respondent engaged in a course of practicing law that was reckless and involved gross carelessness not only negated respondent's claims that almost all the hearing judge's findings of misconduct were improperly based on unintentional acts and omissions that resulted from respondent's simple negligence or honest mistakes respondent made in good faith as a product of trying to do too much, not too little, for his clients, but they also precluded a finding of good faith mitigation.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [10 a-c]

An attorney's lack of experience is not a mitigating circumstance. It is when an attorney is newly licensed or begins to practice in a new area of law that he should take proper steps necessary to learn governing law, rules, and regulations.In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [30]

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In a conviction referral proceeding involving respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), respondent's contention that, at the time she obtained the loan, she fully expected the farm to succeed and to repay the loan in full might avoid a finding in aggravation, but did not entitle her to any mitigating credit. Respondent was not entitled to any credit for merely intending to do that which she contracted to do. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [4]

In order to establish good faith as a mitigating circumstance, an attorney must prove that his or her beliefs were both honestly held and reasonable. Respondent's beliefs regarding his interpretation of the Supreme Court order were honestly held but were unreasonable and, therefore, were not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [5]

The hearing judge's finding in mitigation that respondent's actions were in good faith because he did not believe at the time that it was improper for him to allow a non-client to use his client trust account as a business account was rejected by the review department because it was not appropriate to reward respondent for his ignorance of his ethical responsibilities. In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420. [5]

Respondent had duty of candor to superior court approving his fee. Respondent was entitled to urge any creative theory in good faith that statutory fee limitation might not apply to his case, but he could not simply conceal material fact that fee limitation statute might apply and profit sizably thereby at expense of his client. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [22]

Respondent was not entitled to finding in mitigation based on asserted good faith belief that reports required by disciplinary probation conditions were due only during actual suspension, where hearing judge did not find respondent's testimony regarding his belief credible; where language of probation conditions at best established ambiguity; where respondent did not research the issue, did not seek clarification, and did not consult with anyone regarding his interpretation of disciplinary order; and where probation department informed respondent that reports were due during entire period of probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

Respondent's contention that he detrimentally relied on advice from his probation monitor and counsel regarding compliance with rule 955 might have been persuasive as mitigation if respondent had raised it at the hearing level and produced supporting evidence. However, where record did not support and even contradicted such contention, review department rejected respondent's attempt to argue it as mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [3]

Respondent's failure to notify a client of respondent's disciplinary suspension was not justified by respondent's belief that he had been retained only for limited services, where respondent had accepted a retainer fee and filed a civil complaint listing himself as the plaintiff's attorney. There was no legal support for the distinction respondent attempted to draw between being attorney of record and "attorney in fact." In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [4]

Where respondent in a rule 955 matter gave different explanations at the hearing and on review for his failure to advise eight clients of his disciplinary suspension, and had not taken responsibility for making sure that substitutions of counsel he executed in the clients' cases had been filed, his attempted explanations constituted questionable mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [5]

In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim that his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. Respondent's conduct in connection with such transfer constituted evidence in aggravation, because respondent irresponsibly executed in blank hundreds of substitution association or substitution of counsel forms and relinquished of the client files to successor counsel without obtaining the clients' consent, safeguarding their interests, or even keeping a list of the clients or case names transferred. This conduct posed a significant potential harm to the clients and to the public interest generally. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [7]

Where respondent unreasonably persisted in refusing to include certain language in probation reports even after being informed by probation department employees that his interpretation of probation conditions as not requiring such language was incorrect, this effectively refuted respondent's contention that he acted in good faith, which would have constituted a mitigating factor if factually correct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [12]

Documentary evidence of communications to respondent from probation department regarding interpretation of probation conditions was judicially noticeable. It was not admissible to show truth of statements contained in such documents; for that purpose, it was hearsay. However, it was admissible to show that respondent had notice of probation department's interpretation, which was relevant to issue of respondent's good faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [13]

720 Lack of harm to client/public/justice (1.6(c); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(iii))

720.10 Found

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442.

The lack of client harm is a relevant mitigating circumstance in the context of a criminal conviction. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [4]

Where respondent attempted to file required affidavit of compliance with rule 955, California Rules of Court, within two weeks after it was due and before he was aware of initiation of rule 955 violation proceeding, and no clients were harmed, but respondent had also violated probation and had substantial prior discipline record, nine months actual suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Where respondent represented wife in marital dissolution proceeding, and at respondent's suggestion, husband also hired respondent to represent both clients in joint bankruptcy proceeding, and where consent to such joint representation signed by husband stated misleadingly that there was no conflict of interest between clients, and wife consented to joint representation orally but not in writing, respondent violated former rule prohibiting representation of clients with conflicting interests without written consent of all clients. However, where husband had consulted with separate counsel before retaining respondent; potential conflict was remote and no actual conflict materialized; and neither client was harmed, respondent's misconduct was substantially mitigated by surrounding circumstances and was relatively minor. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2]

By failing to disclose to clients the potential conflict between driver and passenger in an automobile accident case, and to secure their written consent to joint representation, an attorney exposes the clients to sharing confidences without realizing the potential impact of doing so; to possible delay if the attorney is later disqualified due to the development of an actual conflict; and to reduction of the passenger's recovery through failure to allege the driver's negligence. However, where it was not clear that respondent's clients would not have given their informed consent if they had been afforded the opportunity do so, respondent's violation of the rule requiring him to obtain such consent was not serious. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [8]

Advancing expenses to clients is not a generally accepted practice because it may cause clients to choose attorneys on the basis of the loans they are willing to make rather than the services they offer and may also create an attorney-client conflict. The rule permitting attorneys to advance client expenses is limited to expenses related to litigation or legal services. Where, after respondent was retained by a client in a personal injury action, he made an interest-free, unsecured loan to the client to cover funeral costs and other expenses, such advance was not permitted by the rule even though the expenses might be recoverable as damages in the litigation. The loan was also improper because respondent did not obtain the client's informed written consent. However, where there was no evidence of client harm, the violation was not serious. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [9]

In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had acted in what he believed to be the best interests of both his client and the criminal justice system, his good motives were not a defense to his breach of duty, but did constitute a strong factor in mitigation. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [16]

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

720.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

Attorneys who engage in an extended practice of inattention to official actions should not be allowed to create the risk that it will extend to clients resulting in inevitable and grievous harm to them. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [10]

In order to determine that a crime involved moral turpitude, specific resulting harm need not be shown. Conduct which poses a danger to the public, such as drunk driving, is no less serious because it did not result in death or injury. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [5]

Harm to public and to administration of justice, and risk of harm to client, is inherent in unauthorized practice of law. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [11]

720.50 Declined to find

Where victims of respondent's misconduct felt threatened for their own safety compelling them to obtain a stay-away protective order, respondent was not entitled to mitigation for lack of harm. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [7]

Although respondent's filing of a false verification burdened opposing counsel and the court, there was no evidence that the burden rose to the level of cognizable harm in aggravation. Nevertheless, it clearly repudiates a finding of no harm in mitigation. In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [3]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

Respondent failed to establish lack of harm as a mitigating circumstance where he harmed the object of his misconduct, a superior court, by appearing in the court and by signing and serving a trial brief while he was suspended from the practice of law. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [1]

Fact that respondent's clients received funds which should have gone to pay clients' medical bills did not negate aggravating factor of harm to clients, where several clients were sued by medical creditors whom respondent should have paid. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [30]

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

Respondent's claim of lack of harm to his clients in mitigation of rule 955 violation overlooked fact that parties protected by rule 955 include not only clients, but co-counsel, opposing counsel or adverse parties, and any tribunal in which litigation is pending. Moreover, nothing in rule 955 or case law distinguishes between a substantial or insubstantial violation of the rule, and respondent would have been required to comply with rule 955 whether or not he had any clients. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [10]

Misrepresentations are no less egregious when made to a public agency than when made to an individual client, and warrant discipline of no less magnitude. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [9]

Finding of lack of harm to clients as mitigating factor was unsupported in the record where respondent failed to submit any evidence at the hearing of lack of harm resulting from his misconduct, and where respondent's clients (and the Client Security Fund, which had reimbursed them) had to wait years for restitution. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [18]

725 Emotional/physical disability/illness (1.6(d); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(iv))

Note: See also topic number 760 et seq.

725.10 Found

725.11 With expert testimony

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

Extreme emotional and physical difficulties suffered by an attorney at the time of professional misconduct constitute a mitigating circumstance when expert testimony establishes that such difficulties were directly responsible for the misconduct. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [12]

Where respondent committed serious misconduct shortly after admission to practice, including abandoning several clients and failing to perform legal services competently; four instances of failure to return unearned advance fees promptly; misleading two clients; misappropriating trust funds of a bankruptcy estate; and accepting employment without sufficient time, resources and ability to perform competently; but respondent presented mitigating evidence of emotional and psychological difficulties and rehabilitation, disbarment was not required, and protection of the public and profession was satisfied by five-year stayed suspension, three-year actual suspension, requirements to make restitution and show rehabilitation before returning to practice, and a period of supervised probation. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [1]

Extreme emotional difficulties or stressful family circumstances can be considered as mitigating evidence where it is established by expert testimony that the emotional difficulties were responsible for the attorney's misconduct, and the attorney has demonstrated full recovery and rehabilitation by clear and convincing evidence, such that recurrence of further misconduct is unlikely. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [40]

Acute depression and other psychological problems can explain, but not excuse inattention to the demands of a law practice and the ethical improprieties that result. To the degree that emotional problems underlay respondent's failure to provide competent legal services, to communicate with clients, and to protect clients' rights when ceasing to practice, evidence of respondent's recovery from these problems and the unlikelihood of a recurrence was mitigating. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [42]

In disciplinary matters, greater mitigating weight is given to financial pressures if the pressures are extreme and result from circumstances beyond the control of the attorney, such as undiagnosed psychiatric problems. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [1]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

725.12 Without expert testimony

Recognizing that some physical disabilities are permanent, standard 1.2(e)(iv) must be considered in the context of an attorney's fitness and ability to practice law. After suffering from serious medical condition for many years, respondent is in best position to discuss impact, if any, he is currently experiencing from the medical condition. Fifteen months may not be long enough to establish that condition has permanently subsided, but it is sufficient time to establish that respondent is rehabilitated from the severity of the illnesses that contributed to his misconduct. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239 [3]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

Although the Supreme Court requires that lawyers' claims in mitigation based upon substance abuse show adequate evidence of a causal connection between the abuse and misconduct and a meaningful and sustained rehabilitative period, the Court does not require that the respondent's rehabilitation be complete to qualify as mitigation. Where respondent showed that his marijuana use and alcohol abuse led in part to his criminal activity, and that he had undertaken a program of steady progress toward rehabilitation, and had successfully dealt with his addiction and maintained sobriety, mitigation was properly found. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [8]

725.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

725.31 Lack of expert testimony

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

725.32 Lack of causal relation to misconduct

Respondent established that he suffered from anxiety and depression for years. However, the review department assigned no mitigating weight to his emotional difficulties where one expert did not believe respondent committed wrongdoing and neither of respondent's experts opined that his emotional problems actually caused him to misappropriate client funds. Further, where respondent's experts did not provide specifics about his future prognosis or stage of recovery, there was no clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffers from emotional problems. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [7 a,b]

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

Rehabilitation from alcoholism or drug addiction is a mitigating circumstance only if the substance abuse caused the attorney's misconduct. Where respondent failed to present clear and convincing evidence of a causal nexus between her substance abuse and her misconduct, the review department denied her request for a remand to the hearing department to provide evidence of her continued sobriety, and did not consider her steps toward recovery a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [1]

The review department denied respondent's request for judicial notice of general facts about alcoholism and declined to consider several character references stressing respondent's recovery from alcoholism on the aggregate grounds that respondent had not shown at the disciplinary hearing that her alcoholism caused her misconduct, that she failed to show why she should be excused from not having presented the proffered evidence at the disciplinary hearing, and that she failed to show that the specific matters which she wanted to be judicially noticed were proper subjects of judicial notice. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 306(c); former Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 556; Evid. Code, § 452, subd. (h).) In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [3]

Problems such as disabling psychological disorders or substance abuse proven to have led to misconduct may mitigate discipline when accompanied by adequate rehabilitative evidence. However, evidence of psychological difficulty will not always warrant reduced discipline. Where respondent suffered from an adjustment disorder and not any chronic psychological condition, and where prior to his crimes respondent had done excellent work despite being under great stress, review department concluded that respondent's proof fell short of entitling him to significant mitigation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [8]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

Evidence of severe emotional problems does not mitigate misconduct which arose prior to the triggering of the attorney's emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [41]

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

Without evidence that death of respondent's parent resulted in disabling psychological distress, record did not show that attorney's failure to prepare trust documents was affected thereby. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [13]

Where there was evidence that respondent was ill during the time period in which misconduct occurred, but there were no details of duration or extent of illness or how it may have accounted for respondent's misconduct, illness was not considered to be a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [12]

725.33 Problem not sufficiently extreme

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Problems such as disabling psychological disorders or substance abuse proven to have led to misconduct may mitigate discipline when accompanied by adequate rehabilitative evidence. However, evidence of psychological difficulty will not always warrant reduced discipline. Where respondent suffered from an adjustment disorder and not any chronic psychological condition, and where prior to his crimes respondent had done excellent work despite being under great stress, review department concluded that respondent's proof fell short of entitling him to significant mitigation. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [8]

Without evidence that death of respondent's parent resulted in disabling psychological distress, record did not show that attorney's failure to prepare trust documents was affected thereby. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [13]

725.35 Problem produced by illegal conduct

725.36 Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

Respondent established that he suffered from anxiety and depression for years. However, the review department assigned no mitigating weight to his emotional difficulties where one expert did not believe respondent committed wrongdoing and neither of respondent's experts opined that his emotional problems actually caused him to misappropriate client funds. Further, where respondent's experts did not provide specifics about his future prognosis or stage of recovery, there was no clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffers from emotional problems. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [7 a,b]

Extreme emotional difficulties directly responsible for attorney's misconduct constitute mitigating circumstance if clear and convincing evidence proves that attorney no longer suffers from such difficulties. Where respondent's chronic depression was a major cause of his misconduct, but respondent had not clearly and convincingly established recovery, such depression failed to constitute mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [10]

Where respondent misused client trust account as personal account, failed to respond to client's reasonable status inquiries, did not keep client's settlement check in safe place, and did not respond to State Bar investigation, and where at time of disciplinary hearing respondent still suffered from chronic depression which was major cause of misconduct, and had been ineligible to practice law for two years, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension, four years probation, and actual suspension for one year and until respondent proved rehabilitation, fitness to practice competently, including mental fitness, and present learning and ability in the law. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [24]

Where petitioner for reinstatement admitted his alcoholism, but his showing of recovery rested entirely on his own efforts at abstinence as supplemented by favorable character testimony, and he failed to present any medical or other expert opinion attesting to his recovery and prognosis, or any evidence that he had undergone recent treatment or participated in any recovery program, hearing judge's conclusion that such showing was insufficient to establish rehabilitation was entitled to considerable weight. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [4]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Evidence of psychological problems was not compelling mitigation where attorney's expert witness testified that he needed further treatment before he could be considered rehabilitated; primary function of attorney discipline is to fulfill proper professional standards regardless of cause for attorney's failure to do so. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [10]

725.39 Other reason

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

Disbarment was warranted for convictions of grand theft and forgery unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Despite hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's crimes were aberrant and brought on by incredible psychological stress due to marital and business problems, review department did not agree that mitigation was compelling. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [5]

Not all instances of serious professional misconduct warrant disbarment, depending on mitigating circumstances. Theft crimes unrelated to the practice of law have resulted in less than disbarment. However, where respondent's offenses of grand theft and forgery were extremely grave and multiple examples of felonious and fraudulent misconduct, likely to impugn public confidence in the legal profession, and respondent's experience in sophisticated law practice, public office and private business should have dissuaded him from committing felonies, review department recommended disbarment notwithstanding respondent's evidence of stress caused by personal and financial problems. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [11]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

725.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

725.51 Lack of expert testimony

No mitigation credit for emotional problems where absence of expert testimony left court to speculate about relevance and weight to be given respondent's testimony concerning alcoholism and where absence of such testimony also left court unable to reasonably evaluate the temporal aspects of respondent's personal issues surrounding his alcohol consumption. In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131 [1]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

Where respondent failed (1) to establish through expert testimony that his depression, his physical maladies, and his financial difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct and (2) to establish through clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffered from the difficulties and disabilities or even that he could take, and was taking, steps to overcome them, the difficulties and disabilities were not treated as mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416. [4]

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.

725.52 Problem not sufficiently extreme

725.53 Problem produced by illegal conduct

725.56 Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

Where respondent failed to establish that his bipolar disorder was directly responsible for his many acts of misconduct, and admitted to long-standing substance abuse problem with which he continued to struggle, and no evidence showed that respondent was no longer at risk of committing future misconduct, respondent was not entitled to mitigating credit for bipolar disorder. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [4]

725.59 Other reason

Where respondent's misconduct began two years before the onset of the stressful circumstances to which her therapist partially attributed her misconduct, respondent did not demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that her emotional difficulties were responsible for her misconduct, and thus was not entitled to mitigating credit for these difficulties. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [8]

Where respondent admitted that he hid cameras in restaurant bathrooms for specific purpose of making surreptitious recordings, and that he knew at the time his actions were unethical and illegal, and where respondent's psychiatrist was unaware of respondent's prior similar conduct, had not directly observed respondent in manic state, and based his opinion solely on respondent's version of the facts, psychiatrist's opinion that respondent was not responsible for his misconduct due to bipolar disorder was contrary to evidence, and did not preclude finding that respondent's criminal conduct involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [2]

Respondent was not afforded mitigative credit for extreme emotional difficulties he suffered as a result of his father's death and the prospective loss of the family home because he failed to establish a causal nexus between those emotional difficulties and his misconduct. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [6]

Where respondent failed (1) to establish through expert testimony that his depression, his physical maladies, and his financial difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct and (2) to establish through clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffered from the difficulties and disabilities or even that he could take, and was taking, steps to overcome them, the difficulties and disabilities were not treated as mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416. [4]

Where the record failed to show that respondent suffered from extreme emotional difficulties which caused respondent's misconduct, it was inappropriate to make a finding in mitigation based on emotional difficulties. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [7]

Office workload does not generally serve to substantially mitigate misconduct. Stressful personal problems may mitigate misconduct, but where respondent's asserted workload or personal problems occurred during first year of administration of probate estate, such problems did not adequately explain five-year delay in administration of estate, and did not constitute mitigation. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [14]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Evidence concerning respondent's education, experience and drug use which occurred well prior to his probation violations was not causally related to the misconduct, nor did it demonstrate why a lesser disciplinary sanction would adequately protect the public, the courts and the legal profession. Therefore, it did not constitute mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [13]

Fact that an attorney was undergoing therapy at the time of the disciplinary hearing did not constitute relevant mitigation where attorney did not present expert testimony establishing psychological problems at time of misconduct, and did not demonstrate recovery from such problems such that they would no longer affect his fitness to practice. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [17]

730 Candor and cooperation with victim (1.6(e); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(v))

730.10 Found

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Where respondent, after authorities' discovery of welfare fraud committed by him and his wife, was cooperative with welfare authorities and remorseful, took full responsibility, and stipulated to most of the facts at the State Bar hearing, hearing judge was justified in recommending lengthy suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

It was an important mitigating factor that respondents, due to youth and inexperience, honestly believed their conduct was not wrongful, and intended no harm; were very remorseful once they realized they had acted wrongfully, and thereafter candidly discussed the facts with their principal victim and disgorged the money they had received as a result of their acts. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [18]

730.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

730.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Respondent failed to establish spontaneous candor as a mitigating circumstance where he admitted to a superior court that he had appeared before the court while on actual suspension, but where the admission might well have resulted from his fear that the opposing counsel would disclose the unlawful appearance. In the Matter of Mason (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 639. [2]

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

735 Candor and cooperation with Bar (1.6(e); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(v))

735.10 Found

Where respondent entered into an extensive stipulation that disclosed his intent in committing misdemeanor, and volunteered facts regarding his prior similar misconduct, respondent's admissions entitled him to significant mitigation. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [5]

In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

Where attorney stipulated to admission of documents which established his culpability for misconduct warranting discipline and assisted the prosecution, such cooperation warranted considerable weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [10]

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338.

Significant mitigating weight given for candor and cooperation with OCTC where attorney stipulated to material facts, culpability and discipline because it greatly conserved resources. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [4]

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273.

Although it did not admit culpability, respondent's stipulation as to facts and admissibility of exhibits was extensive, relevant, and assisted in the State Bar's prosecution of the case and was accorded limited mitigation. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [13]

Where stipulated facts were not difficult to prove and did not admit culpability but were extensive, relevant and assisted the State Bar's prosecution of the case, respondent's factual stipulation was a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [6]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403.

Respondent was entitled to mitigating consideration for stipulating to the use of a declaration of a witness, thereby avoiding the necessity of bringing that witness from Michigan to testify. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [5]

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

Very limited mitigating weight is afforded on account of respondent's cooperation with the State Bar in entering into a factual stipulation covering background facts in most of the matters. More extensive mitigating weight is accorded those who, where appropriate, willingly admit their culpability as well as the facts. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [4]

The hearing judge did not err in prohibiting respondent from presenting evidence of his willingness to settle the case by stipulating to the misconduct and a reasonable level of discipline and of the State Bar's unwillingness to present a settlement offer that contained what he considered to be a reasonable level of discipline. Respondent is afforded substantial mitigation for cooperation because, in addition to other instances of cooperation throughout the investigation of the matter, he stipulated to the facts underlying the misconduct and because the stipulated facts were not easily provable. Substantial mitigation is given without regard to the fact that the parties were unable to stipulate to an appropriate level of discipline. Not doing so would "punish" respondent merely for seeking his day in court as to the level of discipline. Not being able to reach a stipulated discipline does not have any effect on the court's analysis of the degree of mitigation awarded for respondent's overall cooperation in helping resolve the charged misconduct. In the Matter of Silver (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 902. [1]

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

Candor and cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary investigation and proceeding can be a mitigating circumstance. However, an attorney has a legal and ethical duty to cooperate with the State Bar's disciplinary investigation, and that cooperation, in and of itself, is not entitled to great weight as a mitigating factor. Nevertheless, where respondent admitted his wrongdoing when first contacted by an investigator for the State Bar, and stipulated to the facts and his culpability, such evidence was a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [9]

In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

Respondent's cooperation with State Bar in agreeing to allow complaining former client to testify by telephone at disciplinary hearing constituted mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [23]

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

Where respondent almost completely abdicated to a non-lawyer his professional duties with respect to a personal injury practice; failed to take prompt, realistic action to stop the non-lawyer's capping practices, and had not presented clear evidence regarding rehabilitation and necessary changes in his practice, then despite mitigating factors including respondent's cooperation with law enforcement and State Bar and satisfaction of medical liens out of his own funds, appropriate discipline for protection of public was three-year stayed suspension with three years probation and actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the general law. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [7]

Where respondent was candid and displayed examplary conduct during disciplinary proceedings, respondent's vigorous defense of the charges, which was motivated only by his honest belief in his innocence, did not negate the mitigating force of his candor and cooperation with the State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [16]

Where respondent, after authorities' discovery of welfare fraud committed by him and his wife, was cooperative with welfare authorities and remorseful, took full responsibility, and stipulated to most of the facts at the State Bar hearing, hearing judge was justified in recommending lengthy suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

Where respondent appeared to have cooperated fully with the State Bar's investigator, and stipulated at the hearing to facts demonstrating culpability on one charge, respondent's cooperation with the State Bar was a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [19]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

735.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

Where respondent entered into stipulation as to facts and documents, but stipulation was not extensive, involved easily provable facts, and did not admit culpability, respondent's cooperation was assigned limited weight as a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [8]

Diminished weight given for cooperation in State Bar Court proceedings after respondent entered into extensive stipulation as to facts and admission of documents, but did not stipulate to culpability and continued to dispute it before the review department. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [8]

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151

Court routinely recognizes limited mitigation when a respondent stipulates to material facts. In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131 [4]

Because respondent's admissions of culpability for violating rules 1–320 and 1–311 were easily provable violations, his cooperation during the disciplinary proceedings did not warrant significant mitigative weight. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [14]

In probation revocation proceeding, while attorney's cooperation in stipulating to facts warranted some mitigative consideration, such consideration is not extended to either attorney's participation in prior disciplinary proceeding or in probation revocation proceeding, in which he had a statutory duty to participate.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[2]

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

Respondent's cooperation with the State Bar in, for example, stipulating to the facts and circumstances surrounding his conviction, is a mitigating circumstance. However, it is entitled to only nominal weight where the stipulated facts were easily provable. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.[1]

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

Despite respondent's cooperation in executing a detailed and broad pretrial stipulation, his efforts to show his innocence through testimony which was not credible, and his admitted misleading of a State Bar investigator, were aggravating factors. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [6]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

735.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160

In probation revocation proceeding, while attorney's cooperation in stipulating to facts warranted some mitigative consideration, such consideration is not extended to either attorney's participation in prior disciplinary proceeding or in probation revocation proceeding, in which he had a statutory duty to participate.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[2]

Even if issue had properly been before review department on summary review, respondent would not have been entitled to any mitigating credit for self reporting to State Bar his misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of clients because respondent had a pre-existing statutory duty to report his criminal conviction. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[1]

Belated stipulations to facts which mainly concern easily provable facts merit limited weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [8]

Respondent's participation in probation revocation proceeding was not a mitigating circumstance because his participation was mandated by Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (i). In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [2]

Where respondent was ordered by hearing judge to file pretrial statement as provided by rule 1222, Provisional Rules of Practice, respondent's actions in entering into joint pretrial statement with State Bar did not constitute spontaneous candor and cooperation which would warrant finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [5]

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

Respondent's inconsistent responses to State Bar investigators precluded a finding in mitigation that respondent was cooperative with the State Bar. However, respondent's behavior while acting as his own counsel during the disciplinary proceeding, which was consistent with an honest, if mistaken, belief in his own innocence, did not demonstrate an intent to hinder or mislead the court. A respondent is not required to acquiesce in the findings and conclusions of the State Bar Court, but the respondent's attitude toward the disciplinary process and amenability in conforming to the Rules of Professional Conduct are proper issues for the court's review, particularly in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [14]

Respondent's testimony that he unsuccessfully tried to telephone a State Bar investigator in response to a letter the investigator sent him regarding his possible misconduct was admissible only in mitigation, not in defense to his culpability of failing to cooperate in the investigation, which was conclusively established by his deemed admissions resulting from his failure to respond to discovery. Such testimony was not a sufficient basis for a finding in mitigation. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [8]

740 Good character references (1.6(f); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(vi))

Note: See also topic number 765 et seq.

Attorney presented an extraordinary demonstration of good character where 36 character witnesses consisting of judges, attorneys, public officials, law enforcement personnel, community leaders, victims of crime and friends who knew attorney between 5 to 30 years uniformly attested to attorney's character and integrity despite knowledge of charges against attorney. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [11]

740.10 Found

In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370

In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

Candor and cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary investigation and proceeding can be a mitigating circumstance. However, an attorney has a legal and ethical duty to cooperate with the State Bar's disciplinary investigation, and that cooperation, in and of itself, is not entitled to great weight as a mitigating factor. Nevertheless, where respondent admitted his wrongdoing when first contacted by an investigator for the State Bar, and stipulated to the facts and his culpability, such evidence was a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [9]

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

Judges are required under canon 2B of the California Code of Judicial Conduct not to testify voluntarily as character witnesses, but where subpoenas were issued to compel judges to testify, their declarations regarding good character of disciplinary respondent could be considered by State Bar Court. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [3]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

Civic service, such as valuable charitable work, can deserve recognition as a mitigating circumstance under the standard providing that evidence of good character is mitigating. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [18]

Where respondent's drunk driving convictions involved more serious misconduct than in prior reported disciplinary cases involving drunk driving, including repeated abusive conduct with law enforcement officers, and respondent had two prior disciplinary reprovals, but respondent presented favorable evidence of professional ability and character references as well as efforts toward overcoming his addiction to alcohol, a 60-day actual suspension was appropriate to serve the aims of attorney discipline and, coupled with three years of probation, to assist in convincing respondent to deal with his alcohol abuse problems seriously. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [7]

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

If an attorney engages in criminal conduct, it is not a minimum requirement for rehabilitation that the attorney turn himself or herself in to law enforcement authorities. Where the attorney was not hiding from anyone except those who wished him to resume his criminal activities; he cooperated fully with law enforcement once asked, and he presented character witnesses who attested to his current good character, the hearing judge's finding of rehabilitation was appropriate. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [2]

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

Testimonials from clients regarding respondent's service on their behalf, in some instances on a pro bono basis, constituted mitigating evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [12]

Where a great number of character witnesses, including two judges who had known respondent for a very long time, testified about respondent's impeccable honesty and reliability and where two of the character witnesses were very knowledgeable about the nature of respondent's misconduct and it had no effect on their opinion, it was extremely unlikely that the extraordinarily high opinion of respondent's honesty and trustworthiness expressed by the character witnesses would change much with knowledge of the details. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [17]

The confidence in respondent expressed by fellow attorneys may be considered in mitigation. Where attorneys who testified as character witnesses knew respondent well and were aware of the circumstances prompting the disciplinary proceeding, their testimony regarding respondent's integrity and honesty deserved consideration. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [7]

Testimony of several highly reputable character witnesses attesting to respondent's otherwise high standing in the legal community and high ethical standards and demonstration of diligence on behalf of clients, as well as substantial community service and pro bono activities, should have been given more than a little weight in mitigation; review department found it to be significant. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [12]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

Where examiner stipulated to admissibility of character reference letters at hearing, and thus chose not to require the declarants to be cross-examined, examiner's attempt to discount letters before review department was without foundation. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [21]

740.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151

740.31 Insufficient number or range of references

Review Department assigned minimal weight to character evidence provided by three attorneys who were aware of respondent's misconduct, because number and range of references was insufficient to warrant more mitigation. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418. [2]

Where respondent's five character witnesses consisted of her husband, two attorneys, a law firm librarian, and the owner of a real estate business, respondent's evidence of good character was entitled only to limited weight, because her witnesses did not constitute a broad range of references from both the legal and general communities. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [9]

Where respondent's seven character witnesses all came from a narrow cross-section of the legal community, his good character evidence was not entitled to substantial weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [6]

Modest mitigation credit for good character where attorney presented four witnesses from varied backgrounds that included an attorney. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320. [5]

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Where respondent's character evidence was not from a sufficiently wide range of references, did not demonstrate that each witness was aware of the full extent of respondent's misconduct, and did not address the State Bar's disciplinary concerns or discuss respondent's fitness for practice, the evidence was entitled to only limited weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [5]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Good character evidence consisting of recent letters from two judges before whom respondent had regularly appeared and two attorneys who had known respondent since 1986 was not entitled to substantial mitigating credit because evidence did not come from a wide range of references in general and legal communities as required by standard 1.2(e)(vi). However, respondent was entitled to some mitigating weight for that evidence because it represented a fair reference from legal community. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 23. [4 a-b]

Appropriate level of discipline for respondent's misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of two clients (Ins. Code, § 750, subd. (a)), where circumstances surrounding conviction involved moral turpitude, was two-year stayed suspension with two-year period of probation and six-month period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.[6 a-g]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Where three clients and three attorneys offered positive character assessments of respondent, their testimony received limited mitigating weight because they did not constitute a broad range of references from the legal and general communities. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [9]

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

The weight to be accorded to respondent's character evidence was diminished somewhat where respondent presented a limited range of character witnesses, only one of whom revealed a full understanding of respondent's culpability. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [17]

The requirement that mitigating character testimony come from a wide range of references exhibiting a familiarity with the details of respondent's misconduct was not met by testimony by respondent himself and a letter from one character witness reflecting no knowledge of respondent's misconduct. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [17]

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

A respondent's own testimony regarding the respondent's community service may be considered as some evidence in mitigation notwithstanding that it does not meet the requirement that good character be established by a wide range of references. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [16]

740.32 References unfamiliar with misconduct

Limited weight was assigned to good character evidence from relevant communities where respondent failed to establish that his witnesses knew the full extent of his misconduct. Many witnesses believed the charges against respondent were due to mistake or misunderstanding, and some did not know respondent had stipulated to facts establishing his misconduct. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [5]

Respondent received only modest mitigating credit for good character where most of his 11 witnesses did not have a lengthy relationship or much recent contact with respondent, and several stated they had little understanding about the discipline charges. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [9]

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

Minimal weight afforded to character testimony where respondent presented testimony from only three witnesses which did not constitute a wide range of references and where two witnesses did not become aware of the full extent of respondent's disciplinary proceedings until called to testify and third witness did not become aware of respondent's disciplinary record until three months prior to the hearing. In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131 [2 a, b]

The fact that respondent's good character witnesses did not establish that they possessed adequate knowledge of respondent's convictions or of the facts and circumstances surrounding them and the fact that at least two witnesses rarely saw or interacted with respondent reduced the mitigating weight given to their testimony. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [16]

Where respondent's character evidence was not from a sufficiently wide range of references, did not demonstrate that each witness was aware of the full extent of respondent's misconduct, and did not address the State Bar's disciplinary concerns or discuss respondent's fitness for practice, the evidence was entitled to only limited weight in mitigation.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [5]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Candor and cooperation with the State Bar during the disciplinary investigation and proceeding can be a mitigating circumstance. However, an attorney has a legal and ethical duty to cooperate with the State Bar's disciplinary investigation, and that cooperation, in and of itself, is not entitled to great weight as a mitigating factor. Nevertheless, where respondent admitted his wrongdoing when first contacted by an investigator for the State Bar, and stipulated to the facts and his culpability, such evidence was a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [9]

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

The weight to be accorded to respondent's character evidence was diminished somewhat where respondent presented a limited range of character witnesses, only one of whom revealed a full understanding of respondent's culpability. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [17]

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

The mitigating value of character testimony is undermined when the witness is unaware of the full extent of a respondent's misconduct. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [16]

Where hearing judge found that character witnesses' testimony was undercut by their inability to point to any persuasive reason for their belief in respondent's good character, and where the witnesses' lack of knowledge of the details of respondent's conviction also undermined the value of their testimony, respondent's contention that character evidence had not been sufficiently credited was rejected by review department. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [10]

In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

740.33 Inadequate showing generally

Minimal weight in mitigation afforded to respondent's credible testimony as to his community service and pro bono activities because the brevity and lack of detail of respondent's testimony left court unable to assess the breadth or significance of these activities. In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131 [3]

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

Favorable testimony by six character witnesses, four of whom were respondent's co-workers, was not sufficient to show that disbarment was excessive given the many aggravating circumstances surrounding respondent's misappropriation of a large sum of client trust funds. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [5]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Where hearing judge found that character witnesses' testimony was undercut by their inability to point to any persuasive reason for their belief in respondent's good character, and where the witnesses' lack of knowledge of the details of respondent's conviction also undermined the value of their testimony, respondent's contention that character evidence had not been sufficiently credited was rejected by review department. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [10]

740.39 Other reason

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Where respondent's character evidence was not from a sufficiently wide range of references, did not demonstrate that each witness was aware of the full extent of respondent's misconduct, and did not address the State Bar's disciplinary concerns or discuss respondent's fitness for practice, the evidence was entitled to only limited weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [5]

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Good character evidence consisting of recent letters from two judges before whom respondent had regularly appeared and two attorneys who had known respondent since 1986 was not entitled to substantial mitigating credit because evidence did not come from a wide range of references in general and legal communities as required by standard 1.2(e)(vi). However, respondent was entitled to some mitigating weight for that evidence because it represented a fair reference from legal community. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23. [4 a-b]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

740.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

Respondent failed to establish mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence, where respondent presented the testimony of only one character witness who had only limited knowledge of the disciplinary issues. The testimony of this witness does not constitute a broad range of references from the legal and general communities. In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [8]

740.51 Insufficient number or range of references

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

Attorney not entitled to mitigation for good character because he presented the testimony of only two character witnesses. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [8]

Respondent was not entitled to mitigation for good character because he had only one witness testify and this did not constitute a broad range of references from the legal and general communities. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [5]

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

A single character witness is insufficient to be a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [5]

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

Testimony by three character witnesses was not entitled to significant weight in mitigation since it was not an extraordinary demonstration of good character attested to by a wide range of references. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [16]

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

740.52 References unfamiliar with misconduct

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

740.53 Inadequate showing generally

Where respondent's charitable work in the form of donating to charity the sales proceeds of a compact disc he recorded was uncontroverted, respondent's testimony on its own is not sufficient to establish his charitable work as a mitigating factor since there was no evidence as to where the proceeds were delivered or any supporting witnesses to attest to the work. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [6]

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

740.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

The fact that misconduct arose from aberrant facts and circumstances has been accorded mitigating weight in appropriate cases. However, where respondent's prior misconduct had involved multiple acts over his relatively few years of practice, and his prior and current misconduct together spanned six of his ten years in practice, it was not appropriate to consider respondent's misconduct as aberrational. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, declarations submitted by respondent in which clients attested to respondent's character and legal abilities were properly disregarded as irrelevant, because neither declarant was present during the incident underlying the convictions nor did the declarations contain any information which could shed light on the incident. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [1]

Focusing on technicalities in the law is a very shortsighted approach to the ethical obligations of attorneys; such technical approaches to the body of law regulating attorneys' ethics may be described as undermining the moral fiber of the profession. Evidence of good character does not rest on technicalities. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [9]

745 Remorse/restitution/atonement (1.6(g); 1986 Standard (1.2(e)(vii))

Note: See also topic number 757 et seq.

745.10 Found

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

Attorney judicial candidate was entitled to significant mitigation for his remorse and recognition of wrongdoing for issuing a prompt statement of regret and suspending judicial campaign after learning he had falsely connected opponent to bribery and corporate fraud. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [3]

Attorney's admission that his actions evidenced a significant lapse in judgment, his willingness to accept discipline, and his post-conviction voluntary enrollment in parenting courses beyond those required as a condition of probation established acceptance of responsibility for misconduct and warranted significant weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [9]

In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [6]

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

The review department recommended a one-year stayed suspension and three-year probation, conditioned on a sixty-day actual suspension, where an attorney had recklessly failed to provide competent legal services in four matters, had failed to communicate properly with a client in one matter, had failed to forward a client's file promptly upon request in one matter, and had significantly harmed two clients, but where the attorney had practiced law without discipline for over 21 years, had recognized his misconduct, had reshaped his office procedures, and had demonstrated full candor and acknowledgment of responsibility for his misconduct before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

Where respondent was not aware of pendency of rule 955 violation proceeding when he belatedly attempted to file affidavit required by rule 955(c), California Rules of Court, respondent's attempted untimely filing was basis for mitigation as spontaneous recognition of wrongdoing. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [9]

Where respondent attempted to file required affidavit of compliance with rule 955, California Rules of Court, within two weeks after it was due and before he was aware of initiation of rule 955 violation proceeding, and no clients were harmed, but respondent had also violated probation and had substantial prior discipline record, nine months actual suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Where, after initially failing to perform services regarding joint bankruptcy filed by divorcing couple, respondent provided assistance to both parties in completing bankruptcy at no charge, this was voluntary ameliorative behavior which disciplinary standards are designed to encourage, and was entitled to mitigating weight even though respondent had duty to perform services for wife in any event. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [11]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

External pressures to pay restitution for misappropriated funds, including court orders and agreements with victims of misappropriation, do not preclude consideration of such restitution in reinstatement proceedings. The weight to be accorded to restitution depends on the petitioner's attitude, as evidenced by a spirit of willingness, earnestness, and sincerity. Where a reinstatement petitioner who had misappropriated funds from a probate estate had subsequently recognized the gravity of his misconduct; admitted his misappropriation to the probate court and the State Bar; cooperated in an audit of the estate's records; secured his debt to the estate by granting it interests in his real and personal property, and fully repaid both the misappropriated funds and additional interest, surcharges, fees, and costs, his restitution deserved significant weight even though it was required by a probate court order. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [5]

Where respondent almost completely abdicated to a non-lawyer his professional duties with respect to a personal injury practice; failed to take prompt, realistic action to stop the non-lawyer's capping practices, and had not presented clear evidence regarding rehabilitation and necessary changes in his practice, then despite mitigating factors including respondent's cooperation with law enforcement and State Bar and satisfaction of medical liens out of his own funds, appropriate discipline for protection of public was three-year stayed suspension with three years probation and actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the general law. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [7]

Where respondent, after authorities' discovery of welfare fraud committed by him and his wife, was cooperative with welfare authorities and remorseful, took full responsibility, and stipulated to most of the facts at the State Bar hearing, hearing judge was justified in recommending lengthy suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Respondent's persisting in his belief in his innocence of fundamental misconduct did not necessarily show that respondent was deceitful or had misled the hearing judge, and was not a basis for a finding in aggravation, nor did it prevent a finding in mitigation that respondent had showed recognition of ways he could handle client matters more professionally in the future. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [7]

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

Voluntary restitution to all but one client prior to the involvement of the State Bar was a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [12]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

Where restitution to client was made after disciplinary hearing despite respondent's bankruptcy, this fulfilled a rehabilitative purpose which was appropriate to consider in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [3]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

It was an important mitigating factor that respondents, due to youth and inexperience, honestly believed their conduct was not wrongful, and intended no harm; were very remorseful once they realized they had acted wrongfully, and thereafter candidly discussed the facts with their principal victim and disgorged the money they had received as a result of their acts. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [18]

Fact that respondent readily admitted misuse of client trust account and had taken steps to change business practices to alleviate pressures that led to the misuse constituted a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [12]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

Restitution made voluntarily and before the commencement of disciplinary proceedings is entitled to consideration as a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [17]

Where respondent took a year to complete restitution, but never disavowed his debt; where respondent made partial payment before client complained, and had paid in full before disciplinary proceeding commenced; and where there was no evidence in the record tending to show whether respondent had the financial wherewithal to have made restitution any faster or sooner than he did, respondent's restitution was a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [18]

745.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

745.31 Coerced or belated restitution

Where respondent apologized to bankruptcy court for her misconduct in filing improper bankruptcy petitions, explained she realized her conduct was not justified by her intent to help her clients, and disgorged wrongfully obtained fees pursuant to sanctions order, her belated expressions of remorse and payment of sanctions showed recognition of wrongdoing and were entitled to moderate weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [10]

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Restitution paid under the force or threat of disciplinary proceedings does not have any mitigating effect. No restitution was paid in this case until after respondent received a letter from his client threatening to file a complaint with the State Bar, and most of the restitution was not paid until after the client actually filed the complaint. Accordingly, this was not found to be significantly mitigating. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [4]

Where bankruptcy court order which was not already part of record showed that restitution payments had been made to victim of respondent's misconduct, review department granted request to take judicial notice of such order. Undisputed evidence bearing on issue of restitution is important, if for no other purpose than to create an accurate record on the status of restitution. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [2]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In light of respondent's very limited ability to pay, it was appropriate to consider in mitigation fact that restitution ordered by criminal court was nearly complete, but such fact was given less weight than if restitution had begun earlier as a voluntary act. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [5]

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

Restitution of misappropriated client trust funds which occurred very belatedly and after the start of disciplinary proceedings was not entitled to any significant weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [9]

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Restitution payments made under the direct pressure of probation revocation proceedings were entitled to little weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [14]

Timing of restitution is a factor which may affect the degree of discipline. In the Matter of Morone (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 207. [2]

745.32 Inadequate showing generally

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Respondent's confession of his misdeeds to his client could be viewed as voluntary and therefore could be considered a mitigating circumstance as a recognition of wrongdoing. However, the weight attached to this factor was greatly reduced because a confession a year after the fact was not an objective step promptly taken spontaneously demonstrating remorse and recognition of the wrongdoing. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [5]

The weight accorded respondent's remorse and recognition of wrongdoing was reduced where respondent's guilt and shame did not result in objective steps promptly taken by him to atone for his misconduct. Expressing remorse for one's misconduct is an elementary moral precept which, standing alone, deserves no special consideration in determining the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [6]

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

745.39 Other reason

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

Respondent's confession of his misdeeds to his client could be viewed as voluntary and therefore could be considered a mitigating circumstance as a recognition of wrongdoing. However, the weight attached to this factor was greatly reduced because a confession a year after the fact was not an objective step promptly taken spontaneously demonstrating remorse and recognition of the wrongdoing. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [5]

The weight accorded respondent's remorse and recognition of wrongdoing was reduced where respondent's guilt and shame did not result in objective steps promptly taken by him to atone for his misconduct. Expressing remorse for one's misconduct is an elementary moral precept which, standing alone, deserves no special consideration in determining the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [6]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

Where respondent included declaration regarding abstinence in probation reports after hearing judge ruled that such declaration was required, such probation reports were relevant to issue of mitigation. However, respondent's change of behavior was not given very great weight in mitigation, where respondent could have avoided probation revocation proceeding altogether if respondent had heeded advice of probation department staff instead of continuing to follow respondent's own interpretation of probation conditions until rejected by source respondent considered sufficiently authoritative. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [15]

Respondent could not claim mitigating credit for restitution of misappropriated client funds, where the funds used for restitution were funds which the attorney had no right to use, and the client had to hire counsel and undergo litigation prior to receiving restitution. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [7]

Attorney's failure to make full restitution was an aggravating factor, where partial restitution was made largely out of attempt to deceive client; client's refusal to accept further restitution after State Bar complaint was filed did not extinguish attorney's moral obligation to complete restitution. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [7]

745.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

745.51 Coerced or belated restitution

Respondent's restitution payment to his client of misappropriated funds was assigned no mitigation credit. Although repayment occurred before the State Bar investigation, it was not spontaneous. Rather, respondent waited until his client reappeared with her attorney, demanded payment, and ultimately filed a lawsuit against him. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [6]

To give attorney mitigating credit for restitution he made to credit card company under pressure of State Bar's investigation and disciplinary proceedings and of credit card company's money judgement against him would inappropriately reward attorney for merely doing what he was already legally required to do. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [13]

Respondent's prompt compliance with a criminal restitution order was not a mitigating circumstance. An attorney is not entitled to any mitigation for restitution made as a matter of expediency or under pressure. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [6]

Payments of restitution prompted by litigation have no mitigating force, even if made prior to initiation of disciplinary proceedings; their only relevance is to amount of restitution which may be appropriate. Where respondent did not pay medical liens until after being sued by lienholders, such payment was entitled to no mitigating weight whatsoever. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [32]

Respondent's partial restitution and attempts to obtain an accountant in order to file his quarterly probation reports were not entitled to any mitigating weight, because he did not complete restitution until the eve of his disciplinary hearing, and failed to notify his probation monitor of his difficulty in complying with the disciplinary order requiring him to have an accountant certify his trust account records. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [14]

Restitution payments made under pressure of disciplinary proceedings are entitled to little or no weight in mitigation of discipline. However, whether restitution has been completed is important to deciding whether it should be required as a condition of probation, or, if disbarment is recommended, to whether respondent must make restitution as an issue bearing on rehabilitation for reinstatement. Thus, evidence of restitution payments made by respondent's father was relevant and properly admissible, even though not constituting mitigation, and review department granted motion to admit such evidence on review where hearing judge had declined to accept it. However, other evidence offered by respondent on review regarding Client Security Fund claim filed by respondent's client was not admitted by review department where it was not relevant to issues in proceeding. (See rule 570, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [12]

Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud based on fraudulently billing an insurance company for services rendered on behalf of its insureds, the insureds, as the attorney's clients, were victimized by the crime, and the crime therefore involved a client as a victim within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). The attorney's subsequent restitution to the insurance company, ordered as part of the attorney's criminal sentence, did not negate the harm caused by the crime. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [6]

Belated restitution is not an appropriate basis for a finding in mitigation, and review department declined to adopt such finding even though not challenged by the parties. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [5]

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

Where respondent made partial restitution of misappropriated client funds only after the institution of a disciplinary investigation, this negated the otherwise mitigating effect of his amends. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [7]

An offer of restitution made in response to litigation by the client, and long after the initiation of State Bar proceedings, does not constitute proper mitigation. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [30]

Restitution coming on the heels of threats of a lawsuit and after a State Bar complaint has been filed is not a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [6]

745.52 Inadequate showing generally

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

Respondent's declaration presented in an attempt to comply with rule 955 bore little mitigating weight when it was submitted almost two months after respondent's rule 955 affidavit was due to be filed with the Supreme Court, contained inaccurate information and misrepresented a hearing date in one case. The inaccurate declaration raised serious doubts as to respondent's credibility and was an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [8]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

An attorney's obligation to make restitution is not limited to legally enforceable claims. An attorney may have a moral obligation to make restitution as part of the duties of an attorney, in order to confront the harm caused by the theft. Nonetheless, payment of restitution is neither mandatory nor determinative of rehabilitation. The attorney's attitude toward payment to the victim is considered as well as the ability to pay. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [9]

An attorney's moral duty to make restitution is not limited to clients, and extends to an employer to whom the attorney owed a fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [10]

The law does not require false penitence; however, it does require that the respondent accept responsibility for his acts and come to grips with his culpability. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [6]

745.59 Other reason

To give attorney mitigating credit for restitution he made to credit card company under pressure of State Bar's investigation and disciplinary proceedings and of credit card company's money judgement against him would inappropriately reward attorney for merely doing what he was already legally required to do. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231. [13]

Tardy compliance with conditions of probation after being notified by the probation unit of the failure to comply is not a mitigating circumstance as it is not a "spontaneous" recognition of wrongdoing. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [6]

Respondent's belated filing of probation reports was not a mitigating circumstance as an objective step promptly taken spontaneously demonstrating remorse or recognition of wrongdoing where he filed the reports after he had knowledge of the probation revocation proceeding. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [3]

A disciplinary probationer's belated filing of required probation reports could, under appropriate circumstances, demonstrate recognition of wrongdoing, even if such reports were technically defective. However, where respondent did not file late reports until after he learned probation revocation proceeding was pending against him, his actions were not a spontaneous recognition of wrongdoing and thus were not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [8]

A respondent has the burden of proving mitigation by clear and convincing evidence. While respondent's honest belief in his innocence was not an aggravating factor, it precluded finding by clear and convincing evidence that respondent's recognition of his wrongdoing was a mitigating factor. Recognition of wrongdoing does not require false penitence, but it does require acceptance of culpability. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [19]

750 Passage of time and rehabilitation (1.6(h); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(viii))

750.10 Found

Although the hearing judge neither referenced Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.2(e)(viii) nor specifically found respondent to be rehabilitated, this does not foreclose consideration of respondent's three and one–half years of successful post–misconduct practice since the Supreme Court has found mitigation where there was no specific showing of rehabilitation other than the practice of law for a period of time without further misconduct. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [5]

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

Where respondent was legitimately entitled to fees for services to wife in marital dissolution, and honestly believed that couple had allocated trust funds to husband in marital settlement in order to prevent respondent from applying trust funds to wife's debt for fees, there was not clear and convincing evidence that respondent's failure to make restitution of funds to husband was an aggravating circumstance. Respondent's legal position in defense of his retention and use of husband's funds did not evidence a persistent unwillingness to conform his behavior to ethical standards, and did not undercut the force of his mitigating evidence of subsequent reputable practice and community service. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

Respondent's long period of postmisconduct practice of law without further discipline was a significant mitigating circumstance, because it demonstrated that respondent was able to adhere to acceptable standards of professional behavior and was not likely to commit misconduct in the future. Respondent's good faith defense of his innocence, in which he honestly believed, did not constitute a lack of understanding of his misconduct so as to preclude such finding, especially where respondent offered evidence about his sensitivity to misconduct of which he had been found culpable at an earlier stage in the proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [20]

Where respondent was culpable of failing to set aside $942 of his legal fee in a trust account pending resolution of a dispute with his client; aggravating factor of bad faith arose from respondent's intent to serve his clients rather than from any venal purpose; aggravating factors were outweighed by mitigating factors including long period of unblemished practice since misconduct, indicating unlikelihood of further misconduct; and prior similar cases indicated that it would be appropriate to depart from the 90-day minimum actual suspension for trust account violations, appropriate discipline was private reproval conditioned on passage of professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [22]

Evidence that an attorney has taken steps to deal with an alcohol problem is mitigating evidence that may properly be taken into account in determining the degree and nature of discipline, but does not eliminate the initial misconduct as an appropriate basis for discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [11]

Where respondent's drunk driving convictions involved more serious misconduct than in prior reported disciplinary cases involving drunk driving, including repeated abusive conduct with law enforcement officers, and respondent had two prior disciplinary reprovals, but respondent presented favorable evidence of professional ability and character references as well as efforts toward overcoming his addiction to alcohol, a 60-day actual suspension was appropriate to serve the aims of attorney discipline and, coupled with three years of probation, to assist in convincing respondent to deal with his alcohol abuse problems seriously. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [7]

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

No question on respondent's application for admission to practice law called upon respondent, as an applicant, to reveal criminal conduct for which respondent had not yet been convicted or arrested and for which respondent was not awaiting trial. If any such question had been asked, respondent would have had a good argument for withholding information that would lead to criminal liability. Nothing in respondent's manner of completing the application, or in respondent's subsequent two-month delay in reporting to the State Bar a criminal indictment handed down after the application was completed, undermined respondent's showing of rehabilitation from pre-admission criminal conduct. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [1]

If an attorney engages in criminal conduct, it is not a minimum requirement for rehabilitation that the attorney turn himself or herself in to law enforcement authorities. Where the attorney was not hiding from anyone except those who wished him to resume his criminal activities; he cooperated fully with law enforcement once asked, and he presented character witnesses who attested to his current good character, the hearing judge's finding of rehabilitation was appropriate. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [2]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Respondent's lack of a prior record was not a significant mitigating factor since he had only been in practice for eight years prior to his misconduct. However, where respondent had practiced without incident for more than twelve years since the misconduct occurred, he was entitled to have this taken into account, and the review department concluded based on respondent's record that respondent's criminal conduct was aberrational and unlikely to recur. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [13]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

Although the Supreme Court requires that lawyers' claims in mitigation based upon substance abuse show adequate evidence of a causal connection between the abuse and misconduct and a meaningful and sustained rehabilitative period, the Court does not require that the respondent's rehabilitation be complete to qualify as mitigation. Where respondent showed that his marijuana use and alcohol abuse led in part to his criminal activity, and that he had undertaken a program of steady progress toward rehabilitation, and had successfully dealt with his addiction and maintained sobriety, mitigation was properly found. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [8]

Where attorney represented to State Bar Court that no disciplinary investigations against him were pending, examiner's failure to rebut this contention, as permitted by rule 573, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, warranted inference that State Bar did not dispute attorney's representation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [16]

If a misappropriation of entrusted funds results from an attorney's laxity in supervising office staff, and not from an intent to defraud, and remedial steps are instituted by the attorney upon discovery of the situation, further underscoring the lack of fraudulent intent, far less discipline than disbarment is appropriate. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [17]

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

A delay of approximately three and one half years in the filing of a notice to show cause after the client's initial complaint, and a period of more than six years of unblemished practice between the misconduct and the disciplinary hearing, were properly considered mitigating factors. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [9]

Where respondents had been in practice without prior discipline for approximately four years before the commission of their misconduct, their records were far too short to constitute significant mitigation, but it was appropriate to consider their prior clean records in conjunction with their subsequent good conduct to demonstrate the aberrational nature of their misconduct. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [14]

Where respondent's misconduct occurred four years prior to disciplinary hearing, and five years prior to proceedings on review, and respondent had not committed misconduct since then, this constituted a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [13]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

750.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

750.31 Insufficient time since misconduct

750.32 Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

The passage of considerable time since misconduct and proof of subsequent rehabilitation constitute a mitigating circumstance. Where respondent practiced law without disciplinary problems for more than four years after the end of his misconduct and then held a responsible job with a mortgage lending business for more than two years, such conduct was clearly to respondent's credit, but did not establish full rehabilitation from a very serious criminal record. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [8]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

750.39 Other reason

Where respondent included declaration regarding abstinence in probation reports after hearing judge ruled that such declaration was required, such probation reports were relevant to issue of mitigation. However, respondent's change of behavior was not given very great weight in mitigation, where respondent could have avoided probation revocation proceeding altogether if respondent had heeded advice of probation department staff instead of continuing to follow respondent's own interpretation of probation conditions until rejected by source respondent considered sufficiently authoritative. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [15]

750.50 Declined to find

750.51 Insufficient time since misconduct

In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.

750.52 Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

Where respondent failed to offer clear and convincing proof of rehabilitation, respondent did not establish mitigation under standard 1.2(e)(viii), which requires not only the passage of considerable time since the acts of professional misconduct, but also subsequent rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468. [8]

The fact that misconduct arose from aberrant facts and circumstances has been accorded mitigating weight in appropriate cases. However, where respondent's prior misconduct had involved multiple acts over his relatively few years of practice, and his prior and current misconduct together spanned six of his ten years in practice, it was not appropriate to consider respondent's misconduct as aberrational. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

Where respondent almost completely abdicated to a non-lawyer his professional duties with respect to a personal injury practice; failed to take prompt, realistic action to stop the non-lawyer's capping practices, and had not presented clear evidence regarding rehabilitation and necessary changes in his practice, then despite mitigating factors including respondent's cooperation with law enforcement and State Bar and satisfaction of medical liens out of his own funds, appropriate discipline for protection of public was three-year stayed suspension with three years probation and actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the general law. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [7]

Evidence of uncharged misconduct may not be used as an independent basis for discipline, but may be used in a contested proceeding for purposes such as impeaching the credibility of the respondent's testimony regarding rehabilitation, or establishing evidence of aggravating circumstances. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [6]

Additional misconduct which occurred after respondent's claimed rehabilitation, and respondent's subsequent failure to participate fully in disciplinary proceedings, were cogent evidence that respondent had not yet dealt effectively with the problems underlying his misconduct. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [15]

Respondent's sporadic participation in disciplinary proceedings, despite warning from hearing judge regarding consequences of continuing to be derelict in duty to State Bar, demonstrated both respondent's indifference to his professional obligations and a substantial risk to the public. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [17]

Where two separate disciplinary proceedings were consolidated on review, the first proceeding did not constitute prior discipline for the purpose of enhanced discipline in the consolidated matter. Nonetheless, where the misconduct involved in the second proceeding had continued during the period that the first proceeding was pending in hearing department, the fact that respondent engaged in additional misconduct while he was aware that his conduct was being scrutinized in a pending disciplinary proceeding was significant. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [18]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

750.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

Absence of evidence of rehabilitation from drug and alcohol problems was significant where respondent's probation violation involved failure to give adequate assurance of compliance with probation requirement of abstention from alcohol and drugs. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [21]

The lack of any subsequent misconduct charges against a respondent who had moved to another state was not compelling mitigation, since respondent had not been representing California clients and misconduct allegations arising in another state would not necessarily be reported to discipline authorities in California. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [44]

Evidence of convicted attorney's efforts toward rehabilitation would be relevant at the hearing on final discipline, but could not be relied upon in proceedings seeking to vacate interim suspension because of lack of opportunity for pretrial discovery and full development of facts. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [7]

755 Prejudicial delay in proceeding (1.6(i); 1986 Standard 1.2(e)(ix))

755.10 Found

Despite absence of prejudice that would warrant dismissal of charges, State Bar's nearly five–year delay in filing disciplinary charges was accorded considerable mitigative weight. In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [10]

Where extended time had passed since hearing judge's decision in consolidated probation revocation and original discipline matters, during which time respondent had been ineligible to practice law, review department recommended that actual suspension in original discipline matter be fully concurrent with, and retroactive to effective date of, respondent's actual suspension in probation revocation matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [25]

Excessive delay in conducting disciplinary proceedings, not attributable to respondent and resulting in prejudice to respondent, should be taken into account in mitigation, especially in probation revocation proceedings which are required to be expedited. Where, due to delay in proceedings, actual suspension in probation matter would not commence until after start of actual suspension in separate matter which was supposed to be served concurrently with prior suspensions, review department modified recommended discipline in probation matter to provide for actual suspension to be served concurrently with previously ordered actual suspension to extent it was still in effect. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [16]

Credit for interim suspension in conviction matters is not restricted to cases in which there are compelling mitigating factors. All facts and circumstances, including unexplained delay in State Bar proceedings, are considered, and all relevant factors are balanced in arriving at a proper discipline. Disciplinary recommendations should not penalize the respondent for appealing a criminal conviction or contesting the State Bar Court's findings and recommendations. Where lengthy interim suspension has occurred, the appropriate consideration in determining whether prospective suspension is necessary is whether the facts and circumstances of a particular matter require a further period of actual suspension for the protection of the public, the profession or the courts. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [13]

A delay of approximately three and one half years in the filing of a notice to show cause after the client's initial complaint, and a period of more than six years of unblemished practice between the misconduct and the disciplinary hearing, were properly considered mitigating factors. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [9]

755.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

755.31 Delay not sufficiently lengthy

755.32 Inadequate showing of prejudice

Where notice to show cause was not filed until about five years after misconduct and over a year after State Bar's initial inquiry to attorney regarding misconduct, and attorney had assumed matter had been dropped and thus had not taken steps to preserve recollection, there was some evidence that attorney was prejudiced in legally cognizable fashion by State Bar's delay. However, where attorney did not point to any specific factual issue as to which better-preserved recollection could have materially affected outcome of disciplinary proceeding, delay in prosecution had little weight as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [12]

Nothing in lengthy pendency of probation revocation proceeding delayed or prevented respondent's filing of application for termination of suspension pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [17]

755.33 Respondent contributed to delay

755.39 Other reason

755.50 Declined to find

755.52 Inadequate showing of prejudice

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.

Where respondent failed to show that delay in his disciplinary proceeding was not attributable to him and that it caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice, the delay was not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [13]

Excessive delay in the conduct of a disciplinary proceeding may be a mitigating circumstance, but the attorney must demonstrate that the delay impeded the preparation or presentation of an effective defense. A delay in a disciplinary proceeding merits consideration only if it has caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice. Where respondent was able to present evidence on all issues as to which respondent claimed prejudicial delay, and did not specify what missing evidence would have shown, respondent failed to show that delay caused specific prejudice. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [21]

Respondent was not prejudiced by inability to corroborate testimony regarding trust account practices, due to destruction of respondent's trust account bank records, because hearing judge essentially accepted respondent's testimony regarding trust account practices, and respondent admitted gross negligence in handling clients' funds. Accordingly, delay in prosecution was not a mitigating factor. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [17]

Where a fire which destroyed some of respondent's files did not occur until over a year after respondent had promised the State Bar to check his files in response to a client complaint, respondent demonstrated no prejudice from the State Bar's delay in bringing formal charges arising out of the complaint. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [1]

The passage of time since respondent's misconduct and the failure of the State Bar to consolidate respondent's two disciplinary matters did not render the disbarment recommendation in the second matter unfair. Consolidation of disciplinary matters, while preferable when reasonably possible and not prejudicial, is not mandatory, and independent consideration of separate matters involving the same attorney is not uncommon. Where an investigation by state law enforcement and the State Bar of respondent's misconduct in the second matter was still ongoing after the initiation and disposition of respondent's earlier disciplinary matter, consolidation would not have been possible. Further, it could not be presumed that if the matters had been consolidated, the recommended discipline would have been suspension rather than disbarment, given the far greater seriousness of the misconduct in the second matter. Finally, respondent had shown no prejudice from the delay, and had benefited from being able to practice almost continually in the interim. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Delays in disciplinary proceedings merit consideration only if they have caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice (e.g., by impairing the presentation of evidence). Where respondent was not prepared to state that his case would have been stronger if no delays had occurred, and respondent received credit for time on interim suspension following conviction, respondent failed to demonstrate prejudice from delay in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [1]

Evidence provided by State Bar demonstrated that closure and reopening of investigation of disciplinary matter was in compliance with applicable rules and did not bar disciplinary proceedings; respondent had not been prejudiced by delay. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [12]

755.53 Respondent contributed to delay

Where respondent failed to show that delay in his disciplinary proceeding was not attributable to him and that it caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice, the delay was not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [13]

755.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

757 Restitution made without threat or force of proceedings (1.6(j))

Note: See also topic number 745 et seq.

757.10 Found

757.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

757.31 Coerced or belated restitution

757.32 Inadequate showing generally

757.39 Other reason

757.50 Declined to find

757.51 Coerced or belated restitution

757.52 Inadequate showing generally

757.59 Other reason

760 Marital, family, and/or financial difficulties

Note: See also topic number 725 et seq.

760.10 Found

760.11 With expert testimony

In disciplinary matters, greater mitigating weight is given to financial pressures if the pressures are extreme and result from circumstances beyond the control of the attorney, such as undiagnosed psychiatric problems. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [1]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

760.12 Without expert testimony

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In light of respondent's very limited ability to pay, it was appropriate to consider in mitigation fact that restitution ordered by criminal court was nearly complete, but such fact was given less weight than if restitution had begun earlier as a voluntary act. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [5]

Severe emotional problems which can be related to the misconduct at issue can be considered to have a mitigating weight. Respondent's misrepresentations to his clients, made two days after the funeral of his murdered son, while not excusable, were tempered in their otherwise aggravating effect by respondent's emotional stress, and the hearing judge should have given such stress more weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [13]

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

Hearing judge should not have entirely discounted respondent's testimony regarding family problems, on ground that no causal connection was established by expert testimony between personal problems and misconduct. The Supreme Court has often considered lay testimony of emotional problems as mitigation. It was readily conceivable that respondent's concern for his wife and unborn child and his ability to support them would cloud his judgment as he stated it did, and be directly responsible for some of his misconduct; accordingly, review department gave such evidence more weight than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [9]

Supreme Court precedent has not laid down a per se rule that serious marital difficulties cannot be raised in mitigation without the aid of expert testimony. The Supreme Court has often accepted lay testimony regarding marital difficulties as appropriate mitigation. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [17]

Where attorney's two instances of misconduct took place during the same short period of time, and attorney attributed them to the same problem of financial difficulty, this factor could properly be considered in mitigation. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

760.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

760.31 Lack of expert testimony

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

Personal stress factors, such as the estrangement, illness, or death of a family member, can constitute mitigating evidence. However, they were properly accorded less weight than would otherwise have been appropriate, where there was evidence that the attorney was responsive to other clients during the same period, the attorney's own testimony did not convincingly show what role these stress factors played in the misconduct, and there was no expert testimony clearly establishing a nexus between the personal difficulties and the attorney's disregard of professional duties. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [10]

760.32 Lack of causal relation to misconduct

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

Marital problems can be a mitigating circumstance. However, such emotional problems are not mitigating unless they are extreme and are directly responsible for the misconduct. Where the asserted cause for the marital problems was the financial pressures respondent was experiencing, and where the record indicated, at most, that respondent and his wife constantly argued over their financial problems, the marital problems were not found to be extreme. In addition, respondent failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the marital difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [3]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Personal stress factors, such as the estrangement, illness, or death of a family member, can constitute mitigating evidence. However, they were properly accorded less weight than would otherwise have been appropriate, where there was evidence that the attorney was responsive to other clients during the same period, the attorney's own testimony did not convincingly show what role these stress factors played in the misconduct, and there was no expert testimony clearly establishing a nexus between the personal difficulties and the attorney's disregard of professional duties. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [10]

Failure of respondent's estranged wife, who worked as his secretary, to deliver telephone messages did not excuse respondent's abandonment of clients. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [12]

Without evidence that death of respondent's parent resulted in disabling psychological distress, record did not show that attorney's failure to prepare trust documents was affected thereby. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [13]

Where respondent did not demonstrate that he suffered from such extreme personal pressures related to his financial difficulties that his misconduct could have been reasonably understandable as a desperate response to such pressures, respondent's financial difficulties were not considered a significant factor in mitigation. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [17]

760.33 Problem not sufficiently severe

Financial difficulties can be considered in mitigation. However, in misappropriation cases, financial problems are given significant weight in mitigation only if they are extreme and result from circumstances not reasonably foreseeable or that are beyond the attorney's control. The evidence presented indicated that respondent's financial pressures differed little from the financial pressures many attorneys experience at some point in their career. Respondent's practice simply was not generating enough income. No extraordinary or unforeseeable event caused this problem. The risk of financial difficulties should have been reasonably foreseeable to respondent, especially in view of the fact that he had practiced in his community for many years under similar financial conditions. Therefore, respondent's financial difficulties deserved little weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [2]

Marital problems can be a mitigating circumstance. However, such emotional problems are not mitigating unless they are extreme and are directly responsible for the misconduct. Where the asserted cause for the marital problems was the financial pressures respondent was experiencing, and where the record indicated, at most, that respondent and his wife constantly argued over their financial problems, the marital problems were not found to be extreme. In addition, respondent failed to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the marital difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [3]

Stress from pressure of other business was not sufficiently linked to misappropriation of client's funds to constitute mitigation; family health difficulties also were not mitigating when they arose after the misappropriation occurred; financial pressure from inability to pay office rent was entitled to little weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [11]

Without evidence that death of respondent's parent resulted in disabling psychological distress, record did not show that attorney's failure to prepare trust documents was affected thereby. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [13]

Where respondent did not demonstrate that he suffered from such extreme personal pressures related to his financial difficulties that his misconduct could have been reasonably understandable as a desperate response to such pressures, respondent's financial difficulties were not considered a significant factor in mitigation. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [17]

760.34 Inadequate showing of rehabilitation

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

760.39 Other reason

Financial difficulties can be considered in mitigation. However, in misappropriation cases, financial problems are given significant weight in mitigation only if they are extreme and result from circumstances not reasonably foreseeable or that are beyond the attorney's control. The evidence presented indicated that respondent's financial pressures differed little from the financial pressures many attorneys experience at some point in their career. Respondent's practice simply was not generating enough income. No extraordinary or unforeseeable event caused this problem. The risk of financial difficulties should have been reasonably foreseeable to respondent, especially in view of the fact that he had practiced in his community for many years under similar financial conditions. Therefore, respondent's financial difficulties deserved little weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [2]

Disbarment was warranted for convictions of grand theft and forgery unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Despite hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's crimes were aberrant and brought on by incredible psychological stress due to marital and business problems, review department did not agree that mitigation was compelling. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [5]

While financial stress may be a factor in mitigation, neither an attorney's lack of management skills necessary to succeed in private practice nor the difficulties inherent in solo practice are ordinarily considered mitigating. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [16]

760.50 Declined to find

760.51 Lack of expert testimony

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

760.52 Lack of causal relation to misconduct

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

Office workload does not generally serve to substantially mitigate misconduct. Stressful personal problems may mitigate misconduct, but where respondent's asserted workload or personal problems occurred during first year of administration of probate estate, such problems did not adequately explain five-year delay in administration of estate, and did not constitute mitigation. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [14]

Stress from pressure of other business was not sufficiently linked to misappropriation of client's funds to constitute mitigation; family health difficulties also were not mitigating when they arose after the misappropriation occurred; financial pressure from inability to pay office rent was entitled to little weight in mitigation. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [11]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

Fact that an attorney was undergoing therapy at the time of the disciplinary hearing did not constitute relevant mitigation where attorney did not present expert testimony establishing psychological problems at time of misconduct, and did not demonstrate recovery from such problems such that they would no longer affect his fitness to practice. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [17]

760.53 Problem not sufficiently severe

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

760.59 Other reason

Where respondent failed (1) to establish through expert testimony that his depression, his physical maladies, and his financial difficulties were directly responsible for his misconduct and (2) to establish through clear and convincing evidence that he no longer suffered from the difficulties and disabilities or even that he could take, and was taking, steps to overcome them, the difficulties and disabilities were not treated as mitigating circumstances.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[4]

Financial difficulties may be considered in mitigation if they are extreme and result from circumstances that are not reasonably foreseeable or that are beyond the attorney's control. Respondent bears the burden of establishing mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Respondent failed to present a complete picture of his financial condition and therefore failed to establish that any financial problems he was facing were extreme or beyond his control. Further, the little evidence that was presented indicated that respondent's income was limited at the time he entered into the stipulation to facts and disposition in the underlying disciplinary case. Thus, respondent also failed to establish that any financial problems he experienced were not reasonably foreseeable. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[6]

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Every attorney convicted of a felony or crime of moral turpitude can anticipate an order of interim suspension and attendant hardships, but hardship to the attorney's family does not outweigh the need to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the legal profession pending a full hearing on the merits. Where, due to delay in transmittal of conviction, attorney had had several months to make alternative employment arrangements, and attorney had given no details of his current income, recent earnings, or efforts to seek other employment, attorney's showing of hardship was insufficient in light of all factors to constitute good cause to vacate interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [9]

765 Substantial pro bono work

Note: See also topic number 740 et seq.

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

765.10 Found

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283

In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273.

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511.

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

Respondent's leadership in minority bar associations, service as a delegate to the State Bar Conference of Delegates, and post-misconduct service as a municipal court judge pro tempore constituted mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [12]

Testimonials from clients regarding respondent's service on their behalf, in some instances on a pro bono basis, constituted mitigating evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [12]

Evidence of respondent's extensive pro bono activities and community involvement was entitled to greater weight as mitigating evidence than given to it in the hearing judge's decision, in which it was not mentioned. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [16]

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

Respondent deserved mitigating credit for practice on behalf of poor and disadvantaged clients, which should have been weighed more heavily than did the hearing judge. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [9]

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

Testimony of several highly reputable character witnesses attesting to respondent's otherwise high standing in the legal community and high ethical standards and demonstration of diligence on behalf of clients, as well as substantial community service and pro bono activities, should have been given more than a little weight in mitigation; review department found it to be significant. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [12]

Medical volunteer work demonstrated community service and was properly relied on in mitigation, but artistic activities were not mitigating factors. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [15]

A respondent's own testimony regarding the respondent's community service may be considered as some evidence in mitigation notwithstanding that it does not meet the requirement that good character be established by a wide range of references. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [16]

765.30 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

765.31 Insufficient evidence

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189

Respondent performed pro bono legal work for a few hours each week during much of his legal career. Where respondent offered only his own testimony to establish this pro bono activity, only modest weight was afforded to this mitigation evidence. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [2]

Respondent's 12 years of service as a judge pro tem was entitled to substantial mitigation credit. In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117 [4]

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Respondent's having performed a substantial amount of pro bono work for indigents and minorities, at considerable personal sacrifice due to hostility engendered on the part of local press and elected officials, constituted legitimate mitigation. However, where respondent's testimony was the only evidence on the subject, and meaning of "substantial" was not clear from record, respondent's pro bono record could not be given as much weight in mitigation as in some other cases. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [29]

Where attorney testified to involvement in pro bono activities, but hearing referee's findings did not specify extent of such involvement and evidence in record was sketchy, review department accorded such evidence little weight as mitigation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [8]

765.32 Pro bono work not substantial

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

765.39 Other reason

While respondent's representation of clients for reduced or no fees constituted evidence in mitigation, such evidence was given little mitigating weight where the evidence established that respondent was eligible to receive substantial attorney fees in many of the cases and it was therefore unclear whether respondent's motive for taking such cases was to help others or to collect attorney fees. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315. [15]

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

An attorney owes the same fiduciary obligations to all clients, paying or nonpaying. Impecunious clients are ill-served by well-meaning attorneys who fail to deliver the services for which they were engaged. Nor are the courts or public served by litigation brought without likelihood it can be realistically be prosecuted to completion. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [4]

Respondent's public service work and representation of juveniles under court appointment deserved credit and recognition, but did not relieve respondent of his restitution obligations; it was incumbent on respondent to manage his limited finances to meet those obligations. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [15]

765.50 Declined to find

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387

765.51 Insufficient evidence

Where respondent's charitable work in the form of donating to charity the sales proceeds of a compact disc he recorded was uncontroverted, respondent's testimony on its own is not sufficient to establish his charitable work as a mitigating factor since there was no evidence as to where the proceeds were delivered or any supporting witnesses to attest to the work. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [6]

In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Where respondent moved to augment record on review to include documentary evidence regarding respondent's pro bono activities, but respondent did not establish good cause why such evidence could not have been presented to hearing department, review department declined to consider such evidence. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [15]

List of representative cases respondent had handled, including pro bono matters, which was attached to respondent's brief on review, and expanded from similar list introduced at trial, was of minimal value in terms of mitigation, especially without explanation. Review department therefore declined to augment record to include list and did not consider it. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [11]

A record of extensive representation of pro bono clients is a proper factor in mitigation, but where respondent testified that he represented primarily lower income and middle income clients, and that over half his clients were served either on a pro bono or reduced fee basis, such evidence was too sketchy to support a finding in mitigation based on pro bono work. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [15]

765.52 Pro bono work not substantial

765.59 Other reason

Clients of limited or no means are entitled to able, responsive and trustworthy counsel from the attorneys they hire. Improper or unethical conduct is not excused because the attorney represents those of limited means. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [45]

Medical volunteer work demonstrated community service and was properly relied on in mitigation, but artistic activities were not mitigating factors. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [15]

790 Other mitigating factors

791 Found

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Yagman (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 788.

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442.

Although agreeable demeanor is not a recognized factor in mitigation, where respondent committed a violent crime, the hearing judge's finding that respondent had an agreeable demeanor and was not violent or aggressive, was a factor to consider in determining the degree of discipline because it was relevant to his potential capacity for future violence. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [2]

Although the record indicated that respondent was not likely to commit similar misconduct in the future, the discipline system also has a responsibility to preserve the integrity of the legal profession. That concern persuaded the review department that public discipline, including a period of suspension, was warranted for an attorney's conviction of assault with a firearm, with the enhancement that he discharged a firearm at an occupied motor vehicle which caused great bodily injury to the person of another. However, given the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that respondent had already been interimly suspended for ten and one-half months as the result of his conviction, and comparable case law, the review department did not believe that a period of prospective actual suspension was necessary. Accordingly, it recommended a period of stayed suspension along with a period of probation with conditions. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [6]

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

Respondent's ignorance of statute requiring attorneys to report court-ordered sanctions to State Bar was not a defense to violation of such statute, but respondent's awareness that court itself had reported sanctions to State Bar substantially mitigated such violation. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [4]

Even under the threat of a malpractice action by a client, an attorney is not excused from complying with the duty to provide the client with his or her file. The trial court's determination of the requirements of discovery in the malpractice case is irrelevant to this ethical obligation. Where a client sued respondent for malpractice and respondent failed to turn over the client's file on request, respondent violated the rule requiring release of the client's file, but his misconduct was mitigated by his adherence to the discovery conditions allowing access to the client's files ordered by the trial judge in the malpractice case. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [12]

The lack of judicial precedent clearly establishing an attorney's duty at the time of the attorney's misconduct may be considered on the issue of possible mitigation. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [11]

Where respondent settled a personal injury claim on behalf of a Medi-Cal beneficiary without ensuring the payment of the applicable Medi-Cal lien, an issue to be addressed on remand was the effect, if any, on the appropriate degree of discipline of the policy adopted by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel, with the approval of a committee of the Board of Governors, against prosecuting future health care provider "collection" cases, at least for private lienholders. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [15]

A respondent's substantial compliance with rule 955 is mitigating evidence which can influence the determination whether to impose discipline less than disbarment, the generally imposed sanction for a wilful violation of the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [6]

Where respondent had awakened to his responsibilities to the discipline system and participated in rule 955 proceeding, had produced evidence that he posed less risk to clients than suggested by his prior disciplinary record, gave proper notice in compliance with rule 955(a), and filed the required affidavit only 14 days late and before referral order was issued or formal disciplinary proceedings initiated, respondent's very brief failure to comply with rule 955 warranted a very modest sanction. However, even given the wide range of discipline available for a rule 955 violation, it would require an extraordinary case where no discipline of any form was merited. Considering the emphasis placed by the Supreme Court on strict compliance with rule 955, as well as considerations of attorney discipline, maintenance of the standards of the profession, and respondent's rehabilitation, some discipline was required. A 30-day suspension would serve to underline to respondent the seriousness of his duty to comply with all aspects of court orders. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [7]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

Uncontroverted evidence of respondent's church, community, and volunteer activities was appropriate to consider in mitigation. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [6]

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

If an attorney engages in criminal conduct, it is not a minimum requirement for rehabilitation that the attorney turn himself or herself in to law enforcement authorities. Where the attorney was not hiding from anyone except those who wished him to resume his criminal activities; he cooperated fully with law enforcement once asked, and he presented character witnesses who attested to his current good character, the hearing judge's finding of rehabilitation was appropriate. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [2]

The extraordinarily harsh effect of a disciplinary proceeding on the respondent and the respondent's ability to earn a living may be taken into account in assessing the appropriate discipline. Respondent's resignation from a law firm because of concern about the effect on the firm of charges of moral turpitude (later disproved) demonstrated extreme conscientiousness. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [13]

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

Although an attorney is culpable for misconduct committed by inadequately supervised office staff, the degree of the attorney's personal involvement in the misconduct is relevant to the degree of culpability and the appropriate discipline to be imposed. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [5]

If a misappropriation of entrusted funds results from an attorney's laxity in supervising office staff, and not from an intent to defraud, and remedial steps are instituted by the attorney upon discovery of the situation, further underscoring the lack of fraudulent intent, far less discipline than disbarment is appropriate. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [17]

While gross negligence is not a defense to a charge of misappropriation, the absence of evidence of intentional misappropriation is a substantial factor in mitigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [19]

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

Fact that respondent readily admitted misuse of client trust account and had taken steps to change business practices to alleviate pressures that led to the misuse constituted a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [12]

Where attorney's two instances of misconduct took place during the same short period of time, and attorney attributed them to the same problem of financial difficulty, this factor could properly be considered in mitigation. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [15]

793 Found but discounted or not relied on

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

Respondent's 15 years of blemish-free practice prior to committing the misconduct did not indicate that his misconduct was aberrational where respondent intentionally misappropriated a substantial sum of money from his client for no apparent reason other than to keep his practice afloat. Then, for the next year, he repeatedly covered-up his misdeeds by means of misrepresentation and concealment. Thus, the totality of respondent's misconduct was serious and repeated. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [7]

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

While the leniency of an attorney's criminal sentence might be relevant in assessing final discipline, punishment by the criminal court serves a fundamentally different purpose than the provisions of the State Bar Act, and leniency of the criminal sentence therefore is not relevant to the determination whether there is good cause to vacate the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [6]

795 Declined to find

Naivete had nothing to do with respondent's decision to enter into a business relationship with a resigned attorney that involved capping and fee splitting. Most importantly, naivete had little if anything to do with the criminal recklessness respondent engaged in which resulted in two felony convictions. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [15]

An attorney's lack of experience is not a mitigating circumstance. It is when an attorney is newly licensed or begins to practice in a new area of law that he should take proper steps necessary to learn governing law, rules, and regulations. In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498. [30]

No mitigating weight was given to the fact that respondent was not a leader in the conspiracy to defraud the Internal Revenue Service where respondent knew virtually from the outset that what he was doing was wrong, participated as an equal in the conspiracy, decided with the others in the conspiracy on various modifications to the scheme to assure its ongoing success, drew an equal amount of the fees, and misappropriated the names of his own clients in furtherance of the conspiracy. In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [6]

No mitigating credit was given to any changes respondent made to his office practices as the changes would not prevent similar misconduct, where, as here, the misconduct resulted from moral deficiency, not faulty office procedures. In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 166. [5]

Even if issue had properly been before review department on summary review, respondent would not have been entitled to any mitigating credit for self reporting to State Bar his misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of clients because respondent had a pre-existing statutory duty to report his criminal conviction. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [1]

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

The pressure of a prior disciplinary proceeding does not justify lenient discipline for the current misconduct. By filing the initial notice to show cause in the prior disciplinary proceeding, the State Bar alerted respondent to his questionable behavior. Instead of providing mitigation, the prior disciplinary proceeding demonstrated the need for respondent to examine his conduct carefully and to avoid further ethical violations. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [7]

Lack of experience in managing a law office does not mitigate misconduct. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [9]

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

As respondent was under a duty to report his criminal guilty plea to the State Bar under Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (o)(5), his action in doing so was not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [5]

Criminal court's lenient sentence did not change the nature of respondent's convictions of felony conspiracy to commit theft and theft for disciplinary purposes and was therefore not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [7]

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

Where respondent committed a number of acts of moral turpitude over a period lasting about four years, such misconduct was not aberrational. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [6]

The occurrence of misconduct during a short time can be a mitigating circumstance. However, where respondent's acts of wrongdoing, including misrepresentation to hearing judge in disciplinary proceeding, spanned more than three years, her claim to such mitigation was without merit. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [9]

Fact that respondent's misconduct involved client who was member of respondent's family was not mitigating but rather aggravating circumstance, since respondent's family ties to client made respondent more aware of client's vulnerabilities and trust client placed in respondent. In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233. [16]

Respondent was not entitled to finding in mitigation based on asserted reliance on advice of probation clerk regarding due date of probation reports, where hearing judge found clerk's testimony denying such advice credible; where any confusion respondent may have had regarding due date of reports was not reasonable; and where letter sent to respondent by probation department contained information which should have dispelled any confusion respondent may have had regarding due dates of reports. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Where respondent and his paralegal testified that respondent had reduced his case load and was more involved in operation of practice, but respondent had not shown that his office was problem-free or properly organized, and did not testify that he had designed and implemented an office organization plan, and where respondent's misconduct lasted at least three and a half years and included repeated misuse of settlement funds and numerous ethical violations, respondent's misconduct was not aberrational. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [14]

Where respondent's misconduct lasted over a long period of time, it could not be considered aberrational, despite his lengthy record of prior practice without misconduct and his good reputation in the legal community. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [15]

List of representative cases respondent had handled, including pro bono matters, which was attached to respondent's brief on review, and expanded from similar list introduced at trial, was of minimal value in terms of mitigation, especially without explanation. Review department therefore declined to augment record to include list and did not consider it. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [11]

Where respondent's declaration attached to stipulation suggested mitigating circumstances, but stipulation did not specify whether State Bar accepted statements in declaration as true and hearing judge did not indicate whether statements were found to be persuasive, review department declined to reach conclusion regarding possible mitigating factors suggested by declaration. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [8]

Respondent's partial restitution and attempts to obtain an accountant in order to file his quarterly probation reports were not entitled to any mitigating weight, because he did not complete restitution until the eve of his disciplinary hearing, and failed to notify his probation monitor of his difficulty in complying with the disciplinary order requiring him to have an accountant certify his trust account records. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [14]

The fact that misconduct arose from aberrant facts and circumstances has been accorded mitigating weight in appropriate cases. However, where respondent's prior misconduct had involved multiple acts over his relatively few years of practice, and his prior and current misconduct together spanned six of his ten years in practice, it was not appropriate to consider respondent's misconduct as aberrational. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [5]

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

Office workload does not generally serve to substantially mitigate misconduct. Stressful personal problems may mitigate misconduct, but where respondent's asserted workload or personal problems occurred during first year of administration of probate estate, such problems did not adequately explain five-year delay in administration of estate, and did not constitute mitigation. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [14]

Respondent's contention that he detrimentally relied on advice from his probation monitor and counsel regarding compliance with rule 955 might have been persuasive as mitigation if respondent had raised it at the hearing level and produced supporting evidence. However, where record did not support and even contradicted such contention, review department rejected respondent's attempt to argue it as mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [3]

In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim that his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. Respondent's conduct in connection with such transfer constituted evidence in aggravation, because respondent irresponsibly executed in blank hundreds of substitution association or substitution of counsel forms and relinquished of the client files to successor counsel without obtaining the clients' consent, safeguarding their interests, or even keeping a list of the clients or case names transferred. This conduct posed a significant potential harm to the clients and to the public interest generally. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [7]

Respondent's failure to comply with rule 955 was not excused by criticism of its wording as complex. The mandate of rule 955 is clear and requires little if any assistance to fulfill its requirements. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [11]

Where respondent, who had pleaded guilty to welfare fraud based on eligibility statements signed by him but filled out by his wife, attempted to establish in mitigation that he did not know of his wife's fraudulent conduct, it was respondent's burden to prove such mitigation, and review department gave great weight to hearing judge's contrary finding based on evaluation of credibility of respondent and his wife. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

It was not mitigating that when respondent signed a declaration that the information on welfare eligibility forms was true, the forms were actually still blank, and untrue information was filled in thereafter by respondent's wife. An unqualified statement of that which one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which one knows to be false. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [8]

Misrepresentations are no less egregious when made to a public agency than when made to an individual client, and warrant discipline of no less magnitude. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [9]

Where misconduct involves misappropriation, inexperience is irrelevant and has no weight as mitigation. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [43]

Respondent's claim of inexperience did not mitigate misappropriation of client funds nor breach of related fiduciary duties to client. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [10]

An attorney's being busy with other personal and client-related matters at the time of the attorney's misconduct does not constitute mitigation; if the attorney is too busy to handle a matter competently and complete the necessary work within an appropriate time frame, the attorney should not take on the case. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [28]

Attorney's deceit of client's agent on 11 separate occasions over a considerable period was an aggravating factor, and militated strongly against considering attorney's misconduct as one-time or aberrant. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [6]

Evidence concerning respondent's education, experience and drug use which occurred well prior to his probation violations was not causally related to the misconduct, nor did it demonstrate why a lesser disciplinary sanction would adequately protect the public, the courts and the legal profession. Therefore, it did not constitute mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [13]

An attorney's inability to arrange for service of a subpoena, due to insufficient and inexperienced office staff, was not a mitigating factor, because attorneys are held responsible for the proper supervision of their staff. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [16]

Medical volunteer work demonstrated community service and was properly relied on in mitigation, but artistic activities were not mitigating factors. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [15]

800 Application of Standards

Note: The Standards were originally adopted in 1986, and revised non-substantively, to update cross-references, in 2001 and 2007. References to "1986 Standard" are to the version in effect from 1986 through 2013. The Standards were significantly reorganized, renumbered, and amplified effective January 1, 2014 (the "interim Standards"), and again effective July 1, 2015 (the "2015 Standards"). Due to the substantial reorganizations of the Standards in 2014 and 2015, some Standards are covered in the Digest in a different order than they appear in the 2015 Standards. For the convenience of the researcher, cross-references are included in appropriate locations in the Digest Topic Number list. In addition, a table showing the location in the Digest of each of the 2015 Standard numbers, and its equivalent in the interim Standards and the 1986 Standards, is included in the introductory materials at the start of the Digest.

801 General Issues re Application of Standards

801.10 Effective date/retroactive application of 1986 Standards

The analysis of gross negligence in cases decided before the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct is not affected by the adoption of the standards, but the discipline imposed now takes into account guidelines provided by the standards, although they are not rigidly applied. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [8]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct may be applied retroactively to criminal conduct which occurred before they were adopted. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [5]

801.11 Effective date/retroactive application of interim Standards

Filing of 82 fraudulent bankruptcy petitions within period of just over three years demonstrated both multiple acts of misconduct and a pattern of misconduct, which were a single aggravating factor under former standard 1.2(b)(ii), but are now two separate aggravating factors under standards 1.5(b) and 1.5(c). In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [5 a,b]

Although former standard 1.7(b) was amended and replaced by standard 1.8(b), disbarment was warranted under both former and new standards, where respondent had two instances of prior discipline, and failed to present compelling mitigation. Respondent committed his current misconduct while under actual suspension and on probation for prior disciplinary matters. His continued poor performance after multiple discipline, inability and unwillingness to conform to his ethical responsibilities, and lack of compelling mitigation warranted imposition of the presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [5 a-c]

Where case was submitted to Review Department after amendments to standards became effective January 1, 2014, and amendments did not conflict with former standards, Review Department applied amended version. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330. [6]

Although case was submitted for ruling prior to effective date of 2014 revision of Standards, amended version of standard 1.2(c)(1), requiring showing of rehabilitation before resumption of practice after suspension, would apply to respondent when he became eligible to petition to resume practice. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [1]

Where respondent's case was submitted for ruling in 2013, former standards applied, rather than equivalent provisions of standards adopted effective January 1, 2014. However, new standards did not conflict with former ones. In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [7]

801.12 Effective date/retroactive application of 2015 Standards

Where request for review was submitted for ruling after effective date of July 1, 2015 revision of Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, Review Department applied revised version of standards in considering appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [1]

801.20 Purpose of standards (see also topic numbers 802.10, 802.30)

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Where respondent committed acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty and engaged in a wide range of other misconduct without compelling mitigation and with substantial aggravation, disbarment was necessary to protect the public, courts, and legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [9]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

Despite the need to examine cases on an individual basis to determine appropriate discipline, it is also a goal of disciplinary proceedings that there be consistent recommendations as to discipline, a goal that has been achieved in large measure through the application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [10]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct must be viewed as a whole with the objective of achieving the primary purposes of disciplinary proceedings, namely, protection of the public, courts and legal profession; maintenance of high professional standards and preservation of public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [15]

In assessing appropriate discipline, State Bar Court looks to provisions of applicable standard, in light of goals of disciplinary system set forth in standard 1.3 and guidance from Supreme Court; standards are guidelines, not mandatory sentencing provisions. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [16]

801.30 Effect of standards as guidelines

Statutes regarding legal disciplinary system are not exclusive, but rather supplementary to California Supreme Court's disciplinary authority over members of California bar. Given Supreme Court's partial delegation of its disciplinary authority to State Bar Court, and its instruction that State Bar Court should follow disciplinary standards whenever possible, statute providing for actual suspension of up to three years for violations of Rules of Professional Conduct did not preclude State Bar Court from recommending disbarment for rules violation when otherwise justified by disciplinary standards. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. [6]

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

Where respondent inadvertently mishandled a small sum of trust funds and was unlikely to repeat her misconduct, no suspension was necessary. Although standard 2.2(b) requires at least three months actual suspension for a trust account violation, the standards are guidelines to be construed in light of decisional law. A private reproval was appropriate in light of the nature of the misconduct and the mitigating circumstances, including respondent's severe emotional difficulties, her having taken the disciplinary proceeding very seriously, and her having suffered great hardship as a consequence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [14]

The analysis of gross negligence in cases decided before the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct is not affected by the adoption of the standards, but the discipline imposed now takes into account guidelines provided by the standards, although they are not rigidly applied. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [8]

Where hearing judge's decision was issued prior to relevant Supreme Court and review department opinions, and did not discuss whether gross negligence resulting in misappropriation should be subjected to same suggested minimum sanction of one year actual suspension as is applied for intentional misappropriation, but hearing judge's recommendation of one-year minimum was justified by facts in record making suspension appropriate for public protection, review department concluded that hearing judge's discipline recommendation was based on an analysis of the record in light of the objectives of discipline rather than on a rigid application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [8]

In requiring an invariable minimum of one year's actual suspension, standard 2.2(a) is not faithful to the teachings of the Supreme Court's decisions. Negligent misappropriation quickly and voluntarily remedied may require no actual suspension or only a short suspension. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [9]

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

To consider the proper discipline, the review department looks first to the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct as guidelines. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [11]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct serve as guidelines in determining the appropriate degree of discipline to recommend. The review department must also consider whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [26]

It is important to examine the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct as guidelines. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [6]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

In determining appropriate discipline where the respondent had one prior imposition of discipline, the review department first considered the discipline that would normally be appropriate for the current misconduct, and then considered the prior discipline as a factor in aggravation, using as a guide the standard that the discipline in the second matter should exceed that imposed in the prior matter. The level of discipline was based on a balancing of all factors involved. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [17]

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct serve as guidelines, and must be viewed with the objective of achieving the purposes of attorney discipline, which do not include punishment of the errant attorney, but rather are protection of the public, the profession, and the courts; maintenance of high professional standards; and preservation of public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [21]

The Standards for Attorney Discipline are treated by the Supreme Court as guidelines for imposing discipline, which it is not bound to follow in a "talismanic fashion," but from which it will generally not depart unless there is a compelling reason for doing so. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [18]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are not to be applied in talismanic fashion and do not mandate a particular result. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [26]

In determining the appropriate degree of discipline to recommend, the review department starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines. It also considers whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [4]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines, not inflexible mandates. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [10]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines for the State Bar Court and are not applied in "talismanic fashion" by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [10]

In determining the appropriate sanction, the review department starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines and which do not mandate the discipline to be imposed. Each case must be resolved on its own particular facts and not by application of rigid standards. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [5]

Standards operate as a guideline and do not require any outcome. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [13]

Assessment of the appropriate degree of discipline starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and in a criminal conviction matter, specifically with part C of those standards. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [4]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

Although the Supreme Court has commended the use of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Conduct to the State Bar Court, the standards are guidelines. It is thus inconsistent with the purpose of the standards to urge that they mandate a particular result. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [4]

In assessing appropriate discipline, review department starts with Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines, and also considers whether recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportionate to prior decisions of the Supreme Court based upon similar facts. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [14]

An attorney's commission of a crime involving moral turpitude is always a matter of serious consequence but does not always result in disbarment; the sanction imposed is determined in each case depending on the nature of the crime and the circumstances presented by the record. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [4]

In assessing appropriate discipline, State Bar Court looks to provisions of applicable standard, in light of goals of disciplinary system set forth in standard 1.3 and guidance from Supreme Court; standards are guidelines, not mandatory sentencing provisions. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [16]

The Supreme Court has instructed the State Bar Court to use the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct as guidelines in determining discipline. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [19]

801.35 Effect of 2015 change from "appropriate" to "presumed" discipline

801.40 Deviation from standards

801.41 Found to be justified

Where respondent's misconduct in inaccurately reporting her MCLE compliance was a one-time error, she had a long period of practice with no discipline, and an exemplary record of pro bono and community service, and she caused no harm to the public or the judicial system, and where, most significantly, she immediately accepted responsibility, rectified the situation, and implemented a corrective plan to avoid future problems, it was appropriate under these unique circumstances to deviate from the standard calling for disbarment or actual suspension for acts of moral turpitude. Even a 30-day actual suspension was excessive; public reproval was adequate to serve the goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [5 a-c]

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

Even though respondent was culpable of failing to comply with the conditions attached to his private reproval, the review department did not strictly apply the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct for such violations which calls for suspension. Instead, the review department imposed a public reproval because of respondent's extensive participation in the proceeding and because respondent acknowledged his obligation to comply with State Bar Court orders. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[5]

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

Where Supreme Court opinion in respondent's first disciplinary matter was filed after respondent committed misconduct involved in second disciplinary matter, but respondent was already involved in disciplinary process before he committed much of misconduct in second matter, respondent had opportunity to heed warning that disciplinary process should have provided him. However, timing of misconduct in various disciplinary proceedings is but one factor to consider, and review department did not apply standard providing for disbarment for third instance of misconduct, where other factors weighed against its strict application. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

Where respondent's prior and current misconduct were just a year apart and were of fundamentally different nature, and respondent's prior discipline had not been imposed until after his later misconduct and he could not have learned from it, and State Bar did not call for greater discipline than imposed in earlier matter, review department declined to apply standard calling for greater discipline in subsequent matter. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [12]

Where an attorney disobeys a court order based on an unreasonable interpretation of the order or an untested belief that the order is not valid, or takes money that is not the attorney's based on an unreasonable view of the facts, public discipline is necessary to make clear to the bar, the courts and the public that attorneys face serious consequences for such misconduct. However, where respondent did not pose a threat to the public, and review department concluded that actual suspension was not required to reinforce respondent's understanding of his ethical obligations, no actual suspension was necessary. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

Where respondent was culpable of failing to set aside $942 of his legal fee in a trust account pending resolution of a dispute with his client; aggravating factor of bad faith arose from respondent's intent to serve his clients rather than from any venal purpose; aggravating factors were outweighed by mitigating factors including long period of unblemished practice since misconduct, indicating unlikelihood of further misconduct; and prior similar cases indicated that it would be appropriate to depart from the 90-day minimum actual suspension for trust account violations, appropriate discipline was private reproval conditioned on passage of professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [22]

Because of limitation on discipline available in probation revocation matter, disciplinary standard calling for disbarment in third disciplinary matter absent compelling mitigation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [19]

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

A literal application of standard 1.7(b) would call for disbarment of any attorney who is found culpable in a third disciplinary proceeding, unless compelling mitigating circumstances predominate. However, this standard must be applied in light of the nature and extent of the prior record. Where respondent's prior record of two reprovals involved inattention to the needs of clients, misconduct of a different nature than the drunk driving convictions involved in respondent's third proceeding, respondent's prior disciplinary record did not warrant disbarment, but did constitute a proper aggravating factor. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [8]

An attorney on interim suspension following a criminal conviction has little control over the length of such suspension prior to final resolution of the case. Where an attorney's prior actual suspension had consisted largely of time already spent on interim suspension, and such a lengthy actual suspension would not ordinarily have been imposed for the misconduct involved in the prior matter, and where imposition of an even greater actual suspension in the attorney's subsequent matter would have resulted in discipline far in excess of that warranted by the facts and comparable case law, it would not be appropriate to adhere strictly to the standard directing imposition of greater discipline for a second offense. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [10]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Where respondent inadvertently mishandled a small sum of trust funds and was unlikely to repeat her misconduct, no suspension was necessary. Although standard 2.2(b) requires at least three months actual suspension for a trust account violation, the standards are guidelines to be construed in light of decisional law. A private reproval was appropriate in light of the nature of the misconduct and the mitigating circumstances, including respondent's severe emotional difficulties, her having taken the disciplinary proceeding very seriously, and her having suffered great hardship as a consequence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [14]

Where respondent committed serious misconduct shortly after admission to practice, including abandoning several clients and failing to perform legal services competently; four instances of failure to return unearned advance fees promptly; misleading two clients; misappropriating trust funds of a bankruptcy estate; and accepting employment without sufficient time, resources and ability to perform competently; but respondent presented mitigating evidence of emotional and psychological difficulties and rehabilitation, disbarment was not required, and protection of the public and profession was satisfied by five-year stayed suspension, three-year actual suspension, requirements to make restitution and show rehabilitation before returning to practice, and a period of supervised probation. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [1]

Misappropriation can be committed in different degrees of culpability, deserving of different discipline. Even where the most compelling mitigating circumstances do not clearly predominate, extenuating circumstances relating to the facts of the misappropriation may render disbarment inappropriate. An attorney who acts deliberately and with deceit should receive more severe discipline than an attorney who acts negligently and without deception.

Disbarment would rarely, if ever, be appropriate for an attorney whose only misconduct was a single act of misappropriation unaccompanied by deceit or other aggravating factors. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [12]

Disbarment was not appropriate in a misappropriation case where the misconduct resulted more from respondent's lack of understanding of an attorney's ethical duties rather than innate venality. However, because there was more serious misconduct and less mitigation than in other cases, and respondent had not recognized the seriousness of the misconduct, a three-year actual suspension, a showing of rehabilitation and fitness to practice before termination of the actual suspension, and strict probation conditions were required. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [13]

Where enough mitigating circumstances had been sufficiently established, and were coupled with the lack of extreme seriousness of respondent's offense, the hearing judge correctly concluded that suspension rather than disbarment was the appropriate discipline for a conviction of possession of marijuana for sale, even though the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [7]

Although non-final prior discipline recommendation for probation violation, still pending before Supreme Court, is record of prior discipline under rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review department does not apply rigidly, or without regard to facts of prior matters, disciplinary standard indicating disbarment as appropriate sanction for third disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [22]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are not to be rigidly applied, and an actual suspension of less than three months for commingling may be appropriate in the circumstances of a particular case. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [18]

Disbarment would be excessive in case arising out of criminal conviction for filing false federal income tax return, even though offense involved moral turpitude, based on comparable Supreme Court cases and given respondent's compelling showing of mitigation, including absence of any prior or subsequent misconduct; extreme emotional difficulties arising from an amputation; respondent's acknowledgment of his misconduct and his candor and cooperation with the State Bar; a persuasive showing of respondent's good character and high esteem in the community; family problems existing at the time of the misconduct; and the fact that the misconduct did not involve the practice of law. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [8]

In conviction referral matter in which interim suspension had been imposed and later vacated after seven months, review department declined to recommend total of one year actual suspension, even though possibly appropriate, because resulting additional four-month suspension would have been disruptive and punitive rather than achieving the purposes of disciplinary proceedings (protection of the public, courts and legal profession as well as rehabilitation in proper cases). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [9]

In order to properly fulfill the purposes of lawyer discipline, the review department must examine the nature and chronology of a respondent's record of discipline. Mere fact that attorney has three impositions of discipline, without further analysis, may not justify disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [7]

Where no Supreme Court precedent would have justified disbarment for respondent's failure to perform services in two matters if both matters had been decided together, additional prior discipline for failure to pass Professional Responsibility Examination did not sufficiently add to severity of misconduct to justify imposing disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [9]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

Supreme Court has usually not dealt severely with misappropriations involving a relatively small amount for a relatively brief time when no intentional dishonesty was involved and the offense involved attorney's use of trust account as an operating account. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [18]

801.45 Found not to be justified

Statutes regarding legal disciplinary system are not exclusive, but rather supplementary to California Supreme Court's disciplinary authority over members of California bar. Given Supreme Court's partial delegation of its disciplinary authority to State Bar Court, and its instruction that State Bar Court should follow disciplinary standards whenever possible, statute providing for actual suspension of up to three years for violations of Rules of Professional Conduct did not preclude State Bar Court from recommending disbarment for rules violation when otherwise justified by disciplinary standards. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418. [6]

Standards for attorney discipline should be followed whenever possible. Where applicable standard provided for suspension or reproval, hearing judge erred in resolving case by issuing admonition. Despite extensive mitigation, attorney judicial candidate's recklessly false allegation implicating opponent in bribery and fraud warranted public discipline, because it threatened to erode public confidence in the judiciary. Accordingly, public reproval was appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [6]

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

Although former standard 1.7(b) was amended and replaced by standard 1.8(b), disbarment was warranted under both former and new standards, where respondent had two instances of prior discipline, and failed to present compelling mitigation. Respondent committed his current misconduct while under actual suspension and on probation for prior disciplinary matters. His continued poor performance after multiple discipline, inability and unwillingness to conform to his ethical responsibilities, and lack of compelling mitigation warranted imposition of the presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [5 a-c]

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where respondent did not appear from record to be venal or dishonest, but overall nature of respondent's misconduct revealed somewhat indifferent attitude toward ethical obligations, especially those to administration of justice and persons other than current clients, some actual suspension was warranted in order to protect public by augmenting respondent's understanding of his duties. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [34]

Not all instances of serious professional misconduct warrant disbarment, depending on mitigating circumstances. Theft crimes unrelated to the practice of law have resulted in less than disbarment. However, where respondent's offenses of grand theft and forgery were extremely grave and multiple examples of felonious and fraudulent misconduct, likely to impugn public confidence in the legal profession, and respondent's experience in sophisticated law practice, public office and private business should have dissuaded him from committing felonies, review department recommended disbarment notwithstanding respondent's evidence of stress caused by personal and financial problems. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [11]

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern that the State Bar Court should make clear the reasons for departure from the standards in any case where the recommended discipline differs therefrom. Where hearing judge did not articulate basis for recommending 18 months suspension instead of two-year minimum called for by applicable standard, respondent would have had to wait two years to reapply for admission if criminal conviction had occurred prior to admission to practice, and no reason appeared on record to depart from standard except to give credit for time spent on interim suspension, review department recommended actual suspension of two years. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [11]

Favorable testimony by six character witnesses, four of whom were respondent's co-workers, was not sufficient to show that disbarment was excessive given the many aggravating circumstances surrounding respondent's misappropriation of a large sum of client trust funds. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [5]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Departure from the disciplinary standards was not justified based on the novelty of the issues raised in the matter, when the misconduct involved was respondent's misrepresentation of his status as an attorney, an area in which the governing rules have been clearly established for many years. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [12]

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Strong mitigating factors in matter involving capping and other misconduct dramatically lessened need for strict discipline imposed by Supreme Court in similar matters, but did not eliminate need for measurable discipline to maintain integrity of and public confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [10]

801.47 Necessity to explain

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern that the State Bar Court should make clear the reasons for departure from the standards in any case where the recommended discipline differs therefrom. Where hearing judge did not articulate basis for recommending 18 months suspension instead of two-year minimum called for by applicable standard, respondent would have had to wait two years to reapply for admission if criminal conviction had occurred prior to admission to practice, and no reason appeared on record to depart from standard except to give credit for time spent on interim suspension, review department recommended actual suspension of two years. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [11]

The hearing department should have made clear its reasons for recommending a lower level of discipline than that called for by an applicable standard. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [19]

The Standards for Attorney Discipline are treated by the Supreme Court as guidelines for imposing discipline, which it is not bound to follow in a "talismanic fashion," but from which it will generally not depart unless there is a compelling reason for doing so. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [18]

When the review department's decision departs from the discipline recommended by the standards, the reasons for the departure should be made clear, for the benefit of the Supreme Court and the parties. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [7]

801.49 Generally/Other

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

Where respondent had awakened to his responsibilities to the discipline system and participated in rule 955 proceeding, had produced evidence that he posed less risk to clients than suggested by his prior disciplinary record, gave proper notice in compliance with rule 955(a), and filed the required affidavit only 14 days late and before referral order was issued or formal disciplinary proceedings initiated, respondent's very brief failure to comply with rule 955 warranted a very modest sanction. However, even given the wide range of discipline available for a rule 955 violation, it would require an extraordinary case where no discipline of any form was merited. Considering the emphasis placed by the Supreme Court on strict compliance with rule 955, as well as considerations of attorney discipline, maintenance of the standards of the profession, and respondent's rehabilitation, some discipline was required. A 30-day suspension would serve to underline to respondent the seriousness of his duty to comply with all aspects of court orders. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [7]

Violations of the ethical rule governing placement of client funds in a trust account have not always resulted in actual or even stayed suspensions. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [27]

801.90 Other General Issues re Standards

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

There is clear distinction between credibility and candor. The determination of a witness's credibility (i.e., believability) is primarily within province of the hearing judge who saw and heard the witness testify, while the determination that a witness's testimony lacked candor (i.e., that the witness lied) must be found by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [10]

Even though a witness's candor must ordinarily be shown by clear and convincing evidence, great weight is still give to the hearing judge's findings on candor. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [11]

Even though short delays, even if resulting in client harm, standing alone are ordinarily not sufficient to warrant conclusion that a client suffered significant harmed within the context of standard providing that significant client harm is an aggravating circumstance, present case did not involve a short delay, but an inexcusable delay of more than five years during which respondent did not perform any substantive work on a client's workers' compensation case. Even though the delay did not cause the client to lose her cause of action, it had a substantial impact on her. After holding that a reasonable economic measure of harm to the client was the client's lost use of the value of her settlement proceeds for five years, the review department expressly declined to define the extent of the client's economic harm. Nonetheless, it held that the client's economic harm met the requirement of significant harm in standard providing that significant client harm is aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [12]

In the hearing judge's discipline recommendation that respondent "be suspended from the practice of law for three years and until he provides proof satisfactory to the State Bar Court of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice and present learning and ability in the general law pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) [of the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct], that said suspension be stayed; and that he be placed on probation for four years subject to the following conditions: . . ," the provision that respondent's three-year suspension continue until he proves his rehabilitation, fitness, learning, and ability in accordance with standard 1.4(c)(ii) is stayed along with the recommended three-year suspension so that, if the State Bar files a probation revocation proceeding against respondent seeking to have all, or a part, of the three-year stayed suspension imposed on him, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) would be an available condition. In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269. [13]

Standard recommending six-month minimum actual suspension for charging unconscionable fee applies only to cases involving unconscionable fees, not illegal fees. However, where respondent received fee which, though not unconscionable, was sizably above statutory limits due to respondent's abdication of his duties to his client and the court, it was difficult to justify less than minimum suspension proposed by such standards. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [20]

Even if respondent's demand that client return settlement check demonstrated lack of candor or cooperation with client, review department would not consider it as separate aggravating circumstance where it had already been found to be a factor establishing bad faith, a different aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [15]

Findings in aggravation, like findings of culpability, must be supported by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [3]

Circumstances in mitigation and aggravation must be established by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [35]

Standard 1.7(b) of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which provides for disbarment of a respondent who has a record of two prior impositions of discipline, cannot be applied without regard to the other provisions of the standards, particularly standard 1.3, which describes the primary purpose of the standards as the protection of the public, the courts and the legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards and the preservation of public confidence in the profession. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [6]

The State Bar must prove aggravating factors by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [12]

802 Part A (General Standards)

802.10 Standard 1.1 (Purposes and Scope of Standards) (see also topic numbers 801.20, 802.30)

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

802.20 Standard 1.2 (Definitions)

Note: For aggravation and mitigation, see topic numbers 500 et seq. and 600 et seq.

802.21 Prior record of discipline

The aggravating weight of prior discipline was diminished where the misconduct underlying the prior discipline occurred during the same time period as did the misconduct underlying the present matter. Under such circumstances, the totality of the charges brought in both cases was considered in order to determine the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [6]

Prior record of discipline is always aggravating factor, regardless of when discipline was imposed, but aggravating force may be diminished if present misconduct occurred during same period as prior misconduct. Where respondent's present misconduct, which was similar to misconduct found in his prior discipline proceeding, was committed after notice to show cause had been filed in prior proceeding, but before State Bar Court's decision was filed, filing of formal charges in prior proceeding gave respondent notice that State Bar considered his conduct ethically questionable. Therefore, respondent's prior record was aggravating evidence. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [17]

Attorney discipline is an available sanction for violation of rule 11 of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Where respondent testified that he had been disciplined by federal court as result of rule 11 matter, and federal court had suspended respondent from practice before it as part of relief granted in ruling on rule 11 motion, federal court's action constituted discipline. However, State Bar must prove aggravating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where record before review department did not reveal factual underpinnings of federal court discipline, and review department was therefore unable to examine nature and chronology of respondent's prior discipline to determine impact it should have on current discipline recommendation, review department gave no weight to respondent's federal discipline as factor in aggravation. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [11]

While a suspension for failure to pass the Professional Responsibility Examination may be considered in determining appropriate discipline, it is not prior discipline under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [2]

Where respondent challenged the use of a prior disciplinary matter as evidence in aggravation because he contended the matter had been time-barred, but respondent had defaulted in the earlier proceeding and the prior discipline had been ordered by the Supreme Court over three years earlier, only the Supreme Court could grant the requested relief. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [19]

Where two separate disciplinary proceedings were consolidated on review, the first proceeding did not constitute prior discipline for the purpose of enhanced discipline in the consolidated matter. Nonetheless, where the misconduct involved in the second proceeding had continued during the period that the first proceeding was pending in hearing department, the fact that respondent engaged in additional misconduct while he was aware that his conduct was being scrutinized in a pending disciplinary proceeding was significant. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [18]

Prior discipline includes discipline imposed for violation of probation. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [9]

Suspension resulting from respondent's failure to pass professional responsibility examination as ordered by Supreme Court did not constitute prior discipline, but was relevant to determination of appropriate discipline for failure to comply with rule 955 as required by same Supreme Court order. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [12]

Where examiner failed to introduce appropriate documentary evidence of respondent's prior discipline record, review department notified parties of intent to take judicial notice of specified documents from official State Bar Court records regarding such discipline, and took such notice after neither party objected. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [7]

An attorney's administrative suspension for failure to pay bar dues does not constitute prior discipline for purposes of weighing the appropriate discipline in a subsequent disciplinary case, in that the prior suspension is administrative in nature and does not result from a finding of misconduct. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [36]

Review department took judicial notice that respondent's prior discipline became final after subsequent matter was submitted on review. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [23]

Where respondent had received a reproval for four separate instances of misconduct which had occurred seven years prior to the instant misconduct, the reproval was not too remote in time and was properly considered an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [12]

The payment of State Bar membership fees is only a prerequisite to practicing law. No statute or rule of professional conduct requires payment of the fees unless the attorney intends to practice law in this state. Failure to pay fees is not improper in and of itself. The impropriety occurs when the attorney continues to practice law after suspension. Accordingly, an attorney's previous suspension for failure to pay membership fees is not a prior disciplinary record and is not an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [24]

A past revocation of probation is viewed as a prior disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [5]

In determining appropriate discipline for probation violations, respondent's original disciplinary matter, in which probation conditions were imposed, constituted a prior disciplinary record and was required to be treated as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [19]

Although non-final prior discipline recommendation for probation violation, still pending before Supreme Court, is record of prior discipline under rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review department does not apply rigidly, or without regard to facts of prior matters, disciplinary standard indicating disbarment as appropriate sanction for third disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [22]

Where, at the time of the hearing, respondent's prior discipline record consisted only of another hearing department decision, and the examiner moved to augment the record on review with the review department minutes in the prior matter, the motion was construed by the review department as a motion to take judicial notice and was granted. Thereafter, the review department took judicial notice on its own motion of the Supreme Court's order in the prior matter. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [11]

An attorney's suspension from the practice of law for nonpayment of State Bar fees is not a disciplinary suspension and is not considered a prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [12]

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

A proceeding for involuntary inactive enrollment is not disciplinary in nature. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [3]

An attorney's prior record of discipline is a record of the Supreme Court and also of the State Bar, and as such it is the proper subject of judicial notice. (Evid. Code, §§ 451 et seq.) Even when judicial notice is taken of such records, the documents composing them should be identified, introduced in evidence, and made part of the record in the proceeding. (Rule 571, Rules Proc. of State Bar; rules 1260-1262, Prov. Rules of Practice of State Bar Ct.) In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87. [5]

802.29 Other definitions

802.30 1986 Standard 1.3 (Purposes of Sanctions)(see also topic numbers 801.20, 802.10)

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

Although the record indicated that respondent was not likely to commit similar misconduct in the future, the discipline system also has a responsibility to preserve the integrity of the legal profession. That concern persuaded the review department that public discipline, including a period of suspension, was warranted for an attorney's conviction of assault with a firearm, with the enhancement that he discharged a firearm at an occupied motor vehicle which caused great bodily injury to the person of another. However, given the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that respondent had already been interimly suspended for ten and one-half months as the result of his conviction, and comparable case law, the review department did not believe that a period of prospective actual suspension was necessary. Accordingly, it recommended a period of stayed suspension along with a period of probation with conditions. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [6]

Disbarments, and not suspensions, have been the rule rather than the exception in cases of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. Although respondent presented substantial mitigation, it was not compelling in light of respondent's extremely serious misconduct over a several-year period. The protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards by attorneys; and the preservation of public confidence in the legal profession necessitated disbarment for respondent's extensive participation in criminal activities involving repeated acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [9]

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

Respondent's unilateral and ill-conceived interpretations of disciplinary orders demonstrated tendency toward interpreting important and significant court orders in such a way as to fit his needs, which might negatively impact future clients and thus raised concern about need to protect public. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

Where respondent did not appear from record to be venal or dishonest, but overall nature of respondent's misconduct revealed somewhat indifferent attitude toward ethical obligations, especially those to administration of justice and persons other than current clients, some actual suspension was warranted in order to protect public by augmenting respondent's understanding of his duties. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [34]

Primary aims of attorney disciplinary probation are protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney. Greatest amount of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for breaches of probation conditions significantly related to misconduct for which probation was given, especially when circumstances raise serious concern about public protection or show probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Where misconduct for which respondent was placed on probation included practicing law in violation of court order, and respondent's current misconduct also involved violating numerous court orders and was aggravated by failure to participate in disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent's probation violations involved two of very first steps required by probation conditions, these factors indicated that respondent had a persistent problem with conforming his conduct to requirements of law, raised serious concerns for need to protect public, and showed that respondent had failed to even begin to take steps to rehabilitate himself. Accordingly, imposition of entire period of stayed suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's violation of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [12]

Doing equity is not the principal purpose of restitution in disciplinary proceedings; rather, it is to force disciplined attorneys to confront the consequences of their misconduct in a concrete way, thus serving goals of rehabilitation and public protection. It would not be consistent with purposes of attorney discipline to decline to order an attorney to make restitution of funds which were clearly wrongfully taken, simply on basis of speculation that victim of misconduct might thereby be unjustly enriched. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [14]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

A stipulated disciplinary order does not constitute precedent, but does represent a determination by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the hearing judge that the degree of discipline ordered satisfies the need to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [11]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has a right to a fair hearing. The State Bar's interest in protecting the public and maintaining integrity and public confidence in the legal profession would not be served by disciplining an attorney who is mentally incompetent to the degree that she or he cannot assist in a defense against disciplinary charges. Therefore, if an attorney is unable to assist in his or her own defense, due process requires that the disciplinary proceeding be abated. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [7]

The primary goal of disciplinary probation is the protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [3]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

Discipline is imposed to protect the public, enforce professional standards and maintain public confidence in the legal profession, not to punish. Pursuant to these principles, the Supreme Court and State Bar Court are most concerned when it appears an attorney is likely to repeat very serious misconduct, and the misconduct is not excused by personal stress or dramatic misfortune, and the attorney has failed to make restitution to clients when the attorney had the means to do so. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, the presumptively appropriate discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude is disbarment. However, where compelling mitigating circumstances predominate, a lesser sanction may be imposed, and the minimum of a two-year actual suspension suggested by the standards has not been applied by the Supreme Court. In such circumstances, the review department's duty is to determine the appropriate sanction in light of the purposes of attorney discipline: protection of the public, preservation of public confidence in the legal profession and maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [14]

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

Evidence of psychological problems was not compelling mitigation where attorney's expert witness testified that he needed further treatment before he could be considered rehabilitated; primary function of attorney discipline is to fulfill proper professional standards regardless of cause for attorney's failure to do so. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [10]

In determining appropriate discipline, all relevant factors must be considered, including the purposes of imposing discipline, which include: protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; maintenance of high professional standards; and maintenance of integrity of and public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [12]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

The factors to be considered in weighing the recommended discipline in probation revocation matters should include the aims of attorney discipline: protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney. The greatest discipline should be imposed where there is a breach of a condition significantly related to the underlying misconduct, particularly when the circumstances raise concerns about the need for public protection or the attorney's failure to undertake rehabilitation. Less discipline is required where a less significant probation condition is at issue under circumstances which do not call into question public protection or the attorney's rehabilitation. The length of stayed suspension which could be imposed as a sanction, and the length of the actual suspension earlier imposed, should also be considered. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [24]

Protection of the public, its confidence in the legal profession, and the maintenance of high professional standards are the greatest concerns of the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [10]

The Supreme Court has been consistent in measuring discipline against the purposes of attorney discipline, which are the protection of the public, courts and legal profession, maintenance of integrity of the profession and high professional standards and preservation of public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [14]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

Review department's overriding concern is same as that of Supreme Court: preservation of public confidence in profession and maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct serve as guidelines, and must be viewed with the objective of achieving the purposes of attorney discipline, which do not include punishment of the errant attorney, but rather are protection of the public, the profession, and the courts; maintenance of high professional standards; and preservation of public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [21]

The review department's overriding concern is the same as that of the Supreme Court: the protection of the public, preservation of public confidence in the profession and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [2]

The review department's overriding concern is the same as that of the Supreme Court: the preservation of public confidence in the profession and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [3]

The goals of the State Bar's probation program are: (1) public protection; (2) rehabilitation of the respondent; (3) maintaining integrity of the legal profession; (4) enforcement of restitution orders; (5) aiding future enforcement and (6) partially alleviating discipline. These goals are to be realized by use of probation conditions which are innovative, individualized, rehabilitative and flexible and which are implemented using the efforts of volunteer probation monitor referees. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [6]

The fundamental purposes of attorney discipline are protection of the public and legal community and the maintenance of high professional standards and public confidence in the legal system. Rehabilitation of the attorney is also a permissible goal of discipline as long as the rehabilitative sanction does not conflict with the primary aims of attorney discipline. Unlike the criminal justice system, punishment is not one of the objectives of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [7]

In conviction referral matter in which interim suspension had been imposed and later vacated after seven months, review department declined to recommend total of one year actual suspension, even though possibly appropriate, because resulting additional four-month suspension would have been disruptive and punitive rather than achieving the purposes of disciplinary proceedings (protection of the public, courts and legal profession as well as rehabilitation in proper cases). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [9]

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201.

Strong mitigating factors in matter involving capping and other misconduct dramatically lessened need for strict discipline imposed by Supreme Court in similar matters, but did not eliminate need for measurable discipline to maintain integrity of and public confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [10]

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

Standard 1.7(b) of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which provides for disbarment of a respondent who has a record of two prior impositions of discipline, cannot be applied without regard to the other provisions of the standards, particularly standard 1.3, which describes the primary purpose of the standards as the protection of the public, the courts and the legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards and the preservation of public confidence in the profession. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [6]

The overriding concern of the review department is the preservation of public confidence in the legal profession and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [4]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct must be viewed as a whole with the objective of achieving the primary purposes of disciplinary proceedings, namely, protection of the public, courts and legal profession; maintenance of high professional standards and preservation of public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [15]

In assessing appropriate discipline, State Bar Court looks to provisions of applicable standard, in light of goals of disciplinary system set forth in standard 1.3 and guidance from Supreme Court; standards are guidelines, not mandatory sentencing provisions. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [16]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

Review department recommends professional discipline not to punish, but to protect the public, courts and legal profession, to preserve public confidence in the profession and to maintain professional standards. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [10]

The review department's overriding concern is the same as the Supreme Court's: the protection of the public, courts and legal profession, the preservation of public confidence in the profession and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [3]

The Supreme Court's principal concern in the area of attorney discipline is protection of the public and preservation of confidence in the legal profession, interests served by maintaining the highest possible professional standards for attorneys. That same concern is therefore the principal concern of the review department. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

802.40 Standard 1.3 (1986 Standard 1.4) (Degrees of Sanction Available)

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Sections 6068(a) and 6103 were not intended to refer to the Rules of Professional Conduct or to make disbarment available for violations of such rules. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [5]

Under section 6077, the discipline which may be recommended by the State Bar for a wilful violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct is limited to a maximum of three years suspension. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [6]

Section 6077 does not bind the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, should it decide that greater discipline than three years suspension for violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct is needed to protect the public in a particular case; the Supreme Court is not limited by the Legislature in exercising its disciplinary authority. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [7]

Section 6078 authorizes the State Bar Court to hold a hearing on charged violations of law and to recommend disbarment in those cases warranting disbarment, but section 6077 declares that a Rule of Professional Conduct violation does not warrant discipline in excess of three years suspension. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [8]

Section 6103's authorization of discipline, including disbarment, is limited by its terms to occasions when an attorney violates the oath and duties defined in the Business and Professions Code or violates a court order. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [9]

For an egregious rule violation, the State Bar may seek suspension of at least two years and application of standard 1.4(c)(ii); an attorney who can satisfy the showing required by standards 1.4(c)(ii) poses no continuing threat to the public warranting disbarment. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [11]

In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291.

802.50 Standard 1.4 (1986 Standard 1.5) (Conditions attached to Sanctions)

Note: For issues regarding specific conditions attached to sanctions, see topic number 170 et seq.

Note: For Standard 1.5 (Aggravation), see topic numbers 500 et seq.: for Standard 1.6 (Mitigation), see topic numbers 700 et seq.

The goals of the State Bar's probation program are: (1) public protection; (2) rehabilitation of the respondent; (3) maintaining integrity of the legal profession; (4) enforcement of restitution orders; (5) aiding future enforcement and (6) partially alleviating discipline. These goals are to be realized by use of probation conditions which are innovative, individualized, rehabilitative and flexible and which are implemented using the efforts of volunteer probation monitor referees. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [6]

802.60 Standard 1.7 (1986 Standard 1.6) (Determination of Appropriate Sanction)

802.61 (a) Most severe applicable sanction to be used

Where respondent's most serious ethical violations resulted from his affiliation and fee-sharing with a non-lawyer entity, Review Department applied discipline standard most applicable to that misconduct, rather than standard applicable to respondent's failure to perform legal services in multiple matters. Case law in matters involving similar misconduct was inapplicable in light of respondent's compelling mitigation, including long practice without a prior record, candor and cooperation, good character, pro bono work and community service, and remorse and recognition of wrongdoing. Given that respondent's misconduct was not likely to recur, totality of circumstances warranted imposing actual suspension for 60 days and until respondent completed restitution. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [8 a,b]

Where multiple discipline standards applied to respondent's misconduct, Review Department focused on standards calling for most severe discipline. Where respondent was found culpable of 24 counts of misconduct, involving nine different statute and rule violations, spanning four years, and involving four client matters, in two of which respondent misappropriated significant funds through gross negligence, and respondent habitually disregarded his duties as an attorney and lacked recognition and remorse, high risk that respondent would engage in additional misconduct warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [9a-d]

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, displayed a 10-year pattern of misconduct, significantly harmed the administration of justice and clients and showed no remorse, the appropriate discipline recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Reiss(Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [10]

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

Where two or more acts of professional misconduct are found, the discipline should be the most severe of the several applicable sanctions, not the sum of the applicable standards. Accordingly, it was not appropriate to recommend 18-month actual suspension based on conclusion that one-year actual suspension was appropriate for misappropriation and six-month actual suspension was appropriate for writing insufficiently funded checks. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [20]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

Fact that, in addition to unintentionally misappropriating client's funds, attorney had committed act of moral turpitude by concealing personal assets in trust account to avoid tax levy might, but would not necessarily, indicate greater discipline to be in order, based on Supreme Court precedent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [19]

802.62 (b) (1986 (b)(i)) Effect of aggravation on appropriate sanction

Where respondent, an experienced patent and trademark practitioner prior to his earlier disciplinary suspension, resumed representing trademark clients after his reinstatement to practice in California, without carefully determining his eligibility to do so under federal regulations, respondent exhibited a cavalier attitude towards applicable regulations. This gave rise to concern about protection of the public from future misconduct, where respondent's prior misconduct also involved placing self-interest ahead of client interest or respect for and adherence to law, and respondent still did not seem to recognize error and seriousness of his behavior. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [4 a,b]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

Where respondent took up to two years to pay outstanding medical liens after he discovered them, such delay was the most significant factor in justifying a sanction of one year's actual suspension. Respondent's preoccupation with remedying other unspecified problems in his caseload did not justify his delay in remedying these negligent misappropriations. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [7]

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In determining the appropriate sanction, the court must balance the aggravating circumstances with the mitigating circumstances and also consider whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [20]

802.63 (c) (1986 (b)(ii)) Effect of mitigation on appropriate sanction

Where respondent's misconduct in inaccurately reporting her MCLE compliance was a one-time error, she had a long period of practice with no discipline, and an exemplary record of pro bono and community service, and she caused no harm to the public or the judicial system, and where, most significantly, she immediately accepted responsibility, rectified the situation, and implemented a corrective plan to avoid future problems, it was appropriate under these unique circumstances to deviate from the standard calling for disbarment or actual suspension for acts of moral turpitude. Even a 30-day actual suspension was excessive; public reproval was adequate to serve the goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [5 a-c]

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

Evidence that an attorney has taken steps to deal with an alcohol problem is mitigating evidence that may properly be taken into account in determining the degree and nature of discipline, but does not eliminate the initial misconduct as an appropriate basis for discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [11]

Where compelling mitigation is present, a case which involves a misdemeanor conviction that otherwise would be an appropriate basis for discipline may result in dismissal in the interests of justice. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [12]

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In determining the appropriate sanction, the court must balance the aggravating circumstances with the mitigating circumstances and also consider whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [20]

802.64 Limits on effect of mitigating circumstances (1986 Standard 1.6(c))

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

Where respondent, while acting as the executor of a deceased client's estate, embezzled more than $500,000 from such estate, the magnitude of the theft would result in disbarment regardless of alleged mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [4]

802.69 Generally/Other

Conclusion that violations of statutes requiring written fee agreements and specified disclosures are not disciplinable offenses does not preclude consideration of attorney's failure to comply with such statutes as aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [12]

Once violation of ethical duties is found, hearing judge should not disregard culpability finding, but must examine surrounding circumstances and may consider either good or bad faith of respondent in mitigation or aggravation. Where respondent was found culpable of wilful failure to return illegal fees on demand, such culpability should have been considered in making discipline recommendation despite respondent's good faith belief in entitlement to funds, which was properly considered as mitigating factor. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [13]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Where respondent's failure to supervise his personal injury practice and fulfill trust fund responsibilities was so remiss as to be reckless, and his mismanagement of his trust account included repeated failure to provide competent legal services by promptly paying medical liens, respondent violated rule regarding reckless or repeated failure to perform competently. However, where misconduct forming basis for such violation also underlay charge of moral turpitude supporting identical or greater discipline, review department gave violation of competence rule no additional weight in determining discipline. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [2]

Where respondent did not appear from record to be venal or dishonest, but overall nature of respondent's misconduct revealed somewhat indifferent attitude toward ethical obligations, especially those to administration of justice and persons other than current clients, some actual suspension was warranted in order to protect public by augmenting respondent's understanding of his duties. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [34]

When judges are asked to approve stipulations, they cannot rely solely on State Bar's acquiescence in proposed discipline, but must exercise their independent judgment in carrying out their obligation to examine stipulation, admitted facts, and proposed discipline for fairness to parties and for extent to which public will be adequately protected thereby. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 407(a).) In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [9]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

An attorney's admitted cocaine dependency is an appropriate factor to consider in determining the appropriate discipline for public protection. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [17]

In determining appropriate discipline to recommend for respondent found culpable of violating statute requiring respect for courts based on respondent's violation of Supreme Court order requiring him to give notice of his prior disciplinary suspension under rule 955, review department noted that respondent's failure to give timely and complete notice of suspension, and his filing of an affidavit which was untimely and inaccurate, would have warranted a recommendation of disbarment, absent strong mitigating circumstances, in a referral proceeding for violation of rule 955. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [15]

A recommendation as to the degree of discipline properly results from a balanced consideration of all factors, requiring the State Bar Court to weigh mitigating and aggravating factors. Where respondent had committed serious and wide-ranging misconduct, his sincere expression of remorse and his favorable character references could not be weighed heavily, and had been given greater weight by the hearing judge than warranted by the record. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [17]

Normally, the requirement that a disciplined attorney show rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the law prior to returning to practice is imposed where the attorney's actual suspension is two years or greater. However, where period of time that attorney was enrolled inactive on account of failure to answer notice to show cause, coupled with one-year actual suspension recommended by review department, resulted in attorney being continuously ineligible to practice law for greater than two years, it was appropriate to recommend compliance with such requirement. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [5]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

Respondent's inconsistent responses to State Bar investigators precluded a finding in mitigation that respondent was cooperative with the State Bar. However, respondent's behavior while acting as his own counsel during the disciplinary proceeding, which was consistent with an honest, if mistaken, belief in his own innocence, did not demonstrate an intent to hinder or mislead the court. A respondent is not required to acquiesce in the findings and conclusions of the State Bar Court, but the respondent's attitude toward the disciplinary process and amenability in conforming to the Rules of Professional Conduct are proper issues for the court's review, particularly in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [14]

In determining appropriate discipline, all relevant factors must be considered, including the purposes of imposing discipline, which include: protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; maintenance of high professional standards; and maintenance of integrity of and public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [12]

Where attorney had committed extremely serious misconduct over long period of time, and questions remained concerning attorney's rehabilitation, requiring standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing in lieu of disbarment would not be sufficient to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [15]

The number or fact of prior disciplinary proceedings cannot, without more analysis, foretell result of subsequent discipline proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [20]

In cases involving attorney discipline for serious offenses, the Supreme Court has: (1) stated that serious offenses call for severe discipline and warrant disbarment in the absence of clear or compelling mitigation; (2) recited similar language but evaluated the type of misconduct as a lesser offense; or (3) emphasized that there is no fixed formula as to discipline, and that appropriate discipline can only be arrived at by a balanced consideration of relevant factors, on a case-by-case basis. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [13]

Disbarment will not be ordered where there is no evidence that a sanction short of disbarment is inadequate to deter future misconduct and protect the public. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [15]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern with assuring that the record in disciplinary proceedings reflects the correct evidence and finding of prior discipline or lack thereof. Accordingly, where only one of respondent's two prior disciplinary proceedings was made a part of the record and weighed by the hearing judge, it was necessary for the review department to remand the matter to the hearing judge to take evidence on the other prior discipline and consider its effect on the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [5]

As a matter of policy, not all attorneys who fail to participate in disciplinary proceedings should be precluded from receiving discipline containing probation conditions. Defaulting attorneys do present a problem for the hearing department in that the cause of their misconduct is not always evident on the record, thus making it difficult to determine which probation conditions or duties would further the goals of discipline. Nonetheless, the view that an attorney's default is prima facie evidence that the attorney is not amenable to probation runs contrary to the duty to consider each case on its own merits to determine appropriate discipline, and also precludes the use of probation monitoring as an effective means of public protection. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [8]

In determining recommended discipline, matters should be considered on a case-by-case basis, balancing the relevant factors, including the facts, gravity of misconduct and mitigating and aggravating evidence, and considering them in light of the objectives of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [9]

Despite the need to examine cases on an individual basis to determine appropriate discipline, it is also a goal of disciplinary proceedings that there be consistent recommendations as to discipline, a goal that has been achieved in large measure through the application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [10]

Probation is not mandated in all cases where an actual suspension is imposed. When a lengthy period of actual suspension is recommended, imposing the provisions of standard 1.4(c)(ii) in lieu of a probation grant may serve adequately to protect the public and test the attorney's rehabilitation. Probation may not be indicated by virtue of the nature of the misconduct, the passage of time since the misconduct or clear evidence of the attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [11]

In determining the appropriate sanction, the review department starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines and which do not mandate the discipline to be imposed. Each case must be resolved on its own particular facts and not by application of rigid standards. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [5]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

An attorney's commission of a crime involving moral turpitude is always a matter of serious consequence but does not always result in disbarment; the sanction imposed is determined in each case depending on the nature of the crime and the circumstances presented by the record. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [4]

In assessing appropriate discipline, State Bar Court looks to provisions of applicable standard, in light of goals of disciplinary system set forth in standard 1.3 and guidance from Supreme Court; standards are guidelines, not mandatory sentencing provisions. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [16]

804 Standard 1.8 (1986 Standard 1.7) (Effect of Prior Discipline)

Although former standard 1.7(b) was amended and replaced by standard 1.8(b), consideration of the factors enumerated by the new standard compels the same discipline as recommended by the hearing judge. Respondent committed his current misconduct while under actual suspension and on probation for prior disciplinary matters. His continued poor performance after multiple discipline, inability and unwillingness to conform to his ethical responsibilities, and lack of compelling mitigation warrant imposition of the presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3a, b]

805 (a) Current discipline should be greater than prior

Although respondent's misconduct was limited in nature, it was tempered only by limited character evidence and cooperation and aggravated by dishonesty and concealment and a record of serious prior misconduct. This totality of circumstances warranted progressive discipline as directed by standard 1.7(a). In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151. [6]

805.10 Applied

Where respondent began engaging in unauthorized practice of federal trademark law immediately after his prior California suspension ended, and prior discipline had involved serious offense justifying three-year actual suspension, disciplinary standard providing for more severe sanctions in subsequent disciplinary matters made disbarment recommendation appropriate for present offense. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [5]

Where respondent failed to perform services, communicate with client, and refund unearned fee; no pattern of misconduct was shown; respondent did not act with dishonesty or harm client, and respondent had a prior record of one instance of discipline that was neither remote nor minimal, hearing judge's recommendation of one year actual suspension was too severe; six-month actual suspension, coupled with restitution requirement, was sufficient. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263 [8]

Review Department applied standard 1.7(a) where respondent's prior misconduct rested on the serious offense of willful misappropriation, the prior misconduct occurred four years before the current misconduct, both matters involved deceit, respondent was defending the charges in the prior at the time he was committing misconduct as a juror, and respondent continued to serve his actual suspension for the prior. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141. [6 a, b]

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

Respondent was found culpable of ten disciplinable acts of moral turpitude (seven acts of misrepresentation, one act of improperly retaining for his own benefit funds out of a medical provider's lien reduction, and one act of attempting to obtain a greater fee than that to which he was entitled by failing to disclose to his client costs he recovered), eight instances of improper solicitation of clients, and two instances of failing to properly account to his client. There were substantial aggravating factors, including a prior record of discipline, but no mitigating circumstances. The review department recommended that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for a period of five years, that execution be stayed, and that respondent be placed on probation for a period of five years on conditions including three years actual suspension and until respondent pays restitution and until he provides proof of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [9]

In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

Where respondent's misconduct in both first and second disciplinary matters involved similar lack of diligence causing delay in closing a simple probate estate, discipline in second matter ordinarily would warrant only slightly greater discipline than in first matter. However, where respondent had failed to understand or appreciate misconduct, causing concern about handling future cases, and in light of absence of mitigating factors and presence of several aggravating factors, significantly greater discipline than in first matter was appropriate in second matter, and review department recommended two-year stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [17]

Maximum available discipline in probation revocation matter was appropriate where respondent's priors, which included a prior probation violation, combined with misconduct in current case, showed both a persistent problem with drugs and alcohol and a persistent problem with conforming conduct to requirements of law and court orders. Policy underlying disciplinary standard calling for disbarment after two priors, and standard calling for increasing severity of discipline in successive matters, also militated toward imposing severe discipline given respondent's extensive prior record. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [20]

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

Where reproval would ordinarily have been appropriate for misconduct involving minor rule violations, but respondent had a prior public reproval and appeared to need to reorganize law practice, appropriate discipline was six months stayed suspension with probation conditions including trust accounting and completion of a law office management class. In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128. [26]

Although respondent's prior misconduct was similar to the misconduct in a second matter, the aggravating force of respondent's prior disciplinary record was somewhat diluted where the misconduct in the second matter occurred before the notice to show cause in the prior matter was served, because it did not reflect a failure on respondent's part to learn from the prior misconduct. Nevertheless, the prior was a factor in aggravation, and it was appropriate for the discipline in the second matter to be greater than in the previous matter. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [24]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

Where respondent's prior discipline arose from serious misconduct, and his subsequent breach of probation conditions arose after that prior discipline, it was appropriate to impose more actual suspension in probation revocation matter than in earlier disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [21]

In determining appropriate discipline where the respondent had one prior imposition of discipline, the review department first considered the discipline that would normally be appropriate for the current misconduct, and then considered the prior discipline as a factor in aggravation, using as a guide the standard that the discipline in the second matter should exceed that imposed in the prior matter. The level of discipline was based on a balancing of all factors involved. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [17]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor sex offense not involving moral turpitude and not related to practice of law, respondent's record of two prior private reprovals made it appropriate to impose public reproval rather than private reproval that would otherwise have been warranted, but due to lack of common thread among matters and their collective lack of severity, it would have been manifestly unjust to recommend suspension. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [5]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

805.50 Declined to apply

805.51 Prior discipline remote in time and/or minor

Where last acts of misconduct in prior discipline matter occurred approximately 17 years before first acts of misconduct in second matter, and prior misconduct itself was minimal in nature and involved misconduct for which respondent was found not culpable in second matter, prior misconduct did not merit significant weight in aggravation, and it would be manifestly unjust to impose greater discipline in second matter than in prior proceeding solely because of prior discipline. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [12]

A private reproval more than 20 years earlier, for improperly stopping payment on a $500 check to another law firm, was too remote in time to merit significant weight on the issue of degree of discipline. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

805.59 Other reason

Where respondent's prior and current misconduct were just a year apart and were of fundamentally different nature, and respondent's prior discipline had not been imposed until after his later misconduct and he could not have learned from it, and State Bar did not call for greater discipline than imposed in earlier matter, review department declined to apply standard calling for greater discipline in subsequent matter. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [12]

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

An attorney on interim suspension following a criminal conviction has little control over the length of such suspension prior to final resolution of the case. Where an attorney's prior actual suspension had consisted largely of time already spent on interim suspension, and such a lengthy actual suspension would not ordinarily have been imposed for the misconduct involved in the prior matter, and where imposition of an even greater actual suspension in the attorney's subsequent matter would have resulted in discipline far in excess of that warranted by the facts and comparable case law, it would not be appropriate to adhere strictly to the standard directing imposition of greater discipline for a second offense. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [10]

Guideline that discipline for second offense should in most instances be more severe than that imposed for first offense was not appropriate where offenses were contemporaneous. In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343. [13]

806 (b) Disbarment after two priors

Although former standard 1.7(b) was amended and replaced by standard 1.8(b), consideration of the factors enumerated by the new standard compels the same discipline as recommended by the hearing judge. Respondent committed his current misconduct while under actual suspension and on probation for prior disciplinary matters. His continued poor performance after multiple discipline, inability and unwillingness to conform to his ethical responsibilities, and lack of compelling mitigation warrant imposition of the presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [3a, b]

806.10 Applied

Although former standard 1.7(b) was amended and replaced by standard 1.8(b), disbarment was warranted under both former and new standards, where respondent had two instances of prior discipline, and failed to present compelling mitigation. Respondent committed his current misconduct while under actual suspension and on probation for prior disciplinary matters. His continued poor performance after multiple discipline, inability and unwillingness to conform to his ethical responsibilities, and lack of compelling mitigation warranted imposition of the presumptive discipline of disbarment under standard 1.8(b). In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338. [5 a-c]

Respondent with three prior disciplines presented no compelling mitigation or other reason to depart from disbarment as provided by standard 1.7(b). The prior record of discipline revealed a disturbing repetitive theme of failing to comply with ethical obligations over the course of 15 years. Respondent's misuse of his California license to thwart the regulations of other states placed the public at risk of considerable harm due to ongoing issues of competency, where he had previously failed to supervise employees who embezzled client funds, failed to remove his disbarred partner's name from the firm CTA, and did not meet his obligations to file several probation reports or make restitution. In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250 [9]

Disbarment was appropriate where respondent was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice, a serious offense of moral turpitude, he did not report this conviction to the State Bar, and he did not prove compelling mitigation. If this conviction had marred an otherwise discipline-free record, disbarment would not necessarily be warranted, but respondent's prior record of discipline reveals his criminal misconduct was not an isolated incident, and also triggered analysis under standard 1.7(b). In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [4a,b]

Common threads or patterns of misconduct are not requirements for disbarment under standard 1.7(b), but are simply possible issues to consider along with several other factors. As the standard provides, the critical issue is whether compelling mitigating circumstances predominate to warrant an exception to the severe penalty of disbarment. Even absent compelling mitigation, the Supreme Court has not always ordered disbarment; rather, all facts and circumstances of a case must be considered to determine the discipline to impose. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [5 a,b]

Disbarment was warranted and necessary where attorney failed to meet professional obligations for over two decades in four disciplinary cases. In the first three cases, respondent performed incompetently, and in fourth case, which occurred between his first and second discipline, he was convicted of a crime of moral turpitude that he never reported. Disbarment was recommended under standards 3.2. and 1.7(b), because overall, respondent demonstrated pervasive carelessness towards compliance with ethical rules, and appeared unwilling or unable to conform his behavior to the rules of professional conduct. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [6]

When there is a repetition of offenses for which an attorney has previously been disciplined that demonstrates a pattern of professional misconduct, the Supreme Court and this court have found disbarment appropriate under Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.7(b). In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [4]

Where respondent had four prior disciplinary proceedings, his involvement with the disciplinary system had spanned every decade over nearly 30 years, and all of his prior and current misconduct reflected an inability to fully appreciate the fiduciary nature of his relationship with clients, there was a grave risk that additional harm would result to clients. In view of the substance and nature of respondent's disciplinary history as well as the facts and circumstances of the current misconduct, the review department recommended disbarment. In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829. [4a–e]

The aggravating effect of prior discipline may be diminished if misconduct underlying prior discipline occurred contemporaneously with misconduct currently under consideration. However, where at time respondent committed current misconduct, he was either involved in disciplinary process or was actually on disciplinary probation, this indicated that respondent's prior discipline had very little impact on his behavior, and demonstrated respondent's inability to conform his conduct to ethical norms. In such circumstances, greater showing required in reinstatement would better protect public than showing required to return to practice after suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Accordingly, application of standard calling for disbarment for third imposition of discipline was appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [15]

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

806.50 Declined to apply

806.51 Compelling mitigation

Respondent's medical problems over the years were severe and extensive. The compelling circumstances clearly predominate and compel a look beyond a strict application of standard 1.7(b). Viewed holistically, respondent's extreme physical disabilities lessen the moral culpability of his misconduct. Thus, the public will be adequately protected by a lengthy suspension that will continue until respondent proves his rehabilitation, fitness, and ability to practice. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239 [5 a,b]

Disbarment based on presence of multiple prior disciplinary matters is appropriate upon demonstration of common thread among disciplinary matters, pattern of misconduct, or increasing severity, but was not appropriate in matter where those factors were not present and compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [14]

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

806.52 Priors remote and/or minor

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Misdemeanor convictions of sex offenses which are not serious and are unrelated to the practice of law have generally resulted in only private reproval absent aggravating factors. Where respondent was convicted of such a misdemeanor, disbarment would have been manifestly disproportionate to his cumulative misconduct, notwithstanding his record of two prior private reprovals. Respondent's misconduct was less serious than wilful failure to file tax returns or driving under the influence, and did not warrant the same degree of discipline. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [1]

806.59 Other reason

The Supreme Court has not automatically applied standard 1.7(b) even in the absence of compelling mitigation. We must examine an attorney's prior discipline cases along with present misconduct to determine the appropriate aggravating weight. Disbarring the attorney under standard 1.7(b) would be unjust because his prior misconduct overlapped, he was not a recidivist offender who failed to learn from past disciplines and his present misconduct was not more serious than his prior ethical misconduct. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [11 a-d]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Notwithstanding the standard providing for disbarment when a respondent has two prior records of discipline unless there is compelling mitigation, disbarment was not recommended even though respondent had two prior records because the nature and extent of those prior records lacked sufficient severity to warrant disbarment. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [7]

Where Supreme Court opinion in respondent's first disciplinary matter was filed after respondent committed misconduct involved in second disciplinary matter, but respondent was already involved in disciplinary process before he committed much of misconduct in second matter, respondent had opportunity to heed warning that disciplinary process should have provided him. However, timing of misconduct in various disciplinary proceedings is but one factor to consider, and review department did not apply standard providing for disbarment for third instance of misconduct, where other factors weighed against its strict application. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [11]

Where respondent's two prior discipline cases occurred during the same four-month period when respondent's practice disintegrated, the two matters were considered as essentially a single matter in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [1]

Because of limitation on discipline available in probation revocation matter, disciplinary standard calling for disbarment in third disciplinary matter absent compelling mitigation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [19]

A literal application of standard 1.7(b) would call for disbarment of any attorney who is found culpable in a third disciplinary proceeding, unless compelling mitigating circumstances predominate. However, this standard must be applied in light of the nature and extent of the prior record. Where respondent's prior record of two reprovals involved inattention to the needs of clients, misconduct of a different nature than the drunk driving convictions involved in respondent's third proceeding, respondent's prior disciplinary record did not warrant disbarment, but did constitute a proper aggravating factor. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [8]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

The number or fact of prior disciplinary proceedings cannot, without more analysis, foretell result of subsequent discipline proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [20]

Although non-final prior discipline recommendation for probation violation, still pending before Supreme Court, is record of prior discipline under rule 571, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, review department does not apply rigidly, or without regard to facts of prior matters, disciplinary standard indicating disbarment as appropriate sanction for third disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [22]

Where it was unclear whether or not the former review department had considered respondent's delayed restitution in its assessment of the appropriate discipline in a prior probation revocation matter still pending before the Supreme Court, no significant aggravating weight was accorded that prior probation matter as prior discipline. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [23]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern with assuring that the record in disciplinary proceedings reflects the correct evidence and finding of prior discipline or lack thereof. Accordingly, where only one of respondent's two prior disciplinary proceedings was made a part of the record and weighed by the hearing judge, it was necessary for the review department to remand the matter to the hearing judge to take evidence on the other prior discipline and consider its effect on the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [5]

Standard 1.7(b) of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which provides for disbarment of a respondent who has a record of two prior impositions of discipline, cannot be applied without regard to the other provisions of the standards, particularly standard 1.3, which describes the primary purpose of the standards as the protection of the public, the courts and the legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards and the preservation of public confidence in the profession. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [6]

In order to properly fulfill the purposes of lawyer discipline, the review department must examine the nature and chronology of a respondent's record of discipline. Mere fact that attorney has three impositions of discipline, without further analysis, may not justify disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [7]

Where no Supreme Court precedent would have justified disbarment for respondent's failure to perform services in two matters if both matters had been decided together, additional prior discipline for failure to pass Professional Responsibility Examination did not sufficiently add to severity of misconduct to justify imposing disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [9]

807 (c) Prior record not required to impose severe discipline

Absent strong mitigating circumstances, a violation of rule 955 of the California Rules of Court warrants disbarment. Thus, where serious and extensive aggravating circumstances outweighed strongly very modest mitigating circumstances, disbarment was appropriate despite respondent's lack of any prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [10]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

A single act of very serious misconduct can and has resulted in disbarment even absent a prior disciplinary record; where a respondent's culpability is egregious and inexplicable, disbarment is appropriate even for a single misappropriation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [12]

810 Part B (Sanctions for specific misconduct; "Original Proceedings" in 1986 Standards)

811 1986 Standard 2.1 (Scope of Part B)

Note: For Standard 2.1 (Misappropriation) in 2015 and Interim Standards, see topic number 822.

811.10 Introductory paragraph: Adjustment of presumed sanctions based on aggravation and mitigation

820 1986 Standard 2.2 (Entrusted Funds or Property)

Note: For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822 et seq for misappropriation, and topic number 824 et seq. for commingling and trust account violations.

822 Standard 2.1 (1986 Standard 2.2(a)) Sanctions for misappropriation

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

822.10 Applied - disbarment (Standard 2.1(a))

Attorney who misappropriated entrusted funds bore heavy burden to overcome standard 2.2(a)'s disbarment presumption. Respondent's misappropriation of $112,293 over three years placed him on the most serious end of the discipline spectrum for misappropriation. Respondent treated his CTA like an open-ended line of credit, and his 65 withdrawals in three years for personal matters show his conduct was not aberrational. While his extensive community and pro bono service, cooperation with the State Bar, good character, and 12-years of practice without discipline were substantial mitigation, he did not prove two important rehabilitative factors—recognition of wrongdoing and recovery from the emotional problems he claims led to his wrongdoing. Thus, future personal struggles could trigger similar serious misconduct. Because respondent's overall mitigation was not the most compelling, nor did it clearly predominate, disbarment was warranted. In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273 [8 a-c]

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline where respondent recklessly failed to control his law practice, personally committed other acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty, violated a number of ethical rules, displayed lack of candor at trial, and failed to establish any significant mitigation. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [2]

Misappropriation of client funds is a grievous breach of an attorney's ethical responsibilities, and generally warrants disbarment unless the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. Respondent bears the burden of proving mitigating circumstances by clear and convincing evidence. Where respondent did not meet that burden, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511. [1]

Where respondent committed acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty and engaged in a wide range of other misconduct without compelling mitigation and with substantial aggravation, disbarment was necessary to protect the public, courts, and legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [9]

Disbarment was recommended where respondent's culpability arose from a record exceptional in displaying respondent's repeated, deliberate overreaching of her clients for personal gain, and her repeated dishonesty, where respondent also demonstrated complete lack of recognition of the most basic duties of attorneys in this state, and where respondent's misconduct arose just four years after her admission. In each of the three most serious matters, respondent became an advocate against her client, unabashedly disregarding her clients' instructions in order to maximize her fees, and she threw aside a lawyer's fundamental duty of honesty during her protracted, stubborn pursuit of personal gain. The review department concluded that only disbarment could give the level of protection the public and the courts deserve. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [4]

Where respondent's wilful misappropriation of client trust funds was accompanied by aggravating factors which clearly predominated over mitigation, and where hearing judge recommended disbarment based on consideration of respondent's demeanor and related issues, review department concurred that disbarment was appropriate. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [8]

Once a trust account balance has fallen below the appropriate amount, an inference of misappropriation may be drawn, and the burden shifts to the attorney to show that misappropriation did not occur. Where there were numerous instances over several years in which funds were depleted or nearly depleted from respondent's trust account; respondent delayed in making repayment until the client complained to the State Bar or was sued, and respondent's explanations lacked credibility, the evidence supported the conclusion that respondent's repeated acts of misappropriation were due to dishonesty rather than negligence. The distinction between negligent and dishonest misappropriation can be very significant in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [11]

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

Favorable testimony by six character witnesses, four of whom were respondent's co-workers, was not sufficient to show that disbarment was excessive given the many aggravating circumstances surrounding respondent's misappropriation of a large sum of client trust funds. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [5]

Disbarment was the appropriate sanction for an attorney's misappropriation of a very large sum of client funds over many years, which was surrounded by utter disregard of the attorney's fiduciary and trust account duties, and aggravated by incompetent representation of the client and prosecution of a lawsuit without the client's consent, demonstrating a lack of basic understanding of the fundamental responsibilities of an attorney. In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

Discipline is imposed to protect the public, enforce professional standards and maintain public confidence in the legal profession, not to punish. Pursuant to these principles, the Supreme Court and State Bar Court are most concerned when it appears an attorney is likely to repeat very serious misconduct, and the misconduct is not excused by personal stress or dramatic misfortune, and the attorney has failed to make restitution to clients when the attorney had the means to do so. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

Both under Supreme Court case law and under the standards, an attorney's misappropriation of client funds, being a gross or grievous breach of morality, warrants disbarment in the absence of clearly extenuating circumstances, or unless the amount taken was insignificant or the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [4]

Where attorney committed serious offenses including misappropriation of large sum from client and subsequent deceit of client's agent, issue before State Bar Court was whether mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed or predominated in order to warrant recommendation of less than disbarment. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [8]

Suspension rather than disbarment might be appropriate for isolated misappropriation that is unlikely to be repeated, but was not appropriate where misappropriation was accompanied by lengthy practice of deceit on client's agent and lack of forthrightness during State Bar investigation. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [11]

Disbarment was called for in light of attorney's misappropriation of extremely large sum, extensive and prolonged deceit, lack of extraordinary mitigation, lack of forthrightness in dealing with misconduct, and lack of sufficient evidence of rehabilitation to assure public that offense would not recur. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [13]

Where attorney had committed extremely serious misconduct over long period of time, and questions remained concerning attorney's rehabilitation, requiring standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing in lieu of disbarment would not be sufficient to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [15]

A single act of very serious misconduct can and has resulted in disbarment even absent a prior disciplinary record; where a respondent's culpability is egregious and inexplicable, disbarment is appropriate even for a single misappropriation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [12]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

822.30 Applied - actual suspension in lieu of disbarment (Standard 2.1(a))

822.31 Insignificant amount of funds (Standard 2.1(b))

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

822.32 Negligent rather than purposeful (1986 Standard 2.2(b))

Note: Topic number 822.32 retained sokely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014. For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822.35 for gross negligence, and topic number 822.36 for neither intentional misconduct nor gross negligence.

Where respondent took up to two years to pay outstanding medical liens after he discovered them, such delay was the most significant factor in justifying a sanction of one year's actual suspension. Respondent's preoccupation with remedying other unspecified problems in his caseload did not justify his delay in remedying these negligent misappropriations. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [7]

Where hearing judge's decision was issued prior to relevant Supreme Court and review department opinions, and did not discuss whether gross negligence resulting in misappropriation should be subjected to same suggested minimum sanction of one year actual suspension as is applied for intentional misappropriation, but hearing judge's recommendation of one-year minimum was justified by facts in record making suspension appropriate for public protection, review department concluded that hearing judge's discipline recommendation was based on an analysis of the record in light of the objectives of discipline rather than on a rigid application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [8]

In requiring an invariable minimum of one year's actual suspension, standard 2.2(a) is not faithful to the teachings of the Supreme Court's decisions. Negligent misappropriation quickly and voluntarily remedied may require no actual suspension or only a short suspension. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [9]

Where respondent's gross negligence resulted in several incidents of misappropriation over a number of years, and where the record established both compelling mitigating factors and substantial aggravating factors, including prolonged delay in making restitution, discipline including one year's actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [11]

822.33 Good faith belief in right to funds

822.34 Sufficiently compelling mitigation (Standard 2.1(a))

The appropriate discipline for wilful misappropriation is disbarment in the absence of extenuating circumstances. However, extenuating circumstances sufficient to warrant less than disbarment have been found both in the attorney's background, demonstrating that the misconduct was aberrational and hence unlikely to recur, and in the facts relating to the misappropriation, recognizing that more severe discipline is warranted for intentional theft as opposed to negligent acts unaccompanied by evil intent. Where respondent's extensive misconduct, which included multiple acts of gross negligence in handling client funds as well as misappropriation and improper business transactions with clients, occurred during a three-year period after a 28-year blemish-free record, and was surrounded by circumstances indicating that the misconduct was aberrational, a one-year actual suspension and three years stayed suspension and probation were adequate discipline. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [21]

Where respondent's gross negligence resulted in several incidents of misappropriation over a number of years, and where the record established both compelling mitigating factors and substantial aggravating factors, including prolonged delay in making restitution, discipline including one year's actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [11]

Some cases of misappropriation have resulted in lengthy suspensions rather than disbarment where restitution was made. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [16]

822.35 Applied - actual suspension for gross negligence (Standard 2.1(b))

Where multiple discipline standards applied to respondent's misconduct, Review Department focused on standards calling for most severe discipline. Where respondent was found culpable of 24 counts of misconduct, involving nine different statute and rule violations, spanning four years, and involving four client matters, in two of which respondent misappropriated significant funds through gross negligence, and respondent habitually disregarded his duties as an attorney and lacked recognition and remorse, high risk that respondent would engage in additional misconduct warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [9a-d]

822.36 Applied - suspension or reproval if neither intentional misconduct nor gross negligence (Standard 2.1(c))

822.39 Applied - Other reason

Where respondent had been inattentive to a client's legal needs and had wrongfully retained the client's personal property, but respondent had only committed misconduct in two matters in 23 years of practice, disbarment was not appropriate under guiding Supreme Court opinions. Instead, review department recommended five years stayed suspension, five years probation, restitution, and actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and legal ability. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

Not all serious trust fund misappropriation cases warrant disbarment. Where respondent had a 21-year record of practice without prior discipline and respondent's misconduct took place within a relatively narrow time frame, standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing, with three-year actual suspension and five-year stayed suspension and probation, would be adequate to protect public, despite gravity of respondent's misconduct and lack of evidence regarding its cause. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [8]

Where respondent committed serious misconduct shortly after admission to practice, including abandoning several clients and failing to perform legal services competently; four instances of failure to return unearned advance fees promptly; misleading two clients; misappropriating trust funds of a bankruptcy estate; and accepting employment without sufficient time, resources and ability to perform competently; but respondent presented mitigating evidence of emotional and psychological difficulties and rehabilitation, disbarment was not required, and protection of the public and profession was satisfied by five-year stayed suspension, three-year actual suspension, requirements to make restitution and show rehabilitation before returning to practice, and a period of supervised probation. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [1]

Misappropriation of client funds is a particularly serious ethical violation, which breaches the high duty of loyalty owed to the client, violates basic notions of honesty, and endangers public confidence in the legal profession. Misappropriation generally warrants disbarment of the attorney involved unless clearly extenuating circumstances are present. In assessing the appropriate discipline to recommend for a respondent who had misappropriated a large amount of client funds and also abandoned the client, the review department focused on the misappropriation, the most serious aspect of the misconduct. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [6]

Misappropriation can be committed in different degrees of culpability, deserving of different discipline. Even where the most compelling mitigating circumstances do not clearly predominate, extenuating circumstances relating to the facts of the misappropriation may render disbarment inappropriate. An attorney who acts deliberately and with deceit should receive more severe discipline than an attorney who acts negligently and without deception. Disbarment would rarely, if ever, be appropriate for an attorney whose only misconduct was a single act of misappropriation unaccompanied by deceit or other aggravating factors. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [12]

Disbarment was not appropriate in a misappropriation case where the misconduct resulted more from respondent's lack of understanding of an attorney's ethical duties rather than innate venality. However, because there was more serious misconduct and less mitigation than in other cases, and respondent had not recognized the seriousness of the misconduct, a three-year actual suspension, a showing of rehabilitation and fitness to practice before termination of the actual suspension, and strict probation conditions were required. In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652. [13]

Pursuant to Supreme Court precedent, only the most serious instances of repeated misconduct and multiple instances of misappropriation have warranted actual suspension, much less disbarment; a year of actual suspension, if not less, has been more commonly the discipline imposed in cases involving but a single instance of misappropriation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [11]

A one-year actual suspension was appropriate where respondent had committed a single act of misappropriation and had fully participated in the disciplinary proceedings, and there was no strong mitigating evidence justifying departing from the standards by recommending a shorter suspension. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [13]

Even though only one matter was involved, respondent's misconduct was serious; misappropriation of advanced costs alone could result in recommendation of at least one year of actual suspension, and abdication of trust account responsibilities could warrant three month actual suspension. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [11]

822.50 Declined to apply - sanction less than presumed discipline imposed

822.51 No misappropriation found

Violations of trust account rules which do not involve a misappropriation found to constitute an act of moral turpitude are not treated, for the purpose of determining appropriate discipline, as misappropriations within the contemplation of standard 2.2(a), Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, for which disbarment is the presumed sanction. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [16]

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

822.52 Insignificant amount of funds

Standard 2.2(a) calls for disbarment when attorney willfully misappropriates entrusted funds unless amount is insignificantly small or the most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominate. The first exception to standard 2.2(a) applies. Respondent misappropriated by his gross neglect, a relatively small amount of funds, which he repaid fairly quickly and before State Bar's involvement. In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239 [4]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

822.53 Negligent rather than purposeful

Note: Topic number 822.53 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014. For cases decided after January 1, 2014, see topic number 822.35 for gross negligence, and topic number 822.36 for neither intentional misconduct nor gross negligence.

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

If a misappropriation of entrusted funds results from an attorney's laxity in supervising office staff, and not from an intent to defraud, and remedial steps are instituted by the attorney upon discovery of the situation, further underscoring the lack of fraudulent intent, far less discipline than disbarment is appropriate. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [17]

While gross negligence is not a defense to a charge of misappropriation, the absence of evidence of intentional misappropriation is a substantial factor in mitigation. In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404. [19]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

Supreme Court has usually not dealt severely with misappropriations involving a relatively small amount for a relatively brief time when no intentional dishonesty was involved and the offense involved attorney's use of trust account as an operating account. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [18]

822.54 Good faith belief in right to funds

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

822.55 Compelling mitigation

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

822.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

824 Standard 2.2(a) (1986 Standard 2.2(b)) Commingling/Trust Account Violation - 3 months actual suspension

824.10 Applied

Respondent's misconduct, which involved the misuse of his client trust accounts, the failure to perform services competently in one matter, and extremely serious violations of his obligation of fidelity to clients (involving abandonment of a client and, in an uncharged incident, of arguing against the interest of his client in seeking to be relieved as attorney of record) warrants a discipline recommendation of 18 months stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension and until respondent satisfactorily completes certain educational courses. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [9]

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

Even though only one matter was involved, respondent's misconduct was serious; misappropriation of advanced costs alone could result in recommendation of at least one year of actual suspension, and abdication of trust account responsibilities could warrant three month actual suspension. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [11]

824.20 Declined to apply - greater sanction imposed

824.21 Coupled with other misconduct

824.22 Other aggravating factors

824.29 Other reason

824.50 Declined to apply - lesser sanction imposed

824.51 No applicable misconduct found

824.52 Negligent rather than purposeful

Where respondent negligently committed a minor trust account violation, made voluntary restitution prior to any complaint to the State Bar, presented extensive character evidence, and was on the verge of retiring from a very respectable 40-year career, respondent was appropriately the subject of a private reproval. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [6]

824.53 Purely technical violation

Where respondent inadvertently mishandled a small sum of trust funds and was unlikely to repeat her misconduct, no suspension was necessary. Although standard 2.2(b) requires at least three months actual suspension for a trust account violation, the standards are guidelines to be construed in light of decisional law. A private reproval was appropriate in light of the nature of the misconduct and the mitigating circumstances, including respondent's severe emotional difficulties, her having taken the disciplinary proceeding very seriously, and her having suffered great hardship as a consequence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [14]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

824.54 Compelling mitigation

Where an attorney disobeys a court order based on an unreasonable interpretation of the order or an untested belief that the order is not valid, or takes money that is not the attorney's based on an unreasonable view of the facts, public discipline is necessary to make clear to the bar, the courts and the public that attorneys face serious consequences for such misconduct. However, where respondent did not pose a threat to the public, and review department concluded that actual suspension was not required to reinforce respondent's understanding of his ethical obligations, no actual suspension was necessary. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [13]

Where respondent violated rules regarding accounting for client funds, obtaining adverse interests in client property, and representing clients with conflicting interests, and respondent's misconduct was aggravated by overreaching, by additional uncharged misconduct including solicitation of a client at the hospital and misleading a court, and by respondent's failure to recognize his ethical accountability to clients, respondent's misconduct would have warranted substantial discipline absent his long service at the bar and for his community, and 60-day actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [11]

Where respondent inadvertently mishandled a small sum of trust funds and was unlikely to repeat her misconduct, no suspension was necessary. Although standard 2.2(b) requires at least three months actual suspension for a trust account violation, the standards are guidelines to be construed in light of decisional law. A private reproval was appropriate in light of the nature of the misconduct and the mitigating circumstances, including respondent's severe emotional difficulties, her having taken the disciplinary proceeding very seriously, and her having suffered great hardship as a consequence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [14]

Where respondent negligently committed a minor trust account violation, made voluntary restitution prior to any complaint to the State Bar, presented extensive character evidence, and was on the verge of retiring from a very respectable 40-year career, respondent was appropriately the subject of a private reproval. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 732. [6]

Premature withdrawal of trust funds in a marital dissolution to pay community debts, without misrepresentations or financial loss to the opposing party or opposing counsel, combined with impressive character testimony, would warrant discipline in the neighborhood of 30 days actual suspension, not lengthy suspension or disbarment. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [11]

An attorney's lengthy delay in notifying his client of receipt of a check in partial settlement of her case, and his failure to render a timely and appropriate accounting upon his withdrawal, which was aggravated by unilateral payment to himself of his fees, merited more than a public reproval. The attorney's handling of trust account records was required to be reviewed by an accountant for some period of time to ensure protection of other clients. However, in view of mitigating circumstances, subsequent corrective measures, and lack of harm to the client or her doctor, no actual suspension was necessary to protect the public. The Review Department recommended two months' stayed suspension, with one year's probation, periodic auditing of the attorney's trust account, and a professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [28]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are not to be rigidly applied, and an actual suspension of less than three months for commingling may be appropriate in the circumstances of a particular case. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [18]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

824.59 Other reason

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

Where respondent was culpable of failing to set aside $942 of his legal fee in a trust account pending resolution of a dispute with his client; aggravating factor of bad faith arose from respondent's intent to serve his clients rather than from any venal purpose; aggravating factors were outweighed by mitigating factors including long period of unblemished practice since misconduct, indicating unlikelihood of further misconduct; and prior similar cases indicated that it would be appropriate to depart from the 90-day minimum actual suspension for trust account violations, appropriate discipline was private reproval conditioned on passage of professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [22]

Although standard 2.2(a) calls for 90 days minimum suspension for commingling, the Supreme Court has declined to impose suspension if the commingling results from a good faith fee dispute. Where respondent's trust fund violation was no more serious than trust fund violations in a prior Supreme Court case in which a public reproval was imposed, and where respondent presented far greater evidence in mitigation than the attorneys in that case, the appropriate discipline was a private reproval on condition of taking and passing the Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [22]

Violations of the ethical rule governing placement of client funds in a trust account have not always resulted in actual or even stayed suspensions. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [27]

Where respondent had no prior or subsequent discipline; respondent was not venal; respondent's misconduct was an aberration occurring over a short period of time and contributed to by respondent's poor business judgment at a time when he was under financial pressures; respondent accepted responsibility for his misconduct, taking objective steps to avoid further misconduct; and other mitigating factors existed, it was appropriate to recommend lesser sanction than minimum actual suspension indicated by applicable standards. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [16]

825 Standard 2.2(b) (Other violation involving mishandling of client funds or property - suspension or reproval)

825.10 Applied - suspension

825.20 Applied - reproval

825.50 Declined to apply

825.51 Greater sanction imposed

825.52 Lesser sanction imposed

825.59 Other issues re Standard 2.2(b)

Note: For Standard 2.3 (illegal or unconscionable fee), see topic number 870 et seq. For Standard 2.4 (business transaction with or adverse pecuniary interest to client) see topic number 880 et seq.

826 Standard 2.5 (Representation of adverse interests - actual suspension

826.10 Applied - actual suspension

826.11 Failure to obtain informed written consent of client(s)

826.12 Significant harm to client(s)

826.13 Breach of duty to maintain confidentiality

826.19 Other factors

826.50 Declined to apply - disbarment

826.51 Coupled with other misconduct

826.52 Other aggravating factors

826.59 Other reason

826.70 Declined to apply - lesser or no discipline

826.71 No adverse representation found

826.72 Informed written consent obtained

826.73 No significant harm to client(s)

826.74 No breach of duty to maintain confidentiality

826.79 Other reason

827 Standard 2.6 (Breach of Confidentiality - suspension or reproval)

827.10 Applied - suspension

827.11 Intentional revealing of client confidences

827.12 Coupled with other misconduct

827.13 Other aggravating factors

827.19 Other reasons

827.20 Applied - reproval

827.21 Recklessness or gross negligence

827.22 Harm not significant

827.23 Mitigating factors

827.29 Other reason

827.50 Declined to apply - greater discipline

827.51 Intentional revealing of client confidences

827.52 Coupled with other misconduct

827.53 Other aggravating factors

827.59 Other reasons

827.90 Declined to apply - no discipline

827.91 No applicable misconduct found

827.92 No significant harm to client(s)

827.93 Mitigating factors

827.99 Other reason

Note: For Standard 2.7 (interim Standard 2.5) (performance, communication, or withdrawal violations), see topic number 840 et seq.

828 Standard 2.8 (Fee Splitting with Non-Lawyers - actual suspension)

828.10 Applied - actual suspension

828.11 Extent of interference with attorney-client relationship

828.12 Failure to perform legal services for client

828.19 Other factors

828.50 Declined to apply - disbarment

828.51 Extent of interference with attorney-client relationship

828.52 Failure to perform legal services for client

828.53 Coupled with other misconduct

828.54 Other aggravating factors

828.59 Other reason

828.70 Declined to apply - lesser or no discipline

828.71 No applicable misconduct found

828.79 Other reason

829 Standard 2.9 (Frivolous Litigation)

829.10 Applied - actual suspension

829.11 Significant harm to individual

829.12 Significant harm to administration of justice

829.19 Other factors

829.50 Applied - disbarment

829.51 Significant harm to individual

829.52 Significant harm to administration of justice

829.53 Pattern of misconduct

829.54 Coupled with other misconduct

829.55 Other aggravating factors

829.59 Other reason

829.60 Applied - Stayed suspension or reproval

829.61 Harm not significant

829.62 Mitigating factors

829.69 Other reason

829.70 Declined to apply - no discipline

829.72 No applicable misconduct found

829.79 Other reason

Note: For Standard 2.10 (interim Standard 2.6) (unauthorized practice of law while suspended or inactive), see topic number 910 et seq.

830 Standard 2.11 (interim Standard 2.7, 1986 Standard 2.3) (Moral Turpitude, Fraud, etc.)

Even though respondent was not acting as an attorney in the case but as a citizen, his change of vote for the defense to break a jury deadlock so he could return his attention to his law practice caused significant harm to the administration of justice. In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141 [5]

831 Applied - Disbarment

831.10 Extent of harm to victim great

Disbarment was the only discipline adequate to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession, where respondent used his legal knowledge to repeatedly abuse the court system through relentless lawsuits, his conduct was significantly aggravated by a lengthy pattern of wrongdoing, significant harm to others, disregard for the court process, and a total lack of insight into his harmful behavior, and he failed to establish any mitigation. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [10]

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, displayed a 10-year pattern of misconduct, significantly harmed the administration of justice and clients and showed no remorse, the appropriate discipline recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Reiss(Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206 [10]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

A lengthy suspension with a standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing was not adequate discipline, where respondent committed extensive misdeeds which became commonplace in respondent's practice, caused harm to a number of clients, and failed to rectify the harm. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

831.15 Adjudicator as victim

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, displayed a 10-year pattern of misconduct, significantly harmed the administration of justice and clients and showed no remorse, the appropriate discipline recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206. [10]

831.20 Magnitude of misconduct great

Where most severe sanction applicable to respondent's misconduct was disbarment or actual suspension for moral turpitude (interim Standard 2.7), and respondent's intentional filing of fraudulent bankruptcy petitions continued over three-year period, respondent's pattern of misconduct involving recurring type of dishonesty warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [11]

Disbarment was the only discipline adequate to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession, where respondent used his legal knowledge to repeatedly abuse the court system through relentless lawsuits, his conduct was significantly aggravated by a lengthy pattern of wrongdoing, significant harm to others, disregard for the court process, and a total lack of insight into his harmful behavior, and he failed to establish any mitigation. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [10]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline where respondent recklessly failed to control his law practice, personally committed other acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty, violated a number of ethical rules, displayed lack of candor at trial, and failed to establish any significant mitigation. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [2]

Even though none of respondent's individual acts of misconduct involved dishonesty, concealment, or mishandling of client funds and even though respondent had no prior record of discipline over a lengthy practice, respondent's disbarment was warranted as consistent with past case law and the standards for attorney discipline for respondent's panoply of protracted failure to communicate with clients, incompetent practice, and failure to supervise subordinate staff affecting many different clients over a 10-year period. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [11]

Where respondent committed acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty and engaged in a wide range of other misconduct without compelling mitigation and with substantial aggravation, disbarment was necessary to protect the public, courts, and legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495. [9]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Attorney's deceit of client's agent on 11 separate occasions over a considerable period was an aggravating factor, and militated strongly against considering attorney's misconduct as one-time or aberrant. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [6]

831.30 Related to practice of law

Where most severe sanction applicable to respondent's misconduct was disbarment or actual suspension for moral turpitude (interim Standard 2.7), and respondent's intentional filing of fraudulent bankruptcy petitions

continued over three-year period, respondent's pattern of misconduct involving recurring type of dishonesty warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [11]

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, displayed a 10-year pattern of misconduct, significantly harmed the administration of justice and clients and showed no remorse, the appropriate discipline recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206. [10]

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline where respondent recklessly failed to control his law practice, personally committed other acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty, violated a number of ethical rules, displayed lack of candor at trial, and failed to establish any significant mitigation. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [2]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Where attorney committed serious offenses including misappropriation of large sum from client and subsequent deceit of client's agent, issue before State Bar Court was whether mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed or predominated in order to warrant recommendation of less than disbarment. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [8]

831.35 Impact on administration of justice

Where most severe sanction applicable to respondent's misconduct was disbarment or actual suspension for moral turpitude (interim Standard 2.7), and respondent's intentional filing of fraudulent bankruptcy petitions continued over three-year period, respondent's pattern of misconduct involving recurring type of dishonesty warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.. [11]

831.40 Coupled with other misconduct

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline where respondent recklessly failed to control his law practice, personally committed other acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty, violated a number of ethical rules, displayed lack of candor at trial, and failed to establish any significant mitigation. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [2]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

An attorney's acts of deceit are very serious, and under the standards warrant suspension or disbarment. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [5]

Where attorney committed serious offenses including misappropriation of large sum from client and subsequent deceit of client's agent, issue before State Bar Court was whether mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed or predominated in order to warrant recommendation of less than disbarment. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [8]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

831.50 Presence of other aggravation

Disbarment was the only discipline adequate to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession, where respondent used his legal knowledge to repeatedly abuse the court system through relentless lawsuits, his conduct was significantly aggravated by a lengthy pattern of wrongdoing, significant harm to others, disregard for the court process, and a total lack of insight into his harmful behavior, and he failed to establish any mitigation. In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360. [10]

Where multiple discipline standards applied to respondent's misconduct, Review Department focused on standards calling for most severe discipline. Where respondent was found culpable of 24 counts of misconduct, involving nine different statute and rule violations, spanning four years, and involving four client matters, in two of which respondent misappropriated significant funds through gross negligence, and respondent habitually disregarded his duties as an attorney and lacked recognition and remorse, high risk that respondent would engage in additional misconduct warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [9a-d]

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

Attorney's deceit of client's agent on 11 separate occasions over a considerable period was an aggravating factor, and militated strongly against considering attorney's misconduct as one-time or aberrant. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [6]

Where attorney committed serious offenses including misappropriation of large sum from client and subsequent deceit of client's agent, issue before State Bar Court was whether mitigating circumstances clearly outweighed or predominated in order to warrant recommendation of less than disbarment. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [8]

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

831.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 9.

Repeated fraudulent billing, involving moral turpitude, is a matter from which the public deserves substantial protection. When this misconduct is combined with the additional misconduct of not promptly paying over proceeds to a client and not retaining disputed fees in a trust account, and with respondent's inability or unwillingness to accept the judicial process, it places the public, the courts, and the profession at risk. Nothing less than disbarment was appropriate to control this risk In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725. [6].

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline where respondent recklessly failed to control his law practice, personally committed other acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty, violated a number of ethical rules, displayed lack of candor at trial, and failed to establish any significant mitigation. In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709. [2]

Disbarment was recommended where respondent's culpability arose from a record exceptional in displaying respondent's repeated, deliberate overreaching of her clients for personal gain, and her repeated dishonesty, where respondent also demonstrated complete lack of recognition of the most basic duties of attorneys in this state, and where respondent's misconduct arose just four years after her admission. In each of the three most serious matters, respondent became an advocate against her client, unabashedly disregarding her clients' instructions in order to maximize her fees, and she threw aside a lawyer's fundamental duty of honesty during her protracted, stubborn pursuit of personal gain. The review department concluded that only disbarment could give the level of protection the public and the courts deserve. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [4]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

833 Applied - Suspension

833.10 Extent of harm to victim small

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

833.20 Magnitude of misconduct small

Fact that, in addition to unintentionally misappropriating client's funds, attorney had committed act of moral turpitude by concealing personal assets in trust account to avoid tax levy might, but would not necessarily, indicate greater discipline to be in order, based on Supreme Court precedent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [19]

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

833.30 Not related to practice of law

Where attorney engaged in acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude by repeatedly incurring credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them, the magnitude of attorney's misconduct was substantial, but did not involve or relate to his practice of law. Appropriate discipline was two years' stayed suspension, two years' probation, sixty days' actual suspension. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[14]

Although respondent's acts of dishonesty did not occur during the actual practice of law, but rather while respondent was seeking employment as a lawyer, respondent's willingness to use false and misleading means in the employment process was a matter of serious concern. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [6]

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

833.40 Presence of other mitigation

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, failed to obey the laws or court orders and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and harm to the administration of justice but mitigated by character evidence, cooperation, and pro bono service, the appropriate discipline recommendation was a 4-year actual suspension. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [12]

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Where respondent almost completely abdicated to a non-lawyer his professional duties with respect to a personal injury practice; failed to take prompt, realistic action to stop the non-lawyer's capping practices, and had not presented clear evidence regarding rehabilitation and necessary changes in his practice, then despite mitigating factors including respondent's cooperation with law enforcement and State Bar and satisfaction of medical liens out of his own funds, appropriate discipline for protection of public was three-year stayed suspension with three years probation and actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the general law. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [7]

The appropriate discipline for wilful misappropriation is disbarment in the absence of extenuating circumstances. However, extenuating circumstances sufficient to warrant less than disbarment have been found both in the attorney's background, demonstrating that the misconduct was aberrational and hence unlikely to recur, and in the facts relating to the misappropriation, recognizing that more severe discipline is warranted for intentional theft as opposed to negligent acts unaccompanied by evil intent. Where respondent's extensive misconduct, which included multiple acts of gross negligence in handling client funds as well as misappropriation and improper business transactions with clients, occurred during a three-year period after a 28-year blemish-free record, and was surrounded by circumstances indicating that the misconduct was aberrational, a one-year actual suspension and three years stayed suspension and probation were adequate discipline. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [21]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

Lengthy suspension was called for based on multiple acts of fraud, dishonesty and concealment, even though attorney did not recognize at the time that his behavior was wrongful. However, attorney's immediate restitution, clear remorse, and cooperative behavior after he realized his conduct was wrong, and his good conduct thereafter, justified imposing substantial suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [19]

833.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

Where attorney engaged in acts of dishonesty and moral turpitude by repeatedly incurring credit card debts totaling $19,327 without intending to repay them, the magnitude of attorney's misconduct was substantial, but did not involve or relate to his practice of law. Appropriate discipline was two years' stayed suspension, two years' probation, sixty days' actual suspension. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[14]

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Respondent's misconduct, which involved the misuse of his client trust accounts, the failure to perform services competently in one matter, and extremely serious violations of his obligation of fidelity to clients (involving abandonment of a client and, in an uncharged incident, of arguing against the interest of his client in seeking to be relieved as attorney of record) warrants a discipline recommendation of 18 months stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension and until respondent satisfactorily completes certain educational courses. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [9]

Respondent was found culpable of ten disciplinable acts of moral turpitude (seven acts of misrepresentation, one act of improperly retaining for his own benefit funds out of a medical provider's lien reduction, and one act of attempting to obtain a greater fee than that to which he was entitled by failing to disclose to his client costs he recovered), eight instances of improper solicitation of clients, and two instances of failing to properly account to his client. There were substantial aggravating factors, including a prior record of discipline, but no mitigating circumstances. The review department recommended that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for a period of five years, that execution be stayed, and that respondent be placed on probation for a period of five years on conditions including three years actual suspension and until respondent pays restitution and until he provides proof of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [9]

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Where respondent had been inattentive to a client's legal needs and had wrongfully retained the client's personal property, but respondent had only committed misconduct in two matters in 23 years of practice, disbarment was not appropriate under guiding Supreme Court opinions. Instead, review department recommended five years stayed suspension, five years probation, restitution, and actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and legal ability. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

Attorneys placed on disciplinary suspension must be careful not to hold themselves out as being able to practice when they are not and must not mislead employers regarding their prior status. An attorney's statements in a resume or job interview should be as trustworthy as that professional's representation to a court or client. Where respondent did not seem to understand the seriousness of his ethical duties in this regard, and had a prior record of discipline, a period of actual suspension was necessary for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [13]

Where respondent committed serious misconduct shortly after admission to practice, including abandoning several clients and failing to perform legal services competently; four instances of failure to return unearned advance fees promptly; misleading two clients; misappropriating trust funds of a bankruptcy estate; and accepting employment without sufficient time, resources and ability to perform competently; but respondent presented mitigating evidence of emotional and psychological difficulties and rehabilitation, disbarment was not required, and protection of the public and profession was satisfied by five-year stayed suspension, three-year actual suspension, requirements to make restitution and show rehabilitation before returning to practice, and a period of supervised probation. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [1]

Disbarment will not be ordered where there is no evidence that a sanction short of disbarment is inadequate to deter future misconduct and protect the public. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [15]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

Attorney's repeated, protracted deceit of clients, which had effect of forestalling them from discovering true status of their matters, was perhaps even more serious than harm caused by attorney's inattention to client duties. An attorney's practice of deceit is inimical to the high ethical standards of honesty and integrity required of members of the legal profession and to the promotion of confidence in the trustworthiness of members of the profession. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [4]

Where respondent's misconduct occurred over a period of time, included extensive deceit practiced on clients, and caused harm and expense to clients, and where respondent failed to participate in State Bar proceedings and there was no significant mitigation, appropriate recommended discipline for abandonment and deception of three clients plus failure to cooperate with State Bar investigation was three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [6]

835 Declined to apply

835.10 No applicable misconduct found

Review department's review of record is independent, and it may draw its own conclusions from record whether or not a party has requested it to do so. Where hearing judge's conclusion that respondent had committed act of moral turpitude was difficult to reconcile with judge's conclusion as to appropriate discipline, it was appropriate for review department to give particular scrutiny to culpability conclusion as well as degree of discipline, even though respondent had not requested review of moral turpitude conclusion. In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [8]

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

835.20 Extent of harm to victim

835.30 Magnitude of misconduct small

835.40 Not related to practice of law

835.50 Compelling mitigation

Where respondent's misconduct in inaccurately reporting her MCLE compliance was a one-time error, she had a long period of practice with no discipline, and an exemplary record of pro bono and community service, and she caused no harm to the public or the judicial system, and where, most significantly, she immediately accepted responsibility, rectified the situation, and implemented a corrective plan to avoid future problems, it was appropriate under these unique circumstances to deviate from the standard calling for disbarment or actual suspension for acts of moral turpitude. Even a 30-day actual suspension was excessive; public reproval was adequate to serve the goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [5 a-c]

835.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Note: For Standard 2.12 (interim Standard 2.8), see topic number 920 et seq.; for Standard 2.13 (interim Standard 2.9), see topic number 930 et seq.

840 Standard 2.7 (interim Standard 2.5, 1986 Standard 2.4) (Performance, communication, or withdrawal violations)

842 (a) Habitual disregard of client interests ("Pattern of wilful abandonment" in 1986 Standards)—disbarment

842.10 Applied

Where multiple discipline standards applied to respondent's misconduct, Review Department focused on standards calling for most severe discipline. Where respondent was found culpable of 24 counts of misconduct, involving nine different statute and rule violations, spanning four years, and involving four client matters, in two of which respondent misappropriated significant funds through gross negligence, and respondent habitually disregarded his duties as an attorney and lacked recognition and remorse, high risk that respondent would engage in additional misconduct warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [9a-d]

Even though an attorney's individual acts did not involve moral turpitude, the attorney's pattern of misconduct amounted to moral turpitude; habitual disregard of client interests, even where grossly negligent or careless rather than wilful or dishonest, constitutes moral turpitude and justifies disbarment. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1]

Where respondent had engaged in a pattern of misconduct involving 14 matters spanning six of his nine years of practice, and had misappropriated over $17,000 of client funds and caused the extinction of legal claims for eight clients, and where respondent had engaged in further misconduct after he had recognized his case management difficulties, and had barely begun his rehabilitation, the fact that the parties did not stipulate that respondent engaged in acts of moral turpitude in any individual matter did not necessarily mean that his misconduct warranted less discipline than in comparable cases where disbarment was ordered. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [7]

A lengthy suspension with a standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing was not adequate discipline, where respondent committed extensive misdeeds which became commonplace in respondent's practice, caused harm to a number of clients, and failed to rectify the harm. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

842.50 Declined to apply

842.51 No habitual disregard (formerly No pattern) found

Abandonment of three clients did not constitute a pattern of abandonment, but did constitute multiple acts of severe disregard of clients' interests. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [3]

842.52 Compelling mitigation

In cases involving a pattern of misconduct not primarily intentional in nature, and in which the attorney has no prior record of discipline, suspension and not disbarment is most likely to be deemed adequate to protect the public when a tragic event or similar set of circumstances contributed to and explained the attorney's misconduct, and when evidence of subsequent rehabilitation gives the court confidence that the pattern of misconduct is not likely to be repeated. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [6]

842.59 Other reason

844 (b) Multiple matters but no habitual disregard ("No pattern/failure to communicate" in 1986 Standards)

844.10 Applied - actual suspension

844.11 Extent of misconduct great

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

Attorney's failure to perform legal services as agreed, and abandonment of three clients, constituted very serious misconduct. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [2]

Abandonment of three clients did not constitute a pattern of abandonment, but did constitute multiple acts of severe disregard of clients' interests. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [3]

Where respondent's misconduct occurred over a period of time, included extensive deceit practiced on clients, and caused harm and expense to clients, and where respondent failed to participate in State Bar proceedings and there was no significant mitigation, appropriate recommended discipline for abandonment and deception of three clients plus failure to cooperate with State Bar investigation was three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [6]

844.12 Harm to client great

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

Where respondent's misconduct occurred over a period of time, included extensive deceit practiced on clients, and caused harm and expense to clients, and where respondent failed to participate in State Bar proceedings and there was no significant mitigation, appropriate recommended discipline for abandonment and deception of three clients plus failure to cooperate with State Bar investigation was three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [6]

844.13 Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent's most serious ethical violations resulted from his affiliation and fee-sharing with a non-lawyer entity, Review Department applied discipline standard most applicable to that misconduct, rather than standard applicable to respondent's failure to perform legal services in multiple matters. Case law in matters involving similar misconduct was inapplicable in light of respondent's compelling mitigation, including long practice without a prior record, candor and cooperation, good character, pro bono work and community service, and remorse and recognition of wrongdoing. Given that respondent's misconduct was not likely to recur, totality of circumstances warranted imposing actual suspension for 60 days and until respondent completed restitution. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [8 a,b]

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

Where respondent failed to perform services, communicate with client, and refund unearned fee; no pattern of misconduct was shown; respondent did not act with dishonesty or harm client, and respondent had a prior record of one instance of discipline that was neither remote nor minimal, hearing judge's recommendation of one year actual suspension was too severe; six-month actual suspension, coupled with restitution requirement, was sufficient. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263 [8]

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

Respondent's misconduct, which involved the misuse of his client trust accounts, the failure to perform services competently in one matter, and extremely serious violations of his obligation of fidelity to clients (involving abandonment of a client and, in an uncharged incident, of arguing against the interest of his client in seeking to be relieved as attorney of record) warrants a discipline recommendation of 18 months stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension and until respondent satisfactorily completes certain educational courses. In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871. [9]

The review department recommended a one-year stayed suspension and three-year probation, conditioned on a sixty-day actual suspension, where an attorney had recklessly failed to provide competent legal services in four matters, had failed to communicate properly with a client in one matter, had failed to forward a client's file promptly upon request in one matter, and had significantly harmed two clients, but where the attorney had practiced law without discipline for over 21 years, had recognized his misconduct, had reshaped his office procedures, and had demonstrated full candor and acknowledgment of responsibility for his misconduct before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

Where respondent's mishandling of trust funds was not intentional, but respondent abdicated responsibility to supervise personal injury cases and recklessly disregarded trust account obligations, thereby committing acts of moral turpitude; where respondent also repeatedly failed to provide legal services competently and did not notify a client of receipt of a settlement; and where record did not show that problems resulting from respondent's disregard of his trust account obligations had ended or that respondent had established sound office management plan, appropriate discipline included three years probation with trust account audit and law office management requirements, three years stayed suspension, and actual suspension for eighteen months and until restitution was completed. In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119. [15]

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Where respondent had been inattentive to a client's legal needs and had wrongfully retained the client's personal property, but respondent had only committed misconduct in two matters in 23 years of practice, disbarment was not appropriate under guiding Supreme Court opinions. Instead, review department recommended five years stayed suspension, five years probation, restitution, and actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and legal ability. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

In matters involving abandonment of a single client by an attorney with no prior record of discipline, discipline imposed by Supreme Court has ranged from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. Where respondent's misconduct was serious, harmed client, and included trust account violation as well as abandonment and failure to communicate, but respondent presented impressive mitigating evidence, including services to disadvantaged clients and to minority community, and respondent expressed sincere aspiration not to be involved in disciplinary proceedings again, review department recommended actual suspension of 30 days, with stayed suspension of six months and one year of probation. In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196. [9]

Where respondent repeatedly misused his trust account as a personal account, twice failed to return unearned advanced costs promptly on request, and failed to perform services competently in one matter, the gravest aspect of the misconduct was that relating to respondent's violation of the rule governing trust accounts and client funds, and this misconduct warranted at least a three-month actual suspension. Where such misconduct was aggravated by prior discipline for neglect of four client matters, and aggravating circumstances predominated over mitigating circumstances, it was appropriate to recommend a three-year stayed suspension, six months actual suspension, and five years of monitored probation for the protection of the public. In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615. [10]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

Where respondent's misconduct occurred over a period of time, included extensive deceit practiced on clients, and caused harm and expense to clients, and where respondent failed to participate in State Bar proceedings and there was no significant mitigation, appropriate recommended discipline for abandonment and deception of three clients plus failure to cooperate with State Bar investigation was three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [6]

844.14 Other aggravating factors

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

The review department recommended a one-year stayed suspension and three-year probation, conditioned on a sixty-day actual suspension, where an attorney had recklessly failed to provide competent legal services in four matters, had failed to communicate properly with a client in one matter, had failed to forward a client's file promptly upon request in one matter, and had significantly harmed two clients, but where the attorney had practiced law without discipline for over 21 years, had recognized his misconduct, had reshaped his office procedures, and had demonstrated full candor and acknowledgment of responsibility for his misconduct before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

Where respondent's misconduct involved eight instances of abandonment or failure to provide services, three instances of failure to return unearned fees, lack of communication with three clients, failure to pay court-ordered sanctions in two cases, misappropriation of a small amount of advanced costs, improper securing of a large loan from a client, and failure to cooperate with the State Bar investigation, and respondent did not fully participate in the disciplinary proceedings, then despite respondent's lengthy unblemished record and public sector service, the appropriate discipline included a lengthy period of actual suspension and probation, and a requirement that respondent prove rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the law prior to returning to active practice. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [19]

Where respondent's misconduct in both first and second disciplinary matters involved similar lack of diligence causing delay in closing a simple probate estate, discipline in second matter ordinarily would warrant only slightly greater discipline than in first matter. However, where respondent had failed to understand or appreciate misconduct, causing concern about handling future cases, and in light of absence of mitigating factors and presence of several aggravating factors, significantly greater discipline than in first matter was appropriate in second matter, and review department recommended two-year stayed suspension, three years probation, and six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366. [17]

Where respondent abandoned two clients; had been previously disciplined for a third abandonment occurring at roughly the same time; failed to return the unearned portion of an advance fee; failed to cooperate with the State Bar; harmed clients; and evidenced a lack of understanding of professional obligations, but had a record of pro bono work and a long discipline-free record prior to the first misconduct, two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and actual suspension for nine months were necessary to ensure the protection of the public and the maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631. [31]

844.19 Other reason

The review department recommended a one-year stayed suspension and three-year probation, conditioned on a sixty-day actual suspension, where an attorney had recklessly failed to provide competent legal services in four matters, had failed to communicate properly with a client in one matter, had failed to forward a client's file promptly upon request in one matter, and had significantly harmed two clients, but where the attorney had practiced law without discipline for over 21 years, had recognized his misconduct, had reshaped his office procedures, and had demonstrated full candor and acknowledgment of responsibility for his misconduct before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

844.30 Declined to apply - reproval

844.31 Extent of misconduct small

Private reproval was appropriate discipline for isolated and relatively minor incident of failure to perform services competently which occurred early in respondent's career and was followed by respondent's candor and cooperation, improvement in office procedures, and voluntary participation in State Bar's ethics course. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [2]

844.32 Harm to client small

844.33 Other mitigating factors

Private reproval was appropriate discipline for isolated and relatively minor incident of failure to perform services competently which occurred early in respondent's career and was followed by respondent's candor and cooperation, improvement in office procedures, and voluntary participation in State Bar's ethics course. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175. [2]

844.39 Other reason

844.50 Declined to apply - disbarment

844.51 Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

844.52 Other aggravating factors

Where multiple discipline standards applied to respondent's misconduct, Review Department focused on standards calling for most severe discipline. Where respondent was found culpable of 24 counts of misconduct, involving nine different statute and rule violations, spanning four years, and involving four client matters, in two of which respondent misappropriated significant funds through gross negligence, and respondent habitually disregarded his duties as an attorney and lacked recognition and remorse, high risk that respondent would engage in additional misconduct warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308. [9a-d]

844.59 Other reason

844.70 Declined to apply - no discipline

844.71 No applicable misconduct found

844.79 Other reason

Where respondent successfully performed services for which he was retained, and his sole culpability was for single act of failing to inform client of respondent's entirely proper exercise of judgment not to pursue damages, and both harm to client and extent of misconduct were minimal, appropriate discipline would have been private reproval. However, in light of attorney's many years of practice without prior disciplinary record, and other extenuating circumstances, discipline would be punitive and would not further purposes of attorney discipline. Since finding of culpability precluded dismissal, admonition was an appropriate disposition. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [20]

846 (c) Violations limited in scope or time - suspension or reproval

846.10 Applied - suspension

846.11 Extent of misconduct great

846.12 Harm to client great

846.13 Coupled with other misconduct

846.14 Other aggravating factors

846.19 Other reason

846.30 Applied - reproval

846.31 Extent of misconduct small

846.32 Harm to client small

846.33 Other mitigating factors

846.39 Other reason

846.50 Declined to apply - greater discipline

846.51 Extent of misconduct great

846.52 Harm to client great

846.53 Coupled with other misconduct

846.54 Other aggravating factors

846.59 Other reason

846.70 Declined to apply - no discipline

846.71 No applicable misconduct found

846.79 Other reason

850 Standard 2.17(a) (interim Standard 2.13(a), 1986 Standard 2.5) (Bus & Prof. Code section 6131, former prosecutor representing defendant - disbarment)

851 Applied

855 Declined to apply

855.10 No applicable misconduct found

855.20 Compelling mitigation

855.90 Other reason

860 Standard 2.17(b) (interim Standard 2.13(b), 1986 Standard 2.6) (Misdemeanor conviction under Bus. & Prof. Code Sections 6128, 6129, or 6153)

Note: The original 1986 Standard 2.6 applied to a broad range of misconduct. Cases found under topic number 860 et seq. that were decided prior to 2014 may involve types of misconduct not covered under current Standard 2.17(b) or interim Standard 2.13(b).

861 Applied - disbarment

861.10 Gravity of offense severe

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In determining appropriate discipline to recommend for respondent found culpable of violating statute requiring respect for courts based on respondent's violation of Supreme Court order requiring him to give notice of his prior disciplinary suspension under rule 955, review department noted that respondent's failure to give timely and complete notice of suspension, and his filing of an affidavit which was untimely and inaccurate, would have warranted a recommendation of disbarment, absent strong mitigating circumstances, in a referral proceeding for violation of rule 955. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [15]

861.20 Harm to victim great

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

There is no reason to require suspended attorneys to comply with the rules requiring competent representation and prohibiting prejudicial withdrawal even while they are precluded from practicing because suspended. A full range of discipline is available to protect the public, courts and profession for unauthorized practice alone. Recklessness or incompetence in the unauthorized practice of law, or a precipitous withdrawal, would cause harm to the client and would constitute an aggravating factor which justifies greater discipline than would have been appropriate if no harm had occurred. In order to minimize harm to clients, suspended attorneys should take all steps to avoid foreseeable prejudice, short of practicing law. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [8]

861.30 Coupled with other misconduct

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Disbarment was appropriate where respondent engaged in a pattern of misconduct which no tragic event or set of circumstances explained and where respondent was likely to continue or repeat the misconduct. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [10 a,b]

Where respondent not only wilfully violated order requiring him to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension, but also misappropriated client funds by unilaterally taking cost advances as attorney fees; grossly neglected his trust fund responsibilities; misled a judge; failed to perform services competently; improperly threatened to bring criminal or administrative charges; practiced law while suspended; failed to participate in State Bar investigations, and breached his earlier disciplinary probation, then despite respondent's remorse, proper public protection would be realized by requiring respondent to demonstrate sustained evidence of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, with its higher standard of proof than the preponderance of the evidence. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [16]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

861.40 Other aggravating factors

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

Disbarment was appropriate where respondent engaged in a pattern of misconduct which no tragic event or set of circumstances explained and where respondent was likely to continue or repeat the misconduct. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547. [10 a,b]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Practicing law while suspended has resulted in a range of discipline from suspension to disbarment, depending on the circumstances of the misconduct, including the nature of any companion charges and the existence and gravity of prior disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [27]

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

861.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.

863 Applied - suspension

863.10 Gravity of offense not severe

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

863.20 Harm to victim small

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

863.30 Other mitigating factors

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

A respondent's substantial compliance with rule 955 is mitigating evidence which can influence the determination whether to impose discipline less than disbarment, the generally imposed sanction for a wilful violation of the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [6]

Where respondent had awakened to his responsibilities to the discipline system and participated in rule 955 proceeding, had produced evidence that he posed less risk to clients than suggested by his prior disciplinary record, gave proper notice in compliance with rule 955(a), and filed the required affidavit only 14 days late and before referral order was issued or formal disciplinary proceedings initiated, respondent's very brief failure to comply with rule 955 warranted a very modest sanction. However, even given the wide range of discipline available for a rule 955 violation, it would require an extraordinary case where no discipline of any form was merited. Considering the emphasis placed by the Supreme Court on strict compliance with rule 955, as well as considerations of attorney discipline, maintenance of the standards of the profession, and respondent's rehabilitation, some discipline was required. A 30-day suspension would serve to underline to respondent the seriousness of his duty to comply with all aspects of court orders. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [7]

Wilful breach of a Supreme Court order is by definition deserving of strong disciplinary measures, and the sanction generally imposed for wilful violation of rule 955 is disbarment. When disbarment has not been imposed, the attorneys involved had complied with the notification requirement, orally or in writing, to all their clients, participated in the disciplinary process, and presented substantial mitigating evidence regarding the noncompliance and their present good character. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [16]

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

Where attorney found culpable of practicing while suspended no longer posed threat of harm to public, 30-day actual suspension was nonetheless appropriate to protect integrity of profession and courts. In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229. [15]

Strong mitigating factors in matter involving capping and other misconduct dramatically lessened need for strict discipline imposed by Supreme Court in similar matters, but did not eliminate need for measurable discipline to maintain integrity of and public confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [10]

863.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

865 Declined to apply

865.10 No applicable misconduct found

865.20 Gravity of offense not severe

A private reproval is reasonable for failing to report and to pay a judicial sanctions order given respondent's lack of prior discipline and the narrow violations involved. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [8]

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

865.30 Harm to victim small

865.40 Other mitigating factors

A private reproval is reasonable for failing to report and to pay a judicial sanctions order given respondent's lack of prior discipline and the narrow violations involved. In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862. [8]

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

865.90 Other reason

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

870 Standard 2.3(a) (1986 Standard 2.7) (Unconscionable Fee - 6 Months actual suspension)

871 Applied

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

Standard recommending six-month minimum actual suspension for charging unconscionable fee applies only to cases involving unconscionable fees, not illegal fees. However, where respondent received fee which, though not unconscionable, was sizably above statutory limits due to respondent's abdication of his duties to his client and the court, it was difficult to justify less than minimum suspension proposed by such standards. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [20]

Where attorney is found culpable of intentional or dishonest withholding of funds due to client, issue on degree of discipline is whether mitigating circumstances outweigh general rule of disbarment for such offenses. Cases of misconduct involving funds improperly withheld for reasons other than dishonesty have typically resulted in varying degrees of actual suspension even when attorney had no prior discipline record. Where respondent, through gross neglect, withheld sizable amount of funds due to disabled client, had prior record of discipline for similar misconduct, and persisted in defending his collection of fees in excess of statutory limits despite adverse appellate decisions in suits against him by clients, concern for respondent's lack of insight into his misconduct and possible continued disregard for duty to clients of utmost good faith and fair dealing warranted six months actual suspension. In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266. [23]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

875 Declined to apply

875.10 No applicable misconduct found

Standard recommending six-month minimum actual suspension for charging unconscionable fee did not apply in matter in which respondent collected fee that was illegal but not unconscionable. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [33]

875.20 Compelling mitigation

875.90 Other reasons

877 Standard 2.3(b) (Illegal Fee - suspension or reproval)

877.10 Applied - suspension

877.20 Applied - reproval

877.50 Declined to apply

877.51 No applicable misconduct found

877.52 Compelling mitigation

877.59 Other reasons

880 Standard 2.4 (1986 Standard 2.8) (Business Transaction with Client)

881 Applied - suspension

881.10 Misconduct and/or harm not minimal

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

881.20 Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent not only made a bad loan to a client without complying with the rule governing business transactions with clients, but also thereafter exhibited profound misjudgment which prompted lengthy litigation against an existing client, and which harmed the administration of justice, two-month actual suspension was appropriate discipline despite respondent's initial motive to aid the client and despite his long legal career and the high personal and financial cost he had already paid for his poor judgment. In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735. [16]

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

881.30 Other aggravating factors

Improper business transactions with clients have resulted in discipline ranging from reproval to suspension. Where, despite respondent's asserted intent to advance interests of beneficiaries of trust of which respondent was trustee, respondent realized significant benefits from improper loans from trust to himself, and where respondent also was grossly negligent in handling his duties as trustee, in view of the seriousness of respondent's misconduct, and comparable case law, the review department recommended three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and 60 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

881.90 Other reason

883 Applied - reproval

883.10 Misconduct and/or harm minimal

883.20 Negligent misconduct

883.30 Other mitigating factors

883.90 Other reasons

885 Declined to apply - disbarment

885.10 Coupled with other misconduct

885.20 Other aggravating factors

885.90 Other reason

887 Declined to apply - no discipline

887.10 No applicable misconduct found

887.20 Misconduct not wilful

887.30 Misconduct and/or harm minimal

887.40 Negligent misconduct

887.50 Other mitigating factors

887.90 Other reason

890 Standard 2.14 (interim Standard 2.10, 1986 Standard 2.9) (Violation of Discipline Conditions - Actual Suspension)

891 Applied

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

895 Declined to apply - disbarment

895.10 Coupled with other misconduct

895.20 Other aggravating factors

895.90 Other reason

897 Declined to apply - less or no discipline

897.10 No violation found

897.20 Violation not wilful

897.30 Compelling mitigation

897.90 Other reason

Even though respondent was culpable of failing to comply with the conditions attached to his private reproval, the review department did not strictly apply the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct for such violations which calls for suspension. Instead, the review department imposed a public reproval because of respondent's extensive participation in the proceeding and because respondent acknowledged his obligation to comply with State Bar Court orders. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[5]

Note: For Standard 2.15 (interim Standard 2.11), see topic number 1552 et seq.; for Standard 2.16 (interim Standard 2.12), see topic number 1554 et seq.

900 Standards 2.18, 2.19 (interim Standards 2.14, 2.15, 1986 Standard 2.10) (Violations Not Specified Above)

901 Applied - suspension

901.05 Violation of Business and Professions Code

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

Review department recommended attorney who harmed several vulnerable clients over a six-month period and who had knowledge of plain language of statute and State Bar ethics alert prohibiting collection of certain fees in mortgage loan modification matters should receive discipline including a six-month actual suspension and until he makes restitution for all the fees he illegally collected. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [13]

901.10 Gravity of offense severe

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

Review department recommended attorney who harmed several vulnerable clients over a six-month period and who had knowledge of plain language of statute and State Bar ethics alert prohibiting collection of certain fees in mortgage loan modification matters should receive discipline including a six-month actual suspension and until he makes restitution for all the fees he illegally collected. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [13]

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

Where respondent almost completely abdicated to a non-lawyer his professional duties with respect to a personal injury practice; failed to take prompt, realistic action to stop the non-lawyer's capping practices, and had not presented clear evidence regarding rehabilitation and necessary changes in his practice, then despite mitigating factors including respondent's cooperation with law enforcement and State Bar and satisfaction of medical liens out of his own funds, appropriate discipline for protection of public was three-year stayed suspension with three years probation and actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the general law. In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411. [7]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

901.20 Harm to victim great

Where attorney operated a high-volume loan modification practice with little or no involvement and violated loan modification laws, aided and abetted the unauthorized practice of law, failed to competently perform, failed to promptly return client files and failed topromptly pay client funds and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and client harm but mitigated by no prior disciplinary record, cooperation, good character and remorse, the appropriate discipline was a two year actual suspension to continue until payment of restitution and satisfaction of standard 1.2(c)(1). In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296. [6a-c]

Review department recommended attorney who harmed several vulnerable clients over a six-month period and who had knowledge of plain language of statute and State Bar ethics alert prohibiting collection of certain fees in mortgage loan modification matters should receive discipline including a six-month actual suspension and until he makes restitution for all the fees he illegally collected. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221 [13]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

901.30 Coupled with other misconduct

Where respondent failed to perform services, communicate with client, and refund unearned fee; no pattern of misconduct was shown; respondent did not act with dishonesty or harm client, and respondent had a prior record of one instance of discipline that was neither remote nor minimal, hearing judge's recommendation of one year actual suspension was too severe; six-month actual suspension, coupled with restitution requirement, was sufficient. In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263 [8]

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

901.40 Other aggravating factors

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

901.90 Other reason

Where respondent's most serious ethical violations resulted from his affiliation and fee-sharing with a non-lawyer entity, Review Department applied discipline standard most applicable to that misconduct, rather than standard applicable to respondent's failure to perform legal services in multiple matters. Case law in matters involving similar misconduct was inapplicable in light of respondent's compelling mitigation, including long practice without a prior record, candor and cooperation, good character, pro bono work and community service, and remorse and recognition of wrongdoing. Given that respondent's misconduct was not likely to recur, totality of circumstances warranted imposing actual suspension for 60 days and until respondent completed restitution. In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320 [8 a,b]

For a single misdemeanor crime not involving moral turpitude and unrelated to practice of law, a short actual suspension is appropriate. Where attorney committed misdemeanor violation of Penal Code section 273a, subdivision (b) (child endangerment) and where the misconduct was aggravated by two prior records of discipline but mitigated by cooperation, remorse and pro bono service, the appropriate discipline recommendation was a 120-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [12]

903 Applied - reproval

903.05 Violation of Rules of Professional Conduct only

Standards for attorney discipline should be followed whenever possible. Where applicable standard provided for suspension or reproval, hearing judge erred in resolving case by issuing admonition. Despite extensive mitigation, attorney judicial candidate's recklessly false allegation implicating opponent in bribery and fraud warranted public discipline, because it threatened to erode public confidence in the judiciary. Accordingly, public reproval was appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [6]

903.10 Gravity of offense not severe

903.20 Harm to victim small

903.30 Other mitigating factors

Standards for attorney discipline should be followed whenever possible. Where applicable standard provided for suspension or reproval, hearing judge erred in resolving case by issuing admonition. Despite extensive mitigation, attorney judicial candidate's recklessly false allegation implicating opponent in bribery and fraud warranted public discipline, because it threatened to erode public confidence in the judiciary. Accordingly, public reproval was appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [6]

903.90 Other reason

905 Applied - disbarment

905.05 Violation of Business and Professions Code

905.10 Coupled with other misconduct

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

905.20 Other aggravating factors

905.90 Other reason

907 Declined to apply - no discipline

907.10 No applicable misconduct found

907.20 Rule violation not wilful

907.30 Other mitigating factors

907.90 Other reason

910 Standard 2.10 (interim Standard 2.6) (Unauthorized Practice of Law)

Note: Prior to 2014, unauthorized practice of law was included in the misconduct covered by 1986 Standard 2.6. Relevant cases may be found under topic number 860 et seq.

911 (a) Practice while on disciplinary suspension or involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(b)-(e)—Disbarment or actual suspension

911.10 Applied—disbarment

911.13 Applied—actual suspension

911.15 Declined to apply—lesser or no discipline

913 (b) Practice while inactive or on suspension for non-disciplinary reasons—Suspension or reproval

913.10 Applied—suspension

913.11 Applied—reproval

913.15 Declined to apply—disbarment

913.17 Declined to apply—no discipline

915 Applied to other forms of unauthorized practice (e.g., in another jurisdiction)

915.10 Disbarment

Where respondent began engaging in unauthorized practice of federal trademark law immediately after his prior California suspension ended, and prior discipline had involved serious offense justifying three-year actual suspension, disciplinary standard providing for more severe sanctions in subsequent disciplinary matters made disbarment recommendation appropriate for present offense. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [5]

Where respondent, an experienced patent and trademark practitioner prior to his earlier disciplinary suspension, resumed representing trademark clients after his reinstatement to practice in California, without carefully determining his eligibility to do so under federal regulations, respondent exhibited a cavalier attitude towards applicable regulations. This gave rise to concern about protection of the public from future misconduct, where respondent's prior misconduct also involved placing self-interest ahead of client interest or respect for and adherence to law, and respondent still did not seem to recognize error and seriousness of his behavior. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [4 a,b]

915.13 Suspension

915.15 Lesser or no discipline

920 Standard 2.12 (interim Standard 2.8) (Violation of Duties in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068)

Note: Prior to 2014, violation of the duties listed in section 6068 was included in the misconduct covered by 1986 Standard 2.6. Relevant cases may be found under topic number 860 et seq.

921 Standard 2.12(a) (interim Standard 2.8(a)) (violation of court order, oath, or § 6068(a) through (h) – disbarment or actual suspension)

921.10 Applied – disbarment

921.11 Violation of court order

921.12 Violation of attorney's oath

921.13 Violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(a) through (h)

921.14 Coupled with other misconduct

921.15 Other aggravating factors

921.19 Other reason

921.20 Applied – actual suspension

921.21 Violation of court order

921.22 Violation of attorney's oath

921.23 Violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(a) through (h)

921.24 Mitigating factors

921.29 Other reason

921.50 Declined to apply – lesser or no discipline

921.51 No applicable misconduct found

934.41 Aggravating factors

934.42 Coupled with other misconduct

934.49 Other reason

934.50 Declined to apply – no discipline

934.51 No applicable misconduct found

934.59 Other reason

1000 Discipline Imposed in Disciplinary Matters Generally

1010 Disbarment

In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391.

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308

In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273

In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Fahy (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 141

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

Where respondent failed to obey a court order to comply with rule 9.20 by untimely filing an affidavit of compliance, where there was minimal mitigation for good character, community service, and cooperation with the State Bar, and where there was aggravation due to three prior incidents of discipline, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Esau (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131 [6]

Where respondent disobeyed court orders, failed to report judicial sanctions, engaged in the unauthorized practice of law, failed to comply with probation conditions, and committed multiple acts of wrongdoing, surrounded by bad faith, dishonesty, and concealment, where respondent demonstrated indifference toward rectification or acknowledgment of wrongdoing and had four prior incidents of discipline involving similar misconduct, and where there was no mitigation, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Thomson (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 966. [5]

In the Matter of Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829.

Even though many years have passed since respondent's first discipline case, it was apparent that the discipline that was administered to him over the course of the many years, which included the ultimate sanction of disbarment, did not succeed in imparting to him an understanding of the duties of an attorney to his clients and to the public. Six years after being reinstated to the practice of law following his disbarment, respondent again engaged in serious wrongdoing that caused considerable harm to his clients. He repeatedly failed to file necessary documents for his clients, failed to appear at numerous scheduled hearings, failed to comply with several court orders, failed to return his clients' files and money, avoided his clients' attempts to communicate with him, and then, when he did speak to his clients, misled them as to the status of their affairs. Further, respondent failed to cooperate with the State Bar and failed to participate in the State Bar Court disciplinary proceedings. Under the circumstances, the risk of respondent repeating his misconduct would be considerable if he was merely, once again, suspended from the practice of law. The purpose of a disciplinary proceeding is not punitive but to inquire into the fitness of an attorney to continue in that capacity for the protection of the public, the courts and the legal profession. The combined record of respondent's past and present misconduct amply demonstrated his unfitness to continue to practice. In the Matter of Tenner (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 688.[2 a-d]

Respondent was culpable of a total of 16 charged counts of misconduct in nine client matters and a trust account matter, which included 9 counts of failing to perform legal services competently, 1 count of failing to return a client's file promptly upon request at the termination of employment, 2 counts of failing to return unearned fees promptly at the termination of employment, 2 counts of failing to respond promptly to reasonable status inquiries from clients or failing to notify clients of significant developments in their cases, 1 count of commingling, and 1 count of committing an act of moral turpitude by issuing checks on an account which respondent knew or should have known had insufficient funds to cover them. Moreover, respondent had been previously disciplined once for the same type of misconduct; yet it appeared that he did not learn from his prior discipline. In addition, respondent demonstrated indifference toward rectification of or atonement for the consequences of his misconduct and significantly harmed clients. These violations taken together show a clear disrespect for respondent's clients. In view of all of the circumstances of this case, the review department concluded that the public and the courts deserve the greater protection of a formal reinstatement proceeding before respondent is again entitled to practice law in this state.In the Matter of Gadda (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 416.[6 a-e]

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.157.

This case presents serious acts of dishonesty which served to defraud two sellers of valuable real estate. Respondent's many ethical violations featured harm to victims and the honest administration of justice. Offenses concerning the administration of justice have been considered as very serious by the Supreme Court. Disbarment is not reserved just for attorneys with prior disciplinary records. A most significant factor is respondent's complete lack of insight, recognition, or remorse for any of his wrongdoing. This factor makes disbarment appropriate despite the fact that respondent presented some mitigating evidence. In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.70.[5]

Respondent is culpable of 25 separate ethical violations of either the Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act, involving 8 separate clients. Included in those violations are four acts involving moral turpitude. In addition, there are multiple acts of serious aggravation, including acts that seriously harmed the administration of justice, the public and the profession. The total absence of any recognition by respondent of her misconduct convinced the review department that there was little hope that respondent would conform her method of practicing law to the professional standards of this state. The magnitude of respondent's misconduct and her lack of recognition of that misconduct combined to require that the review department recommend that respondent be disbarred to protect the courts, the public and the profession of this state. In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.[17 a-e]

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

Respondent's wide range of misconduct spanned over six-year period and involved incompetent actions in dealing with medical liens; mismanagement of client trust account; concealment from and overreaching of disabled client by unilaterally taking $9,000 in attorney's fees; repeated disobedience of court orders; using means inconsistent with truth in seeking to maintain civil action and wrongfully attacking opposing counsel; and falsification of six proofs of service in civil action. The gravamen of this case is not only respondent's wide-ranging misconduct in six matters over a lengthy period of time without any substantial mitigation, but is importantly found in his offenses to the honest administration of justice. Past decisions involving even one such serious matter resulted in severe discipline, if necessary, for public protection. Respondent's misconduct unaccompanied by any substantial mitigation, but significant aggravation warranted disbarment. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.9.[4 a-e]

In the Matter of Priamos (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 824.

In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657.

In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725.

In the Matter of Steele (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 709.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 547.

In the Matter of Spaith (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 511

In the Matter of Acuna (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 495.

In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390.

In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363.

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Shinn (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583.

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563.

In the Matter of Kizer (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 87.

1013 Stayed Suspension

1013.01 One month or less

1013.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

1013.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1013.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

Where respondent failed to perform legal services with competence, failed to obey Supreme Court orders, and failed to timely report judicial sanctions imposed by the Supreme Court, where there was mitigation for 17 years of practice without prior discipline, exemplary post–misconduct practice, good character, and cooperation with the State Bar, and where there was aggravation due to multiple acts of wrongdoing and significant harm to the administration of justice, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was a six–month stayed suspension and one year of probation on conditions. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [7]

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

1013.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1013.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608. [4]

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1013.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

1013.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[6]

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

1013.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

1013.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

1013.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

Review department recommended five years' stayed suspension and three years' actual suspension where, in a single client matter, (1) respondent committed multiple violations of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300; (2) respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude by concealing important information about a business transaction from his client and by overreaching his client; (3) respondent failed to report a civil fraud judgment to the State Bar; and (4) there were several factors in aggravation and two factors in mitigation, including respondent's long years of practice without prior discipline.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[3 a-g]

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1015 Actual Suspension

1015.01 One month or less

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

1015.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

Where respondent made appearances without authority, committed acts of moral turpitude, failed to communicate with his clients and failed to return their file upon request, where there was aggravation including multiple acts of misconduct, bad faith, significant client harm, and indifference towards atonement or rectification, and where there was mitigation for no prior record in over 17 years of practice, the appropriate discipline recommendation was two years' stayed suspension and two years' probation on conditions, which included 75 days' actual suspension and compliance with rule 955. In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844. [10]

Where respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by knowingly making repeated misrepresentations to the Superior Court, where there was extensive aggravation including uncharged misconduct, lack of candor, harm to the administration of justice, multiple acts of misconduct demonstrating a pattern of disrespect for professional norms, indifference towards atonement or rectification, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, and no prior record for respondent who was supervising counsel, and where respondent who was inexperienced associate had only practiced law in California for less than three years prior to misconduct and was not culpable of overreaching, appropriate discipline recommendation was one year stayed suspension, two years' probation on conditions, which included 90 days actual suspension for respondent who was partner in charge and 60 days actual suspension for respondent who was associate. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [12 a–d]

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole. In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446. [6]

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

1015.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

A 90-day period of actual suspension for probation violations is appropriate discipline under the discipline standard and the case law. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [3]

Where attorney committed acts involving moral turpitude, threatened to report individuals to various agencies to gain advantage in a civil dispute, showed disrespect to a judge, and failed to maintain a current address with the State Bar, where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts, significant harm to the administration of justice, and lack of insight but mitigated by an absence of priors over 24 years of practice, the appropriate discipline recommendation was 90 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Elkins (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 160 [8]

Where attorney committed an act involving moral turpitude by filing a false verification, and failed to maintain a current address with the State Bar, where the misconduct was aggravated by serious prior misconduct and subsequent dishonesty and concealment but mitigated by limited character evidence and cooperation, the appropriate discipline recommendation was 150 days actual suspension under standard 1.7(a). In the Matter of Downey (Review Dept. 2009) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 151 [7]

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

Where respondent committed acts involving moral turpitude and harassed a juror in violation of rule 5–320(D), where there was mitigation for discipline–free practice, and where there was aggravation due to multiple acts of wrongdoing, significant harm to the administration of justice, and a demonstrated indifference toward rectification, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was one year stayed suspension, 18 months of probation on conditions which included three months actual suspension. In the Matter of Loftus (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 80 [7]

Where respondent charged and collected unconscionable fees and improperly entered into a business transaction with a client, where there was aggravation including significant client harm and multiple acts of misconduct, and mitigation for community service and entering into a pretrial stipulation, appropriate discipline recommendation was one year stayed suspension and two years' probation on conditions which included 90 days' actual suspension. In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980. [6]

Where respondent committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude and breached an implied fiduciary duty in violation of section 6068(a), where there was mitigation for good character and entering into a comprehensive stipulation of facts, and where there was aggravation due to multiple acts of wrongdoing, significant harm to the administration of justice, and a failure to recognize the serious consequences of his behavior, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was one year stayed suspension, two years of probation on conditions which included four months actual suspension. In the Matter of Dale (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 798. [11]

Where respondents committed acts of moral turpitude by knowingly making repeated misrepresentations to the Superior Court, where there was extensive aggravation including uncharged misconduct, lack of candor, harm to the administration of justice, multiple acts of misconduct demonstrating a pattern of disrespect for professional norms, indifference towards atonement or rectification, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, and no prior record for respondent who was supervising counsel, and where respondent who was inexperienced associate had only practiced law in California for less than three years prior to misconduct and was not culpable of overreaching, appropriate discipline recommendation was one year stayed suspension, two years' probation on conditions, which included 90 days actual suspension for respondent who was partner in charge and 60 days actual suspension for respondent who was associate. In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774. [12 a–d]

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1015.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

Where respondent engaged in the unauthorized practice of law in another jurisdiction, charged and collected illegal and unconscionable fees, failed to return unearned fees, failed to maintain funds in trust, and committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, where there was mitigation for extreme emotional distress, good character, and entering into a stipulation of material facts, and where there was aggravation due to one prior record of discipline, multiple acts of wrongdoing, significant harm to clients, the public, and the administration of justice, and indifference towards the consequences of her misconduct, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was a two–year stayed suspension and two years of probation on conditions which included six months' actual suspension and until restitution is paid. In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896. [12]

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1015.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

1015.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

1015.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

Where respondent failed to obey a court order, failed to communicate with and failed to properly withdraw from employment in more than 300 client matters, where there was mitigation for 10 years of practice without prior discipline and delay in initiating the disciplinary proceeding, and where there was aggravation due to multiple acts of wrongdoing, significant harm to the administration of justice, and an absence of remorse, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was a three–year stayed suspension, three years of probation on conditions which included eighteen months actual suspension and until respondent complies with standard 1.4(c)(ii). In the Matter of Wolff (Review Dept. 2006) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [14]

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

1015.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296 [6]

Where respondent abandoned four clients and failed to competently perform, failed to communicate, failed to provide accountings, failed to refund unearned fees, failed to return client files, and improperly agreed to withdraw a State Bar complaint, and where there was no mitigation but aggravation due to a prior record of discipline, multiple acts of wrongdoing, significant client harm, a failure to atone for the consequences of his behavior, and additional uncharged misconduct involving an act of moral turpitude due to overreaching, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was a five–year stayed suspension, five years of probation on conditions which included two years of actual suspension and until compliance with Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.4(c)(ii). In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944. [9]

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1015.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

Review department recommended five years' stayed suspension and three years' actual suspension where, in a single client matter, (1) respondent committed multiple violations of Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-300; (2) respondent engaged in acts involving moral turpitude by concealing important information about a business transaction from his client and by overreaching his client; (3) respondent failed to report a civil fraud judgment to the State Bar; and (4) there were several factors in aggravation and two factors in mitigation, including respondent's long years of practice without prior discipline.In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.[3 a-g]

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

1015.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

1015.11 Five years or more

1017 Probation

1017.01 One month or less

1017.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1017.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1017.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1017.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1017.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

Where respondent failed to perform legal services with competence, failed to obey Supreme Court orders, and failed to timely report judicial sanctions imposed by the Supreme Court, where there was mitigation for 17 years of practice without prior discipline, exemplary post–misconduct practice, good character, and cooperation with the State Bar, and where there was aggravation due to multiple acts of wrongdoing and significant harm to the administration of justice, the appropriate disciplinary recommendation was a six–month stayed suspension and one year of probation on conditions. In the Matter of Riordan (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 41 [7]

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

1017.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1017.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Regan (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 844.

In the Matter of Maloney and Virsik (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 774.

Respondent's failure to have gained insight into his misconduct was troubling. The discipline imposed for his misconduct of filing and pursuing frivolous actions in bad faith and for a corrupt motive must reflect this lack of insight as well as the harm to the victims and assurance to the public and bar that such conduct will not be tolerated. The discipline recommended, that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for two years, that execution of the suspension be stayed, and that he be placed on probation for two years on conditions, including 60 days' actual suspension, appropriately balances these values and the record as a whole.In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.[6]

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Johnston (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 585.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1017.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Casey (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 117

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

1017.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

1017.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1020 Probation Conditions (other than basic) (includes conditions attached to discipline orders even when no probation imposed)

In view of the serious nature of respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), review department added a quarterly reporting probation condition to its discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [6]

1021 Restitution

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308.

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 263

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980.

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Copren (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 861.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364.

In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

It is inappropriate to use restitution as a means of awarding tort damages for harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1022 Probation Monitor

1022.10 Appointed

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1022.50 Not appointed

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

1023 Testing and/or Treatment

1023.10 Alcohol

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

1023.20 Non-prescription drugs

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

1023.30 Prescription drugs

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

1023.40 Psychological treatment

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

It is proper to recommend a probation condition requiring appropriate mental health treatment even though no expert testimony was proffered that respondent suffered from a mental or other problem requiring psychiatric treatment where the record contains other clear evidence that respondent suffers from a mental or other problem requiring medical treatment. In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Trousil (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 229.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1023.90 Other

1024 Ethics exam/ethics school

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380.

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 221

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of Scott (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 446.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Chesnut (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.166.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Greenwood (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 831.

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 608.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 541.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of McKiernan (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 420.

In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Layton (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 366.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153.

In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1025 Law office management

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490.

In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267.

1026 Trust account auditing

In the Matter of Malek-Yonan (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 627.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Cacioppo (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 128.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 404.

In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387.

In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354.

In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280.

In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1027 Limitations on practice

1029 Other special probation conditions

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Doran (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 871.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In view of the serious nature of respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), review department added a quarterly reporting probation condition to its discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [6]

In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752.

1030 Standard 1.2(c)(i) (1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii)) Rehabilitation Requirement

In the Matter of Smithwick (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 320

In the Matter of Huang (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 296

In the Matter of Seltzer (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 2

In the Matter of Lawrence (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 239

In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171

In the Matter of Brockway (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944.

In the Matter of Kittrell (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576.

In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498.

In the Matter of Peavey (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483.

In the Matter of McCarthy (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 364

In the Matter of Dahlz (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 269.

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Lantz (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 126.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112.

In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103.

In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907.

In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

In the Matter of Elliott (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 541.

In the Matter of Rubens (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 468.

In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 233.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Jones (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 411.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456.

In the Matter of Burckhardt (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 343.

In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139.

In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131.

In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59.

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

1040 Public Reproval

1041 With conditions [for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.]

In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370

In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

In the Matter of Pasyanos (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 746.

In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703.

1045 Without conditions

In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330

In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.

1050 Private Reproval

1051 With conditions [for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.]

In the Matter of Respondent Z (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.85.

In the Matter of Respondent Y (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 862.

In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335.

In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 175.

In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716.

1055 Without conditions

In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592.

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

1090 Miscellaneous Substantive Issues re Discipline

Disciplinary probation furthers the fundamental purposes of attorney discipline only when attorney probationers are effectively monitored to ensure that they do not engage in further misconduct and are conforming their conduct to the ethical strictures of the profession. Historically, attorney probationers have been monitored to ensure their compliance with these requirements through appointed voluntary probation monitors or through court-ordered self-reporting by the attorney or both. Even though probation monitors have played an important role in monitoring attorneys on probation and were, at one time, appointed in most instances, the use of a probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple, periodic reporting conditions are recommended or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. Appointment of a probation monitor was not warranted in this case in light of the simple probation conditions recommended and the found misconduct, mitigation, and aggravation. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [3]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

Even though the review department's duty to independently determine the appropriate level of discipline precludes it from giving excess weight to the State Bar's discipline recommendation, the review department gave it some consideration. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [5]

1091 Proportionality with Other Cases

Where attorney committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, failed to obey the laws or court orders and where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts and harm to the administration of justice but mitigated by character evidence, cooperation, and pro bono service, the appropriate discipline recommendation was a 4-year actual suspension. In the Matter of Field (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 171 [12]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

In the Matter of Gillis (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387

In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349.

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315.

Failure to recommend period of stayed suspension merely because attorney failed to appear in disciplinary proceeding results in marked reduction in public protection and in defaulting attorney receiving less discipline than attorneys who appear and participate in disciplinary process. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [6]

In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

The review department found respondent culpable of serious misconduct which burdened parties to litigation and the trial and appellate courts to adjudicate two matters. This included a patently frivolous appeal, dishonesty to law enforcement officers and misleading a court. Of special concern was that respondent's background as a certified family law specialist for much of his practice and his activity in bar work failed to serve him to avoid the misconduct in this record. Respondent's misdeeds cannot be ascribed to inexperience or simple zealousness. Moreover, there is nothing in the record which could ascribe this misconduct to any health or similar, singular condition. Respondent's lack of insight and failure to appreciate the wrongfulness of his misconduct does not bode well for respondent avoiding similar misconduct in the future. Anytime respondent lost on the merits of an issue, he would not accept the court's adverse judicial determination and would attempt to blame the ruling on the court's lack of understanding of the issues. Balancing all relevant factors and seeking to protect the public, courts and the legal profession, the review department increased the actual suspension from one year to two years. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [5 a-d]

Respondent was found culpable of ten disciplinable acts of moral turpitude (seven acts of misrepresentation, one act of improperly retaining for his own benefit funds out of a medical provider's lien reduction, and one act of attempting to obtain a greater fee than that to which he was entitled by failing to disclose to his client costs he recovered), eight instances of improper solicitation of clients, and two instances of failing to properly account to his client. There were substantial aggravating factors, including a prior record of discipline, but no mitigating circumstances. The review department recommended that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for a period of five years, that execution be stayed, and that respondent be placed on probation for a period of five years on conditions including three years actual suspension and until respondent pays restitution and until he provides proof of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [9]

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [6]

Even though none of respondent's individual acts of misconduct involved dishonesty, concealment, or mishandling of client funds and even though respondent had no prior record of discipline over a lengthy practice, respondent's disbarment was warranted as consistent with past case law and the standards for attorney discipline for respondent's panoply of protracted failure to communicate with clients, incompetent practice, and failure to supervise subordinate staff affecting many different clients over a 10-year period. In the Matter of Hindin (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 657. [11]

Cases involving a magnitude and wide range of misconduct have typically resulted in disbarment, notwithstanding the attorney's lack of a prior record of discipline or even with some mitigation present. Where respondent's misconduct was quite serious and wide-ranging, and, very importantly, commenced only two years after respondent's admission and continued for over seven years thereafter, the review department concluded that the public was entitled to the protection of a formal reinstatement proceeding to ensure respondent's fitness to practice before she is again allowed to practice law. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [10]

Improper business transactions with clients have resulted in discipline ranging from reproval to suspension. Where, despite respondent's asserted intent to advance interests of beneficiaries of trust of which respondent was trustee, respondent realized significant benefits from improper loans from trust to himself, and where respondent also was grossly negligent in handling his duties as trustee, in view of the seriousness of respondent's misconduct, and comparable case law, the review department recommended three years stayed suspension, three years probation, and 60 days actual suspension. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91.

In the Matter of Klein (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

The Legislature itself has recognized that the inherent authority of the Supreme Court controls the outcome in disciplinary proceedings. It is therefore incumbent upon the review department not only to review the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, but also to review Supreme Court precedent to assure that application of statutory summary disbarment does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [4]

Where respondent with no prior record of discipline failed to communicate reasonably with two clients and failed to relinquish their files promptly, causing harm to clients, six-month stayed suspension, with no actual suspension, was well within appropriate range of discipline as indicated by comparable cases. In the Matter of Kopinski (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [5]

In light of comparable case law and absence of mitigating circumstances, public reproval was appropriate discipline for respondent who failed to refund promptly an unearned legal fee and failed to take reasonable steps to avoid prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation. Hearing judge's recommended discipline of stayed suspension was therefore modified. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [13]

Where respondent engaged in serious improper communications with a represented party, exposing the party to serious risks of harm, some of which occurred, and committed other stipulated wrongdoing, recommended discipline of four years probation conditioned on thirty days actual suspension was inconsistent with decisional law and insufficient. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [10]

In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509.

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

Where respondent was culpable of failing to set aside $942 of his legal fee in a trust account pending resolution of a dispute with his client; aggravating factor of bad faith arose from respondent's intent to serve his clients rather than from any venal purpose; aggravating factors were outweighed by mitigating factors including long period of unblemished practice since misconduct, indicating unlikelihood of further misconduct; and prior similar cases indicated that it would be appropriate to depart from the 90-day minimum actual suspension for trust account violations, appropriate discipline was private reproval conditioned on passage of professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Respondent K (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 335. [22]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Where respondent had been inattentive to a client's legal needs and had wrongfully retained the client's personal property, but respondent had only committed misconduct in two matters in 23 years of practice, disbarment was not appropriate under guiding Supreme Court opinions. Instead, review department recommended five years stayed suspension, five years probation, restitution, and actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and legal ability. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185.

Before recommending to the Supreme Court that an attorney be summarily disbarred pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), the State Bar Court has a duty to analyze the record in light of the case law to assure that application of section 6102 (c) does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. The State Bar Court will only order a hearing if Supreme Court precedent supports a lesser sanction than disbarment for the particular crime depending on circumstances which might be adduced at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [7]

In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17.

Although standard 2.2(a) calls for 90 days minimum suspension for commingling, the Supreme Court has declined to impose suspension if the commingling results from a good faith fee dispute. Where respondent's trust fund violation was no more serious than trust fund violations in a prior Supreme Court case in which a public reproval was imposed, and where respondent presented far greater evidence in mitigation than the attorneys in that case, the appropriate discipline was a private reproval on condition of taking and passing the Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [22]

In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676.

In the Matter of Tindall (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 652.

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

In the Matter of Koehler (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 615.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct serve as guidelines in determining the appropriate degree of discipline to recommend. The review department must also consider whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [26]

Where attorney displayed indifference and lack of remorse by failing to participate in past and present disciplinary proceedings, far more severe discipline was required than in other cases involving similar misconduct where attorneys did participate in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Taylor (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 563. [28]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

In cases involving attorney discipline for serious offenses, the Supreme Court has: (1) stated that serious offenses call for severe discipline and warrant disbarment in the absence of clear or compelling mitigation; (2) recited similar language but evaluated the type of misconduct as a lesser offense; or (3) emphasized that there is no fixed formula as to discipline, and that appropriate discipline can only be arrived at by a balanced consideration of relevant factors, on a case-by-case basis. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [13]

Violations of the ethical rule governing placement of client funds in a trust account have not always resulted in actual or even stayed suspensions. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [27]

In determining the appropriate degree of discipline to recommend, the review department starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines. It also considers whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [4]

Where respondent misrepresented his educational background in his resume, these actions were dishonest, and some period of actual suspension was warranted. Where respondent's misconduct extended over a three-year period, and was aggravated by his misrepresentations in discovery responses in the disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent had personal problems but they did not fully explain his misconduct, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of probation, was appropriate to recognize the seriousness of the misconduct, the mitigating circumstances, and the sanction imposed in previous cases. In the Matter of Mitchell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 332. [5]

Despite the need to examine cases on an individual basis to determine appropriate discipline, it is also a goal of disciplinary proceedings that there be consistent recommendations as to discipline, a goal that has been achieved in large measure through the application of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [10]

Pursuant to Supreme Court precedent, only the most serious instances of repeated misconduct and multiple instances of misappropriation have warranted actual suspension, much less disbarment; a year of actual suspension, if not less, has been more commonly the discipline imposed in cases involving but a single instance of misappropriation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [11]

Recent Supreme Court precedent indicated that attorney with no prior discipline record who abandoned two clients within three years and improperly retained unearned advance fees should receive sanction greater than public reproval; two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and 30 days actual suspension were recommended. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [15]

At respondent's request, in a conviction proceeding, the review department took judicial notice of the record in a disciplinary case involving another attorney who was respondent's co-defendant in the underlying criminal matter. The discipline imposed on the co-defendant was considered in determining the appropriate discipline for respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [2]

In assessing appropriate discipline, the review department considers whether the recommended discipline conforms to or is disproportionate to prior decisions of the Supreme Court based on similar facts. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [6]

Disbarment would be excessive in case arising out of criminal conviction for filing false federal income tax return, even though offense involved moral turpitude, based on comparable Supreme Court cases and given respondent's compelling showing of mitigation, including absence of any prior or subsequent misconduct; extreme emotional difficulties arising from an amputation; respondent's acknowledgment of his misconduct and his candor and cooperation with the State Bar; a persuasive showing of respondent's good character and high esteem in the community; family problems existing at the time of the misconduct; and the fact that the misconduct did not involve the practice of law. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [8]

Misdemeanor convictions of sex offenses which are not serious and are unrelated to the practice of law have generally resulted in only private reproval absent aggravating factors. Where respondent was convicted of such a misdemeanor, disbarment would have been manifestly disproportionate to his cumulative misconduct, notwithstanding his record of two prior private reprovals. Respondent's misconduct was less serious than wilful failure to file tax returns or driving under the influence, and did not warrant the same degree of discipline. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [1]

Supreme Court attorney disciplinary opinions in which prohibited solicitation or capping activities were a significant or sole part of the lawyer's misconduct have imposed discipline ranging from six months actual suspension for isolated acts to disbarment in a few aggravated cases. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [9]

Strong mitigating factors in matter involving capping and other misconduct dramatically lessened need for strict discipline imposed by Supreme Court in similar matters, but did not eliminate need for measurable discipline to maintain integrity of and public confidence in legal profession. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [10]

In conducting its review and making its own disciplinary recommendation, the review department must consider the proportionality of the recommended discipline in relation to other cases. In the Matter of Crane and DePew (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 139. [20]

Where no Supreme Court precedent would have justified disbarment for respondent's failure to perform services in two matters if both matters had been decided together, additional prior discipline for failure to pass Professional Responsibility Examination did not sufficiently add to severity of misconduct to justify imposing disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [9]

In assessing appropriate discipline, review department starts with Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, which serve as guidelines, and also considers whether recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportionate to prior decisions of the Supreme Court based upon similar facts. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [14]

Supreme Court has usually not dealt severely with misappropriations involving a relatively small amount for a relatively brief time when no intentional dishonesty was involved and the offense involved attorney's use of trust account as an operating account. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [18]

Fact that, in addition to unintentionally misappropriating client's funds, attorney had committed act of moral turpitude by concealing personal assets in trust account to avoid tax levy might, but would not necessarily, indicate greater discipline to be in order, based on Supreme Court precedent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [19]

Recommendation of disbarment for misconduct in single matter, involving failure to perform services, misappropriation of advanced fees and costs, trust fund violation, and misrepresentation to clients was excessive when viewed in the context of decisions of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [15]

In determining the appropriate sanction, the court must balance the aggravating circumstances with the mitigating circumstances and also consider whether the recommended discipline is consistent with or disproportional to prior decisions of the Supreme Court on similar facts. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [20]

1092 Excessiveness of Discipline

Where respondent's default was set aside for limited purpose of conducting discipline hearing, neither amended default rules nor discipline standards provided for presumptive discipline of disbarment. Even two-year actual suspension was excessive discipline for violation of probation conditions attached to prior public reproval. Rather, appropriate discipline, under standard 2.10 and case law, was 90-day actual suspension and lengthy probation with conditions. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [8 a-c]

Where respondent's misconduct in inaccurately reporting her MCLE compliance was a one-time error, she had a long period of practice with no discipline, and an exemplary record of pro bono and community service, and she caused no harm to the public or the judicial system, and where, most significantly, she immediately accepted responsibility, rectified the situation, and implemented a corrective plan to avoid future problems. It was appropriate under these unique circumstances to deviate from the standard calling for disbarment or actual suspension for acts of moral turpitude. Even a 30-day actual suspension was excessive; public reproval was adequate to serve the goals of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Yee (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 330 [5 a-c]

Respondent was unable to confront her husband concerning his handling of the trust account. Absent equally strong evidence of respondent's recovery from such a disability concerning such a fundamental duty of a lawyer the review department would recommend severe remedial discipline. Respondent's compelling evidence of her actions to terminate her relations with her husband and her continuing psychiatric treatment make clear that such a recovery is well under way. Respondent expressed remorse for the misconduct; was candid with the State Bar in stipulating to the misconduct; has taken effective steps to avoid a repetition of that misconduct including severing her relations with her husband and continuing in therapy; and has made a contribution to society in seeking, and obtaining, legislation dealing with human reproduction. While serious misconduct occurred as the result of respondent's inattention to financial matters, including the trust account she maintained with her husband, a future recurrence of such problems is unlikely. The hearing judge's recommended condition of continued psychiatric treatment lends assurance to this conclusion. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [7]

Failing to appear as ordered at settlement conference, and intentionally misleading settlement judge regarding client's death, was serious misconduct which threatened public and undermined its confidence in legal profession. However, considering comparable case law, and in view of respondent's many years of practice prior to misconduct, and lack of proven aggravating factors, appropriate discipline was one-year stayed suspension and two years probation with no actual suspension, rather than two-year stayed suspension with two years probation and thirty days actual suspension. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [15]

In the Matter of Sampson (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 119.

In light of comparable case law and absence of mitigating circumstances, public reproval was appropriate discipline for respondent who failed to refund promptly an unearned legal fee and failed to take reasonable steps to avoid prejudice to clients prior to withdrawal from representation. Hearing judge's recommended discipline of stayed suspension was therefore modified. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [13]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

Where respondent's misconduct involved negligent law office management over an extended period of time, resulting in delay and disservice to a number of clients but no act of moral turpitude or serious misconduct in any individual matter, and respondent had since changed his office practices, a one-year actual suspension was excessive in the absence of serious aggravation. However, where no persuasive reason had been offered to go below the minimum three-month actual suspension called for by the standards, a one-year stayed suspension, two years probation, and a three-month actual suspension, with law office management requirements, constituted sufficient discipline. In the Matter of Kaplan (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 509. [10]

Where respondent, after authorities' discovery of welfare fraud committed by him and his wife, was cooperative with welfare authorities and remorseful, took full responsibility, and stipulated to most of the facts at the State Bar hearing, hearing judge was justified in recommending lengthy suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

Where respondent had been inattentive to a client's legal needs and had wrongfully retained the client's personal property, but respondent had only committed misconduct in two matters in 23 years of practice, disbarment was not appropriate under guiding Supreme Court opinions. Instead, review department recommended five years stayed suspension, five years probation, restitution, and actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved her rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and legal ability. In the Matter of Harris (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

In the Matter of Nunez (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 196.

Not all serious trust fund misappropriation cases warrant disbarment. Where respondent had a 21-year record of practice without prior discipline and respondent's misconduct took place within a relatively narrow time frame, standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing, with three-year actual suspension and five-year stayed suspension and probation, would be adequate to protect public, despite gravity of respondent's misconduct and lack of evidence regarding its cause. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 185. [8]

Where two or more acts of professional misconduct are found, the discipline should be the most severe of the several applicable sanctions, not the sum of the applicable standards. Accordingly, it was not appropriate to recommend 18-month actual suspension based on conclusion that one-year actual suspension was appropriate for misappropriation and six-month actual suspension was appropriate for writing insufficiently funded checks. In the Matter of Hagen (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 153. [20]

An attorney on interim suspension following a criminal conviction has little control over the length of such suspension prior to final resolution of the case. Where an attorney's prior actual suspension had consisted largely of time already spent on interim suspension, and such a lengthy actual suspension would not ordinarily have been imposed for the misconduct involved in the prior matter, and where imposition of an even greater actual suspension in the attorney's subsequent matter would have resulted in discipline far in excess of that warranted by the facts and comparable case law, it would not be appropriate to adhere strictly to the standard directing imposition of greater discipline for a second offense. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [10]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Where respondent inadvertently mishandled a small sum of trust funds and was unlikely to repeat her misconduct, no suspension was necessary. Although standard 2.2(b) requires at least three months actual suspension for a trust account violation, the standards are guidelines to be construed in light of decisional law. A private reproval was appropriate in light of the nature of the misconduct and the mitigating circumstances, including respondent's severe emotional difficulties, her having taken the disciplinary proceeding very seriously, and her having suffered great hardship as a consequence. In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [14]

In requiring an invariable minimum of one year's actual suspension, standard 2.2(a) is not faithful to the teachings of the Supreme Court's decisions. Negligent misappropriation quickly and voluntarily remedied may require no actual suspension or only a short suspension. In the Matter of Robins (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 708. [9]

In the Matter of Bach (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 631.

Disbarment will not be ordered where there is no evidence that a sanction short of disbarment is inadequate to deter future misconduct and protect the public. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [15]

First offense deceit has not resulted in disbarment in Supreme Court cases. No act of concealment or dishonesty is more reprehensible than attempts to mislead a court; nonetheless, disbarment for such misconduct may be too drastic and unnecessary to achieve the goals of attorney discipline. Where respondent presented evidence of general good character, discipline of five years stayed suspension, five years probation, and two years actual suspension, with standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement, was adequate. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [20]

A single act of very serious misconduct can and has resulted in disbarment even absent a prior disciplinary record; where a respondent's culpability is egregious and inexplicable, disbarment is appropriate even for a single misappropriation. In the Matter of Dyson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 280. [12]

Disbarment would be excessive in case arising out of criminal conviction for filing false federal income tax return, even though offense involved moral turpitude, based on comparable Supreme Court cases and given respondent's compelling showing of mitigation, including absence of any prior or subsequent misconduct; extreme emotional difficulties arising from an amputation; respondent's acknowledgment of his misconduct and his candor and cooperation with the State Bar; a persuasive showing of respondent's good character and high esteem in the community; family problems existing at the time of the misconduct; and the fact that the misconduct did not involve the practice of law. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [8]

Misdemeanor convictions of sex offenses which are not serious and are unrelated to the practice of law have generally resulted in only private reproval absent aggravating factors. Where respondent was convicted of such a misdemeanor, disbarment would have been manifestly disproportionate to his cumulative misconduct, notwithstanding his record of two prior private reprovals. Respondent's misconduct was less serious than wilful failure to file tax returns or driving under the influence, and did not warrant the same degree of discipline. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [1]

In order to properly fulfill the purposes of lawyer discipline, the review department must examine the nature and chronology of a respondent's record of discipline. Mere fact that attorney has three impositions of discipline, without further analysis, may not justify disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [7]

Where no Supreme Court precedent would have justified disbarment for respondent's failure to perform services in two matters if both matters had been decided together, additional prior discipline for failure to pass Professional Responsibility Examination did not sufficiently add to severity of misconduct to justify imposing disbarment. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 131. [9]

Recommendation of disbarment for misconduct in single matter, involving failure to perform services, misappropriation of advanced fees and costs, trust fund violation, and misrepresentation to clients was excessive when viewed in the context of decisions of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Trillo (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 59. [15]

1093 Inadequacy of Discipline

Discipline standard applicable to misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude provides for disbarment or actual suspension. Where respondent repeatedly committed serious misconduct and did not demonstrate reform, appropriate discipline was actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [7 a,b]

Standards for attorney discipline should be followed whenever possible. Where applicable standard provided for suspension or reproval, hearing judge erred in resolving case by issuing admonition. Despite extensive mitigation, attorney judicial candidate's recklessly false allegation implicating opponent in bribery and fraud warranted public discipline, because it threatened to erode public confidence in the judiciary. Accordingly, public reproval was appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [6]

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

The review department found respondent culpable of serious misconduct which burdened parties to litigation and the trial and appellate courts to adjudicate two matters. This included a patently frivolous appeal, dishonesty to law enforcement officers and misleading a court. Of special concern was that respondent's background as a certified family law specialist for much of his practice and his activity in bar work failed to serve him to avoid the misconduct in this record. Respondent's misdeeds cannot be ascribed to inexperience or simple zealousness. Moreover, there is nothing in the record which could ascribe this misconduct to any health or similar, singular condition. Respondent's lack of insight and failure to appreciate the wrongfulness of his misconduct does not bode well for respondent avoiding similar misconduct in the future. Anytime respondent lost on the merits of an issue, he would not accept the court's adverse judicial determination and would attempt to blame the ruling on the court's lack of understanding of the issues. Balancing all relevant factors and seeking to protect the public, courts and the legal profession, the review department increased the actual suspension from one year to two years. In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 112. [5 a-d]

In respondent's second disciplinary proceeding for his failure to comply with the quarterly reporting requirements imposed on him under two prior reprovals, it was inappropriate to include, in the discipline recommendation, a reporting condition with a lower frequency of reporting than that previously imposed on respondent, which he had been unable or unwilling to comply. Absent extraordinary and enunciated circumstances, the reporting condition should have at least required that respondent demonstrate that he can now comply with the reporting requirements previously imposed on him under his two reprovals by imposing the same reporting requirements on him prospectively. Recommending a lower reporting requirement would "reward" respondent for his noncompliance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 430.

Regardless of who seeks review, the review department has the authority and obligation to conduct de novo review and to increase the discipline, if appropriate. In the Matter of Brimberry (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 390. [3]

Where respondent seriously abused the judicial system for a dozen years despite heavy sanctions, showed no remorse, and refused to mend his ways, no discipline less than disbarment was consistent with the goals of maintaining high ethical standards for attorneys and preserving public confidence in the legal profession. Because of respondent's total lack of repentance, a lengthy suspension coupled with probation terms was inappropriate; there was a great danger that respondent would fail to comply with any probation terms imposed. Respondent's repeated acts of moral turpitude demonstrated that he was no longer worthy of membership in the bar. In the Matter of Varakin (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179. [14]

Where respondent was culpable of one instance each of collection of an illegal fee and intentional failure to perform competently, and of multiple instances each of violating his duty to uphold the law; reckless failure to perform competently; withdrawing from employment without protecting clients from foreseeable prejudice; and failure to pay trust funds on demand, and where most severe applicable standard proposed three-month minimum actual suspension for non-misappropriation trust fund offenses, and where respondent's mitigating evidence was not sufficient to justify deviating from applicable standard given respondent's record of numerous violations over extended time period, review department increased hearing judge's recommended actual suspension to 90 days, as condition of three-year probation, with one-year stayed suspension as justified by case law. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [29]

Where respondent did not appear from record to be venal or dishonest, but overall nature of respondent's misconduct revealed somewhat indifferent attitude toward ethical obligations, especially those to administration of justice and persons other than current clients, some actual suspension was warranted in order to protect public by augmenting respondent's understanding of his duties. In the Matter of Riley (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [34]

Where, in representing four criminal clients, respondent violated six court orders, was held in contempt four times, failed to appear at scheduled court hearings nine times, and had warrants issued against him three times, and where respondent had breached two separate disciplinary orders and defaulted in current disciplinary proceeding, respondent's misconduct reflected disdain and contempt for the orderly process and rule of law and inability to conform to the most basic duties of an attorney. These facts, coupled with lack of mitigation, demonstrated that risk of future misconduct was great and indicated that respondent was not a good candidate for probation and/or suspension. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [14]

The aggravating effect of prior discipline may be diminished if misconduct underlying prior discipline occurred contemporaneously with misconduct currently under consideration. However, where at time respondent committed current misconduct, he was either involved in disciplinary process or was actually on disciplinary probation, this indicated that respondent's prior discipline had very little impact on his behavior, and demonstrated respondent's inability to conform his conduct to ethical norms. In such circumstances, greater showing required in reinstatement would better protect public than showing required to return to practice after suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Accordingly, application of standard calling for disbarment for third imposition of discipline was appropriate. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [15]

In light of all relevant evidence and comparable case law, as well as heightened concern regarding enforcement of child support orders, respondent's very serious misconduct of advising and aiding a client in avoiding a child support order, which misconduct was substantially aggravated by respondent's overreaching in arranging real property transactions between the client and respondent's father, warranted increasing recommended discipline to one-year actual suspension coupled with three years of probation, even though review department found respondent culpable of less misconduct than did hearing judge. In the Matter of Fandey (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 767. [12]

Where respondent engaged in serious improper communications with a represented party, exposing the party to serious risks of harm, some of which occurred, and committed other stipulated wrongdoing, recommended discipline of four years probation conditioned on thirty days actual suspension was inconsistent with decisional law and insufficient. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [10]

Where parties agreed to highly unusual stipulation expressly preserving right to seek review, but did not contemplate that review department would recommend discipline more severe than that set forth in order approving stipulation, parties' expectation that review department would be bound by stipulated discipline was unjustified. However, it was appropriate to relieve parties from stipulation due to their mutual mistake. Accordingly, review department vacated order approving stipulation and remanded proceeding for new stipulation or trial. In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664. [11]

Where respondents seriously disregarded their fiduciary duty to clients, including leaving it to non-lawyer contractors to explain complex retainer agreement without allowing clients to review it over time or discuss it with respondents, and where such retainer agreement, though purporting to be for contingent fees, contained unconscionable provision for minimum fee upon discharge, and where respondents' acts in seeking to enforce such provision damaged clients, respondents' conduct warranted greater actual suspension than 15 months recommended by hearing judge. Respondents' involvement in client solicitation alone warranted one-year actual suspension; their remaining offenses deserved an additional six months. In the Matter of Scapa and Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 635. [14]

Where an attorney has previously been disciplined for misappropriation, the attorney is eligible for disbarment if found culpable of misappropriation in a second matter. Where respondent's total misconduct in two separate disciplinary cases involved ten client matters, spanned all but three years of his practice, and harmed or jeopardized numerous clients, and respondent had an ongoing substance abuse problem and had not complied with his probation in the first matter, his aggregate misconduct clearly required imposition of the harshest discipline, and there was no basis for a recommendation of suspension rather than disbarment. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [13]

Because the review department must review the record independently and is not bound by the hearing judge's findings or recommendation (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a)), the issue of appropriate discipline in a matter involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court and other misconduct did not turn on the one narrow issue argued on review by the parties regarding the appropriateness of a retroactive suspension. The review department therefore considered whether any form of suspension was adequate discipline given Supreme Court precedent generally ordering disbarment for rule 955 violations. Although the State Bar's declination to recommend disbarment was accorded considerable weight, it could not be reconciled with the precedent making disbarment the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1]

Mitigating evidence of family pressures and misfortunes, good character, therapy, community service, and compliance with probation duties, similar to evidence which had been found sufficiently mitigating to avert an attorney's disbarment for prior misconduct, was not sufficient to justify a recommendation short of disbarment in a subsequent matter in view of the attorney's additional, serious misconduct and the need for protection of the public. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [6]

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

Where Office of Trials argued that recommended discipline was too low in light of existing findings, and also suggested supplemental findings, and on de novo review, review department agreed that discipline was insufficient in light of findings made by hearing judge, review department did not need to address issue of supplemental findings. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [1]

In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389.

The Supreme Court has expressed concern that the State Bar Court should make clear the reasons for departure from the standards in any case where the recommended discipline differs therefrom. Where hearing judge did not articulate basis for recommending 18 months suspension instead of two-year minimum called for by applicable standard, respondent would have had to wait two years to reapply for admission if criminal conviction had occurred prior to admission to practice, and no reason appeared on record to depart from standard except to give credit for time spent on interim suspension, review department recommended actual suspension of two years. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [11]

Misconduct committed by attorney who was grossly negligent, though not dishonest, in handling a significant sum of client trust funds in one matter, and who failed to communicate adequately with a client in another matter, warranted 90 days rather than 60 days of actual suspension as condition of 3-year probation accompanying 3-year stayed suspension. In the Matter of Ward (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47. [1]

A lengthy suspension with a standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing was not adequate discipline, where respondent committed extensive misdeeds which became commonplace in respondent's practice, caused harm to a number of clients, and failed to rectify the harm. In the Matter of Collins (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [9]

An attorney's lengthy delay in notifying his client of receipt of a check in partial settlement of her case, and his failure to render a timely and appropriate accounting upon his withdrawal, which was aggravated by unilateral payment to himself of his fees, merited more than a public reproval. The attorney's handling of trust account records was required to be reviewed by an accountant for some period of time to ensure protection of other clients. However, in view of mitigating circumstances, subsequent corrective measures, and lack of harm to the client or her doctor, no actual suspension was necessary to protect the public. The Review Department recommended two months' stayed suspension, with one year's probation, periodic auditing of the attorney's trust account, and a professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Lazarus (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 387. [28]

Recent Supreme Court precedent indicated that attorney with no prior discipline record who abandoned two clients within three years and improperly retained unearned advance fees should receive sanction greater than public reproval; two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and 30 days actual suspension were recommended. In the Matter of Kennon (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 267. [15]

Fact that, in addition to unintentionally misappropriating client's funds, attorney had committed act of moral turpitude by concealing personal assets in trust account to avoid tax levy might, but would not necessarily, indicate greater discipline to be in order, based on Supreme Court precedent. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [19]

In the Matter of Heiser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 47.

1094 Admonition in Lieu of Discipline

Standards for attorney discipline should be followed whenever possible. Where applicable standard provided for suspension or reproval, hearing judge erred in resolving case by issuing admonition. Despite extensive mitigation, attorney judicial candidate's recklessly false allegation implicating opponent in bribery and fraud warranted public discipline, because it threatened to erode public confidence in the judiciary. Accordingly, public reproval was appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Parish (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 370. [6]

Decisions of the Supreme Court and the review department involving abandonment of a client's case where the attorney has no prior record of misconduct have typically resulted in discipline ranging from no actual suspension to 90 days of actual suspension. However, most of the past abandonment cases involved the attorney's inattention in civil matters. Balancing all relevant factors in this case involving an attorney's inattention in a criminal case involving an incarcerated client, and giving weight to, but not relying too heavily on, the State Bar's recommendation of respondent's 90-day actual suspension, the review department concluded that a 6-month actual suspension was appropriate. In the Matter of Nees (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [5]

Since an admonition does not constitute either an exoneration or the imposition of discipline, neither respondent nor State Bar is entitled to an award of costs. In the Matter of Respondent V (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 442. [7]

Admonitions are not discipline and may be reopened and proceed anew as a formal disciplinary proceeding if a formal proceeding is brought with two years based on other misconduct. The rules of procedure define the start of a formal proceeding as the issuance of a notice to show cause. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 415, 550.) In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [20]

The Office of Trial Counsel has discretion whether or not to file formal charges in a matter eligible for disposition by admonition. The State Bar Court cannot dismiss a proceeding prior to hearing on the ground that it meets the criteria for admonition, unless a case for selective prosecution is established. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415.) In the Matter of Tady (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 121. [5]

Where respondent successfully performed services for which he was retained, and his sole culpability was for single act of failing to inform client of respondent's entirely proper exercise of judgment not to pursue damages, and both harm to client and extent of misconduct were minimal, appropriate discipline would have been private reproval. However, in light of attorney's many years of practice without prior disciplinary record, and other extenuating circumstances, discipline would be punitive and would not further purposes of attorney discipline. Since finding of culpability precluded dismissal, admonition was an appropriate disposition. In the Matter of Respondent C (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [20]

1099 Other Miscellaneous Issues

Statutes regarding legal disciplinary system are not exclusive, but rather supplementary to California Supreme Court's disciplinary authority over members of California bar. Given Supreme Court's partial delegation of its disciplinary authority to State Bar Court, and its instruction that State Bar Court should follow disciplinary standards whenever possible, statute providing for actual suspension of up to three years for violations of Rules of Professional Conduct did not preclude State Bar Court from recommending disbarment for rules violation when otherwise justified by disciplinary standards. In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418 [6]

Hearing judge erred in recommending that respondent receive credit toward his period of actual suspension for the time he had been on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(e). Neither the statute nor the case law authorizes the State Bar Court to credit a member's period of involuntary inactive enrollment, under subdivision (e), toward a period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [9]

Where respondent misappropriated $50,000 of $79,875.89 insurance settlement funds he held in his trust account for his corporate client by disbursing $50,000 to corporation's president, who was one of corporation's four directors, in president's individual capacity without knowledge or consent of corporation's remaining three directors; where respondent violated his fiduciary duty to remaining three directors by disbursing the $50,000 to president without their knowledge or consent; where respondent knowingly and intentionally misappropriated remaining $29,875.89 of settlement funds for his own use and benefit by withdrawing them from his trust account as attorney's fees without the knowledge and consent of remaining three directors; where respondent violated rule of professional conduct requiring disputed funds to be held in trust by withdrawing $29,875.89 in fees from his trust account when his right to collect fees was disputed; where respondent repeatedly refused to account for proceeds of insurance settlement check in accordance with requests of chairman of corporations board of directors; where there was extensive aggravation, including concealment, overreaching, and failure to make restitution, with mitigation for strong good character testimony, extensive community service, no prior record of discipline, and lack of additional misconduct in more than five years; and where misconduct involved only a single client matter; and even though standard for attorney sanctions for professional misconduct for willful misappropriation called for and Supreme Court has repeatedly held that usual discipline for willfully misappropriation of client funds is disbarment, appropriate discipline recommendation was not disbarment, but four years' stayed suspension, four years' probation on conditions, which included two years' actual suspension continuing until respondent pays restitution of $29,875.89 with interest. In the Matter of Davis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 576. [9 a-d]

Respondent was unable to confront her husband concerning his handling of the trust account. Absent equally strong evidence of respondent's recovery from such a disability concerning such a fundamental duty of a lawyer the review department would recommend severe remedial discipline. Respondent's compelling evidence of her actions to terminate her relations with her husband and her continuing psychiatric treatment make clear that such a recovery is well under way. Respondent expressed remorse for the misconduct; was candid with the State Bar in stipulating to the misconduct; has taken effective steps to avoid a repetition of that misconduct including severing her relations with her husband and continuing in therapy; and has made a contribution to society in seeking, and obtaining, legislation dealing with human reproduction. While serious misconduct occurred as the result of respondent's inattention to financial matters, including the trust account she maintained with her husband, a future recurrence of such problems is unlikely. The hearing judge's recommended condition of continued psychiatric treatment lends assurance to this conclusion. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal State Bar Ct. Rptr. 403 [7]

Even if credit card cash advances that attorney obtained and lost while gambling in Nevada casinos were "gambling debts" and therefore not enforceable debts in California, hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to make restitution to credit card company was not only legal, but appropriate and necessary to respondent's rehabilitation and for protection of public in light of hearing judge's findings that attorney obtained the cash advances without intending to repay them. Requiring attorney to make restitution will force attorney to confront his misconduct in concrete terms. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[11]

Where State Bar neither impeached nor rebutted attorney's testimony that he had not gambled for more than five years, where State Bar did not proffer any expert testimony that attorney suffered from compulsive gambling, and where there was no evidence that attorney currently suffered from compulsive gambling, record did not support hearing judge's recommendation that attorney be required to attend Gamblers Anonymous meetings while on disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Petilla (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 231.[12]

In default proceeding, period of stayed suspension and disciplinary provision authorizing probation conditions to be imposed on attorney in the future by State Bar Court ought not to be rejected by hearing judge merely because attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney establishes rehabilitation under standard 1.4(c)(ii) or until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[3]

In default proceeding, no loss of public protection occurs when specific probation conditions are not immediately imposed on attorney who is placed on actual suspension because such attorney will be prohibited from practicing law for duration of attorney's actual suspension and until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[4]

Failure to recommend period of stayed suspension merely because attorney failed to appear in disciplinary proceeding results in marked reduction in public protection and in defaulting attorney receiving less discipline than attorneys who appear and participate in disciplinary process. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[6]

Despite the mandate in State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 290(a) that every imposition of discipline (other than reprovals) include a requirement that attorney attend State Bar Ethics School, the appropriate time to consider imposing State Bar Ethics School as a condition of probation in default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until the attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205, is at the time of ruling on the rule 205 motion to terminate the actual suspension. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[7]

Disciplinary recommendation in a default proceeding in which attorney's actual suspension will continue until attorney files and State Bar Court grants motion to terminate actual suspension under State Bar Rule of Procedure, rule 205 may, in appropriate cases, require that attorney's actual suspension continue until attorney attends State Bar Ethics School. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.[8]

Introducing into evidence the pleadings and exhibits from a civil matter without also introducing the trial transcript from the civil proceeding provides little evidence as to the nature and extent of respondent's conduct underlying the adverse civil findings of harassment and intentional infliction of emotional distress on a client or the resulting harm to the client. Such evidence may have had a material effect on the measure of the appropriate level of discipline.In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Where the State Bar Court recommends that an attorney who has defaulted in a disciplinary proceeding be placed on actual suspension, rule 205(a) of the Rules of Procedure requires that the discipline recommendation contain two elements: (1) a specific period of actual suspension; and (2) a statement that the attorney's actual suspension shall continue unless the State Bar Court grants a motion to terminate the actual suspension at the conclusion of the specific period of actual suspension or upon such later date ordered by the court. In the present case the hearing judge recommended that respondent be actually suspended until he accomplishes certain tasks (i.e., provide evidence of reimbursement to his former client, attend Ethics School, pass the professional responsibility examination, and make a motion to the State Bar Court to terminate the actual suspension). This recommendation does not meet the requirement of rule 205(a) that the recommended discipline include a specific period of actual suspension. At best, the hearing judge's recommendation will result in an indefinite, as distinguished from a specific, period of actual suspension. To extend an attorney's recommended actual suspension until he or she moves the State Bar Court to terminate that suspension under rule 205 there must be a stated, defined and measurable period of actual suspension recommended. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [1 a, h]

While rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure does not specifically preclude a hearing judge in a default matter from recommending a period of actual suspension be imposed as a condition of probation along with appropriate additional conditions of probation, the rule clearly contemplates that probation and its attendant conditions be imposed at the time the defaulting attorney brings a motion under rule 205(c) to terminate his or her actual suspension. The entire purpose of rule 205 is to eliminate the necessity of multiple proceedings against an attorney who is unwilling to participate in the disciplinary process and evidences no interest in maintaining his or her membership in the bar. Under rule 205 the burden is placed on a defaulting attorney to bring forward to the State Bar Court his or her interest in continuing the right to practice. The appropriate time to consider imposing probation and its attendant conditions is when the attorney seeks relief from the actual suspension that may be imposed following his or her default in a disciplinary proceeding. It is only at that time that the court has before it an attorney who evidences a willingness to comply with conditions of probation and a full understanding of the reasons for the attorney's failure to participate in the disciplinary process. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [2 a, b]

Attendant to a recommendation of suspension, the State Bar Court lacks the authority to impose conditions of probation without the prior approval of the Supreme Court. Therefore, it is appropriate, in any decision or opinion made under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure recommending the actual suspension of an attorney, to recommend to the Supreme Court that the disciplined attorney be ordered to comply with the conditions of probation, if any, reasonably related to the found misconduct that the State Bar Court may impose as conditions of probation attendant on terminating the actual suspension of that attorney. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [3]

Attorney discipline is under the control of the Supreme Court and the State Bar Court may only recommend such discipline for the approval of the Supreme Court. As a consequence the clear parameters of any proposed discipline must be included in the State Bar Court's recommendation to the Supreme Court. Both stayed and actual suspension are discipline within the context of attorney discipline. It follows that in any recommendation for discipline made to the Supreme Court under rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure must include, if appropriate, a period of stayed suspension. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [4 a, b]

There is nothing in rule 205 of the Rules of Procedure that expressly precludes the State Bar Court from recommending appropriate preconditions to a defaulting and disciplined attorney bringing a motion to terminate his or her actual suspension under rule 205, such as recommended in this matter by the hearing judge, requiring respondent to make restitution and attend Ethics School. However, the requirement that respondent take and pass the Professional Responsibility Examination prior to bringing a motion for relief from suspension is in conflict with Supreme Court case law requiring that a disciplined attorney be given a minimum of one year within which to pass the examination. In the Matter of Stansbury (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 103. [5 a,b]

Respondent was found culpable of ten disciplinable acts of moral turpitude (seven acts of misrepresentation, one act of improperly retaining for his own benefit funds out of a medical provider's lien reduction, and one act of attempting to obtain a greater fee than that to which he was entitled by failing to disclose to his client costs he recovered), eight instances of improper solicitation of clients, and two instances of failing to properly account to his client. There were substantial aggravating factors, including a prior record of discipline, but no mitigating circumstances. The review department recommended that respondent be suspended from the practice of law for a period of five years, that execution be stayed, and that respondent be placed on probation for a period of five years on conditions including three years actual suspension and until respondent pays restitution and until he provides proof of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838. [9]

Even though respondent was culpable of failing to comply with the conditions attached to his private reproval, the review department did not strictly apply the Standard for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct for such violations which calls for suspension. Instead, the review department imposed a public reproval because of respondent's extensive participation in the proceeding and because respondent acknowledged his obligation to comply with State Bar Court orders. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[5]

In view of the serious nature of respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), review department added a quarterly reporting probation condition to its discipline recommendation. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [6]

Disciplinary probation furthers the fundamental purposes of attorney discipline only when attorney probationers are effectively monitored to ensure that they do not engage in further misconduct and are conforming their conduct to the ethical strictures of the profession. Historically, attorney probationers have been monitored to ensure their compliance with these requirements through appointed voluntary probation monitors or through court-ordered self-reporting by the attorney or both. Even though probation monitors have played an important role in monitoring attorneys on probation and were, at one time, appointed in most instances, the use of a probation monitor may not be necessary where only routine, simple, periodic reporting conditions are recommended or are coupled with a rule 955 requirement and/or passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination. Appointment of a probation monitor was not warranted in this case in light of the simple probation conditions recommended and the found misconduct, mitigation, and aggravation. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [3]

Quarterly probation reporting is important because it requires attorney probationers, four times a year, to reflect upon their prior misconduct and to review their current conduct to ensure that it complies with all of the conditions of their probation. However, quarterly probation reporting is not mandated in all cases in which probation is recommended. When the circumstances in a case establish that quarterly probation reporting is not necessary, the circumstances should be set forth in the court's decision. In this case involving attorney-client misconduct with a recent priorreproval, however, the appropriateness of a quarterly-reporting condition of probation was clear. In the Matter of Weiner (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 759. [4]

In respondent's second disciplinary proceeding for his failure to comply with the quarterly reporting requirements imposed on him under two prior reprovals, it was inappropriate to include, in the discipline recommendation, a reporting condition with a lower frequency of reporting than that previously imposed on respondent, which he had been unable or unwilling to comply. Absent extraordinary and enunciated circumstances, the reporting condition should have at least required that respondent demonstrate that he can now comply with the reporting requirements previously imposed on him under his two reprovals by imposing the same reporting requirements on him prospectively. Recommending a lower reporting requirement would "reward" respondent for his noncompliance. In the Matter of Meyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 697. [9]

Even though an attorney's willful violation of his statutory duty to obey court orders issued in connection with his profession is stated grounds for disbarment or suspension, discipline within that range is not mandated. Thus, in light of the unusual circumstances surrounding respondent's violation of this duty, a private reproval was the appropriate level of discipline. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [4]

Even though the review department's duty to independently determine the appropriate level of discipline precludes it from giving excess weight to the State Bar's discipline recommendation, the review department gave it some consideration. In the Matter of Respondent X (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 592. [5]

Even though statutes authorizing conviction referral proceedings authorize only the disbarment or suspension of attorneys convicted of crimes, the State Bar Court still had jurisdiction in conviction matter to recommend to the Supreme Court that it cancel respondent's license to practice law. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [9]

Respondent's willful failure to disclose his arrest and pending trial on felony charges by updating his answers to the moral character questions on his initial application for admission to practice law was a fraud upon the Supreme Court because it allowed him to admitted without adequate consideration of his moral character. Thus, the State Bar Court may recommend that his license to practice be revoked without addressing the nature of his crimes or the facts and circumstances surrounding them. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [12]

Cases involving a magnitude and wide range of misconduct have typically resulted in disbarment, notwithstanding the attorney's lack of a prior record of discipline or even with some mitigation present. Where respondent's misconduct was quite serious and wide-ranging, and, very importantly, commenced only two years after respondent's admission and continued for over seven years thereafter, the review department concluded that the public was entitled to the protection of a formal reinstatement proceeding to ensure respondent's fitness to practice before she is again allowed to practice law. In the Matter of Myrdall (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 363. [10]

Where respondent violated rule of professional conduct which prohibits an attorney from improperly obtaining an interest in a client's property and/or entering into a business transaction with a client, and that misconduct was the same misconduct underlying the charge that respondent violated statutory duty to uphold law on account of his violation of provisions of the Probate Code which prohibit self-dealing by trustees, and where discipline did not depend on whether respondent violated both rule and statute, statutory violation was cumulative and review department did not address it. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Because an incarcerated client has a limited ability to assist an attorney or to stay apprised of the attorney's efforts, the abandonment of an incarcerated client is a serious matter warranting substantial discipline. In the Matter of Hultman (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Period of stayed suspension was required for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c), California Rules of Court, so as to provide enforcement mechanism for compliance with terms and conditions of probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [16]

Discipline imposed in separate disciplinary proceedings may be "concurrent" without either starting together or ending at same time, in sense that periods of probation and actual suspension imposed in different proceedings run together only during time periods that they overlap. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [17]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where respondent requested "credit for time served" based on his having voluntarily limited his law practice to avoid misconduct, but cited no authority supporting such request, and where much of respondent's misconduct occurred after date he testified he terminated his practice, review department declined to give such credit. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [11]

Where extended time had passed since hearing judge's decision in consolidated probation revocation and original discipline matters, during which time respondent had been ineligible to practice law, review department recommended that actual suspension in original discipline matter be fully concurrent with, and retroactive to effective date of, respondent's actual suspension in probation revocation matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [25]

Disbarment is a remedy generally available for statutory violations in original disciplinary proceedings, but not in probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [6]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Where hearing judge's oral comments at close of case regarding appropriate discipline deviated from the recommendation made in judge's written decision, but hearing overall was fair and respondent's counsel had opportunity to present argument regarding degree of discipline, hearing judge's written decision controlled, and respondent was not denied due process. Respondent could not, as a matter of law, rely on hearing judge's oral or written discipline recommendation since it was not binding on review department or Supreme Court. In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752. [10]

Where respondent's failure to adhere to statutory requirement of written attorney-client fee agreements was at heart of both matters in which he had been charged with misconduct, and respondent's attention needed to be directed to written fee agreements and also to his obligations upon withdrawal from employment, public reproval was properly conditioned on completion of State Bar Ethics School. Its format of classroom instruction, followed by a test, would better remedy these problems than the more passive experience of the California Professional Responsibility Examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [14]

Where State Bar Court did not recommend respondent's suspension from law practice, it was not required to include, as condition of public reproval, requirement that respondent pass a professional responsibility examination. In the Matter of Hanson (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 703. [16]

Where, due to the dismissal of all charges, a disciplinary hearing had included a culpability phase but not a sanction phase, and where the review department found respondent culpable of misconduct, it would be inappropriate for the review department to recommend or impose any sanction even if the State Bar wished to waive its opportunity to introduce evidence regarding aggravation, because respondent wanted and was entitled to the opportunity to offer evidence in mitigation. In the Matter of Respondent P (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 622. [14]

The Supreme Court has expressly approved retroactive disciplinary suspension. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [9]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Claim that respondent's failure to give required notice of suspension in four different client matters should not have been charged as four separate violations was relevant to degree of discipline but not to culpability. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [8]

A stipulated disciplinary order does not constitute precedent, but does represent a determination by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the hearing judge that the degree of discipline ordered satisfies the need to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [11]

From the point of view of a suspended attorney, the effect of a suspension is the same regardless of whether it is called interim or actual: the attorney is denied the right to practice law for the duration of the suspension. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [12]

Normally, the requirement that a disciplined attorney show rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the law prior to returning to practice is imposed where the attorney's actual suspension is two years or greater. However, where period of time that attorney was enrolled inactive on account of failure to answer notice to show cause, coupled with one-year actual suspension recommended by review department, resulted in attorney being continuously ineligible to practice law for greater than two years, it was appropriate to recommend compliance with such requirement. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [5]

In attorney disciplinary matters, a period of stayed suspension subject to probation conditions is applied primarily as an additional measure to protect the public, courts and legal profession. However, where one-year actual suspension, coupled with requirement that attorney demonstrate rehabilitation, present fitness to practice and present learning in the law before being relieved of his actual suspension, would protect public, courts and profession, review department concluded that stayed suspension and probation were not necessary. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [6]

Uncharged misconduct relied upon to enhance discipline in one proceeding cannot later constitute grounds for additional discipline in an independent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Boyne (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 389. [7]

Whether a suspension is interim or actual, the effect on the attorney is the same. The issue is what is the appropriate total length of suspension under the circumstances of each case. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

The California Professional Responsibility Examination, when appropriately ordered, does assist in the rehabilitation of an errant attorney and, as a general proposition, the examination is an effective tool to measure an attorney's understanding and appreciation of the rules and statutes which are designed to protect the public and the best interests of the profession. However, when imposed as a condition of a reproval, the examination may only be required based on a finding that the protection of the public and the interests of the attorney will be served thereby. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 956(a).) In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [2]

No decisional law requires automatic imposition of a requirement to take and pass a professional responsibility examination as a condition of a reproval. Routinely requiring the examination should be limited to cases in which the attorney's behavior has so far deviated from ethical norms as to warrant the serious step of either actual or wholly stayed suspension from practice. In the Matter of Respondent G (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 181. [3]

Respondent's inconsistent responses to State Bar investigators precluded a finding in mitigation that respondent was cooperative with the State Bar. However, respondent's behavior while acting as his own counsel during the disciplinary proceeding, which was consistent with an honest, if mistaken, belief in his own innocence, did not demonstrate an intent to hinder or mislead the court. A respondent is not required to acquiesce in the findings and conclusions of the State Bar Court, but the respondent's attitude toward the disciplinary process and amenability in conforming to the Rules of Professional Conduct are proper issues for the court's review, particularly in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Aguiluz (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 32. [14]

The respondent's name does not appear in an opinion imposing a private reproval, although the proceeding remains public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.) In the Matter of Respondent F (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 17. [1]

A respondent who receives a private reproval is entitled to have his or her name omitted from the published review department opinion, although the disciplinary proceeding itself is, and remains, public. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 615.) In the Matter of Respondent E (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 716. [1]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

Sections 6068(a) and 6103 were not intended to refer to the Rules of Professional Conduct or to make disbarment available for violations of such rules. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [5]

Under section 6077, the discipline which may be recommended by the State Bar for a wilful violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct is limited to a maximum of three years suspension. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [6]

Section 6077 does not bind the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its inherent power, should it decide that greater discipline than three years suspension for violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct is needed to protect the public in a particular case; the Supreme Court is not limited by the Legislature in exercising its disciplinary authority. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [7]

Section 6078 authorizes the State Bar Court to hold a hearing on charged violations of law and to recommend disbarment in those cases warranting disbarment, but section 6077 declares that a Rule of Professional Conduct violation does not warrant discipline in excess of three years suspension. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [8]

Section 6103's authorization of discipline, including disbarment, is limited by its terms to occasions when an attorney violates the oath and duties defined in the Business and Professions Code or violates a court order. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [9]

For an egregious rule violation, the State Bar may seek suspension of at least two years and application of standard 1.4(c)(ii); an attorney who can satisfy the showing required by standards 1.4(c)(ii) poses no continuing threat to the public warranting disbarment. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [11]

In cases involving attorney discipline for serious offenses, the Supreme Court has: (1) stated that serious offenses call for severe discipline and warrant disbarment in the absence of clear or compelling mitigation; (2) recited similar language but evaluated the type of misconduct as a lesser offense; or (3) emphasized that there is no fixed formula as to discipline, and that appropriate discipline can only be arrived at by a balanced consideration of relevant factors, on a case-by-case basis. In the Matter of Hertz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 456. [13]

If violations of the Rules of Professional Conduct were automatically also violations of the statute governing an attorney's duty to obey the law, the statute limiting the discipline for rule violations to a maximum of three years' suspension would be rendered meaningless; such a construction of the statutory scheme would be illogical. In the Matter of Whitehead (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 354. [16]

Where respondent had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(c) prior to hearing on underlying charges, and after review, proceeding on underlying charges was remanded for partial rehearing and new discipline recommendation, review department directed that on remand, whether suspension or disbarment was recommended, respondent should receive credit for time spent on inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [25]

Typically, Supreme Court orders actual suspension for an appropriate period and until restitution is made, rather than ordering suspension until restitution is made and then for an additional fixed term. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [2]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern with assuring that the record in disciplinary proceedings reflects the correct evidence and finding of prior discipline or lack thereof. Accordingly, where only one of respondent's two prior disciplinary proceedings was made a part of the record and weighed by the hearing judge, it was necessary for the review department to remand the matter to the hearing judge to take evidence on the other prior discipline and consider its effect on the recommended discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [5]

As a matter of policy, not all attorneys who fail to participate in disciplinary proceedings should be precluded from receiving discipline containing probation conditions. Defaulting attorneys do present a problem for the hearing department in that the cause of their misconduct is not always evident on the record, thus making it difficult to determine which probation conditions or duties would further the goals of discipline. Nonetheless, the view that an attorney's default is prima facie evidence that the attorney is not amenable to probation runs contrary to the duty to consider each case on its own merits to determine appropriate discipline, and also precludes the use of probation monitoring as an effective means of public protection. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [8]

In determining recommended discipline, matters should be considered on a case-by-case basis, balancing the relevant factors, including the facts, gravity of misconduct and mitigating and aggravating evidence, and considering them in light of the objectives of attorney discipline. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [9]

Probation is not mandated in all cases where an actual suspension is imposed. When a lengthy period of actual suspension is recommended, imposing the provisions of standard 1.4(c)(ii) in lieu of a probation grant may serve adequately to protect the public and test the attorney's rehabilitation. Probation may not be indicated by virtue of the nature of the misconduct, the passage of time since the misconduct or clear evidence of the attorney's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [11]

A respondent should not be admitted to disciplinary probation when there is clear evidence that the respondent will not comply with its conditions. In the Matter of Marsh (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 291. [13]

The State Bar cannot impose discipline for any violation not alleged in the original notice to show cause. If the evidence produced before the hearing department shows the attorney has committed an ethical violation that was not charged in the original notice, the State Bar must amend the notice to conform to the evidence adduced at the hearing. In the Matter of Glasser (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 163. [16]

Where delay in commencement of disciplinary probation until end of actual suspension would not further rehabilitation objective of probation, review department recommended that probation commence on finality of Supreme Court's discipline order. In the Matter of Bleecker (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 113. [21]

Review department recognized that respondent's default raised concerns regarding respondent's suitability for probation, but concluded that respondent should not be denied opportunity to comply with probation terms which would appear to have rehabilitative benefit. In the Matter of Peterson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 73. [7]

The Supreme Court's principal concern in the area of attorney discipline is protection of the public and preservation of confidence in the legal profession, interests served by maintaining the highest possible professional standards for attorneys. That same concern is therefore the principal concern of the review department. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3]

Where attorney had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment following disbarment recommendation by hearing department, but on review, discipline recommendation was decreased to suspension and probation, review department recommended that period of involuntary inactive enrollment already served by attorney, and any additional period served thereafter, be credited towards period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [24]

If order placing attorney on inactive enrollment was predicated solely on hearing department's disbarment recommendation, which was later superseded by review department's recommendation of suspension, parties could stipulate, pursuant to rule 799 of the Rules of Procedure, to permit attorney's retransfer to active status pending the finality of disciplinary proceedings. Attorney also retained option of stipulating to continued inactive enrollment, in which case review department recommended that such inactive enrollment be credited toward period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [25]

1500 Substantive Issues in Conviction Matters

1510 Nature of Underlying Conviction

1511 Driving Under the Influence

Misdemeanor convictions for driving under the influence do not establish moral turpitude per se, but may involve moral turpitude depending on the surrounding circumstances. Where respondent repeatedly attempted to leverage his position as a criminal prosecutor to avoid arrest; lied to arresting officers about his alcohol consumption and the conditions of his suspended driver's license; committed two drunk driving offenses while on probation for an earlier drunk driving conviction; and broke his promise, during his consideration for admission to the State Bar, that he would not drink and drive again, his conduct showed lack of respect for the integrity of the legal system and the profession, contempt for the law, and disregard for public safety, and thus involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [3 a-c]

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

A reinstatement petitioner's recent conviction for driving under the influence did not, by itself, establish a lack of either rehabilitation or present moral fitness, where the conviction was an isolated, uncharacteristic and aberrational incident; the petitioner did not have a chemical dependency problem; the petitioner had taken steps to prevent any further occurrence; and the conviction was petitioner's first DUI offense, was unrelated to the practice of law, and was unrelated to the misconduct which led to petitioner's resignation. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [15]

The general policy of the State Bar is not to refer a first offense misdemeanor drunk driving conviction to the Supreme Court for discipline. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [3]

Although drunk driving is a serious societal problem, it may or may not become a matter subject to professional discipline. Where an interim suspension order would impose a degree of discipline far more severe than the probable final discipline, the range of final discipline is dispositive of the good cause requirement for vacating the order. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [6]

Whether good cause exists for vacating or not imposing an interim suspension order depends on the facts that are not genuinely in dispute in each case. Good cause existed for vacating an interim suspension order following a felony drunk driving conviction where respondent had practiced law for 22 years with no prior disciplinary record; respondent had been convicted of drunk driving twice; respondent's conviction involved serious injury to another person, but did not involve violent behavior, clients, or the practice of law; where the final disciplinary order was likely to impose a sanction far less severe than would result from the interim suspension order; and where there was no indication of any adverse effect of the misconduct on respondent's practice, of any violation of respondent's criminal sentence, or of any particular danger to respondent's clients. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [10]

Convictions combining concealed firearms and driving offenses can result in lawyer discipline. However, no moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline occurred where respondent's conviction for driving under the influence and fighting in public, under circumstances involving a concealed weapon, was found by the hearing judge to have been a singular instance, and did not involve disrespect for the law, dangerous or violent criminal behavior, or an alcohol dependency problem, and respondent's possession of the weapon was understandable because of recent threats to his life. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [2]

The California Supreme Court has classified driving under the influence of alcohol as a crime which may or may not involve moral turpitude, and which may, at least under certain circumstances, result in professional discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [1]

The general policy of the State Bar is not to refer an attorney for a State Bar disciplinary hearing following the attorney's first misdemeanor conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol. First offense convictions are automatically referred when they involve a felony and may be referred if aggravating circumstances are apparent from the record of a misdemeanor conviction. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [5]

Where respondent clearly was on notice that drinking and driving could result in criminal penalties, and it was established law that any vehicular homicide or felony conviction resulting from drunk driving could result in professional discipline, respondent apparently had sufficient notice that criminal behavior of driving under the influence could, depending on circumstances, result in professional discipline. However, review department declined to decide notice issue where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed on another ground. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [8]

Under both ABA model ethics rules and California law, lawyers convicted simply of a single misdemeanor offense of driving under the influence may receive a disciplinary reprimand, but for the most part are treated like under citizens and sanctioned under the criminal law. Their suitability to practice law is called into question, however, where the incident is compounded by serious injury or death or is coupled with other aggravating behavior. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [10]

Although drunk drivers pose a extreme danger to society, the Supreme Court has held that an attorney's conviction for drunk driving does not per se establish moral turpitude, even when the attorney has prior convictions for that offense. The Court has also determined that the more serious crime of gross vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated does not per se involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [1]

In order to determine that a crime involved moral turpitude, specific resulting harm need not be shown. Conduct which poses a danger to the public, such as drunk driving, is no less serious because it did not result in death or injury. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [5]

In analyzing whether a conviction for drunk driving involves moral turpitude, such factors as a prior conviction for drunk driving, a violation of criminal probation, and a high blood alcohol level have been held insufficient to warrant a moral turpitude finding. Where respondent had several drunk driving convictions and was aware of the problems of drunk driving due to past prosecutorial experience, and where the circumstances of respondent's crimes involved threats to peace and safety and confrontations with law enforcement officers, respondent's misconduct approached but did not cross the moral turpitude line, but did constitute misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [6]

Where respondent's drunk driving convictions involved more serious misconduct than in prior reported disciplinary cases involving drunk driving, including repeated abusive conduct with law enforcement officers, and respondent had two prior disciplinary reprovals, but respondent presented favorable evidence of professional ability and character references as well as efforts toward overcoming his addiction to alcohol, a 60-day actual suspension was appropriate to serve the aims of attorney discipline and, coupled with three years of probation, to assist in convincing respondent to deal with his alcohol abuse problems seriously. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [7]

A literal application of standard 1.7(b) would call for disbarment of any attorney who is found culpable in a third disciplinary proceeding, unless compelling mitigating circumstances predominate. However, this standard must be applied in light of the nature and extent of the prior record. Where respondent's prior record of two reprovals involved inattention to the needs of clients, misconduct of a different nature than the drunk driving convictions involved in respondent's third proceeding, respondent's prior disciplinary record did not warrant disbarment, but did constitute a proper aggravating factor. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [8]

A conviction for driving under the influence is not professional misconduct on its face; whether such a conviction involves misconduct warranting discipline depends on consideration of all the facts and circumstances. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [1]

Respondent's conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs did not involve moral turpitude, where the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction demonstrated that respondent ingested legal medications that he did not know, nor reasonably should have known, would impair his driving ability, and thereafter unexpectedly drove his car. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [4]

Although the circumstances of an attorney's ingestion of medications may not be a defense to the criminal charge of driving under the influence, they are relevant to whether professional discipline is necessary for the protection of the public, courts and legal profession. Where those circumstances demonstrated that the attorney ingested legal medications that he did not know, nor reasonably should have known, would impair his driving ability and thereafter unexpectedly drove his car, they did not indicate that the attorney's criminal violation demeaned the integrity of the legal profession or constituted a breach of the attorney's responsibility to society, other than any criminal violation would. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [5]

An attorney's conviction is conclusive proof, for disciplinary purposes, that the attorney committed the crime for which the attorney was convicted. However, California's driving under the influence laws do not prohibit drinking or ingestion of drugs and driving. Rather, they prohibit driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and/or driving with a specified blood alcohol content. Thus, the mere fact that an attorney ingested legal medications and then drove a vehicle did not indicate that the attorney's conduct demeaned the integrity of the profession or constituted a breach of the attorney's responsibility to society. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [6]

The question whether criminal conduct involved moral turpitude is one of law ultimately for the Supreme Court to decide, based on all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. Moral turpitude may be found in a driving under the influence matter depending on possible aggravating factors. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [2]

1512 Non-Violent Theft Crimes (Fraud, Embezzlement, etc.)

In order to warrant classification as a crime inherently involving moral turpitude, the least adjudicated elements of the crime must, as a matter of law, constitute moral turpitude no matter how the crime was committed. Given that either reckless disregard or knowledge of intent of another to commit insurance fraud is an element of respondent's violation of Penal Code section 549, this offense does not inherently involve moral turpitude, but rather is an offense for which there is probable cause to believe involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [2]

An attorney's conviction of a crime pursuant to a plea of nolo contendere is conclusive proof that the attorney committed all acts necessary to constitute the offense. Thus, respondent's convictions on two counts of violating Penal Code section 549 based on respondent's recklessness and not his actual knowledge conclusively establish that he acted in reckless disregard of the unlawful intentions of others. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [5]

The facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's scheme to defraud the government presented clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude where respondent misappropriated his clients' identities, authorized the forgery of clients' signatures, and conspired to use his trust account as a subterfuge to avoid paying income taxes due on legal fees and to fund a massive capping and fee splitting scheme for the principal purpose of enriching himself, his cousin, and his nonattorney office manager. However else moral turpitude may be defined, it most certainly includes these deceitful acts by respondent for his personal gain.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [1]

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [1 a-c]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [2]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

The only prerequisite to initiating a conviction referral proceeding against an attorney in the State Bar Court is a guilty plea by the attorney or a guilty verdict rendered against the attorney. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [1]

Unless the most compelling of mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, disbarment is the appropriate discipline in cases involving convictions of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. The nature and extent of respondent's felony conviction of conspiracy to commit theft and theft, alone, established his unfitness to practice law. Likewise, the facts and circumstances surrounding his crimes, the numerous aggravating circumstances, and the lack of any substantial mitigating circumstance further convinced the review department that respondent remained unfit to practice unless and until he established by clear and convincing evidence in a reinstatement proceeding that he was rehabilitated. Accordingly, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [13]

Respondent's conviction of grand theft and forgery was conclusive evidence of his guilt of all elements of those crimes. The grand theft conviction necessarily carried with it the specific intent to deprive the victim permanently of his funds. The forgery conviction necessarily showed that respondent acted without authority and with an intent to defraud. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [3]

Convictions of grand theft and forgery would have resulted in recommendation of summary disbarment if crimes had occurred in practice of law or a client was a victim. Where respondent's crimes did not occur in practice of law or victimize a client, case was not eligible for summary disbarment, and respondent was entitled to hearing on appropriate degree of discipline. Nevertheless, opportunity for hearing was not designed to lower professional standards. Respondent's crimes constituted heinous misconduct for an attorney. Where such crimes were of great magnitude, and were related to the very types of matters in which attorneys frequently act, such as ensuring validity of documents requiring notarial services, respondent's crimes were of such a serious nature that by themselves, they would warrant disbarment. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [4]

Disbarment was warranted for convictions of grand theft and forgery unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Despite hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's crimes were aberrant and brought on by incredible psychological stress due to marital and business problems, review department did not agree that mitigation was compelling. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [5]

Respondent's lack of a prior record of discipline in 14 years of practice was entitled to mitigating weight but did not of itself prove that disbarment was excessive for convictions of grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [6]

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

Not all instances of serious professional misconduct warrant disbarment, depending on mitigating circumstances. Theft crimes unrelated to the practice of law have resulted in less than disbarment. However, where respondent's offenses of grand theft and forgery were extremely grave and multiple examples of felonious and fraudulent misconduct, likely to impugn public confidence in the legal profession, and respondent's experience in sophisticated law practice, public office and private business should have dissuaded him from committing felonies, review department recommended disbarment notwithstanding respondent's evidence of stress caused by personal and financial problems. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [11]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

Where respondent, while acting as the executor of a deceased client's estate, embezzled more than $500,000 from such estate, the magnitude of the theft would result in disbarment regardless of alleged mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [4]

Where respondent committed grand theft by embezzlement, the felony conviction papers demonstrated that an element of respondent's offense was the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [5]

Where respondent embezzled funds from a deceased former client's estate while serving as the estate's executor, but not its attorney, neither the estate nor the beneficiaries of the estate were respondent's clients, nor did respondent commit the offense in the practice of law. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [6]

By statute, summary disbarment is available only for a narrow range of grievous misconduct. Grand theft by an attorney in the capacity of executor of an estate, though egregious, does not come within the statutory definition of an offense justifying summary disbarment unless it was committed in the practice of law or in such a manner that a client was a victim. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [7]

The statutory requirement for summary disbarment that an attorney's crime be committed in such a manner that a client was a victim is met even when the victimization occurred outside the practice of law, and may apply even when the victim was a former or deceased client. Where an attorney is appointed under a former client's will as executor of the client's probate estate, and is convicted of grand theft by embezzlement from the estate, there is such a clear nexus between the crime and the trust and confidence of the client that was violated that the client-as-victim requirement for summary disbarment is satisfied. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [8]

The Legislature has determined that public protection and integrity and confidence in the State Bar warrant interim suspension of attorneys convicted of misdemeanors only where there is probable cause to believe that the misdemeanor involves moral turpitude per se, and even in such cases good cause may justify not imposing interim suspension, as in the case of shoplifting. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [9]

Where respondent, who had pleaded guilty to welfare fraud based on eligibility statements signed by him but filled out by his wife, attempted to establish in mitigation that he did not know of his wife's fraudulent conduct, it was respondent's burden to prove such mitigation, and review department gave great weight to hearing judge's contrary finding based on evaluation of credibility of respondent and his wife. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [2]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty plea to a crime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

It was not mitigating that when respondent signed a declaration that the information on welfare eligibility forms was true, the forms were actually still blank, and untrue information was filled in thereafter by respondent's wife. An unqualified statement of that which one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which one knows to be false. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [8]

Where an attorney's prior discipline involved culpability of moral turpitude for attempted receipt of stolen property, and the attorney's subsequent misconduct involved moral turpitude in misleading applications for employment, there was no pattern or common thread linking the former misconduct with the later case. However, the attorney's multiple breaches of ethical duties demonstrated that the attorney lacked a true understanding of professional responsibilities. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [11]

Mail fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1341) is a crime involving moral turpitude, for which interim suspension is ordered following an attorney's conviction. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [1]

A conviction for mail fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1341) involves intentional fraud within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [4]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1513 Violent Crimes

Under California case law interpreting the California Supreme Court's inherent authority, professional discipline can be imposed based on a criminal conviction for violent behavior not involving moral turpitude, wilful failure to file a tax return, or repeated minor violations evincing indifference to legal obligations. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [9]

1513.10 Homicide, Assault, Battery, and Related Crimes

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

Although agreeable demeanor is not a recognized factor in mitigation, where respondent committed a violent crime, the hearing judge's finding that respondent had an agreeable demeanor and was not violent or aggressive, was a factor to consider in determining the degree of discipline because it was relevant to his potential capacity for future violence. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [2]

To the extent that the reduction of an attorney's felony conviction to a misdemeanor was an indication of the criminal court's view of the seriousness of the criminal conduct, the evidence was relevant to the issue of the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [3]

The lack of client harm is a relevant mitigating circumstance in the context of a criminal conviction. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [4]

As part of his plea in the criminal case, respondent admitted that he caused great bodily injury to another person. Thus, the crime for which respondent was convicted necessarily involved severe injury and it would be duplicative to consider harm to the victim as a separate aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [5]

Although the record indicated that respondent was not likely to commit similar misconduct in the future, the discipline system also has a responsibility to preserve the integrity of the legal profession. That concern persuaded the review department that public discipline, including a period of suspension, was warranted for an attorney's conviction of assault with a firearm, with the enhancement that he discharged a firearm at an occupied motor vehicle which caused great bodily injury to the person of another. However, given the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that respondent had already been interimly suspended for ten and one-half months as the result of his conviction, and comparable case law, the review department did not believe that a period of prospective actual suspension was necessary. Accordingly, it recommended a period of stayed suspension along with a period of probation with conditions. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [6]

Conviction of violation of criminal statute is conclusive evidence of guilt of elements of that crime. Where respondent was convicted of battery on a police officer engaged in performance of official duties, and such officer's use of excessive force would have required finding that officer was not engaged in performance of official duties, respondent's conviction precluded State Bar Court from considering his claim that police initiated altercation or used excessive force in incident leading to respondent's conviction. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [8]

Where respondent, an experienced family law attorney, drank a strong alcoholic beverage prior to visiting with his young child, and then trespassed on his estranged wife's apartment; intimidated her when she requested that he leave; engaged in an altercation with police who attempted to escort him out of the apartment, and was hostile and used racial epithets to police when being taken away under arrest, respondent's conduct surrounding his criminal conviction for battery on a police officer did not involve moral turpitude but did involve misconduct warranting discipline. Given respondent's experience, he should have attempted to defuse a risky domestic incident; instead, he created one with a serious risk of harm. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [9]

Disciplinary conviction referral cases in which assaultive behavior was the principal offense have generally resulted in suspension of varying degrees. In matter arising from misdemeanor conviction for battery on police officer, it was an aggravating circumstance that respondent provoked a dangerous and risky confrontation with police responding to his own domestic disturbance notwithstanding respondent's significant experience as a practicing lawyer in handling family law matters. Where this and other aggravating circumstances clearly outweighed mitigating ones, discipline of two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and 60 days actual suspension was abundantly fair and warranted. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [10]

Respondent's conviction of assault conclusively established that he did not act in self-defense, i.e., that he did not have an honest and reasonable belief that he was about to suffer bodily injury. Hearing judge could not reach conclusions, even based on credible evidence, that were inconsistent with such conclusive effect. Thus, where hearing judge found that respondent honestly believed he was about to be assaulted, review department rejected any finding that such belief was reasonable as being inconsistent with the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [2]

An attorney's conviction for assault with a firearm is conclusive proof that the attorney committed the elements for that crime, i. e., that a person was assaulted and that the assault was committed with a firearm. An assault is defined as an unlawful attempt to apply physical force upon the person of another at a time when the accused had the present ability to apply such physical force. An attempt to apply physical force is not unlawful when done in lawful self-defense. An attorney's conviction of this crime therefore conclusively established that the attorney unlawfully attempted to apply physical force upon the victim. As the assault was by definition unlawful, the review department concluded that it was not done in self-defense. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [7]

The crime of assault with a firearm does not in and of itself constitute a crime of moral turpitude for attorney discipline purposes. If moral turpitude exists for this crime, it must be based on the particular circumstances surrounding the conviction. Criminal convictions have been determined to involve moral turpitude where the surrounding circumstances indicate a flagrant disregard for human life. However, where respondent's crime occurred while he had an honest belief that he had been shot or shot at and was in immediate danger of being shot at again; respondent considered his escape options before using his firearm, and fired only once as safely as he could from a moving vehicle; and there was no evidence that respondent intended to injure the victim, the review department concluded that respondent's conviction did not demonstrate moral turpitude or render respondent unfit to practice law. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [8]

Violent criminal behavior that does not rise to the level of moral turpitude may result in the imposition of discipline under both California case law and the ABA model ethics rules. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [11]

Where the circumstances of respondent's conviction for assault with a firearm indicated that respondent engaged in a confrontation on a crowded freeway with another motorist which put innocent third parties at great risk and ultimately resulted in serious injury, the acts which were conclusively established by respondent's conviction, and the circumstances surrounding the conviction, including respondent's status as a trained and experienced reserve law enforcement officer, demonstrated a reckless disregard for the safety of others and therefore involved other misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [12]

Respondent's conviction for exhibiting a replica of a firearm in a threatening manner to cause reasonable fear or apprehension of harm conclusively established that respondent's acts were done in a threatening manner so as to cause a reasonable person apprehension or fear of bodily harm. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [7]

Where, in brandishing replica firearm so as to cause reasonable fear of harm, respondent did not act out of uncontrollable anger or other disabling disorder; had the time and opportunity to ponder his acts beforehand; repeated his outrageous conduct after additional time for reconsideration; put innocent bystanders in fear for their safety and well-being; responded inappropriately to a dispute easily and routinely settled through normal legal processes; and did not act due to any abuse of alcohol, review department agreed with hearing referee's conclusion that the circumstances surrounding respondent's criminal offenses involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [12]

In determining whether respondent's criminal convictions for exhibiting a replica firearm in a threatening manner involved moral turpitude, it was of no consequence that no one was physically injured by respondent's acts. The acts were intended to be, and were, perceived to be life-threatening, and could have provoked heart attacks or an armed response, thus demonstrating a flagrant disregard toward human life. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [13]

Any determination of moral turpitude in an offense not inherently involving moral turpitude is fact-sensitive. Serious assaultive conduct has sometimes been found not to involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [14]

1513.20 Robbery, Burglary, and Related Crimes

1513.90 Other Violent Crimes

Convictions combining concealed firearms and driving offenses can result in lawyer discipline. However, no moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline occurred where respondent's conviction for driving under the influence and fighting in public, under circumstances involving a concealed weapon, was found by the hearing judge to have been a singular instance, and did not involve disrespect for the law, dangerous or violent criminal behavior, or an alcohol dependency problem, and respondent's possession of the weapon was understandable because of recent threats to his life. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [2]

1514 Sex Offenses

1514.10 Sexual Assault, Rape, and Related Crimes

1514.20 Sexual Conduct with Minors

Case law indicates a wide range of available discipline for cases involving sexual conduct toward children depending on the circumstances. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [8]

1514.30 Non-Violent Misdemeanor Sex Offenses

Criminal conduct not related to the practice of law and not committed against a client reveals moral turpitude if it shows a deficiency in character traits necessary for the practice of law, or involves such a serious breach of duty or such flagrant disrespect for law and societal norms as to be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent was convicted of a misdemeanor for repeatedly placing video cameras in restaurant bathrooms to obtain secret recordings to view for sexual gratification, conviction was conclusive proof that respondent acted with intent to invade the privacy of restaurant patrons, and respondent's crime involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [1 a–c]

Misdemeanor convictions of sex offenses which are not serious and are unrelated to the practice of law have generally resulted in only private reproval absent aggravating factors. Where respondent was convicted of such a misdemeanor, disbarment would have been manifestly disproportionate to his cumulative misconduct, notwithstanding his record of two prior private reprovals. Respondent's misconduct was less serious than wilful failure to file tax returns or driving under the influence, and did not warrant the same degree of discipline. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [1]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor sex offense not involving moral turpitude and not related to practice of law, respondent's record of two prior private reprovals made it appropriate to impose public reproval rather than private reproval that would otherwise have been warranted, but due to lack of common thread among matters and their collective lack of severity, it would have been manifestly unjust to recommend suspension. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [5]

1514.90 Other Sex Offenses

1515 Drug-Related Crimes

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

It is appropriate for disciplinary purposes to consider any criminal charges that were dismissed as well as the charges for which the attorney was actually convicted. Thus, where the criminal complaint in a Vehicle Code violation matter charged respondent with being under the influence of phencyclidine, and clear and convincing evidence was presented establishing that respondent was under the influence of phencyclidine, that circumstance could be considered in the disciplinary proceeding even though respondent was not convicted of being under the influence of phencyclidine. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [7]

A conviction of being under the influence of phencyclidine did not per se establish moral turpitude and the review department concluded that the sparse facts presented regarding the surrounding circumstances did not establish moral turpitude. No actual harm occurred to anyone and insufficient facts were presented to conclude that respondent's violation of his prior criminal probation was in either subjective or objective bad faith. However, the conviction did involve other misconduct warranting discipline, because respondent's failure to conform his conduct to the requirements of the criminal law and the court orders imposed on him in connection with his criminal probation called into question his integrity as an officer of the court and his fitness to represent clients and thereby established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In addition, respondent's conviction of a total of four substance abuse offenses within a relatively short period of time indicated a problem with substance abuse that was clearly affecting respondent's private life, which also established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [8]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Where an attorney previously involved in serious drug abuse had ceased such abuse unilaterally and did not present any expert evidence of current freedom from substance abuse, and the attorney did not submit any evidence of present learning and ability in the law following an interim suspension the length of which exceeded the attorney's prior period of licensure, public protection would be served by continuing the attorney's actual suspension until the attorney established freedom from drug dependency and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [4]

No Supreme Court opinion has determined that a conviction of possession of marijuana for sale is one that inherently involves moral turpitude; hearing judge's conclusion that such a conviction did inherently involve moral turpitude was in error. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [3]

The commercial or distribution aspect of respondent's crime was conclusively established by his conviction of possession of marijuana for sale. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [4]

In matter arising from conviction of possession of marijuana for sale, respondent's role as a principal, his motive of potential financial gain and his awareness of the illegality of his actions demonstrated that moral turpitude was involved in the circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [5]

Other than one disbarment in a matter involving additional very serious misconduct, marijuana distribution convictions of attorneys have resulted in suspension ranging from no actual suspension to three years stayed suspension and two years actual suspension. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [13]

1516 Violation of Tax Laws

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

The facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's scheme to defraud the government presented clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude where respondent misappropriated his clients' identities, authorized the forgery of clients' signatures, and conspired to use his trust account as a subterfuge to avoid paying income taxes due on legal fees and to fund a massive capping and fee splitting scheme for the principal purpose of enriching himself, his cousin, and his nonattorney office manager. However else moral turpitude may be defined, it most certainly includes these deceitful acts by respondent for his personal gain.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [1]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

For State Bar purposes, the crime of conspiracy to impair the collection of federal income taxes (18 U.S.C. § 371) may or may not involve moral turpitude, depending on the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [1]

An act of moral turpitude is an act contrary to honesty and good morals. Respondent's conviction for conspiracy to impair the collection of federal income taxes (18 U.S.C. § 371) involved acts of moral turpitude where he concealed the true ownership of property in order to prevent its forfeiture because of illegal drug trading, concealed a former client's history of drug charges when bringing the former client into a real estate venture with another partner, used a real estate venture to launder cash which he knew came from illegal drug sales, several times hid cash from illegal drug sales for the former client, made intentional misrepresentations which he knew could endanger the lives of others, and made a loan to the former client to help finance the former client's illegal drug trade. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [3]

Disbarments, and not suspensions, have been the rule rather than the exception in cases of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. Although respondent presented substantial mitigation, it was not compelling in light of respondent's extremely serious misconduct over a several-year period. The protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards by attorneys; and the preservation of public confidence in the legal profession necessitated disbarment for respondent's extensive participation in criminal activities involving repeated acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [9]

Under California case law interpreting the California Supreme Court's inherent authority, professional discipline can be imposed based on a criminal conviction for violent behavior not involving moral turpitude, wilful failure to file a tax return, or repeated minor violations evincing indifference to legal obligations. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [9]

The wilful failure to file income tax returns alone does not involve moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [8]

Disbarment would be excessive in case arising out of criminal conviction for filing false federal income tax return, even though offense involved moral turpitude, based on comparable Supreme Court cases and given respondent's compelling showing of mitigation, including absence of any prior or subsequent misconduct; extreme emotional difficulties arising from an amputation; respondent's acknowledgment of his misconduct and his candor and cooperation with the State Bar; a persuasive showing of respondent's good character and high esteem in the community; family problems existing at the time of the misconduct; and the fact that the misconduct did not involve the practice of law. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [8]

1517 Violation of Regulatory Laws

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[1 a-c]

Where respondent was convicted of carrying a loaded firearm in a vehicle in a city, and respondent had an expired concealed weapons permit which he had intended to renew, and was carrying the gun due to a reasonable belief that he and his family were in danger from a person who had made death threats against him, respondent's conviction involved neither moral turpitude nor misconduct constituting a basis for the imposition of professional discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

Based on surrounding circumstances and on subsequent federal appellate decisions holding that conduct for which respondent was convicted is not a crime, referee properly determined that respondent's convictions for violating federal currency transaction reporting laws did not involve moral turpitude or other conduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2]

1518 Administration of Justice Offenses (contempt, perjury, etc.)

Respondent's conviction for a crime involving conspiracy to obstruct justice was a serious offense involving moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [1]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

Forgery is by definition a crime of moral turpitude. Under Supreme Court case law, disbarment is the rule rather than the exception for this serious crime. Forgery of a court document involves fraud on the court, which is particularly egregious. Accordingly, where respondent was convicted of such crime, respondent would have faced disbarment even if granted a hearing on the issue of appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [6]

It was not mitigating that when respondent signed a declaration that the information on welfare eligibility forms was true, the forms were actually still blank, and untrue information was filled in thereafter by respondent's wife. An unqualified statement of that which one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which one knows to be false. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [8]

Where probation conditions required that respondent abstain from intoxicants and non-prescribed drugs, and respondent stated under penalty of perjury that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions, then even if State Bar proved respondent had consumed alcohol, respondent could have avoided perjury conviction by contending he did not consider abstinence condition to be valid, legally reasonable, and/or enforceable. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [5]

Where respondent was convicted of a felony for harboring respondent's client while the client was a fugitive, even thought respondent was well-motivated, did not act for personal gain and committed no perjurious act, respondent's conviction was a serious matter, and involved acting with conscious disregard of an attorney's obligation to uphold the law. Thus, even though respondent's conduct was aberrational, respondent posed no current risk to the public, the legal profession or the courts, and respondent presented compelling mitigating evidence, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of stayed suspension and one year of probation, was appropriate to preserve the integrity of the legal profession and enforce high professional standards. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1]

Where Supreme Court directed State Bar Court only to hear evidence on appropriate level of discipline, hearing referee correctly ruled that Supreme Court had already established nature of respondent's criminal offense as one inherently involving moral turpitude, and Supreme Court's classification of offense of harboring a fugitive as one involving moral turpitude per se was final and binding on the State Bar Court. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [5]

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to commit the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had acted in what he believed to be the best interests of both his client and the criminal justice system, his good motives were not a defense to his breach of duty, but did constitute a strong factor in mitigation. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [16]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

Where relevant facts and circumstances surrounding perjury conviction were serious, and respondent had not yet demonstrated sufficient rehabilitation, but in light of mitigation and circumstances as a whole disbarment was not necessary, lengthy actual suspension, including some prospective suspension, and standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement were appropriate discipline. However, review department reduced length of recommended prospective suspension to reflect time expired since issuance of hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [12]

The mere fact that an attorney has been held in contempt of court is not grounds for discipline. The State Bar must establish that the contempt resulted from bad faith noncompliance with a court order, or that the underlying facts present other independent grounds for discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [4]

Depending upon the circumstances, a finding of contempt against an attorney may result in no discipline at all or substantial discipline. In the Matter of Farrell (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 490. [18]

1519 Other Crimes

Criminal conduct not related to the practice of law and not committed against a client reveals moral turpitude if it shows a deficiency in character traits necessary for the practice of law, or involves such a serious breach of duty or such flagrant disrespect for law and societal norms as to be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent was convicted of a misdemeanor for repeatedly placing video cameras in restaurant bathrooms to obtain secret recordings to view for sexual gratification, conviction was conclusive proof that respondent acted with intent to invade the privacy of restaurant patrons, and respondent's crime involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [1 a–c]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor child endangerment for leaving his nine-month-old daughter alone in hotel room for 40 minutes, fact of conviction established respondent's guilt of all elements of crime, but hearing was required to determine whether facts and circumstances involved moral turpi tude. Where State Bar failed to introduce clear and convincing evidence that respondent lied to police, no moral turpitude was established. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [1 a-c]

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [1 a-c]

Respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014) involved moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [2]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

Forgery is by definition a crime of moral turpitude. Under Supreme Court case law, disbarment is the rule rather than the exception for this serious crime. Forgery of a court document involves fraud on the court, which is particularly egregious. Accordingly, where respondent was convicted of such crime, respondent would have faced disbarment even if granted a hearing on the issue of appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [6]

Respondent's conviction of grand theft and forgery was conclusive evidence of his guilt of all elements of those crimes. The grand theft conviction necessarily carried with it the specific intent to deprive the victim permanently of his funds. The forgery conviction necessarily showed that respondent acted without authority and with an intent to defraud. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [3]

Convictions of grand theft and forgery would have resulted in recommendation of summary disbarment if crimes had occurred in practice of law or a client was a victim. Where respondent's crimes did not occur in practice of law or victimize a client, case was not eligible for summary disbarment, and respondent was entitled to hearing on appropriate degree of discipline. Nevertheless, opportunity for hearing was not designed to lower professional standards. Respondent's crimes constituted heinous misconduct for an attorney. Where such crimes were of great magnitude, and were related to the very types of matters in which attorneys frequently act, such as ensuring validity of documents requiring notarial services, respondent's crimes were of such a serious nature that by themselves, they would warrant disbarment. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [4]

Disbarment was warranted for convictions of grand theft and forgery unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Despite hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's crimes were aberrant and brought on by incredible psychological stress due to marital and business problems, review department did not agree that mitigation was compelling. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [5]

Respondent's lack of a prior record of discipline in 14 years of practice was entitled to mitigating weight but did not of itself prove that disbarment was excessive for convictions of grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [6]

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

Not all instances of serious professional misconduct warrant disbarment, depending on mitigating circumstances. Theft crimes unrelated to the practice of law have resulted in less than disbarment. However, where respondent's offenses of grand theft and forgery were extremely grave and multiple examples of felonious and fraudulent misconduct, likely to impugn public confidence in the legal profession, and respondent's experience in sophisticated law practice, public office and private business should have dissuaded him from committing felonies, review department recommended disbarment notwithstanding respondent's evidence of stress caused by personal and financial problems. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [11]

Convictions combining concealed firearms and driving offenses can result in lawyer discipline. However, no moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline occurred where respondent's conviction for driving under the influence and fighting in public, under circumstances involving a concealed weapon, was found by the hearing judge to have been a singular instance, and did not involve disrespect for the law, dangerous or violent criminal behavior, or an alcohol dependency problem, and respondent's possession of the weapon was understandable because of recent threats to his life. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [2]

Under California case law interpreting the California Supreme Court's inherent authority, professional discipline can be imposed based on a criminal conviction for violent behavior not involving moral turpitude, wilful failure to file a tax return, or repeated minor violations evincing indifference to legal obligations. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [9]

An attorney's convictions of several Vehicle Code violations relating to driving a vehicle without a valid license did not per se establish moral turpitude and the review department concluded that the surrounding circumstances did not establish moral turpitude. Although the convictions involved driving, and the potential for harm was significant given the attorney's operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated, no actual harm had occurred, and the paucity of facts presented did not permit the review department to conclude that moral turpitude was involved. Furthermore, insufficient facts were presented to conclude that the attorney's violation of his prior criminal probation orders was in either subjective or objective bad faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [5]

Convictions of several Vehicle Code violations relating to driving a vehicle without a valid license, though not involving moral turpitude, did involve other misconduct warranting discipline. The respondent's failure to conform his conduct to the requirements of the criminal law and of the court orders imposed on him in connection with his previous criminal probation called into question his integrity as an officer of the court and his fitness to represent clients and thereby established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. Moreover, respondent's conviction of two substance abuse related crimes within a relatively short period of time of his arrest for the Vehicle Code violations indicated a problem with substance abuse that was clearly affecting the attorney's private life, which also established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [6]

It is appropriate for disciplinary purposes to consider any criminal charges that were dismissed as well as the charges for which the attorney was actually convicted. Thus, where the criminal complaint in a Vehicle Code violation matter charged respondent with being under the influence of phencyclidine, and clear and convincing evidence was presented establishing that respondent was under the influence of phencyclidine, that circumstance could be considered in the disciplinary proceeding even though respondent was not convicted of being under the influence of phencyclidine. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [7]

1520 Moral Turpitude

1521 Found to Exist Per Se

Respondent's conviction for a crime involving conspiracy to obstruct justice was a serious offense involving moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189. [1]

In order to warrant classification as a crime inherently involving moral turpitude, the least adjudicated elements of the crime must, as a matter of law, constitute moral turpitude no matter how the crime was committed. Given that either reckless disregard or knowledge of intent of another to commit insurance fraud is an element of respondent's violation of Penal Code section 549, this offense does not inherently involve moral turpitude, but rather is an offense for which there is probable cause to believe involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [2]

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51. [1 a-c]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [2]

Respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014) involved moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [2]

Forgery is by definition a crime of moral turpitude. Under Supreme Court case law, disbarment is the rule rather than the exception for this serious crime. Forgery of a court document involves fraud on the court, which is particularly egregious. Accordingly, where respondent was convicted of such crime, respondent would have faced disbarment even if granted a hearing on the issue of appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [6]

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud arising out of a scheme to defraud an insurance company which retained the attorney to defend its insureds, disbarment would be an appropriate sanction regardless of mitigating circumstances, due to the extremely serious nature of the misconduct and its direct connection with the practice of law. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [8]

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

Where Supreme Court directed State Bar Court only to hear evidence on appropriate level of discipline, hearing referee correctly ruled that Supreme Court had already established nature of respondent's criminal offense as one inherently involving moral turpitude, and Supreme Court's classification of offense of harboring a fugitive as one involving moral turpitude per se was final and binding on the State Bar Court. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [5]

Where record established that respondent had had opportunity to be heard by Supreme Court, prior to referral to State Bar Court, on question whether respondent's criminal offense involved moral turpitude per se, respondent was not denied due process by the Supreme Court's determination of that issue. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [6]

Setting aside the interim suspension of an attorney convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude is an uncommon action and occurs only when it is in the interests of justice to do so, with due regard to maintaining the integrity of and public confidence in the profession. Where respondent successfully petitioned the Supreme Court not to place him on interim suspension, he thereby made a sufficient showing that he did not pose a threat to the public, profession or the courts by his continued practice pending final resolution of the disciplinary proceedings, and rebutted his presumptive disqualification stemming from his conviction. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [15]

Every attorney convicted of a felony or crime of moral turpitude can anticipate an order of interim suspension and attendant hardships, but hardship to the attorney's family does not outweigh the need to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the legal profession pending a full hearing on the merits. Where, due to delay in transmittal of conviction, attorney had had several months to make alternative employment arrangements, and attorney had given no details of his current income, recent earnings, or efforts to seek other employment, attorney's showing of hardship was insufficient in light of all factors to constitute good cause to vacate interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [9]

Where a criminal conviction is for a felony and involves moral turpitude per se, these are strong factors militating in favor of interim suspension since felons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude are presumptively considered unsuitable legal practitioners. Interim suspensions for such crimes have rarely been vacated, but the governing statute does permit the court to set aside orders of interim suspension based on such convictions, and it has been done on occasion. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [5]

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

1523 Found Based on Facts and Circumstances

Misdemeanor convictions for driving under the influence do not establish moral turpitude per se, but may involve moral turpitude depending on the surrounding circumstances. Where respondent repeatedly attempted to leverage his position as a criminal prosecutor to avoid arrest; lied to arresting officers about his alcohol consumption and the conditions of his suspended driver's license; committed two drunk driving offenses while on probation for an earlier drunk driving conviction; and broke his promise, during his consideration for admission to the State Bar, that he would not drink and drive again, his conduct showed lack of respect for the integrity of the legal system and the profession, contempt for the law, and disregard for public safety, and thus involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [3 a-c]

Where respondent's convictions do not involve moral turpitude per se, the circumstances surrounding respondent's convictions are reviewed to determine whether they in fact involved moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline. In reviewing the circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction, the fact finder is not restricted to examining the elements of the crime, but rather may look to the whole course of respondent's conduct which reflects upon his fitness to practice law because it is the misconduct underlying respondent's conviction, as opposed to the conviction itself, that warrants discipline. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [6]

Where respondent knew that his associate was buying cases, where respondent paid his associate for buying, referring, and working on referred cases, and where respondent split attorney's fees on the referred cases in violation of rule 1–310, the facts and circumstances of respondent's misconduct involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [8]

Where respondent entered into a business relationship with a resigned attorney without investigating him, where respondent knowingly permitted the resigned attorney to interview and sign up clients without respondent's knowledge or approval, and where respondent knowingly failed to monitor the cases the resigned attorney referred to him, such conduct establishes an habitual failure to give reasonable attention to the handling of the affairs of his clients rather than an isolated instance of carelessness followed by a firm determination to make amends. Respondent's manner and method of practicing law during his association with the resigned attorney and respondent's failure to protect himself from the actions of the resigned attorney were reckless and therefore involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [9 a, b]

Respondent's misconduct in falsely recording in his financial and bank records the nature of his payments to a resigned attorney with the specific intent to conceal his improper fee splitting with a nonattorney from, inter alia, the State Bar involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [10]

Where respondent learned that cases referred to him by a resigned attorney were based on staged accidents and thereafter failed to inform the clients in those cases that he had substantial information suggesting that the clients knowingly made a false claim based on a staged accident or give whatever legal counsel was appropriate, respondent's wholesale failure to competently represent these clients involves moral turpitude. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [11]

The facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's scheme to defraud the government presented clear and convincing evidence of moral turpitude where respondent misappropriated his clients' identities, authorized the forgery of clients' signatures, and conspired to use his trust account as a subterfuge to avoid paying income taxes due on legal fees and to fund a massive capping and fee splitting scheme for the principal purpose of enriching himself, his cousin, and his nonattorney office manager. However else moral turpitude may be defined, it most certainly includes these deceitful acts by respondent for his personal gain.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [1]

Appropriate level of discipline for respondent's misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of two clients (Ins. Code, § 750, subd. (a)), where circumstances surrounding conviction involved moral turpitude, was two-year stayed suspension with two-year period of probation and six-month period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [6 a-g]

An act of moral turpitude is an act contrary to honesty and good morals. Respondent's conviction for conspiracy to impair the collection of federal income taxes (18 U.S.C. § 371) involved acts of moral turpitude where he concealed the true ownership of property in order to prevent its forfeiture because of illegal drug trading, concealed a former client's history of drug charges when bringing the former client into a real estate venture with another partner, used a real estate venture to launder cash which he knew came from illegal drug sales, several times hid cash from illegal drug sales for the former client, made intentional misrepresentations which he knew could endanger the lives of others, and made a loan to the former client to help finance the former client's illegal drug trade. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [3]

Disbarments, and not suspensions, have been the rule rather than the exception in cases of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. Although respondent presented substantial mitigation, it was not compelling in light of respondent's extremely serious misconduct over a several-year period. The protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards by attorneys; and the preservation of public confidence in the legal profession necessitated disbarment for respondent's extensive participation in criminal activities involving repeated acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [9]

The California Supreme Court has classified driving under the influence of alcohol as a crime which may or may not involve moral turpitude, and which may, at least under certain circumstances, result in professional discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [1]

In matter arising from conviction of possession of marijuana for sale, respondent's role as a principal, his motive of potential financial gain and his awareness of the illegality of his actions demonstrated that moral turpitude was involved in the circumstances surrounding respondent's conviction. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [5]

Where facts showed respondent had sufficient time, however short, for respondent to plan criminal acts and to reflect upon them, review department concluded that respondent's criminal acts were premeditated. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [9]

Where, in brandishing replica firearm so as to cause reasonable fear of harm, respondent did not act out of uncontrollable anger or other disabling disorder; had the time and opportunity to ponder his acts beforehand; repeated his outrageous conduct after additional time for reconsideration; put innocent bystanders in fear for their safety and well-being; responded inappropriately to a dispute easily and routinely settled through normal legal processes; and did not act due to any abuse of alcohol, review department agreed with hearing referee's conclusion that the circumstances surrounding respondent's criminal offenses involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [12]

In determining whether respondent's criminal convictions for exhibiting a replica firearm in a threatening manner involved moral turpitude, it was of no consequence that no one was physically injured by respondent's acts. The acts were intended to be, and were, perceived to be life-threatening, and could have provoked heart attacks or an armed response, thus demonstrating a flagrant disregard toward human life. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [13]

Any determination of moral turpitude in an offense not inherently involving moral turpitude is fact-sensitive. Serious assaultive conduct has sometimes been found not to involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [14]

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

The question whether criminal conduct involved moral turpitude is one of law ultimately for the Supreme Court to decide, based on all of the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. Moral turpitude may be found in a driving under the influence matter depending on possible aggravating factors. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [2]

1525 Found; Basis Not Specified

Criminal conduct not related to the practice of law and not committed against a client reveals moral turpitude if it shows a deficiency in character traits necessary for the practice of law, or involves such a serious breach of duty or such flagrant disrespect for law and societal norms as to be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent was convicted of a misdemeanor for repeatedly placing video cameras in restaurant bathrooms to obtain secret recordings to view for sexual gratification, conviction was conclusive proof that respondent acted with intent to invade the privacy of restaurant patrons, and respondent's crime involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [1 a–c]

Where respondent admitted that he hid cameras in restaurant bathrooms for specific purpose of making surreptitious recordings, and that he knew at the time his actions were unethical and illegal, and where respondent's psychiatrist was unaware of respondent's prior similar conduct, had not directly observed respondent in manic state, and based his opinion solely on respondent's version of the facts, psychiatrist's opinion that respondent was not responsible for his misconduct due to bipolar disorder was contrary to evidence, and did not preclude finding that respondent's criminal conduct involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [2]

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1527 No Moral Turpitude

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor child endangerment for leaving his nine-month-old daughter alone in hotel room for 40 minutes, fact of conviction established respondent's guilt of all elements of crime, but hearing was required to determine whether facts and circumstances involved moral turpi tude. Where State Bar failed to introduce clear and convincing evidence that respondent lied to police, no moral turpitude was established. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [1 a-c]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Where respondent was convicted of carrying a loaded firearm in a vehicle in a city, and respondent had an expired concealed weapons permit which he had intended to renew, and was carrying the gun due to a reasonable belief that he and his family were in danger from a person who had made death threats against him, respondent's conviction involved neither moral turpitude nor misconduct constituting a basis for the imposition of professional discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

Where respondent, an experienced family law attorney, drank a strong alcoholic beverage prior to visiting with his young child, and then trespassed on his estranged wife's apartment; intimidated her when she requested that he leave; engaged in an altercation with police who attempted to escort him out of the apartment, and was hostile and used racial epithets to police when being taken away under arrest, respondent's conduct surrounding his criminal conviction for battery on a police officer did not involve moral turpitude but did involve misconduct warranting discipline. Given respondent's experience, he should have attempted to defuse a risky domestic incident; instead, he created one with a serious risk of harm. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [9]

The crime of assault with a firearm does not in and of itself constitute a crime of moral turpitude for attorney discipline purposes. If moral turpitude exists for this crime, it must be based on the particular circumstances surrounding the conviction. Criminal convictions have been determined to involve moral turpitude where the surrounding circumstances indicate a flagrant disregard for human life. However, where respondent's crime occurred while he had an honest belief that he had been shot or shot at and was in immediate danger of being shot at again; respondent considered his escape options before using his firearm, and fired only once as safely as he could from a moving vehicle; and there was no evidence that respondent intended to injure the victim, the review department concluded that respondent's conviction did not demonstrate moral turpitude or render respondent unfit to practice law. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [8]

Where the crime for which an attorney has been convicted does not inherently involve moral turpitude, a review of comparable case law and an examination of the particular facts and circumstances of the criminal conduct must be made in order to determine if cause for professional discipline exists. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [10]

Violent criminal behavior that does not rise to the level of moral turpitude may result in the imposition of discipline under both California case law and the ABA model ethics rules. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [11]

Convictions combining concealed firearms and driving offenses can result in lawyer discipline. However, no moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline occurred where respondent's conviction for driving under the influence and fighting in public, under circumstances involving a concealed weapon, was found by the hearing judge to have been a singular instance, and did not involve disrespect for the law, dangerous or violent criminal behavior, or an alcohol dependency problem, and respondent's possession of the weapon was understandable because of recent threats to his life. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [2]

In analyzing whether a conviction for drunk driving involves moral turpitude, such factors as a prior conviction for drunk driving, a violation of criminal probation, and a high blood alcohol level have been held insufficient to warrant a moral turpitude finding. Where respondent had several drunk driving convictions and was aware of the problems of drunk driving due to past prosecutorial experience, and where the circumstances of respondent's crimes involved threats to peace and safety and confrontations with law enforcement officers, respondent's misconduct approached but did not cross the moral turpitude line, but did constitute misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [6]

An attorney's convictions of several Vehicle Code violations relating to driving a vehicle without a valid license did not per se establish moral turpitude and the review department concluded that the surrounding circumstances did not establish moral turpitude. Although the convictions involved driving, and the potential for harm was significant given the attorney's operation of a motor vehicle while intoxicated, no actual harm had occurred, and the paucity of facts presented did not permit the review department to conclude that moral turpitude was involved. Furthermore, insufficient facts were presented to conclude that the attorney's violation of his prior criminal probation orders was in either subjective or objective bad faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [5]

A conviction of being under the influence of phencyclidine did not per se establish moral turpitude and the review department concluded that the sparse facts presented regarding the surrounding circumstances did not establish moral turpitude. No actual harm occurred to anyone and insufficient facts were presented to conclude that respondent's violation of his prior criminal probation was in either subjective or objective bad faith. However, the conviction did involve other misconduct warranting discipline, because respondent's failure to conform his conduct to the requirements of the criminal law and the court orders imposed on him in connection with his criminal probation called into question his integrity as an officer of the court and his fitness to represent clients and thereby established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In addition, respondent's conviction of a total of four substance abuse offenses within a relatively short period of time indicated a problem with substance abuse that was clearly affecting respondent's private life, which also established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [8]

Respondent's conviction for driving under the influence of alcohol and/or drugs did not involve moral turpitude, where the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction demonstrated that respondent ingested legal medications that he did not know, nor reasonably should have known, would impair his driving ability, and thereafter unexpectedly drove his car. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [4]

Based on surrounding circumstances and on subsequent federal appellate decisions holding that conduct for which respondent was convicted is not a crime, referee properly determined that respondent's convictions for violating federal currency transaction reporting laws did not involve moral turpitude or other conduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2]

The wilful failure to file income tax returns alone does not involve moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [8]

In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201.

1528 Definition

Misdemeanor convictions for driving under the influence do not establish moral turpitude per se, but may involve moral turpitude depending on the surrounding circumstances. Where respondent repeatedly attempted to leverage his position as a criminal prosecutor to avoid arrest; lied to arresting officers about his alcohol consumption and the conditions of his suspended driver's license; committed two drunk driving offenses while on probation for an earlier drunk driving conviction; and broke his promise, during his consideration for admission to the State Bar, that he would not drink and drive again, his conduct showed lack of respect for the integrity of the legal system and the profession, contempt for the law, and disregard for public safety, and thus involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [3 a-c]

Criminal conduct not related to the practice of law and not committed against a client reveals moral turpitude if it shows a deficiency in character traits necessary for the practice of law, or involves such a serious breach of duty or such flagrant disrespect for law and societal norms as to be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent was convicted of a misdemeanor for repeatedly placing video cameras in restaurant bathrooms to obtain secret recordings to view for sexual gratification, conviction was conclusive proof that respondent acted with intent to invade the privacy of restaurant patrons, and respondent's crime involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [1 a–c]

An act of moral turpitude is an act contrary to honesty and good morals. Respondent's conviction for conspiracy to impair the collection of federal income taxes (18 U.S.C. § 371) involved acts of moral turpitude where he concealed the true ownership of property in order to prevent its forfeiture because of illegal drug trading, concealed a former client's history of drug charges when bringing the former client into a real estate venture with another partner, used a real estate venture to launder cash which he knew came from illegal drug sales, several times hid cash from illegal drug sales for the former client, made intentional misrepresentations which he knew could endanger the lives of others, and made a loan to the former client to help finance the former client's illegal drug trade. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [3]

Moral turpitude has been defined in many ways, including as an act contrary to honesty and good morals. The foremost purpose of the moral turpitude standard is not to punish attorneys but to protect the public, courts, and the profession against unsuitable practitioners. Finding that an attorney's conduct involved moral turpitude characterizes the attorney as unsuitable to practice law. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [9]

Although drunk drivers pose a extreme danger to society, the Supreme Court has held that an attorney's conviction for drunk driving does not per se establish moral turpitude, even when the attorney has prior convictions for that offense. The Court has also determined that the more serious crime of gross vehicular manslaughter while intoxicated does not per se involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [1]

The determination whether the facts and circumstances of an attorney's criminal conviction involved moral turpitude is a matter of law. The concept of moral turpitude does not fit a precise definition; it is a commonsense concept, designed to protect the public. It is measured by the morals of the day and may vary according to the community or the times. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [2]

The determination of whether an attorney's conviction of certain crimes not involving moral turpitude per se should give rise to discipline, and on what basis, is not always an easy task. When the State Bar Court is asked to decide after hearing whether moral turpitude is involved in an attorney's conviction, the determination must be based on the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [3]

In order to determine that a crime involved moral turpitude, specific resulting harm need not be shown. Conduct which poses a danger to the public, such as drunk driving, is no less serious because it did not result in death or injury. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [5]

The issue of whether an offense constitutes moral turpitude per se is a matter of law to be ultimately determined by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [7]

Moral turpitude determinations are a matter of law. Moral turpitude is not a concept that fits a precise definition. The definition most often recited by the Supreme Court is "an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellowmen, or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man." The definition of moral turpitude is measured by the morals of the day, and may vary according to the community or the times. The moral turpitude prohibition is a flexible, "commonsense" standard, with its purpose not the punishment of attorneys but the protection of the public and the legal community against unsuitable practitioners. A holding that an attorney's act constitutes moral turpitude characterizes the attorney as unsuitable to practice law. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [10]

Some offenses are crimes of moral turpitude on their face, including acts universally decried as morally reprehensible or necessary involving fraudulent or dishonest acts for personal gain. Other offenses do not in and of themselves constitute crimes of moral turpitude, such as voluntary manslaughter and simple assault. The commission of such lesser offenses by an attorney in the heat of anger or as result of physical or mental infirmities does not, without more, cast discredit upon the prestige of the legal profession or interfere with the efficient administration of the law and should not be deemed to constitute moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [11]

Any determination of moral turpitude in an offense not inherently involving moral turpitude is fact-sensitive. Serious assaultive conduct has sometimes been found not to involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [14]

Supreme Court has defined moral turpitude as an act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow men or to society in general, or an act contrary to honesty and good morals. In the Matter of Nelson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 178. [1]

1530 Other Misconduct Warranting Discipline

1531 Found

Not every violation of law by an attorney merits discipline and the court must examine the facts and circumstances to decide if the attorney has committed criminal conduct that is disciplinable. An attorney's conviction for child endangerment by leaving his daughter unattended in a hotel room falls at the very low end of misconduct justifying professional discipline since it is unrelated to the practice of law but reflects poorly on the attorney's judgment and on the legal profession in general. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [4 a-c]

Although respondent's violations of rules 1–311 and 4–100(A) did not involve moral turpitude, they did constitute additional misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [12 a, b]

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

Where respondent, an experienced family law attorney, drank a strong alcoholic beverage prior to visiting with his young child, and then trespassed on his estranged wife's apartment; intimidated her when she requested that he leave; engaged in an altercation with police who attempted to escort him out of the apartment, and was hostile and used racial epithets to police when being taken away under arrest, respondent's conduct surrounding his criminal conviction for battery on a police officer did not involve moral turpitude but did involve misconduct warranting discipline. Given respondent's experience, he should have attempted to defuse a risky domestic incident; instead, he created one with a serious risk of harm. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [9]

Violent criminal behavior that does not rise to the level of moral turpitude may result in the imposition of discipline under both California case law and the ABA model ethics rules. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [11]

Where the circumstances of respondent's conviction for assault with a firearm indicated that respondent engaged in a confrontation on a crowded freeway with another motorist which put innocent third parties at great risk and ultimately resulted in serious injury, the acts which were conclusively established by respondent's conviction, and the circumstances surrounding the conviction, including respondent's status as a trained and experienced reserve law enforcement officer, demonstrated a reckless disregard for the safety of others and therefore involved other misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [12]

Under California case law interpreting the California Supreme Court's inherent authority, professional discipline can be imposed based on a criminal conviction for violent behavior not involving moral turpitude, wilful failure to file a tax return, or repeated minor violations evincing indifference to legal obligations. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [9]

Under both ABA model ethics rules and California law, lawyers convicted simply of a single misdemeanor offense of driving under the influence may receive a disciplinary reprimand, but for the most part are treated like under citizens and sanctioned under the criminal law. Their suitability to practice law is called into question, however, where the incident is compounded by serious injury or death or is coupled with other aggravating behavior. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [10]

In analyzing whether a conviction for drunk driving involves moral turpitude, such factors as a prior conviction for drunk driving, a violation of criminal probation, and a high blood alcohol level have been held insufficient to warrant a moral turpitude finding. Where respondent had several drunk driving convictions and was aware of the problems of drunk driving due to past prosecutorial experience, and where the circumstances of respondent's crimes involved threats to peace and safety and confrontations with law enforcement officers, respondent's misconduct approached but did not cross the moral turpitude line, but did constitute misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [6]

Convictions of several Vehicle Code violations relating to driving a vehicle without a valid license, though not involving moral turpitude, did involve other misconduct warranting discipline. The respondent's failure to conform his conduct to the requirements of the criminal law and of the court orders imposed on him in connection with his previous criminal probation called into question his integrity as an officer of the court and his fitness to represent clients and thereby established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. Moreover, respondent's conviction of two substance abuse related crimes within a relatively short period of time of his arrest for the Vehicle Code violations indicated a problem with substance abuse that was clearly affecting the attorney's private life, which also established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [6]

A conviction of being under the influence of phencyclidine did not per se establish moral turpitude and the review department concluded that the sparse facts presented regarding the surrounding circumstances did not establish moral turpitude. No actual harm occurred to anyone and insufficient facts were presented to conclude that respondent's violation of his prior criminal probation was in either subjective or objective bad faith. However, the conviction did involve other misconduct warranting discipline, because respondent's failure to conform his conduct to the requirements of the criminal law and the court orders imposed on him in connection with his criminal probation called into question his integrity as an officer of the court and his fitness to represent clients and thereby established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In addition, respondent's conviction of a total of four substance abuse offenses within a relatively short period of time indicated a problem with substance abuse that was clearly affecting respondent's private life, which also established a nexus between the practice of law and the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [8]

1535 Not Found

Where respondent was convicted of carrying a loaded firearm in a vehicle in a city, and respondent had an expired concealed weapons permit which he had intended to renew, and was carrying the gun due to a reasonable belief that he and his family were in danger from a person who had made death threats against him, respondent's conviction involved neither moral turpitude nor misconduct constituting a basis for the imposition of professional discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [1]

Convictions combining concealed firearms and driving offenses can result in lawyer discipline. However, no moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline occurred where respondent's conviction for driving under the influence and fighting in public, under circumstances involving a concealed weapon, was found by the hearing judge to have been a singular instance, and did not involve disrespect for the law, dangerous or violent criminal behavior, or an alcohol dependency problem, and respondent's possession of the weapon was understandable because of recent threats to his life. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [2]

In 1990, the majority of the California Supreme Court expressly declined to determine whether a nexus between criminal conduct and the practice of law is required in order to impose professional discipline based on a criminal conviction. The Court unanimously agreed, however, that it would be unreasonable to hold attorneys to such a high standard of conduct that every violation of law, however minor, would constitute a ground for professional discipline. Thus, the integrity of the profession does not require professional discipline in addition to criminal sanctions for every violation of law by an attorney. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [2]

Where respondent's two convictions for drunk driving occurred while respondent was living outside California and not practicing law, and respondent did not act violently or show disrespect for the legal system in connection with such convictions, and respondent had been rehabilitated and did not pose a danger to clients, courts or the public, respondent was not culpable of misconduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [3]

Where an attorney is convicted of a crime which does not inherently involve moral turpitude, the attorney's conviction is referred to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the crime involved moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline, and to determine the appropriate disposition. Upon a referral of that type, the appropriate disposition can include dismissal of the proceedings if the hearing judge finds that the particular misconduct did not warrant professional discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [4]

Where respondent clearly was on notice that drinking and driving could result in criminal penalties, and it was established law that any vehicular homicide or felony conviction resulting from drunk driving could result in professional discipline, respondent apparently had sufficient notice that criminal behavior of driving under the influence could, depending on circumstances, result in professional discipline. However, review department declined to decide notice issue where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed on another ground. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [8]

Under both ABA model ethics rules and California law, lawyers convicted simply of a single misdemeanor offense of driving under the influence may receive a disciplinary reprimand, but for the most part are treated like under citizens and sanctioned under the criminal law. Their suitability to practice law is called into question, however, where the incident is compounded by serious injury or death or is coupled with other aggravating behavior. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [10]

Although the circumstances of an attorney's ingestion of medications may not be a defense to the criminal charge of driving under the influence, they are relevant to whether professional discipline is necessary for the protection of the public, courts and legal profession. Where those circumstances demonstrated that the attorney ingested legal medications that he did not know, nor reasonably should have known, would impair his driving ability and thereafter unexpectedly drove his car, they did not indicate that the attorney's criminal violation demeaned the integrity of the legal profession or constituted a breach of the attorney's responsibility to society, other than any criminal violation would. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [5]

An attorney's conviction is conclusive proof, for disciplinary purposes, that the attorney committed the crime for which the attorney was convicted. However, California's driving under the influence laws do not prohibit drinking or ingestion of drugs and driving. Rather, they prohibit driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and/or driving with a specified blood alcohol content. Thus, the mere fact that an attorney ingested legal medications and then drove a vehicle did not indicate that the attorney's conduct demeaned the integrity of the profession or constituted a breach of the attorney's responsibility to society. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [6]

Professional discipline following an attorney's criminal conviction has been held to be warranted where the circumstances surrounding the attorney's criminal conduct, though not involving moral turpitude, closely paralleled the duties of a practicing attorney. Where an attorney's activities leading to the conviction were of a personal nature and not the kind of activities that an attorney would likely confront in the ordinary course of the attorney's duties, and the attorney's testimony did not give rise to doubt that the attorney's advice to clients in similar circumstances would be sound, no misconduct warranting discipline was involved in the conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [7]

A nexus between an attorney's criminal misconduct and the practice of law might have been established if the State Bar had proven that the attorney's present criminal conduct had violated the terms of the attorney's previously imposed criminal probation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [8]

A nexus between an attorney's criminal misconduct and the practice of law may be established where the circumstances surrounding the attorney's conviction indicate that the attorney has problems with alcohol abuse. However, an attorney's ingestion of normal doses of legal medications for appropriate symptoms did not demonstrate a substance abuse problem. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [9]

Based on surrounding circumstances and on subsequent federal appellate decisions holding that conduct for which respondent was convicted is not a crime, referee properly determined that respondent's convictions for violating federal currency transaction reporting laws did not involve moral turpitude or other conduct warranting discipline. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [2]

1540 Interim Suspension After Conviction

1541 Ordered

1541.10 California or federal felony

In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.

The earliest time that respondent can petition for reinstatement if he is disbarred is five years after the effective date of his interim suspension. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 662(b).) Where the order placing respondent on interim suspension provided that he had to stop providing legal services for any paying clients by one date, but could perform legal services for preexisting pro bono clients until a later date, the earlier date was the effective date of the interim suspension because by obtaining an exception for completion of the pro bono cases, respondent acted for the benefit of his pro bono clients, the courts in which their cases were pending, and the justice system, conduct which would be discouraged if he was denied credit for the entire time he was prohibited from earning his living from the practice of law by reason of the interim suspension order resulting from his felony conviction. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [2]

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729.

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473.

The existence of express statutory authority to grant exceptions to interim suspension constitutes a legislative determination that public confidence will not necessarily be undermined by vacating the interim suspension of a convicted felon. On a sufficient showing, the Supreme Court has set aside interim suspensions for crimes involving moral turpitude per se, indicating that such relief is also available for felonies which may or may not involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [7]

Where a felony could have been charged as a misdemeanor, the reduction of the felony conviction to a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings does not affect the characterization of the crime as a felony for the purpose of interim suspension, but it may be taken into account in determining whether good cause exists for vacating an interim suspension order. If the reduction were ignored, arbitrary results might follow based on the discretionary charging practices of different prosecutors. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [8]

In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608.

1541.20 Moral turpitude per se

In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.

In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729.

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473.

The Legislature has determined that public protection and integrity and confidence in the State Bar warrant interim suspension of attorneys convicted of misdemeanors only where there is probable cause to believe that the misdemeanor involves moral turpitude per se, and even in such cases good cause may justify not imposing interim suspension, as in the case of shoplifting. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [9]

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

Mail fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1341) is a crime involving moral turpitude, for which interim suspension is ordered following an attorney's conviction. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [1]

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1541.30 Moral Turpitude based on facts and circumstances

1541.90 Other

1542 Stayed

In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

1543 Vacated

In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.

Although drunk driving is a serious societal problem, it may or may not become a matter subject to professional discipline. Where an interim suspension order would impose a degree of discipline far more severe than the probable final discipline, the range of final discipline is dispositive of the good cause requirement for vacating the order. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [6]

The existence of express statutory authority to grant exceptions to interim suspension constitutes a legislative determination that public confidence will not necessarily be undermined by vacating the interim suspension of a convicted felon. On a sufficient showing, the Supreme Court has set aside interim suspensions for crimes involving moral turpitude per se, indicating that such relief is also available for felonies which may or may not involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [7]

Where a felony could have been charged as a misdemeanor, the reduction of the felony conviction to a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings does not affect the characterization of the crime as a felony for the purpose of interim suspension, but it may be taken into account in determining whether good cause exists for vacating an interim suspension order. If the reduction were ignored, arbitrary results might follow based on the discretionary charging practices of different prosecutors. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [8]

Whether good cause exists for vacating or not imposing an interim suspension order depends on the facts that are not genuinely in dispute in each case. Good cause existed for vacating an interim suspension order following a felony drunk driving conviction where respondent had practiced law for 22 years with no prior disciplinary record; respondent had been convicted of drunk driving twice; respondent's conviction involved serious injury to another person, but did not involve violent behavior, clients, or the practice of law; where the final disciplinary order was likely to impose a sanction far less severe than would result from the interim suspension order; and where there was no indication of any adverse effect of the misconduct on respondent's practice, of any violation of respondent's criminal sentence, or of any particular danger to respondent's clients. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [10]

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

1545 Not Ordered

In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543.

1549 Miscellaneous Issues re Interim Suspension

The important public interest served by the summary disbarment statute does not show that the legislature intended the statute to operate retroactively. A summary disbarment proceeding, by definition, excludes an evidentiary hearing in the State Bar Court prior to disbarment. However, pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6101, subdivision (a), upon receipt of a certified copy of the record conviction, attorneys convicted of a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude are interimly suspended from the practice of law pending final disposition of the proceeding. Thus, even if an evidentiary hearing is held, the attorney convicted of an offense that would warrant disbarment is immediately suspended from the practice of law and can remain suspended until disbarred. Accordingly, the public is promptly protected from attorneys convicted of crimes of dishonesty regardless of whether summary disbarment occurs. Moreover, the opportunity for a referral hearing is not designed to lower professional standards. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [4]

Although the record indicated that respondent was not likely to commit similar misconduct in the future, the discipline system also has a responsibility to preserve the integrity of the legal profession. That concern persuaded the review department that public discipline, including a period of suspension, was warranted for an attorney's conviction of assault with a firearm, with the enhancement that he discharged a firearm at an occupied motor vehicle which caused great bodily injury to the person of another. However, given the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that respondent had already been interimly suspended for ten and one-half months as the result of his conviction, and comparable case law, the review department did not believe that a period of prospective actual suspension was necessary. Accordingly, it recommended a period of stayed suspension along with a period of probation with conditions. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [6]

The earliest time that respondent can petition for reinstatement if he is disbarred is five years after the effective date of his interim suspension. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 662(b).) Where the order placing respondent on interim suspension provided that he had to stop providing legal services for any paying clients by one date, but could perform legal services for preexisting pro bono clients until a later date, the earlier date was the effective date of the interim suspension because by obtaining an exception for completion of the pro bono cases, respondent acted for the benefit of his pro bono clients, the courts in which their cases were pending, and the justice system, conduct which would be discouraged if he was denied credit for the entire time he was prohibited from earning his living from the practice of law by reason of the interim suspension order resulting from his felony conviction. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [2]

Where respondent misrepresented facts regarding her interim suspension to superior court; deliberately sought to mislead State Bar Court Review Department regarding facts supporting motion for modification of interim suspension order; and intentionally tried to deceive State Bar Court hearing judge regarding correctness of transcript offered as evidence by State Bar, respondent's acts of dishonesty to courts constituted aggravating circumstances surrounding her failure to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court in connection with interim suspension. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [7]

Finality of an attorney's criminal conviction is not essential for an order referring the conviction to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether there is probable cause to conclude that the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude for purposes of interim suspension of the attorney. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Normally, no published opinion results from a petition to set aside an interim suspension order based on a criminal conviction. Where final discipline had not been entered and might not be warranted, the review department could not determine whether it was appropriate to publicize respondent's name in connection with opinion and order vacating interim suspension. Opinion therefore did not name respondent, although proceeding remained public. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [1]

The Supreme Court has delegated to the State Bar Court its statutory power to place on interim suspension attorneys who have been convicted of crimes. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [2]

The purpose of interim suspension is to protect the public, courts, and legal profession until all facts relevant to a final disciplinary order are before the State Bar Court. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [4]

Interim suspension is imposed on an attorney who commits a crime of moral turpitude or a felony, unless an exception is appropriate in the interest of justice, with due regard to maintaining the integrity of, and confidence in, the legal profession. Whether interim suspension is warranted prior to a hearing on the merits of a felony conviction depends, among other things, on the nature of the crime, its relationship to the practice of law, the undisputed surrounding factual circumstances, and the likely range of final discipline. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [5]

The existence of express statutory authority to grant exceptions to interim suspension constitutes a legislative determination that public confidence will not necessarily be undermined by vacating the interim suspension of a convicted felon. On a sufficient showing, the Supreme Court has set aside interim suspensions for crimes involving moral turpitude per se, indicating that such relief is also available for felonies which may or may not involve moral turpitude. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [7]

Where a felony could have been charged as a misdemeanor, the reduction of the felony conviction to a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings does not affect the characterization of the crime as a felony for the purpose of interim suspension, but it may be taken into account in determining whether good cause exists for vacating an interim suspension order. If the reduction were ignored, arbitrary results might follow based on the discretionary charging practices of different prosecutors. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [8]

The Legislature has determined that public protection and integrity and confidence in the State Bar warrant interim suspension of attorneys convicted of misdemeanors only where there is probable cause to believe that the misdemeanor involves moral turpitude per se, and even in such cases good cause may justify not imposing interim suspension, as in the case of shoplifting. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [9]

From the point of view of a suspended attorney, the effect of a suspension is the same regardless of whether it is called interim or actual: the attorney is denied the right to practice law for the duration of the suspension. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [12]

Whether a suspension is interim or actual, the effect on the attorney is the same. The issue is what is the appropriate total length of suspension under the circumstances of each case. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

An attorney's interim suspension following a criminal conviction is not affected by the expungement of the conviction. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [1]

An attorney on interim suspension following a criminal conviction has little control over the length of such suspension prior to final resolution of the case. Where an attorney's prior actual suspension had consisted largely of time already spent on interim suspension, and such a lengthy actual suspension would not ordinarily have been imposed for the misconduct involved in the prior matter, and where imposition of an even greater actual suspension in the attorney's subsequent matter would have resulted in discipline far in excess of that warranted by the facts and comparable case law, it would not be appropriate to adhere strictly to the standard directing imposition of greater discipline for a second offense. In the Matter of Wyrick (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 83. [10]

Where respondent had been interimly suspended following a criminal conviction, and had been ordered at that time to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, the State Bar Court did not recommend that he be required to comply with rule 955 again upon his disbarment. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [10]

Setting aside the interim suspension of an attorney convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude is an uncommon action and occurs only when it is in the interests of justice to do so, with due regard to maintaining the integrity of and public confidence in the profession. Where respondent successfully petitioned the Supreme Court not to place him on interim suspension, he thereby made a sufficient showing that he did not pose a threat to the public, profession or the courts by his continued practice pending final resolution of the disciplinary proceedings, and rebutted his presumptive disqualification stemming from his conviction. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [15]

There is no statutory or case law definition for the type of showing necessary to support the setting aside of an interim suspension order of an attorney convicted of a felony or of a crime of moral turpitude. Generally, "good cause" is dependent on the particular facts of each case. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [1]

Interim suspension of an attorney following a criminal conviction is provisional and temporary, and one of its purposes is to preserve the respect and dignity of the court until a final judgment is entered. Consideration of the integrity of the legal profession has also been incorporated into the balancing test for determination of whether the interest of justice is served by setting aside an order of interim suspension. The purpose of interim suspension is to protect the public, the courts and the legal profession until all facts relevant to a final disciplinary order are before the court. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [2]

Present fitness to practice law and the concomitant question of public protection are factors to be considered in determining whether good cause exists to decline to impose an interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [3]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

Where a criminal conviction is for a felony and involves moral turpitude per se, these are strong factors militating in favor of interim suspension since felons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude are presumptively considered unsuitable legal practitioners. Interim suspensions for such crimes have rarely been vacated, but the governing statute does permit the court to set aside orders of interim suspension based on such convictions, and it has been done on occasion. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [5]

While the leniency of an attorney's criminal sentence might be relevant in assessing final discipline, punishment by the criminal court serves a fundamentally different purpose than the provisions of the State Bar Act, and leniency of the criminal sentence therefore is not relevant to the determination whether there is good cause to vacate the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [6]

Evidence of convicted attorney's efforts toward rehabilitation would be relevant at the hearing on final discipline, but could not be relied upon in proceedings seeking to vacate interim suspension because of lack of opportunity for pretrial discovery and full development of facts. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [7]

Every attorney convicted of a felony or crime of moral turpitude can anticipate an order of interim suspension and attendant hardships, but hardship to the attorney's family does not outweigh the need to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the legal profession pending a full hearing on the merits. Where, due to delay in transmittal of conviction, attorney had had several months to make alternative employment arrangements, and attorney had given no details of his current income, recent earnings, or efforts to seek other employment, attorney's showing of hardship was insufficient in light of all factors to constitute good cause to vacate interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [9]

Where review department saw no justifiable reason to deviate from hearing judge's recommendation of suspension in felony conviction matter which had resulted in interim suspension, and effect of examiner's request for review had been to extend interim suspension, review department believed it appropriate to attempt to place respondent in same position as if examiner had not requested review, by modifying length of suspension and giving increased credit for interim suspension. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [14]

Credit for interim suspension in conviction matters is not restricted to cases in which there are compelling mitigating factors. All facts and circumstances, including unexplained delay in State Bar proceedings, are considered, and all relevant factors are balanced in arriving at a proper discipline. Disciplinary recommendations should not penalize the respondent for appealing a criminal conviction or contesting the State Bar Court's findings and recommendations. Where lengthy interim suspension has occurred, the appropriate consideration in determining whether prospective suspension is necessary is whether the facts and circumstances of a particular matter require a further period of actual suspension for the protection of the public, the profession or the courts. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [13]

In conviction referral matter in which interim suspension had been imposed and later vacated after seven months, review department declined to recommend total of one year actual suspension, even though possibly appropriate, because resulting additional four-month suspension would have been disruptive and punitive rather than achieving the purposes of disciplinary proceedings (protection of the public, courts and legal profession as well as rehabilitation in proper cases). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [9]

1550 Application of Standards to Discipline Based on Criminal Conviction

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and other issues re application of the Standards, see topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

1551 1986 Standard 3.1 (Scope)

Note: Topic number 1551 retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct may be applied retroactively to criminal conduct which occurred before they were adopted. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [5]

Assessment of the appropriate degree of discipline starts with the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and in a criminal conviction matter, specifically with part C of those standards. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [4]

1552 Standard 2.15(b) (interim Standard 2.11(b), 1986 Standard 3.2) (Felony conviction under circumstances involving moral turpitude)

1552.10 Applied - Disbarment

Disbarment was appropriate where respondent was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice, a serious offense of moral turpitude, he did not report this conviction to the State Bar, and he did not prove compelling mitigation. If this conviction had marred an otherwise discipline-free record, disbarment would not necessarily be warranted, but respondent's prior record of discipline reveals his criminal misconduct was not an isolated incident, and also triggered analysis under standard 1.7(b). In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [4 a,b]

Disbarment was warranted and necessary where attorney failed to meet professional obligations for over two decades in four disciplinary cases. In the first three cases, respondent performed incompetently, and in fourth case, which occurred between his first and second discipline, he was convicted of a crime of moral turpitude that he never reported. Disbarment was recommended under standards 3.2. and 1.7(b), because overall, respondent demonstrated pervasive carelessness towards compliance with ethical rules, and appeared unwilling or unable to conform his behavior to the rules of professional conduct. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [6]

In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920.

In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469.

Unless the most compelling of mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, disbarment is the appropriate discipline in cases involving convictions of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. The nature and extent of respondent's felony conviction of conspiracy to commit theft and theft, alone, established his unfitness to practice law. Likewise, the facts and circumstances surrounding his crimes, the numerous aggravating circumstances, and the lack of any substantial mitigating circumstance further convinced the review department that respondent remained unfit to practice unless and until he established by clear and convincing evidence in a reinstatement proceeding that he was rehabilitated. Accordingly, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [13]

Disbarments, and not suspensions, have been the rule rather than the exception in cases of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. Although respondent presented substantial mitigation, it was not compelling in light of respondent's extremely serious misconduct over a several-year period. The protection of the public, courts, and legal profession; the maintenance of high professional standards by attorneys; and the preservation of public confidence in the legal profession necessitated disbarment for respondent's extensive participation in criminal activities involving repeated acts of moral turpitude. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [9]

Forgery is by definition a crime of moral turpitude. Under Supreme Court case law, disbarment is the rule rather than the exception for this serious crime. Forgery of a court document involves fraud on the court, which is particularly egregious. Accordingly, where respondent was convicted of such crime, respondent would have faced disbarment even if granted a hearing on the issue of appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [6]

Convictions of grand theft and forgery would have resulted in recommendation of summary disbarment if crimes had occurred in practice of law or a client was a victim. Where respondent's crimes did not occur in practice of law or victimize a client, case was not eligible for summary disbarment, and respondent was entitled to hearing on appropriate degree of discipline. Nevertheless, opportunity for hearing was not designed to lower professional standards. Respondent's crimes constituted heinous misconduct for an attorney. Where such crimes were of great magnitude, and were related to the very types of matters in which attorneys frequently act, such as ensuring validity of documents requiring notarial services, respondent's crimes were of such a serious nature that by themselves, they would warrant disbarment. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [4]

Disbarment was warranted for convictions of grand theft and forgery unless most compelling mitigating circumstances clearly predominated. Despite hearing judge's conclusion that respondent's crimes were aberrant and brought on by incredible psychological stress due to marital and business problems, review department did not agree that mitigation was compelling. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [5]

Respondent's lack of a prior record of discipline in 14 years of practice was entitled to mitigating weight but did not of itself prove that disbarment was excessive for convictions of grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [6]

Not all instances of serious professional misconduct warrant disbarment, depending on mitigating circumstances. Theft crimes unrelated to the practice of law have resulted in less than disbarment. However, where respondent's offenses of grand theft and forgery were extremely grave and multiple examples of felonious and fraudulent misconduct, likely to impugn public confidence in the legal profession, and respondent's experience in sophisticated law practice, public office and private business should have dissuaded him from committing felonies, review department recommended disbarment notwithstanding respondent's evidence of stress caused by personal and financial problems. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [11]

Where respondent, while acting as the executor of a deceased client's estate, embezzled more than $500,000 from such estate, the magnitude of the theft would result in disbarment regardless of alleged mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [4]

1552.30 Applied - Prospective actual suspension for 2 or more years

1552.31 Compelling mitigating circumstances

Standard 3.2 contemplates opportunity to introduce mitigating evidence which, if compelling, would justify sanction short of disbarment. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [17]

1552.39 Other reason

1552.50 Declined to apply

1552.51 No moral turpitude

1552.52 Compelling mitigation

Where respondent, after authorities' discovery of welfare fraud committed by him and his wife, was cooperative with welfare authorities and remorseful, took full responsibility, and stipulated to most of the facts at the State Bar hearing, hearing judge was justified in recommending lengthy suspension in lieu of disbarment. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [4]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Where respondent was convicted of a felony for harboring respondent's client while the client was a fugitive, even thought respondent was well-motivated, did not act for personal gain and committed no perjurious act, respondent's conviction was a serious matter, and involved acting with conscious disregard of an attorney's obligation to uphold the law. Thus, even though respondent's conduct was aberrational, respondent posed no current risk to the public, the legal profession or the courts, and respondent presented compelling mitigating evidence, a 60-day actual suspension, with one year of stayed suspension and one year of probation, was appropriate to preserve the integrity of the legal profession and enforce high professional standards. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, the presumptively appropriate discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude is disbarment. However, where compelling mitigating circumstances predominate, a lesser sanction may be imposed, and the minimum of a two-year actual suspension suggested by the standards has not been applied by the Supreme Court. In such circumstances, the review department's duty is to determine the appropriate sanction in light of the purposes of attorney discipline: protection of the public, preservation of public confidence in the legal profession and maintenance of high professional standards. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [14]

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had acted in what he believed to be the best interests of both his client and the criminal justice system, his good motives were not a defense to his breach of duty, but did constitute a strong factor in mitigation. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [16]

Disbarment would be excessive in case arising out of criminal conviction for filing false federal income tax return, even though offense involved moral turpitude, based on comparable Supreme Court cases and given respondent's compelling showing of mitigation, including absence of any prior or subsequent misconduct; extreme emotional difficulties arising from an amputation; respondent's acknowledgment of his misconduct and his candor and cooperation with the State Bar; a persuasive showing of respondent's good character and high esteem in the community; family problems existing at the time of the misconduct; and the fact that the misconduct did not involve the practice of law. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [8]

An attorney's commission of a crime involving moral turpitude is always a matter of serious consequence but does not always result in disbarment; the sanction imposed is determined in each case depending on the nature of the crime and the circumstances presented by the record. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [4]

Standard 3.2 contemplates opportunity to introduce mitigating evidence which, if compelling, would justify sanction short of disbarment. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [17]

1552.53 Credit for interim suspension

The Supreme Court has effectively modified the standard calling for a minimum two-year prospective suspension in matters arising from convictions for crimes of moral turpitude, by rejecting the requirement that the suspension be automatically prospective. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [10]

The Supreme Court has expressed concern that the State Bar Court should make clear the reasons for departure from the standards in any case where the recommended discipline differs therefrom. Where hearing judge did not articulate basis for recommending 18 months suspension instead of two-year minimum called for by applicable standard, respondent would have had to wait two years to reapply for admission if criminal conviction had occurred prior to admission to practice, and no reason appeared on record to depart from standard except to give credit for time spent on interim suspension, review department recommended actual suspension of two years. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [11]

Although respondent's use and distribution of illegal drugs did not result from an initial, legal use of prescribed medications, which would have mitigated his later, reprehensible drug transactions, the great number of years which had passed since the attorney's misconduct, coupled with evidence of impressive and sustained rehabilitation, were sufficiently mitigating to conclude that disbarment would be excessive discipline. To underscore the gravity of the attorney's misconduct, which occurred after the attorney had completed law school and had applied unsuccessfully to the California bar, the review department recommended two years actual suspension, retroactive to the start of the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [3]

Where review department saw no justifiable reason to deviate from hearing judge's recommendation of suspension in felony conviction matter which had resulted in interim suspension, and effect of examiner's request for review had been to extend interim suspension, review department believed it appropriate to attempt to place respondent in same position as if examiner had not requested review, by modifying length of suspension and giving increased credit for interim suspension. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [14]

Where relevant facts and circumstances surrounding perjury conviction were serious, and respondent had not yet demonstrated sufficient rehabilitation, but in light of mitigation and circumstances as a whole disbarment was not necessary, lengthy actual suspension, including some prospective suspension, and standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement were appropriate discipline. However, review department reduced length of recommended prospective suspension to reflect time expired since issuance of hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [12]

Credit for interim suspension in conviction matters is not restricted to cases in which there are compelling mitigating factors. All facts and circumstances, including unexplained delay in State Bar proceedings, are considered, and all relevant factors are balanced in arriving at a proper discipline. Disciplinary recommendations should not penalize the respondent for appealing a criminal conviction or contesting the State Bar Court's findings and recommendations. Where lengthy interim suspension has occurred, the appropriate consideration in determining whether prospective suspension is necessary is whether the facts and circumstances of a particular matter require a further period of actual suspension for the protection of the public, the profession or the courts. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [13]

Where length of attorney's prolonged interim suspension was largely due to meritorious appeal from criminal conviction, it would have been inequitable not to give credit for interim suspension against period of actual suspension recommended after disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [22]

1552.59 Other reason

Appropriate level of discipline for respondent's misdemeanor conviction for paying for referral of two clients (Ins. Code, § 750, subd. (a)), where circumstances surrounding conviction involved moral turpitude, was two-year stayed suspension with two-year period of probation and six-month period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61. [6 a-g]

In a conviction referral proceeding involving respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. § 1014), which conviction involved moral turpitude per se, the State Bar proved that respondent's federal income tax returns represented by the copies of the first page of a number of prior federal income tax forms that were submitted to the bank in connection with respondent's loan application were never filed with the I.R.S, but did not prove that the figures on the submitted pages were false. Accordingly, the review department recommended only an 18-month period of actual suspension even though the applicable standard of Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provides for disbarment or a minimum of two years' actual suspension. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [5]

Where enough mitigating circumstances had been sufficiently established, and were coupled with the lack of extreme seriousness of respondent's offense, the hearing judge correctly concluded that suspension rather than disbarment was the appropriate discipline for a conviction of possession of marijuana for sale, even though the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [7]

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct are guidelines; they do not need to be followed in talismanic fashion. Hearing judge in matter arising from perjury conviction properly analyzed relevant case law in order to arrive at appropriate sanction, rather than automatically applying standard 3.2, which provides that discipline for conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude shall be disbarment unless compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Supreme Court cases involving crimes of moral turpitude have considered the nature of the crime and the magnitude of its impact on the public and the integrity of the legal system. This factual analysis in determining the propriety of disbarment is similar to that used in matters involving entrusted funds or property. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [11]

Where relevant facts and circumstances surrounding perjury conviction were serious, and respondent had not yet demonstrated sufficient rehabilitation, but in light of mitigation and circumstances as a whole disbarment was not necessary, lengthy actual suspension, including some prospective suspension, and standard 1.4(c)(ii) requirement were appropriate discipline. However, review department reduced length of recommended prospective suspension to reflect time expired since issuance of hearing judge's decision. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [12]

In conviction referral matter in which interim suspension had been imposed and later vacated after seven months, review department declined to recommend total of one year actual suspension, even though possibly appropriate, because resulting additional four-month suspension would have been disruptive and punitive rather than achieving the purposes of disciplinary proceedings (protection of the public, courts and legal profession as well as rehabilitation in proper cases). In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [9]

Supreme Court has rejected rigid application of the requirement of prospective suspension in standard 3.2. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [23]

Under standard providing that disbarment or actual suspension is appropriate for misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude, where respondent had four alcohol-related driving convictions, and did not present persuasive evidence that he understood the extent of his alcohol problem and was truly on path to rehabilitation, appropriate discipline was actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved rehabilitation and fitness to practice. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [5 a,b]

Discipline standard applicable to misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude provides for disbarment or actual suspension. Where respondent repeatedly committed serious misconduct and did not demonstrate reform, appropriate discipline was actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [7 a,b]

1553 Standard 2.15(a) (interim Standard 2.11(a), 1986 Standard 3.3 (Felony conviction involving moral turpitude as element))

1553.10 Applied - Summary disbarment recommended

Current law does not provide for summary disbarment unless the elements of the conviction inherently involve moral turpitude. Thus, the State Bar's argument that summary disbarment applies to all felonies which involve moral turpitude in their surrounding facts and circumstances cannot be supported as it is contrary to the uniform meaning and interpretation of over 70 years of summary provisions of the State Bar Act flowing from an attorney's criminal conviction. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [1 a–e]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [2]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

The Legislature itself has recognized that the inherent authority of the Supreme Court controls the outcome in disciplinary proceedings. It is therefore incumbent upon the review department not only to review the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, but also to review Supreme Court precedent to assure that application of statutory summary disbarment does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [4]

Forgery is by definition a crime of moral turpitude. Under Supreme Court case law, disbarment is the rule rather than the exception for this serious crime. Forgery of a court document involves fraud on the court, which is particularly egregious. Accordingly, where respondent was convicted of such crime, respondent would have faced disbarment even if granted a hearing on the issue of appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [6]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

In considering whether to recommend summary disbarment, the State Bar Court is generally limited to determining whether the statutory and case law criteria have been met on the face of the conviction papers, although undisputed additional facts may also be taken into account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [3]

Where respondent, while acting as the executor of a deceased client's estate, embezzled more than $500,000 from such estate, the magnitude of the theft would result in disbarment regardless of alleged mitigating circumstances. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [4]

Where respondent committed grand theft by embezzlement, the felony conviction papers demonstrated that an element of respondent's offense was the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [5]

The statutory requirement for summary disbarment that an attorney's crime be committed in such a manner that a client was a victim is met even when the victimization occurred outside the practice of law, and may apply even when the victim was a former or deceased client. Where an attorney is appointed under a former client's will as executor of the client's probate estate, and is convicted of grand theft by embezzlement from the estate, there is such a clear nexus between the crime and the trust and confidence of the client that was violated that the client-as-victim requirement for summary disbarment is satisfied. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [8]

Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), providing for summary disbarment of attorneys convicted of crimes meeting the criteria set forth in the statute, must be read in the context of the statutory scheme of the State Bar Act as a whole, which indicates the Legislature's intent to defer to the Supreme Court's inherent authority to judge each case on its merits and disbar or suspend pursuant to its own view of the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [3]

A conviction for mail fraud (18 U.S.C. § 1341) involves intentional fraud within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [4]

The practice of law includes not only performing services in court but also legal advice and counsel and the preparation of legal instruments and contracts. Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud based on the attorney's fraudulent creation of a separate corporation in order to obtain payment for legal work for clients which otherwise would have been performed by the attorney's law firm, the crime was committed in the practice of law within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [5]

Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud based on fraudulently billing an insurance company for services rendered on behalf of its insureds, the insureds, as the attorney's clients, were victimized by the crime, and the crime therefore involved a client as a victim within the meaning of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102 (c)). The attorney's subsequent restitution to the insurance company, ordered as part of the attorney's criminal sentence, did not negate the harm caused by the crime. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [6]

Before recommending to the Supreme Court that an attorney be summarily disbarred pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), the State Bar Court has a duty to analyze the record in light of the case law to assure that application of section 6102 (c) does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. The State Bar Court will only order a hearing if Supreme Court precedent supports a lesser sanction than disbarment for the particular crime depending on circumstances which might be adduced at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [7]

Where an attorney was convicted of mail fraud arising out of a scheme to defraud an insurance company which retained the attorney to defend its insureds, disbarment would be an appropriate sanction regardless of mitigating circumstances, due to the extremely serious nature of the misconduct and its direct connection with the practice of law. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [8]

Rule 951(a), California Rules of Court, delegating certain powers to the State Bar Court regarding the discipline of attorneys convicted of crimes, limits the State Bar Court to recommending summary disbarment to the Supreme Court, rather than imposing it directly. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [9]

1553.50 Declined to apply

1553.51 Conviction not involving moral turpitude as element of crime

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[1 a-c]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.51.[2 a-c]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

Convictions of grand theft and forgery would have resulted in recommendation of summary disbarment if crimes had occurred in practice of law or a client was a victim. Where respondent's crimes did not occur in practice of law or victimize a client, case was not eligible for summary disbarment, and respondent was entitled to hearing on appropriate degree of discipline. Nevertheless, opportunity for hearing was not designed to lower professional standards. Respondent's crimes constituted heinous misconduct for an attorney. Where such crimes were of great magnitude, and were related to the very types of matters in which attorneys frequently act, such as ensuring validity of documents requiring notarial services, respondent's crimes were of such a serious nature that by themselves, they would warrant disbarment. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [4]

Where respondent embezzled funds from a deceased former client's estate while serving as the estate's executor, but not its attorney, neither the estate nor the beneficiaries of the estate were respondent's clients, nor did respondent commit the offense in the practice of law. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [6]

By statute, summary disbarment is available only for a narrow range of grievous misconduct. Grand theft by an attorney in the capacity of executor of an estate, though egregious, does not come within the statutory definition of an offense justifying summary disbarment unless it was committed in the practice of law or in such a manner that a client was a victim. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [7]

Attorney's embezzlement from law partnership was not a crime committed in the course of the practice of law and did not involve a client as victim, and therefore did not come within the scope of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102(c)). In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [6]

In determining whether nature of attorney's crimes warranted summary disbarment, review department gave great weight to decision of court of appeal issued on direct appeal from respondent's criminal conviction. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Where respondent embezzled from his law partnership through forgeries and other acts internal to the law firm and intended only to deceive his law partner, respondent breached the fiduciary duty of a partner to the partnership, but did not commit a crime related to respondent's status as an attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [9]

Phrase "offense committed in the course of the practice of law", as used in standard 3.3 and in summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102(c)), addresses the conduct of attorneys as such in dealing with clients and the public, and does not encompass crimes where attorney does not act as such in the commission of the offenses directly, but only in the surrounding circumstances. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [10]

1553.52 Compelling mitigating circumstances

1553.59 Other reason

A retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions and conditions which are performed or exist prior to the adoption of the statute. Respondent's crimes were committed and her conviction occurred when the prior version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) was in effect and her offenses were not within the scope of the former version of the statute. In addition, as respondent would not have been subject to summary disbarment, she had a right under the former version of the statute to a hearing and to present evidence prior to the imposition of discipline. The application of the present version of section 6102, subdivision (c) under these circumstances would be retrospective. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [2]

It is presumed an amendment to a statute operates prospectively unless the Legislature has expressly stated the contrary or, after considering all pertinent factors, there is clear indication of a legislative intent that the statute operate retrospectively. Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c) does not contain an express retroactivity provision and after considering extrinsic factors, including public protection and due process, the review department concluded that section 6102, subdivision (c) should not be applied retroactively. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [3]

The important public interest served by the summary disbarment statute does not show that the legislature intended the statute to operate retroactively. A summary disbarment proceeding, by definition, excludes an evidentiary hearing in the State Bar Court prior to disbarment. However, pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6101, subdivision (a), upon receipt of a certified copy of the record conviction, attorneys convicted of a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude are interimly suspended from the practice of law pending final disposition of the proceeding. Thus, even if an evidentiary hearing is held, the attorney convicted of an offense that would warrant disbarment is immediately suspended from the practice of law and can remain suspended until disbarred. Accordingly, the public is promptly protected from attorneys convicted of crimes of dishonesty regardless of whether summary disbarment occurs. Moreover, the opportunity for a referral hearing is not designed to lower professional standards. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [4]

The issue of retroactive application of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code § 6102(c)) to conduct occurring prior to its enactment has not been decided by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [5]

1553.70 Standard 2.15(c) (interim Standard 2.11(c) (misdemeanor conviction involving moral turpitude - disbarment or suspension)

1553.71 Applied – disbarment

1553.72 Coupled with other misconduct

1553.73 Other aggravating factors

1553.74 Other reason

1553.80 Applied – actual suspension

1553.81 Compelling mitigating circumstances

1553.89 Other reason

Under standard providing that disbarment or actual suspension is appropriate for misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude, where respondent had four alcohol-related driving convictions, and did not present persuasive evidence that he understood the extent of his alcohol problem and was truly on path to rehabilitation, appropriate discipline was actual suspension for two years and until respondent proved rehabilitation and fitness to practice. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [5 a,b]

Discipline standard applicable to misdemeanor convictions involving moral turpitude provides for disbarment or actual suspension. Where respondent repeatedly committed serious misconduct and did not demonstrate reform, appropriate discipline was actual suspension for two years and until proof of rehabilitation and fitness to practice. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [7 a,b]

1553.90 Declined to apply – lesser or no discipline

1553.91 No moral turpitude

1553.92 Compelling mitigation

1553.93 Credit for interim suspension

1553.99 Other reason

1554 Standard 2.16 (interim standard 2.12, 1986 Standard 3.4) (No moral turpitude but discipline warranted)

Note: For topic number 1554.10, retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014, see below, following topic number 1554.39.

1554.20 Standard 2.16(a) (interim Standard 2.12(a) (actual suspension for felony not involving moral turpitude but warranting discipline)

1554.21 Applied

1554.25 Declined to apply – lesser discipline imposed

1554.27 Declined to apply – greater discipline imposed

1554.29 Other issues re Standard 2.16(a) (interim Standard 2.12(a))

1554.30 Standard 2.16(b) (interim Standard 2.12(b) (suspension or reproval for misdemeanor not involving moral turpitude but warranting discipline)

1554.31 Applied – Suspension

1554.33 Applied – Reproval

1554.35 Declined to apply – no discipline imposed

1554.37 Declined to apply – greater discipline imposed

1554.39 Other issues re Standard 2.16(b) (interim Standard 2.12(b))

Note: Topic numbers 1554.10 and 1554.50-1554.59, relating to 1986 Standard 3.4 (no moral turpitude but discipline warranted) retained solely for cases decided prior to January 1, 2014.

1554.10 1986 Standard 3.4 (no moral turpitude but discipline warranted) – Applied (discipline imposed per general standards)

Note: All cases listed under topic number 1554.10 are also listed under the specific Part B Standard(s) applied.

For a single misdemeanor crime not involving moral turpitude and unrelated to practice of law, a short actual suspension is appropriate. Where attorney committed misdemeanor violation of Penal Code section 273a, subdivision (b) (child endangerment) and where the misconduct was aggravated by two prior records of discipline but mitigated by cooperation, remorse and pro bono service, the appropriate discipline recommendation was a 120-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [12]

1554.50 Declined to apply

1554.51 No comparable general standard found

1554.59 Other reason

For a single misdemeanor crime not involving moral turpitude and unrelated to practice of law, a short actual suspension is appropriate. Where attorney committed misdemeanor violation of Penal Code section 273a, subdivision (b) (child endangerment) and where the misconduct was aggravated by two prior records of discipline but mitigated by cooperation, remorse and pro bono service, the appropriate discipline recommendation was a 120-day actual suspension. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283 [12]

In the Matter of Twitty (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 664.

The Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct provide that the appropriate discipline for culpability for professional misconduct where the member has a record of two prior impositions of discipline is disbarment unless the most compelling circumstances clearly predominate. Application of this standard was not appropriate where the attorney's criminal convictions and prior discipline, which were caused by an extensive history of drug and alcohol abuse, did not directly involve clients or the practice of law, and did not cause specific harm to the public or courts, and where the attorney had taken steps to address the underlying substance abuse problem, and had already been under suspension for five years as a result of previous discipline. Continued probation monitoring with substance abuse conditions, and a requirement that the attorney demonstrate rehabilitation and fitness to practice, would ensure that the substance abuse was controlled prior to the attorney's resuming the practice of law. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [9]

Under the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, the discipline for conviction of a crime which does not involve moral turpitude but does involve other misconduct warranting discipline should be that which is appropriate to the nature and extent of the misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [10]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor sex offense not involving moral turpitude and not related to practice of law, respondent's record of two prior private reprovals made it appropriate to impose public reproval rather than private reproval that would otherwise have been warranted, but due to lack of common thread among matters and their collective lack of severity, it would have been manifestly unjust to recommend suspension. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [5]

Where respondent in criminal conviction matter had initially misrepresented his occupation in the course of his arrest, it was appropriate to impose requirement to take and pass professional responsibility examination as condition of public reproval. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [6]

1600 Discipline Imposed in Conviction Matters

1610 Disbarment

Disbarment was warranted and necessary where attorney failed to meet professional obligations for over two decades in four disciplinary cases. In the first three cases, respondent performed incompetently, and in fourth case, which occurred between his first and second discipline, he was convicted of a crime of moral turpitude that he never reported. Disbarment was recommended under standards 3.2. and 1.7(b), because overall, respondent demonstrated pervasive carelessness towards compliance with ethical rules, and appeared unwilling or unable to conform his behavior to the rules of professional conduct. In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189 [6]

Where attorney improperly obtained interests adverse to a client, committed trust account violations, intentionally misappropriated $26,699.56, failed to competently perform, failed to account, failed to return client files, collected an unconscionable fee, and committed multiple acts involving moral turpitude, where the misconduct was aggravated by multiple acts, uncharged misconduct, lack of candor, significant client harm and indifference toward rectification but mitigated by an absence of a prior record of discipline and cooperation, the appropriate discipline recommendation was disbarment. In the Matter of Conner (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93 [14]

Where the facts and circumstances underlying respondent's felony conviction involved moral turpitude due to respondent's capping, fee splitting, recklessness, deceit, and repeated failures to competently represent his clients, where the facts and circumstances involved additional misconduct warranting discipline, where there was little weight assigned to respondent's cooperation with the State Bar and to his evidence of good character, and where respondent engaged in multiple acts of misconduct, profited from that misconduct, harmed clients and insurers and failed to complete restitution, the appropriate level of discipline was disbarment. In the Matter of Oheb (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 920. [17]

Disbarment was the appropriate discipline for respondent's involvement in a capping scheme, fee splitting arrangement and conspiracy to defraud the Internal Revenue Service due to (1) the extremely serious nature of respondent's misconduct over an extended period of years; (2) the insufficient passage of time since the misconduct to give the necessary assurance that respondent was once again fit to practice law; (3) the fact that the misconduct occurred within three or four years after respondent began practicing law; (4) the fact that respondent was motivated to continue the misconduct for six years by a desire to enhance his standard of living; (5) respondent's decision to offer only limited cooperation to the government for three and one-half years after the commencement of an investigation by the Internal Revenue Service; and (6) respondent's disregard, on virtually hundreds of occasions, of the trust his clients placed in him.In the Matter of Kreitenberg (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 469. [7]

Past Supreme Court practice in considering automatic or summary disbarment was not found by the review department to entail weighing and balancing issues such as the motive of the attorney in committing the crime, the extent to which harm did or did not occur, whether the offenses were limited or repeated or other issues pertaining to evidence bearing on either mitigating or aggravating circumstances. Therefore, to the extent that language in the review department opinions In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71, and In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729, would require the review department to undertake such an analysis, such language was disapproved. Although respondent denies that his offense was serious enough to warrant disbarment, all the facts are not before us nor are they undisputed. What is undisputed is that respondent stands finally convicted, inter alia, of mail fraud, a felony which unquestionably involves moral turpitude; and, as we observed collectively in Segall and Salameh, is the type of offense which has often resulted in disbarment. Our reading of the summary disbarment law and past Supreme Court practice, would not warrant any exception to a summary disbarment recommendation based on respondent's claims. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942. [2]

Unless the most compelling of mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, disbarment is the appropriate discipline in cases involving convictions of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. The nature and extent of respondent's felony conviction of conspiracy to commit theft and theft, alone, established his unfitness to practice law. Likewise, the facts and circumstances surrounding his crimes, the numerous aggravating circumstances, and the lack of any substantial mitigating circumstance further convinced the review department that respondent remained unfit to practice unless and until he established by clear and convincing evidence in a reinstatement proceeding that he was rehabilitated. Accordingly, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [13]

In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310.

In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729.

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473.

In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71.

1613 Stayed Suspension

1613.01 One month or less

1613.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1613.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1613.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1613.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1613.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.283.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

1613.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

1613.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

*In the Matter of Carr (*Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

1613.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

1613.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

1613.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1615 Actual Suspension

1615.01 One month or less

1615.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

1615.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013)5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.283.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

1615.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

1615.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1615.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

1615.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

1615.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

1615.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

1615.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1615.11 Five years or more

1616 Relationship of actual suspension to interim suspension

1616.10 No credit given; actual suspension entirely prospective

1616.50 Full credit given for interim suspension

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1616.70 Actual suspension all prospective, but length reduced

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

1616.90 Other relationship

1617 Probation (for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.)

1617.01 One month or less

1617.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1617.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1617.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1617.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1617.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245.

1617.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1617.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.61.

In the Matter of Bouyer (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 888.

In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406.

In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

1617.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765.

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

1617.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

1617.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96.

1630 Standard 1.2(c)(i) (1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii)) Rehabilitation Requirement

In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402.

In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380

In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108.

In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62.

In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552.

In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502.

1640 Public Reproval

1641 With conditions [for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.]

In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201.

1645 Without conditions

1650 Private Reproval

1651 With conditions [for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.]

1655 Without conditions

1690 Miscellaneous Issues in Conviction Cases

1691 Admissibility and/or Effect of Record in Criminal Proceeding

Criminal conduct not related to the practice of law and not committed against a client reveals moral turpitude if it shows a deficiency in character traits necessary for the practice of law, or involves such a serious breach of duty or such flagrant disrespect for law and societal norms as to be likely to undermine public confidence in and respect for the legal profession. Where respondent was convicted of a misdemeanor for repeatedly placing video cameras in restaurant bathrooms to obtain secret recordings to view for sexual gratification, conviction was conclusive proof that respondent acted with intent to invade the privacy of restaurant patrons, and respondent's crime involved moral turpitude. In the Matter of Wenzel (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 380. [1 a–c]

Where respondent was convicted of misdemeanor child endangerment for leaving his nine-month-old daughter alone in hotel room for 40 minutes, fact of conviction established respondent's guilt of all elements of crime, but hearing was required to determine whether facts and circumstances involved moral turpi tude. Where State Bar failed to introduce clear and convincing evidence that respondent lied to police, no moral turpitude was established. In the Matter of Jensen (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 283. [1 a-c]

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

When an attorney pleads nolo contendere to a felony wobbler, i.e., a crime that may be charged or judged either as a felony or misdemeanor, and that offense is declared to be a misdemeanor at sentencing or at the imposition of probation under Penal Code section 17, subdivision (b), the Legislature made it clear that it remains a felony for State Bar Act purposes even if it is later declared a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings, including proceedings resulting in punishment or probation. This does not mean that an attorney's conviction of a wobbler will always be of a felony. If the attorney's plea of guilty or nolo contendere or the verdict of guilty is to a misdemeanor charge, including a felony reduced to a misdemeanor at the time of the plea or verdict, the conviction will be of a misdemeanor.In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610.[1 a-c]

An attorney's criminal conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is deemed a conviction for attorney disciplinary purposes and is conclusive proof of the attorney's guilt on each of the essential elements of the offense of which the attorney was convicted. Thus, respondent cannot collaterally attack his conviction in the State Bar Court even though the victim of respondent's crime lost her civil lawsuit against respondent for damages. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813.[4]

Even though the criminal plea agreement on which respondent was convicted dealt with only one of the multiple criminal counts initially filed against him, the State Bar Court's inquiry was not limited to the conviction on that one count to determine the appropriate discipline, but included review of all the surrounding circumstances. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [1]

In determining whether an attorney's convictions meet the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, the review department is limited to the record of conviction and any undisputed facts that may exist. Where the record of conviction did not establish that the offenses were committed in the course of the practice of law or in any way such that a client of respondent's was a victim, the offenses did not meet the criteria for summary disbarment under the version of Business and Professions Code section 6102, subdivision (c), in effect prior to January 1, 1997. Summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under the present version of the statute. In the Matter of Jolly (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 740. [1]

Conviction of violation of criminal statute is conclusive evidence of guilt of elements of that crime. Where respondent was convicted of battery on a police officer engaged in performance of official duties, and such officer's use of excessive force would have required finding that officer was not engaged in performance of official duties, respondent's conviction precluded State Bar Court from considering his claim that police initiated altercation or used excessive force in incident leading to respondent's conviction. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [8]

An attorney is charged with knowledge that the legal consequences of the attorney's conviction include summary disbarment when statutory authority provides therefor. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [1]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized where an attorney is convicted of a felony and (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement, and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. The crime of forgery includes as one of its elements the specific intent to defraud. A forgery conviction for altering a court document was unquestionably committed in the course of the practice of law in that it involved fraud on the court perpetrated on behalf of the attorney's client. Accordingly, summary disbarment was appropriate in the absence of conflicting Supreme Court precedent or a violation of due process in disbarring respondent without a hearing. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [2]

An attorney convicted of a felony is chargeable with notice that the crime remains a felony for State Bar discipline purposes irrespective of whether in a particular case the crime may be considered a misdemeanor as a result of post-conviction proceedings. Under some circumstances, prosecutorial discretion in originally charging a particular crime as a felony rather than a misdemeanor may raise questions as to the propriety of summary disbarment, but no such issue was presented where there was no evidence of abuse of discretion or other unfairness in charging forgery of a court document as a felony. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [3]

Where respondent contended that he had only pleaded guilty in order to avoid two separate trials, and that he had not intended to commit a crime, due process did not entitle him to a hearing before the State Bar Court to prove these contentions, because he would be precluded from presenting evidence thereof by the statute providing that proof of an attorney's conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the elements of the crime in any proceeding to suspend or disbar the attorney. This conclusive presumption precludes collateral attack on the conviction by attorneys who seek to reassert their innocence in subsequent State Bar proceedings. In this regard, a conviction following a guilty plea is just as conclusive as a conviction following a full criminal trial. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [5]

Respondent's conviction of grand theft and forgery was conclusive evidence of his guilt of all elements of those crimes. The grand theft conviction necessarily carried with it the specific intent to deprive the victim permanently of his funds. The forgery conviction necessarily showed that respondent acted without authority and with an intent to defraud. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [3]

Respondent's favorable character showing, while attested to by many references, did not amount to a showing of extraordinary demonstration of good character, where not all witnesses were familiar with the magnitude and nature of respondent's crimes, and where respondent's repeated contention that he did not act to defraud his victim served to undercut his favorable character showing in light of the conclusive effect of his convictions for grand theft and forgery. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [7]

Finality of an attorney's criminal conviction is not essential for an order referring the conviction to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether there is probable cause to conclude that the circumstances of the conviction involved moral turpitude for purposes of interim suspension of the attorney. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [1]

The possibility that criminal proceedings against an attorney may be dismissed if the attorney complies with the terms of criminal probation is not relevant to the effect of the conviction in disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [2]

A conviction after a plea of nolo contendere is a conviction for disciplinary purposes no less than a conviction after a plea or verdict of guilty. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [3]

There are numerous factors to consider in assessing witness credibility beyond observing the witness while testifying. The hearing judge, as the trier of fact in State Bar proceedings, is to determine the credibility of witnesses and hearsay declarants. The fact that some witnesses testified at the State Bar hearing by way of a transcript of the witnesses' criminal court testimony, which is expressly authorized by statute in State Bar proceedings, is not reason to discount their testimony or find it less credible than live witness testimony. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [1]

Respondent's conviction of assault conclusively established that he did not act in self-defense, i.e., that he did not have an honest and reasonable belief that he was about to suffer bodily injury. Hearing judge could not reach conclusions, even based on credible evidence, that were inconsistent with such conclusive effect. Thus, where hearing judge found that respondent honestly believed he was about to be assaulted, review department rejected any finding that such belief was reasonable as being inconsistent with the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [2]

In attorney discipline proceedings arising from a criminal conviction, the record of the attorney's conviction is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt of the crime for which the attorney was convicted. This conclusive presumption of guilt applies whether the convicted attorney seeks to reassert his or her innocence or merely to relitigate a claim of procedural error. The convicted attorney is conclusively presumed to have committed all of the elements of the crime. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [3]

The conclusive presumption of guilt in attorney conviction matters does not apply only for crimes involving moral turpitude. The presumption also applies where the crime for which the attorney was convicted did not involve moral turpitude per se. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [5]

The conclusive effect of an attorney's criminal conviction merely establishes for State Bar purposes that the attorney committed the acts necessary to constitute the offense. Whether those acts amount to professional misconduct, in the context of a crime that does not necessarily involve moral turpitude, is a conclusion that can only be reached by an examination of the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [6]

An attorney's conviction for assault with a firearm is conclusive proof that the attorney committed the elements for that crime, i. e., that a person was assaulted and that the assault was committed with a firearm. An assault is defined as an unlawful attempt to apply physical force upon the person of another at a time when the accused had the present ability to apply such physical force. An attempt to apply physical force is not unlawful when done in lawful self-defense. An attorney's conviction of this crime therefore conclusively established that the attorney unlawfully attempted to apply physical force upon the victim. As the assault was by definition unlawful, the review department concluded that it was not done in self-defense. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [7]

Summary disbarment is statutorily authorized if an attorney commits a California or federal felony as to which: (1) an element of the offense is the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement; and (2) the offense was committed in the course of the practice of law or in any manner such that a client of the attorney was a victim. If the State Bar Court determines that disbarment would be ordered by the Supreme Court without regard to mitigating circumstances, a recommendation of summary disbarment is justified. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [2]

In considering whether to recommend summary disbarment, the State Bar Court is generally limited to determining whether the statutory and case law criteria have been met on the face of the conviction papers, although undisputed additional facts may also be taken into account. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [3]

Where respondent committed grand theft by embezzlement, the felony conviction papers demonstrated that an element of respondent's offense was the specific intent to deceive, defraud, steal, or make or suborn a false statement. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [5]

Where a felony could have been charged as a misdemeanor, the reduction of the felony conviction to a misdemeanor in postconviction proceedings does not affect the characterization of the crime as a felony for the purpose of interim suspension, but it may be taken into account in determining whether good cause exists for vacating an interim suspension order. If the reduction were ignored, arbitrary results might follow based on the discretionary charging practices of different prosecutors. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [8]

Where respondent's knowledge of welfare fraud perpetrated by his wife was conclusively established by his guilty plea to a crime of which fraud was an essential element, the State Bar did not need affirmative evidence beyond the conviction itself to prove respondent's participation in the fraud. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [3]

The determination of whether an attorney's conviction of certain crimes not involving moral turpitude per se should give rise to discipline, and on what basis, is not always an easy task. When the State Bar Court is asked to decide after hearing whether moral turpitude is involved in an attorney's conviction, the determination must be based on the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [3]

Record of respondent's criminal conviction, which had been judicially noticed by hearing department, was admitted into evidence by review department in order to make it part of record in disciplinary proceeding for Supreme Court review, but was considered solely for purpose of establishing criminal complaint, charges, plea, and conviction. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [2]

It is appropriate for disciplinary purposes to consider any criminal charges that were dismissed as well as the charges for which the attorney was actually convicted. Thus, where the criminal complaint in a Vehicle Code violation matter charged respondent with being under the influence of phencyclidine, and clear and convincing evidence was presented establishing that respondent was under the influence of phencyclidine, that circumstance could be considered in the disciplinary proceeding even though respondent was not convicted of being under the influence of phencyclidine. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 108. [7]

In reviewing the record of an attorney's criminal conviction resulting from a guilty plea, for the purpose of determining the propriety of summary disbarment, the court does not take into account language in the information unnecessary to the crime to which the attorney pled guilty, but may consider additional undisputed facts based on the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [2]

An attorney's conviction is conclusive proof, for disciplinary purposes, that the attorney committed the crime for which the attorney was convicted. However, California's driving under the influence laws do not prohibit drinking or ingestion of drugs and driving. Rather, they prohibit driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and/or driving with a specified blood alcohol content. Thus, the mere fact that an attorney ingested legal medications and then drove a vehicle did not indicate that the attorney's conduct demeaned the integrity of the profession or constituted a breach of the attorney's responsibility to society. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [6]

The whereabouts of a fugitive client known to an attorney constituted privileged communications which the attorney cannot disclose. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6068 (e); ABA Model Rules, rule 1.6.) The attorney must advise the client to surrender and must not assist or facilitate the fugitive in avoiding capture or committing a crime. Thus, respondent's knowledge that his fugitive client was in California and his meetings with the client to discuss the progress of negotiations with the authorities regarding the outstanding criminal charges were client confidences which respondent was obligated to preserve. However, an attorney's ethical duty not to disclose client confidences does not extend to affirmative acts which further a client's unlawful conduct, and respondent's guilty plea constituted conclusive proof that he committed all the acts necessary to committ the charged offense of harboring his fugitive client with the intent of preventing the client's discovery and arrest by federal authorities. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [11]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

While the leniency of an attorney's criminal sentence might be relevant in assessing final discipline, punishment by the criminal court serves a fundamentally different purpose than the provisions of the State Bar Act, and leniency of the criminal sentence therefore is not relevant to the determination whether there is good cause to vacate the attorney's interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [6]

The commercial or distribution aspect of respondent's crime was conclusively established by his conviction of possession of marijuana for sale. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [4]

Respondent's conviction for exhibiting a replica of a firearm in a threatening manner to cause reasonable fear or apprehension of harm conclusively established that respondent's acts were done in a threatening manner so as to cause a reasonable person apprehension or fear of bodily harm. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [7]

In conviction referral proceedings, discipline is imposed according to the gravity of the crime and the circumstances of the case. In examining such circumstances, the court may look beyond the specific elements of a crime to the whole course of an attorney's conduct as it reflects upon the attorney's fitness to practice law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [2]

Given that the examiner's pretrial statement indicated that facts and circumstances surrounding respondent's perjury conviction would be at issue and that the record would include the transcript of a related infraction trial as well as respondent's perjury trial, and given the rule permitting the hearing judge to consider evidence of facts not directly connected with respondent's conviction if such facts are material to the issues stated in the order of reference, respondent had sufficient notice that all relevant facts and circumstances would be considered in the disciplinary proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [3]

In a disciplinary hearing, the record of a felony conviction conclusively establishes the attorney's guilt of the felony. Nevertheless, testimony from attorney character witnesses as to their belief that the respondent was innocent should not have been considered as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [8]

At respondent's request, in a conviction proceeding, the review department took judicial notice of the record in a disciplinary case involving another attorney who was respondent's co-defendant in the underlying criminal matter. The discipline imposed on the co-defendant was considered in determining the appropriate discipline for respondent. In the Matter of Moriarty (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 245. [2]

In a conviction matter, the respondent's criminal conviction by itself constitutes conclusive proof that the respondent committed all acts necessary to constitute the offense charged. In the Matter of Buckley (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 201. [2]

Court of appeal opinion regarding respondent's criminal appeal could be cited in related disciplinary proceeding, notwithstanding Supreme Court's depublication order, under Cal. Rules of Court, rule 977(b)(2). In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [1]

In determining whether nature of attorney's crimes warranted summary disbarment, review department gave great weight to decision of court of appeal issued on direct appeal from respondent's criminal conviction. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [7]

Court of appeal opinion on direct appeal from attorney's criminal conviction is conclusive with respect to attorney's guilt of underlying crime, but for discipline purposes, State Bar Court must independently determine, through careful review of criminal record, whether clients were victims of misconduct or misconduct was committed in attorney's capacity as attorney. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [8]

Fact that in a disciplinary proceeding arising from an attorney's criminal conviction, the conviction is conclusive evidence of the attorney's guilt, is not an aggravating factor, but the basis of the attorney's culpability. In the Matter of Stamper (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 96. [11]

1699 Other Miscellaneous Issues in Conviction Cases

Members of the State Bar may be disciplined on the basis of their pre-admission misconduct. State Bar Moral Character Committee's consideration for moral character purposes of respondent's pre-admission misdemeanor conviction did not bar State Bar Court from considering it for discipline purposes. Records relating to respondent's admission to the State Bar were admissible in his post-admission disciplinary proceeding, especially where respondent failed to object at trial to being questioned about such records. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [2]

In contrast to original disciplinary proceedings, which emanate from complaints against lawyers or from State Bar investigations and require an accusatory pleading alleging with reasonable specificity the charges related to alleged violations of specific conduct rules or laws, conviction referral proceedings are intended to be more streamlined because they are initiated based solely on a member of the State Bar's conviction, which is conclusive evidence of guilt of the crime. Convictions for offenses which may or may not involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline should be referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether in the commission of the crime the convicted lawyer was guilty of misconduct warranting suspension or disbarment; typical offenses in this category include: assault and battery crimes, driving while intoxicated, certain tax convictions, and certain drug law convictions. Because it is appropriate to consider a wide ambit of facts and circumstances surrounding an attorney's commission of a crime during an evidentiary hearing in a referral proceeding, the State Bar met historic notice requirements by alerting respondent that evidence could be introduced on the facts and circumstances surrounding his assault conviction. The review department held the State Bar was not further required to provide respondent written notice of all the facts it considered germane to the referral proceeding at the time it started or respondent's default was entered for failure to reply to the notice of hearing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [1 a–d]

In conviction referral proceeding, ample due process protections were afforded to respondent where the State Bar served him via certified mail with a copy of the conviction referral order along with written notice that informed him of the specific conviction that was subject to the referral and of the specific issues to be decided at the hearing, warned him of the specific consequences of failure to timely reply, and directed him to attend the hearing to present evidence on his behalf and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Further, the motion for entry of default, also served by certified mail, again warned respondent of the consequences of his failure to participate and notified him of the minimum level of discipline the State Bar would recommend if the hearing judge found culpability. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [2]

While allegations in an original proceeding are deemed admitted after a default is entered, in a conviction referral matter, even after a default, the State Bar must prove by clear and convincing evidence any facts or circumstances it maintains are relevant to the conviction. If respondent in conviction referral proceeding had replied instead of defaulting, he could have sought to discover the State Bar's contentions of specific facts surrounding the conviction, and the court could have required the parties to exchange pretrial statements to identify factual contentions still in dispute before trial. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 110 [3]

To the extent that the grade of a crime, i.e., felony or misdemeanor, would influence the most significant actions following criminal conviction - eligibility for interim suspension, or summary disbarment - those issues are reserved to the review department rather than the hearing department. In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [2]

The primary consequence of an order determining the grade of a crime for State Bar disciplinary purposes would be as to the evidence presented on the question of degree of discipline to recommend or impose should moral turpitude or misconduct warranting discipline be found. On the issue of degree of discipline, the ultimate grade of a crime, together with other mitigating evidence, could bear on the ultimate result. In the Matter of Jackson (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 610. [3]

The State Bar is required by statute to disclose to criminal investigatory agencies certain incriminating information discovered about an attorney as a result of an investigation or formal proceeding. The State Bar also is obligated by statute to refer all convictions to the State Bar Court. Where it appeared that the State Bar complied with these statutory duties by disclosing information to federal authorities well before the start of trial in an earlier original proceeding and by notifying the State Bar Court after respondent sustained a federal conviction, there was no evidence that the subsequent State Bar Court conviction proceeding was the product of vindictive prosecution tactics of the State Bar. In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601. [1]

A disciplinary proceeding arising from conviction of a crime is fundamentally different from and a complete alternative to an original proceeding brought under Business and Professions Code section 6075 et seq. The streamlined procedures following an attorney's conviction of a crime rest on proceedings in the criminal courts in which the burden is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These procedures recognize that the basis for attorney discipline is not the provable violation of a rule of professional conduct but the mere existence of a certified copy of an attorney's record of conviction. Only convictions which do not inherently involve moral turpitude are referred for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether there is a legal basis for imposing discipline, but even in these cases guilt is conclusively established by the record of conviction and is not subject to collateral attack. Thus, where a conviction proceeding was commenced in the State Bar Court, which proceeding arose from the same underlying facts as an earlier original proceeding in the State Bar Court, neither res judicata nor collateral estoppel acted as a bar to the conviction proceeding, since neither the issues nor the causes of action in the two types of proceedings are the same.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[2 a-g]

Except in conviction proceedings eligible for summary disbarment, in determining the degree of discipline to be imposed in a conviction proceeding where an earlier original proceeding rested on the same underlying facts, a court should take into consideration any discipline imposed in the earlier original proceeding. To assess the appropriate discipline in the conviction proceeding, and to ensure fundamental fairness, a court should consider: (1) whether discipline in the conviction proceeding is needed to protect the public or the courts or to maintain the integrity of the administration of justice; (2) the extent to which the hearing judge or the parties in the original proceeding addressed the underlying facts supporting the criminal conviction which forms the basis for the subsequent conviction proceeding; (3) whether the criminal conviction yielded any relevant information that was not considered by the hearing judge in the original proceeding; (4) whether the discipline imposed in the conviction proceeding would unfairly duplicate any discipline actually imposed in the original proceeding, or would otherwise be unfair to the respondent; and (5) the extent to which the public policy sought to be protected in the original proceeding relates to the public policy sought to be protected in the criminal conviction which forms the basis for the conviction proceeding.In the Matter of Curtis (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 601.[3 a, b]

Respondent was not found guilty of criminal charges in Michigan based on the identical facts underlying his Michigan discipline. However, it is well settled in California that dismissal or acquittal of criminal charges does not bar disciplinary proceedings covering the same facts.In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157.[5]

Where factual findings were used by the hearing judge to find culpability, it would be improper to again consider those same findings as factors in aggravation. In the Matter of Duxbury (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 61.[7]

Respondent's convictions of making false statements to federally insured financial institution to influence action on loans, felonies involving moral turpitude, did not occur in respondent's practice of law or in manner such that a client was victim. Thus, respondent's convictions did not meet statutory criteria for disbarment under former version of summary disbarment statute that was in effect between 1986 and January 1, 1997. And respondent's summary disbarment was warranted, if at all, only under present version of statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51.[1 a-c]

Retroactive law is one that affects rights, obligations, acts, transactions, or conditions performed or existing before adoption of law. Even though respondent's criminal convictions occurred after January 1, 1997, effective date of present version of the summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)), respondent committed criminal acts underlying those convictions before January 1, 1997, effective date. Thus, respondent's summary disbarment under present version of statute would be improper retroactive application of statute because, but for amendments to statute effective January 1, 1997, respondent would not be subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51.[2 a-c]

In two situations, applying statute to acts before statute's effective date are not retroactive application of statute: when statute merely clarifies, rather than substantially changes law; and when statute changes trial procedure, but does not change legal consequences of parties' past conduct. Amendments effective January 1, 1997, to summary disbarment statute (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6102, subd. (c)) are not clarifying or procedural because they significantly broadened scope of crimes for which attorneys are subject to summary disbarment. In the Matter of Jebbia (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 51.[3 a-c]

Only as to matters in which a conviction is referred by the review department for a hearing and recommendation as to discipline and thereafter considered by the Supreme Court, will the Supreme Court consider all facts underlying a conviction when deciding on the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Weber (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 942.[1]

An attorney's criminal conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is deemed a conviction for attorney disciplinary purposes and is conclusive proof of the attorney's guilt on each of the essential elements of the offense of which the attorney was convicted. Thus, respondent cannot collaterally attack his conviction in the State Bar Court even though the victim of respondent's crime lost her civil lawsuit against respondent for damages. In the Matter of Posthuma (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 813. [4]

Even though the criminal plea agreement on which respondent was convicted dealt with only one of the multiple criminal counts initially filed against him, the State Bar Court's inquiry was not limited to the conviction on that one count to determine the appropriate discipline, but included review of all the surrounding circumstances. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [1]

In a conviction referral proceeding involving respondent's misdemeanor conviction of being an accessory after the fact in connection with the submission of false information to a federally insured bank for the purpose of inducing it to loan money to respondent for the purchase of a farm (18 U.S.C. §1014), respondent's contention that, at the time she obtained the loan, she fully expected the farm to succeed and to repay the loan in full might avoid a finding in aggravation, but did not entitle her to any mitigating credit. Respondent was not entitled to any credit for merely intending to do that which she contracted to do. In the Matter of Sawyer (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 765. [4]

The only prerequisite to initiating a conviction referral proceeding against an attorney in the State Bar Court is a guilty plea by the attorney or a guilty verdict rendered against the attorney. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [1]

Criminal court's lenient sentence did not change the nature of respondent's convictions of felony conspiracy to commit theft and theft for disciplinary purposes and was therefore not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [7]

Respondent waived any due process violation resulting from the State Bar's failure to notify him in the notice of hearing that the cancellation of his license to practice law would be an issue at the trial where he did not allege in his appellant's brief, with supporting references to the record, that he presented his lack of notice objection to, and obtained a ruling on it from, the hearing judge. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [8]

Even though statutes authorizing conviction referral proceedings authorize only the disbarment or suspension of attorneys convicted of crimes, the State Bar Court still had jurisdiction in conviction matter to recommend to the Supreme Court that it cancel respondent's license to practice law. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [9]

Respondent's willful failure to disclose his arrest and pending trial on felony charges by updating his answers to the moral character questions on his initial application for admission to practice law was a fraud upon the Supreme Court because it allowed him to admitted without adequate consideration of his moral character. Thus, the State Bar Court may recommend that his license to practice be revoked without addressing the nature of his crimes or the facts and circumstances surrounding them. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [12]

Unless the most compelling of mitigating circumstances clearly predominate, disbarment is the appropriate discipline in cases involving convictions of serious crimes involving moral turpitude. The nature and extent of respondent's felony conviction of conspiracy to commit theft and theft, alone, established his unfitness to practice law. Likewise, the facts and circumstances surrounding his crimes, the numerous aggravating circumstances, and the lack of any substantial mitigating circumstance further convinced the review department that respondent remained unfit to practice unless and until he established by clear and convincing evidence in a reinstatement proceeding that he was rehabilitated. Accordingly, disbarment was recommended. In the Matter of Ike (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 483. [13]

Although the record indicated that respondent was not likely to commit similar misconduct in the future, the discipline system also has a responsibility to preserve the integrity of the legal profession. That concern persuaded the review department that public discipline, including a period of suspension, was warranted for an attorney's conviction of assault with a firearm, with the enhancement that he discharged a firearm at an occupied motor vehicle which caused great bodily injury to the person of another. However, given the totality of the circumstances, including the fact that respondent had already been interimly suspended for ten and one-half months as the result of his conviction, and comparable case law, the review department did not believe that a period of prospective actual suspension was necessary. Accordingly, it recommended a period of stayed suspension along with a period of probation with conditions. In the Matter of Burns (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 406. [6]

Notice to show cause under rule 550 of Transitional Rules of Procedure of State Bar is not required in conviction referral proceeding. Pursuant to Supreme Court's delegation of authority to State Bar Court in conviction referral matters (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(a)), only State Bar Court referral order and notice of time and place of hearing are needed to initiate a conviction referral proceeding. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [2]

Supreme Court and State Bar Court have unquestioned jurisdiction over attorneys' convictions of crime whether or not they are eligible for summary disbarment. There is no requirement that notice of time and place of hearing in conviction referral matter charge commission of "serious" offense for which admonition would be unavailable (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 415), or offense for which State Bar Court may recommend summary disbarment. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [3]

Where referral order arising out of attorney's criminal conviction calls for hearing and decision on degree of discipline to recommend if hearing judge finds that facts and circumstances surrounding conviction involve moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline, hearing judge may consider wide variety of evidence surrounding conviction as part of relevant facts and circumstances. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [4]

Disciplinary conviction referral cases in which assaultive behavior was the principal offense have generally resulted in suspension of varying degrees. In matter arising from misdemeanor conviction for battery on police officer, it was an aggravating circumstance that respondent provoked a dangerous and risky confrontation with police responding to his own domestic disturbance notwithstanding respondent's significant experience as a practicing lawyer in handling family law matters. Where this and other aggravating circumstances clearly outweighed mitigating ones, discipline of two years stayed suspension, two years probation, and 60 days actual suspension was abundantly fair and warranted. In the Matter of Stewart (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 52. [10]

An attorney convicted of a felony is chargeable with notice that the crime remains a felony for State Bar discipline purposes irrespective of whether in a particular case the crime may be considered a misdemeanor as a result of post-conviction proceedings. Under some circumstances, prosecutorial discretion in originally charging a particular crime as a felony rather than a misdemeanor may raise questions as to the propriety of summary disbarment, but no such issue was presented where there was no evidence of abuse of discretion or other unfairness in charging forgery of a court document as a felony. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [3]

The Legislature itself has recognized that the inherent authority of the Supreme Court controls the outcome in disciplinary proceedings. It is therefore incumbent upon the review department not only to review the statutory criteria for summary disbarment, but also to review Supreme Court precedent to assure that application of statutory summary disbarment does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. In the Matter of Salameh (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 729. [4]

The question of the proper degree of discipline in a conviction referral matter may rest on a wide scope of evidence not directly connected with the crimes themselves. Evidence that respondent's real estate license had been revoked over a year before his crimes was improperly excluded from rebuttal evidence. Such evidence was not an essential element of the State Bar's case in chief, and could properly be reserved to rebut respondent's contention that his crimes were aberrational. In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679. [9]

The conclusive effect of an attorney's criminal conviction merely establishes for State Bar purposes that the attorney committed the acts necessary to constitute the offense. Whether those acts amount to professional misconduct, in the context of a crime that does not necessarily involve moral turpitude, is a conclusion that can only be reached by an examination of the facts and circumstances surrounding the conviction. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [6]

Where the crime for which an attorney has been convicted does not inherently involve moral turpitude, a review of comparable case law and an examination of the particular facts and circumstances of the criminal conduct must be made in order to determine if cause for professional discipline exists. In the Matter of Respondent O (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 581. [10]

Summary disbarment excludes the opportunity for an evidentiary hearing. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [1]

Where respondent embezzled funds from a deceased former client's estate while serving as the estate's executor, but not its attorney, neither the estate nor the beneficiaries of the estate were respondent's clients, nor did respondent commit the offense in the practice of law. In the Matter of Lilly (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 473. [6]

Normally, no published opinion results from a petition to set aside an interim suspension order based on a criminal conviction. Where final discipline had not been entered and might not be warranted, the review department could not determine whether it was appropriate to publicize respondent's name in connection with opinion and order vacating interim suspension. Opinion therefore did not name respondent, although proceeding remained public. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [1]

Although drunk driving is a serious societal problem, it may or may not become a matter subject to professional discipline. Where an interim suspension order would impose a degree of discipline far more severe than the probable final discipline, the range of final discipline is dispositive of the good cause requirement for vacating the order. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [6]

A stipulated disciplinary order does not constitute precedent, but does represent a determination by the Office of the Chief Trial Counsel and the hearing judge that the degree of discipline ordered satisfies the need to protect the public, the courts, and the legal profession; to maintain high professional standards by attorneys; and to preserve public confidence in the legal profession. In the Matter of Respondent M (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 465. [11]

Where respondent was convicted after being admitted to practice law for criminal conduct occurring before such admission, there was statutory authority for disciplining respondent as an attorney, based on the conviction. Had the conviction occurred earlier, the disciplinary system would still have had jurisdiction over the misconduct under the Supreme Court's inherent authority. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [1]

Whether a suspension is interim or actual, the effect on the attorney is the same. The issue is what is the appropriate total length of suspension under the circumstances of each case. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [7]

In recommending discipline in a matter arising from a criminal conviction, the State Bar Court is not limited to examining only the elements of the offense in question, but is obligated to look at all facts and circumstances surrounding the offense to assess the respondent's fitness as an attorney. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [9]

In 1990, the majority of the California Supreme Court expressly declined to determine whether a nexus between criminal conduct and the practice of law is required in order to impose professional discipline based on a criminal conviction. The Court unanimously agreed, however, that it would be unreasonable to hold attorneys to such a high standard of conduct that every violation of law, however minor, would constitute a ground for professional discipline. Thus, the integrity of the profession does not require professional discipline in addition to criminal sanctions for every violation of law by an attorney. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [2]

Where an attorney is convicted of a crime which does not inherently involve moral turpitude, the attorney's conviction is referred to the State Bar Court Hearing Department for a determination whether the facts and circumstances surrounding the crime involved moral turpitude or other misconduct warranting discipline, and to determine the appropriate disposition. Upon a referral of that type, the appropriate disposition can include dismissal of the proceedings if the hearing judge finds that the particular misconduct did not warrant professional discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [4]

In addressing the constitutionality of imposing professional discipline for criminal conduct not involving moral turpitude, the State Bar Court must endeavor to interpret the "other misconduct warranting discipline" standard to render its application in the particular case constitutional. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [6]

A due process challenge to a discipline proceeding based on vagueness is appropriate where the misconduct involved is not clearly within the scope of a disciplinary standard and the standard is so broad that people of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [7]

Where respondent clearly was on notice that drinking and driving could result in criminal penalties, and it was established law that any vehicular homicide or felony conviction resulting from drunk driving could result in professional discipline, respondent apparently had sufficient notice that criminal behavior of driving under the influence could, depending on circumstances, result in professional discipline. However, review department declined to decide notice issue where disciplinary proceeding was dismissed on another ground. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [8]

Evidence that an attorney has taken steps to deal with an alcohol problem is mitigating evidence that may properly be taken into account in determining the degree and nature of discipline, but does not eliminate the initial misconduct as an appropriate basis for discipline. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [11]

Where compelling mitigation is present, a case which involves a misdemeanor conviction that otherwise would be an appropriate basis for discipline may result in dismissal in the interests of justice. In the Matter of Respondent I (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 260. [12]

An attorney's criminal misconduct is aggravated when the attorney's previous experiences demonstrate that the attorney was aware of the issues involved in the criminal behavior. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 208. [4]

Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), providing for summary disbarment of attorneys convicted of crimes meeting the criteria set forth in the statute, must be read in the context of the statutory scheme of the State Bar Act as a whole, which indicates the Legislature's intent to defer to the Supreme Court's inherent authority to judge each case on its merits and disbar or suspend pursuant to its own view of the record. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [3]

Before recommending to the Supreme Court that an attorney be summarily disbarred pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6102 (c), the State Bar Court has a duty to analyze the record in light of the case law to assure that application of section 6102 (c) does not conflict with Supreme Court standards for disbarment. The State Bar Court will only order a hearing if Supreme Court precedent supports a lesser sanction than disbarment for the particular crime depending on circumstances which might be adduced at a disciplinary hearing. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [7]

Rule 951(a), California Rules of Court, delegating certain powers to the State Bar Court regarding the discipline of attorneys convicted of crimes, limits the State Bar Court to recommending summary disbarment to the Supreme Court, rather than imposing it directly. In the Matter of Segall (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 71. [9]

No question on respondent's application for admission to practice law called upon respondent, as an applicant, to reveal criminal conduct for which respondent had not yet been convicted or arrested and for which respondent was not awaiting trial. If any such question had been asked, respondent would have had a good argument for withholding information that would lead to criminal liability. Nothing in respondent's manner of completing the application, or in respondent's subsequent two-month delay in reporting to the State Bar a criminal indictment handed down after the application was completed, undermined respondent's showing of rehabilitation from pre-admission criminal conduct. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [1]

If an attorney engages in criminal conduct, it is not a minimum requirement for rehabilitation that the attorney turn himself or herself in to law enforcement authorities. Where the attorney was not hiding from anyone except those who wished him to resume his criminal activities; he cooperated fully with law enforcement once asked, and he presented character witnesses who attested to his current good character, the hearing judge's finding of rehabilitation was appropriate. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [2]

Where an attorney previously involved in serious drug abuse had ceased such abuse unilaterally and did not present any expert evidence of current freedom from substance abuse, and the attorney did not submit any evidence of present learning and ability in the law following an interim suspension the length of which exceeded the attorney's prior period of licensure, public protection would be served by continuing the attorney's actual suspension until the attorney established freedom from drug dependency and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [4]

A conviction for driving under the influence is not professional misconduct on its face; whether such a conviction involves misconduct warranting discipline depends on consideration of all the facts and circumstances. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [1]

Where the Supreme Court's order referring a conviction matter to the State Bar required the State Bar Court to determine whether the conviction involved misconduct warranting discipline, the order demonstrated that the attorney's conviction alone did not establish that the attorney was culpable of professional misconduct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 756. [2]

In criminal conviction matters, the State Bar Court is not limited to examining only the elements of the criminal offense, but is obligated to look at all facts and circumstances surrounding the offense to assess the respondent's fitness as an attorney. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [3]

Where a certain set of facts was considered by the criminal court at the time of respondent's sentencing, and notice of such consideration was given to respondent at the time, there was sufficient notice to respondent prior to his disciplinary hearing of the relevance of such facts, and since respondent had an opportunity to present evidence on the issue at the disciplinary hearing, due process did not require remanding the case for submission of additional exculpatory evidence. In the Matter of DeMassa (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [4]

One distinction between an interim suspension order and a final order of discipline is the type of record before the court. At the interim suspension stage, the court has the criminal conviction and a statutory mandate to order interim suspension absent a showing of good cause. The petitioner has the burden of showing good cause to set aside an order of interim suspension, and no evidentiary hearing has occurred to test alleged mitigating factors. Thus, contested facts cannot be relied upon as a basis for vacating the order of interim suspension. In the Matter of Meza (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 608. [4]

Where respondent in conviction matter had been ordered to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, at the time of respondent's interim suspension, and that suspension had remained in effect continuously since ordered, review department did not recommend that respondent be ordered to comply again in connection with final imposition of discipline. In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [16]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, declarations submitted by respondent in which clients attested to respondent's character and legal abilities were properly disregarded as irrelevant, because neither declarant was present during the incident underlying the convictions nor did the declarations contain any information which could shed light on the incident. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [1]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, arresting officer's testimony regarding observations of witnesses at the scene was not hearsay and was properly admitted. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [3]

In proceeding to determine whether criminal convictions involved moral turpitude, the arresting officer's testimony describing a victim's retelling of the incident was hearsay, but was properly admitted because respondent waived hearsay objection by failing to appear at the hearing. The review department independently reviewed the hearsay evidence, found sufficient trustworthiness, and concluded it was properly relied on by the referee. In the Matter of Frascinella (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 543. [5]

Delays in disciplinary proceedings merit consideration only if they have caused specific, legally cognizable prejudice (e.g., by impairing the presentation of evidence). Where respondent was not prepared to state that his case would have been stronger if no delays had occurred, and respondent received credit for time on interim suspension following conviction, respondent failed to demonstrate prejudice from delay in disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [1]

In conviction referral proceedings, discipline is imposed according to the gravity of the crime and the circumstances of the case. In examining such circumstances, the court may look beyond the specific elements of a crime to the whole course of an attorney's conduct as it reflects upon the attorney's fitness to practice law. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [2]

Where respondent in conviction matter had complied with rule 955, California Rules of Court at time of respondent's interim suspension, and had not practiced since, order to comply with rule 955 again upon imposition of final discipline was not necessary. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [16]

Where respondent's two convictions were interconnected in their surrounding facts and circumstances, and where the record in the earlier matter lacked information regarding respondent's compliance with his criminal probation and his subsequent rehabilitation, a remand of the first matter and consolidation with the subsequent, related matter would be appropriate, in order to give the Supreme Court a single, more complete record and a single recommendation of discipline, if any. In the Matter of Anderson (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 39. [6]

1700 Issues in Probation Cases

1710 Special Issues in Probation Revocation Cases

1711 Special Procedural Issues

The review department reduced hearing judge's recommended two-year stayed suspension to one year in view of the limits of suspension contained in rule 562, Rules of Procedure of the State Bar. In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567. [9]

Respondent's argument that the State Bar should be estopped from raising the timeliness of his motion to modify the probation was rejected. It is not at all clear that estoppel is applicable in this disciplinary proceeding. Estoppel will not ordinarily lie against a governmental agency if the result will be the frustration of a strong public policy. The goals of attorney discipline - protection of the public, courts and legal profession - are strong public policy considerations that militate against applying the doctrine. Even if estoppel were applicable, respondent failed to demonstrate a factual basis for the claim as he failed to show that the State Bar's actions were intended to be acted upon by him to his injury and that he was ignorant of the true state of facts. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [2]

Considerations of due process and fundamental fairness require, under the circumstances presented in this case, an examination of both respondent's ability to pay the restitution and his efforts at acquiring the resources to pay. Respondent presented evidence of his income, but not of his assets and expenses. While respondent's income was not significant during the relevant period of time, it was not conclusive or persuasive when considered outside the context of total assets and expenses. The evidence presented regarding respondent's efforts at acquiring the resources to pay the restitution was also lacking. Based on the above, the review department concluded that no circumstances were presented showing that it would be fundamentally unfair to revoke respondent's probation in this case. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [4]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has the exclusive jurisdiction to conduct investigations and bring disciplinary charges. The State Bar may file disciplinary charges if it finds in its discretion that there is reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. Upon reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated a condition or conditions of probation, the State Bar may file either an original disciplinary proceeding based on the violation or a motion to revoke probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [1]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has exclusive jurisdiction to supervise members placed on probation and exclusive authority to initiate probation revocation proceedings. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court retains plenary authority over the regulation and discipline of attorneys. Neither the statutes nor the rules of procedure limit the Supreme Court's plenary authority. The Supreme Court may, in the exercise of its plenary authority, impose a hearing judge supervised probation condition regardless of the statutes and rules covering disciplinary proceedings. By imposing such a probation condition, the Supreme Court would necessarily confer jurisdiction on the hearing judge to monitor compliance. Thus, the review department did not find persuasive the State Bar's argument that the hearing judge lacked jurisdiction to supervise probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [2]

The current procedures squarely place on the State Bar the responsibility of monitoring, investigating, and initiating proceedings alleging probation violations. Imposing a hearing judge supervised probation condition presented a number of problems under this structure. The review department declined to recommend such a condition, especially where, as here, there was no showing that the procedures in place for probation proceedings were not adequate to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [3]

As respondent had a substance abuse problem, an appropriate substance abuse condition of probation was warranted. The review department did not have the entire record before it on summary review and was unable to determine a suitable condition. It therefore remanded the case to the hearing judge. As the modification of one probation condition may require the modification of other conditions, the review department did not limit the hearing judge on remand to reconsideration of the substance abuse condition alone. The hearing judge could reconsider the entire discipline recommendation, including the probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [4]

The State Bar can prosecute a probation violation by way of a motion to revoke probation, or by way of an original disciplinary proceeding based on a violation of the Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). It was not error to charge a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 in this original disciplinary proceeding. The gravamen of this case was respondent's failure to comply with the conditions of his probation. Regardless of the statute charged, the proceeding was based on a violation of section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Where respondent was charged with violating disciplinary probation conditions by failing to submit evidence of having obtained assistance from a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, respondent could be found culpable only of failing to comply with requirement that he submit such evidence, and not of failing to comply with requirement that he obtain such assistance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [8]

A respondent may be disciplined only for misconduct properly charged in the notice to show cause. In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause charged that respondent failed to deliver financial records to an accountant, and hearing judge found that respondent failed to render an accounting, respondent was properly found culpable of failing to deliver the records, based on his admission by default of the allegations of the notice to show cause. Respondent's failure to file quarterly reports other than those listed in the notice to show cause could not be used as a basis for culpability or as aggravating circumstances in a default matter. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [1]

Documentary evidence of communications to respondent from probation department regarding interpretation of probation conditions was judicially noticeable. It was not admissible to show truth of statements contained in such documents; for that purpose, it was hearsay. However, it was admissible to show that respondent had notice of probation department's interpretation, which was relevant to issue of respondent's good faith. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [13]

Written report from respondent's probation monitor was inadmissible as hearsay where it did not establish that respondent had notice of anything unless probation monitor's recitals of what he told respondent were accepted as true. However, where such evidence was merely cumulative on question of notice, any reliance thereon by hearing judge was harmless error. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [14]

Attorney could not be found culpable of violating probation by failing to respond to an inquiry from the State Bar Court, as required by conditions of his probation, where the notice to show cause in the probation revocation proceeding referred only to the requirement to file quarterly reports, an independent probation condition, and such charge would be factually duplicative of previously-adjudicated charge of failing to file quarterly report. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [2]

Probation revocation proceedings are disciplinary proceedings, and no additional discipline can be imposed for a breach of probation absent proof of such violation in conformity with fundamental due process (notice and an opportunity to be heard), as set forth in rules 612-613, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [4]

1711.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 5, Ch. 2 (rules 5.310-5.317)

1712 Wilfulness

Neither bad purpose nor intentional evil is required to establish willful violations of disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567. [1]

Wilfulness for purposes of probation revocation (and other disciplinary) proceedings is simply a general purpose or willingness to commit an act or to make an omission; it does not require any intent to violate the law or the probation condition and does not necessarily involve bad faith. Moreover, wilfulness does not require actual knowledge of the provision violated. Respondent admitted that he did not pay the restitution, and there was no evidence in the record suggesting that this omission was other than a purposeful act. Thus, the failure to pay the restitution was unquestionably wilful under the above definitions. Whether respondent believed that he had no obligation to pay the money because the restitution was discharged in his bankruptcy was simply not relevant to the issue of the wilfulness of his failure to pay, as it need not be shown that respondent intended the consequences of his omission or was even aware of the disciplinary provision he was violating. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [3]

Wilfully failing to comply fully with a disciplinary probation condition constitutes a violation of the statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline. Wilfulness in this context requires merely that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, knew what he was doing or not doing and intended either to commit the act or abstain from committing it. The violation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Substantial compliance is insufficient to avoid culpability on this charge, and any good faith on the part of the attorney is relevant to mitigation rather than culpability. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Where respondent's failure to make restitution payments required by disciplinary probation was due to lack of income, but respondent did not attempt to have restitution requirement modified, and did not demonstrate that he made sufficient good faith efforts to acquire resources to pay restitution, respondent was culpable of gross negligence which violated conditions of probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [5]

Where respondent believed that after notice to show cause in disciplinary probation revocation proceeding had been filed, his probation was terminated and he no longer needed to comply with probation reporting requirement, but respondent took no steps to ascertain whether this belief was correct, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to file required probation report, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [7]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation filed a tardy quarterly probation report which failed to comply with requirements for such report, and did not present a complete report for over three months after it was due, respondent's failure to file the report timely was a wilful breach of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [2]

Where respondent had stipulated to discipline requiring restitution payments to be made by certain dates, and respondent did not set aside funds to make such restitution as soon as his own stipulation required first payment to be made, and where respondent had no credible excuse for failing to make at least first required payment at a time when respondent had significant income, respondent's failure to make at least partial restitution was a wilful violation of his probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [4]

It is the responsibility of an attorney on probation to comply with a probation condition requiring the attorney to meet with an assigned probation monitor referee. Even if respondent encountered difficulty in setting up such a meeting, where respondent did not seek the assistance of the State Bar Court's clerk's office, and instead permitted a substantial delay to pass before the required meeting occurred, respondent's neglect constituted a wilful breach of his probation duties. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [13]

It was unreasonable for respondent to believe that he had been excused by his probation monitor referee from filing one of the quarterly reports clearly required by his probation conditions, where respondent knew of his duty to file the quarterly reports timely and knew the exact dates on which those reports were due. Respondent therefore breached his probation duties by failing to file the report. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [14]

Evidence needed to establish culpability of failure to comply with probation conditions regarding content of required quarterly reports was (1) text of probation conditions in question; (2) evidence that respondent had notice of such conditions; (3) text of quarterly reports at issue, and (4) evidence of wilful failure to comply with probation conditions, which was established by respondent's testimony that statement at issue was not included in reports due to respondent's interpretation of probation conditions. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [2]

Violations of probation require the same mental state to justify discipline as violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court. For such purposes, wilfulness need not involve bad faith; a general purpose or willingness to comment an act or permit an omission is sufficient. Accordingly, despite respondent's asserted good faith belief that probation reports were sufficient, respondent's intentional failure to include a required statement in such reports was wilful for purposes of a probation violation. Respondent's subjective intentions were relevant only with regard to aggravation and mitigation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [6]

Notwithstanding omission of term "wilful" from statute and rule governing imposition of discipline for probation violations, wilfulness is a necessary element to establish culpability in a probation revocation case alleging failure to pay restitution. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [6]

Although attorney disciplinary proceedings are sui generis and not criminal in nature, rules of criminal law may provide guidance in appropriate circumstances; case law and statutes in criminal law indicate that lack of wilfulness constitutes a reason not to revoke probation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [7]

In disciplinary cases arising from violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, a showing of wilfulness requires only a "general purpose or willingness" to commit the act or suffer the omission, and need not involve bad faith. The same definition of wilfulness applies to the mental state required to justify discipline for violations of probation conditions. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [8]

As with the treatment of failure to pay restitution in reinstatement and criminal probation cases, in a disciplinary proceeding for failure to make timely restitution as a condition of attorney disciplinary probation, due process requires an examination of the probationer's ability to make restitution and the sufficiency and good faith of the probationer's efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [11]

A wilful breach of respondent's restitution duty was established where respondent: (1) had the financial ability to make some restitution payments during the period when he had not done so; (2) repeatedly chose to pursue professional goals which foreseeably rendered him financially unable to make timely restitution; (3) failed to protect his funds from attachment by creditors; and (4) failed to seek an extension of time to make his restitution payments. His conduct showed a conscious disregard of his restitution obligations and a failure to make sufficient good faith efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [12]

1713 Standard of Proof

The review department rejected the argument that respondent was not culpable of violating probation conditions because he was actually suspended from the practice of law during the entire time that the probation conditions were in effect as a result of other disciplinary orders and therefore his probation was de facto revoked. The Supreme Court placed respondent on probation and the order was not revoked or modified. If respondent believed that subsequent events impacted the order, or if he was unclear of the requirements of the order, he could have raised the issue with the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court, which he did not do. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [1]

The review department rejected the argument that substantial compliance with a probation condition was a defense to culpability. Disciplinary probation serves the critical function of protecting the public and rehabilitating the attorney. The importance of these goals makes distinctions between substantial and insubstantial or technical violations of probation inappropriate. However, for purposes of discipline, not every probation violation should be treated the same. Belated compliance with a probation condition may be considered as a mitigating factor in determining discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2]

Wilfully failing to comply fully with a disciplinary probation condition constitutes a violation of the statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline. Wilfulness in this context requires merely that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, knew what he was doing or not doing and intended either to commit the act or abstain from committing it. The violation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Substantial compliance is insufficient to avoid culpability on this charge, and any good faith on the part of the attorney is relevant to mitigation rather than culpability. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Evidence needed to establish culpability of failure to comply with probation conditions regarding content of required quarterly reports was (1) text of probation conditions in question; (2) evidence that respondent had notice of such conditions; (3) text of quarterly reports at issue, and (4) evidence of wilful failure to comply with probation conditions, which was established by respondent's testimony that statement at issue was not included in reports due to respondent's interpretation of probation conditions. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [2]

The question of how a court order should be interpreted is a question of law for the court, not a question of fact, and the parties' subjective beliefs as to its meaning are not relevant to the court's interpretation. Whether language of respondent's probation reports complied with requirements of probation conditions was a legal issue, not a factual one. Moreover, probation order was a Supreme Court order, not a contract, and rules of contract interpretation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [4]

For the purpose of determining culpability for violation of restitution requirement imposed as condition of disciplinary probation, it is inappropriate to distinguish between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" violations. Restitution conditions are as significant as the notification requirements in rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court, as to which the Supreme Court has declined to draw such a distinction. The importance of the goals of restitution makes distinctions between "substantial" and "insubstantial" or "technical" failures to make restitution inappropriate. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [9]

1714 Issues re Degree of Discipline Available or Appropriate

In order to make a showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title IV, Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, and be relieved from suspension, an attorney can petition as early as six months before the earliest date that the actual suspension may terminate. Also, since these proceedings are expedited, an attorney could demonstrate rehabilitation, fitness to practice law and present learning and ability in the general law without necessarily extending his or her actual suspension period. In probation revocation proceedings, the rules of procedure limit the actual suspension that can be imposed to the total amount of stayed execution originally imposed. However, a standard 1.4(c)(ii) condition does not necessarily extend the actual suspension of a respondent where a showing can be made within the period of actual suspension. Therefore, the review department concluded that the State Bar Court was not prohibited from recommending such a condition in a probation revocation proceeding even though the condition could result in an actual suspension that exceeded the length of the originally imposed stayed suspension. To do otherwise would permit respondent to violate probation and resume the practice of law after being suspended for over five years, without ever making a showing of his rehabilitation, fitness to practice law or his learning and ability in the general law, thus defeating the important level of public protection regularly recommended in lengthy suspensions.In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.[2 a-c]

The hearing judge gave little weight to respondent's prior discipline because he found that the nature of the violations in this matter did not raise a serious concern about public protection or demonstrate that respondent had failed to undertake steps towards rehabilitation. The review department disagreed. This was the third matter that had been brought by the State Bar as the result of respondent's failure to make timely restitution to his client. At this point, respondent should have had a heightened awareness of his need for strict compliance with his reporting and payment obligations. The fact that his present probation violations were closely related to his past disciplinary infractions raised concerns about respondent's rehabilitation. Ordinarily, when there is a close nexus between previous misconduct and the present probation violation, a substantially greater degree of discipline is needed than would otherwise be necessary. The review department assigned significant weight in aggravation because of respondent's prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.[1]

Although the review department was sympathetic with respondent's claim that if he was actually suspended from practice for an extended period he would be unable to make timely restitution payments, it could not excuse a degree of discipline that was otherwise warranted. If avoidance of actual suspension were a prerequisite for respondent's continued restitution payments, it would have been more appropriate for respondent to have resolved his restitution obligation, thereby obviating this very proceeding.In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.[3]

Protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney are the primary aims of disciplinary probation. It is for this reason that discipline imposed for the wilful violation of probation often calls for substantial discipline as a reflection of the seriousness with which compliance with probationary duties is held. An attorney who wilfully violates a significant condition of probation, such as restitution, can anticipate actual suspension as the expected result, absent compelling mitigating circumstances. Here, respondent should have recognized the serious consequences of his failures to timely pay restitution and file quarterly reports because of his previous encounters with the State Bar disciplinary system. Furthermore, when, as here, an attorney commits multiple violations of the same probation condition, the gravity of each successive violation increases, resulting in more severe discipline. Balancing all relevant facts and circumstances, the review department determined that the 90-day actual suspension recommended by the hearing judge was sufficient to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation, but that an additional condition should be added that requires respondent's continued actual suspension until restitution was fully paid to his client. This was intended as an incentive to respondent to be pro-active in his efforts to satisfy his restitution obligations and bring to a conclusion this 10-year saga with the State Bar, and was necessary to ensure respondent's timely and full compliance. In reaching this conclusion, the review department took into account respondent's belated but complete satisfaction of his restitution and reporting conditions in the face of ongoing financial difficulties, the fact that all of the violations related to one client matter, and that the client testified that respondent had shown concern about his inability to pay and exhibited courteousness towards her. The need to protect the public by imposing a significantly longer period of stayed suspension was therefore diminished. In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.[4 a, b]

Even if attorney had properly supported claim that he would lose his employment as deputy district attorney if he were actually suspended for probation revocation, it would not have excused a different degree of discipline than that which would have otherwise been warranted.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[3]

More serious sanctions are assigned to probation violations closely related to reasons for imposition of previous discipline or to rehabilitation. Attorney's probation violation for not timely completing restitution to client was both centrally related to trust account violations underlying attorney's prior discipline and closely related to rehabilitation.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[6 a-b]

Discipline for willful violation of disciplinary probation often calls for actual suspension to reflect seriousness with which compliance with probation duties is held. Attorney who willfully violates a significant probation condition, such as restitution, can anticipate actual suspension in absence of compelling mitigating circumstances.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[7]

Where probation conditions in prior disciplinary proceeding were imposed as part of a stipulated disposition, appropriate level of discipline in probation revocation proceeding for respondent's admitted failure to complete restitution payments until nine months past the deadline and to complete ethics school until six weeks past the deadline included a 30-day period of actual suspension in addition to a period of stayed suspension and an extension of probation as the hearing judge recommended.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[8]

In probation revocation proceedings the greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection or showing the probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. The significance of restitution is its probative value as an indicator of rehabilitation, not the repayment of the underlying indebtedness. Requiring restitution serves the rehabilitative and public protection goals of disciplinary probation by forcing attorneys to confront in concrete terms the consequences of the attorney's misconduct. Thus, a probationer's attitude toward the restitution is a significant factor to be weighed. In the stipulation to facts and disposition in the underlying disciplinary case, respondent asserted that he was financially unable to pay the sanctions. Yet, he agreed to pay restitution as a condition of probation. After the Supreme Court's order was filed and four days before its effective date, respondent sought to discharge the restitution in bankruptcy. Having received the benefit of the bargain provided by the stipulation, respondent promptly sought to relieve himself of one of the obligations of that bargain. In addition, even though respondent has asserted continued financial hardship since before the filing of the stipulation in underlying discipline case, he did not seek a modification of the restitution condition of probation until after he was charged with violating that probation. Further, respondent apparently made no attempt to inform himself of the effect of the bankruptcy discharge on his duty to comply with the Supreme Court's disciplinary order. Respondent's stated belief that the restitution issue was moot because the recipient of the money forgave the debt was also problematic. The important state interests accomplished by restitution are not rendered moot because the underlying indebtedness is forgiven by a private party. The goal is prophylactic, not pecuniary. Respondent's demonstrated failure to recognize these most fundamental concepts causes concern and increases the risk that future similar misconduct may occur. Respondent's attitude toward the restitution shows indifference and warrants increasing the recommended discipline and requiring that the restitution be paid prior to respondent's resumption of active practice. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[7]

The greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations of probation which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection. Where the misconduct which gave rise to the probation involved failure to perform and communicate, the law office management plan, ethics school, and law office management course conditions of probation directly addressed the misconduct and were therefore significantly related to the underlying misconduct. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [4]

Respondent's continued unwillingness or inability to comply with probation conditions demonstrated a lapse of character and a disrespect for the legal system that directly related to his fitness to practice. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [4]

When an attorney commits multiple violations of the same probation condition, the gravity of each successive violation increases so that respondent's seventh successive failure to timely file his probation report warranted the greatest level of discipline. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [5]

Because respondent had already been disciplined for not timely filing his probation reports in a previous probation revocation proceeding, respondent's failure to timely file his probation reports in the present probation revocation proceeding warranted the greatest level of discipline. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [6]

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

Greatest degree of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for violation significantly related to attorney's prior misconduct, especially where violation raises serious concern about need for public protection or shows probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Violation of probation which involved failing to comply with trust account audit condition was substantially related to respondent's underlying misconduct involving failure to keep accurate records of entrusted funds, failure to maintain sufficient funds in trust, and failure to account to clients and other persons to whom respondent had fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [12]

Respondent's unilateral and ill-conceived interpretations of disciplinary orders demonstrated tendency toward interpreting important and significant court orders in such a way as to fit his needs, which might negatively impact future clients and thus raised concern about need to protect public. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Where respondent timely complied with disciplinary probation conditions for two years prior to violating them, and therefore had taken important steps toward rehabilitation, imposing entire period of stayed suspension was not necessary to achieve goals of attorney disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [14]

Where respondent requested "credit for time served" based on his having voluntarily limited his law practice to avoid misconduct, but cited no authority supporting such request, and where much of respondent's misconduct occurred after date he testified he terminated his practice, review department declined to give such credit. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [11]

Protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney are chief aims of disciplinary probation. Violation of probation condition significantly related to attorney's prior misconduct merits greatest discipline, especially if such violation raises serious concern for public protection or shows attorney's failure to undertake rehabilitation. Where respondent was culpable of multiple probation violations reflecting adversely on his rehabilitation efforts, but showed substantial mitigating circumstances, appropriate discipline was three years stayed suspension and four years probation, conditioned on one year of actual suspension. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [12]

Where hearing judge viewed proceeding as one to revoke probation, not to impose added culpability or discipline, and recommended actual suspension would not exceed imposition of previously stayed suspension if respondent made restitution within such time, applicable standard of proof was preponderance of evidence standard applicable to probation revocation proceedings, even though notice to show cause also alleged violations of respondent's statutory oath and duties and of a court order. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [5]

Disbarment is a remedy generally available for statutory violations in original disciplinary proceedings, but not in probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [6]

Where respondent's probation violations (failure to file quarterly report and to pay restitution) and balance of aggravating and mitigating circumstances were comparable to those in another reported probation revocation matter, review department adopted hearing judge's essential discipline recommendation, based on discipline in comparable matter, of imposition of entire previously stayed one-year actual suspension, with suspension to continue until payment of restitution, and showing of rehabilitation and fitness to practice to be required if suspension lasted two years or more. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [9]

In original disciplinary proceedings for violation of statute requiring adherence to conditions of disciplinary probation, standard of proof is clear and convincing evidence, and discipline may be disbarment. In proceedings on motion to revoke probation, standard of proof is preponderance of evidence and recommended actual suspension may not exceed entire period of stayed suspension. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 610-614 (eff. Jan. 1, 1993).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [4]

Primary aims of attorney disciplinary probation are protection of public and rehabilitation of attorney. Greatest amount of discipline for violating probation conditions is merited for breaches of probation conditions significantly related to misconduct for which probation was given, especially when circumstances raise serious concern about public protection or show probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. Where misconduct for which respondent was placed on probation included practicing law in violation of court order, and respondent's current misconduct also involved violating numerous court orders and was aggravated by failure to participate in disciplinary proceeding, and where respondent's probation violations involved two of very first steps required by probation conditions, these factors indicated that respondent had a persistent problem with conforming his conduct to requirements of law, raised serious concerns for need to protect public, and showed that respondent had failed to even begin to take steps to rehabilitate himself. Accordingly, imposition of entire period of stayed suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's violation of probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [12]

Where respondent violated conditions of disciplinary probation by failing to turn over former client's files and records, precluding accountant from assessing losses incurred due to respondent's misconduct so that determination could be made regarding restitution, such probation violations were serious and warranted lengthy actual suspension and requirement to prove rehabilitation, learning in the law, and fitness to practice before returning to law practice. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [4]

Excessive delay in conducting disciplinary proceedings, not attributable to respondent and resulting in prejudice to respondent, should be taken into account in mitigation, especially in probation revocation proceedings which are required to be expedited. Where, due to delay in proceedings, actual suspension in probation matter would not commence until after start of actual suspension in separate matter which was supposed to be served concurrently with prior suspensions, review department modified recommended discipline in probation matter to provide for actual suspension to be served concurrently with previously ordered actual suspension to extent it was still in effect. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [16]

The respondent in a probation revocation matter may not be subjected to greater discipline than imposition of the entire period of suspension previously stayed if the notice to show cause does not appropriately charge violations that could result in greater discipline. Where notice to show cause stated that respondent was to show cause why stay of suspension should not be set aside and stayed suspension imposed, imposing entire stayed suspension was maximum discipline that State Bar Court could recommend. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [18]

Because of limitation on discipline available in probation revocation matter, disciplinary standard calling for disbarment in third disciplinary matter absent compelling mitigation did not apply. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [19]

Maximum available discipline in probation revocation matter was appropriate where respondent's priors, which included a prior probation violation, combined with misconduct in current case, showed both a persistent problem with drugs and alcohol and a persistent problem with conforming conduct to requirements of law and court orders. Policy underlying disciplinary standard calling for disbarment after two priors, and standard calling for increasing severity of discipline in successive matters, also militated toward imposing severe discipline given respondent's extensive prior record. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [20]

Absence of evidence of rehabilitation from drug and alcohol problems was significant where respondent's probation violation involved failure to give adequate assurance of compliance with probation requirement of abstention from alcohol and drugs. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [21]

Actual suspension imposed as sanction for violation of probation may include entire period of previously stayed suspension, or may give credit for actual suspension already served as condition of probation. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [1]

In determining appropriate discipline for probation violations, respondent's original disciplinary matter, in which probation conditions were imposed, constituted a prior disciplinary record and was required to be treated as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [19]

Where respondent's prior discipline arose from serious misconduct, and his subsequent breach of probation conditions arose after that prior discipline, it was appropriate to impose more actual suspension in probation revocation matter than in earlier disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [21]

Where it was unclear whether or not the former review department had considered respondent's delayed restitution in its assessment of the appropriate discipline in a prior probation revocation matter still pending before the Supreme Court, no significant aggravating weight was accorded that prior probation matter as prior discipline. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [23]

The factors to be considered in weighing the recommended discipline in probation revocation matters should include the aims of attorney discipline: protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney. The greatest discipline should be imposed where there is a breach of a condition significantly related to the underlying misconduct, particularly when the circumstances raise concerns about the need for public protection or the attorney's failure to undertake rehabilitation. Less discipline is required where a less significant probation condition is at issue under circumstances which do not call into question public protection or the attorney's rehabilitation. The length of stayed suspension which could be imposed as a sanction, and the length of the actual suspension earlier imposed, should also be considered. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [24]

1715 Inactive Enrollment Under Section 6007(d)

Respondent was not given credit for the period of time he was ineligible to practice law against the time period he must wait before he may petition for reinstatement. The ban on respondent's practice for which he sought credit resulted from other disciplinary proceedings, not from the present case and, therefore, was not a related interim ban on his practice. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [8]

Before the State Bar Court orders that an attorney be involuntarily enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code, section 6007, subdivision (d), it must weigh the need for public protection in light of the Supreme Court's inherent and plenary jurisdiction over attorney admissions and discipline. To order the involuntary inactive enrollment of an attorney under subdivision (d) any time its requirements are met without regard to whether there is an issue of public protection and to the length of the actual suspension recommended could conceivably defeat or materially impair the Supreme Court's inherent prerogatives. When measured against these criteria, the review department enrolled respondent inactive, concluding that respondent's four prior records of discipline and lack of any mitigating circumstances established a public protection issue, and that as the review department recommended an actual suspension of almost a year, there could be no reasonable expectation that the time elapsing between when respondent was enrolled inactive and the finality of the matter would equal or exceed the final actual suspension imposed by Supreme Court. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [7 a-e]

In determining whether an attorney should be enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (d), the record as a whole must be considered. However, when the State Bar Court seeks to estimate the time between its ruling and recommendation and when the Supreme Court can consider them, it may ordinarily rely on the expedited nature of probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [8]

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In probation revocation proceeding, where State Bar requested lengthy actual suspension for protection of public, and where all statutory requirements for involuntary inactive enrollment upon recommendation of actual suspension were met, and where in absence of inactive enrollment respondent could have resumed active practice of law without limitation or oversight by paying fees and passing professional responsibility examination, State Bar should have requested inactive enrollment in hearing department, as part of its responsibility for public protection. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [17]

Where respondent in probation revocation matter was already precluded from practicing law for other reasons, review department ordered respondent's inactive enrollment effective immediately, without first issuing order to show cause. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [26]

Where a respondent in a probation revocation matter is already on inactive enrollment at the time the review department concludes that the respondent has violated disciplinary probation, it is appropriate for the review department to order the respondent's immediate inactive enrollment pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6007(d). However, where the respondent in a probation revocation matter is entitled to practice law at the time the review department's opinion finding a probation violation is filed, the review department's practice is to issue an order to show cause with a short response time regarding why the respondent should not be enrolled inactive. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 89. [1]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

Where respondent had been given notice that if his disciplinary probation were revoked he could be placed on inactive enrollment, and where the Office of Trials expressed grave concerns as to the threat posed by respondent to clients and the public, the Office of Trials could have sought to have respondent placed on inactive enrollment at the time the hearing judge revoked probation. Where it did not do so, respondent was allowed to continued to practice pending review of the hearing judge's order. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [18]

In probation revocation matter, where notice to show cause informed respondent who was subject to stayed suspension that he could be enrolled inactive upon finding of probation violation and recommendation of actual suspension therefor, it would have been appropriate for hearing judge to order such inactive enrollment with or without request from Office of Trial Counsel, and where hearing judge had not done so, review department made such order. Under statute providing that inactive enrollment for probation violation shall be credited against ensuing actual suspension, review department recommended that respondent's one-year actual suspension commence as of the date of his inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [7]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

Where respondent in probation revocation matter had been continually suspended from practice of law for preceding four years, review department did not need to order that respondent be placed on inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(d) pending final Supreme Court order. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 612(b).) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [23]

1719 Miscellaneous Special Issues in Probation Revocation Cases

In probation revocation proceeding, while attorney's cooperation in stipulating to facts warranted some mitigative consideration, such consideration is not extended to either attorney's participation in prior disciplinary proceeding or in probation revocation proceeding, in which he had a statutory duty to participate.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[2]

In probation revocation proceeding, repeated reminders and pressure from State Bar needed to secure respondent's completion of restitution in accordance with the stipulated discipline imposed on attorney in prior disciplinary proceeding were aggravating factors and inconsistent with the self-governing nature of probation as a rehabilitative part of attorney discipline system.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[4]

Attorney's injection of the district attorney's office in which he worked into the defense in his disciplinary probation revocation proceeding, by using its name in caption of his pleadings, when that office had no role in his defense was, at very least, a misrepresentation of that office's official participation and an aggravating circumstance.In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.[5]

Considerations of due process and fundamental fairness require, under the circumstances presented in this case, an examination of both respondent's ability to pay the restitution and his efforts at acquiring the resources to pay. Respondent presented evidence of his income, but not of his assets and expenses. While respondent's income was not significant during the relevant period of time, it was not conclusive or persuasive when considered outside the context of total assets and expenses. The evidence presented regarding respondent's efforts at acquiring the resources to pay the restitution was also lacking. Based on the above, the review department concluded that no circumstances were presented showing that it would be fundamentally unfair to revoke respondent's probation in this case. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[4]

Respondent's contention that revoking his probation was a violation of due process and equal protection, and was discriminatory based upon financial status was rejected. The premise upon which it was based, that respondent's probation was being revoked because of his financial condition, was flawed. The revocation was based on his wilful failure to pay the restitution coupled with his failure to make reasonable efforts to acquire the resources to pay or to make other good faith efforts to satisfy the restitution obligation. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[5]

In probation revocation proceedings the greatest amount of discipline is warranted for violations which show a breach of a condition of probation significantly related to the misconduct for which probation was given, especially in circumstances raising a serious concern about the need for public protection or showing the probationer's failure to undertake rehabilitative steps. The significance of restitution is its probative value as an indicator of rehabilitation, not the repayment of the underlying indebtedness. Requiring restitution serves the rehabilitative and public protection goals of disciplinary probation by forcing attorneys to confront in concrete terms the consequences of the attorney's misconduct. Thus, a probationer's attitude toward the restitution is a significant factor to be weighed. In the stipulation to facts and disposition in the underlying disciplinary case, respondent asserted that he was financially unable to pay the sanctions. Yet, he agreed to pay restitution as a condition of probation. After the Supreme Court's order was filed and four days before its effective date, respondent sought to discharge the restitution in bankruptcy. Having received the benefit of the bargain provided by the stipulation, respondent promptly sought to relieve himself of one of the obligations of that bargain. In addition, even though respondent has asserted continued financial hardship since before the filing of the stipulation in underlying discipline case, he did not seek a modification of the restitution condition of probation until after he was charged with violating that probation. Further, respondent apparently made no attempt to inform himself of the effect of the bankruptcy discharge on his duty to comply with the Supreme Court's disciplinary order. Respondent's stated belief that the restitution issue was moot because the recipient of the money forgave the debt was also problematic. The important state interests accomplished by restitution are not rendered moot because the underlying indebtedness is forgiven by a private party. The goal is prophylactic, not pecuniary. Respondent's demonstrated failure to recognize these most fundamental concepts causes concern and increases the risk that future similar misconduct may occur. Respondent's attitude toward the restitution shows indifference and warrants increasing the recommended discipline and requiring that the restitution be paid prior to respondent's resumption of active practice. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.[7]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has the exclusive jurisdiction to conduct investigations and bring disciplinary charges. The State Bar may file disciplinary charges if it finds in its discretion that there is reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated the State Bar Act or Rules of Professional Conduct. Upon reasonable cause to believe that an attorney has violated a condition or conditions of probation, the State Bar may file either an original disciplinary proceeding based on the violation or a motion to revoke probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [1]

Under the current statutes and rules governing probation proceedings, the State Bar has exclusive jurisdiction to supervise members placed on probation and exclusive authority to initiate probation revocation proceedings. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court retains plenary authority over the regulation and discipline of attorneys. Neither the statutes nor the rules of procedure limit the Supreme Court's plenary authority. The Supreme Court may, in the exercise of its plenary authority, impose a hearing judge supervised probation condition regardless of the statutes and rules covering disciplinary proceedings. By imposing such a probation condition, the Supreme Court would necessarily confer jurisdiction on the hearing judge to monitor compliance. Thus, the review department did not find persuasive the State Bar's argument that the hearing judge lacked jurisdiction to supervise probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [2]

The current procedures squarely place on the State Bar the responsibility of monitoring, investigating, and initiating proceedings alleging probation violations. Imposing a hearing judge supervised probation condition presented a number of problems under this structure. The review department declined to recommend such a condition, especially where, as here, there was no showing that the procedures in place for probation proceedings were not adequate to achieve the goals of attorney disciplinary probation. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [3]

As respondent had a substance abuse problem, an appropriate substance abuse condition of probation was warranted. The review department did not have the entire record before it on summary review and was unable to determine a suitable condition. It therefore remanded the case to the hearing judge. As the modification of one probation condition may require the modification of other conditions, the review department did not limit the hearing judge on remand to reconsideration of the substance abuse condition alone. The hearing judge could reconsider the entire discipline recommendation, including the probation conditions. In the Matter of Parker (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 747. [4]

The review department rejected the argument that respondent was not culpable of violating probation conditions because he was actually suspended from the practice of law during the entire time that the probation conditions were in effect as a result of other disciplinary orders and therefore his probation was de facto revoked. The Supreme Court placed respondent on probation and the order was not revoked or modified. If respondent believed that subsequent events impacted the order, or if he was unclear of the requirements of the order, he could have raised the issue with the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court, which he did not do. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [1]

The review department rejected the argument that substantial compliance with a probation condition was a defense to culpability. Disciplinary probation serves the critical function of protecting the public and rehabilitating the attorney. The importance of these goals makes distinctions between substantial and insubstantial or technical violations of probation inappropriate. However, for purposes of discipline, not every probation violation should be treated the same. Belated compliance with a probation condition may be considered as a mitigating factor in determining discipline. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [2]

The State Bar can prosecute a probation violation by way of a motion to revoke probation, or by way of an original disciplinary proceeding based on a violation of the Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (k). It was not error to charge a violation of Business and Professions Code section 6103 in this original disciplinary proceeding. The gravamen of this case was respondent's failure to comply with the conditions of his probation. Regardless of the statute charged, the proceeding was based on a violation of section 6068, subdivision (k). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [3]

Tardy compliance with conditions of probation after being notified by the probation unit of the failure to comply is not a mitigating circumstance as it is not a "spontaneous" recognition of wrongdoing. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [6]

Respondent's participation in probation revocation proceeding was not a mitigating circumstance because his participation was mandated by Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (i). In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [2]

Respondent's belated filing of probation reports was not a mitigating circumstance as an objective step promptly taken spontaneously demonstrating remorse or recognition of wrongdoing where he filed the reports after he had knowledge of the probation revocation proceeding. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [3]

Respondent's continued unwillingness or inability to comply with probation conditions demonstrated a lapse of character and a disrespect for the legal system that directly related to his fitness to practice. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [4]

When an attorney commits multiple violations of the same probation condition, the gravity of each successive violation increases so that respondent's seventh successive failure to timely file his probation report warranted the greatest level of discipline. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [5]

Because respondent had already been disciplined for not timely filing his probation reports in a previous probation revocation proceeding, respondent's failure to timely file his probation reports in the present probation revocation proceeding warranted the greatest level of discipline. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [6]

Before the State Bar Court orders that an attorney be involuntarily enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code, section 6007, subdivision (d), it must weigh the need for public protection in light of the Supreme Court's inherent and plenary jurisdiction over attorney admissions and discipline. To order the involuntary inactive enrollment of an attorney under subdivision (d) any time its requirements are met without regard to whether there is an issue of public protection and to the length of the actual suspension recommended could conceivably defeat or materially impair the Supreme Court's inherent prerogatives. When measured against these criteria, the review department enrolled respondent inactive, concluding that respondent's four prior records of discipline and lack of any mitigating circumstances established a public protection issue, and that as the review department recommended an actual suspension of almost a year, there could be no reasonable expectation that the time elapsing between when respondent was enrolled inactive and the finality of the matter would equal or exceed the final actual suspension imposed by Supreme Court. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [7 a-e]

In determining whether an attorney should be enrolled inactive under Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (d), the record as a whole must be considered. However, when the State Bar Court seeks to estimate the time between its ruling and recommendation and when the Supreme Court can consider them, it may ordinarily rely on the expedited nature of probation revocation proceedings. In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523. [8]

Respondent was not entitled to finding in mitigation based on asserted good faith belief that reports required by disciplinary probation conditions were due only during actual suspension, where hearing judge did not find respondent's testimony regarding his belief credible; where language of probation conditions at best established ambiguity; where respondent did not research the issue, did not seek clarification, and did not consult with anyone regarding his interpretation of disciplinary order; and where probation department informed respondent that reports were due during entire period of probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [3]

Respondent was not entitled to finding in mitigation based on asserted reliance on advice of probation clerk regarding due date of probation reports, where hearing judge found clerk's testimony denying such advice credible; where any confusion respondent may have had regarding due date of reports was not reasonable; and where letter sent to respondent by probation department contained information which should have dispelled any confusion respondent may have had regarding due dates of reports. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [4]

Where, in a particular case involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court, and of disciplinary probation reporting requirements, there was no evidence to support a finding of significant harm to the administration of justice, separate and apart from evidence that supported culpability for charged violations, no finding in aggravation based on such harm was appropriate. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

A disciplinary probationer's belated filing of required probation reports could, under appropriate circumstances, demonstrate recognition of wrongdoing, even if such reports were technically defective. However, where respondent did not file late reports until after he learned probation revocation proceeding was pending against him, his actions were not a spontaneous recognition of wrongdoing and thus were not a mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [8]

The Supreme Court order in a probation revocation matter can become effective earlier than the Supreme Court order in an original discipline matter. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) Accordingly, where a probation revocation matter and an original discipline matter were consolidated, the review department made a separate disciplinary recommendation for each matter. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [1]

Statutes providing (1) that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline; (2) that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions, and (3) that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension are all statutes that can be violated. The determination that an attorney violated the statute making probation violations cause for revocation of probation means that the attorney failed to comply with a probation condition. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [2]

Wilfully failing to comply fully with a disciplinary probation condition constitutes a violation of the statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline. Wilfulness in this context requires merely that the person charged acted or omitted to act purposely, that is, knew what he was doing or not doing and intended either to commit the act or abstain from committing it. The violation must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. Substantial compliance is insufficient to avoid culpability on this charge, and any good faith on the part of the attorney is relevant to mitigation rather than culpability. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [3]

Where respondent on disciplinary probation made no required restitution payments to former clients, but made some payments to State Bar in belief that probation monitor or other authority had so instructed, and where respondent had insufficient reason for such belief, respondent was grossly negligent in failing to make such payments to clients, and thereby violated probation. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [4]

Where attorney violated statute providing that violating disciplinary probation conditions constitutes cause for probation revocation and possibly discipline, and where misconduct underlying such charge was same as misconduct underlying charges of violating statutes providing that attorneys have duty to comply with disciplinary probation conditions and that wilful disobedience of court orders constitutes cause for disbarment or suspension, latter two charges were given no additional weight in determining appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [6]

Substantial compliance with a disciplinary probation requirement is not a defense to violation of the requirement. Where respondent's probation conditions required that he obtain therapy from licensed practitioner, and where respondent made efforts to obtain therapy but did not seek to have probation conditions modified to include therapy provided by unlicensed practitioner, respondent's uncharged probation violation of failing to comply with therapy requirement was aggravating circumstance in probation revocation proceeding. However, respondent's efforts to comply constituted significant mitigating circumstance. In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138. [9]

Where respondent's probation monitor placed calls to respondent and respondent did attempt to reply to such calls, and hearing judge found that although respondent did not respond promptly, he could not be said to have failed to comply with his duty, respondent was not culpable of violating condition of probation requiring him to meet with monitor to review probation terms. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [3]

Where respondent had stipulated to discipline requiring restitution payments to be made by certain dates, and respondent did not set aside funds to make such restitution as soon as his own stipulation required first payment to be made, and where respondent had no credible excuse for failing to make at least first required payment at a time when respondent had significant income, respondent's failure to make at least partial restitution was a wilful violation of his probation. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [4]

Claim of selective prosecution in probation revocation proceeding was without merit, where such claim was based on asserted failure to give respondent same opportunity as other lawyers to cure defects in probation report, but revocation proceeding was also based on failure to pay restitution due ten months earlier; respondent's subsequent probation reports were also inadequate; and respondent failed to connect cited authorities on doctrine of selective enforcement to facts of proceeding. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81. [8]

Because time to seek Supreme Court review is shorter for probation revocation matters than for original disciplinary matters, it is necessary to make separate discipline recommendations when such cases are consolidated. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 952(a), (b).) In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [1]

Where harm to administration of justice was inherent in respondent's probation violation, it would be duplicative to find such harm as an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63. [5]

Respondent's partial restitution and attempts to obtain an accountant in order to file his quarterly probation reports were not entitled to any mitigating weight, because he did not complete restitution until the eve of his disciplinary hearing, and failed to notify his probation monitor of his difficulty in complying with the disciplinary order requiring him to have an accountant certify his trust account records. In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602. [14]

It is the responsibility of an attorney on probation to comply with a probation condition requiring the attorney to meet with an assigned probation monitor referee. Even if respondent encountered difficulty in setting up such a meeting, where respondent did not seek the assistance of the State Bar Court's clerk's office, and instead permitted a substantial delay to pass before the required meeting occurred, respondent's neglect constituted a wilful breach of his probation duties. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [13]

Respondent's bitterness and disaffection over his prior disciplinary suspension might explain some misconduct toward his clients thereafter, but it could not excuse his misconduct, especially since the suspension and its terms were designed to seek respondent's rehabilitation. Also, respondent's evidence of rehabilitation was depreciated by his inability to comply with his probation conditions, which was relatively recent and occurred after respondent had time to become familiar with his responsibilities. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [21]

The primary goal of disciplinary probation is the protection of the public and rehabilitation of the attorney. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [3]

In probation revocation matter, where order imposing probation had also required that respondent pass professional responsibility examination and respondent had not yet done so, review department recommended that this provision of original discipline order remain in effect notwithstanding revocation of probation. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [8]

As a matter of law, probation condition requiring respondent to include statement regarding abstinence from alcohol and drugs in any report required under probation conditions required respondent to include such statement in all required reports, including quarterly reports. Statement in quarterly reports that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions did not comply with such requirement, because it was not a clear and unequivocal statement of respondent's compliance with the abstinence condition. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [3]

Where probation conditions required that respondent abstain from intoxicants and non-prescribed drugs, and respondent stated under penalty of perjury that respondent had complied with all "valid, legally reasonable and enforceable" probation conditions, then even if State Bar proved respondent had consumed alcohol, respondent could have avoided perjury conviction by contending he did not consider abstinence condition to be valid, legally reasonable, and/or enforceable. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [5]

Respondent's belief that he had not violated probation in framing his probation reports was unreasonable, at least once respondent was advised by probation department that his interpretation of probation conditions was incorrect. Hearing judge was therefore correct in treating respondent's failure to file corrected reports as a failure to rectify his misconduct and therefore an aggravating factor. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [8]

Where respondent unreasonably persisted in refusing to include certain language in probation reports even after being informed by probation department employees that his interpretation of probation conditions as not requiring such language was incorrect, this effectively refuted respondent's contention that he acted in good faith, which would have constituted a mitigating factor if factually correct. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [12]

A past revocation of probation is viewed as a prior disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [5]

1750 Probation Revocation

1751 Probation Revoked

In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1 a-b]

In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244.

A wilful breach of respondent's restitution duty was established where respondent: (1) had the financial ability to make some restitution payments during the period when he had not done so; (2) repeatedly chose to pursue professional goals which foreseeably rendered him financially unable to make timely restitution; (3) failed to protect his funds from attachment by creditors; and (4) failed to seek an extension of time to make his restitution payments. His conduct showed a conscious disregard of his restitution obligations and a failure to make sufficient good faith efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [12]

1755 Probation Not Revoked

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

1800 Discipline Imposed Upon Revocation or for Probation Violation

1810 Disbarment

Respondent's extensive record of prior discipline demonstrated that probation and suspension have proven inadequate in the past to protect against future misconduct, and the record in the current proceeding did not give assurance that such a sanction would ensure that future misconduct would not occur. Accordingly, the review department concluded that disbarment was appropriate to protect the public, courts, and legal profession. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [7]

Respondent was not given credit for the period of time he was ineligible to practice law against the time period he must wait before he may petition for reinstatement. The ban on respondent's practice for which he sought credit resulted from other disciplinary proceedings, not from the present case and, therefore, was not a related interim ban on his practice. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 646. [8]

In the Matter of Sklar (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 602.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

1813 Additional Stayed Suspension

1813.01 One month or less

1813.02 Two months (incl. between 1 and 3 mos.)

1813.03 Three months (incl. between 3 and 6 mos.)

1813.04 Six months (incl. between 6 and 9 mos.)

1813.05 Nine months (incl. between 9 mos. and 1 year)

1813.06 One year (incl. between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

1813.07 18 months (incl. between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1813.08 Two years (incl. between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.

1813.09 Three years (incl. between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

1813.10 Four years (incl. between 4 & 5 yrs.)

1813.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

1815 (Additional) Actual Suspension

1815.01 One month or less

In the Matter of Gorman (Review Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 567.

1815.02 Two months (incl. between 1 and 3 mos.)

1815.03 Three months

In the Matter of Laden (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 678.[1]

1815.04 Six months (incl. between 6 and 9 mos.)

In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302.

1815.05 Nine months (incl. between 9 mos. & 1 year)

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

1815.06 One year (incl. between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

1815.07 8 months (incl. between 18 mos. and 2 yrs.)

1815.08 Two years (incl. between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244.

In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525.

1815.09 Three years (incl. between 3 & 4 yrs.)

In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737. [1 a-b]

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 63.

1815.10 Four years (incl. between 4 & 5 yrs.)

1815.11 Five years or more

1817 Additional Probation

1817.01 One month or less

1817.02 Two months (incl. between 1 and 3 mos.)

1817.03 Three months (incl. between 3 and 6 mos.)

1817.04 Six months (incl. between 6 and 9 mos.)

1817.05 Nine months (incl. between 9 mos. and 1 yr.

1817.06 One year (incl. between 1 yr. and 18 mos.)

1817.07 18 months (incl. between 18 mos. and 2 yrs.)

1817.08 Two years (incl. between 2 and 3 yrs.)

1817.09 Three years (incl. between 3 & 4 yrs.)

1817.10 Four years (incl. between 4 & 5 yrs.)

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

1817.11 Five years or more

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

1820 Additional/Modified Probation Conditions (for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.)

In the Matter of Tiernan (Review Dept. 1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 523.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

1830 Standard 1.2(c)(i) Rehabilitation Requirement (1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii))

In In the Matter of Luis (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 737.

In the Matter of Hunter (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 81.

In the Matter of Howardd (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445.

In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244.

1840 Public Reproval (for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.)

1850 Private Reproval (for conditions see topic numbers 1020 et seq.)

1880 Modification/Early Termination of Probation

1881 Special Procedural Issues

1881.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 5, Ch. 1 (rules 5.300-5.306)

1882 Special Substantive Issues

1885 Petition for Modification/Early Termination

1885.10 Granted

1885.50 Denied

1889 Miscellaneous Issues in Probation Modification/Early Termination Cases

The hearing judge did not abuse his discretion or make an error of law in denying respondent's motion to modify his probation on the ground that respondent was dilatory in bringing the motion where respondent was aware or should have been aware of both the factual and legal need to modify the probation long before the motion was filed. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [1]

Respondent's argument that the State Bar should be estopped from raising the timeliness of his motion to modify the probation was rejected. It is not at all clear that estoppel is applicable in this disciplinary proceeding. Estoppel will not ordinarily lie against a governmental agency if the result will be the frustration of a strong public policy. The goals of attorney discipline - protection of the public, courts and legal profession - are strong public policy considerations that militate against applying the doctrine. Even if estoppel were applicable, respondent failed to demonstrate a factual basis for the claim as he failed to show that the State Bar's actions were intended to be acted upon by him to his injury and that he was ignorant of the true state of facts. In the Matter of Taggart (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 302. [2]

1900 Other Special Disciplinary Matters

1910 Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 9.20 (formerly Rule 955) Violation Proceedings

1911 Special Procedural Issues

1911.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 6, Ch. 1 (rules 5.330-5.337)

1911.10 Initiation of Proceeding

Where a proceeding under rule 955 of the California Rules of Court was started by an order of referral rather than the issuance of formal charges, culpability could be based on all evidence introduced. Thus, where the evidence demonstrated that respondent failed to give timely notices of her suspension to her clients, opposing counsel, and courts in which her clients' cases were pending, she wilfully violated rule 955, subdivision (a), and the review department considered that violation as substantive and not just an aggravating circumstance as found by the hearing judge. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [5]

1911.20 Failure to Appear in Proceeding

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

Because there was no procedure for entering a default in a referral proceeding for alleged wilful violation of rule 955, the respondent was not precluded by lack of participation in the hearing department from filing an opposition brief on review. However, when respondent failed to file such a brief, the review department issued an order precluding respondent from appearing at oral argument. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [1]

A short delay in compliance with rule 955, by itself, would not necessitate disbarment. However, where respondent also had failed to appear in the rule 955 violation proceeding, had failed to appear in two prior disciplinary proceedings, and had continued to ignore her obligations thereafter, showing a clear pattern of failure to participate in the disciplinary process and to comply with requirements of Supreme Court, disbarment was clearly appropriate. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [2]

Attorneys who engage in an extended practice of inattention to official actions should not be allowed to create the risk that it will extend to clients resulting in inevitable and grievous harm to them. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [10]

1911.30 Scope of Record

It was appropriate for both the hearing judge and the review department to take judicial notice of the status, at the time of their respective decisions, of a separate pending disciplinary matter involving the same respondent. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [5]

Fact that respondent's failure to take responsibility for substituting out of two cases properly had not been the subject of respondent's prior disciplinary matter did not preclude Office of Trials from raising such incidents in subsequent proceeding against respondent for failure to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [6]

1911.40 Relation to Criminal Proceeding under Section 6126(c)

1911.90 Other Procedural Issues

Because the review department must review the record independently and is not bound by the hearing judge's findings or recommendation (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 453(a)), the issue of appropriate discipline in a matter involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court and other misconduct did not turn on the one narrow issue argued on review by the parties regarding the appropriateness of a retroactive suspension. The review department therefore considered whether any form of suspension was adequate discipline given Supreme Court precedent generally ordering disbarment for rule 955 violations. Although the State Bar's declination to recommend disbarment was accorded considerable weight, it could not be reconciled with the precedent making disbarment the appropriate discipline. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [1]

Where review department recommended respondent's disbarment, issue of whether respondent should be given credit toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), on account of time spent on continuous suspension prior to disbarment, was properly reserved for consideration by a hearing judge on an appropriate petition following the disbarment. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7]

Claim that respondent's failure to give required notice of suspension in four different client matters should not have been charged as four separate violations was relevant to degree of discipline but not to culpability. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [8]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

1913 Special Substantive Issues

1913.10 Wilfulness

1913.11 Definition

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

Bad faith is not a prerequisite to a finding of wilful failure to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [4]

Violations of probation require the same mental state to justify discipline as violations of rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court. For such purposes, wilfulness need not involve bad faith; a general purpose or willingness to comment an act or permit an omission is sufficient. Accordingly, despite respondent's asserted good faith belief that probation reports were sufficient, respondent's intentional failure to include a required statement in such reports was wilful for purposes of a probation violation. Respondent's subjective intentions were relevant only with regard to aggravation and mitigation. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [6]

1913.12 Lack of Notice of Underlying Order

1913.13 Timeliness of Notice of Underlying Order

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

1913.14 Inability to Comply

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

1913.19 Other Issues re Wilfulness

Respondent's unilateral and ill-conceived interpretations of disciplinary orders demonstrated tendency toward interpreting important and significant court orders in such a way as to fit his needs, which might negatively impact future clients and thus raised concern about need to protect public. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [13]

Disbarment is generally ordered for wilful breach of rule 955, and is particularly appropriate when a respondent repeatedly demonstrates indifference to successive disciplinary orders of the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [8]

Respondent's contention that he detrimentally relied on advice from his probation monitor and counsel regarding compliance with rule 955 might have been persuasive as mitigation if respondent had raised it at the hearing level and produced supporting evidence. However, where record did not support and even contradicted such contention, review department rejected respondent's attempt to argue it as mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [3]

Respondent's failure to comply with rule 955 was not excused by criticism of its wording as complex. The mandate of rule 955 is clear and requires little if any assistance to fulfill its requirements. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [11]

1913.20 Delay in Compliance

1913.22 Delay in Giving Required Notice

Where a proceeding under rule 955 of the California Rules of Court was started by an order of referral rather than the issuance of formal charges, culpability could be based on all evidence introduced. Thus, where the evidence demonstrated that respondent failed to give timely notices of her suspension to her clients, opposing counsel, and courts in which her clients' cases were pending, she wilfully violated rule 955, subdivision (a), and the review department considered that violation as substantive and not just an aggravating circumstance as found by the hearing judge. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [5]

1913.24 Delay in Filing Affidavit of Compliance

Where, in a particular case involving violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court, and of disciplinary probation reporting requirements, there was no evidence to support a finding of significant harm to the administration of justice, separate and apart from evidence that supported culpability for charged violations, no finding in aggravation based on such harm was appropriate. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [6]

Where respondent was not aware of pendency of rule 955 violation proceeding when he belatedly attempted to file affidavit required by rule 955(c), California Rules of Court, respondent's attempted untimely filing was basis for mitigation as spontaneous recognition of wrongdoing. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [9]

Where respondent attempted to file required affidavit of compliance with rule 955, California Rules of Court, within two weeks after it was due and before he was aware of initiation of rule 955 violation proceeding, and no clients were harmed, but respondent had also violated probation and had substantial prior discipline record, nine months actual suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Wilful violation of rule 955 deserves strong disciplinary measures because of the rule's critical prophylactic function. Disbarment is the usual discipline ordered by the Supreme Court for such violations. Where respondent not only filed his affidavit of compliance late, itself a cause for discipline, but also completed the affidavit shortly after improperly contacting an insurer while on suspension and without client authorization, as well as falsely reporting his compliance with the rule, respondent's violation of rule 955 was a serious one. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [4]

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

The fact that an attorney's untimely affidavit under rule 955 is accepted for filing is not evidence of the attorney's compliance with the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [5]

Where respondent had awakened to his responsibilities to the discipline system and participated in rule 955 proceeding, had produced evidence that he posed less risk to clients than suggested by his prior disciplinary record, gave proper notice in compliance with rule 955(a), and filed the required affidavit only 14 days late and before referral order was issued or formal disciplinary proceedings initiated, respondent's very brief failure to comply with rule 955 warranted a very modest sanction. However, even given the wide range of discipline available for a rule 955 violation, it would require an extraordinary case where no discipline of any form was merited. Considering the emphasis placed by the Supreme Court on strict compliance with rule 955, as well as considerations of attorney discipline, maintenance of the standards of the profession, and respondent's rehabilitation, some discipline was required. A 30-day suspension would serve to underline to respondent the seriousness of his duty to comply with all aspects of court orders. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [7]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommndation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

A short delay in compliance with rule 955, by itself, would not necessitate disbarment. However, where respondent also had failed to appear in the rule 955 violation proceeding, had failed to appear in two prior disciplinary proceedings, and had continued to ignore her obligations thereafter, showing a clear pattern of failure to participate in the disciplinary process and to comply with requirements of Supreme Court, disbarment was clearly appropriate. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [2]

Respondent's declaration presented in an attempt to comply with rule 955 bore little mitigating weight when it was submitted almost two months after respondent's rule 955 affidavit was due to be filed with the Supreme Court, contained inaccurate information and misrepresented a hearing date in one case. The inaccurate declaration raised serious doubts as to respondent's credibility and was an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [8]

1913.29 Delay in Compliance Generally

Where respondent's untimely compliance with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court formed a basis for her culpability for violating the rule, and delay in complying with the rule was also found to be an aggravating circumstance because it reflected respondent's indifference toward rectification of her misconduct, the latter finding was duplicative. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [6]

Where respondent had been ordered to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension and to file affidavit of compliance with such order, and respondent failed to give timely notice and failed to notify opposing counsel in three matters, and respondent's affidavit of compliance was filed late and incorrectly stated that all courts and opposing counsel had been notified of his suspension, respondent's gross neglect and lack of diligence in complying with the order to give notice violated the statute requiring respect for courts, but did not constitute an intentional misrepresentation of facts to the Supreme Court in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [9]

Respondent's miscalculation of the time deadlines for compliance with rule 955 and failure to file his affidavit for other reasons were neither reasonable nor mitigating given respondent's failure to consult the applicable court rules or contact his former counsel, the Supreme Court's clerk's office, or the State Bar for clarification in a timely fashion. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [9]

1913.40 Adequacy of Compliance

1913.42 Adequacy of Notice Given

Wilful violation of rule 955 deserves strong disciplinary measures because of the rule's critical prophylactic function. Disbarment is the usual discipline ordered by the Supreme Court for such violations. Where respondent not only filed his affidavit of compliance late, itself a cause for discipline, but also completed the affidavit shortly after improperly contacting an insurer while on suspension and without client authorization, as well as falsely reporting his compliance with the rule, respondent's violation of rule 955 was a serious one. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [4]

Where respondent had been ordered to give notice of prior disciplinary suspension and to file affidavit of compliance with such order, and respondent failed to give timely notice and failed to notify opposing counsel in three matters, and respondent's affidavit of compliance was filed late and incorrectly stated that all courts and opposing counsel had been notified of his suspension, respondent's gross neglect and lack of diligence in complying with the order to give notice violated the statute requiring respect for courts, but did not constitute an intentional misrepresentation of facts to the Supreme Court in violation of statute prohibiting acts of moral turpitude and dishonesty. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [9]

Disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a wilful violation of rule 955, California Rules of Court. Where respondent not only failed to notify courts and file timely affidavit of compliance as required by rule 955, but also had wilfully failed to comply with other stipulated conditions of prior discipline; respondent had injured a number of clients, and posed substantial risk of continuing to do so; respondent's participation in rule 955 proceeding was sporadic; respondent provided evidence of personal problems but no evidence that he was likely to overcome them, organize his practice, and comply with prior disciplinary probation; and respondent provided no evidence of rehabilitation, but rather evidence that his problems had increased, then despite respondent's history of pro bono work, idealism, honesty, and altruism, disbarment recommendation was required for public protection. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [2]

Where an attorney, while winding up his law practice before resigning with disciplinary charges pending, told clients that he was "retiring" but made clear that he would not be practicing law, this notification did not violate rule 955 of the California Rules of Court because it was given while the attorney was still an active member of the bar. While the evasiveness of the notification was relevant to the attorney's rehabilitation and moral qualifications for subsequent reinstatement, it did not mandate an adverse conclusion on those issues. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [13]

Respondent's failure to notify a client of respondent's disciplinary suspension was not justified by respondent's belief that he had been retained only for limited services, where respondent had accepted a retainer fee and filed a civil complaint listing himself as the plaintiff's attorney. There was no legal support for the distinction respondent attempted to draw between being attorney of record and "attorney in fact." In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [4]

Where respondent in a rule 955 matter gave different explanations at the hearing and on review for his failure to advise eight clients of his disciplinary suspension, and had not taken responsibility for making sure that substitutions of counsel he executed in the clients' cases had been filed, his attempted explanations constituted questionable mitigation. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [5]

1913.44 Adequacy of Affidavit of Compliance

Wilful violation of rule 955 deserves strong disciplinary measures because of the rule's critical prophylactic function. Disbarment is the usual discipline ordered by the Supreme Court for such violations. Where respondent not only filed his affidavit of compliance late, itself a cause for discipline, but also completed the affidavit shortly after improperly contacting an insurer while on suspension and without client authorization, as well as falsely reporting his compliance with the rule, respondent's violation of rule 955 was a serious one. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [4]

Respondent's declaration presented in an attempt to comply with rule 955 bore little mitigating weight when it was submitted almost two months after respondent's rule 955 affidavit was due to be filed with the Supreme Court, contained inaccurate information and misrepresented a hearing date in one case. The inaccurate declaration raised serious doubts as to respondent's credibility and was an aggravating circumstance. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [8]

1913.49 Adequacy of Compliance Generally

For purposes of rule 9.20 of California Rules of Court, requiring attorneys to give advance notice of impending disciplinary suspension, notice is required for all cases pending as of filing date of suspension order, not effective date. Where respondent's declaration of compliance with rule 9.20 stated that respondent had given required notice in all cases pending as of suspension order's filing date, but State Bar alleged that respondent failed to do so in one client matter, respondent's having given informal notice of impending suspension and having substituted out of case prior to suspension order's effective date was not a defense. Notice of disciplinary charges thus properly alleged both violation of rule 9.20 and act of moral turpitude in filing false declaration. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [2 a, b]

For purpose of determining whether an attorney has violated rule 9.20 of California Rules of Court, requiring attorneys to give advance notice of impending disciplinary suspension, strict compliance is required. Compliance with prophylactic effect of rule is not a defense. In the Matter of Eldridge (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 413 [3]

In determining appropriate discipline to recommend for respondent found culpable of violating statute requiring respect for courts based on respondent's violation of Supreme Court order requiring him to give notice of his prior disciplinary suspension under rule 955, review department noted that respondent's failure to give timely and complete notice of suspension, and his filing of an affidavit which was untimely and inaccurate, would have warranted a recommendation of disbarment, absent strong mitigating circumstances, in a referral proceeding for violation of rule 955. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [15]

In rule 955 proceeding, respondent's claim that his failure to withdraw from one matter after suspension resulted from an oversight in transferring over 200 files to successor counsel was not a factor in mitigation. Respondent's conduct in connection with such transfer constituted evidence in aggravation, because respondent irresponsibly executed in blank hundreds of substitution association or substitution of counsel forms and relinquished of the client files to successor counsel without obtaining the clients' consent, safeguarding their interests, or even keeping a list of the clients or case names transferred. This conduct posed a significant potential harm to the clients and to the public interest generally. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [7]

Respondent's miscalculation of the time deadlines for compliance with rule 955 and failure to file his affidavit for other reasons were neither reasonable nor mitigating given respondent's failure to consult the applicable court rules or contact his former counsel, the Supreme Court's clerk's office, or the State Bar for clarification in a timely fashion. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [9]

In rule 955 matter, where respondent did not present any evidence of remedial steps to assist clients in four cases in which he had failed to substitute out when suspended, and remained attorney of record in three of such cases in which litigation was still pending, respondent's inaction indicated indifference to the consequences of his misconduct and was an aggravating circumstance, as was his continued failure to file an affidavit conforming to the requirements of rule 955. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [13]

Recent Supreme Court decisions reflect the view that disbarment is generally the appropriate sanction for a willful violation of rule 955. One of the primary reasons for the adoption of the Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct was to achieve greater consistency in disciplinary sanctions for similar offenses. Any reason for deviating from the standards or established case law must be clearly stated. Accordingly, where respondent participated in the rule 955 proceeding, but did not present a convincing case of mitigation, diligence, and rectification of misconduct, and instead demonstrated a pattern of inattention to important duties, an inability to conform to professional norms, and a lack of concern for potential harm to his clients and the public, the public interest and the administration of justice would be served by respondent's disbarment. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [15]

Wilful breach of a Supreme Court order is by definition deserving of strong disciplinary measures, and the sanction generally imposed for wilful violation of rule 955 is disbarment. When disbarment has not been imposed, the attorneys involved had complied with the notification requirement, orally or in writing, to all their clients, participated in the disciplinary process, and presented substantial mitigating evidence regarding the noncompliance and their present good character. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [16]

1913.50 Complete Failure to Comply

1913.60 Respondent Not in Active Practice

Even though respondent had no clients or opposing counsel to notify of his disciplinary suspension under rule 955(a), California Rules of Court, he was still required to file the affidavit required by subdivision (c) of that rule. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [2]

Where respondent's first actual suspension ended in December 1991, and his second actual suspension, which was ordered to be "consecutive" to the first, did not take effect until June 1992, hearing judge did not err in finding that respondent could have practiced law during the interval, and fact that respondent did not in fact practice law during such time did not entitle him to "credit for time served" and was neither a mitigating nor an aggravating circumstance in subsequent proceeding for probation violation and failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [7]

An attorney who is ordered to comply with rule 955 is required to file an affidavit under the rule whether or not the attorney has clients. In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382. [3]

Respondent's claim of lack of harm to his clients in mitigation of rule 955 violation overlooked fact that parties protected by rule 955 include not only clients, but co-counsel, opposing counsel or adverse parties, and any tribunal in which litigation is pending. Moreover, nothing in rule 955 or case law distinguishes between a substantial or insubstantial violation of the rule, and respondent would have been required to comply with rule 955 whether or not he had any clients. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [10]

1913.70 Lesser Sanction than Disbarment for Violation

Absent strong mitigating circumstances, a violation of rule 955 of the California Rules of Court warrants disbarment. Thus, where serious and extensive aggravating circumstances outweighed strongly very modest mitigating circumstances, disbarment was appropriate despite respondent's lack of any prior disciplinary record. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [10]

Where respondent attempted to file required affidavit of compliance with rule 955, California Rules of Court, within two weeks after it was due and before he was aware of initiation of rule 955 violation proceeding, and no clients were harmed, but respondent had also violated probation and had substantial prior discipline record, nine months actual suspension was appropriate discipline for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c). In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [15]

Period of stayed suspension was required for respondent's wilful failure to comply with rule 955(c), California Rules of Court, so as to provide enforcement mechanism for compliance with terms and conditions of probation. In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192. [16]

A respondent's substantial compliance with rule 955 is mitigating evidence which can influence the determination whether to impose discipline less than disbarment, the generally imposed sanction for a wilful violation of the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [6]

Where respondent had awakened to his responsibilities to the discipline system and participated in rule 955 proceeding, had produced evidence that he posed less risk to clients than suggested by his prior disciplinary record, gave proper notice in compliance with rule 955(a), and filed the required affidavit only 14 days late and before referral order was issued or formal disciplinary proceedings initiated, respondent's very brief failure to comply with rule 955 warranted a very modest sanction. However, even given the wide range of discipline available for a rule 955 violation, it would require an extraordinary case where no discipline of any form was merited. Considering the emphasis placed by the Supreme Court on strict compliance with rule 955, as well as considerations of attorney discipline, maintenance of the standards of the profession, and respondent's rehabilitation, some discipline was required. A 30-day suspension would serve to underline to respondent the seriousness of his duty to comply with all aspects of court orders. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [7]

Where respondent had filed his required rule 955 affidavit prior to the initiation of rule 955 proceedings by referral order, had met the notice requirements of the rule timely, had taken responsibility for his own errors, and, because of other discipline, might remain on actual suspension for over two years, a six-month actual suspension for respondent's untimely filing of his rule 955 affidavit would be excessive. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [9]

1913.90 Other Substantive Issues

Where respondent misrepresented facts regarding her interim suspension to superior court; deliberately sought to mislead State Bar Court Review Department regarding facts supporting motion for modification of interim suspension order; and intentionally tried to deceive State Bar Court hearing judge regarding correctness of transcript offered as evidence by State Bar, respondent's acts of dishonesty to courts constituted aggravating circumstances surrounding her failure to comply with rule 955 of the California Rules of Court in connection with interim suspension. In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287. [7]

Where an attorney failed to advise a client, the insurer-defendant or the superior court in which the client's lawsuit was filed of his disciplinary suspension, but filed an affidavit with the Supreme Court declaring under penalty of perjury that he had complied with the rule requiring him to notify all clients, courts, and opposing parties of his suspension, his false affidavit constituted an act of moral turpitude and dishonesty, and his failure to comply with the rule violated the statute requiring respect for courts and judges. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [2]

Respondent's carelessness and confusion concerning the requirements of rule 955 did not obviate culpability of wilful failure to file a rule 955 affidavit timely, where respondent did not seek relief based on good cause for his late filing. All that is necessary for a wilful violation of rule 955 is a general purpose or willingness to commit the act or make the omission. However, respondent's credible evidence of carelessness was properly considered in considering respondent's good faith attempts at timely compliance. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [4]

The fact that an attorney's untimely affidavit under rule 955 is accepted for filing is not evidence of the attorney's compliance with the rule. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [5]

Any reasons for deviations from the standards or case law should be set forth clearly. A rigid application in rule 955 cases of the standard requiring that the degree of discipline should be greater than that imposed in any prior proceeding would result in a minimum actual suspension of 90 days in every rule 955 violation proceeding where there was prior discipline, since rule 955 obligations are not required for actual suspensions under 90 days. The standards should not be applied in such talismanic fashion, particularly where there is not a common thread or course of conduct through past and present misconduct to justify increased discipline. In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527. [8]

Respondent's claim of lack of harm to his clients in mitigation of rule 955 violation overlooked fact that parties protected by rule 955 include not only clients, but co-counsel, opposing counsel or adverse parties, and any tribunal in which litigation is pending. Moreover, nothing in rule 955 or case law distinguishes between a substantial or insubstantial violation of the rule, and respondent would have been required to comply with rule 955 whether or not he had any clients. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [10]

Respondent's failure to comply with rule 955 was not excused by criticism of its wording as complex. The mandate of rule 955 is clear and requires little if any assistance to fulfill its requirements. In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322. [11]

1915 Culpability of Violation

1915.10 Found

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

1915.30 Found But Substantial Compliance

In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527.

1915.50 Not Found

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

1920 Discipline Imposed in Rule 955 Matters

1921 Disbarment

In the Matter of Lynch (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 287.

In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593.

In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480.

In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439.

In the Matter of Pierce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 382.

In the Matter of Babero (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 322.

1923 Stayed Suspension

1923.01 One month or less

1923.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1923.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1923.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1923.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 yr.)

1923.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

1923.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1923.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

1923.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

1923.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

1923.11 Five years or more

1924 Actual Suspension

1924.01 One month or less

In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527.

1924.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1924.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1924.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1924.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

1924.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

1924.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1924.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

1924.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

1924.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

1924.11 Five years or more

1925 Probation (for conditions see topic number 1020 et seq.)

1925.01 One month or less

1925.02 Two months (incl. anything between 1 and 3 mos.)

1925.03 Three months (incl. anything between 3 and 6 mos.)

1925.04 Six months (incl. anything between 6 and 9 mos.)

1925.05 Nine months (incl. anything between 9 mos. & 1 year)

1925.06 One year (incl. anything between 1 yr. & 18 mos.)

1925.07 18 months (incl. anything between 18 mos. & 2 yrs.)

1925.08 Two years (incl. anything between 2 & 3 yrs.)

In the Matter of Rose (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 192.

1925.09 Three years (incl. anything between 3 & 4 yrs.)

1925.10 Four years (incl. anything between 4 & 5 yrs.)

1925.11 Five years or more

1926 Standard 1.2(c)(i) Rehabilitation Requirement (1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii))

In the Matter of Friedman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 527.

1927 Public Reproval

1927.10 With conditions (for conditions see topic number 1020 et seq.)

1927.50 Without conditions

1928 Private Reproval

1928.10 With conditions (for conditions see topic number 1020 et seq.)

1928.50 Without conditions

1930 Discipline in Other Jurisdictions (Section 6049.1)

1931 Special Procedural Issues

1931.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 6, Ch. 3 (rules 5.350-5.354))

1931.10 Initiation of Proceeding (rule 5.351(A), (B))

1931.20 Responsive Pleading (rule 5.351(C)

1931.30 Expedited Proceeding (rule 5.350)

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

1931.40 Limitations on Discovery (rule 5.352)

1931.50 Use of Record from Foreign Proceeding (rule 5.353)

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

1931.60 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.354)

1931.90 Other Special Procedural Issues

The State Bar was not barred from relying on Michigan proceedings to impose discipline in California under the authority of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 notwithstanding that, at the time of a prior California disciplinary case in which the State Bar and respondent entered into a stipulation disposing of the charges, the State Bar knew of disciplinary proceedings pending in Michigan but nevertheless advised respondent in writing pursuant to Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) that there were no additional State Bar investigations pending against him. The clear purpose of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 133(a)(12) is to require the State Bar to give notice to respondents before the State Bar Court or to attorneys being investigated by the State Bar of the pendency of other complaints lodged with the State Bar against such attorneys, and to expand that requirement to include complaints lodged in other jurisdictions would impose a far greater burden than that contemplated. At the time of the stipulation, both respondent and the State Bar knew of the Michigan proceedings, yet the stipulation did not in any way deal with the California consequences of the Michigan matter, there was no evidence that the Michigan proceedings were included in discussions leading to the stipulation, respondent entered into the stipulation without inquiring about including the Michigan matter in the stipulation, and the State Bar had no way to evaluate the seriousness of the Michigan proceedings. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [1]

Where respondent asserted for the first time at oral argument that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 was being unconstitutionally applied because a Michigan disciplinary action required only a preponderance of the evidence for a finding of culpability and that California reliance on that lower standard deprived him of due process and equal protection of the law, respondent's failure to have raised the issue before the hearing department or in his briefs on review constituted a waiver of the issue. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [2]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, neither the law nor the facts supported respondent's contention that his suspension in California should be retroactive to the time of his suspension in Illinois. The policy of imposing an actual suspension retroactive to the start of interim suspension or inactive enrollment is to avoid a lengthier disqualification from practice than warranted, but unlike those situations, respondent had not yet been barred from practicing in California. Further, although there was a significant delay in implementing an agreement between respondent and the California State Bar for a stipulated disposition, there was no clear evidence that delay was the fault of the State Bar, and respondent's evidence showed that an increase in his legal malpractice premium, which might be considered prejudicial, would likely have occurred even if his California discipline had become effective earlier. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [4]

Since over a year of respondent's Michigan misconduct was committed after the 1986 effective date of Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, that statute was not retroactively applied to respondent. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [3]

Attorney's out-of-state discipline was not entitled to preclusive effect under California statute providing for expedited disciplinary proceeding based on discipline in other jurisdictions where State Bar did not proceed pursuant to procedures set forth in such statute. In the Matter of Jeffers (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 211. [9]

1933 Special Substantive Issues

1933.10 Respondent's Burden of Proof

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

Respondent objects to giving conclusive weight to the Michigan proceedings, since they were adjudicated under a lower standard of proof than that required in California. Respondent's license revocation and judicial removal were judged under standards requiring only a preponderance of evidence to find him culpable of judicial misconduct. However, the Michigan Supreme Court considered the evidence of respondent's culpability overwhelming; and, in any event, the record of this proceeding contains ample evidence that was received in the Michigan proceedings to permit us to independently determine that sufficient evidence is present to clearly and convincingly establish respondent's culpability in California. Respondent's argument lacks merit. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [2]

1933.20 Conduct Culpable Under California Law

Order issued by federal bankruptcy court in California suspending respondent from practice for misconduct was conclusive evidence that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [1]

Respondent's Illinois misconduct, involving misappropriation of client funds, repeated commingling of trust funds with personal funds, settling a case without authority, issuing an insufficiently funded check, and forging a client's name to settlement documents, was serious and a clear ground for imposing lawyer discipline in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [2]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

Respondent's claims that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 unconstitutionally infringes on judicial power and is otherwise beyond legislative power are without merit. Respondent was given a full opportunity to litigate the issue of whether the Michigan discipline should be conclusive of his culpability in this proceeding. The Supreme Court is never bound by a legislative enactment in exercising its inherent functions in attorney discipline. However, the Supreme Court has upheld section 6007(c) authorizing an expedited proceeding to enroll an attorney inactive prior to the adjudication of the merits of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [4]

Respondent was not found guilty of criminal charges in Michigan based on the identical facts underlying his Michigan discipline. However, it is well settled in California that dismissal or acquittal of criminal charges does not bar disciplinary proceedings covering the same facts. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [5]

1933.30 Constitutionality of Foreign Proceeding

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

1933.40 Limitation of Issues

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides that, with exceptions not applicable here, the Illinois Supreme Court disciplinary order imposed on respondent conclusively established his culpability in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [1]

Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 provides an expedited, streamlined disciplinary proceeding in this state when an attorney has been disciplined by another state or federal jurisdiction. A certified copy of another jurisdiction's final attorney disciplinary order conclusively establishes that a California attorney is culpable of professional misconduct in California, except where, as a matter of law, the misconduct found in the other jurisdiction would not warrant discipline in California or the other jurisdiction's proceedings lacked fundamental constitutional protection. The attorney bears the burden to establish that the exceptions do not warrant imposing discipline. The statute also provides that discovery need not be afforded unless the State Bar Court so orders on a showing of good cause, and that a certified copy of any part of the record of the other jurisdiction's proceedings may be admitted in evidence in this proceeding. Reviewing the applicable law as a whole, there are two issues in this expedited proceeding: 1) whether the California attorney has sustained his or her burden to establish that final attorney discipline in another state, territory or the federal system should not result in finding culpability in this proceeding; and 2) the appropriate degree of discipline. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [1 a-c]

1933.50 Relevance/Effect of Degree of Foreign Discipline

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, once it had been conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California, the remaining issue for consideration in California was the degree of discipline. Where the only evidence in the record consisted of the final record of discipline in Michigan, no portion of the underlying evidentiary record from the Michigan proceedings was placed in evidence, and the Michigan final record of discipline indicated that each of the findings of fact in Michigan was made under a preponderance of the evidence standard of proof, a purported showing of the facts and circumstances found in Michigan to surround the misconduct could not be weighed under the required California standard of clear and convincing evidence. Instead, the misconduct found in Michigan was weighed with only the aggravation and mitigation separately shown in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [4]

In a proceeding under Business and Professions Code section 6049.1, the appropriate degree of discipline is not presumed by the other state's discipline, but is open for determination in this state. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [3]

Respondent's claims that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 unconstitutionally infringes on judicial power and is otherwise beyond legislative power are without merit. Respondent was given a full opportunity to litigate the issue of whether the Michigan discipline should be conclusive of his culpability in this proceeding. The Supreme Court is never bound by a legislative enactment in exercising its inherent functions in attorney discipline. However, the Supreme Court has upheld section 6007(c) authorizing an expedited proceeding to enroll an attorney inactive prior to the adjudication of the merits of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [4]

1933.90 Other Special Substantive Issues

Respondent's claims that Business and Professions Code section 6049.1 unconstitutionally infringes on judicial power and is otherwise beyond legislative power are without merit. Respondent was given a full opportunity to litigate the issue of whether the Michigan discipline should be conclusive of his culpability in this proceeding. The Supreme Court is never bound by a legislative enactment in exercising its inherent functions in attorney discipline. However, the Supreme Court has upheld section 6007(c) authorizing an expedited proceeding to enroll an attorney inactive prior to the adjudication of the merits of disciplinary charges. In the Matter of Jenkins (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 157. [4]

1935 Disciplinable Misconduct

1935.10 Found

Order issued by federal bankruptcy court in California suspending respondent from practice for misconduct was conclusive evidence that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391. [1]

A certified copy of a final disciplinary order of the State of Michigan finding respondent culpable of misconduct conclusively established that respondent was culpable of professional misconduct in California. Such misconduct, which included misappropriation of client funds, failure to account, failure to respond to a client's reasonable inquiries, failure to pay to a client funds to which she was entitled, moral turpitude, failure to take necessary legal action to protect a client's interest, failure to respond to a client's inquiries concerning the status of her funds, and failure to respond to investigations, warranted discipline in California. In the Matter of Freydl (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 349. [3]

Respondent's Illinois misconduct, involving misappropriation of client funds, repeated commingling of trust funds with personal funds, settling a case without authority, issuing an insufficiently funded check, and forging a client's name to settlement documents, was serious and a clear ground for imposing lawyer discipline in California. In the Matter of Kauffman (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 213. [2]

1935.50 Not Found

Note: For Aggravation, Mitigation, and Application of Standards, see those headings under Substantive Issues in Disciplinary Matters Generally, topic numbers 500 et seq., 700 et seq., and 800 et seq.

2000 Regulatory Proceedings

2050 Issues in Section 6007(b)(1) Proceedings

2051 Special Procedural Issues

2051.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 1 (rules 5.170-5.177))

2051.10 Appointment and Compensation of Counsel (rule 5.174)

2051.20 Initiation of Proceeding (rule 5.171(A))

2051.21 By Motion

2051.25 By Order to Show Cause

2051.30 Mental or Physical Examination

2051.40 Admissibility of Evidence

2051.50 Sufficiency of Evidence/Burden of Proof

A member of the State Bar is required by statute to be enrolled inactive upon the assertion of a claim of insanity or mental incompetence made in any pending proceeding, alleging inability to understand the proceeding's nature or to assist counsel. Where the member intentionally asserts such a claim, no further showing is required and the State Bar Court has no discretion not to enroll the member inactive. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [3]

Given the severe consequences of inactive enrollment, public protection supports inactive enrollment of an attorney who intentionally makes a claim of mental incompetence, even if the attorney was actually rational and was misguidedly making the claim as a strategy to impede disciplinary prosecution. Any issue of bad faith may be addressed in the context of the requested abatement of the disciplinary case. The mere enrollment of the attorney inactive does not dictate abatement of the underlying disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [4]

2051.60 Abatement of Other Proceedings

Given the severe consequences of inactive enrollment, public protection supports inactive enrollment of an attorney who intentionally makes a claim of mental incompetence, even if the attorney was actually rational and was misguidedly making the claim as a strategy to impede disciplinary prosecution. Any issue of bad faith may be addressed in the context of the requested abatement of the disciplinary case. The mere enrollment of the attorney inactive does not dictate abatement of the underlying disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [4]

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

The respondent in a disciplinary proceeding has a right to a fair hearing. The State Bar's interest in protecting the public and maintaining integrity and public confidence in the legal profession would not be served by disciplining an attorney who is mentally incompetent to the degree that she or he cannot assist in a defense against disciplinary charges. Therefore, if an attorney is unable to assist in his or her own defense, due process requires that the disciplinary proceeding be abated. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [7]

A motion supported by written submissions, including a detailed psychiatric report, could, if unopposed, be sufficient evidence to warrant abating a disciplinary proceeding due to the respondent's inability to assist in the defense. However, where the adequacy of the respondent's showing is questioned, the respondent's evidence may be weighed in the context of the whole record in the disciplinary proceeding. Any proffered medical submission regarding the respondent's mental competency should address the nature of the medical examination or tests conducted; the attorney's symptoms; the diagnosis and cause of the condition, and any past or proposed treatment. The report should note whether the illness raises doubts about the respondent's ability to assist in the defense, and should relate the respondent's condition to a recognized legal definition of competency. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [9]

Medical evidence regarding an attorney's competency to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding should be submitted to the State Bar Court at the hearing level. The reliability of evidence concerning a person's mental state is virtually impossible to test in the absence of cross-examination. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [10]

Where it was unclear what evidence hearing judge considered in deciding to abate disciplinary proceeding due to respondent's claimed inability to assist counsel, and where respondent's medical evidence lacked important elements and was conclusory, and respondent's counsel's declaration was undermined by contrast with earlier declaration regarding respondent's superior performance of paralegal tasks, review department concluded that hearing judge failed to exercise her discretion properly in abating proceeding without holding hearing to allow presentation and resolution of conflicting evidence. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [11]

2051.70 Effective Date of Inactive Enrollment Order (rule 5.175)

2051.80 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.177)

2051.90 Other Procedural Issues

Because hearings and records regarding inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(b) are confidential, respondent was not identified in review department's opinion regarding issues raised by such inactive enrollment. However, where such issues arose during a disciplinary proceeding, the record in that proceeding remained public, subject to the hearing judge's discretion to seal specific portions of the record where proper grounds appeared. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [1]

Orders for inactive enrollment under section 6007(b)(1), like those under section 6007(b)(3), are subject to independent review pursuant to rule 450 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [2]

2052 Inactive Enrollment Under Section 6007(b)(1)

2052.10 Ordered

In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454.

2052.11 Without Hearing (rules 5.172(A), 5.173(A))

2052.13 After Hearing (rule 5.172(B)(2), 5.173(B)(2))

2052.50 Not Ordered

2054 Petition to End Section 6007(b)(1) Inactive Enrollment

2054.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 4 (rules 5.205-5.212))

2054.10 Granted

2054.50 Denied

2054.90 Other Issues re Termination of Section 6007(b)(1) Inactive Enrollment

2059 Miscellaneous Issues in Section 6007(b)(1) Cases

2070 Issues in Section 6007(b)(2) Proceedings

2070.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 2 (rules 5.180-5.186)

2071.10 Special Procedural Issues

2071.20 Initiation of Proceeding (rule 5.181)

2071.30 Limitation of Issues (rule 5.182(B)(2))

2051.40 Effective Date of Inactive Enrollment Order (rule 5.184)

2071.80 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.186)

2071.90 Other Procedural Issues

2072 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(b)(2)

2072.10 Ordered

2072.11 Without Hearing (rules 5.182(A))

2072.13 After Hearing (rule 5.182(B)(2))

2072.20 Exceptions to Order (rule 5.183)

2072.21 Granted

2072.25 Denied

2072.50 Not Ordered

2074 Petition to End Section 6007(b)(2) Inactive Enrollment

2074.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 4 (rules 5.205-5.212))

2074.10 Granted

2074.50 Denied

2074.90 Other Issues re Termination of Section 6007(b)(2) Inactive Enrollment

2079 Miscellaneous Issues in Section 6007(b)(2) Cases

2100 Issues in Section 6007(b)(3) Proceedings

2105 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 3 (rules 5.190-5.199)

2110 Special Procedural Issues

2111 Appointment and Compensation of Counsel (rule 5.192)

2112 Probable Cause Determination (rule 5.191)

2113 Mental or Physical Examination (rule 5.193)

The test for the constitutional validity of a mental examination order is whether the mental examination serves a compelling government interest and constitutes the least intrusive means of accomplishing that interest. Mere convenience or avoidance of administrative costs does not make a means the least intrusive; otherwise the overriding value would be expediency, not the compelling government interest. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [4]

Section 6053, which allows the State Bar Court to order a mental examination when an attorney's mental condition is a material issue in a State Bar proceeding, does not violate the California constitutional right of privacy, because section 6053 serves a compelling government interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys and because section 6053's grant of discretion to order a mental examination may be construed so as to allow such examinations to be ordered only when they are the least intrusive means to satisfy the compelling government interest. In addition, the limited distribution of the mental examination report and the confidentiality of the proceeding serve as further protections of the attorney's privacy and thereby bolster the constitutionality of section 6053. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [6]

The rules governing the proceedings for the transfer of an attorney to inactive status incorporate by reference Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). (Rules 315, 321, 643, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Proceedings to obtain an order for a mental examination under section 6053 must comply with the procedural and substantive requirements of Code of Civil Procedure section 2032(d). In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [7]

Where no evidence or finding indicated that a compulsory mental examination constituted the least intrusive means of determining a respondent's mental condition, the issuance of mental examination orders violated not only the applicable statutory requirements but also the respondent's California constitutional right of privacy. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [8]

The probable cause determination necessary for the initiation of an involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding pursuant to section 6007(b)(3) does not suffice to order a mental examination pursuant to section 6053. Such an order necessitates the much stronger procedural and constitutional safeguards afforded by showings from the State Bar of "good cause" and "least intrusive means." In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [9]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

2114 Admissibility of Evidence

2114.10 Evidence from Probable Cause Hearing (rule 5.195(C))

2115 Sufficiency of Evidence/Burden of Proof

Business and Professions Code section 6007 (b)(3) provides that, if a member of the State Bar suffers from mental illness or infirmity, he or she may be enrolled as an inactive member if either the member is unable or habitually fails to perform his or her duties or undertakings competently, or is unable to practice law without substantial threat of harm to the interests of his or her clients or the public. The review department held that the grounds for inactive enrollment were met where respondent was undergoing serious thought disorganization and possessed of an unstable mental state; was unable to sift out the irrelevant and properly think and reason; suffered from depression not adequately treated; was unable to calendar court and document due dates, keep a file system or find his papers; was emotionally drained by his battles with the judiciary and was habitually unable to concentrate on many significant matters, letting many go unattended; was unable to demonstrate emotional control in courtroom or other settings; and became violent or threatened to do so in his dealings with others. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [2]

In a proceeding to involuntarily enroll an attorney inactive because of mental infirmity or illness, the burden is on the State Bar to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the statutory grounds for inactive enrollment have been met. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [3]

Ordinarily, the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings is by clear and convincing evidence, and that standard has been applied in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under both section 6007(c) and section 6007(b)(3). In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [8]

Like the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings and in proceedings under section 6007(c), the standard of proof in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b)(3) is clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [2]

The probable cause determination necessary for the initiation of an involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding pursuant to section 6007(b)(3) does not suffice to order a mental examination pursuant to section 6053. Such an order necessitates the much stronger procedural and constitutional safeguards afforded by showings from the State Bar of "good cause" and "least intrusive means." In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [9]

A determination of mental incompetency does not require a psychiatric examination. Witness testimony regarding a respondent's behavior and documents allegedly reflecting the respondent's mental infirmity may be introduced as evidence of incompetency, and a qualified psychiatrist may be appointed to render an opinion about the respondent's mental condition on the basis of such testimonial and documentary evidence. Then, if the judge remains unable to make the necessary determination without a mental examination of the respondent and the respondent refuses to consent to such an examination, an order for a compulsory mental examination may be justified as the least intrusive means of accomplishing the government's compelling interest in protecting the public, courts, and profession from mentally incompetent attorneys. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [10]

Although rule 644 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure purports to allow a presumption affecting the burden of proof if an attorney fails without good cause to undergo an ordered mental examination, rule 644 must be interpreted as merely allowing a permissive inference of mental infirmity, in order to ensure due process. Rule 644 would not be valid if it operated to relieve the examiner of the burden of proving mental incompetence by clear and convincing evidence. The presumption authorized by rule 644, if applied, would conflict with the appropriate presumption that an attorney remains mentally competent to practice law in the absence of proof to the contrary, and would be tantamount to the imposition of a default judgment for failure to obey a discovery order, in violation of rule 321 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [11]

An attorney's license to practice law creates a continuing presumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the attorney is not only morally fit but also mentally competent to practice law. This presumption underlies the rule in disciplinary proceedings that all reasonable doubts are to be resolved in favor of respondents and that, if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a fact, the inference to be accepted is the one leading to a conclusion of innocence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [13]

2116 Abatement of Other Proceedings

A determination whether a disciplinary proceeding should be abated on the ground of inability of the respondent to assist in the defense resembles a competency hearing in a criminal matter. In the law of attorney discipline, the respondent is presumed competent. Inability to assist in the defense of a disciplinary proceeding suggests a more serious form or degree of mental illness than inability to practice competently without endangering clients or the public. Therefore, facts sufficient to institute inactive status proceedings under section 6007(b) may not be sufficient to support abatement of a disciplinary proceeding. The appropriate standard for abatement is proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the attorney is incompetent to assist in the defense. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [6]

2117 Stipulation for Inactive Enrollment (rule 5.194)

2118 Hearing on Merits (rule 5.195)

2119 Other Procedural Issues

Proceedings in the State Bar Court to involuntarily enroll an attorney inactive because of mental infirmity or illness are confidential. However, respondent waived confidentiality and the hearing judge ordered that the proceeding be public. Accordingly, the review proceeding is public as well. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [1]

Review department is very reluctant to consider a legal theory raised by an appellant for the first time on review. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [4]

An attorney involuntarily enrolled inactive because of a mental infirmity or illness may file an application for transfer to active status whenever the attorney is able to show that there is no longer a statutory basis for the inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [6]

Because hearings and records regarding inactive enrollment under Business and Professions Code section 6007(b) are confidential, respondent was not identified in review department's opinion regarding issues raised by such inactive enrollment. However, where such issues arose during a disciplinary proceeding, the record in that proceeding remained public, subject to the hearing judge's discretion to seal specific portions of the record where proper grounds appeared. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [1]

Orders for inactive enrollment under section 6007(b)(1), like those under section 6007(b)(3), are subject to independent review pursuant to rule 450 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure. In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [2]

Disciplinary proceedings and involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are not related so as to require consolidation, and may be conducted on simultaneous, parallel tracks. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [3]

Decisions in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b) are reviewable by the review department pursuant to rules 450-453, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [1]

2119.10 Applicability of Other Rules of Procedure (rule 5.199)

2120 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(b)(3)

2121 Ordered (rule 5.196(A))

In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355.

2121.10 Effective Date of Inactive Enrollment Order (rule 5.197)

2125 Not Ordered (rule 5.196(B))

2125.10 Effect of Dismissal on Future Proceedings (rule 5.196(B))

In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424.

2130 Interim Remedies under Section 6007(h) in Section 6007(b) cases

2130.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 9, rules 5.255-5.265)

2131 Imposed

2135 Not Imposed

2140 Petition to End Inactive Enrollment/Modify Interim Remedies in Section 6007(b)(3) cases

2140.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 4, rules 5.205-5.212)

2140.20 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, Ch. 10, rules 5.270-5.278)

2141 Granted

2142 Denied

2143 Interim Remedies Substituted for Inactive Enrollment

2144 Interim Remedies Modified

2190 Miscellaneous Issues in Section 6007(b)(3) Cases

The only subchapter of the Americans with Disabilities Act that the State Bar could be subject to is the public entities subchapter, which provides that no qualified individual with a disability shall, by reason of such disability, be excluded from participation in or denied the benefits of the services, programs or activities of a public entity, or be subjected to discrimination by any such entity. Under that subchapter, a qualified individual with a disability is one who, with or without reasonable modifications to rules, policies, or practices, the removal of architectural, communication, or transportation barriers, or the provision of auxiliary aids and services, meets the essential eligibility requirements for the receipt of services or the participation in programs or activities provided by a public entity. In this proceeding to enroll an attorney inactive because of a mental infirmity or illness, respondent is not being enrolled inactive merely because he has a mental infirmity or illness. Rather, required clear and convincing evidence has shown that respondent is unable to or habitually fails to perform his duties or undertakings competently or that he is unable to practice law without substantial threat of harm to his clients or the public. Such a person is clearly not qualified to practice law in this State, not because of illness, but because of proven habitual failure to perform the duties of an attorney competently or proven substantial risk of harm to clients or the public. In the Matter of Wolfgram (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 355. [5]

A proceeding for involuntary inactive enrollment is not disciplinary in nature. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [3]

The facts of each case will determine whether a particular rule of civil or criminal law should be applied in State Bar proceedings to ensure due process. This principle applies in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings as well as disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [12]

2200 Issues in Section 6007(c) Involuntary Inactive Enrollment Proceedings

2201 Special Procedural Issues in Section 6007(c)(1) Address of Record Cases

2203 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 5, rules 5.215-5.221)

2205 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(c)(1) Address of Record Provision

2205.10 Ordered

2205.50 Not Ordered

2210 Special Procedural Issues in Section 6007(c)(2) Threat of Harm Cases

2210.05 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 4, ch. 6, rules 5.225-5.238)

2210.10 Shifting burden of proof under Section 6007(c)(2)(B)

2210.20 Necessity of hearing

2210.30 Use of declarations as evidence

Declarations offered in support of application for involuntary inactive enrollment did not provide an evidentiary basis to find clear and convincing evidence of respondent's likelihood of causing substantial harm, where declarants simply identified themselves as authors of unverified reports without vouching for the truth of the reports or establishing a business records exception to the hearsay rule. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [4]

2210.40 Underlying proceeding must be expedited

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

Where lapse of time between sessions of hearing in disciplinary matter resulted from respondent's own actions, and respondent never complained about delay, respondent waived right to speedy determination of charges underlying involuntary inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [1]

Upon respondent's application for retransfer to active status from involuntary inactive enrollment under section 6007(c), based on delay in processing of disciplinary proceeding on underlying charges, hearing judge must determine to what extent respondent or respondent's counsel was responsible for such delays, and whether circumstances otherwise justified any delays. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 799, 799.7, 799.8.) In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [26]

2210.90 Other special procedural issues

In order to impose involuntary inactive enrollment on an attorney pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6007 (c), the court must find that the attorney poses a substantial threat of harm to the attorney's clients or the public. The following elements must be shown by clear and convincing evidence: that the attorney has caused or is causing substantial harm to clients or the public; that clients or the public are likely to suffer greater injury from denial of inactive enrollment than the attorney is likely to suffer if it is granted or there is a reasonable likelihood that the harm will reoccur and continue; and that there is a reasonable probability that the State Bar will prevail on the merits of the underlying disciplinary matter. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [2]

It would have been inappropriate in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding for judge to draw any inference from pending criminal charges in and of themselves. However, testimony offered under oath and subject to cross-examination in preliminary hearings on such criminal charges supported judge's findings regarding facts of respondent's criminal conduct. This evidence was sufficient to demonstrate a reasonable probability that State Bar would prevail on merits of disciplinary charges brought thereon. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [3]

Ordinarily, the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings is by clear and convincing evidence, and that standard has been applied in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under both section 6007(c) and section 6007(b)(3). In the Matter of Respondent L (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 454. [8]

Disciplinary proceedings and involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings are not related so as to require consolidation, and may be conducted on simultaneous, parallel tracks. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [3]

Like the standard of proof in disciplinary proceedings and in proceedings under section 6007(c), the standard of proof in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings under section 6007(b)(3) is clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [2]

Where respondent had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(c) prior to hearing on underlying charges, and after review, proceeding on underlying charges was remanded for partial rehearing and new discipline recommendation, review department directed that on remand, whether suspension or disbarment was recommended, respondent should receive credit for time spent on inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [25]

2220 Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(c)(2)

2221 Ordered

Where respondent had missed a court appearance on behalf of a client shortly after stipulating to discipline based in part on similar past conduct; had brought an illegal drug to court, attempted to visit an incarcerated client with the drug in his possession, and thrown the drug on the floor after refusing to be searched; had been stopped on another occasion with the drug in his car; and had been observed to be under the influence of a controlled substance while with a client, there was a clear likelihood of harm to both respondent's clients and the public if respondent were allowed to practice law pending adjudication of criminal and State Bar proceedings, and hearing judge erred in focusing exclusively on threat of harm to clients and finding insufficient evidence thereof to justify inactive enrollment. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [5]

Where there was uncontroverted evidence of repeated client harm and other violations of law by respondent, and no evidence of recognition by respondent of substance abuse problem, hearing judge erred in denying involuntary inactive enrollment of respondent without considering substantial harm which public was likely to suffer from such denial. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [8]

In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301.

2225 Not Ordered

2225.10 Insufficient showing of harm

2225.20 Insufficient showing re balance of harm (public/attorney)

2225.30 Insufficient showing that harm likely to recur

2225.40 Insufficient showing re State Bar prevailing on merits

2225.50 Procedural error

2225.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Wyshak (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 70.

2230 Interim Remedies under Section 6007(h) in Section 6007(c) Cases

2231 Imposed

2235 Not Imposed

2240 Petition to Terminate Inactive Enrollment/Modify Interim Remedies in Section 6007(c) Cases

2140.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 4, Ch. 7 (rules 5.240-5.245)

2140.20 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 4, Ch. 10 (rules 5.270-5.278)

2241 Granted

2245 Denied

2247 Interim Remedies Substituted for Inactive Enrollment

2248 Interim Remedies Modified

2290 Miscellaneous Issues in Section 6007(c)(2) Cases

Respondent's record of prior discipline did not warrant great weight in involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, where respondent's first prior disciplinary matter was unrelated to present conduct, and State Bar had stipulated in second prior matter that respondent's misconduct was only worthy of a short suspension not requiring client notification. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [6]

In involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, evidence showing very substantial likelihood that respondent had substance abuse problem could be considered as risk to the public of future professional misconduct even absent evidence of current client harm. In the Matter of Mesce (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 658. [7]

The Supreme Court has expressly approved retroactive disciplinary suspension. In the Matter of Chen (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 571. [9]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

A proceeding for involuntary inactive enrollment is not disciplinary in nature. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [3]

The facts of each case will determine whether a particular rule of civil or criminal law should be applied in State Bar proceedings to ensure due process. This principle applies in involuntary inactive enrollment proceedings as well as disciplinary proceedings. In the Matter of Respondent B (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 424. [12]

Neither a respondent's section 6007(c) inactive enrollment itself nor the unproven charges underlying it should be relied upon as aggravation in a subsequent disciplinary proceeding. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 301. [24]

2300 Issues in Other Section 6007 Proceedings

Note: For inactive enrollment of probationers under § 6007(d), see topic number 1715.

2310 Inactive Enrollment After Disbarment Recommendation (Section 6007(c)(4))

2311 Imposed

In the Matter of Wittenberg (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 418

In the Matter of Romano (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 391

In the Matter of Kinney (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 360.

In the Matter of Tishgart (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 338

In the Matter of Guzman (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 308.

In the Matter of Song (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 273

In the Matter of Lenard (Review Dept. 2013) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 250

In the Matter of Reiss (Review Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 206

In the Matter of Sullivan (Review Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 189

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170.

In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1.

2315 Not Imposed

2315.10 Presumption of harm rebutted

In reviewing hearing department decision in disciplinary proceeding, review department took judicial notice that in separate involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding, respondent had been found to have rebutted the presumption, arising from hearing department's disbarment recommendation, that respondent's conduct posed a continuing threat of harm to clients and the public. However, the findings in the involuntary inactive enrollment proceeding were not binding in the disciplinary matter, nor did they have any probative value. In the Matter of Frazier (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 676. [4]

2315.20 Procedural error

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.

2315.90 Other reason

In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.

2319 Miscellaneous Issues re Section 6007(c)(4)

In the Matter of Torres (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138.

To apply amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997, against an attorney whose disciplinary proceeding began before January 1, 1997, effective date of amendments would be impermissible retroactive application of amendments. That is because amendments had dramatic effect on attorney's legal ability to practice law and deprived attorney of right to request hearing on inactive enrollment and because amendments neither clarified prior law nor merely changed procedure of trial. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.[1 a-f]

Even though respondent received extensive trial on disciplinary charges, he was never formally notified that outcome of trial could result in his immediate and automatic inactive enrollment under amendments to Business and Professions Code section 6007, subdivision (c)(4), effective January 1, 1997. Reasonable notice is crucial to a meaningful hearing. Thus, disciplinary trial itself could not have provided respondent with minimal protection on issue of inactive enrollment because issues can differ from case to case between the appropriate level of discipline for misconduct compared to the need for immediate public protection to protect existing or future clients from additional risk of harm. And disciplinary hearing did not fulfill explicitly recognized right to request hearing on the propriety of inactive enrollment provided for under former version of section 6007, subdivision (c)(4) before its amendment effective January 1, 1997. In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.47.[2 a-b]

Where respondent had been placed on inactive enrollment based on hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, review department recommended that if respondent provided proof of compliance with State Bar Court's notification rule (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 795.5) at time of inactive enrollment, respondent be excused from complying with Supreme Court's notification rule (rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court) upon disbarment, and also that respondent receive credit for time on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [9]

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

Where attorney had been placed on involuntary inactive enrollment following disbarment recommendation by hearing department, but on review, discipline recommendation was decreased to suspension and probation, review department recommended that period of involuntary inactive enrollment already served by attorney, and any additional period served thereafter, be credited towards period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [24]

If order placing attorney on inactive enrollment was predicated solely on hearing department's disbarment recommendation, which was later superseded by review department's recommendation of suspension, parties could stipulate, pursuant to rule 799 of the Rules of Procedure, to permit attorney's retransfer to active status pending the finality of disciplinary proceedings. Attorney also retained option of stipulating to continued inactive enrollment, in which case review department recommended that such inactive enrollment be credited toward period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [25]

2320 Inactive Enrollment for Failure to Answer (Section 6007(e))

2320.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 4, ch. 8 (rules 5.250-5.253)

2321 Imposed

In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348

In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220.

2325 Not Imposed

2329 Miscellaneous Issues re Section 6007(e)

Hearing judge erred in recommending that respondent receive credit toward his period of actual suspension for the time he had been on involuntary inactive enrollment pursuant to section 6007(e). Neither the statute nor the case law authorizes the State Bar Court to credit a member's period of involuntary inactive enrollment, under subdivision (e), toward a period of actual suspension. In the Matter of Carver (Review Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 348. [9]

Normally, the requirement that a disciplined attorney show rehabilitation, fitness to practice, and learning in the law prior to returning to practice is imposed where the attorney's actual suspension is two years or greater. However, where period of time that attorney was enrolled inactive on account of failure to answer notice to show cause, coupled with one-year actual suspension recommended by review department, resulted in attorney being continuously ineligible to practice law for greater than two years, it was appropriate to recommend compliance with such requirement. In the Matter of Howard (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 445. [5]

2340 Petitions to Terminate Inactive Enrollment under Section 6007(c)(4) or (e)

Note: For Petitions to terminate inactive enrollment under section 6007(b), see topic numbers 2054 et seq., 2074 et seq., and 2140 et seq.; under section 6007(c)(1) or (c)(2), see topic number 2240 et seq.

2340.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, rules 5.251, 5.315

2341 Granted

2345 Denied

In the Matter of Dixon (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.23.

2347 Interim Remedies Substituted for Inactive Enrollment

2349 Miscellaneous Issues re Termination of Inactive Enrollment

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

2400 Issues in Standard 1.2(c)(i) Rehabilitation Proceedings (1986 Standard 1.4(c)(ii))

2401 Special Procedural Issues

2401.10 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure (Div. 7, Ch. 1 (rules 5.400-5.411)

2401.20 Petition and Response (rules 5.401, 5.403)

2410.30 Earliest Time to File Petition (rule 5.402)

2402 Burden of Proof/Showing Required (rule 5.404)

In proceedings for relief from actual suspension, an attorney's compliance with the terms of suspension and conditions of probation does not create a presumption of the attorney's rehabilitation; instead, in addition to such compliance, the attorney must show by a preponderance of the evidence his rehabilitation, present fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the general law to be relieved of actual suspension under Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.4(c)(ii). In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [7]

In a proceeding to be relieved of actual suspension, the numerous declarations presented by the attorney from his family, friends, and colleagues attesting to his good character and exemplary conduct were insufficient as a matter of law to establish rehabilitation. While many of the declarations contained laudatory descriptions of the attorney's capabilities and effectiveness in resolving difficult problems, a close reading of the declarations showed that with few exceptions, the declarants were unaware of the specific nature of the attorney's wrongdoing, and almost all were under the misapprehension that the attorney's tumor operation in 1996–1997 was the cause of his misconduct resulting in prior discipline. Therefore, the declarations did not constitute substantial evidence to support the finding of exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [2]

The standard of proof in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceedings for relief from actual suspension is preponderance of the evidence. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 634.) Thus, to be entitled to relief from actual suspension, petitioners must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, their rehabilitation, present fitness to practice, and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [1]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in determining that State Bar's evidence establishing that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of petitioner's former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers did not prevent petitioner from showing his rehabilitation because hearing judge based that determination on his findings that petitioner did not know (1) of the client's claim or (2) of Client Security Fund's actions until petitioner's deposition was taken in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding and because those two findings are supported by substantial evidence consisting of petitioner's own testimony, which was supported with a number of letters from the client's file demonstrating that medical providers had been paid. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [4]

In comparison to a disbarred attorney, who has been found unfit to practice law and whose name has been stricken from the roll of attorneys, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension has suffered a more modest negative evaluation of his character by virtue of his prior misconduct. Thus, in marked contrast to the disbarred attorney whose showing of rehabilitation must be made with stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time and with proof of a sustained period of exemplary conduct, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding may show his rehabilitation, even before the completion of the term of his actual suspension, with proof overcoming a reduced prior finding of a danger to the public and with a relaxed showing of exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [6]

Even though moral shortcomings that previously resulted in discipline of the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension are proportionally less than moral shortcomings that would result in disbarment, the suspended attorney must still show, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he meets the same high moral standards required of all attorneys in this state. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [7]

Because record in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension established (1) that, when petitioner committed the misconduct in his prior record that resulted in his actual suspension, he was abusing and addicted to alcohol and cocaine, (2) that his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine causally contributed to his prior misconduct, (3) that he had undergone a meaningful and sustained period of rehabilitation from his abuses and addictions, (4) that, when the discipline was imposed on him in his prior record, these facts were not known to State Bar, State Bar Court, the Supreme Court, and (5) that when discipline was imposed in prior proceeding, petitioner was in denial regarding his abuses of and addictions to alcohol and cocaine, review department found, when it reviewed record to determine whether hearing judge's findings of rehabilitation and present fitness were supported by substantial evidence, that petitioner's addictions were not excuses for, but explanations of his prior misconduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [9]

The State Bar Court determines whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension has met the requirements of standard 1.4(c)(ii) without reevaluating the petitioner's prior discipline, whether perceived as lenient or harsh. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [2]

The State Bar Court considers the prior misconduct of a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii), as well as the aggravating and mitigating circumstances surrounding such misconduct, to determine the amount and nature of the required rehabilitation. In addition, other misconduct that predates the last discipline and was not considered in the underlying disciplinary matters should be considered in weighing the starting point for measuring discipline. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [3]

Compliance with the terms of actual suspension and probation presumptively satisfies the discipline required for a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) to become a productive attorney. However, the petitioner must also show rehabilitation, present fitness to practice law, and present learning and ability in the general law. That showing must be measured from the time of the last prior discipline. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [4]

Where a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) had been disciplined several times, the misconduct underlying that discipline could not be used to rebut the petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, but can be used as a point from which to measure rehabilitation. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [5]

Where a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) had not been disciplined for failing to file income tax returns, it was proper to consider this failure, as well as the petitioner's indebtedness to the Internal Revenue Service and other unpaid obligations, in measuring the petitioner's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [6]

Stipulations about culpability, aggravation, and mitigation provide a starting point to determine whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) has shown rehabilitation and is unlikely to repeat misconduct. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [7]

The evidence of rehabilitation required to relieve a petitioner from actual suspension in a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii) varies according to the seriousness of the petitioner's misconduct. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [9]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) must show compliance with the terms of probation. Also, the petitioner must show by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) his conduct has been exemplary from the time of the imposition of the last prior discipline and (2) the conduct evidencing rehabilitation is such that the court may make a determination that the conduct leading to the discipline or other need for rehabilitation is not likely to recur. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [10]

In determining whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) is likely to commit further misconduct, the State Bar Court should look to the nature of the petitioner's underlying offense or offenses; any aggravation, other misconduct, or mitigation that may have been considered; and any evidence about elimination of the cause or causes of such misconduct. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [11]

Substantial evidence supported a decision relieving a petitioner from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) where the petitioner had eliminated the medical, emotional, and financial problems underlying his misconduct; had been disciplined for violating probation conditions and eventually had complied with the terms of his probation; had provided 13 declarations attesting to his major life changes and to his good character; had suffered from undiagnosed diabetes when he had been administratively suspended for failing to take the California Professional Responsibility In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

Examination within the time prescribed by a Supreme Court order; had paid a great many debts; had reached an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service about failing to file federal income tax returns and was paying the outstanding tax debt; had only three other debts, which were unrelated to the practice of law and which totalled $2,800 to $3,200; and had received and later paid a traffic ticket for speeding. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

In hearing to establish fitness to return to practice after suspension, respondent could either show that restitution had been completed or that restitution had been made to the best of respondent's financial ability. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [14]

Where time period between effective date of discipline and eligibility to apply to return to active practice would not necessarily be long enough for respondent to take and pass professional responsibility examination before hearing on fitness to practice, review department did not recommend that respondent be given less than the normal one-year period to pass such examination. Passage of the examination would be relevant evidence at fitness hearing but was not a condition precedent to return to practice. In the Matter of Lybbert (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 297. [15]

Where attorney had committed extremely serious misconduct over long period of time, and questions remained concerning attorney's rehabilitation, requiring standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing in lieu of disbarment would not be sufficient to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [15]

Where examiner was concerned to obtain detailed, complete information regarding respondent's anticipated application to resume practice pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), review department recommended that respondent follow same format in application as in an application for reinstatement; otherwise, examiner could seek such information by a discovery request which would be more time consuming. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [14]

Passage of the Professional Responsibility Examination would be relevant evidence in a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), but is not a condition precedent. Accordingly, respondent ordered to take PRE was given the standard period of one year to do so even though respondent's standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing might occur sooner. In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [15]

For an egregious rule violation, the State Bar may seek suspension of at least two years and application of standard 1.4(c)(ii); an attorney who can satisfy the showing required by standards 1.4(c)(ii) poses no continuing threat to the public warranting disbarment. In the Matter of Lilley (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 476. [11]

Procedural rules proposed by State Bar which would permit attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing to make required showing by preponderance of evidence; would allow stipulation that attorney meets conditions; would guarantee opportunity to make required showing before expiration of two-year actual suspension; and would provide for expedited review, appeared to answer Supreme Court's concerns regarding conduct of such hearings. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [22]

2403 Expedited Proceeding (rule 5.400)

Procedures for ruling on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 630-641) are expedited to avoid procedural delays that might effectively create a far longer period of actual suspension than that originally ordered by the Supreme Court. Proceedings on standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions are summary in nature, not full-fledged reinstatement proceedings in which disbarred attorneys seek to be reinstated to the practice of law. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [3]

Given the summary nature and expedited schedule of a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii), the petitioner remains on actual suspension until the finality of the decision in the State Bar Court, including review. (See Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 633, 635, 638, 639, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [13]

Under applicable expedited hearing procedures, a respondent may apply for a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) up to 150 days before the respondent's actual suspension is set to expire. (Rules 810-826, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [15]

Procedural rules proposed by State Bar which would permit attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) hearing to make required showing by preponderance of evidence; would allow stipulation that attorney meets conditions; would guarantee opportunity to make required showing before expiration of two-year actual suspension; and would provide for expedited review, appeared to answer Supreme Court's concerns regarding conduct of such hearings. In the Matter of Mapps (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [22]

2404 Discovery (rule 5.405)

2405 Documentary Evidence (rule 5.406)

2409 Other Procedural Issues

In reviewing a hearing judge's decision on a standard 1.4(c)(ii) petition for relief from actual suspension, the standards of review are abuse of discretion and error of law. (Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 300(k), 639.) Under abuse of discretion standard, review department does not review hearing judge's decision with the intention of substituting its view for that of hearing judge, but rather with the intention of employing the equivalent of the substantial evidence test by accepting hearing judge's resolution of credibility and conflicting evidence and hearing judge's choice of possible reasonable inferences. Review department reviews the record to determine if hearing judge's findings are supported by substantial evidence and whether any errors of law were committed. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [2]

State Bar Court does not have authority to conditionally grant standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension or to impose probation type conditions on attorneys when granting such petitions. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [5]

The State Bar Court determines whether a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension has met the requirements of standard 1.4(c)(ii) without reevaluating the petitioner's prior discipline, whether perceived as lenient or harsh. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [2]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension is not ordinarily required to complete probation before he or she may present meaningful evidence of rehabilitation in a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Rehabilitative sanctions in the form of continuing probation conditions may remain in place after a petitioner's relief from actual suspension. A disciplined attorney may show rehabilitation before his or her actual suspension expires in a proper proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [8]

Given the summary nature and expedited schedule of a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii), the petitioner remains on actual suspension until the finality of the decision in the State Bar Court, including review. (See Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 633, 635, 638, 639, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [13]

Nothing in lengthy pendency of probation revocation proceeding delayed or prevented respondent's filing of application for termination of suspension pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [17]

Where respondent was still on suspension in prior matter due to failure to make showing under standard 1.4(c)(ii), hearing judge's recommendation that actual suspension in current matter be consecutive to such suspension was inconsistent with recommendation that only one 1.4(c)(ii) hearing be required to terminate both suspensions. Review department therefore recommended that actual suspension in current matter be prospective to Supreme Court's order, but concurrent with balance of all suspensions in effect as of entry of such order. In the Matter of Carr (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 244. [22]

Under applicable expedited hearing procedures, a respondent may apply for a hearing pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii) up to 150 days before the respondent's actual suspension is set to expire. (Rules 810-826, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Deierling (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 552. [15]

Where examiner was concerned to obtain detailed, complete information regarding respondent's anticipated application to resume practice pursuant to standard 1.4(c)(ii), review department recommended that respondent follow same format in application as in an application for reinstatement; otherwise, examiner could seek such information by a discovery request which would be more time consuming. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rules 810-826.) In the Matter of Katz (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 502. [14]

2410 Actual Suspension Lifted

In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289.

Substantial evidence supported a decision relieving a petitioner from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) where the petitioner had eliminated the medical, emotional, and financial problems underlying his misconduct; had been disciplined for violating probation conditions and eventually had complied with the terms of his probation; had provided 13 declarations attesting to his major life changes and to his good character; had suffered from undiagnosed diabetes when he had been administratively suspended for failing to take the California Professional Responsibility In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

Examination within the time prescribed by a Supreme Court order; had paid a great many debts; had reached an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service about failing to file federal income tax returns and was paying the outstanding tax debt; had only three other debts, which were unrelated to the practice of law and which totalled $2,800 to $3,200; and had received and later paid a traffic ticket for speeding. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

2450 Actual Suspension Not Lifted

2451 Inadequate Showing of Rehabilitation

In a proceeding to be relieved of actual suspension, in view of the hearing judge's findings that the attorney had engaged in an objectively unsupportable crusade to discredit State Bar employees, consciously embarked on a baseless campaign against the State Bar Court's jurisdiction, and asserted numerous other meritless challenges to the disciplinary process, it was an abuse of discretion for the hearing judge to find that the attorney's conduct was exemplary. Because the attorney's prior misconduct involved pursuing meritless claims and showing disrespect for the interests of his clients and the judicial system by filing frivolous objections and appeals and disregarding lawful court orders, the attorney's actions since the imposition of discipline showed that the attorney's conduct was not aberrational. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [1a, b]

In a proceeding to be relieved of actual suspension, the numerous declarations presented by the attorney from his family, friends, and colleagues attesting to his good character and exemplary conduct were insufficient as a matter of law to establish rehabilitation. While many of the declarations contained laudatory descriptions of the attorney's capabilities and effectiveness in resolving difficult problems, a close reading of the declarations showed that with few exceptions, the declarants were unaware of the specific nature of the attorney's wrongdoing, and almost all were under the misapprehension that the attorney's tumor operation in 1996–1997 was the cause of his misconduct resulting in prior discipline. Therefore, the declarations did not constitute substantial evidence to support the finding of exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [2]

In a proceeding for relief from actual suspension, where (1) the attorney continued to reject the truth of the facts and legal conclusions contained in his stipulation in a prior disciplinary case, claiming that trial counsel had illegally coerced him to sign it; (2) the attorney had testified recently in a deposition that he was not culpable of prior misconduct because an illness precluded a finding that he had acted willfully, although much of his wrongdoing either pre–dated or post–dated his health problems; and (3) there was no basis for the attorney's assertion of a good faith belief in his innocence, the attorney showed an unwillingness to accept responsibility for his prior misconduct that rendered unreasonable a finding that he was rehabilitated. The attorney's ongoing lack of accountability for his previous wrongdoing was particularly troubling because it mirrored the aggravating circumstances found in prior disciplinary proceedings that he was indifferent toward the consequences of his misconduct. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [3a–c]

2452 Inadequate Showing of Fitness to Practice

In a proceeding for relief from actual suspension, where the attorney mounted a relentless and meritless offensive against certain State Bar employees, indiscriminately making baseless charges against them in letters, e–mails, facsimiles, pleadings filed with the Supreme Court and the State Bar Court, and telephone calls to various individuals and departments of the State Bar, his behavior rose to the level of harassment and was indicative of his lack of respect for State Bar employees and for the disciplinary process. Moreover, the attorney's censure of the State Bar extended beyond specific employees to the judicial branch itself. These actions demonstrated that the attorney was unable or unwilling to conduct himself in a manner consistent with the settled definition of good moral character. Under these facts, the hearing judge abused his discretion when he found that the attorney established by a preponderance of the evidence his present fitness to practice. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [4a–d]

2453 Inadequate Showing of Learning and Ability in Law

Where the attorney (1) repeatedly attempted to challenge his membership status; (2) repeatedly challenged the constitutionality of Standards for Attorney Sanctions for Professional Misconduct, standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceedings based on his faulty legal analysis of his own membership status; (3) made jurisdictional challenges first to the Supreme Court and then to the State Bar Court on the same grounds; and (4) made meritless attempts to remove his disciplinary record from the State Bar's website, his behavior demonstrated an inability to evaluate facts and the law competently and to draw appropriate inferences and conclusions from them. In view of these facts, despite the attorney's having completed more than 100 hours of continuing legal education, the hearing judge abused his discretion when he found that the attorney possessed learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [5a–f]

2490 Miscellaneous Issues in Standard 1.2(c)(i) Rehabilitation Proceedings

Even though petitioner in a standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension did not know that Client Security Fund had previously paid one of his former clients more than $3,400 based on the client's claim that petitioner improperly failed to pay that sum to the client's medical care providers and even though letters from the client's file demonstrated that medical providers had been paid, petitioner must still reimburse Client Security Fund for the monies it paid the client. (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6140.5, subd. (c).) In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [5]

In comparison to a disbarred attorney, who has been found unfit to practice law and whose name has been stricken from the roll of attorneys, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension has suffered a more modest negative evaluation of his character by virtue of his prior misconduct. Thus, in marked contrast to the disbarred attorney whose showing of rehabilitation must be made with stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time and with proof of a sustained period of exemplary conduct, the suspended attorney in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding may show his rehabilitation, even before the completion of the term of his actual suspension, with proof overcoming a reduced prior finding of a danger to the public and with a relaxed showing of exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [6]

In standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension, State Bar Court presumes that the prior discipline imposed on petitioner was, based on the facts as shown in the prior record of discipline, appropriate to accomplish the goals of attorney discipline to protect the public, the courts, and the profession. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [8]

Substantial evidence supported hearing judge's findings in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension that petitioner established his rehabilitation and present fitness to practice where petitioner proved (1) that he eliminated his abuses of alcohol and cocaine that causally contributed to his prior misconduct; (2) that he openly described his prior misconduct to an insurance company for whom he worked and to his church, Cocaine Anonymous group, friends, and relatives and to the five character witnesses who convincingly testified as to his rehabilitation and good moral character; and (3) that he became a leader in Cocaine Anonymous and president of his church. State Bar did not impeach petitioner's showings of rehabilitation and present fitness with the incomplete copy of petitioner's application for license to act as a life insurance agent to which State Bar alleged, but did not prove, petitioner attached an addendum that contained a false and misleading description of his prior record of discipline. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [10]

Hearing judge did not abuse his discretion in finding that petitioner in standard 1.4(c)(ii) proceeding for relief from actual suspension established his present learning and ability in the general law where petitioner proved that he recently (1) completed 100 hours of classes dealing with insurance contracts, claims, procedures, and ethics; (2) spent more than 200 hours studying estate planning and taxation for small business; (3) litigated his personal bankruptcy and his own child custody case; (4) obtained a dismissal of criminal charges his child's mother brought against him regarding visitation rights with his daughter; and (5) two attorneys testified that he had extensive knowledge of laws regarding estate and business taxation. In the Matter of Terrones (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 289. [11]

State Bar Court does not have authority to conditionally grant standard 1.4(c)(ii) petitions for relief from actual suspension or to impose probation type conditions on attorneys when granting such petitions. In the Matter of Bailey (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 220. [5]

Where a petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) had not been disciplined for failing to file income tax returns, it was proper to consider this failure, as well as the petitioner's indebtedness to the Internal Revenue Service and other unpaid obligations, in measuring the petitioner's rehabilitation. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [6]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension is not ordinarily required to complete probation before he or she may present meaningful evidence of rehabilitation in a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). Rehabilitative sanctions in the form of continuing probation conditions may remain in place after a petitioner's relief from actual suspension. A disciplined attorney may show rehabilitation before his or her actual suspension expires in a proper proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii). (Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [8]

A petitioner seeking relief from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) must show compliance with the terms of probation. Also, the petitioner must show by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) his conduct has been exemplary from the time of the imposition of the last prior discipline and (2) the conduct evidencing rehabilitation is such that the court may make a determination that the conduct leading to the discipline or other need for rehabilitation is not likely to recur. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [10]

Substantial evidence supported a decision relieving a petitioner from actual suspension under standard 1.4(c)(ii) where the petitioner had eliminated the medical, emotional, and financial problems underlying his misconduct; had been disciplined for violating probation conditions and eventually had complied with the terms of his probation; had provided 13 declarations attesting to his major life changes and to his good character; had suffered from undiagnosed diabetes when he had been administratively suspended for failing to take the California Professional Responsibility In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

Examination within the time prescribed by a Supreme Court order; had paid a great many debts; had reached an agreement with the Internal Revenue Service about failing to file federal income tax returns and was paying the outstanding tax debt; had only three other debts, which were unrelated to the practice of law and which totalled $2,800 to $3,200; and had received and later paid a traffic ticket for speeding. In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [12]

Given the summary nature and expedited schedule of a proceeding under standard 1.4(c)(ii), the petitioner remains on actual suspension until the finality of the decision in the State Bar Court, including review. (See Rules Proc. of State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, rules 632, 633, 635, 638, 639, 640.) In the Matter of Murphy (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr 571. [13]

Where an attorney previously involved in serious drug abuse had ceased such abuse unilaterally and did not present any expert evidence of current freedom from substance abuse, and the attorney did not submit any evidence of present learning and ability in the law following an interim suspension the length of which exceeded the attorney's prior period of licensure, public protection would be served by continuing the attorney's actual suspension until the attorney established freedom from drug dependency and present learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [4]

2500 Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings

2501 Special Procedural Issues

2502 Waiting Period to Apply for Reinstatement

The earliest time that respondent can petition for reinstatement if he is disbarred is five years after the effective date of his interim suspension. (Rules Proc. for State Bar Ct. Proceedings (eff. Jan. 1, 1995), rule 662(b).) Where the order placing respondent on interim suspension provided that he had to stop providing legal services for any paying clients by one date, but could perform legal services for preexisting pro bono clients until a later date, the earlier date was the effective date of the interim suspension because by obtaining an exception for completion of the pro bono cases, respondent acted for the benefit of his pro bono clients, the courts in which their cases were pending, and the justice system, conduct which would be discouraged if he was denied credit for the entire time he was prohibited from earning his living from the practice of law by reason of the interim suspension order resulting from his felony conviction. In the Matter of Rech (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 310. [2]

In the Matter of Brazil (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 679.

Both the Legislature, by statute, and the Supreme Court, by case law, have recognized that the Supreme Court has inherent authority over regulation of the practice of law. The Supreme Court has not felt constrained by lack of authorizing legislation to exercise this inherent power, and has concerned itself with comparable treatment of respondents in comparable situations. Accordingly, Supreme Court case law constituted appropriate authority for review department recommendation that a disbarred respondent be permitted to credit time spent on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement, just as an interimly suspended attorney-felon can do by rule (rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar). In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [5]

By rule, convicted felons are always entitled to credit for time spent on interim suspension against the waiting period for seeking reinstatement. (Rule 662, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Inactive enrollment has the same effect as interim suspension in banning the practice of law pending a final order of discipline, and is similarly designed to protect the public during the pendency of a disciplinary case against the malfeasant attorney. Giving credit for interim suspension against the waiting period for reinstatement reflects the decision that five years removal from practice is a sufficient minimum opportunity for rehabilitation, even if the time period precedes the order of disbarment. No policy interest would be served by treating inactively enrolled attorneys differently from interimly suspended attorneys in this regard. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [6]

Because of due process concerns, time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment pending disciplinary proceedings is limited to one year absent proof of delay by respondent or respondent's counsel or other circumstances justifying lack of compliance. (See rules 799, 799.8, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) Where review department had ruled on earlier appeal that respondent would receive credit against final discipline for time spent on involuntary inactive enrollment, and respondent had not sought to terminate inactive enrollment during pendency of proceedings on remand and second appeal, respondent would be prejudiced if period of over five years spent on inactive enrollment were not credited against waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Heiner (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 559. [7]

The required five-year waiting period before a disbarred attorney can apply for reinstatement may be shortened to three years for good cause. By rule, the five-year and three-year periods run from the date of any interim suspension, and Supreme Court precedent has given the same effect to inactive enrollment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) The issue whether the waiting period may run from the start of a suspension other than an interim suspension has not been decided, and did not need to be addressed by the review department in recommending disbarment, but could be raised by respondent before a hearing judge if respondent wished to seek reinstatement at the earliest possible time. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [22]

A petition for reinstatement may be filed five years after the effective date of interim suspension, disbarment, or resignation. For good cause, reinstatement may be sought three years after disbarment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [9]

To be accurate, petitioner should have stated that the minimum waiting period to apply for reinstatement is five years (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), rather than stating that he had been disbarred for five years. Nonetheless, petitioner's statement as a whole clearly indicated that petitioner was not then licensed to practice law, so misstatement was not serious. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [12]

2503 Burden of Proof/Showing Required to Shorten Waiting Period

Where respondent had been placed on inactive enrollment based on hearing judge's disbarment recommendation, review department recommended that if respondent provided proof of compliance with State Bar Court's notification rule (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 795.5) at time of inactive enrollment, respondent be excused from complying with Supreme Court's notification rule (rule 955, Cal. Rules of Court) upon disbarment, and also that respondent receive credit for time on inactive enrollment toward waiting period to apply for reinstatement. In the Matter of Blum (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 170. [9]

The required five-year waiting period before a disbarred attorney can apply for reinstatement may be shortened to three years for good cause. By rule, the five-year and three-year periods run from the date of any interim suspension, and Supreme Court precedent has given the same effect to inactive enrollment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) The issue whether the waiting period may run from the start of a suspension other than an interim suspension has not been decided, and did not need to be addressed by the review department in recommending disbarment, but could be raised by respondent before a hearing judge if respondent wished to seek reinstatement at the earliest possible time. In the Matter of Rodriguez (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 480. [22]

Review department, in recommending respondent's disbarment for failure to comply with rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not required to address issue whether time respondent had already spent on inactive enrollment due to probation violation, or on suspension due to failure to pass professional responsibility examination, should be counted toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) Respondent could raise those issues before a hearing judge at the time he wished to file a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of Grueneich (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 439. [5]

A petition for reinstatement may be filed five years after the effective date of interim suspension, disbarment, or resignation. For good cause, reinstatement may be sought three years after disbarment. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 602.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [9]

2504 Burden of Proof/Showing Required for Reinstatement

A strict and unyielding interpretation of rule 662(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar mandating that costs be paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition is more restrictive than the requirement of Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 that costs be paid as a condition of reinstatement of active membership. A strict interpretation is also inconsistent with the State Bar Court's delegated authority to give relief from costs in whole or in part or to extend the time to pay costs. If a resigned or disbarred attorney were completely relieved of the obligation to pay costs or were provided an extension of time to pay, it would be impossible to provide proof that all discipline costs have been paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory, it would render relevant costs provisions irrelevant; but the finding that the rule is directory harmonizes all provisions and avoids an unnecessary and impermissible conflict with state statutes and other rules of procedure of the State Bar. Also, such a construction is consistent with the rehabilitative goals of the discipline system by maintaining the court's discretion to consider the timely payment of costs as a factor in determining a petitioner's rehabilitation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [3a-e]

The statutory intent that discipline costs are penalties payable to and for the benefit of the State Bar of California to promote rehabilitation and to protect the public supports the position that nonpayment of these costs should not be construed as an absolute roadblock to a reinstatement proceeding in every case, but a factor in determining overall rehabilitation during the proceeding. Rule 9.10(f) of the California Rules of Court does not require or address payment of costs, and the long–standing procedure for dealing with outstanding discipline costs has been to order reinstatement upon payment of all fees and costs. If Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) is construed as directory, it allows timely payment of costs to be a relevant factor in determining whether a petitioner has been rehabilitated, which is the very essence of a reinstatement proceeding and consistent with rehabilitative goals. Conversely, if the rule were interpreted to be mandatory, the court would be precluded from considering all relevant factors regarding efforts toward rehabilitation, including the timing and efforts at paying costs. Such an interpretation would effectively change the reinstatement requirements, inadvertently rendering the timing of the payment of costs to be a conclusive determination of rehabilitation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [4a-d]

In construing statutes, a practical construction is preferred. A construction of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) which permits the State Bar Court to retain jurisdiction is manifestly more practical than one which cuts off the court's jurisdiction regardless of the time and resources the parties have already expended in the court proceedings. Where a reinstatement proceeding had been pending for almost a year at the time a motion to dismiss was filed, the State Bar's investigation period and the discovery period for both parties had expired, and the trial was set to commence in approximately one month, dismissal was a severe remedy for noncompliance with payment of costs, and denial of a motion to set aside the dismissal was draconian. If a petitioner fails to pay the disciplinary costs prior to filing his reinstatement petition, the hearing judge has discretion to dismiss the reinstatement proceeding rather than to undertake a lengthy trial. But the hearing judge may also consider the failure to timely pay costs as a negative factor in petitioner's showing of rehabilitation or condition a petitioner's return to active status on the payment of some or all of the costs. Finally, if a disbarred or resigned attorney has failed to pay costs, the State Bar may enforce an order imposing costs as a money judgment. Construing Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) as directory will continue to promote timely payment of costs, while not mandating unreasonable consequences in pending proceedings. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [5a b, c]

Where the underlying misconduct involves the theft of client trust funds, restitution is fundamental to rehabilitation. The weight attached to whether restitution has been undertaken in whole or in part depends on the ability to restore the misappropriated funds as well as the attitude expressed regarding the matter. Thus, the petitioner must provide a factual showing that he understands the extent of the harm his misconduct caused, as well as proof of his willingness to remedy it. Where petitioner engaged in a repeated pattern of theft of client funds for three years, but petitioner was unable to identify with any certainty the number of clients harmed or the amounts misappropriated, and the record lacked specificity as to how long clients had to wait for payment, the specific harm they incurred and its effect or petitioner's attitude in rectifying the harm, petitioner's assertion that all clients were repaid lacked conviction, and the evidence of rehabilitation was inadequate. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [1 a–i]

Where some clients were repaid amounts misappropriated from them during petitioner's cycle of theft and repayment, paying one client with another client's money, and no evidence was presented to show that petitioner repaid any of the identified or unidentified clients guided by a moral imperative consistent with the duties of an attorney, or merely to perpetuate his ongoing scheme or to satisfy terms of his probation, the review department could not conclude that the manner of restitution was consistent with rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [2]

Petitioner's misappropriations occurred because he found himself overcome by the stresses of his increased financial obligations, and petitioner still had outstanding loan obligations. Thus, given the utter lack of evidence showing his comprehension of the magnitude of harm, or his attitude of mind regarding repayment, his assurances at trial that he would no longer resort to unethical means to pay his debts constituted insufficient evidence of rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [3]

While an omission is not necessarily fatal to a petition for reinstatement, if an omitted claim is significant or misleading, or conceals derogatory information, reinstatement may be denied. Where petitioner failed to disclose nine lawsuits to which he was a party, regardless of the reasons for the omissions, the omissions left it to chance whether the bar's investigation process would uncover the lawsuits. Even if petitioner omitted the lawsuits as a result of hurrying to meet a deadline, he had ample time to correct his omission well before he did so, and his lack of care and the expedited manner in which he handled the disclosure of his lawsuits, coupled with a lack of evidence to show rehabilitation, was troubling and further demonstrated petitioner's failure to understand the seriousness of his misconduct. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [4 a–d]

In instances where significant weight has been afforded to character declarations or testimony, the evidence has been complementary to other probative evidence of the petition. Where letters in support of petitioner's reinstatement described him as a man of personal integrity, described his involvement in charitable activities, asserted that petitioner's misconduct was aberrant behavior traceable to financial stresses, and stated that the declarants were aware of petitioner's misconduct, yet petitioner had not accounted for the full financial extent of the harm to his clients, nor the manner in which he made restitution, it was unclear how the witnesses could fully understand the magnitude of petitioner's misconduct or how he made up for it. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [5 a, b]

The fact that pretrial statements and a stipulation were used to apprise petitioner's character witnesses of the acts that led to his resignation is not a basis for discounting the weight given to the testimony of such witnesses, particularly when no formal charges were ever filed against petitioner. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [1]

The fact that petitioner's character witnesses did not know petitioner before he entered recovery from his alcoholism was not a reason to discount the weight given to their testimony because they all had recent, close contact with petitioner which qualifies them to reflect on his present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [2]

The fact that petitioner waited almost ten years after he resigned before he made restitution did not detract from petitioner's showing of rehabilitation since he demonstrated a proper attitude and sincerity toward restitution by voluntarily choosing not to discharge debts owed to creditors who were former clients or lienholders and by fully reimbursing all but one of his victims. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [3a, b]

Where petitioner completed a structured recovery program, increased his self–esteem, terminated friendships with others who drink, and led a stable life since entering sobriety evidenced by consistent employment, the purchase of a new home and reconciliation with his wife and parents, and where the State Bar's and petitioner's experts both testified that petitioner's addictions are in sustained full remission, there is a substantial likelihood that petitioner's sobriety from his alcohol and gambling addictions will continue. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [4]

Since petitioner's post–resignation misconduct related to his gambling and alcohol abuse negatively reflected on his moral character, petitioner's first day of sobriety is the point when he began his rehabilitation in earnest insofar as the practice of law is concerned. It is from this point that petitioner's overall rehabilitation in light of his past wrongdoing is measured. Therefore the question was not whether the passage of time since petitioner failed to file a rule 955 affidavit after resignation should be considered in establishing his rehabilitation but whether petitioner's 39–month period of sustained exemplary conduct from the date of sobriety to the date of trial is sufficient to demonstrate his overall rehabilitation given the seriousness of his past misconduct. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [5]

Where petitioner's gambling and alcoholism resulted in ethical breaches that involved misappropriation of entrusted funds, multiple acts of deceit which continued post–resignation, and repeated disregard for court orders, including one from the Supreme Court, and that caused harm to multiple clients due to incompetent performance or abandonment, petitioner's period of exemplary conduct was insufficient to establish his overall rehabilitation given the extent of his prior wrongdoing and addictions. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [6a, b]

Since petitioner presented no medical or expert evidence supporting his course of recovery and the State Bar offered expert testimony in rebuttal, the credibility determinations of the hearing judge are particularly important because reformation is a state of mind which may be difficult to establish affirmatively and may not be disclosed by any certain or unmistakable outward sign. Where there is not sufficient basis to overturn the hearing judge's findings of fact with respect to the testimonial evidence offered by petitioner, the question upon independent review is to determine if the quality and quantity of petitioner's evidence are sufficient to meet his heavy burden of proof. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [1]

Where petitioner's testimony that he had not used methamphetamine for over seventeen years was uncontroverted and where there was no evidence that petitioner's weekly drink of alcohol led to alcohol abuse or ever caused him to relapse into methamphetamine use and where petitioner participated in a professional in–house substance abuse treatment program, participated in after–care group therapy, maintained ongoing participation in A.A. and supplemented his showing of recovery with favorable testimony from several, critical character witnesses, petitioner established his rehabilitation from his methamphetamine addiction. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [4 a, b]

Petitioner's acknowledgment of his drug abuse, his commitment to abstinence, and his active and regular participation in his personal recovery program positively reflect his sustained rehabilitation. Petitioner's nontraditional recovery program and the absence of independent medical or psychological evidence regarding petitioner's recovery from methamphetamine addiction do not outweigh petitioner's clear and convincing proof of rehabilitation and sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [5]

Since petitioners have the heavy burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings they are looked upon to amass and present the evidence necessary to sustain their evidentiary burden. Thus petitioners failing to introduce expert evidence or an independent evaluation, when it appears to be important, bear the risk of failing to sustain their evidentiary burden. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [9]

Reinstatement petitioner established requisite learning in law by passing California Bar Examination, Attorneys' Examination. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [1 a,b]

Although earlier admissions cases do not consider the time a petitioner is in custody or under court or State Bar supervision to be particularly weighty in assessing rehabilitation, the petitioner in each of those cases had engaged in extremely serious misconduct for an extensive time and had not adequately shown rehabilitation in light of the seriousness of the offenses. In contrast, in this case, petitioner's misconduct, though clearly serious, spanned four years, but there was no evidence that petitioner acted in less than an exemplary fashion while on probation. Further, some of petitioner's positive conduct, notably his cooperation with the State Bar, occurred despite his understanding that he would get no benefit from it. The review department therefore concluded that it was appropriate in this case to accord some weight to petitioner's activities while on probation, but it gave far greater weight to the last four years of petitioner's showing, which were after he completed his criminal probation. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2 a,b]

Concern in reinstatement proceeding is not just in counting correct number of years for measuring petitioner's rehabilitation, but is to assess quality of petitioner's rehabilitation showing in light of prior very serious misconduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [3]

In the very heavy burden a reinstatement petitioner must surmount in proving his rehabilitation, character evidence alone, no matter how positive, is not determinative. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [4]

Opinion testimony of an attorney as to the ultimate issue that petitioner was qualified for reinstatement was not precluded, although that ultimate issue was for the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court to decide. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6 a,b]

Negative testimony regarding petitioner's rehabilitation did not rebut petitioner's favorable testimony for a very important reason: the negative testimony was based solely on the severity of petitioner's earlier misconduct and not on his rehabilitative steps since resignation. The witnesses had no personal observation of petitioner for most, if not all, of the 10 years that elapsed between the time petitioner resigned and the State Bar Court hearings. Thus, while the negative testimony of each of these witnesses was relevant on the issues of the seriousness and the nature and extent of petitioner's prior misconduct, it was of little relevance on the issues of petitioner's present character and of whether petitioner has maintained a sustained period of unblemished and exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [7 a-c]

Reinstatement petitioner's outstanding income tax delinquencies of $458,000 and his offer to compromise and settle the delinquency with Internal Revenue Service for $50,000 did not show adverse moral character. This was not a case where petitioner concealed assets or his delinquencies. Nor was this a case where petitioner failed to file tax returns. Further, petitioner should not be deprived of the ability to take advantage of the offer in compromise procedures open to any citizen seeking to resolve a large delinquency, particularly when that delinquency consists of sizeable penalties and interest. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [8 a-d]

The sole issue raised is whether the requirement set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.5, subdivision (c), that an attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending reimburse the Client Security Fund (CSF) for all sums paid out as a result of the former attorney's misconduct together with interest and costs, is a condition precedent to the former attorney's filing of a petition for reinstatement. The issue is not whether, at the time he filed his petition, petitioner was eligible for reinstatement, but rather whether he had a right to file his petition for reinstatement. Section 6140.5, subdivision (c) mandates that the amount paid out by CSF because of the dishonest conduct of a lawyer, plus applicable interest and costs, shall be paid as a condition of reinstatement of membership. There is no language in that section that precludes or purports to preclude the filing of a petition for reinstatement without including a showing of repayment to the CSF. And the review department was unaware of any law, rule of court, or rule of procedure that required an affirmative showing that reimbursement has been made to CSF before or at the time of filing a petition for reinstatement. Moreover, there was no dispute that reinstatement occurs only when the Supreme Court so directs after State Bar Court proceedings, not when a petition for reinstatement is filed. Accordingly, the State Bar failed to establish either an abuse of discretion or error of law. In the Matter of Jaurequi (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.56.[1 a-c]

Petitioner's failure to comply timely with the provisions of rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not, in itself, grounds for denying petition for reinstatement. Essentially, petitioner followed the suggestion of her former counsel in the disbarment proceeding to allow him (counsel) to take care of the filing of the required affidavit of compliance with rule 955. Petitioner's former counsel did not follow through and petitioner did not comply with the rule until about eight months after filing her petition for reinstatement. The hearing judge expressed "some reservations" about petitioner's testimony concerning her belated compliance with rule 955, yet chose to resolve the issue in her favor. The review department upheld the hearing judge's decision. In doing so, the department noted, as did the hearing judge, that at the time of her disbarment, petitioner had no clients, co-counsel or pending cases and was not obligated to return any client property covered by the rule. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1 a-b]

A close reading of the hearing judge's conclusion that petitioner had proven rehabilitation, together with several adverse findings of petitioner's actions regarding her former husband led the review department to support the judge's positive recommendation. Regarding petitioner's testimony about the restraining orders she attempted to obtain in the State Bar Court against her former husband, the judge found it either negligent or intentionally misleading. However, he did not specify at which end of that wide range petitioner's testimony rested. Certainly, if petitioner's understanding of restraining orders was simply careless, no adverse conclusions were justified. The review department found no basis for a conclusion of dishonesty on petitioner's part regarding the status of the restraining orders. The review department also drew no adverse moral conclusions from petitioner's frequent litigation in the State Bar Court over a protective order. Petitioner had a right of reasonable access to this court to seek judicial remedies. Her contact of members of the Board of Governors and senior State Bar staff was also within her rights and she did not pursue inappropriate means to influence judicial decisions. The review department also concluded that petitioner disclosed adequate facts about the matter in her communications. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2 a-b]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3 a-b]

Reinstatement requires the passage of a professional responsibility examination and a showing of rehabilitation, present moral qualifications for readmission, and present ability and learning in the general law. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 951(f); Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 665(a), (b).) In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [2]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [3]

A lack of rehabilitation was found where petitioner mischaracterized his prior misconduct as mere mistakes and continued to attack the findings of misconduct by filing numerous petitions for writs and supplemental pleadings challenging the disbarment decision. Rehabilitation often requires a lengthy period of exemplary conduct. An erring attorney who seeks readmission must understand his or her professional responsibilities and must show a proper attitude toward his or her misconduct. The review department affirmed the finding that petitioner had not shown rehabilitation. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [4]

The basis of the hearing judge's finding of present moral fitness was character evidence and petitioner's testimony about his volunteer work and his assistance to relatives. However, in determining present moral qualifications, testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive. Similarly, volunteer work and care of relatives are factors to be considered, but are not dispositive. The review department reversed the finding of present moral fitness, finding that by minimizing and denying his serious misconduct, petitioner revealed a failure to appreciate the responsibilities of an attorney and the gravity of his ethical violations. This failure undermined his attempt to prove his present moral qualifications for readmission, as well as his attempt to show rehabilitation. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [5]

Although rule 665(b) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, enumerates moral qualifications for reinstatement as an item separate from rehabilitation, rule 951(f) of the California Rules of Court combines them as a single item. The Supreme Court has often considered rehabilitation and moral qualifications for readmission together. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [6]

It is a basic principle of reinstatement proceedings that a petitioner continues to bear the burden of proof, even on review. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [8]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Community service activities may bear on the showing of rehabilitation in a reinstatement proceeding, but discontinuance of such activity, without more, is not necessarily an adverse factor. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [1]

Where petitioner for reinstatement had operated a hot tub salon with a paroled ex-convict, with the approval of both his own probation officer and the ex-convict's parole officer, and where petitioner took careful steps to avoid any problems and there was no evidence of law violations or immoral activity, potential risk of such problems did not undercut petitioner's showing of rehabilitation in view of other favorable evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [2]

Where petitioner for reinstatement admitted his alcoholism, but his showing of recovery rested entirely on his own efforts at abstinence as supplemented by favorable character testimony, and he failed to present any medical or other expert opinion attesting to his recovery and prognosis, or any evidence that he had undergone recent treatment or participated in any recovery program, hearing judge's conclusion that such showing was insufficient to establish rehabilitation was entitled to considerable weight. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [4]

In order to gain readmission to the State Bar, a petitioner must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination and must demonstrate (1) rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission and (2) present ability and learning in the general law. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [1]

A petitioner for reinstatement who resigned with disciplinary charges pending must meet the same requirements for readmission as a petitioner who was disbarred. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [2]

Petitioners for reinstatement bear a heavy burden of proving rehabilitation; they must show by the most clear and convincing evidence that efforts made towards rehabilitation have been successful, and must present stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time whose character has never been in question. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [3]

The law looks with favor upon the regeneration of erring attorneys and should not place unnecessary burdens upon them. There can be no absolute guarantee that a petitioner for reinstatement will never engage in misconduct again, and the petitioner need not show perfection. All that can be required is a showing of rehabilitation and of present moral fitness. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [4]

A reinstatement petitioner's showing of acceptance of responsibility for his misconduct, of extreme remorse, and of efforts and success at developing the skills and relationships necessary to deal appropriately with future problems supported the conclusion that the petitioner demonstrated insight into his misconduct and had taken steps to change his character and behavior. The petitioner's showing of a proper attitude to his misconduct and a steady determination to rehabilitate himself warranted favorable consideration in considering his reinstatement. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [6]

Reformation is a state of mind which may be difficult to establish affirmatively and may not be disclosed by any certain or unmistakable outward sign. Accordingly, the lack of outward signs such as community involvement does not necessarily demonstrate a lack of rehabilitation. The evidence of rehabilitation must be viewed in its totality. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [7]

A reinstatement petitioner's failure to provide lengthy details about his misconduct to his character witnesses did not negate the petitioner's showing that he had learned to communicate with those close to him, where petitioner informed most of the witnesses of his conviction and loss of his law license and there was no evidence that petitioner concealed his misconduct or misled the witnesses. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [8]

A petitioner's failure to report certain information in the appropriate locations on the petition for reinstatement did not reflect adversely on the petitioner's showing of rehabilitation and present moral fitness where the omitted information was contained in other parts of the petition and where there was no intent to deceive or conceal derogatory information. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [9]

A petitioner for reinstatement does not have to establish that the changes that have occurred in his or her post-misconduct life are attributable to psychotherapy before that therapy is entitled to weight on the issue of the petitioner's showing of rehabilitation. Rather, the therapy, as well as the other evidence of rehabilitation, must be viewed and weighed collectively. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [10]

Circumstances which indicated that a reinstatement petitioner had withdrawn from participation in the criminal conspiracy which led to his resignation from the bar could not be ignored simply because the petitioner could have taken other steps to end the criminal conduct. The petitioner's failure to turn himself in to law enforcement immediately at the time of his withdrawal did not negate the fact that his criminal involvement was of limited duration, and did not preclude his later effort to show rehabilitation. Such circumstances, as well as all other circumstances of the criminal conduct, had to be considered in deciding whether the petitioner had met the burden of proof in the reinstatement proceeding. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [11]

Rehabilitation is a process that occurs over a period of time and which is demonstrated by a period of sustained exemplary conduct. A reinstatement petitioner's alleged failure to begin this process during his or her misconduct does not preclude a showing of sustained exemplary conduct over many years after the misconduct. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [12]

In determining whether a petitioner has met the burden of proof in a reinstatement proceeding notwithstanding alleged weaknesses in the showing of rehabilitation and moral fitness, it is essential to compare the facts of the proceeding with the facts of other reported reinstatement cases in which the petitioners were admitted despite such weaknesses. Where a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation included evidence as to the petitioner's remorse, acceptance of full responsibility for the misconduct, candor, honesty and integrity, success in a fiduciary position, and success at meeting financial obligations, it was as strong as the showings of petitioners who had gained reinstatement. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [13]

The passage of an appreciable period of time constitutes an appropriate consideration in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has made sufficient progress towards rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [14]

A reinstatement petitioner's recent conviction for driving under the influence did not, by itself, establish a lack of either rehabilitation or present moral fitness, where the conviction was an isolated, uncharacteristic and aberrational incident; the petitioner did not have a chemical dependency problem; the petitioner had taken steps to prevent any further occurrence; and the conviction was petitioner's first DUI offense, was unrelated to the practice of law, and was unrelated to the misconduct which led to petitioner's resignation. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [15]

In deciding whether a reinstatement petitioner has met the burden of proof, the evidence presented must be viewed in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the petitioner's loss of his or her license. Where the petitioner's participation in criminal misconduct had been limited and was mitigated by contributing emotional factors that had long since been brought under control, the review department concluded that the petitioner had made an adequate showing of rehabilitation and present moral fitness when viewed against this backdrop and in light of past comparable reinstatement cases. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [16]

Although review department gives great deference to credibility findings by hearing judge in favor of petitioner for reinstatement, petitioner continues to bear a heavy burden of proof on review. Petitioner must present overwhelming proof of reform and must show by the most clear and convincing evidence that efforts toward rehabilitation have been successful. Such evidence must demonstrate sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [2]

A petitioner for reinstatement must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination and must show present ability and learning in the general law, as well as rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) A claim that the petitioner has held himself or herself out as entitled to practice law pertains to the issue of rehabilitation and moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [3]

External pressures to pay restitution for misappropriated funds, including court orders and agreements with victims of misappropriation, do not preclude consideration of such restitution in reinstatement proceedings. The weight to be accorded to restitution depends on the petitioner's attitude, as evidenced by a spirit of willingness, earnestness, and sincerity. Where a reinstatement petitioner who had misappropriated funds from a probate estate had subsequently recognized the gravity of his misconduct; admitted his misappropriation to the probate court and the State Bar; cooperated in an audit of the estate's records; secured his debt to the estate by granting it interests in his real and personal property, and fully repaid both the misappropriated funds and additional interest, surcharges, fees, and costs, his restitution deserved significant weight even though it was required by a probate court order. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [5]

Postmisconduct pro bono work and community service are factors evidencing rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner for reinstatement did some pro bono research as a paralegal and performed volunteer work for, and made donations to, a museum, his showing could have been clearer and more impressive, but still constituted a factor in favor of his reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [6]

Although a petitioner for reinstatement does not need to occupy a fiduciary position in order to prove rehabilitation, evidence that the petitioner has successfully occupied such a position after misconduct is of probative value. Where a petitioner exercised fiduciary responsibilities for a probate estate and a trust after his resignation with disciplinary charges pending, his distribution of funds for the probate estate and the trust without problems constituted a factor in favor of his reinstatement, even though the sums involved were relatively small. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [7]

Rehabilitation requires an acceptable appreciation of one's professional responsibilities and a proper attitude toward one's misconduct. Where a petitioner for reinstatement, after being unable to deliver funds misappropriated from an estate, had confronted the severity of his misconduct; confessed his wrongdoing to the probate court and the State Bar and cooperated with both; discussed his misconduct and plans for resignation and rehabilitation with his family; ended the excessive spending for which he had misappropriated funds; and voluntarily wound up his practice and resigned from the State Bar, this conduct reflected an awareness of his professional responsibilities and constituted a significant factor in favor of his reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [8]

Character testimony and reference letters, especially from employers and attorneys, are significant in reinstatement proceedings. Great consideration is due to the testimony of members of the bar and public of high repute who have closely observed a petitioner for reinstatement. Not every witness or letter writer must have recent close contact with the petitioner; a variety of persons with different relationships to the petitioner can reflect present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner presented favorable testimony by five character witnesses, one of whom had observed him closely since his misconduct, and favorable reference letters from four persons, three of whom had had recent contact with him, such testimony and reference letters were entitled to consideration as factors supporting his reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [9]

Where reinstatement petitioner's misconduct had occurred over a single period of four to six years; character witnesses provided an impressive description of petitioner's premisconduct character, and petitioner had practiced law without misconduct for at least 37 years and done extensive pro bono work, evidence suggested that petitioner's misconduct was aberrational. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [11]

Where an attorney, while winding up his law practice before resigning with disciplinary charges pending, told clients that he was "retiring" but made clear that he would not be practicing law, this notification did not violate rule 955 of the California Rules of Court because it was given while the attorney was still an active member of the bar. While the evasiveness of the notification was relevant to the attorney's rehabilitation and moral qualifications for subsequent reinstatement, it did not mandate an adverse conclusion on those issues. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [13]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for his son's law firm despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, but the evidence indicated that the firm name was beyond the resigned attorney's control, and there was no credible evidence that the public or clients were in fact misled or that the resigned attorney had practiced law after resigning, the review department deferred to the hearing judge's favorable credibility determinations and concluded that the resigned attorney had not held himself out as entitled to practice law. The resigned attorney's continued employment in a situation where the public and clients could easily be misled clearly called into question his suitability for reinstatement, but under all the circumstances did not establish his lack of rehabilitation or present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [18]

Rehabilitation is a state of mind which may be difficult to establish. Readmission to the bar does not require perfection. No unnecessary burdens should be placed upon erring attorneys in proving rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [19]

Whether a petitioner has met the heavy burden of proof in a reinstatement proceeding depends on a comparison of the facts of the proceeding with the facts in other reported cases. Petitioners have obtained reinstatement despite weaknesses in their showings of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where the showing of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications by a petitioner for reinstatement was as strong as similar showings by petitioners who obtained reinstatement despite alleged weaknesses in their cases, and where petitioner's case was distinguishable from reported cases in which petitioners failed to proved rehabilitation and present moral qualifications, the review department recommended reinstatement despite petitioner's evasive notice to clients that he was "retiring" and despite petitioner's continuing to work as a paralegal for a law firm even though he questioned the propriety of the law firm's name. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [20]

Reinstatement petitioner's admission of misconduct, cooperation with authorities, lifestyle changes, curtailment of spending, and restitution were significant factors in favor of reinstatement. Postmisconduct pro bono work, community service, and handling of fiduciary responsibilities, as well as character witnesses' testimony and reference letters, also supported reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [21]

A petitioner for reinstatement must pass the Professional Responsibility Examination, show present ability and learning in the general law, and show rehabilitation and present moral qualifications for readmission. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [4]

A petitioner for reinstatement bears a heavy burden of proof, and must show rehabilitation by the most clear and convincing evidence and provide overwhelming proof of reform. However, no absolute guarantee that the petitioner will never engage in misconduct again is possible, nor must a petitioner show perfection. The law favors the regeneration of erring attorneys and should not place unnecessary burdens on them in proving rehabilitation. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [5]

The hearing judge's determinations of testimonial credibility must receive great weight because the hearing judge observed the witnesses' demeanor. However, the review department, examining the record independently, must reweigh the evidence and pass upon its sufficiency. Where testimonial credibility was not an issue and the determination to be made was whether the quality and quantity of a party's evidence met the applicable burden of proof, the issue was a question of law. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [6]

A petitioner for reinstatement must provide stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than an applicant who is seeking admission for the first time and has never had his or her character questioned. Such proof must overcome the prior adverse judgment which resulted in the petitioner's disbarment or resignation with discipline charges pending. The evidence must be considered in light of the petitioner's prior moral shortcomings. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [7]

Egregious misconduct does not preclude reinstatement. The law favors rehabilitation. Reformation is open to all attorneys who have erred. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [8]

The passage of an appreciable period of time is an appropriate consideration in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has made sufficient progress towards rehabilitation. Where the evidence is uncontroverted and shows exemplary conduct for eight to ten years with no suggestion of wrongdoing, a petitioner would seem to have established rehabilitation. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [10]

Evidence of pro bono or charitable work reflects on an erring attorney's rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner for reinstatement had volunteered one full day every week for several years at a legal services program, such extensive pro bono work was a significant factor in favor of the petitioner's reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [11]

Although the law demands neither fraudulent penitence nor artificial contrition, a petitioner for reinstatement must understand his or her professional responsibilities and must show a proper attitude toward his or her misconduct. Where a petitioner acknowledged the seriousness of his wrongdoing, expressed remorse, and described a fundamental change in values likely to prevent future misconduct, such testimony, which hearing judge found credible, was a significant factor in favor of his reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [12]

Although testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive, favorable character evidence deserves heavy weight in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has proved rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Favorable character testimony and reference letters from employers and attorneys are entitled to special weight. Petitioner's current employer's testimony expressing a high opinion of petitioner's character, demeanor and behavior, and confirming petitioner's sensitivity and concern for proper ethical behavior, merited significant weight. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [13]

Where evidence about the manner in which a reinstatement petitioner has handled positions of trust is available, such evidence is of probative value. But evidence that the petitioner has occupied positions of trust is not a requirement of reinstatement, and favorable testimony about the petitioner's trustworthiness should not be discounted because the witnesses have failed to observe how the petitioner would handle a fiduciary relationship. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [17]

The standard for rehabilitation and present moral qualifications in a reinstatement proceeding is objective, and whether the petitioner has met the heavy burden of proof depends on a comparison of the facts of the current proceeding with the facts in other reported proceedings. Where petitioner's showing of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications was at least comparable to the showings by others who had obtained reinstatement, and reported cases denying reinstatement were distinguishable, review department recommended reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [18]

Reinstatement is not necessarily precluded where the reinstatement petition omits information which is insignificant and the petitioner has no intent to mislead or to conceal derogatory information. However, reinstatement may be denied when omissions from the petition are significant or misleading. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [2]

The California Rule of Court regarding reinstatement requires petitioners for reinstatement to pass a professional responsibility examination, and to establish their learning and ability in the law, rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Applicants who fail to show sufficient learning in the law may be required to pass the examination required of initial applicants for admission. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [3]

The heavy burden of proving rehabilitation is with the petitioner seeking reinstatement. One who has been previously disbarred must present stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking initial admission whose character has never been questioned. The proof submitted must overcome the prior adverse judgment of the petitioner's character, and must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which led to the disbarment. The burden is on petitioners seeking reinstatement to show by a sustained course of good conduct that they have attained a standard of character which entitles them to be members of the bar. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [4]

Passage of a professional responsibility examination is one of the basic requirements for reinstatement. Although a State Bar rule permits the State Bar Court to grant a petitioner up to two years after the reinstatement hearing to pass the examination, the Supreme Court requires proof of passage to precede reinstatement. Thus, the State Bar rule is interpreted to require passage of the examination as a condition precedent to a State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement to the Supreme Court. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [5]

To demonstrate rehabilitation, a reinstatement petitioner needs to show a recognition of his or her wrongdoing, and evidence of rehabilitation is viewed in light of the moral shortcomings that led to the disbarment. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [8]

An attorney's obligation to make restitution is not limited to legally enforceable claims. An attorney may have a moral obligation to make restitution as part of the duties of an attorney, in order to confront the harm caused by the theft. Nonetheless, payment of restitution is neither mandatory nor determinative of rehabilitation. The attorney's attitude toward payment to the victim is considered as well as the ability to pay. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [9]

An attorney's moral duty to make restitution is not limited to clients, and extends to an employer to whom the attorney owed a fiduciary duty. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [10]

Where there has been an absence of complete restitution and no evidence of an inability to pay, a petitioner for reinstatement may present evidence of other affirmative acts which demonstrate the petitioner's recognition of fault, contrition and curing of the source of the initial problem and the resulting harm. Such other evidence must be "quite convincing" to establish the present rehabilitation of the petitioner. The fact that petitioner's victim had recommended petitioner's imprisonment, rather than probation and restitution, did not justify petitioner's failure to make restitution. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [11]

Testimonials from attorneys and employers are given considerable weight in reinstatement proceedings but are not alone conclusive. A broad spectrum of witnesses who have observed the petitioner's daily conduct and mode of living is particularly insightful. Information on business ventures and pro bono or charitable work also reflects on petitioner's moral character and rehabilitation. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [12]

Disbarred attorneys may qualify for reinstatement upon sufficient passage of time and adequate proof of rehabilitation, present moral fitness and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [14]

Where attorney had committed extremely serious misconduct over long period of time, and questions remained concerning attorney's rehabilitation, requiring standard 1.4(c)(ii) showing in lieu of disbarment would not be sufficient to protect the public and maintain the integrity of the profession. In the Matter of Kueker (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 583. [15]

While the law does look with favor upon the regeneration of erring attorneys, the petitioner seeking reinstatement bears the burden to show by clear and convincing evidence that the petitioner meets the requirements, and that burden is a heavy one. The person seeking reinstatement after disbarment should be required to present stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission for the first time whose character has never been called into question. A disbarred attorney may be able to show by sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time that the attorney has reattained the standard of fitness to practice law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [3]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the petitioner bears the burden of establishing rehabilitation, present moral qualifications for readmission and present ability and learning in the general law. (Rule 952(d), Cal. Rules of Court; rule 667, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [4]

Reinstatement proceedings are adversarial in nature, with the heavy burden resting on petitioner to prove rehabilitation, present moral fitness to practice and learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [7]

In a reinstatement proceeding, records of prior discipline, including the proceeding in which the petitioner was disbarred, are admissible, because the evidence of the petitioner's present character must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the prior discipline. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

The petitioner in a reinstatement proceeding bears the heavy burden of showing by clear and convincing evidence that he or she meets readmission requirements. A person seeking reinstatement after disbarment should be required to present stronger proof of present honesty and integrity than one seeking admission whose integrity has never been called into question; the proof presented must overcome the former adverse judgment of the person's character. Reinstatement may be sought on a showing that the petitioner has reattained the required standard of fitness to practice law, by sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [2]

Character evidence, albeit laudatory, was not alone determinative in a proceeding for reinstatement. Presentation of affidavit of one witness regarding conduct in six years since disbarment was inadequate as showing of good character, and was depreciated by petitioner's concealment of disbarment from employer and omission of recent civil suit from disbarment application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [12]

The Supreme Court has consistently held that petitioners seeking reinstatement have the burden to show by clear and convincing evidence that they meet readmission requirements, and that burden is a heavy one. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [1]

Persons seeking reinstatement after disbarment should be required to present stronger proof of their present honesty and integrity than persons seeking admission for the first time whose character has never been called into question. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [2]

In an application for reinstatement, although treated by the Supreme Court as a proceeding for admission, the proof presented must be sufficient to overcome the Court's former adverse judgment of applicant's character. In determining whether a reinstatement petitioner has met this burden, the evidence of present character must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the imposition of discipline. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [3]

Upon its independent review of the record, the review department found that circumstances of reinstatement petitioner's omission of two lawsuits from reinstatement petition demonstrated that petitioner had not met his heavy burden of showing clearly and convincingly his rehabilitation and present moral fitness. While review department was reluctant to differ with referee who weighed the credibility of witnesses, including petitioner, and who concluded that petitioner met reinstatement standards, it was review department's duty to independently examine record, reweigh evidence and pass on its sufficiency. Doing so, review department concluded that hearing referee had not given sufficient care to analyzing petitioner's evidence about his non-disclosure of two lawsuits as it bore on the qualities needed for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [9]

The petition for reinstatement is not merely a paperwork exercise to hurdle on the way to readmission; verified petition serves as important, formal written presentation by which petitioner seeks decision on reinstatement. A court evaluating a petition for reinstatement should be able to rely on it as candid and complete in the same manner as a court would rely on an attorney's affidavit or declaration made under penalty of perjury. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [11]

Where reinstatement petitioner failed to disclose litigation completely in two successive petitions, his failure to do so was not excused by theory of mistake; rather, his offer of that theory cast further doubt that he had achieved insight into standard of sustained exemplary conduct he had to meet for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [12]

In reinstatement proceeding, impressive testimonials of witnesses were neither conclusive nor necessarily determinative; witnesses could not be given conclusive weight in light of petitioner's failure to file complete and sufficient application for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [15]

The Supreme Court has not specified the exact amount of legal learning required for reinstatement. Petitioner's inability to answer one specific legal question at hearing did not significantly undermine the strength of the showing he had made regarding current legal learning. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [16]

Where, in ordering reinstatement petitioner's earlier disbarment, Supreme Court had set as the standard for his reinstatement that he show reattainment of the standard of fitness to practice law by "sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time," this standard did not require perfection nor total freedom from true mistake. However, where petitioner did not justify omission of lawsuits from reinstatement petition by ascribing them simply to mistake; could not justify materially incomplete petition in respect of his employment; and had taken inconsistent position in lawsuit, petitioner's showing fell short of sustained exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [17]

2505 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 7, Ch. 3 (rules 5.440-5.447)

2509 Other Procedural Issues

The review department concluded that the hearing judge erred as a matter of law in denying the motion to set aside the dismissal for lack of jurisdiction and found that the procedural requirement of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) did not divest the court of jurisdiction to extend the time for, or to grant relief from, payment of costs. Relying on well–settled rules of statutory construction, the review department construed the rule to be directory rather than mandatory or jurisdictional and thus found that the court retained jurisdiction to determine whether petitioner's failure to provide proof of payment of costs prior to filing the reinstatement petition should have resulted in a dismissal under the facts and circumstances of the case. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [1a, b]

Despite its seemingly mandatory wording, Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) is merely procedural, advancing a time requirement for the payment of costs, while the relevant Business and Professions Code sections confer jurisdiction to decide the substantive issues of costs and relief therefrom. There is no evidence that the Board of Governors of the State Bar attempted to supplant the statutory authority set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 and 6086.10, or to divest the State Bar Court of jurisdiction, by implementing a rule of procedure, and indeed, the Board of Governors is proscribed from doing so by Business and Professions Code section 6086. That section is consistent with the more general rule that, where a statute empowers an administrative agency to adopt regulations, those regulations must be consistent and not conflict with the governing statute. Because there is no express language or clear intent to render the rule jurisdictional, the review department looks to the cost provisions as a whole, the nature and character of these provisions, and the consequences that would follow from potential constructions. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory or jurisdictional, the rule would conflict with and/or constrict relevant statutes and other rules, inadvertently alter the reinstatement requirements, and at times produce unreasonable results. Construing the rule as directory, however, in no way interferes with or compromises the ability of the State Bar or the State Bar Court to effectuate the intent of obtaining costs as money judgments. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [2a, b]

A strict and unyielding interpretation of rule 662(c) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar mandating that costs be paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition is more restrictive than the requirement of Business and Professions Code section 6140.7 that costs be paid as a condition of reinstatement of active membership. A strict interpretation is also inconsistent with the State Bar Court's delegated authority to give relief from costs in whole or in part or to extend the time to pay costs. If a resigned or disbarred attorney were completely relieved of the obligation to pay costs or were provided an extension of time to pay, it would be impossible to provide proof that all discipline costs have been paid prior to filing a reinstatement petition. If the rule were interpreted to be mandatory, it would render relevant costs provisions irrelevant; but the finding that the rule is directory harmonizes all provisions and avoids an unnecessary and impermissible conflict with state statutes and other rules of procedure of the State Bar. Also, such a construction is consistent with the rehabilitative goals of the discipline system by maintaining the court's discretion to consider the timely payment of costs as a factor in determining a petitioner's rehabilitation. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [3a-e]

In construing statutes, a practical construction is preferred. A construction of Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) which permits the State Bar Court to retain jurisdiction is manifestly more practical than one which cuts off the court's jurisdiction regardless of the time and resources the parties have already expended in the court proceedings. Where a reinstatement proceeding had been pending for almost a year at the time a motion to dismiss was filed, the State Bar's investigation period and the discovery period for both parties had expired, and the trial was set to commence in approximately one month, dismissal was a severe remedy for noncompliance with payment of costs, and denial of a motion to set aside the dismissal was draconian. If a petitioner fails to pay the disciplinary costs prior to filing his reinstatement petition, the hearing judge has discretion to dismiss the reinstatement proceeding rather than to undertake a lengthy trial. But the hearing judge may also consider the failure to timely pay costs as a negative factor in petitioner's showing of rehabilitation or condition a petitioner's return to active status on the payment of some or all of the costs. Finally, if a disbarred or resigned attorney has failed to pay costs, the State Bar may enforce an order imposing costs as a money judgment. Construing Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, rule 662(c) as directory will continue to promote timely payment of costs, while not mandating unreasonable consequences in pending proceedings. In the Matter of MacKenzie (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56 [5a b, c]

In a proceeding for relief from actual suspension, in taking into account the attorney's prior misconduct, the hearing judge erroneously discounted the aggravating factor of dishonesty as duplicative and added mitigation where there had been none; however, the error was harmless because it was appropriate for the hearing judge to consider aggravating factors in considering the amount and nature of the evidence required to justify terminating suspension and to consider stipulated facts that may have shed light on the cause of misconduct, even if identified as other circumstances, in assessing the likelihood that misconduct could recur. In the Matter of Henschel (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 867. [6a, b]

Where character witnesses, who had long–term as well as current knowledge of petitioner, uniformly attested to petitioner's good character and honesty and gave specific, convincing reasons for holding favorable opinions of petitioner's rehabilitation or present moral fitness, their testimony is heavily weighed as evidence of petitioner's rehabilitation and good moral character. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [2 a, b]

Significant weight is given to the testimony of judges and officers of the court because these witnesses have a strong interest in maintaining the honest administration of justice. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [3]

Testimony of members of the bar and bench of high repute is entitled to careful consideration in assessing a petitioner's rehabilitation when the petitioner has been close to their observation. This is because such witnesses are morally bound by their oaths as attorneys at law not to recommend a disbarred attorney for reinstatement unless they are satisfied of the rehabilitation of his character. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [5]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Where hearing judge did not issue written ruling on his denial of State Bar's motion to dismiss former attorney's petition for reinstatement, review department determined hearing judge's reasoning from written transcript of hearing on motion, which was included in appendix to State Bar's petition for interlocutory review. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [2]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[3]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.91.[6 a-b]

The sole issue raised is whether the requirement set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.5, subdivision (c), that an attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending reimburse the Client Security Fund (CSF) for all sums paid out as a result of the former attorney's misconduct together with interest and costs, is a condition precedent to the former attorney's filing of a petition for reinstatement. The issue is not whether, at the time he filed his petition, petitioner was eligible for reinstatement, but rather whether he had a right to file his petition for reinstatement. Section 6140.5, subdivision (c) mandates that the amount paid out by CSF because of the dishonest conduct of a lawyer, plus applicable interest and costs, shall be paid as a condition of reinstatement of membership. There is no language in that section that precludes or purports to preclude the filing of a petition for reinstatement without including a showing of repayment to the CSF. And the review department was unaware of any law, rule of court, or rule of procedure that required an affirmative showing that reimbursement has been made to CSF before or at the time of filing a petition for reinstatement. Moreover, there was no dispute that reinstatement occurs only when the Supreme Court so directs after State Bar Court proceedings, not when a petition for reinstatement is filed. Accordingly, the State Bar failed to establish either an abuse of discretion or error of law. In the Matter of Jaurequi (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.56.[1 a-c]

In reinstatement cases, the well-established practice is to begin the analysis by reviewing the petitioner's showing in light of the moral shortcomings which led to his disbarment. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[1]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[3]

Although rule 665(b) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, enumerates moral qualifications for reinstatement as an item separate from rehabilitation, rule 951(f) of the California Rules of Court combines them as a single item. The Supreme Court has often considered rehabilitation and moral qualifications for readmission together. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[6]

It is a basic principle of reinstatement proceedings that a petitioner continues to bear the burden of proof, even on review. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[8]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Petitioner failed to establish that the hearing judge abused his discretion in denying petitioner's post-decision motion to reopen the record to present additional evidence because petitioner did not establish that the evidence he sought to proffer was newly discovered or that it could not have been presented at trial with the exercise of reasonable diligence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [6]

The State Bar Court's statutory exercise of independent decision-making authority over the determination of disciplinary and reinstatement proceedings does not extend to the investigation of such matters. In the Matter of Respondent Q (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 18. [3]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

Where review department recommended respondent's disbarment, issue of whether respondent should be given credit toward required waiting period to apply for reinstatement (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), on account of time spent on continuous suspension prior to disbarment, was properly reserved for consideration by a hearing judge on an appropriate petition following the disbarment. In the Matter of Snyder (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 593. [7]

Where reinstatement petitioner's employer offered favorable character testimony at trial, and petitioner requested augmentation of the record to add the employer's declaration executed over 14 months later updating and reiterating such testimony, the review department considered the record incomplete without the declaration and granted petitioner's unopposed request to augment the record with the declaration. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [2]

Where decisions by the former State Bar Court concerning a petitioner's prior reinstatement petition helped illuminate the petitioner's subsequent progress toward rehabilitation, the review department took judicial notice of such decisions pursuant to Evidence Code section 452(d). In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [3]

Passage of a professional responsibility examination is one of the basic requirements for reinstatement. Although a State Bar rule permits the State Bar Court to grant a petitioner up to two years after the reinstatement hearing to pass the examination, the Supreme Court requires proof of passage to precede reinstatement. Thus, the State Bar rule is interpreted to require passage of the examination as a condition precedent to a State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement to the Supreme Court. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 667.) In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [5]

Where there was no evidence in the record that a reinstatement petitioner had taken and passed a professional responsibility examination, and neither the parties nor the hearing judge focused on the issue when evaluating petitioner's request for reinstatement, the matter was remanded to give the petitioner an opportunity to take and pass the examination if he had not already done so, and for findings on the issue. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [7]

In proceedings on petition for reinstatement, the review department, with the concurrence of the parties, could take judicial notice of State Bar Court decisions on earlier unsuccessful reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [1]

In reinstatement cases, where the record on its face indicates a pending disciplinary matter dismissed without prejudice should the petitioner seek reinstatement, or indicates matters as serious as criminal convictions arising after disbarment or resignation, the parties should make clear on the record their respective positions on these factors, which could raise a serious question as to whether a person petitioning for reinstatement had been rehabilitated or was presently fit to practice law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [9]

Where reinstatement petitioner had shown rehabilitation, but had not presented sufficient proof of learning and ability in the general law, then if review department had concluded that petitioner was presently fit to practice, it would have conditioned its recommendation of reinstatement on passage of the bar examination to assure the public of petitioner's legal learning. However, review department's adverse determination on petitioner's fitness to practice made bar exam recommendation unnecessary. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [16]

By obtaining a 30-day extension of the 90-day period to investigate a petition for reinstatement before referral for hearing, State Bar examiner did not violate State Bar procedural rules, which allow investigation even after the 90-day period or any extension of it. (Rule 664, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [4]

To justify relief based on claimed procedural irregularity, specific prejudice must be shown; relief was denied to reinstatement petitioner who made conclusory claim of prejudice from prolongation of pre-hearing investigation, but did not demonstrate actual prejudice. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [5]

Petitioner for reinstatement could have presented additional character testimony from out-of-state witnesses without undue expense by taking their depositions. (Rules 318, 666, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [13]

Review department's review of reinstatement matter was made more difficult by hearing referee's failure to make findings on many of the specific issues in dispute, but review department's independent review of the record permitted it to make the necessary findings. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [8]

2510 Reinstatement Granted

Where petitioner's testimony that he had not used methamphetamine for over seventeen years was uncontroverted and where there was no evidence that petitioner's weekly drink of alcohol led to alcohol abuse or ever caused him to relapse into methamphetamine use and where petitioner participated in a professional in–house substance abuse treatment program, participated in after–care group therapy, maintained ongoing participation in A.A. and supplemented his showing of recovery with favorable testimony from several, critical character witnesses, petitioner estvablished his rehabilitation from his methamphetamine addiction. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [4 a, b]

Petitioner's acknowledgment of his drug abuse, his commitment to abstinence, and his active and regular participation in his personal recovery program positively reflect his sustained rehabilitation. Petitioner's nontraditional recovery program and the absence of independent medical or psychological evidence regarding petitioner's recovery from methamphetamine addiction do not outweigh petitioner's clear and convincing proof of rehabilitation and sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [5]

Although petitioner's noncompliance with rule 955 was wilful, this fact alone would not require denial of his reinstatement. Given the other strong evidence of rehabilitation, petitioner's noncompliance with rule 955 is not determinative of petitioner's rehabilitation where the violation occurred over 18 years ago, petitioner had only two cases pending and made arrangements for other attorneys to take over the cases, and there is no evidence that the violation either injured clients or impaired any disciplinary proceedings against petitioner. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [7]

Although the record contains an infirmity due to petitioner's noncompliance with rule 955, reinstatement has been recommended in other cases where there have been similar, isolated weaknesses in the evidentiary showings. Petitioner offered impressive evidence of his rehabilitation and present moral character sufficient to warrant reinstatement. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [10]

In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459.

Petitioner's failure to comply timely with the provisions of rule 955, California Rules of Court, was not, in itself, grounds for denying petition for reinstatement. Essentially, petitioner followed the suggestion of her former counsel in the disbarment proceeding to allow him (counsel) to take care of the filing of the required affidavit of compliance with rule 955. Petitioner's former counsel did not follow through and petitioner did not comply with the rule until about eight months after filing her petition for reinstatement. The hearing judge expressed "some reservations" about petitioner's testimony concerning her belated compliance with rule 955, yet chose to resolve the issue in her favor. The review department upheld the hearing judge's decision. In doing so, the department noted, as did the hearing judge, that at the time of her disbarment, petitioner had no clients, co-counsel or pending cases and was not obligated to return any client property covered by the rule. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [1 a-b]

A close reading of the hearing judge's conclusion that petitioner had proven rehabilitation, together with several adverse findings of petitioner's actions regarding her former husband led the review department to support the judge's positive recommendation. Regarding petitioner's testimony about the restraining orders she attempted to obtain in the State Bar Court against her former husband, the judge found it either negligent or intentionally misleading. However, he did not specify at which end of that wide range petitioner's testimony rested. Certainly, if petitioner's understanding of restraining orders was simply careless, no adverse conclusions were justified. The review department found no basis for a conclusion of dishonesty on petitioner's part regarding the status of the restraining orders. The review department also drew no adverse moral conclusions from petitioner's frequent litigation in the State Bar Court over a protective order. Petitioner had a right of reasonable access to this court to seek judicial remedies. Her contact of members of the Board of Governors and senior State Bar staff was also within her rights and she did not pursue inappropriate means to influence judicial decisions. The review department also concluded that petitioner disclosed adequate facts about the matter in her communications. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [2 a-b]

The hearing judge's discussion of his concerns over petitioner's actions in terms of according her a "reasonable doubt" made review somewhat difficult. It is clear that in a disciplinary proceeding, where the State Bar has the burden of proving charges by clear and convincing evidence, the accused is entitled to the exercise of reasonable doubts. However, in a reinstatement proceeding, where the petitioner unquestionably has the burden of presenting clear and convincing evidence of her qualifications, petitioner can not be given the benefit of reasonable doubts. However, by reading the decision in its entirety, the review department construed the hearing judge's decision finding reasonable doubts in favor of petitioner to not invoke the normal meaning of the term "reasonable doubt" as used in this area of law, but rather, such narrow doubt that would be acceptable in a satisfactory showing for reinstatement. In the Matter of Salant (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 1. [3 a-b]

A reinstatement petitioner's showing of acceptance of responsibility for his misconduct, of extreme remorse, and of efforts and success at developing the skills and relationships necessary to deal appropriately with future problems supported the conclusion that the petitioner demonstrated insight into his misconduct and had taken steps to change his character and behavior. The petitioner's showing of a proper attitude to his misconduct and a steady determination to rehabilitate himself warranted favorable consideration in considering his reinstatement. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [6]

In determining whether a petitioner has met the burden of proof in a reinstatement proceeding notwithstanding alleged weaknesses in the showing of rehabilitation and moral fitness, it is essential to compare the facts of the proceeding with the facts of other reported reinstatement cases in which the petitioners were admitted despite such weaknesses. Where a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation included evidence as to the petitioner's remorse, acceptance of full responsibility for the misconduct, candor, honesty and integrity, success in a fiduciary position, and success at meeting financial obligations, it was as strong as the showings of petitioners who had gained reinstatement. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [13]

A reinstatement petitioner's recent conviction for driving under the influence did not, by itself, establish a lack of either rehabilitation or present moral fitness, where the conviction was an isolated, uncharacteristic and aberrational incident; the petitioner did not have a chemical dependency problem; the petitioner had taken steps to prevent any further occurrence; and the conviction was petitioner's first DUI offense, was unrelated to the practice of law, and was unrelated to the misconduct which led to petitioner's resignation. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [15]

A reinstatement petitioner's recent conviction for driving under the influence In deciding whether a reinstatement petitioner has met the burden of proof, the evidence presented must be viewed in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the petitioner's loss of his or her license. Where the petitioner's participation in criminal misconduct had been limited and was mitigated by contributing emotional factors that had long since been brought under control, the review department concluded that the petitioner had made an adequate showing of rehabilitation and present moral fitness when viewed against this backdrop and in light of past comparable reinstatement cases. In the Matter of Rudman (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 546. [16]

Whether a petitioner has met the heavy burden of proof in a reinstatement proceeding depends on a comparison of the facts of the proceeding with the facts in other reported cases. Petitioners have obtained reinstatement despite weaknesses in their showings of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where the showing of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications by a petitioner for reinstatement was as strong as similar showings by petitioners who obtained reinstatement despite alleged weaknesses in their cases, and where petitioner's case was distinguishable from reported cases in which petitioners failed to proved rehabilitation and present moral qualifications, the review department recommended reinstatement despite petitioner's evasive notice to clients that he was "retiring" and despite petitioner's continuing to work as a paralegal for a law firm even though he questioned the propriety of the law firm's name. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [20]

Reinstatement petitioner's admission of misconduct, cooperation with authorities, lifestyle changes, curtailment of spending, and restitution were significant factors in favor of reinstatement. Postmisconduct pro bono work, community service, and handling of fiduciary responsibilities, as well as character witnesses' testimony and reference letters, also supported reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [21]

The passage of an appreciable period of time is an appropriate consideration in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has made sufficient progress towards rehabilitation. Where the evidence is uncontroverted and shows exemplary conduct for eight to ten years with no suggestion of wrongdoing, a petitioner would seem to have established rehabilitation. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [10]

Evidence of pro bono or charitable work reflects on an erring attorney's rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Where a petitioner for reinstatement had volunteered one full day every week for several years at a legal services program, such extensive pro bono work was a significant factor in favor of the petitioner's reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [11]

Although the law demands neither fraudulent penitence nor artificial contrition, a petitioner for reinstatement must understand his or her professional responsibilities and must show a proper attitude toward his or her misconduct. Where a petitioner acknowledged the seriousness of his wrongdoing, expressed remorse, and described a fundamental change in values likely to prevent future misconduct, such testimony, which hearing judge found credible, was a significant factor in favor of his reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [12]

Although testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive, favorable character evidence deserves heavy weight in determining whether a petitioner for reinstatement has proved rehabilitation and present moral qualifications. Favorable character testimony and reference letters from employers and attorneys are entitled to special weight. Petitioner's current employer's testimony expressing a high opinion of petitioner's character, demeanor and behavior, and confirming petitioner's sensitivity and concern for proper ethical behavior, merited significant weight. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [13]

Testimony by psychologist who had tested reinstatement petitioner and interviewed him 10 times, and who opined that risk of petitioner's recidivism was very low, was entitled to significant weight. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [15]

The standard for rehabilitation and present moral qualifications in a reinstatement proceeding is objective, and whether the petitioner has met the heavy burden of proof depends on a comparison of the facts of the current proceeding with the facts in other reported proceedings. Where petitioner's showing of rehabilitation and present moral qualifications was at least comparable to the showings by others who had obtained reinstatement, and reported cases denying reinstatement were distinguishable, review department recommended reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [18]

2550 Reinstatement Not Granted

2551 Inadequate Showing of Rehabilitation

Where the underlying misconduct involves the theft of client trust funds, restitution is fundamental to rehabilitation. The weight attached to whether restitution has been undertaken in whole or in part depends on the ability to restore the misappropriated funds as well as the attitude expressed regarding the matter. Thus, the petitioner must provide a factual showing that he understands the extent of the harm his misconduct caused, as well as proof of his willingness to remedy it. Where petitioner engaged in a repeated pattern of theft of client funds for three years, but petitioner was unable to identify with any certainty the number of clients harmed or the amounts misappropriated, and the record lacked specificity as to how long clients had to wait for payment, the specific harm they incurred and its effect or petitioner's attitude in rectifying the harm, petitioner's assertion that all clients were repaid lacked conviction, and the evidence of rehabilitation was inadequate. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [1 a–i]

Where some clients were repaid amounts misappropriated from them during petitioner's cycle of theft and repayment, paying one client with another client's money, and no evidence was presented to show that petitioner repaid any of the identified or unidentified clients guided by a moral imperative consistent with the duties of an attorney, or merely to perpetuate his ongoing scheme or to satisfy terms of his probation, the review department could not conclude that the manner of restitution was consistent with rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [2]

Petitioner's misappropriations occurred because he found himself overcome by the stresses of his increased financial obligations, and petitioner still had outstanding loan obligations. Thus, given the utter lack of evidence showing his comprehension of the magnitude of harm, or his attitude of mind regarding repayment, his assurances at trial that he would no longer resort to unethical means to pay his debts constituted insufficient evidence of rehabilitation. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [3]

While an omission is not necessarily fatal to a petition for reinstatement, if an omitted claim is significant or misleading, or conceals derogatory information, reinstatement may be denied. Where petitioner failed to disclose nine lawsuits to which he was a party, regardless of the reasons for the omissions, the omissions left it to chance whether the bar's investigation process would uncover the lawsuits. Even if petitioner omitted the lawsuits as a result of hurrying to meet a deadline, he had ample time to correct his omission well before he did so, and his lack of care and the expedited manner in which he handled the disclosure of his lawsuits, coupled with a lack of evidence to show rehabilitation, was troubling and further demonstrated petitioner's failure to understand the seriousness of his misconduct. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [4 a–d]

In instances where significant weight has been afforded to character declarations or testimony, the evidence has been complementary to other probative evidence of the petition. Where letters in support of petitioner's reinstatement described him as a man of personal integrity, described his involvement in charitable activities, asserted that petitioner's misconduct was aberrant behavior traceable to financial stresses, and stated that the declarants were aware of petitioner's misconduct, yet petitioner had not accounted for the full financial extent of the harm to his clients, nor the manner in which he made restitution, it was unclear how the witnesses could fully understand the magnitude of petitioner's misconduct or how he made up for it. In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27 [5 a, b]

Since petitioner's post–resignation misconduct related to his gambling and alcohol abuse negatively reflected on his moral character, petitioner's first day of sobriety is the point when he began his rehabilitation in earnest insofar as the practice of law is concerned. It is from this point that petitioner's overall rehabilitation in light of his past wrongdoing is measured. Therefore the question was not whether the passage of time since petitioner failed to file a rule 955 affidavit after resignation should be considered in establishing his rehabilitation but whether petitioner's 39–month period of sustained exemplary conduct from the date of sobriety to the date of trial is sufficient to demonstrate his overall rehabilitation given the seriousness of his past misconduct. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [5]

Where petitioner's gambling and alcoholism resulted in ethical breaches that involved misappropriation of entrusted funds, multiple acts of deceit which continued post–resignation, and repeated disregard for court orders, including one from the Supreme Court, and that caused harm to multiple clients due to incompetent performance or abandonment, petitioner's period of exemplary conduct was insufficient to establish his overall rehabilitation given the extent of his prior wrongdoing and addictions. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [6a, b]

A lack of rehabilitation was found where petitioner mischaracterized his prior misconduct as mere mistakes and continued to attack the findings of misconduct by filing numerous petitions for writs and supplemental pleadings challenging the disbarment decision. Rehabilitation often requires a lengthy period of exemplary conduct. An erring attorney who seeks readmission must understand his or her professional responsibilities and must show a proper attitude toward his or her misconduct. The review department affirmed the finding that petitioner had not shown rehabilitation. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894.[4]

Where petitioner for reinstatement admitted his alcoholism, but his showing of recovery rested entirely on his own efforts at abstinence as supplemented by favorable character testimony, and he failed to present any medical or other expert opinion attesting to his recovery and prognosis, or any evidence that he had undergone recent treatment or participated in any recovery program, hearing judge's conclusion that such showing was insufficient to establish rehabilitation was entitled to considerable weight. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [4]

In reinstatement proceeding, where petitioner moved to augment record on review with medical evidence regarding recovery from alcoholism which hearing judge had declined to consider on motion for reconsideration, and review department concluded that petitioner made favorable showing on all other aspects of rehabilitation, review department considered petitioner's evidence in accordance with case law holding that extrinsic evidence will not be ignored where it is the only means of proving rehabilitation from serious physical or emotional problems. Where such evidence added support to conclusion that petitioner had not demonstrated that recovery program was adequate, and State Bar expressed concern that evidence had been offered without opportunity for cross-examination, review department remanded for further hearing and expert testimony regarding petitioner's recovery. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [5]

Where reinstatement petitioner showed moral rehabilitation but did not make adequate showing of recovery from alcoholism, review department declined to recommend reinstatement conditional on continued adherence to a treatment program. Possibility of conditional reinstatement has not been foreclosed, but it would not be appropriate when it involves as central an issue of concern as recovery from alcoholism and depression. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [6]

Where there has been an absence of complete restitution and no evidence of an inability to pay, a petitioner for reinstatement may present evidence of other affirmative acts which demonstrate the petitioner's recognition of fault, contrition and curing of the source of the initial problem and the resulting harm. Such other evidence must be "quite convincing" to establish the present rehabilitation of the petitioner. The fact that petitioner's victim had recommended petitioner's imprisonment, rather than probation and restitution, did not justify petitioner's failure to make restitution. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [11]

Although petitioner for reinstatement made restitution to the victims of the misconduct which had resulted in disbarment, petitioner's lack of concern to keep his creditors at least informed of his whereabouts and his indifferent attitude toward his creditors were negative factors despite his very modest financial resources. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [10]

Upon its independent review of the record, the review department found that circumstances of reinstatement petitioner's omission of two lawsuits from reinstatement petition demonstrated that petitioner had not met his heavy burden of showing clearly and convincingly his rehabilitation and present moral fitness. While review department was reluctant to differ with referee who weighed the credibility of witnesses, including petitioner, and who concluded that petitioner met reinstatement standards, it was review department's duty to independently examine record, reweigh evidence and pass on its sufficiency. Doing so, review department concluded that hearing referee had not given sufficient care to analyzing petitioner's evidence about his non-disclosure of two lawsuits as it bore on the qualities needed for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [9]

As with any aspirant to membership in State Bar, reinstatement petitioner is entitled to access to courts to decide good faith claims, but where petitioner who worked for confusingly intertwined entities sued customer of one entity for punitive damages for complaining against one entity instead of another, and failed to show justification for suit, petitioner failed to sustain burden of showing exemplary conduct required to qualify for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [14]

Where, in ordering reinstatement petitioner's earlier disbarment, Supreme Court had set as the standard for his reinstatement that he show reattainment of the standard of fitness to practice law by "sustained exemplary conduct over an extended period of time," this standard did not require perfection nor total freedom from true mistake. However, where petitioner did not justify omission of lawsuits from reinstatement petition by ascribing them simply to mistake; could not justify materially incomplete petition in respect of his employment; and had taken inconsistent position in lawsuit, petitioner's showing fell short of sustained exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [17]

2552 Inadequate Showing of Fitness to Practice

The basis of the hearing judge's finding of present moral fitness was character evidence and petitioner's testimony about his volunteer work and his assistance to relatives. However, in determining present moral qualifications, testimony by character witnesses and letters of reference are not conclusive. Similarly, volunteer work and care of relatives are factors to be considered, but are not dispositive. The review department reversed the finding of present moral fitness, finding that by minimizing and denying his serious misconduct, petitioner revealed a failure to appreciate the responsibilities of an attorney and the gravity of his ethical violations. This failure undermined his attempt to prove his present moral qualifications for readmission, as well as his attempt to show rehabilitation. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [5]

For an applicant for reinstatement, whose moral character was found wanting in earlier disbarment proceedings, the verified petition for reinstatement serves as the important, formal written presentation by which the petitioner placed himself before the State Bar, the legal profession, the judiciary and the public for decision whether he or she should again be allowed to discharge the high responsibilities required of an attorney at lain in this state. A court evaluating a petition for reinstatement should be able to rely on it as candid and complete in the same manner as a court would rely on an attorney's affidavit or declaration made under penalty of perjury. Where petition contained inaccuracy about marital status and omissions about financial obligations, lawsuits, and legal learning activities, and petitioner's explanations for these defects were not credited by hearing referee, petitioner's failure to bring before the State Bar Court a correct and complete petition for reinstatement fell below the standard of sustained exemplary conduct petitioner must meet for reinstatement. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [10]

Where witnesses' abilities to observe petitioner's character in light of any changes since disbarment were limited, or witnesses were not fully aware of nature of offenses leading to disbarment, such character evidence failed to show a clear case for reinstatement, or to overcome effect of State Bar's negative evidence. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [13]

Character evidence, albeit laudatory, was not alone determinative in a proceeding for reinstatement. Presentation of affidavit of one witness regarding conduct in six years since disbarment was inadequate as showing of good character, and was depreciated by petitioner's concealment of disbarment from employer and omission of recent civil suit from disbarment application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [12]

Upon its independent review of the record, the review department found that circumstances of reinstatement petitioner's omission of two lawsuits from reinstatement petition demonstrated that petitioner had not met his heavy burden of showing clearly and convincingly his rehabilitation and present moral fitness. While review department was reluctant to differ with referee who weighed the credibility of witnesses, including petitioner, and who concluded that petitioner met reinstatement standards, it was review department's duty to independently examine record, reweigh evidence and pass on its sufficiency. Doing so, review department concluded that hearing referee had not given sufficient care to analyzing petitioner's evidence about his non-disclosure of two lawsuits as it bore on the qualities needed for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [9]

In disciplinary cases, the Supreme Court has considered an attorney's acts of gross neglect in representing clients' interests to involve moral turpitude. Reinstatement petitioner's lack of care as to his own duties regarding disclosure of litigation on reinstatement petition, while not requiring strong label of moral turpitude, fell short of highest standard of fitness which petitioner must demonstrate for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [10]

In reinstatement proceeding, impressive testimonials of witnesses were neither conclusive nor necessarily determinative; witnesses could not be given conclusive weight in light of petitioner's failure to file complete and sufficient application for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [15]

2553 Inadequate Showing of Learning and Ability in Law

A petitioner's submissions in a reinstatement proceeding can form the basis for a finding of a lack of present ability and learning in the law. Petitioner failed to demonstrate present learning and ability in the law, despite having taken many bar review and continuing education classes and having increased his knowledge of the law, when he filed review briefs that used facts from exhibits that were never admitted into evidence; attempted to use exhibits, admitted for a limited purpose, to assert the truth of the matters therein; misstated the long established burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings; misread the findings of the judge, and unreasonably exaggerated. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [7]

Where reinstatement petitioner did not provide documentary evidence to support his claim that he had written legal memoranda, and also did not provide convincing testimonial evidence, petitioner did not show sufficient proof of learning and ability in the general law. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [15]

Where reinstatement petitioner had shown rehabilitation, but had not presented sufficient proof of learning and ability in the general law, then if review department had concluded that petitioner was presently fit to practice, it would have conditioned its recommendation of reinstatement on passage of the bar examination to assure the public of petitioner's legal learning. However, review department's adverse determination on petitioner's fitness to practice made bar exam recommendation unnecessary. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [16]

Where petitioner for reinstatement did not adequately demonstrate present learning in the law, reinstatement could have been recommended conditioned on passage of California Bar Examination, if petitioner had been found rehabilitated and morally fit. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [14]

2554 Failure to Comply with Cal. Rules of Ct. 9.20 (former Rule 955)

In the Matter of Rudnick (Review Dept. 2007) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 27

Because subdivision (e) of rule 955 provides that a disbarred lawyer's failure to comply with rule 955 may constitute a ground for denial of reinstatement, the clear failure of a petitioner for reinstatement to comply with rule 955 was a serious negative factor regardless of whether the petitioner had any clients at the time when he was required to comply with rule 955. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [11]

2559 Other Basis for Denial

An attorney's obligation to make restitution is not limited to legally enforceable claims. An attorney may have a moral obligation to make restitution as part of the duties of an attorney, in order to confront the harm caused by the theft. Nonetheless, payment of restitution is neither mandatory nor determinative of rehabilitation. The attorney's attitude toward payment to the victim is considered as well as the ability to pay. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [9]

Where reinstatement petitioner failed to disclose litigation completely in two successive petitions, his failure to do so was not excused by theory of mistake; rather, his offer of that theory cast further doubt that he had achieved insight into standard of sustained exemplary conduct he had to meet for reinstatement. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [12]

Omission of employment information from reinstatement petition, standing alone, would not warrant denial of reinstatement, but when coupled with omission of lawsuits, also showed that petitioner had failed to sustain his burden. In the Matter of Giddens (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 25. [13]

2590 Miscellaneous Issues in Reinstatement Proceedings

The fact that petitioner waited almost ten years after he resigned before he made restitution did not detract from petitioner's showing of rehabilitation since he demonstrated a proper attitude and sincerity toward restitution by voluntarily choosing not to discharge debts owed to creditors who were former clients or lienholders and by fully reimbursing all but one of his victims. In the Matter of Bellicini (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 883. [3a, b]

Restitution is neither mandatory, nor in and of itself determinative of rehabilitation. Applicants for reinstatement are to be judged not solely on the ability to make restitution, but by their attitude toward payment to the victim. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [6]

Generally the standard to apply to the review of a discovery order on appeal is abuse of discretion. There was no abuse of discretion in denying the State Bar's request that the hearing judge order petitioner to submit to an independent medical examination because petitioner continues to consume alcohol when there is no evidence that petitioner presently abuses alcohol or suffered from a previous alcohol addiction or that petitioner's present consumption of alcohol caused any relapse into drug use. In the Matter of Salyer (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 816. [8 a, b]

Although earlier admissions cases do not consider the time a petitioner is in custody or under court or State Bar supervision to be particularly weighty in assessing rehabilitation, the petitioner in each of those cases had engaged in extremely serious misconduct for an extensive time and had not adequately shown rehabilitation in light of the seriousness of the offenses. In contrast, in this case, petitioner's misconduct, though clearly serious, spanned four years, but there was no evidence that petitioner acted in less than an exemplary fashion while on probation. Further, some of petitioner's positive conduct, notably his cooperation with the State Bar, occurred despite his understanding that he would get no benefit from it. The review department therefore concluded that it was appropriate in this case to accord some weight to petitioner's activities while on probation, but it gave far greater weight to the last four years of petitioner's showing, which were after he completed his criminal probation. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [2 a,b]

Opinion testimony of an attorney as to the ultimate issue that petitioner was qualified for reinstatement was not precluded, although that ultimate issue was for the State Bar Court and the Supreme Court to decide. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [6 a,b]

Negative testimony regarding petitioner's rehabilitation did not rebut petitioner's favorable testimony for a very important reason: the negative testimony was based solely on the severity of petitioner's earlier misconduct and not on his rehabilitative steps since resignation. The witnesses had no personal observation of petitioner for most, if not all, of the 10 years that elapsed between the time petitioner resigned and the State Bar Court hearings. Thus, while the negative testimony of each of these witnesses was relevant on the issues of the seriousness and the nature and extent of petitioner's prior misconduct, it was of little relevance on the issues of petitioner's present character and of whether petitioner has maintained a sustained period of unblemished and exemplary conduct. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [7 a-c]

Reinstatement petitioner's outstanding income tax delinquencies of $458,000 and his offer to compromise and settle the delinquency with Internal Revenue Service for $50,000 did not show adverse moral character. This was not a case where petitioner concealed assets or his delinquencies. Nor was this a case where petitioner failed to file tax returns. Further, petitioner should not be deprived of the ability to take advantage of the offer in compromise procedures open to any citizen seeking to resolve a large delinquency, particularly when that delinquency consists of sizeable penalties and interest. In the Matter of Bodell (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 459. [8 a-d]

Issues raised in State Bar's petition for interlocutory review as to (1) whether Rules of Procedure required petitioner for reinstatement to provide proof, at time he presented his petition for filing, that he had passed a professional responsibility examination within last year (i.e., one before filing of petition) and (2) whether hearing judge erred in finding that petitioner had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending were proper for interlocutory review because they could determine outcome of proceeding and determine whether petitioner's rehabilitation was an issue in proceeding. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [1 a-e]

Where hearing judge did not issue written ruling on his denial of State Bar's motion to dismiss former attorney's petition for reinstatement, review department determined hearing judge's reasoning from written transcript of hearing on motion, which was included in appendix to State Bar's petition for interlocutory review. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [2]

Hearing judge erred as a matter of law in finding that petitioner for reinstatement had not previously resigned from State Bar with disciplinary charges pending where petitioner's resignation was entitled "resignation with charges pending;" stated that charges were pending against him; was in form prescribed by California Rule of Court 960; was accepted by Supreme Court without prejudice to further proceedings; and where petitioner stated in his petition for reinstatement that, at time he resigned from State Bar, no formal charges were filed against him by State Bar, but only a number of minor client complaints that he had responded to, taken adequate measures to deal with, and answered State Bar in writing denying any misconduct. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [3]

State Bar Court must interpret State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) that requires all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination within frame work of California Rule of Court 951(f) dealing with reinstatement because State Bar's rule making authority is subject to Supreme Court's inherent authority over attorney regulatory matters. And State Bar Court should endeavor to construe State Bar rule as consistent Rules of Court. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [5]

Applying rules of statutory interpretation to language of State Bar Rule of Procedure 665(a) requiring all petitioners for reinstatement to take and pass professional responsibility examination, review department held (1) that rule sets the earliest time to pass examination at one year before filing of petition, but does not set latest time to pass examination and (2) that rule does not require proof of passage as condition precedent to filing petition, but only as condition to precedent to State Bar Court recommendation of reinstatement. In the Matter of Sheppard (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91. [6 a-b]

The sole issue raised is whether the requirement set forth in Business and Professions Code section 6140.5, subdivision (c), that an attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending reimburse the Client Security Fund (CSF) for all sums paid out as a result of the former attorney's misconduct together with interest and costs, is a condition precedent to the former attorney's filing of a petition for reinstatement. The issue is not whether, at the time he filed his petition, petitioner was eligible for reinstatement, but rather whether he had a right to file his petition for reinstatement. Section 6140.5, subdivision (c) mandates that the amount paid out by CSF because of the dishonest conduct of a lawyer, plus applicable interest and costs, shall be paid as a condition of reinstatement of membership. There is no language in that section that precludes or purports to preclude the filing of a petition for reinstatement without including a showing of repayment to the CSF. And the review department was unaware of any law, rule of court, or rule of procedure that required an affirmative showing that reimbursement has been made to CSF before or at the time of filing a petition for reinstatement. Moreover, there was no dispute that reinstatement occurs only when the Supreme Court so directs after State Bar Court proceedings, not when a petition for reinstatement is filed. Accordingly, the State Bar failed to establish either an abuse of discretion or error of law. In the Matter of Jaurequi (Review Dept. 1999) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 56. [1 a-c]

In reinstatement cases, the well-established practice is to begin the analysis by reviewing the petitioner's showing in light of the moral shortcomings which led to his disbarment. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [1]

A petitioner for reinstatement must show by clear and convincing evidence that he or she has met the requirements for readmission. OCTC need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence. Instead, OCTC need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of a petitioner's evidence so that he or she does not meet the burden to prove his or her case by clear and convincing evidence. Nor is a petitioner entitled to the benefit of the doubt if equally reasonable inferences may be drawn from a proven fact. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [3]

Although rule 665(b) of the Rules of Procedure of the State Bar, title II, State Bar Court Proceedings, enumerates moral qualifications for reinstatement as an item separate from rehabilitation, rule 951(f) of the California Rules of Court combines them as a single item. The Supreme Court has often considered rehabilitation and moral qualifications for readmission together. In the Matter of Ainsworth (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 894. [6]

In its opinion remanding a petition for reinstatement for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion, the review department held, on the record then before it, that the petitioner had demonstrated his moral reform from the acts which lead him to resign from the Bar with disciplinary charges pending. Accordingly, under law of the case, it would be improper for hearing department to reconsider petitioner's moral reform on remand in the absence of additional evidence. As to events that predated the petition, and were disclosed on the petition, it is clear that reopening would be impermissible. The same would be true of events about which the State Bar had a reasonable opportunity to investigate and present at a hearing. However, one of the underlying purpose of reinstatement proceedings is to insure that only persons of present good moral character are reinstated to the practice of law in this state. Accordingly, with the exceptions noted, the State Bar Court may consider any act or conduct that is relevant to a petitioner's moral character regardless of when or where the act or conduct occurred. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [1]

A petitioner establishes that he possesses the requisite present moral qualifications for reinstatement by presenting clear and convincing evidence that he possesses good moral character and has been rehabilitated. Any act or conduct bearing on the petitioner's qualities of honest, fairness, candor, trustworthiness, observance of fiduciary responsibility, respect for and obedience to the laws of the state and nation, and respect for the rights of others and the judicial process is relevant in a reinstatement proceeding. Unlike a petitioner's rehabilitation from prior bad acts, a petitioner's present moral qualifications for reinstatement is not capable of being conclusively determined for all time and is subject to re-evaluation on the State Bar's motion at least until the effective date of the Supreme Court's reinstatement order. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [2]

Because jurisdiction vests in only one court at a time, once a review department opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department for further proceedings becomes final, only the hearing department had jurisdiction to rule on State Bar's motion to expand the issues to be addressed at the trial on remand. Because the review department did not adjudicate the issue of petitioner's present moral fitness in its opinion remanding the proceeding to hearing department, the hearing judge's consideration of that issue on remand was not inconsistent with the review department's remanding opinion, and the hearing judge therefore did not error in admitting additional relevant evidence on the issue. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [3]

Because the State Bar does not have the burden of proof in reinstatement proceedings, it need not rebut a petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, present moral fitness, or present learning and ability in the law with clear and convincing adverse evidence to prevail. Instead, the State Bar need only proffer sufficient adverse evidence to lower the persuasiveness of the petitioner's evidence so that he does not meet his burden to prove his case by clear and convincing evidence. Of course, the State Bar may elect not to present any adverse evidence if it concludes that petitioner's showing is insufficient to establish his case by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 630. [5]

Where reinstatement petitioner showed moral rehabilitation but did not make adequate showing of recovery from alcoholism, review department declined to recommend reinstatement conditional on continued adherence to a treatment program. Possibility of conditional reinstatement has not been foreclosed, but it would not be appropriate when it involves as central an issue of concern as recovery from alcoholism and depression. In the Matter of Kirwan (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 692. [6]

An attorney who resigns with disciplinary charges pending rather than being disbarred must still establish rehabilitation through a reinstatement proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [1]

Restitution is fundamental to the goal of rehabilitation. It forces attorneys to confront in concrete terms the harm caused by their misconduct. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [4]

Although a petitioner for reinstatement does not need to occupy a fiduciary position in order to prove rehabilitation, evidence that the petitioner has successfully occupied such a position after misconduct is of probative value. Where a petitioner exercised fiduciary responsibilities for a probate estate and a trust after his resignation with disciplinary charges pending, his distribution of funds for the probate estate and the trust without problems constituted a factor in favor of his reinstatement, even though the sums involved were relatively small. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [7]

Where a municipal court judge and a state appellate justice were subpoenaed as witnesses, it was proper for them to testify in a reinstatement proceeding. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [10]

It was not improper for petitioner for reinstatement to have continued to work as a paralegal for his son in his former office after resigning with charges pending, where petitioner did not engage in any acts constituting the practice of law while so employed. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [12]

Statement by resigning attorney to clients that he would assist another attorney in handling their matters was proper, where attorney did not suggest that he would be acting as clients' attorney in so doing. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [14]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for another attorney, and two former clients of the resigned attorney, although aware he was no longer practicing law, submitted checks payable to him for legal services from the other attorney, and where he promptly endorsed the checks over to the other attorney, neither the checks nor the resigned attorney's handling of them supported the claim that he had held himself out as entitled to practice law. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [15]

Where a resigned attorney continued to work as a paralegal for a sole practitioner, and attorney-client contracts and letters from the sole practitioner contained plural references to attorneys, these plural references did not establish that the resigned attorney had held himself out as entitled to practice law, where the resigned attorney was not aware of these plural references, and the sole practitioner hired other attorneys to assist on a contract basis. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [16]

A law firm is required by statute to remove from its business name the name of an attorney who is disbarred or resigns with discipline charges pending. The May 1989 Rules of Professional Conduct explicitly provide that a law firm's name can itself constitute a prohibited misleading communication, and the definition of "communication" in the predecessor rules was also broad enough to encompass law firm names. However, where a resigned attorney continued to work for his attorney son as a paralegal despite the son's adoption of a firm name which might have been construed to imply that the resigned attorney was a member of the firm, any possible misconduct by the son regarding his firm's name was not before the State Bar Court on the father's petition for reinstatement. In the Matter of Miller (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 423. [17]

The fact that a person resigned with disciplinary charges pending instead of suffering disbarment does not affect the necessity for a reinstatement proceeding. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662.) In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [1]

Egregious misconduct does not preclude reinstatement. The law favors rehabilitation. Reformation is open to all attorneys who have erred. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [8]

Judges should not testify voluntarily as character witnesses. Judges should respond to requests from the State Bar, but absent such a request, should not write a letter of reference for an attorney facing discipline or a petitioner seeking reinstatement. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [14]

Favorable character testimony in reinstatement proceeding should not have been devalued based on lack of frequent current contact with petitioner by witnesses who knew him at time of original misconduct, or based on failure to call family members to testify, where misconduct was unrelated to home or family. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [16]

Where evidence about the manner in which a reinstatement petitioner has handled positions of trust is available, such evidence is of probative value. But evidence that the petitioner has occupied positions of trust is not a requirement of reinstatement, and favorable testimony about the petitioner's trustworthiness should not be discounted because the witnesses have failed to observe how the petitioner would handle a fiduciary relationship. In the Matter of Brown (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 309. [17]

The Supreme Court has not ruled out the possibility of a conditional reinstatement, but the condition must not be inconsistent with the basic purpose underlying reinstatement. In the Matter of Distefano (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668. [6]

As with the treatment of failure to pay restitution in reinstatement and criminal probation cases, in a disciplinary proceeding for failure to make timely restitution as a condition of attorney disciplinary probation, due process requires an examination of the probationer's ability to make restitution and the sufficiency and good faith of the probationer's efforts to acquire the resources to pay. In the Matter of Potack (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 525. [11]

Form petitions signed by lawyers and judicial officers in support of petitioner's reinstatement, which contained sketchy text and were undated, were properly excluded from evidence for lack of adequate foundation, as they fell far short of offering any probative value of the assessment of petitioner's character for meeting the rigorous burden of a reinstatement petition. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [5]

Form petitions in support of petitioner's reinstatement, and other letters and testimonials, were excludable from evidence as hearsay, absent stipulation of the State Bar examiner. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [6]

Review department gave deference to hearing referee's findings and conclusions regarding reinstatement petitioner's showing of rehabilitation, since they rested largely on referee's superior position to evaluate testimony of witnesses. However, petitioner's two post-disbarment criminal convictions, and failure to establish that restitution had been made in disciplinary proceeding pending at time of disbarment, raised serious questions regarding rehabilitation. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [8]

Where reinstatement petitioner described himself as an attorney at law in public advertisement, but same document referred clearly to petitioner's disbarment, review department declined to find that petitioner had held himself out to the public as authorized to practice law. However, petitioner's use of term "attorney at law" when not an active member of State Bar was inappropriate, and its use in papers filed with State Bar Court in reinstatement proceeding did not aid petitioner in demonstrating sustained exemplary conduct. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [11]

To be accurate, petitioner should have stated that the minimum waiting period to apply for reinstatement is five years (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 662), rather than stating that he had been disbarred for five years. Nonetheless, petitioner's statement as a whole clearly indicated that petitioner was not then licensed to practice law, so misstatement was not serious. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [12]

Favorable character evidence is neither conclusive or necessarily determinative on reinstatement. In the Matter of McCray (Review Dept. 1991) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 373. [14]

In a reinstatement proceeding, records of prior discipline, including the proceeding in which the petitioner was disbarred, are admissible, because the evidence of the petitioner's present character must be considered in light of the moral shortcomings which resulted in the prior discipline. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [1]

The review department gives great weight to the findings of the hearing judge, who saw and heard the witnesses and resolved matters of testimonial credibility. Nevertheless, under rule 453(a), Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, the hearing judge's decision serves as a recommendation to the review department, which undertakes an independent review and may make findings of fact or draw conclusions of law at variance with those of the judge. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [3]

In a reinstatement proceeding, the hearing judge acted within his discretion in excluding a second affidavit from a character witness. Like a character reference letter in a disciplinary proceeding, the character reference, even though in affidavit rather than letter form, was excludable as hearsay absent a stipulation to the contrary. Further, the second affidavit was cumulative, and the hearing judge carefully considered the more detailed first affidavit, which he admitted into evidence as part of the reinstatement application. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [6]

As a formal proceeding of the State Bar Court, a reinstatement hearing is governed by the formal rules of evidence applicable in civil proceedings. (Rule 556, Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar.) More liberal evidentiary standards applicable in certain other types of statutory proceedings do not apply in State Bar proceedings. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [7]

Where petitioner for reinstatement did not adequately demonstrate present learning in the law, reinstatement could have been recommended conditioned on passage of California Bar Examination, if petitioner had been found rehabilitated and morally fit. In the Matter of Wright (Review Dept. 1990) 1 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 219. [14]

2600 Issues in Admissions Moral Character Proceedings

2601 Special Procedural Issues

2602 Burdens of Proof

In moral character cases, the Supreme Court must independently assess the weight that any civil court findings have with respect to State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal of applicant's prima facie showing of good moral character, in light of other evidence on rebuttal and applicant's showing, if any, in rehabilitation. The ultimate question is unique to moral character proceeding, in which no deference is owed to a civil judgment. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [5]

Although the burden of proof in State Bar proceedings is generally clear and convincing evidence, there is no State Bar rule that specifically sets forth the State Bar's burden of proof on rebuttal in moral character proceedings. An applicant's claim for admission to the practice of law in this state is not a mere privilege, but a claim of right that is afforded the protection of due process. Even though there are distinctions between admission proceedings and disciplinary proceedings, the question involved in both disciplinary and admissions proceedings is the same—is the applicant for admission or the attorney sought to be disciplined a fit and proper person to be permitted to practice law. The test for admission and for discipline is and should be the same. Accordingly, except as otherwise provided by law, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is by clear and convincing evidence. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [8]

Where First Amendment rights are at stake, the State Bar's burden of proof in adducing evidence of bad moral character on rebuttal of an applicant's prima facie showing is proof beyond a reasonable doubt. Where the right of access to the courts is at stake, proof beyond a reasonable doubt may also be required. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [9]

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [12]

2603 Waiver of Confidentiality

Members of the State Bar may be disciplined on the basis of their pre-admission misconduct. State Bar Moral Character Committee's consideration for moral character purposes of respondent's pre-admission misdemeanor conviction did not bar State Bar Court from considering it for discipline purposes. Records relating to respondent's admission to the State Bar were admissible in his post-admission disciplinary proceeding, especially where respondent failed to object at trial to being questioned about such records. In the Matter of Guillory (Review Dept. 2015) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 402. [2]

Moral character proceedings in the State Bar Court are confidential unless an applicant waives confidentially in writing. Where applicant waived confidentiality on condition that she not be identified by name and only as to the issue of the hearing judge's allegedly improper application of principals of collateral estoppel, the review department's published opinion did not refer to applicant by name and addressed only those matters necessary to resolve that issue. In a separate unpublished opinion, the review department addressed the remaining issues on its de novo review of the hearing judge's ultimate decision as to whether applicant met her burden of proof of current good moral character. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [1]

2604 Discovery

Under rule 835 of the Transitional Rules of Procedure, various discovery provisions applicable in disciplinary proceedings are also applicable in moral character proceedings. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [2]

Rule XI of the Rules Regulating Admission to Practice Law in California, providing that the files of the Committee of Bar Examiners are confidential, does not have any bearing on the Committee's duty to respond to interrogatories from the applicant in a moral character proceeding, and, when read in conjunction with other applicable rules, only precludes the Office of Trials from disclosing documents voluntarily as opposed to pursuant to appropriate discovery requests or by court order. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [3]

Normally, discovery objections not raised in a timely fashion will not be considered, and this provision applies in discovery in moral character proceedings even though the Civil Discovery Act has not been made applicable to such proceedings in its entirety. However, where a claim of privilege from discovery had been belatedly presented to the hearing judge without objection and raised an important issue, the review department considered its applicability on review. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [5]

The State Bar is a public entity within the scope of the statutory official information privilege (Evid. Code, § 1040). The procedure to be followed in State Bar Court proceedings where the official information privilege is asserted is the same as in civil cases. In a moral character proceeding, where the information sought was the identities of persons whom the State Bar had reserved the right to call as impeachment or rebuttal witnesses at trial, the official information privilege did not apply to such information, either because the consent exception was applicable, or because the reservation of the right to call such persons reduced the Committee of Bar Examiners' need for secrecy to the interest of a party in the outcome of the proceeding, which is not protected under section 1040 and which was outweighed by the interests of the public and the applicant in a fair trial. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [6]

Private personal information about a non-party to a proceeding may be privileged from discovery under some circumstances pursuant to the California constitutional right to privacy. The privacy right to be protected is that of the non-party, and the custodian of the private information may not waive it. The right to privacy is not absolute, but must be balanced against the need for disclosure. In a moral character proceeding, it was unreasonable for material witnesses against the applicant to claim a right of privacy preventing the disclosure of their identities to the applicant during discovery, while consenting to testify against the applicant at trial. However, as to the identities of persons whose testimony would not be used under any circumstances, the applicant had not made a sufficient showing of need to overcome these persons' privacy rights, and their names could be withheld from disclosure. In the Matter of Lapin (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 279. [10]

2605 Interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 7, Ch. 4 (rules 5.460-5.466)

2609 Other Procedural Issues

The procedure in moral character proceedings is that an applicant must initially furnish sufficient evidence to make a prima facie showing of good moral character. If the applicant makes such a showing, the State Bar may then seek to rebut it with evidence of the applicant's bad moral character. If the State Bar rebuts the applicant's prima facie showing, the applicant must prove rehabilitation from the acts evidencing bad moral character in order to prove the requisite good moral character. All reasonable doubts are resolved in applicant's favor. In the Matter of Applicant A (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 318. [2]

2610 Good Moral Character Found

2611 No Prima Facie Case of Lack of Good Character

The State Bar Court may apply collateral estoppel principles to preclude an applicant from relitigating an issue that was actually litigated and resolved adversely to him or her in a prior civil proceeding, provided that the issue resulting in the civil finding is substantially identical to the issue in the State Bar Court, that the civil finding was made under the same burden of proof applicable to the substantially identical issue in the State Bar Court, that the applicant was a party to the civil proceeding, that there is a final judgment on the merits in the civil proceeding, and that no unfairness in precluding relitigation of the issue is demonstrated by the applicant. An applicant may demonstrate that it would be unfair to bind him or her to an adverse civil finding by showing, among other things, that he or she had less incentive or motive to litigate the issue in the civil proceeding, that the civil finding or judgment is itself inconsistent with some other finding or judgment, or that he or she was required to litigate under different and less advantageous procedures in the civil proceeding. Where applicant's fraud judgment met the above criteria and no unfairness was demonstrated, the hearing judge appropriately applied the doctrine of collateral estoppel to the underlying fraud issue in this moral character proceeding. In the Matter of Applicant A (ReviewDept.1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr.318.[12]

Admission of attorneys to practice law is an exercise of one of the inherent powers of the California Supreme Court,which relies on the Committee of Bar Examiners of the State Bar to administerandcarryoutthebaradmission process, including examining applicants for admission and investigating their fitness .An applicant who is denied certification by the Committee may seek independent adjudication by the State Bar Court. The determination of moral character made by that court is final and binding, subject to review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter of Lapin(ReviewDept.1993) 2Cal.StateBarCtRptr.279. [1]

No question on respondent's application for admission to practice law called upon respondent, as an applicant, to reveal criminal conduct for which respondent had not yet been convicted or arrested and for which respondent was not awaiting trial. If any such question had been asked, respondent would have had a good argument for withholding information that would lead to criminal liability. Nothing in respondent's manner of completing the application, or in respondent's subsequent two-month delay in reporting to the State Bar a criminal indictment handed down after the application was completed, undermined respondent's showing of rehabilitation from pre-admission criminal conduct. In the Matter of Passenheim (Review Dept. 1992) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 62. [1]

2700 Issues in Lawyer Referral Service Proceedings

2701 Special Procedural Issues

2720 Denial of Certification

2721 Reversed

2725 Upheld

2740 Certification Revocation

2741 Reversed

2745 Upheld

2790 Miscellaneous Issues in Lawyer Referral Service Proceedings

2800 Issues in Legal Services Trust Fund Proceedings

2801 Special Procedural Issues

2820 Denial of Funding Eligibility

2821 Reversed

2825 Upheld

2840 Termination or Reduction of Funding

2841 Reversed

2845 Upheld

2890 Miscellaneous Issues in Legal Services Trust Fund Proceedings

2900 Issues in Legal Specialization Proceedings

2901 Special Procedural Issues

Rule 15.2 of the Rules Governing the State Bar Program for Certifying Legal Specialists provides that a denial, suspension, or revocation of certification or re-certification by the Board of Legal Specialization based on a final disciplinary action by the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court, or any body authorized to impose professional discipline, shall be final and shall not be subject to further review. The legislative history of rule 15.2 made it abundantly clear that the State Bar proposed the adoption of this rule to the Supreme Court with the specific intent of divesting previously disciplined applicants of their right of appeal to the State Bar Court. Thus, the rule expressly deprived the State Bar Court of jurisdiction to consider applicant's procedural due process challenge. Accordingly, the review department was compelled to agree with the hearing judge, who correctly dismissed the matter for lack of jurisdiction. Although the State Bar Court lacked jurisdiction in this case, the review department construed rule 15.2 to mean that the decision of the Board denying applicant re-certification was subject to review by the Supreme Court In the Matter of Applicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 731. [1]

Although Business and Professions Code section 6026.5(f) permits appeals from decisions of the Board of Legal Specialization to the Board of Governors of the State Bar to be treated as confidential, the Board of Governors, in delegating its authority to hear such appeals to the State Bar Court, did not expressly indicate whether it intended to preserve the confidentiality of such appeals. (Trans. Rules Proc. of State Bar, rule 225(a)(1).) Where a legal specialization proceeding was treated as public by the hearing judge, the parties were deemed to have waived any argument that the review department should treat the proceeding as confidential by their failure to raise a timely objection to such treatment. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [1]

An administrative determination by the Board of Legal Specialization regarding an application for certification must comport with due process, and review by the State Bar Court exists in part to test whether due process was afforded. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [5]

2902 Interpretaion of Rules of Procedure, Div. 6, Ch. 6 (rules 5.390-5.399) (adopted eff. July 24, 2015)

2902.10 Effective date/retrospective application

2902.20 Inapplicable Rules of Procedure (rule 5.399)

2902.90 Other issues re interpretation of Rules of Procedure, Div. 6, Ch. 6

2903 Pleadings and pre-hearing procedure

2903.10 Application for hearing (rule 5.391)

2903.20 Response to application (rule 5.392)

2903.30 Limited discovery for good cause (rule 5.393)

2903.90 Other issues re pleadings and pre-hearing procedure

2904 Ikssued not subject to review (rule 5.394)

2904.10 Failure to pass written examination (rule 5.394(A))

2904.20 Board action based on discipline (rule 5.394(B))

2904.90 Other issues re issued not subject to review

2905 Hearing procedure (rule 5.395)

2905.10 Admissibility of declarations (rule 5.395(A))

2905.20 Right to cross-examine declarants (rule 5.395(B))

2905.90 Other issues re hearing procedure

2906 Burden of proof and standard of review

2906.10 Independent review of record (rule 5.390)

2906.20 Board findings entitled to great weight (rule 5.390)

2906.30 Burden of proof on member (rule 5.396)

2906.40 Proof by clear and convincing evidence (rule 5.396)

2906.90 Other issues re burden of proof and standard of review

2907 Review by Review Department (rule 5.397)

2908 Binding effect of final State Bar Court decision (rule 5.398)

2920 Denial of Certification/Recertification

2921 Reversed

The Board of Legal Specialization has not been given the authority to construe prior discipline as a threshold criterion for specialist certification. Prior discipline is a factor to be considered inexamining an application for specialist certification, but does not constitute an absolute bar to certification. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [4]

2925 Upheld

2940 Suspension or Revocation of Certification

2941 Reversed

2945 Upheld

2990 Miscellaneous Issues in Legal Specialization Proceedings

Rule15.2oftheRulesGoverningtheStateBarProgramforCertifyingLegalSpecialistsprovidesthatadenial, suspension, or revocation of certification or re-certification by the Board ofLegal Specialization based on a fmal disciplinary action by the Supreme Court, the State Bar Court, or any body authorized to impose professional discipline, shall be final and shall not be subject to further review. The legislative history of rule 15.2 made it abundantly clearthat the State Bar proposed the adoption of this rule to the Supreme Court with the specific intent of divestingpreviou5lydisciplined applicantsoftheirrightof appeal tothe StateBar Court.Thus, therule expressly deprived the StateBar Court ofjurisdiction to consider applicant's procedural due process challenge. Accordingly, the review department was compelled to agree with the hearing judge, who correctly dismissed the matter for lack ofjurisdiction. Although the StateBar Court lackedjurisdiction inthis case, the review department construed rule 15.2to mean that the decision ofthe Board denying applicant re-certification was subjectto review by the Supreme Court. In the Matter ofApplicant B (Review Dept. 2004) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr.731.[1]

Where the record of a legal specialization proceeding contained no documents explaining the basis for the denial of specialist certification and where responses by the deputy trial counsel to interrogatories clarified the basis for the denial, augmentation of the record with the interrogatory responses was appropriate. (Prov. Rules of Practice, rule 1304.) In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [2]

The Board of Legal Specialization has not been given the authority to construe prior discipline as a threshold criterion for specialist certification. Prior discipline is a factor to be considered in examining an application for specialist certification, but does not constitute an absolute bar to certification. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [4]

An administrative determination by the Board of Legal Specialization regarding an application for certification must comport with due process, and review by the State Bar Court exists in part to test whether due process was afforded. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [5]

The State Bar rule which provides that imposition of attorney discipline constitutes cause for the denial, suspension, or revocation of certification or recertification as a specialist applies only to certificate holders, not to applicants for certification. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [6]

An attorney's record of prior discipline is a factor to be considered by the Board of Legal Specialization in determining whether the attorney initially meets the standards for specialist certification, and, in appropriate circumstances, may justify a decision to deny initial certification. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [7]

No decision denying specialist certification is permissible unless the applicant for certification receives some meaningful opportunity to be heard in his or her own defense. Where an attorney in good standing applied for certification as a legal specialist 14 years after committing misconduct, 11 years after the resulting suspension order, and 8 years after the completion of the suspension, the Board of Legal Specialization was required to allow the attorney an opportunity to be heard on the attorney's current qualifications. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [8]

By controlling specialist certification, the Board of Legal Specialization substantially affects not only the professional status of an attorney, but also an important economic interest which is worthy of due process protection. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [9]

Where the Board of Legal Specialization summarily denied an application for legal specialist certification solely on the basis of applicant's prior serious discipline, without considering any evidence or permitting a hearing on applicant's recent conduct and present qualifications, the Board violated its own rules and applicant's common law right to fair procedure. The Board's indication that it might reconsider the denial at a later date, without any enumerated criteria as to when it would do so, underscored the arbitrariness of its position. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [10]

California courts have long recognized a common law right to fair procedure protecting individuals from arbitrary exclusion or expulsion from private organizations which have the practical power to affect substantially an important economic interest. A basic and indispensable ingredient of the fair procedure required under the common law is that an individual who will be adversely affected by a decision be afforded some meaningful opportunity to be heard in the individual's defense. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [11]

Within due process limits, the Board of Legal Specialization has broad discretion in certifying specialists. It may consider any competent evidence rebutting an applicant's showing and may weigh and balance evidence in an appropriate manner. An applicant's prior discipline for very serious misconduct is clearly evidence that should be considered in this process. In the Matter of Mudge (Review Dept. 1993) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 536. [12]